fact that 40 Members were not present, and that you were in danger of being left nearly isolated in the Chair. At the same time, I wish to express the strong opinion which I entertain, that any hon. Member who takes upon himself to call the attention of the House to the fact of 40 Members not being present, when you cannot leave the Chair, acts disrespectfully towards the House. I wish now to state very briefly my view of the agitation out-of-doors, whence the proposal contained in this Bill has emanated. The hon. Member for Birmingham (Mr. Dixon) is connected with that agitation, and so is the hon. Member for the Border Burghs. [Mr. TREVELYAN: What agitation?] I believe the hon. Member has attended meetings of the Agricultural Labourers Union, over which the hon. Member for Birmingham presides. [Mr. TREVELYAN: As a matter of fact, I did not attend those meetings, and I wrote, and stated that it was on public grounds, that I could not.] I am bound to believe that the hon. Member has not attended these meetings, but then a near relative of his takes an active part in the Union. Perhaps that relative was his representative on such occasions. I wish to state to the House that this union began with a real grievance. It originated in a desire to equalize and redress wages; in itself, a perfectly legitimate object; and no one has ever heard me say a single word in depreciation of that movement—though it originated in my own county, and was opposed by many Friends of mine—until its organization was applied to other purposes. Before Christmas that agitating body held a meeting in London, at which it declared itself in favour of a whole category of revolutionary change, which I do not believe to be sanctioned by the great body of those who joined it originally as a trades union for a legitimate purpose. That meeting was marked by the appearance of Archbishop Manning as a supporter of Mr. Arch in proposing that category of revolutionary change, not more revolutionary than the changes which Archbishop Manning proposed with respect to the land of Ireland, but equally revolutionary with respect to property; Mr. Arch has changed his ground, and has become distinctly a political agitator. I wish the House to observe the alteration which has taken place in the character of that agitation to which at first I was not opposed; but I think it has now fallen into dangerous hands, and is subject to dangerous influences; and I cannot sit in this House without warning the House that a very great change has taken place in the objects and purposes of those who guide and control that organization. I think it only right that as one of the Members for the county, I should state what I have observed with regard to the marked change that has taken place in the constitution and objects of this organization. And now, with respect to the proposal before the House, I wish to say a very few words. When the Elections Bill for establishing secret voting was under discussion in this House, I expressed the opinion that the Legislature would find it very difficult to resist a proposal, first, for household suffrage in counties; and I cited the opinion of Lord Palmerston that such would be the effect of the change made by Parliament upon the character of the franchise, that there could be no security that Parliament, if it should adhere to that change, would be able to resist a further step to universal or manhood suffrage; and that Parliament would be fortunate if it stopped at manhood suffrage, because when the voting is secret no voter is in any sense a representative of others, nor indeed can be; and if a proposal is carried for the enfranchisement of women, it will be impossible to maintain in principle the distinction between women who are possessed of property and other women who have none. I venture to call the attention of the House to the opinion of Lord Palmerston on the subject, and to say nothing of my own; but I know that in America the feeling is strong respecting the dangers arising from this system; that in America, instead of advancing as we are invited to advance, all the best men are considering the means by which to retrograde. Because they see that secret voting destroys all responsibility in the voter; and when you have destroyed responsibility in the voter, you very soon destroy genuine responsibility in the representative; and having destroyed the genuine responsibility of the representative to public opinion, you destroy the confidence of the constituencies in their representatives. Thus, constitutional Government falls into that disrepute which sooner or later ends in its subversion by a despotism in some form or other. The House will forgive my reference to America and the opinions of Americans, as well as to the opinion expressed by Lord Palmerston on this subject. I have remarked, Sir, that in the course of this debate no hon. Member has appeared to consider the question, as it is likely to affect the Commonwealth of England. What was the argument of the hon. Member for the Border Burghs? Of course, he dwelt largely on the plea for equality. Every man, who does not think that his merits are duly appreciated, is always calling out for equality; by which he means the opportunity of placing himself above his equals. That is the real feeling which is at the bottom of the cry for equality. These persons are not satisfied with equality for themselves, yet, strange to say, they are ever proclaiming their attachment to equality; and for this purpose—they wish all others to be on a dead level, that they may themselves rise above it. I have not much respect, then, for this argument of equality. I never knew two men who were exactly equal. I never knew two men who were exactly alike; and as to variety of features, let anyone look across the House. When hon. Members witness all these differences, let them ask themselves where equality is to be found. My view is, that the House is wasting time that might be better spent, because we know that we are debating a proposal which cannot be carried this Session, and that is, in my opinion, wasting the time of the House; and this the experience of the present Session and the records of the Order Book of this House prove—that, if the House desires to retain the respect of this country as a House of business, it must adopt some means by which we shall be able to avoid these inopportune discussions, and proceed with that which really is its necessary business. With respect to this proposal for establishing household suffrage in counties, I have stated before in this House, that when Parliament shall have finally decided that secret voting shall be a permanent institution in this country, thus making the vote a property personal in the man himself and not a trust to be exercised for the benefit of others and of all; when that principle has been finally adopted by Parliament, I see no means of resisting a further extension of the suffrage; and I expect, nay, I fear, that although you may talk of household suffrage now or household suffrage then, secrecy of voting will have this inevitable result—it will tend to universal suffrage, and by universal suffrage the Constitution of this country must, according to the laws of democracy, be undermined, and if precedents go for anything, England, instead of continuing free, will lapse, as other countries have lapsed, under some form of despotism.

MR. W. E. FORSTER: Sir, as I intend to vote for the Motion of my hon. Friend the Member for the Border Burghs (Mr. Trevelyan), I wish, in a very few words, to state the reasons why, speaking not on behalf of the Government, but as an individual Member who has long taken a deep interest in all questions connected with the suffrage, I shall take this course. I regret, and I think we must all regret, that my hon. Friend should have been obliged to propose the second reading of the Bill at a period of the Session when it is impossible for it to receive the attention which would have been given to it at an earlier period. That is not, however, the fault of my hon. Friend. He has done his utmost to bring forward the Bill much earlier, when its discussion could have had a more practical effect; but I think he has done quite right in not having withdrawn it altogether. He would have done wrong, in my opinion, if he had prevented a discussion upon the merits of the question involved in the measure which he has brought forward. This is a matter in which there is much interest in the country generally, and it would be a mistake for hon. Members on either side of the House to think that is not the case. In point of fact I do not think that hon. Members on the other side of the House entertain any such ideas, more than I believe such feelings prevail on this side. That a large and increasing interest in the question exists among the class most deeply affected, is shown by the fact that my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham (Mr. Dixon) has to-day presented a very numerously signed Petition in support of the Bill from the Agricultural Labourers Union. The fact that the class of persons composing that Union are not directly represented in this House makes it the more desirable that we should not as a House altogether shirk or disregard a question in which they feel an interest. I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for the Border Burghs upon having brought forward the Bill, because I do not remember a case of a very important measure like this, on which I suppose there is a difference of opinion in the country, being brought before the House, in favour of which there seemed to be generally so favourable an opinion, and so little opposition. My hon. and learned Friend the Member for Boston (Mr. Collins) carefully guarded himself against expressing an opinion adverse to the principle of the Bill. In fact, his speech was rather in favour of it, and also in favour of other two measures which would effect a very considerable alteration in the boundaries of representation. I thought my hon. and learned Friend seemed to go almost as far as assenting to electoral districts, proportional representation, and the cumulative vote. The hon. Member who followed him (Sir John Kennaway) took very much the same line, and the hon. Member for North Warwickshire (Mr. Newdegate), instead of urging some of the objections which in the old days were pressed against the extension of the suffrage to householders in counties, stated that he fully expected such an extension to be made, but that he was only dolorous as to the future result. [Mr. NEWDEGATE: I did not state that I desired it.] The hon. Member has spent rather a long time in this House in prophesying all sorts of evil results as likely to follow from projected legislation in a Liberal direction, and then when the anticipated results have accrued, in pointing out how no very great evil had followed after all. The hon. Member has on the present occasion contended that the extension of the franchise to household suffrage to occupiers in counties will tend towards the bourne of absolute democracy, and his argument went not against dealing with the subject, but against dealing with it alone; but I think the arguments he has used possess more force—if indeed they have any force at all—as against the Ballot Act, than they do against the measure which is now under consideration. I am well aware that it is impossible to treat the question without considering other questions of which it reminds us; but hon. Members must recollect that these questions start up alongside the present Bill without being absolutely connected with it. Undoubtedly, if we gave household suffrage to all the householders in counties, a question might arise as to the present relation between borough and county representation. Such questions have arisen already, entirely apart from the considerations raised by the present Bill, and, therefore, I think we may very fairly consider whether we should or should not look forward pretty soon to the extension of the franchise to all householders in counties. That is a matter upon which, as an old household suffrage man, I want to say a word or two. It is now about 30 years since I began to take part in political life, and one of the first principles that occurred to me was, that votes ought to be given to all householders throughout the land. I do not go as far as the hon. Member for North Warwickshire seems to think us likely to go. I would not proceed further than household suffrage. I think a very strong line can and ought to be drawn between household suffrage, or rather what I should be inclined to call hearthstone suffrage, and universal manhood and womanhood suffrage. The man who is the head of a family seems to me to give a very fair line of distinction as to the point at which the suffrage should stop. There has been considerable legislation on the question, and at the present time, the only householders who are excluded from the suffrage are the householders in counties, which is, I think, an answer to the objection of the hon. and learned Member for Boston as to piecemeal suffrage. Piecemeal suffrage with this question would be put an end to by the passing of an Act which should put all householders on a level. The question is, not so much whether the suffrage should be extended to these householders, as whether they should be any longer excluded from it. In 1867 a Bill extending the suffrage was passed in this House, and it may be asked why these householders were not included in that measure. I will not enter upon the history of that Bill. A good many of my hon. Friends opposite, and some on this side of the House, found themselves giving household suffrage to boroughs before they had any intention of doing so, and before they had any notion that it was going to be done; and as they rather unexpectedly took the step, I am not surprised that they did not extend the suffrage to householders in counties. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for Buckinghamshire (Mr. Disraeli), to whom I am very grateful for leading his party into that position, has frequently found it necessary to comfort his adherents with arguments to prove that they are not going so far towards that fearful bourne alluded to by the hon. Member for North Warwickshire, as some of them might occasionally in hours of fear think to be the case. Over and over again the right hon. Gentleman has taken that course, and assured his supporters that there was comfort to be found in the fact that though a large number of artizans in the boroughs had the franchise, a large number of householders and artizans in the counties were without it. While expressing no opinion as to the unfitness of these persons to receive the suffrage, these words of comfort and satisfaction have frequently been poured into the ears of his more fearful followers by the right hon. Gentleman who introduced the Reform Bill of 1867. The question now or very shortly to be decided is, whether that source of comfort should continue. The hon. Baronet the Member for East Devon (Sir John Kennaway) has urged that the settlement arrived at in 1867 is one that ought never, or at any rate for a long time, to be disturbed. I am rather inclined, independently of what ought to be done, to agree with what seems to be the general feeling of the House—namely, that it cannot be an abiding settlement, and we have to ask ourselves—“Why are these persons to be any longer excluded from the franchise, and why was not their inclusion pressed in 1867?” I wish to be perfectly candid with the House, and to state what struck me as being two or three grounds for that course not having been taken. These reasons for not including the agricultural population in the extension of the franchise were rather felt than expressed; but they had the effect which my hon. Friend the Member for the Border Burghs now seeks to remove. The first of these grounds was the existence of a general impression that the agricultural or county householder was less educated than the artizan householder to be found in the towns. My experience, however, in connection with the Education Act leads me to doubt whether there were any sufficient grounds for that impression. I am aware that we cannot deal with this question as one affecting the agricultural labourers only. There are a large proportion of householders in the counties who are not agricultural labourers; but take the class as a whole, I have no hesitation in saying that it is a mistake to suppose the county householders and agricultural labourers who would be included in this Bill inferior in education and intelligence to the artizan householders in boroughs. No doubt, many artizans are well-taught, and take an active interest in politics, and some of them even in literature; but there are a large number who, from no fault of their own, but as the result of hard struggles and privations in early life, are more degraded than we could find among the county householders, but taking the average, I do not believe we can say that there is any reason why the county householders should not have the same share in the government of the country which is enjoyed by men occupying similar positions in the boroughs. Another ground for urging that the county householders should not have the franchise before was, that they took no interest in politics as compared with the borough householders. That may have been true at one time; but it is a reason which has now lost much of its force, because one sees that day by day, from the increasing circulation of newspapers and the spread of education, that the agricultural population are taking a deep interest not only in questions which deeply concern their own social welfare, but in political questions generally. There may also have been an impression, which I must say I did not entertain myself, and which, if others did they did not express it openly, that the pressure to include the county householders in the Reform Bill of 1867 did not come from this side of the House, in consequence of a fear that their votes could not be relied upon as likely to be given in support of Liberal candidates. I do not know what would be the result now, but I think it exceedingly likely that at first the other side would gain in the elections as the result of household suffrage in counties. That, however, is in my opinion, a consideration which ought not for one moment to be seriously entertained. I will go further, and say that looking at the history of Constitutional countries, I think that we should expect the agricultural population to be in the long run rather Conservative in politics than otherwise. But if this is so, I do not regard it as affording any sufficient reason for pursuing a policy of exclusion, as no hon. Member of this House would desire to check the right action of the Conservative party, which must exist in all constitutionally governed countries. If there is no particular reason then why we should keep up the exclusion, are there any strong reasons why we should consider whether the matter ought not to be soon settled? Existing anomalies are every day attracting more and more attention. There is no reason why the householder in a manufacturing village should not have a vote, as well as the householder in Leeds or Bradford; and, on the whole, the village householders take more interest in public questions than those of the towns. We can not remove every anomaly; but this is a glaring anomaly, to which attention is being directed more and more every day, so that it will be difficult to avoid attempting to remove it in some way. Indeed, I hope to see it removed at the earliest possible moment. The hon. Member for North Warwickshire has adduced as a reason for postponing the consideration of the question, the fact that agricultural labourers are combining in many parts to bring about an increase in the rate of wages, a fact which in my opinion tends rather in support of the opposite view. This is a matter in regard to which it is an easy thing for the expressed opinions of any person to be misconstrued, and therefore I wish to be very clear in what I say concerning it. I do not want to pronounce any opinion upon the merits of the case as between employers and employed; but this I will say—that all of us must feel more hopeful as to the future of our country, when we see so large a part of the population possessed with strong feelings upon questions which concern most deeply their daily life, and who are now for the first time waking up to a feeling of the power of union, yet conducting their proceedings with so much of moderation on the whole, and setting an example of conduct to the artizans in the towns. It is therefore a serious question to consider whether these people ought much longer to be prevented taking a responsible part in the government of the country, and the fact of their uniting together, though they have no votes, is a reason why we should seriously consider how long they ought to go without votes. A Petition from 82,000 of them is not one which can be safely disregarded. It is impossible but that some discussion will arise in Parliament with regard to these labourers; perhaps legislative questions concerning them may come before the House, and it is very undesirable they should feel they have no direct voice in the councils of the country, when questions affecting them are being considered. We cannot also forget that Members for the districts in which they live are returned very much, indeed, almost entirely, by the class of employers as distinct from those who are employed. I do not, however, say that those Members are unfairly influenced by that fact. The whole question of the wages of agricultural labourers is likely to be much better settled than it otherwise would be, because landlords exist to be mediators between farmers and labourers; but still there remains the fact, that county Members are mainly the Representatives of the employing class, and to a very slight extent of the employed class. That is a circumstance we must consider when we have the whole case before us. Those are the grounds upon which I am glad to be able to give a vote in favour of the Bill. I must add that my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, knowing that I take a deep interest in the matter, and that I should like to say a few words upon it, has asked me to express his regret that he is unable to be present. The right hon. Gentleman is prevented from being present, simply by indisposition, which, it is hoped will not long continue, but which confines him to his room. I am requested by the Prime Minister to state on his behalf that, while the Government, as a Government, has not any opinion or recommendation to offer to the House on the question, and while he regrets that it has only been in the power of the hon. Member for the Border Burghs to bring it forward at a period of the Session so late as to give the debate so much of the character of a discussion on an abstract Resolution, he (the Prime Minister) retains the opinion he has more than once indicated, and believes the extension of the household franchise to the counties to be one which is just and politic in itself, and which cannot long be avoided. On the same grounds, not as a Member of the Government, but as a private Member, I shall support the second reading of the Bill.

LORD JOHN MANNERS said, the remarkable statement which the right hon. Gentleman the Vice President of the Council had just made on the part of the Prime Minister justified him in saying a few words. They all regretted that the Prime Minister should be absent from ill health; but, he being absent from ill health or any other cause, an important question of that kind would have been far better discussed without any communication being made on his part. [“Oh, oh!”] That was a sort of Royal Message which he had sent down. It was one thing for the Prime Minister to address arguments to the House after hearing the speeches of others who might adduce reasons which would cause him to change his opinion; but for him to send down a simple Message by the mouth of one of his Colleagues, in the Dog-days, when it was notorious that a question of importance could not be satisfactorily discussed, merely to tell them he was of opinion that that sort of abstract Resolution proposed in a speech by an hon. Member was right and just, was to take advantage of the forms of the House in a manner against which he (Lord John Manners) must protest. The right hon. Gentleman had told them on behalf of himself and his Chief, that that was an open question. But could they conceive that a question of such magnitude, with the importance which must be attached to it, at the end of the Session, in the Dog-days, being thrown loose on the floor of the House by the Prime Minister as an open question? What must be the result of treating a measure of that importance in that flippant and perfunctory manner? They were not told what was the opinion of the Cabinet as a whole on the question, and it would, therefore, go to the country that Her Majesty's Government while carefully abstaining from expressing their collective opinion as the responsible Advisers of the Crown on a subject of the utmost importance, such as that before the House, would prefer to allow the question to be trailed through the Recess as one which, at any rate, had received the support of the Prime Minister and of the Vice President of the Council. He maintained that such a statement as that just made by the right hon. Gentleman was sufficient to justify the House in refusing its assent to the Bill. The right hon. Gentleman admitted the immense import of the issues which were bound up with the question; but he added that, great as those issues were, it was not necessary to consider them then. If, said the right hon. Gentleman, the House passed the Bill, it would, for example, be necessary to have a re-distribution of political power; but he added that that would come all in due time. They might equalize the franchise in boroughs and in counties, and having done that, then they might consider the other essential changes which should follow from it. When they were told that momentous issues were bound up with the adoption of the Bill, but that they need not discuss those issues, but rather leave it to chance how many seats were to be taken from boroughs and transferred to counties, then, it became a question in which hon. Gentlemen on both sides of the House, whether they sat for agricultural, commercial, or any other constituencies, were equally interested, and as to which they were bound to say they would not consider a fragment of a great question, but would wait until a united Government on their responsibility to the Queen and the country had put forward a coherent scheme, in which all the divergent issues which spring from the question would be dealt with. Till that time arrived the House was not in a position to discuss the subject, and they were not only justified, but bound to decline considering a mere fragment of it. He congratulated the right hon. Gentleman in making the discovery—perhaps since the passing of the Elementary Education Act in 1870—that the class of agricultural labourers was at least as intelligent and well-conducted as the labouring classes in great towns. That discovery was not new to him (Lord John Manners), and would not influence his vote; and when the right hon. Gentleman said the only thing they had then to consider was, whether there should be any difference in the county and the borough franchise, he begged to ask him in return why from the earliest times had such difference existed? When the right hon. Gentleman had considered, and was in a position to answer that question, he had no doubt the House would be prepared to consider with him why the old immemorial distinction should now suddenly be abrogated. He did not say that the right hon. Gentleman and the Prime Minister when, acting as the organs of a united Government, they were prepared to propose a distinct policy, would not be able to assign reasons why such distinction should not exist; but when asked the question now, to attempt to solve it off-hand in the negative might be considered a good mode of argument in the Dog-days, but it was one which would certainly not be regarded as conclusive at a more reasonable period of the Session. He (Lord John Manners) had only risen to protest against the introduction, by the Vice President of the Council, of a Message from the Prime Minister, and he had now given some of the reasons which induced him on this occasion to recommend to the House the rejection of the Bill.

MR. FAWCETT said, that after the speech of the right hon. Gentleman the Vice President of the Council and the Message which had been sent to them by the Prime Minister, it could not be doubted that the Bill had been virtually taken out of the hands of his hon. Friend the Member for the Border Burghs (Mr. Trevelyan), and had become part of the settled policy of the Government, and would occupy a prominent position in the programme with which they would go to the country. The right hon. Gentleman the Vice President of the Council said that he spoke only as an individual Member: the Prime Minister—and he (Mr. Fawcett) would be the last to object, more especially as his temporary absence was caused by illness, to the right hon. Gentleman writing to the House—but the right hon. Gentleman, like the Vice President, said that had he been present he should vote for the Bill as Member for Greenwich, and not as Prime Minister of England. Now, it was absolutely impossible for the Prime Minister and one of his most influential Colleagues to vote on such a question as ordinary Members of Parliament. They supported the Bill and would vote for it as Members of the Government, and henceforward it became—and he was glad of it—a Government measure. Had it not been for that fact he should not have risen; but he wished to impress this upon the House—that the Bill in the hands of his hon. Friend and the Bill in the hands of Her Majesty's Government must be viewed in two very different aspects. His hon. Friend could only ask the House to express their opinion upon an abstract question—namely, whether household suffrage should or should not be extended to counties. But when the Bill passed into the hands of the Government, it became not the means of simply asserting an abstract principle, but a great measure of Representative Reform. It was, therefore, of the utmost importance that the House should distinctly understand, before they went too far, what shape it was proposed that this new measure of Reform should take. The arguments offered in favour of the Bill he considered conclusive, and he must repeat that he should not have risen to address the House, but for the fact that the measure was now a very different one to all intents and purposes from what it was only a few hours since. He would only say, in reference to the subject of the Bill, that when the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Buckinghamshire (Mr. Disraeli), by a series of most ingenious manœuvres, led his party up to household suffrage in the boroughs, he probably knew better than anyone else in the House that he had destroyed every argument in favour of stopping there, and that household suffrage in the counties was simply a question of a few years. There were many anomalies in the existing franchise which required alteration, and he would not enter into the invidious argument whether the labouring classes in towns were more or less intelligent and industrious than the same class in the county. If an artizan residing in a town were worthy of being intrusted with a vote, why should he not continue to be so, if he crossed the border and settled in the county? Such a restriction admitted of no defence. He thought his hon. Friend had been very wise in admitting that if household suffrage were extended to counties the 40s. qualification must also be dealt with. His desire was, however, to speak not of the details of a comprehensive scheme, but of the present position of Her Majesty's Government in reference to the question. The question for the House was this—Were they going to sanction a further and great extension of the suffrage without obtaining from the Government a definite statement as to the principles which they proposed should regulate the re-distribution of political power? They followed that course in 1867; but because they made a mistake then, that was no reason why they should repeat an error which he believed had proved most disastrous to our country. What had been the attitude of the Prime Minister and the Government on the two questions of the extension of the suffrage and the re-distribution of seats. He did not complain that he had been excluded from bringing on a Motion of which he had given Notice; but the fact was that the Government had afforded to his hon. Friend facilities for having the question of the extension of the franchise discussed, and that his Bill had the support of the Prime Minister and one of the most influential of his Colleagues in the Cabinet. The proposed Motion for an inquiry into the principles on which political power should be re-distributed was voted against by the Prime Minister before he had heard the arguments in its favour. In fact, the right hon. Gentleman prevented the Motion being even discussed, but at the same time supported a Motion for the extension of the franchise. Whatever might be the opinion of the Government on the subject of the re-distribution of political power, this he (Mr. Fawcett) said emphatically—that if a Bill for the extension of the suffrage in counties was introduced by the Government, he would not vote for it, unless the Government declared the principles to which they proposed to give effect in reference to the re-distribution of political power. There were two ways by which people could be deprived of representation—one, by keeping the right of voting from them; another, by placing them in so hopeless a minority that, virtually, they must be without representation. For his part, he was willing to give manual labour all the legitimate power to which it was entitled; if manual labourers were in a majority in the country, let them be in a majority in that House; but he was not prepared to place the vast machinery of political power in their hands, without taking some security that those who held different opinions from them should have some chance of representation in the House of Commons. He ventured to assert that even in the United States of America, there was not a man of intelligence who was not of opinion that the future of the country depended upon the recognition and practical adoption of just principles of representation. They might have the most democratic suffrage in the world, but if they did not take securities for the representation of minorities, that democratic suffrage, by centring unchecked power in the hands of a majority, might and probably would lead to the worst of all kinds of oligarchies. He spoke only of that which experience had proved. Illinois was one of the most progressive of the States. There they had a more extended suffrage than even this Bill would give to this country. But it was found that the non-representation of minorities had such a tendency to concentrate power in the hands of one party, and excluded so many of the best men from the House of Representatives, that a feeling spread through the State that it was necessary to alter the system; and the consequence was, that within the last few years, they had adopted the principle of the representation of minorities; and there was not a single section of intelligent persons in the State who did not regard the change as one of the greatest improvements ever introduced. Only a small and insignificant section were in favour of a return to the former system. He had made these remarks with a view to let the Government know that they must be prepared, when they took up the question of the extension of household suffrage to the counties, to take up with it that of the re-distribution of political power on a wide and extended basis. There was many a man in that House who would not vote for a bare and naked measure for extending the suffrage, but who would vote for it cordially if it were part of a great scheme for improving the representation of the people; therefore, let them, on the one hand, enlist as electors every person whom they found qualified to vote; but let them on the other, take care that the House of Commons should not become a mere legislative machine, but should be a great national Assembly in which every opinion and every section of opinion should as far as possible be represented by its ablest and most independent advocates.

Mr. BRUCE said, that his own individual opinion on the questions before the House were so well represented by his right hon. Friend the Vice President of the Council, that he should not have thought it necessary to rise, but for some observations made by the noble Lord opposite (Lord John Manners) and his hon. Friend the Member for Brighton (Mr. Fawcett). The noble Lord took his right hon. Friend to task for having expressed his own individual opinion, and for communicating to the House the opinion of the Prime Minister. Now, although he contended that no Member of that House had a right to call for the opinion of the Government as a Government on such questions as the present, he could not but think it was only respectful to the House that, on the discussion of a subject of such great importance as that under consideration, his right hon. Friend should have explained the cause of the absence of his right hon. Friend at the head of the Government, and add, as he was in a position to do, that the opinion of the Prime Minister on the subject was the same as he had always expressed in reference to it. Anyone, however, who heard the speech of the noble Lord would suppose that the occasion had been seized by his right hon. Friend at the head of the Government for the purpose of making a political manifesto. [Cheers and counter-cheers.] But hon. Gentlemen opposite who cheered knew perfectly well that his right hon. Friend had again and again expressed the same opinion; and that being so, why should he not again state through the right hon. Gentleman the Vice President of the Council that he still entertained the opinion which he had formerly expressed? Then the noble Lord stated that Members of the Government were bound to withhold their opinions until the Government, as a united Government, were prepared to state what their policy was in respect of the question; and his hon. Friend the Member for Brighton said, that after what had occurred the Bill virtually passed into the hands of Her Majesty's Government. He denied both those propositions. No hon. Member, however respectable, had a right to challenge the opinion of the Government on any particular question. Governments were formed with reference to certain great political questions. The Government that preceded the present was formed with special reference to the question of Reform, on which the then late Government had been defeated; and the present Government was formed in reference especially to the question of the Irish Church, and also to deal with the question of Education. On those questions, therefore, it was reasonable to expect from them a definite and united opinion; but as to the questions of the extension of the suffrage and the re-distribution of political power, they might entertain divers opinions. They were questions which could not be taken up unless after long and anxious consideration. The discussion which had just been held showed that the question of the extension of the suffrage was one which could not be dealt with by itself, and it would be rash therefore, without much previous study of it in all its bearings, to express a united opinion with respect to it. His hon. Friend the Member for Brighton said that when two important Members of the Government were in favour of the Bill it ceased to be a private Member's question. What possible authority was there for that argument? Let them take, for example, the question of female suffrage. His right hon. Friend at the head of the Government had expressed himself in favour of that Bill, under certain conditions for securing the decorous conduct of elections; so, also, had his right hon. Friend the President of the Local Government Board. But had that question become a Government one because two Members of the Cabinet had spoken in favour of it? There were occasions, he contended, especially in reference to questions of great importance and difficulty, on which individual Members of the Government were entitled to express their opinions without binding their Colleagues. His hon. Friend the Member for Brighton had—good-naturedly he admitted—expressed his disappointment at not being able to bring forward the Motion to which he had referred, while, as he said, facilities were afforded to his hon. Friend the Member for the Border Burghs to move the second reading of his Bill. There was no foundation whatever for that complaint. The practice for many years had been for the Government to ask for the Tuesdays from the early part of July, but only to ask for the last Wednesday of the Session, and that practice had been strictly followed. To have appropriated the present Wednesday would have been to establish a special precedent adverse to his hon. Friend the Member for the Border Burghs. In reference to the general question before the House, he would only say he had never been of opinion that agricultural labourers were more ignorant than labourers in towns. He was long of opinion that, on the contrary, the greatest ignorance prevailed in great towns; and that was especially the case in Scotland. It was in great towns that ignorance was reached with the greatest difficulty; but he hoped it would disappear under the operation of recent legislation, and that instruction would be equalized all over the country. He was in favour of the extension of household suffrage; but if he thought—as he did not—that it would deluge the country with ignorant electors, incapable of giving intelligent votes, he, for one, should have felt bound to refuse his support to the Bill. It was, in his opinion, an anomaly that so many persons should be deprived of the franchise, while their neighbours, more ignorant and less orderly, enjoyed it, and that was a fact which would doubtless weigh with the House whenever they came to deal with that important question.

Mr. SCOURFIELD said, he could not but regard the slap-dash course which had been adopted in reference to the Bill as somewhat remarkable. For some hours, perhaps owing to the heat of the day, they had proceeded in the quietest manner possible—too quietly for the Members of the Government present; for it would seem as if the right hon. Gentleman the Vice President of the Council had written to his Chief, to say they were getting on very languidly, and wanted a word or two from him to throw life into the debate. At length they were favoured with the opinion not only of the right hon. Gentleman the Vice President of the Council, but of the right hon. Gentleman at the head of the Government. If it were necessary to reply to the argument of the Vice President of the Council, he (Mr. Scourfield) had only to refer to a speech delivered by a distinguished Member of the present Government, in opposing Lord Derby's Reform Bill of 1859, and on what ground did the House think? On the ground that it tended to the identity of the franchise in counties and towns. He would only trouble the House with an extract from the speech in question. It was as follows:—

"But however that may be, I say it is a principle rooted in the antiquity of the country—a principle which has never been touched from the earliest times down to the present day, a principle which you cannot alter without laying the axe at the root of our national liberties—that there shall not be uniformity of franchise. . . . I will not trouble you with authority, though I believe there is no text-book on the British Constitution where variety of suffrage is not laid down as the great distinguishing principle which always guided the British Constitution. . . . If we take the principle of the Bill to be what its authors have declared—namely, identity of franchise—then I say that identity of franchise is a principle wholly foreign to the British Constitution, unknown in our history, dangerous to the utmost extent in its probable consequences and effects."—[3 Hansard, cliii. 842-3-5.]

[Cheers, and cries of "Name!"] That speech was delivered by the right hon. Gentleman the Secretary of State for War. He (Mr. Scourfield) commended the speech to the consideration of the hon. Member for the Border Burghs (Mr. Trevelyan), who had formerly, on another question, been associated more or less with the right hon. Gentleman, and he asked Her Majesty's Government to pause before they adopted a principle which in the opinion of one of their most distinguished Colleagues would lay the axe to the root of our national liberties, and which was foreign to and would be destructive of the British Constitution.

Mr. J. G. TALBOT said, he gave credit to the hon. Member for the Border Burghs (Mr. Trevelyan) for having run straight, and not withdrawn his Bill without Notice as some other hon. Members had done. It was strange, however, to have to discuss a measure of this importance at the end of the Session, but a somewhat stranger thing was that what he might almost call a Royal, or at least a Presidential, Message had been delivered to the House, expressing the Prime Minister's approval of the Bill, and his conviction that the settlement of the question could not be long delayed. The Home Secretary had endeavoured to soothe their excited feelings—and in such weather soothing was wanted when such exciting topics had been introduced —by saying that the Message contained nothing but what the Prime Minister had said before. Now, the right hon. Gentleman had no doubt previously said he was in favour of the measure; but had he ever said this previously under circumstances of such gravity, and with the statement that the question must soon be settled?

MR. W. E. FORSTER: It is important that the words which my right hon. Friend wished me to convey to the House should not be misinterpreted, and there was nothing in them to bear out the version given by the hon. Gentleman.

MR. J. G. TALBOT said, he had understood the Prime Minister's opinion to be that this was a question which must soon be settled.

MR. W. E. FORSTER: If the hon. Gentleman had paid attention to the statement, he would have found that my right hon. Friend merely said he retained the opinion he had previously held.

MR. J. G. TALBOT said, the right hon. Gentleman the Secretary of State for the Home Department had represented that the communication, whatever it might be, did not much matter, for it had been well known what the Prime Minister's sentiments were. If such was the case, what was the use of his writing the letter? It was useless beating about the bush. Parliament was at the end of its fifth Session, and it was currently whispered out-of-doors that the Government were only waiting for a convenient opportunity to dissolve. He challenged right hon. Gentlemen on the Treasury bench to deny that that was a manifesto upon which to go to the country. [Opposition cheers, and Ministerial counter-cheers.] The cheering of hon. Members opposite below the gangway showed that they perfectly understood the meaning of the Message. It required no great sagacity to see that the Government could not have been very comfortable during the last few weeks; they had been beaten in this House, where they had a majority of 80, and in the other House, where they were certainly not in a minority of 100, they had been signally defeated. Moreover, the noble Marquess the Chief Secretary for Ireland, had said in a speech in the provinces, that the Election might be this year or next, but could not be long delayed. They, of course, must all regret that the Prime Minister had not been here to make the statement himself; but when on a subject on which he had already expressed an opinion, he thought it necessary to ask the right hon. Gentleman the Vice President of the Council to state his sentiments, and when that was done in such significant terms on the eve of a General Election, he (Mr. J. G. Talbot) would ask whether that was an occasion on which hon. Members ought to vote for the Bill? That was nothing more nor less than an electioneering cry, and he challenged the Government to say that it was not the prelude to an announcement shortly to be made that this was the last Session of an expiring Parliament.

MR. TREVELYAN said, he had received great comfort from the debate, and hoped for still more from the division, which he hoped hon. Gentlemen opposite would not evade. The most important feature had been the statement communicated by the Prime Minister, and as to the objection taken by the noble Lord the Member for North Leicestershire (Lord John Manners)—that the right hon. Gentleman's opinion might have been modified by the debate, he did not think a single argument had been advanced which could have had any such effect. The unusual warmth shown by the noble Lord led him to think that he had been deputed by the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Buckinghamshire (Mr. Disraeli) to make a similar statement, and had been disappointed at finding himself forestalled. He felt sure that the hon. Member for Brighton (Mr. Fawcett), who joined himself in 1866 in opposing Earl Grosvenor's Amendment, declining to consider the extension of the franchise till the entire scheme had been produced, would, on reflection, adopt a similar course, and would not ask persons whom it was proposed to admit to the suffrage to await a re-distribution of political power. He had been charged by the noble Lord with taking part in the agricultural agitation. Now, he had only once been invited to do so, when 20,000 labourers, as it was said, met in Somersetshire, and his reply, published in the papers, was that hon. Members of Parliament should not take part in a purely commercial question, being simply bound to see that both sides had an opportunity of laying their case before the public. That Bill would remedy the exclusion from the suffrage of one of the parties to the dispute, and its object was not to open or close the door to further fields of electoral discussion.

MR. J. LOWTHER, who had given Notice of an Amendment declining to entertain a Bill dealing with the representation, which failed to provide for the proportional representation of local minorities, said, he wished to explain his reasons for placing it on the Paper. The hon. Gentleman in charge of the Bill seemed to be afraid that he meant to talk the Bill out; but he, himself, having made a speech of some length in proposing the second reading, and having just made a second speech, would be mainly responsible, if he failed to condense his observations within the limited time available. Although opposed to what he might term a dead level in representation, yet he had no substantial objection to the Bill; but when a great political change had recently been made, it was undesirable to be constantly re-opening it at the instance of private Members, and such a proposal ought to be made on the responsibility of the Government, instead of being recommended by the Prime Minister on a sheet of note-paper. The hon. Member was proceeding in his remarks upon the Bill, when—

It being a quarter of an hour before Six of the clock, the Debate stood adjourned till To-morrow.

POST OFFICE TELEGRAPH SERVICES [LOAN] BILL.

Resolution [July 22] reported;

"That it is expedient to authorise the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury to raise further sums of money, not exceeding in the whole the sum of One million Two hundred and Fifty thousand Pounds, for the purpose of the Telegraph Acts, in the same manner and upon the same terms and conditions as the said Commissioners are now authorised to raise money under the said Acts."

Resolution agreed to:—Bill ordered to be brought in by MR. BONHAM-CARTER, MR. CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER, and MR. BAXTER.

EAST INDIA (GREAT SOUTHERN OF INDIA AND CARNATIC RAILWAY COMPANIES).

BILL.

On Motion of MR. GRANT DUFF, Bill to amalgamate the Great Southern of India and Carnatic Railway Companies, and for enabling the amalgamated Company to make agreements with the Secretary of State in Council of India; and for other purposes, ordered to be brought in by Mr. GRANT DUFF and Mr. AVTON.

Bill presented, and read the first time. [Bill 258.]

House adjourned at five minutes before Six o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS,

Thursday, 24th July, 1873.

MINUTES.]—PUBLIC BILLS—First Reading
*Extradition Act (1870) Amendment** (235).
Second Reading—Salmon Fisheries (215);
Turnpike Acts Continuance, &c.* (223).
Committee—Militia (Service, &c.)* (206-237).
Committee—Report—Steam Threshing Machines*
 (210-239); Medical Act Amendment (University of London)* (214); Exchequer Bonds
 (£1,600,000)* (222); Treasury Chest Fund*
 (217); Consolidated Fund, &c. (Permanent Charges Redemption)* (198); Military Ma- nœuvres* (216).
Report—Conveyancing (Scotland) (227-238);
Petitions of Right (Ireland)* (233).
Third Reading—Elementary Education Provisional Order Confirmation (No. 1)* (167), and passed.

SALMON FISHERIES BILL.—(No. 215.)

(The Earl of Morley.)

SECOND READING.

Order of the Day for the Second Reading, read.

THE EARL OF MORLEY, in moving that the Bill which had come up from the Commons, be now read the second time, briefly explained its objects. The main purpose of the measure was to render the existing law more elastic. Power would be given to the Home Secretary to vary the limits of the fishing districts. The 40th clause, which was the backbone of the measure, would enable the conservators of rivers to draw up by-laws and to alter the close time within certain limits. The by-laws would not be valid until approved by the Secretary of State, who might, if he thought fit, order an investigation before granting his consent. As the details could be better discussed in Committee he did not feel it necessary to enter into them on this stage.

Moved, “That the Bill be now read 2<sup>a</sup>.”—(The Earl of Morley.)

THE EARL OF MAMESBURY gave Notice that he would move Amendments in Committee.

Motion agreed to; Bill read 2<sup>a</sup> accordingly, and committed to a Committee of the Whole House on Monday next.

CONVEYANCING (SCOTLAND) BILL.

(The Lord Chancellor.)
 (No. 227.) REPORT OF AMENDMENTS.

Amendments reported (according to Order).

THE DUKE OF RICHMOND moved to insert words providing that the Act should not come into operation till the 1st of January, 1874. The Bill would cause a great disturbance in the existing mode of land conveyance in Scotland, and therefore he thought that a proper amount of time should be given to persons who were in the habit of transacting land conveyancing business to prepare for the change about to be made.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR said, he did not object to the postponement suggested by the noble Duke.

Amendment made accordingly.

Further Amendments made; Bill to be read 3<sup>a</sup> To-morrow, and to be printed as amended. (No. 238.)

THE ALBERT AND EUROPEAN ARBITRATIONS—EX-LORD CHANCELLORS.

Order of the Day for considering the Commons Amendments to the SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE BILL, read.

LORD CAIRNS: Before proceeding to the consideration of these Amendments I will ask permission of your Lordships to make an explanatory statement upon a matter personal to myself, and which, I think, had better be kept distinct from the merits or demerits of any of the Amendments we are about to consider. I have said that the statement I wish to make is personal to myself; but if it were merely personal to myself I am not sure that at this period of the Session I should have ventured to delay your Lordships in proceeding to other business. But the charge or the statement to which I am about to refer, although personal to myself, conveys also in it that which appears to me to be a reflection upon the conduct of the legal business of your Lordships' House, and therefore I think it is my duty to mention it to your Lordships, and to make the statement for which I have asked permission. I have yet another reason for taking this course. The charge, while referring to me, refers also to one whose voice can no longer be heard among us to defend himself—I mean my late lamented Friend Lord Westbury—and knowing as I do the facts of the case, it is my duty on behalf of his memory, as well as on my own behalf, to call your Lordships' attention to the subject which I am about to mention. One of the Amendments which has been made in the Judicature Bill—and on the merits or demerits of the Amendment I am not now about to say a word—has dealt with the question of the relations between those who may hereafter be appointed to the office of Lord Chancellor and the Appellate Court created by the Bill; and a provision has been introduced into this Bill with regard to the terms upon which future Lord Chancellors shall be expected to take and to hold office. The argument by which that Amendment was pressed by the Prime Minister and the Attorney General had reference to circumstances connected with myself and the late Lord Westbury. The right hon. and the hon. and learned Gentleman to whom I have just alluded referred to some cases in which, under the authority of Acts of Parliament, Lord Westbury and myself have acted for some time in the discharge of a high judicial function created by the Acts. As far as I am personally concerned, the Acts of Parliament were, one connected with the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway, and another connected with certain Insurance Companies, of which the Albert was the head; and the statement made was, that my late Friend and myself had assumed in our positions as ex-Chancellors the transaction of that which was private as distinguished from public business; and the suggestion was, that that which was termed private business had interfered with the performance of what were described as our public duties, and that therefore legislation upon the subject for the future had become necessary. The Prime Minister and the Attorney General were good enough to say that they did not deny the perfect right of either my noble Friend or myself to act as we had done; but they stated that the House of Commons had a right to prevent a repetition of that which had been done—or, at all events, that they had a right so to guard the relations of ex-Chancellors towards the public as that the consequences which had been suggested should not again occur. Of those statements and arguments made and urged in the other House of Parliament I had no notice—if I had such notice, I could possibly, through the kindness of some Friends of my own who are Members of the House of Commons, have laid, before the audience addressed the facts which I am now about to state to your Lordships. My late Friend, Lord Westbury, could not have had such notice, for at the time the statements were made he was in a condition in which notice could not have been given to him; and the same circumstances spared him what I cannot but think would have been to him the inexpressible pain of being made aware of the observations which had been made by his Friends upon his course of action. I will now state to your Lordships the facts which ought to be mentioned with reference to this subject. The charge divides itself into two portions. In the first place, there is the suggestion that judicial occupations of a private nature were undertaken by Lord Westbury and myself; and, in the second place, there is the statement that such occupations interfered and must interfere with the duties to be performed by us in this House. Let me, therefore, lay before your Lordships the short facts connected with the first Act of Parliament to which I have referred. A few years ago, the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway was on the point of collapse—or I suppose I might say had been reduced to a state of insolvency. The interests involved in that Company were between £17,000,000 and £18,000,000 sterling. There were, at the time the Act was passed, no less than 46 Chancery suits and 78 actions at Common Law pending with reference to the affairs of the Company; and, in addition, there were filed for the consideration of the Arbitrators appointed under the Act of Parliament 79 cases. At the time the Act was passed, the large revenues of the Company were entirely locked up, and whole families were reduced to destitution, because the income which they ought to have derived from the securities of the Company could not be paid. In addition to the Chancery suits which I have mentioned, some branches of the Courts, and particularly the Chambers, were absolutely blocked up and impeded by the magnitude and the cumbrousness of the litigation which had arisen. Under these circumstances, a measure was introduced into Parliament, and it was proposed that a special tribunal should be created in order to deliver the Company from its embarrassments. I have no word to say in favour of the policy of special tribunals. I have always entertained a very strong opinion against their policy, for I look upon the creation of special tribunals of this kind as a species of reproach upon our whole system of judicature. That, however, is not the question now under consideration. An application was made to my noble Friend not now present (the Marquess of Salisbury) and myself to act as Arbitrators. The answer I made was, that if Parliament conceived that I could be performing with advantage a public duty by undertaking the office proposed to be created by the Act, and if powers were conferred which appeared to me to be adequate to rescue the Company and those concerned in it from the difficulties they were in, I should feel myself bound to perform the duty which Parliament would thus impose upon me. I do not know what answer my noble Friend (the Marquess of Salisbury) returned, but I presume it would be something to the same effect. The Act of Parliament was passed and powers of the most ample and unusual kind were conferred upon us. The term "Arbitrator" was applied to us by that Act; but, in point of fact, the office we were asked to undertake was not that of Arbitrators at all. I understand an arbitrator to be a person who by the agreement of other persons decides disputes between them. But there was no agreement in this case—there was an absolute, unqualified, and unappealable power conferred by the Act upon the Arbitrators in reference to the whole affairs of the Company. They were clothed with a power higher than that possessed by any Court of Law or Equity in the country, and, as I have said, their decisions were unappealable and irreversible. I repeat that I do not argue with the policy of the Act; but the result of its working was that the whole of the litigation which had arisen and had occupied the Courts to the extent I have mentioned was finally concluded in 18 months from the time of the passing of the Act. I am not unwilling to admit that I look with satisfaction upon this result, although I question the policy of the Act of Parliament under which it was attained. I attribute the result mainly to the unexampled assistance which I received from my co-Arbitrator in the work. What I now want to ask your Lordships is, whether it is proper to describe the discharge of duties such as these as the assumption of private business to the detriment of public duties? I do not wish to argue the question; but I will state to your Lordships the views which I take of it. I believe the duties which under the Act of Parliament were imposed upon me, and which I performed, were duties which for their authority and their sanction, and as regards their responsibility, were as high in their nature and as public, and were as much clothed with the whole power and force of the Parliament of the country, as are the functions performed either by the Prime Minister or the Attorney General. Now, I pass to the other Act of Parliament to which I have referred. About five years ago, a huge Assurance Company—the Albert—collapsed and failed. In that Company were rolled up some 20 or more of other Assurance Companies. Your Lordships will be surprised to hear that the number of persons interested in the failure as policy-holders was upwards of 23,000, everyone of whom either had or might have a separate case which he might raise and require to have determined. The number of shareholders having different interests was upwards of 2,000. The business of endeavouring to settle the affairs of the Company had gone on in the Court of Chancery for something like two years. It had been found absolutely impossible to arrive at the solution of any one of the various questions which were involved in the failure. Nothing had been got in and nothing had been paid at the time I speak of, and at the end of two years after the failure the only result of the proceedings was the incurring of an amount of costs, the magnitude of which would startle your Lordships were I to mention the figures. In this state of things, how came it to be suggested that Parliament should create a special and exceptional tribunal for dealing with the case? Lord Justice James made the following remarks upon the case, and those remarks were quoted in Parliament as a justification of the Bill :—

Lord Cairns

" I considered that as a Vice Chancellor could only give a portion of his time to things of that kind, it was desirable that Parliament should find some means of appointing some special tribunal which could give the time that was necessary and not give merely portions of days or portions of weeks. I did not see how it was to be worked out under half-a-century, if it could be done in that time. That was really the ground on which I proceeded."

Again, I have nothing to say as to the policy upon which Parliament proceeded in passing a Bill in conformity with the recommendation of this learned Judge. I was asked to undertake the office which was to be created under the Act. I stated that I was not much encouraged by my former experience; but in this case too, knowing the extent to which the Court of Chancery was blocked up by the litigation—knowing, also, the extent of the interests which were involved, and the amount of misery which was being suffered by persons interested—I stated that if Parliament thought fit to confer upon me the duty of acting upon this tribunal, I should feel myself bound to accept the duty and perform it to the best of my power. Acting on this tribunal—which the Prime Minister and the Attorney General pleasantly describe as a piece of private business—powers were vested in me which I certainly believe were undesirable, for the Act of Parliament not only armed me with the whole of the powers of the Court of Chancery without appeal, but gave me in every part of Her Majesty's dominions, in every colony, in India, and in all Her Majesty's possessions, all the powers of all the Courts in these colonies and possessions. I look with some surprise upon the magnitude of those powers, and I trust I have exercised them with care; but I do not think the exercise of such powers can be called private business. The result is this—I am happy to say that at the end of the first year after the passing of the Act of Parliament, the first award, which settled almost all the cases in dispute, has been made; the second award is on the point of being made; every case has been heard and disposed of; and the only circumstance which prevents the whole proceeding being wound up and closed is that some assets remain to be got in, and that persons to whom money has been awarded will not come and take it away. Let me add one fact. These Acts of Parliament contained clauses contemplating the refusal of the persons named, and if I had refused the office, Parliament has thought fit to declare by these clauses that the only persons who could be appointed in my place were just the persons to whom the objections of the Prime Minister and the Attorney General would apply as much as to myself—namely, ex-Lord Chancellors, Judges of one of the Superior Courts, or Members of the Judicial Committee. Let me now say a word as to the case in which Lord Westbury acted. Subsequently to the failure of the Albert, another huge Assurance Company, the European, collapsed, and a similar Bill was introduced for dealing with its affairs. While it was pending Lord Westbury came to me and said he had been asked to discharge the duties which were created by the Bill, and he was good enough to add that he had declined to do so unless he found that I was unwilling to undertake these duties. I said it was quite impossible for me to undertake them, and I begged him earnestly, if he found his health and strength equal to the task, not to fail to give to the public—because it was given to the public—the benefit of the assistance which he, perhaps, beyond all other men could give in such a case. I believe it was owing to my strong representation that Lord Westbury very reluctantly undertook to give effect to the Act of Parliament. I come now to the other question—whether the discharge of those duties has interfered with my duties in this House. As regards those persons who have held the office which I have had the honour to hold, I apprehend there is little doubt as to their duties to the public. I hold that, altogether irrespective of the office which I have had the honour to hold, I, as a Member of your Lordships' House, and as what is called a Legal Member of the House, am bound by my obligations to your Lordships to undertake, to the best of my poor ability, along with my noble and learned Friends, the duties of the Appellate Jurisdiction of this House; and I hold, again, that, irrespective of any office which I have had the honour of holding, as a Member of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, when summoned by Her Majesty to attend the Judicial Committee, I am bound to attend and offer my services there. But let me now consider the charge which was made that the functions I have described interfered with my duties in the House. The proceedings in the case of the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Company occurred in 1859. On looking back I find that 18 sittings were held by my noble Friend and myself in that case, and not one of those 18 sittings was held upon a day devoted to appellate business in your Lordships House. So much for that charge. I have also turned to the case of the Albert Company. I find that 38 sittings were held under the Albert Act. Out of these 38 sittings, only four were held upon days when judicial business was taken in this House; and upon one of those days I find that, owing to the meetings being at different hours, I was able to sit in this House as well as in the Arbitration. Thus, out of 56 sittings which occurred during five years, three only were held upon days when judicial business was proceeding here. Your Lordships will now be able to judge what degree of foundation there was for the statement either that the duties undertaken by me were private duties, or that they interfered with my duties in this House. I have already stated that I had no notice of the statement or the charge—whichever it must be called—made against me in the other House of Parliament. I must go further. This is a Bill which began in your Lordships' House. It was considered here upon the second reading, and also before a Select Committee, upon which there were several Members of Her Majesty's Government. The scheme of the Bill then was, that future Chancellors should have their choice of a certain pension if they were willing to serve upon the Appellate Court, and of a certain other pension if they were unwilling to do so. That clause was not accepted in the Select Committee, and I rather think that the Members of the Government concurred in its omission. What I have to call your Lordships' attention to, however, though not by way of complaint against my noble and learned Friend on the Woolsack, is this—if the Government were of opinion that any functions undertaken by Lord Westbury and myself should be made the foundation of changes in the Bill, why was not that opinion expressed here? Why were not the proposals of the Government made here? Why was this statement made in "another place?" Why were these proposals reserved till the last stage of the Bill in "another place?" What led to a change in the Bill in the other House I do not stay to inquire. I have laid the facts before your Lordships, and I leave it to your Lordships as men of honour to judge whether the course adopted in this case by the Prime Minister and by the Attorney General has been marked by courtesy or by justice.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR: My Lords, one thing I cannot help saying, and that is, that whatever reason there may be for regretting that anything should have been said elsewhere which could have touched or moved the feelings of my noble and learned Friend, or of the other noble and learned Lord to whom he has referred, on one point I think your Lordships have no reason to feel regret—and that is that my noble and learned Friend should have had an opportunity of giving so fully before your Lordships and before the country the facts of this case, and of so entirely justifying himself from any personal imputation. But I cannot for a moment think that any personal imputation was by anyone intended. I can assure my noble and learned Friend that there was no premeditated idea on the part of the Government, or, I will undertake to say, on the part of any Members of the other House, of casting any imputation upon my noble and learned Friend or upon Lord Westbury, and I am convinced that a desire of making such reflections as my noble and learned Friend imagines was not the groundwork of the change in the Bill made in the other House. For reasons right or wrong, that change was made in the Bill—a particular alteration affecting the position of future Lord Chancellors was proposed to be made; and it is undoubtedly true that those who addressed the House, and to whom reference has been made, did refer to the parts taken by my noble and learned Friend and Lord Westbury in the Arbitrations in question, as in their opinion furnishing some reason why for the future those arrangements should be made. I feel persuaded that if the whole case, as it has been put by my noble and learned Friend, had been before the minds of those who, I am convinced, then spoke without any premeditation, and certainly without any intention of casting imputation, no such observations would have been made. For my part, I do not deem that a sufficient reason for what the other House has done with regard to that clause; but I am sure that nothing that was said was intended to cast personal reflections upon those who undertook the duties undertaken by my noble and learned Friend and Lord Westbury under Acts of Parliament. I am bound to add that it appears to me that when Parliament thought fit to create new special Courts with such enormous and unprecedented powers, it was totally impossible that any persons should be entrusted with those powers except learned men who had the greatest judicial experience, and who, from the public opinion of their capacity, as well as of their virtue, might obtain the confidence of the country in the exercise of such extraordinary powers. If those Acts were to pass at all, it was an indispensable condition that some such men as my noble and learned Friend and Lord Westbury, if they could be prevailed upon to undertake those duties, should discharge them. They did undertake those duties under the direct cognizance of both branches of the Legislature — if I do not mistake they were named in the Bills. I am quite sure, therefore, your Lordships did not need the assurance of my noble and learned Friend that it was from a sense of public duty and nothing else that he and Lord Westbury undertook those duties. I should not satisfy my own conscience in this matter, or do full justice to my noble and learned Friend, if I did not also tell your Lordships that when one of those Bills—I am not quite sure which—was in the House of Commons, a Member of that House communicated with me upon the subject of the propriety of such duties being undertaken by a person who had filled the office of Lord Chancellor; and what I said to him and to other persons was, that I did not feel it consistent with my duty to deprive the promoters of those Bills of the services of men competent to discharge those duties; and that in my opinion only men of the highest judgment in the country, if they were free from other engagements, could discharge those duties. I declined, therefore, to take any part in opposing that Bill, and I may have been, in some degree, responsible for the decision of some other Members of the Legislature not to oppose it.

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE
BILL.
COMMONS' AMENDMENTS.

(Commons' Amendments, 234.—The page and line of these Amendments refer to Bill No. [154.] as first printed by the Commons.)

THE LORD CHANCELLOR: I now pass from this subject to address to your Lordships a few words in moving that your Lordships do take into consideration the Commons' Amendments to this Bill. So far as I am concerned, it is my intention to propose some consequential or corrective changes in those Amendments, but not to propose anything of importance which would interfere with what the House of Commons has done. Upon those matters it is not necessary now to trouble your Lordships in detail; but on one important point I have undertaken to propose to your Lordships an addition to the Amendments of the House of Commons, which I hope and believe will tend to produce a general agreement among your Lordships on a matter of great importance, which otherwise might be a subject of no slight division of opinion. It will be in your Lordships' recollection that when the Bill was introduced, the 18th clause, which authorizes Her Majesty if she think fit to constitute a new Court of Appeal, to hear those Appeals which now go to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, did not extend to appeals from the Ecclesiastical Courts. I stated to your Lordships at the time, on more than one occasion, the reason which had led me to make that exception. The subject was one of great and increasing importance, and had received a good deal of public consideration; and I was apprehensive that if I proposed by the Bill to deal with these ecclesiastical appeals the Bill would be overweighted and its success might be endangered. I stated at the same time to your Lordships that my own individual opinion was not opposed to a transfer of such appeals to the new Court of Appeal, but that I thought it and Ireland; and when that was the case, why, he should ask, should it be altered? He had heard no argument why their Lordships should give up a jurisdiction which had been so satisfactorily exercised. It was admitted that the House had exercised its jurisdiction efficiently, and it might be still further improved by the introduction of certain high legal officers in this country into the House, and it might be, also, in certain instances, of high legal officers from Ireland and Scotland, so that as good an appellate tribunal as could be had might be secured in that way. He regretted that an Amendment which he had proposed, that where a further hearing should, in accordance with the suggestion of his noble Friend behind him (Lord Cairns) be considered necessary, it should be referred to this House, had been rejected. A third hearing might in some instances be highly desirable, as in those cases in which the decision of the first Court had been reversed, and there was nearly a balance of opinion among the Judges of the Appellate Court, and why should not such hearings be before their Lordships' House? If that Amendment had been adopted the ultimate appeal in England would have been reserved to the House of Lords without any interference with the general provisions of the Bill. He hoped that, in any future arrangement which might be made with respect to the constitution of a final Court of Appeal for all the three Kingdoms, that House would still be allowed to exercise a jurisdiction which it had shown itself perfectly competent to discharge. As to the proposal immediately before the House, asking their Lordships' assent to the Amendments made in the Bill by the House of Commons, he would observe that it was not right at the end of July that the House should be asked to consider a long list of Amendments in a Bill which had been sent back to it two days ago. That was not a satisfactory mode of proceeding in dealing with a measure constituting a High Court of Judicature as well as a Court of Ultimate Appeal, and he, for one, could not see what would be lost by postponing the settlement of the question for another year. Indeed, great advantage would, in his opinion, result from postponement, for the proposals contained in the Bill would undergo examination during the Recess, and a more complete and satisfactory measure would in all probability be the result. If their Lordships were to dissent from the Commons' Amendments in any important respect, that House might, when the Bill went back, insist on their Amendments; and how, he should like to know, could the question be fairly discussed when the Bill was returned to their Lordships, perhaps at the close of another week?

Moved, To leave out from ("That") to the end of the Motion for the purpose of inserting the following words: ("As it is now admitted by the promoters of the Bill that there should be only one Court of Ultimate Appeal for the United Kingdom, and as it is uncertain whether any such Court can be newly constituted in England which will give the same satisfaction to Scotland and Ireland which it is admitted that this House has afforded, it is inexpedient, without allowing time for further inquiry, to pass a Bill which establishes a separate Court of Ultimate Appeal for England, and must therefore render a repeal of the settlement under the Acts of Union necessary, if the appeals from those countries are to be transferred to that Court, the formation of which will justify Scotland and Ireland desiring to have separate Courts of Ultimate Appeal in their own capitals if no longer allowed to come to this House; and it is therefore expedient that the consideration of the Amendments made by the House of Commons be deferred for three months.")—(The Chairman of Committees.)

THE ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY said, he desired to say a few words on the particular point to which the noble and learned Lord on the Woolsack had made special reference in connection with the Amendments which had been introduced into the Bill in the House of Commons. The Bill came back to their Lordships in a very different state from that in which it had left them. His noble and learned Friend had been good enough to place him on the Select Committee to which the Bill had been referred simply because one of the clauses had reference to ecclesiastical matters: and after the fullest consideration it was resolved both in that Committee and in the House itself that ecclesiastical matters had better not be mixed up with a general measure of this kind. He could not help thinking that his noble and learned Friend had exercised a wise discretion when he avoided the somewhat extended range of ecclesiastical law and the thorny paths into which those who discussed that law would be likely to lead the House. It had turned out, however, that others had rushed in where a Lord Chancellor feared to tread, and he was very much afraid that those who had so rushed in did so without that full consideration and understanding of the subject which its importance demanded. His noble and learned Friend was entitled to his personal thanks for his courtesy in consulting him on the subject of the Amendment which he intended to move; but he felt himself in some difficulty with regard to it, because he and those who held similar views on the question had been driven, as it were, into a corner. He had never been more surprised than when he learnt that before dinner on a day in July, when men's minds were naturally occupied with other thoughts besides those of the constitution of the Church of England, a sudden change had been made in the Bill, which was of such importance that a very eminent lawyer had declared in print that the introduction of that change altogether destroyed the Royal Supremacy in the Church in this land, and destroyed at the same the character of the Court of Appeal as belonging to a tribunal which was henceforward to have the highest cognizance in ecclesiastical matters. When he heard that, he confessed he felt more surprise than he could well express. He felt that in that matter they were almost in the condition of persons who were run off with in an express train, and did not know what in the world was to happen next. A right hon. Friend of his in the Lower House had communicated to him what had occurred there while he was at dinner. Immediately after he returned home, he received a letter from the Prime Minister. "Of course," he said to himself, "it must be a letter desiring to be made acquainted with my opinion and that of the Episcopal Bench in a matter which at all events very materially alters the constitution of the Church of these realms." Well, when he opened it, the language was, as it always was, courteous, but it informed him, in plain English, that the thing was done. And not only that the thing was done, but—what surprised him still more—that the right hon. Gentleman had consulted his Colleagues in the Cabinet on the propriety of doing it the day before, although no communication whatever had passed between the Heads of the Church and those who were engaged in quietly considering in the Cabinet whether the whole constitution of the Church should be altered or not. He did not know what was meant by "consulting one's Colleagues in the Cabinet;" but it was often said that when any Prime Minister had a specialty the Members of his Cabinet were more or less in the position of the Kopha prosopa with which they were all familiar in the Greek drama. He was therefore much obliged to the noble and learned Lord for having so far listened to the Episcopal Bench as, at all events, to have altered what appeared to be a total exclusion of the ecclesiastical element from the highest Court of Appeal in ecclesiastical causes. He was not unwilling to accept the modified proposal now made, because it enabled them probably to get out of a great difficulty. He thought, however, the mode in which the change was made after the Bill had left their Lordships' House was the strongest proof that it ought not to have been made, because he felt convinced that if a thing of that kind was done in such hot haste on so important a matter, it could not possibly be well done. He understood it was said that the unanimous feeling of the country was in its favour. Well, he had presented a number of Petitions that day, all of which were distinctly condemnatory of the course suggested—namely, that of excluding the ecclesiastical element from the Final Court of Appeal; and even, in these days of accelerated communication, it was almost impossible to make people aware of what was done in Parliament with sufficient speed to enable them to be awake to what was transacted so hurriedly. He was told that a large number of Petitions would be placed in his hands to-morrow morning to the same effect as those he had already presented; but by to-morrow morning the whole thing must necessarily be over. While, therefore, he was thankful for the modification of the proposal that was to be made, because it gave them something where they feared they would get nothing, yet he wished the country had had a more deliberate opportunity of expressing its opinion on that subject. Every clause of the Bill, as far as it referred to the Court of Appeal, might be viewed in a somewhat new aspect; because they must consider not only whether it was a good new Court of Appeal for the cases which would come before it from the ordinary civil Courts, but whether it was a good Court of Appeal for the ecclesiastical matters which were to be imported into it. He did not know whether that new Court of Appeal was to be divided into a great number of, as it were, Committees, and whether they might not be so unfortunate, in that press of business which had been so graphically described as arising in the ordinary Courts, as to have their ecclesiastical affairs referred, perhaps, to not the most important members of that appellate tribunal. The writer of the pamphlet to which he had alluded stated that it was very important that persons acquainted with theology should be present, and should take a considerable part in the drawing up of its judgments—which might relate to such matters as the Real Presence in the bread and wine, the adoration of the consecrated elements, &c. If those most abstruse questions were to be brought before the highest Court of Appeal, it certainly did seem necessary that they should have the assurance that they would have the ablest Members of the Court present to hear those cases. It was not right that those matters should be decided by a simply civil tribunal; but it was not proposed even now to decide them by a purely civil tribunal. The Court of Delegates, to which the present Judicial Committee of the Privy Council succeeded, was not a civil tribunal any more than the Judicial Committee, when sitting upon ecclesiastical matters and having the whole powers of the Court of Delegates transferred to it, became in those cases a civil tribunal. The fact that a Court consisted entirely of laymen was not rendered thereby a civil tribunal. The Court of Arches, which sat in the name of the Archbishop of Canterbury, was presided over solely by laymen. The Consistory Court of London, which exercised its ecclesiastical powers in the name of the Bishop of London, was a distinctly Ecclesiastical Court, and was presided over by a layman. Their highest Court of Appeal would be an Ecclesiastical Court still, for it would represent the Queen in her ecclesiastical capacity as exercising the Supremacy of the Crown; and in that capacity it would be an ecclesiastical tribunal. Whether it consisted entirely of laymen, or of laymen advised by theologians, it would be an ecclesiastical tribunal. He wished that to be distinctly understood; because he found another Amendment in the Bill which he did not understand, and although he had read the discussions in the other House they had not helped him to do so. That tribunal was to have all the powers of the Judicial Committee of Privy Council in matters ecclesiastical—those powers, descending from the Reformation throughout the whole course of the administration by the Court of Delegates, were now to be transferred to this Court of Appeal; and yet the most important part of the functions of that Ecclesiastical Court of Appeal were to be taken from it and transferred to the Court of Arches. That was, no longer was the sentence for degradation or suspension to be pronounced, as it had heretofore been, by this Ecclesiastical Court of Appeal; but they were to refer to the Court of Arches in order to give some sort of authority to the Court which was above. That, he thought, was a matter which required very serious consideration. It was proposed to transfer all the powers of the Judicial Committee to the new Court of Appeal, and yet, for some reasons which he should like to see explained, they proposed to deprive it of anything which gave it the semblance of being an Ecclesiastical Court. Various opinions had been expressed by Churchmen as to the proposed change, but for the greater part against handing over to a purely civil Court the decision of matters purely ecclesiastical. Indeed, one gentleman went so far as to declare his determination to treat with contempt the decision of a civil Court in such cases. For his own part, he was opposed to that proposal to deprive the last Court of Appeal in matters affecting the Church of that ancient ecclesiastical character which in one sentence the Bill seemed to preserve to it and in another to take from it. The subject was a very important one. It stirred the feelings of a great number of people. It had to do with the social and religious life of the country, and therefore it would be disrespectful to the Church and the people of England if their Lordships' House were to appear to hurry through a matter of such importance with the same speed with which it passed a Railway Bill.

THE MARQUESS OF SALISBURY said, that one observation made by the most rev. Prelate who had just spoken comelled him to say a few words in defence of a right hon. Friend of his in the other House. The most rev. Prelate had applied to his right hon. Friend the epithet which had become classical. [“What ?”] Well, he never used the word himself; but a noble Duke opposite (the Duke of St. Albans) had, and it appeared to have received the high sanction of the most rev. Prelate.

THE ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY: I said “some persons.”

THE MARQUESS OF SALISBURY: The most rev. Prelate said that his right hon. Friend (Mr. Hardy) had taken the House of Commons by surprise in proposing his Amendment; but that allegation was entirely negatived by the fact that not only had due Notice been given of it, but the subject had been debated in their Lordships’ House, and the opinions in reference to it of the noble and learned Lord on the Woolsack, of other noble Lords, and of at least one Member of the Episcopal Bench had been expressed. Eventually it was only put aside lest the passing of the Bill in the House of Commons should be imperilled. Having been proposed in the House of Commons, there was an obvious reason why the Government should accept it without notice to the most rev. Prelate—they had only “Hobson’s choice” in the matter—if they had not accepted it they would simply have been beaten, for the unanimous opinion of the House of Commons—Conservative, Liberal, and Radical—was in favour of the change. And, perhaps, one reason why the Amendment was so speedily accepted was to be found in the phenomenon that during the discussion in either House no speaker rose to defend the composition of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council with the exception of the two most rev. Prelates. They sat absolutely alone. Except the two most rev. Prelates, the tribunal seemed to have no adherents. But the most rev. Prelate said that the clergy were in favour of it, and that he had presented numerous Petitions. Did he forget the petition which had been presented against it to the Lower House of Convocation.

THE ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY: That petition expressed the opinion of individual clergymen—not that of the Lower House of Convocation as a body.

THE MARQUESS OF SALISBURY: It expressed the opinions of 38 representative members of the Province of Canterbury, and no counter opinion whatever was expressed. He did not propose to follow the most rev. Prelate into a technical legal discussion in reference to this change. In his opinion, it was not the case that the Court of Delegates was composed of spiritual persons. It was composed of persons, lay or clerical, at the will of the Sovereign—and, as a matter of fact, he believed the Court of Delegates had sat only four times from the Reformation down to the present day in order to decide cases relating to Church discipline. He trusted that the provision suggested by the noble and learned Lord on the Woolsack would tend to the attainment of the end he had in view—namely, the furnishing of the best information to the Court of Appeal on ecclesiastical subjects. Whether it would do so or not, would depend in a great measure on the mode in which the new rules were framed. For his part, he could have wished that the power of summoning Assessors had been extended beyond the Episcopal Bench to all divines, because it was obvious that the gift of ecclesiastical learning did not, any more than that of reading or writing, come by nature. Still less did it come by virtue of official position. There had been, and there were Prelates distinguished by learning of all kinds—there had been, and there were Prelates distinguished for that abstruse branch of knowledge, canon and ecclesiastical law. But it did not follow that because a man was a Bishop, therefore he was a man of such attainments. Bishops were chosen for a variety of reasons—exalted piety, personal influence, successful administration of a parish; but they might not have the least capacity for giving information to Judges as to questions of ecclesiastical law. He hoped, therefore, that under the rules to be framed, it would be secured that the Assessors to be chosen should not only have high rank in the Church but also capacity to give sound advice to the appellate tribunal. To assume that a Bishop, because he was a Bishop, must therefore be versed in ecclesiastical law, was equivalent to assuming that an Admiral, because he was an Admiral, was therefore learned in the law of the Court of Admiralty. It was, doubtless, inconvenient to interpolate one debate into the middle of another, but he was not the first offender; and he could not, without some observation, hear the classical term by which they now designated each other in that House extended to so inoffensive a person as Mr. Hardy. The great object to be attained was that henceforth no suspicion, just or unjust, of partiality should rest on those who occupied the position of Judges of Appeal in ecclesiastical causes. He had no doubt whatever that the most rev. Prelates who heretofore sat in judgment on these cases had honestly endeavoured to dismiss all bias from their minds; but by their office and by the nature of their duties, it tended very much to controversy in the Church, that a clergyman brought before the tribunal of which they formed part should see before him men whom he might possibly regard as his leading adversaries. No doubt they were very unjust in imputing partiality, but the possibility of such a thing being said was almost as bad as if it were really true. For the future, however, such a thing would be impossible, and the country would have the satisfaction of knowing that the clergy, like other people, would be judged in the last resort by persons of learning, who were sure to be well advised. He deprecated the proposal of the Attorney General that when sentence was pronounced by the secular Court it should be handed over for execution to the spiritual Court below. He could understand a spiritual Court delegating the execution of its sentences to a secular Court; but the course which had been followed in this case was a curious reversal of the power. He hoped the noble and learned Lord on the Woolsack would not consider it inconsistent with his proposal to modify that Amendment, which he was sure would not find favour with the House.

LORD CAIRNS said, that nothing could be worse for the country than over-rapid legislation—namely, legislation without giving people adequate notice of what was about to be done. Such legislation could not be justified on the ground that everybody must approve what was done, for the first object should be to make the country perfectly aware of the course it was intended to take. Now, with regard to ecclesiastical appeals, he regretted that means were not taken to put deliberately before the country the course intended to be taken by the Government. He could understand how they had been led into it; but he could not help regretting the absence of Notice, and he could not agree with his noble Friend (the Marquess of Salisbury) that because certain members of Convocation and speakers "elsewhere" had all approved a change in a particular direction, this was to be taken as the general opinion. People who wanted a change were the people to speak out promptly; while it was not till the proposal was fully placed before them that others, who perhaps did not want a change, applied their minds to it, and expressed an opinion upon it. He himself wished for a change as regarded the hearing of ecclesiastical appeals. One reason was that at present, in any case exciting immense interest and stirring to the depths the different schools of thought in the Church, the body hearing it was necessarily formed for that particular purpose. He knew as a matter of fact that this had always been done in the best possible way and with the best possible objects; but it was always open to people out-of-doors to say that particular men had been chosen to hear a particular case. That could not be satisfactory; and he believed the dissatisfaction rose to a height in the present year, when a Gentleman for whom he had great respect was appointed under the Sign Manual a Member of the Judicial Committee on the eve of an important ecclesiastical case. He had had no judicial, and he believed no forensic experience, but he sat on that case; was supposed, rightly or wrongly, to have advocated the views of one particular side in the question to be argued; and as far as he knew had never sat upon any other case. Another reason for dissatisfaction was, that if it was desirable to have a fair representation of ecclesiastics as Judges, the actual representation—never more than two, and often only one—was altogether insufficient. On the other hand, those who objected to any ecclesiastical element were also dissatisfied. The proposal of his noble and learned Friend—though he was sorry there had not been more time to let the public know what was to be done—had so much to recommend it that he was not prepared to advise their Lordships to reject it. As he understood it, Her Majesty, as supreme over all causes ecclesiastical and temporal, would fix by an Order in Council the number of Members of the Supreme Appellate Court to hear ecclesiastical cases, and would prescribe who were to hear them, so that the Court would not be composed for every particular case. The proposal also secured an ecclesiastical element in the most desirable form. The advice and instruction of highly-cultivated minds were required on matters of phraseology and more important points, and such persons would give by private communications to the lay Members that assistance of which they always stood in need. He did not agree with his noble Friend that there should be an indiscriminate power of summoning divines, for that would lead again to the error of a Court ad hoc. An Order in Council could not prescribe what divines were permanently to act as Assessors, whereas it was easy to prescribe the number of Bishops who were to act. As to the proposal of the noble Lord (Lord Redesdale), he was disappointed with some of the changes made by the House of Commons in the position of the Court to which their Lordships were willing to surrender their Appellate Jurisdiction, but he was not without hopes that some of these matters might yet be adjusted, and entertaining such hopes he could not at this stage support a Motion which would preclude the opportunity for such Amendments.

THE EARL OF CARNARVON said, he regretted the declaration just made by his noble and learned Friend (Lord Cairns), for the Bill had come back from the other House at such a late period, and the Amendments that had been made were so important, that he thought further time ought to be allowed for their consideration. The House had wandered into a discussion as to ecclesiastical appeals, but the present question was whether the Commons' Amendments should be considered. He had had great difficulty in making up his mind on this point, one reason being that it was a great legal question, and that a layman must hesitate to express an opinion on points which might be of a technical nature. The matter, however, concerned the honour, dignity, and interests of the House, and therefore concerned the country which had committed these to their charge. Great, moreover, as might be the force of legal authority arrayed in favour of the Bill, both in its first and last stages in this House, he believed that in the searching criticism it had undergone in "another place," not a single lawyer except the legal Members of the Government could fairly be said to have supported it. The measure, too, had come back largely altered, and owing to the pressure of time had not been printed in the usual form; for instead of red ink showing what had been altered and expunged, their Lordships had nothing but the original Bill and the Bill as it left the Commons, with pages of close print, containing the alterations; and it was difficult for all but the most acute minds to ascertain the exact position of the matter. Some of the changes were very extensive, and the noble Lord's argument that they wanted a little more time fully to consider the question was a reasonable one. There was one objection which he entertained to the Bill as altered he desired to express to the House—it was, that that which was, no doubt, a very high-class Court of Appeal had been converted into a Court of an inferior nature to that proposed by this House. Was it for such a Court that their Lordships gave up so large a portion of their jurisdiction? The next point on which he wished to touch was the question of the salaries to be paid to the Judges. The salaries represented the value which the State set upon the services rendered. Their Lordships would remember that the salaries originally contemplated were £7,000; but when the Bill left their Lordships' House the salaries were fixed at £6,000 per annum; the House of Commons, however, had made a still further reduction, and it had come back with the amount reduced to £5,000. But this was not the whole question. When a Committee sat to inquire into and consider this very question, the decision arrived at was that £6,000 per annum would be a very fair minimum salary to fix for the Judges appointed in the new Courts to be constituted; but this recommendation had been disregarded in "another place," when Mr. Vernon Harcourt, a strong supporter of the Government, expressed his opinion that if the House of Commons, with unwise parsimony, reduced the salaries of the Members of the Court of Appeal to £5,000 per annum, the House of Lords would be well entitled to refuse to pass a Bill containing such a proposal. [“Order!”] He would not refer further to the debate in “another place,” but would be content with quoting Mr. Harcourt’s opinion. He was aware that it might be urged that the salaries of the paid Members of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council were £5,000 a-year; but he would remind their Lordships of the fact that it was not very easy to obtain such Members at such a rate of payment. They were not to take individual cases in dealing with such a question as this. It might be possible now to induce lawyers of eminence to accept the positions with that rate of remuneration attached to them; but he very much doubted whether such a state of things would long continue. The truth was that in this, as in other respects, Her Majesty’s Government were actuated by a spirit of parsimony in small things and of extravagance in matters of greater moment. It must not be forgotten that parsimony in the matter of salaries paid to Judges meant a lowering of the whole judicial standard; because it was not to be expected that men of the highest character and legal ability would accept laborious duties with a niggardly scale of payment attached thereto. There was another and more serious objection to this branch of the measure as it had come back to their Lordships’ House. Clause 13 had for its marginal note the words “Pension of Lord Chancellor,” but, instead of these words, the note should have read, “The future status of the retiring Lord Chancellor,” for the clause provided that no pension should be granted in future unless the retiring Lord Chancellor signified in writing his willingness to serve as an additional Judge of the Court of Appeal, or unless he should have served 10 years as Chancellor or 15 years first as Chancellor and then as Judge. Let them consider the position in which this would place the Lord Chancellor. An ex-Chancellor had been the highest officer in the State, the head of the law, the Keeper of the Sovereign’s conscience, and the embodiment, may be, of some of the finest passages in English history; yet it was proposed henceforward to put him under the lowered and degraded conditions contemplated by the clause to which he was referring. If he left his argument at this point he believed he would have made out a sufficient case in support of his contention; but he had a further and still stronger objection to urge. This Bill came back to their Lordships’ House as an avowed instalment of some future measure, and he most earnestly objected to any such course. It was true that the House of Commons had given up the position they took in reference to the Irish and Scotch appeals; but what security was there that if the Bill passed this Session in its present form, an attempt would not be made next Session to resume the position from which they had temporarily retired? The effect of taking up again the question of Irish and Scotch appeals, and dealing with them in the manner suggested in “another place,” would, in his opinion, be to lower, what ought to be an Imperial tribunal to the level of a provincial Court. An hon. Member of the House of Commons who was supposed to represent the Home Rule party in Ireland, had stated very significantly that the Irish people would not be satisfied with the measure in its present form, and he therefore strongly deprecated the taking of a course which could possibly stir up a fresh source of contention and bitterness on the other side of the Channel. Their Lordships had already made great concessions to Ireland, and had obtained small thanks for it—the fate as a rule of those who made surrenders to a majority—and he urged that no further similar concessions should be made at the present time. One of the most remarkable men who ever sat in that House made a speech nearly 200 years ago, in which he put with great force the point he was now urging. Lord Shaftesbury said—

“This matter is no less than your whole judicature; and your judicature is the life and soul of the dignity of the Peerage in England; you will quickly grow burdensome if you grow useless. You have now the greatest and most useful end of Parliaments principally in you, which is not to make new laws, but to redress grievances and to maintain the old landmarks.”—
[Parl. Hist. iv. 793.]

Their Lordships should beware, at all events, of acting hastily in this matter. He did not ask them to insist upon Privilege. The question of Privilege had been disposed of, and Privilege, like Prerogative was a dangerous weapon. He did not ask their Lordships to retract what they had once done, because the question which had arisen was a new one. He did not ask them to reject the Bill—he merely asked them to give it a little further consideration. If, in consequence of the Government running their Lordships into this corner, the indirect result of the Motion was the failure of the Bill, the fault was theirs. Like the most rev. Prelate, he deprecated hot and unstatesmanlike haste in this matter. Their Lordships were fully entitled to take time and consider this large question as a whole; not piecemeal, for it was a question which involved the rights and powers of the House, and that which was of even greater importance—the trusts and duties for which it was responsible to the people of this country.

LORD HATHERLEY said, there were two points on which he wished to address a very few words to their Lordships. One was the change made in the Bill as to ecclesiastical appeals; the other was the recommendation that their Lordships should postpone the measure for another year—a course which would, in his opinion, be attended with inconceivable mischief to the country. Upon the first point he shared the opinion of the most rev. Prelate (the Archbishop of Canterbury) that it was desirable that the construction and powers of the new Court should not be open to misconception or misunderstanding, and that it should be made perfectly clear that though presided over by lawyers it was still an Ecclesiastical Court of Appeal for ecclesiastical causes. He should therefore prefer to omit the provision that where suspension or deprivation might ensue as a consequence of their judgment, the Court should hand over that part of the case to the Court of Arches. Such a provision would lead to the inference that the new Court of Appeal was not an Ecclesiastical Court—which it undoubtedly would be. The character of a Court did not depend upon the profession of the Judges. Down to the reign of James I. the Court of Chancery was, more frequently than not, presided over by an ecclesiastic, but that did not make the Court of Chancery an Ecclesiastical Court. Again, the fact that Lord Stowell, Dr. Lushington, and other laymen presided in the Court of Arches did not make that a lay or civil Court. The question in all such cases was not “Who are the Judges?” but “Under what authority do they sit?” Ever since the Reformation the Crown, being supreme in all causes, ecclesiastical as well as civil, united in itself both functions, and conferred these two functions upon the various Courts by which it was represented. As it had been pointed out in an able publication by Mr. Fremantle, cases had occurred in which not a single ecclesiastic had sat in the Court of Delegates upon appeals coming to them from the Court of Arches. But that fact did not make the Court of Delegates the less an Ecclesiastical Court; and there was no doubt that the new Court of Appeal, when sitting upon appeals from the Court of Arches, would be to all intents and purposes an Ecclesiastical Court, possessing powers of suspension and deprivation, and all other powers incidental to an Ecclesiastical Court. Within his own experience the Judicial Committee had exercised the painful duty of suspending a clergyman for disobeying the order of the Court, and as a process for compelling obedience. They looked into the authorities in that case, and found that the Judicial Committee sat under the authority of a statute which gave them all the powers of the Court of Delegates—a Court which constantly exercised the power of suspending and depriving clergymen; and that power would clearly be transferred to the new tribunal. As to the postponement of the Bill, he would remind their Lordships that the question had been under discussion for years past; that their Lordships themselves had resigned their Appellate Jurisdiction as regarded England; and that the whole community were looking forward anxiously to the establishment of a new appellate tribunal. Why were their Lordships to delay the establishment of such a tribunal for England, because it was possible that hereafter Scotland and Ireland might also desire to resort to it? The Bill as it stood would not take effect till November in next year, and if it were delayed till next Session the new Appellate Court would not be formed till November two years. Their Lordships had been told that the object of the new Court was to get rid of double appeals; but a still more cogent reason was, that the House of Lords were not a Court sitting continuously, like other Courts of Judicature, and that their Lordships depended for the hearing of appeals upon very precarious assistance. The decisions in appeal cases were really the decisions, not of the House of Lords, but of what might be termed a small Committee of the House, subject to the risks of illness and death; and one instance of the precariousness of this assistance had just occurred in the removal by death of a noble and learned Lord who had appeared till recently to be stronger and more vigorous than he (Lord Hatherley) was, and whose valuable services had been lost to the House by a singularly rapid and unexpected illness. At such a time, and after this illustration of the risks which were run in the present constitution of the Appellate Court, he appealed to their Lordships no longer to disappoint the expectations of the country, which had been looking forward to this Bill with a rare unanimity.

THE EARL OF HARROWBY said, it was most unfair to their Lordships that they should be called upon in the last days of the Session to consider new points that had been raised in the other House, on which the public mind had not yet been formed, and as to which it was impossible to say what direction opinion would take. This was not now an entire measure. Their Lordships had discussed an English Court of Appeal; the other House had been discussing an Imperial Court of Appeal. It did not follow that what was good for the one was good for the other. Their object should be to establish such a Court as should carry the greatest weight in the feelings and opinions of men. The superstructure their Lordships were now asked to sanction would have too narrow a basis. It might seem presumptuous in a layman to discuss the question—but was it not one of the essential elements of the highest Court of Appeal, that as much as possible it should consist of the same persons—and of a small number of persons, whose opinions should not vary from time to time, and who should be of higher attainments and higher authority than both those who appeared before them and, if possible, those from whose judgments appeal was brought? On all these points the Bill would lower the position of our highest Court of Appeal. If it was one of the heaviest charges against the existing system, that possibly the decisions of the House of Lords and of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council might not always harmonize; what must it not be when there would be practically five Courts, each supreme, and with such very varying elements—Irish, Scotch, Colonial, Indian? Further, it would lower the position of the Chancellor. As a Member of the House of Lords he could not be indifferent to that lowering of the dignity of the Great Seal of England—that Seal, to which such a romantic and mysterious interest was attached in English history. The noble and learned Lord who had just spoken (Lord Hatherley) had not shown that there was any pressing necessity for passing the Bill this Session. One of the grounds assigned for depriving the House of Lords of its Appellate Jurisdiction was that its sittings were not continuous. But were the sittings of the Courts continuous? Their Lordships had a vacation of six months, and the Courts had a vacation of four months. Was the difference between those vacations sufficient to justify what was now proposed? As to the insufficient judicial strength of the House of Lords, why were not the suggestions of the noble Lord the Chairman of Committees adopted by which the heads of all the Courts would have been made Peers for life? He thought no case of urgency had been made out for passing the Bill at such a period of the Session and should vote for the Amendment of the noble Lord the Chairman of Committees.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR said, the noble Earl who had just sat down had spoken as if he imagined that the Bill as returned to their Lordships would transfer Irish and Scotch appeals from their Lordships' House to a new Imperial Court for the hearing of English, Irish, and Scotch Appeals. The noble Earl was completely mistaken.

THE EARL OF HARROWBY said, he knew that was not intended by this Bill, but it laid the foundations for taking such a course next year.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR said, the arguments of the noble Earl were adapted to a case which was not before their Lordships. If their Lordships should be opposed to a transfer of the Scotch and Irish appeals, they would have ample opportunity when that transfer was proposed to consider and reject it; but he could imagine no course more likely to have the ultimate effect of forcing such a change on their Lordships, whether they approved it or not, than to say that all English appeals should be kept as at present, so long as

Lord Hatherley

Scotch and Irish appeals were separated from English appeals. So far as concerned the addition of ecclesiastical appeals, he hoped—and he thought he had every reason to hope, from what had been said on both sides of the House—that the manner in which it was proposed to modify that alteration would be generally acceptable. So far as related to the general scheme and arrangements of the Bill, and all the important machinery provided for the union of Law and Equity and the consolidation of the judicial powers, hardly any substantial alteration had been made by the House of Commons in the Bill. In the constitution of the High Court of Justice, only one alteration had been made, and that was not by any means of vital importance; he referred to the alteration which confined the judicial functions of the Lord Chancellor to the Court of Appeal. The fact that the salaries of the Judges of the Court of Appeal had been fixed in the other House at £5,000, instead of £6,000 per annum—though in strictness their Lordships had not inserted any amount in the Bill, it being the privilege of the House of Commons to fix salaries—was not a matter which should lead their Lordships to reject the measure, although they might be of opinion that the larger sum should have been determined upon. Upon this point he must further remark that the Appellate Judges would, in all probability, be most often selected from experienced Judges in the Courts of the First Instance, in which their salaries were also £5,000 a-year, subject to considerable expenses; and he ventured to say that those eminent men would not be disinclined to accept the still higher and less laborious dignity of Judge of the Court of Appeal, notwithstanding that they would not, beyond the saving, in some cases, of circuit expenses, derive pecuniary benefit from the change of position. The cases where gentlemen obtaining large emoluments at the Bar would refuse to accept the dignity in consequence of the reduction in the amount of the salary were very rare, and might be left out of consideration. The only other change of importance which had been made in the Bill by the other House was that which left it to the discretion of the Crown to appoint any three persons besides those expressly mentioned, to sit as Judges in the Court of Appeal: whereas in the Bill as it passed their Lordships' House, those three additional Judges were to be selected from the existing Judges. This change, however, was merely intended to facilitate by greater liberty of choice, the working of the Bill. In conclusion, he ventured to remind their Lordships that this Bill was the result of very careful deliberation, extending over many years, that it had been very carefully considered in its passage through both Houses, and that it was now, with but few exceptions, in the same form in which it had met with their Lordships' approval. If the measure were to be rejected now, the whole legal business of the country would be thrown into confusion until future legislation could be had on the subject, and no measure which on a future occasion their Lordships were likely to pass could be expected to be returned to them from the House of Commons as little altered as the present Bill had been, neither was it probable that it would come back to their Lordships at an earlier period of the Session.

VISCOUNT MIDDLETON desired to draw attention to the evidence given before the Select Committee, as to the great value attached in the Colonies, and especially in India, to the fact that, presumptively, appeals to the Privy Council were heard by Her Majesty herself, and that the Judicial Committee was composed of the ablest of Her Majesty's legal servants. He had been so much struck with this statement that he had asked many Indian officials about it, and they all confirmed it. He feared that there would not be equal satisfaction with the new Court of Judicature. Since, however, their Lordships had accepted the Bill on the second reading he felt that he could not at that last stage offer any opposition to the measure. He regretted that it had not been considered and debated at greater length when it was before their Lordships on the previous occasion.

After a few words from Lord DENMAN, which were inaudible,

On Question, That the words proposed to be left out stand part of the Motion? their Lordships divided:—Contents, 61; Not-Contents, 34: Majority 27.

Resolved in the Affirmative.

CONTENTS.

Canterbury, Archp.	Brodrick, L. ( V. Middleton. )
Selborne, L. ( L. Chanceller. )	Cairns, L. Calthorpe, L. Camoya, L. Chelmsford, L. Cloncurry, L. Congleton, L. Crofton, L. Dunning, L. ( L. Rollo. ) Dunsany, L. Ettrick, L. ( L. Napier. ) Foley, L. Hanmer, L. Hatherley, L. Heytesbury, L. Keane, L. Kenmare, L. ( E. Kenmare. ) Ker, L. ( M. Lothian. ) Kildare, L. ( M. Kildare. ) Lyttelton, L. Methuen, L. Monson, L. Poltimore, L. [ Teller. ] Ponsonby, L. ( E. Beaufort. ) Rosebery, L. ( E. Rosebery. ) Sheffield, L. ( E. Sheffield. ) Skelmersdale, L. Somerton, L. ( E. Norhampton. ) Sudeley, L. Sundridge, L. ( D. Argyll. ) Waveney, L. Wrottesley, L. Boyle, L. (E. Cork and Orrery.) [Teller.] Brancaster, L. (V. Boyne.) Canterbury, V.
Halifax, V.
Hawarden, V.
Leinster, V. ( D. Leinster. ) Torrington, V.
Chichester, Bp.
Exeter, Bp.
London, Bp.
Oxford, Bp.
Rochester, Bp.

NOT-CONTENTS.

Buckingham and Chandos, D. [ Teller. ]	Clancarty, V. ( E. Clancarty. )
Rutland, D.
Bristol, M.	Boston, L.
Bute, M.	Clinton, L.
Amherst, E.	Denman, L.
Bantry, E.	Ellenborough, L.
Bathurst, E.	Fitzwalter, L.
Beauchamp, E.	Gormanston, L. ( V. Gormanston. )
Carnarvon, E.	Howard de Walden, L.
Doncaster, E. ( D. Bucleigh and Queenberry. )	Oranmore and Browne, L.
Feversham, E.	Redesdale, L. [ Teller. ]
Gainsborough, E.	Saltoun, L.
Harrowby, E.	Silchester, L. ( E. Longford. )
Leven and Melville, E.	Sinclair, L.
Mansfield, E.	Thurlow, L.
Powis, E.	Wigan, L. ( E. Crawford and Balcarres. )
Selkirk, E.	Wynford, L.
Strange, E. ( D. Athol. )

Original Motion agreed to; Commons Amendments considered accordingly; several Amendments agreed to.

Clause 5, line 12, leave out ("The Lord Chancellor").

LORD CAIRNS objected to the Amendment, pointing out that the effect of it would be to deprive the Lord Chancellor of that proper status as the head of the Chancery Division of the new Court to which his position entitled him, and that position would be taken by the Master of the Rolls. The Amendment in fact altered materially for the worse the position of the Lord Chancellor, and would place him in the position in which no Lord Chancellor had ever been placed before—that of being a stranger in a Court which had hitherto been called his own, causing him to sit as a mere unit in the Court of Appeal. He therefore asked their Lordships to disagree to the Commons' Amendment, so as to maintain the Lord Chancellor in the Primary Court, and keep up the necessary and useful connection between the Lord Chancellor and Chancery.

Moved, to disagree to the Amendment made by the Commons in Clause 5, page 2, line 12, viz., to leave out ("The Lord Chancellor.")—(The Lord Cairns.)

THE LORD CHANCELLOR said, he could not assent to the rejection of the Amendment made by the other House. It made, in his opinion, the Bill more symmetrical, and more in conformity with what would be the actual practice.

On Question? Their Lordships divided:—Contents, 48; Not-Contents, 36: Majority 12.

Resolved in the Affirmative; and Commons' Amendment disagreed to; several Amendments agreed to.

Clause 8 (Qualifications of Judges. Not required to be Serjeants-at-Law), after ("person") in line 11, leave out to ("Chancery") in line 13, and insert—

("Being or having been a barrister in England or Ireland, or an advocate in Scotland respectively of not less than fifteen years standing, or a Judge of the High Court of Justice of not less than one year's standing.")

LORD CAIRNS moved to omit the words inserted by the Commons making membership of the Bar in Scotland and Ireland a qualification for sitting in the Supreme Court of Appeal. The insertion of those words was premature, and he proposed that they should be struck out.

Amendment disagreed to; clause struck out.

Clause 10 (Precedence of Judges).

In line 28, leave out from ("The") to ("thereof") in line 36, and insert—

"The ex officio Judges of the Court of Appeal shall rank in the Supreme Court in the order of their present respective official precedence; and after them the rest of the Judges of the Court of Appeal, whether additional or ordinary, shall rank according to the priority of their respective appointments to be Judges thereof: Provided always, that it shall be lawful for Her Majesty to give such precedence in the Supreme Court to any additional Judge who shall have been Lord Chancellor as she may think fit."

After a few words from the LORD CHANCELLOR,

Amendments made, and Commons Amendments, as amended, agreed to.

New Clause A. (Pension of Lord Chancellor.) Moved, to agree to the Amendment inserting the said Clause.

LORD CHELMSFORD said, he considered that the clause was a most degrading one. The Judges of the Court of Appeal were to have £5,000 a-year; but the clause enacted that if the ex-Lord Chancellor did not attend the Appellate Court he should lose £5,000 a-year—that was to say, be deprived of his pension. That provision would place future Lord Chancellors in a degraded position. It was said that an ex-Lord Chancellor was bound to give his services to their Lordships' House, and he agreed that there was a moral obligation on them to do so—not as ex-Lord Chancellors, but as Peers. That moral obligation had been amply recognized not only by past and present ex-Lord Chancellors, but by his noble and learned Friend who formerly held the office of Lord Justice General in Scotland. He hoped their Lordships would not agree to the clause.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR proposed to correct a clerical error in the clause, pointed out by the Clerk. The clause recited that the Judges were to receive retiring pensions "as provided by the Act of his late Majesty William I." He confessed he did not know what retiring pensions were provided for his retiring Judges by William the Conqueror. He proposed to amend the error by altering it to William IV.

LORD CHELMSFORD remarked that this would be the alteration of a money clause.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR said, that in this case he thought their Lordships might make the alteration without fear of the Commons taking objection on the score of Privilege. As to the clause itself, he should be as ready to render such service as an ex-Chancellor, without any such provision, as if he were placed under the extremest legal compulsion, and he believed this would be the opinion of others; but he should be sorry if their Lordships, on a point of so little practical operation, ran the risk of a collision with the other House.

THE MARQUESS OF SALISBURY said, he could understand the objection to their Lordships altering a money clause, but thought it must be in their power to strike it out.

LORD CAIRNS was of the same opinion; the Act of the last reign regulating the salary of the Lord Chancellor could not be repealed without the consent of both Houses.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR had not said that an objection by the House of Commons in this case would be a sound view of Privilege, but he feared these were days of exaggerated views of Privilege.

On Question? Resolved in the Negative.

Amendment disagreed to.

New Clause B. (Salaries of future Judges.)

Moved, to agree to the Amendment inserting the said Clause.

LORD CAIRNS expressed a doubt whether the new clause gave any salary to the ordinary Judges of the Court of Appeal, for after assigning the Lord Chancellor and Chief Justices, the Master of the Rolls, and the Chief Baron, "the same annual sums which the holders of those offices now respectively receive," it proceeded—"To each of the ordinary Judges of the Court of Appeal"—nothing—the following line giving to each of the other Judges of the High Court of Justice the sum of £5,000 a-year.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR said, he was happy to state that after consulting a high authority connected with "another place," he had found that the correction of a clerical error even in a money clause was not an alarming breach of Privilege. He should, consequently, propose to insert "and" after the words quoted by his noble and learned Friend, thus giving those Judges £5,000.

LORD CAIRNS remarked that last year the Government proposed £6,000 as the salary of the Appellate Judges, and that though this year they proposed £5,000, the Select Committee substituted £6,000, which sum went down in red ink to the Commons, as an intimation of their Lordships' expectations of the character of the Court to which they transferred their Appellate Jurisdiction. High appointments were declined a short time ago by those to whom they were first offered, because the salary was only £5,000; and £1,000 a-year to a middle-aged man might make all the difference whether he was able to provide for his family or not. The Chief Justices, the Chief Baron, and the Master of the Rolls, nominally Members of the Appellate Court, but practically Judges of the Primary Courts, were to have £8,000, £7,000, and £6,000; and if, as was argued by the Government elsewhere, these were the prizes of the profession, the best men would stand out and wait for them—so that the Primary Courts would have the men with the great prizes, and the Appellate Court, which ought to be the strongest, would have no prizes. A man would actually be benefited by being taken out of the Appellate Court and made a Chief Baron or Master of the Rolls. They were going to make a change even more important than the one he had alluded to—namely, to determine that in future there should be only one appeal from the decision of the Primary Courts. If the salaries were fixed as proposed in the Bill, and, as a result, the ablest men sought and obtained positions in the Primary Courts, their decisions, even though unanimous, might be irreversibly overturned by a majority in a Court composed of less able men. The question had been decided in the other House contrary to the opinion of men on both sides of the House who were most competent to give an opinion upon it; and, as it would not be necessary for the purposes of the Act to fix the salaries until next Session, he would suggest that the clause be omitted from the Bill in order to give the other House time to afford to the question the full consideration in all its bearings which it had not as yet received.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR hoped their Lordships would not accede to the suggestion of his noble and learned Friend. The effect of such a decision could not possibly be mistaken by the other House of Parliament, and if passed would render nugatory everything else that had been done. He did not believe that the adoption of £6,000 as the salary, instead of £5,000, would make the slightest difference in the ability of the persons who would be induced to accept positions on the Judicial Bench, because £6,000 would still be £2,000 less in some cases, and £1,000 less in others than the salaries paid to the highest class of Judges in the Primary Courts.

LORD HATHERLEY also hoped the proposal of his noble and learned Friend would not be acceded to. If the clause was struck out, the House of Commons could not avoid the conclusion that their Lordships' House, instead of simply desiring that the proposal contained in the clause should receive further consideration, wished to fix the amount of salary to be paid. The omission would therefore be fatal to the Bill, for the Commons would certainly not allow their Lordships to exercise their privilege of fixing the amount of the salaries of the Judges. The clause was a money clause, and it was the Privilege of the Commons solely to deal with it.

LORD CAIRNS said, that to omit the clause would be no interference with the Privileges of the Commons; the effect of the omission would simply be to leave the matter open to the Commons to consider. However, he would not persist in asking the omission of the clause, but would content himself with protesting strongly against the proposal of the Bill.

The word "and" inserted.

Moved, to agree to Clause B. (inserted by the Commons), as amended.—(The Lord Chancellor.)

On Question? their Lordships divided:—Contents 46; Not-Contents 24: Majority 22.

Clause, as amended, agreed to.

New Clauses (C.) (Retiring pensions of future Judges of High Court of Justice, and ordinary Judges of Court of Appeal); and (D.) (Salaries and Pensions how to be paid) agreed to.

Clause 18 (Power to transfer jurisdiction of Judicial Committee by Order in Council).

Moved, to disagree to the Amendment made by the Commons, and to insert in lieu thereof—

(“The Court of Appeal, when hearing any Appeals in Ecclesiastical Causes which may be referred to it in manner aforesaid, shall be constituted of such and so many of the Judges thereof, and shall be assisted by such assessors, being Archbishops or Bishops of the Church of England, as Her Majesty by any general rules made with the advice of the Judges of the said Court, or any five of them (of whom the Lord Chancellor shall be one) and of the Archbishops and Bishops who are Members of Her Majesty’s Privy Council, or any two of them (and which general orders shall be made by Order in Council) may think fit to direct: Provided, That such rules shall be laid before each House of Parliament within forty days of making the same, if Parliament be then sitting; or, if not, then within forty days of the commencement of the then next ensuing Session, and if either House of Parliament shall within two months object to any of the said rules, it shall be void and of no effect.”—(The Lord Chancellor.)

THE BISHOP OF LONDON said, the most rev. Prelate (the Archbishop of Canterbury) had been taken severely to task for his remarks on this subject; but the surprise he had expressed was not at the transfer of ecclesiastical causes to the new Court of Appeal, but that the transfer should be effected without precautions against the effects of a change which would cause an entire revolution in this respect. There never had been a period at which ecclesiastical persons had not formed part of every Court for the hearing of ecclesiastical appeals.

On Question? Resolved in the Affirmative.

Several Amendments disagreed to; some agreed to; some agreed to, with Amendments.

A Committee appointed to draw up Reasons to be offered to the Commons for disagreeing to several of their Amendments; Committee to meet To-morrow, at a quarter before Five o’clock.

PROTEST.

“DISSENTIENT:

“1. Because the Bill was returned to this House late on Tuesday night, and the ten pages of important Amendments made by the Commons were only delivered to the Peers in the course of this morning, and the manner in which it might be proposed to deal with any of them either by rejection or alteration was unknown to the House generally until after the Motion was made that the Commons Amendments be now considered.

“2. Because by assenting to this Bill this House abandons its ancient prerogative of being the Supreme Court of Appeal in England when the expediency of having only one such Court for the United Kingdom, which was denied by the promoters of the Bill while it was passing through this House, is now admitted by those who then voted against it, and as it must be uncertain whether the Court constituted under this Bill will give the same satisfaction to Scotland and Ireland which it is admitted that this House has afforded, it is important that time should be allowed for further consideration before this House agrees to establish a separate Court of Ultimate Appeal for England, which will justify a demand from Scotland and Ireland for similar Courts in their own capitals if no longer allowed to appeal to this House.”

“REDESDALE, BEAUCHAMP, RUTLAND, SELKIRK, HERTFORD, HOUGHTON, DENBIGH, CLANCARTY, ELLENBOROUGH, BATHURST, THURLOW, DONCASTER, ABERGAVENNY, FEVERSHAM, GAINSBOROUGH, SALTOON, WYNFORD.

“For the whole protest down to the second ‘England’ in the second paragraph.

“DENMAN.”

House adjourned at a quarter past Eleven o’clock, till To-morrow,
Eleven o’clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

Thursday, 24th July, 1873.

MINUTES.] — SELECT COMMITTEE — Report—Imprisonment for Debt [No. 348]. PUBLIC BILLS — Ordered — First Reading — Expiring Laws Continuance* [261].

First Reading — Telegraphs* [262]. Second Reading — Rating Liability (Ireland) [246]; Public Schools (Eton College Property)* [251]; Defence Acts Amendment* [255].

Committee — Slave Trade (Consolidation)* [249] — R.P.

Committee — Report — Endowed Schools Act (1869) Amendment [207]; Slave Trade (East African Courts)* [236]; Langbaugh Coroners* [242]; Conspiracy Law Amendment* [190].

Considered as amended — Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment, &c. [245].

Third Reading — Ecclesiastical Commissioners* [235]; Penalties (Ireland)* [239], and passed. Withdrawn — Household Franchise (Counties)* [3]; Household Suffrage Counties (Scotland)* [50]; Landed Estates Court (Ireland) (Judges) [182]; Public Meetings (Ireland)* [167].

NEWFOUNDLAND—TELEGRAPHIC COMMUNICATION.—QUESTION.

SIR JOHN KENNAWAY (for Lord CLAUD JOHN HAMILTON) asked the Under Secretary of State for the Colonies, If it is the intention of the Newfoundland Government to determine the monopoly which now exists in telegraphic communication between Ireland and Newfoundland, and open the line to all cables and telegraph lines across the Island,

LORD CAIRNS remarked that last year the Government proposed £6,000 as the salary of the Appellate Judges, and that though this year they proposed £5,000, the Select Committee substituted £6,000, which sum went down in red ink to the Commons, as an intimation of their Lordships' expectations of the character of the Court to which they transferred their Appellate Jurisdiction. High appointments were declined a short time ago by those to whom they were first offered, because the salary was only £5,000; and £1,000 a-year to a middle-aged man might make all the difference whether he was able to provide for his family or not. The Chief Justices, the Chief Baron, and the Master of the Rolls, nominally Members of the Appellate Court, but practically Judges of the Primary Courts, were to have £8,000, £7,000, and £6,000; and if, as was argued by the Government elsewhere, these were the prizes of the profession, the best men would stand out and wait for them—so that the Primary Courts would have the men with the great prizes, and the Appellate Court, which ought to be the strongest, would have no prizes. A man would actually be benefited by being taken out of the Appellate Court and made a Chief Baron or Master of the Rolls. They were going to make a change even more important than the one he had alluded to—namely, to determine that in future there should be only one appeal from the decision of the Primary Courts. If the salaries were fixed as proposed in the Bill, and, as a result, the ablest men sought and obtained positions in the Primary Courts, their decisions, even though unanimous, might be irreversibly overturned by a majority in a Court composed of less able men. The question had been decided in the other House contrary to the opinion of men on both sides of the House who were most competent to give an opinion upon it; and, as it would not be necessary for the purposes of the Act to fix the salaries until next Session, he would suggest that the clause be omitted from the Bill in order to give the other House time to afford to the question the full consideration in all its bearings which it had not as yet received.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR hoped their Lordships would not accede to the suggestion of his noble and learned Friend. The effect of such a decision

could not possibly be mistaken by the other House of Parliament, and if passed would render nugatory everything else that had been done. He did not believe that the adoption of £6,000 as the salary, instead of £5,000, would make the slightest difference in the ability of the persons who would be induced to accept positions on the Judicial Bench, because £6,000 would still be £2,000 less in some cases, and £1,000 less in others than the salaries paid to the highest class of Judges in the Primary Courts.

LORD HATHERLEY also hoped the proposal of his noble and learned Friend would not be acceded to. If the clause was struck out, the House of Commons could not avoid the conclusion that their Lordships' House, instead of simply desiring that the proposal contained in the clause should receive further consideration, wished to fix the amount of salary to be paid. The omission would therefore be fatal to the Bill, for the Commons would certainly not allow their Lordships to exercise their privilege of fixing the amount of the salaries of the Judges. The clause was a money clause, and it was the Privilege of the Commons solely to deal with it.

LORD CAIRNS said, that to omit the clause would be no interference with the Privileges of the Commons; the effect of the omission would simply be to leave the matter open to the Commons to consider. However, he would not persist in asking the omission of the clause, but would content himself with protesting strongly against the proposal of the Bill.

The word "and" inserted.

Moved, to agree to Clause B. (inserted by the Commons), as amended.—(The Lord Chancellor.)

On Question? their Lordships divided:—Contents 46; Not-Contents 24: Majority 22.

Clause, as amended, agreed to.

New Clauses (C.) (Retiring pensions of future Judges of High Court of Justice, and ordinary Judges of Court of Appeal); and (D.) (Salaries and Pensions how to be paid) agreed to.

Clause 18 (Power to transfer jurisdiction of Judicial Committee by Order in Council).

Moved, to disagree to the Amendment made by the Commons, and to insert in lieu thereof—

(“The Court of Appeal, when hearing any Appeals in Ecclesiastical Causes which may be referred to it in manner aforesaid, shall be constituted of such and so many of the Judges thereof, and shall be assisted by such assessors, being Archbishops or Bishops of the Church of England, as Her Majesty by any general rules made with the advice of the Judges of the said Court, or any five of them (of whom the Lord Chancellor shall be one) and of the Archbishops and Bishops who are Members of Her Majesty’s Privy Council, or any two of them (and which general orders shall be made by Order in Council) may think fit to direct: Provided, That such rules shall be laid before each House of Parliament within forty days of making the same, if Parliament be then sitting; or, if not, then within forty days of the commencement of the then next ensuing Session, and if either House of Parliament shall within two months object to any of the said rules, it shall be void and of no effect.”)—(The Lord Chancellor.)

THE BISHOP OF LONDON said, the most rev. Prelate (the Archbishop of Canterbury) had been taken severely to task for his remarks on this subject; but the surprise he had expressed was not at the transfer of ecclesiastical causes to the new Court of Appeal, but that the transfer should be effected without precautions against the effects of a change which would cause an entire revolution in this respect. There never had been a period at which ecclesiastical persons had not formed part of every Court for the hearing of ecclesiastical appeals.

On Question? Resolved in the Affirmative.

Several Amendments disagreed to; some agreed to; some agreed to, with Amendments.

A Committee appointed to draw up Reasons to be offered to the Commons for disagreeing to several of their Amendments; Committee to meet To-morrow, at a quarter before Five o’clock.

PROTEST.

“DISSENTIENT:

“1. Because the Bill was returned to this House late on Tuesday night, and the ten pages of important Amendments made by the Commons were only delivered to the Peers in the course of this morning, and the manner in which it might be proposed to deal with any of them either by rejection or alteration was unknown to the House generally until after the Motion was made that the Commons Amendments be now considered.

“2. Because by assenting to this Bill this House abandons its ancient prerogative of being the Supreme Court of Appeal in England when the expediency of having only one such Court for the United Kingdom, which was denied by the promoters of the Bill while it was passing through this House, is now admitted by those who then voted against it, and as it must be uncertain whether the Court constituted under this Bill will give the same satisfaction to Scotland and Ireland which it is admitted that this House has afforded, it is important that time should be allowed for further consideration before this House agrees to establish a separate Court of Ultimate Appeal for England, which will justify a demand from Scotland and Ireland for similar Courts in their own capitals if no longer allowed to appeal to this House.”

“BEDFORD, BEAUCHAMP, RUTLAND, SELKIRK, HERTFORD, HOUGHTON, DENBIGH, CLANCARTY, ELLENBOROUGH, BATHURST, THURLOW, DONCASTER, ABERGAVENNY, FEVERSHAM, GAINSBOROUGH, SALTOUN, WYNFORD.

“For the whole protest down to the second ‘England’ in the second paragraph.

“DENMAN.”

House adjourned at a quarter past Eleven o’clock, till To-morrow,
Eleven o’clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

Thursday, 24th July, 1873.

MINUTES.] — SELECT COMMITTEE — Report—Imprisonment for Debt [No. 348].

PUBLIC BILLS — Ordered — First Reading — Expiring Laws Continuance* [261].

First Reading — Telegraphs* [262].

Second Reading — Rating Liability (Ireland) [246]; Public Schools (Eton College Property)* [261]; Defence Acts Amendment* [255].

Committee — Slave Trade (Consolidation)* [249] — R.P.

Committee — Report — Endowed Schools Act (1869) Amendment [207]; Slave Trade (East African Courts)* [236]; Langbaugh Coroners* [242]; Conspiracy Law Amendment* [190].

Considered as amended — Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment, &c. [245].

Third Reading — Ecclesiastical Commissioners* [235]; Penalties (Ireland)* [239], and passed.*

Withdrawn — Household Franchise (Counties)* [3]; Household Suffrage Counties (Scotland)* [50]; Landed Estates Court (Ireland) (Judges) [182]; Public Meetings (Ireland)* [157].

NEWFOUNDLAND — TELEGRAPHIC COMMUNICATION.—QUESTION.

SIR JOHN KENNAWAY (for Lord CLAUD JOHN HAMILTON) asked the Under Secretary of State for the Colonies, If it is the intention of the Newfoundland Government to determine the monopoly which now exists in telegraphic communication between Ireland and Newfoundland, and open the line to all cables and telegraph lines across the Island, subject to a uniform tariff; and if any such notice has been given to the existing holders of the monopoly; and if any Correspondence has been received by the Imperial Government in relation to this matter; and if such Correspondence would be placed before the House?

MR. KNATCHBULL-HUGESSEN: Sir, the Government of Newfoundland has given notice to the company now enjoying a monopoly in telegraphic communications with that colony, of its determination to terminate that monopoly. Their intention is to open the matter to that competition which they believe to be wise, just, and salutary. They will probably establish a tariff, though nothing has been settled as to uniformity. Correspondence has passed upon the matter, and there will be no objection to lay it before Parliament, but it is at present incomplete.

EGYPT—SUEZ CANAL—INCREASE OF DUES.—QUESTION.

MR. NORWOOD asked the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, If the attention of the Government has been drawn to the statements which have recently appeared in the public journals relative to the Report of the Committee which had been appointed at Constantinople to inquire into the subject of the Suez Canal Dues, and to the comments of the Council of Ministers there on that Report; and, if so, whether the Government are able to state to the House what is the conclusion arrived at by the Turkish authorities?

VISCOUNT ENFIELD: Sir, a telegraphic despatch has been received from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople reporting that the Porte has sent a Letter to the Khedive on the Suez Canal Dues, stating that, as of all the official systems in operation the Moorsom gives the utilizable capacity with the greatest accuracy, the Porte is of opinion that the net tonnage according to that system should be adhered to; if, however, the Powers or M. de Lesseps should wish not to continue to maintain this system, it will be necessary to call an International Commission to determine the utilizable capacity. The Letter concludes by saying that this being the result of the deliberation of the Council of Ministers, and the Sultan, to whom it has been submitted, having ordered effect to be given to it, the decision is communicated to the Khedive, in order that His Highness may decide upon the measures which it may render necessary.

TURKEY—COURTS OF JUSTICE.
QUESTION.

SIR DOMINIC CORRIGAN (for Sir JOHN GRAY) asked the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, Whether any advance has been made in securing that the evidence of Christians shall be admitted in courts of justice in Turkey on a footing equal to the testing given by Mahometans; and, whether certain inhabitants in that country at present suffer from disabilities in reference to military service and the devolution of landed property?

VISCOUNT ENFIELD: Sir, the latest reports from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople state that in all the Turkish Courts, excepting those administering the Koran Law, there has been an advance towards placing Christian evidence on a footing of equality with that of Mahometans. In all criminal cases, without exception, Christian evidence is admitted in the new Court. Christians are not taken for military service, and pay a tax instead; but this is now regarded by them more as an advantage than as a disqualification. With regard to landed property, Sir Henry Elliot says that the subjects of the Sultan, of whatever creed, as well as all foreigners, are stated to be upon the same footing.

CRIMINAL LAW—CONVICT LABOUR AT DARTMOOR.—QUESTION.

SIR CHARLES W. DILKE asked the First Lord of the Treasury, Under what authority large enclosures are being made at Dartmoor without compensation to the commoners; and, whether any payment is made by the Duchy of Cornwall to the Treasury on account of the labour of the convicts employed in the work?

MR. BAXTER: Sir, the authority for the leases granted by the Duchy of Cornwall at Dartmoor is the Act 26 & 27 Vict. c. 49, s. 22, Duchy of Cornwall Management Act, 1863. No payment is made to the Treasury on account of convict labour, because the convicts are only employed on lands leased to the Prison Directors, MERCHANT SHIPPING ACT—UNSEAWORTHY SHIPS—THE “WILLIAM,” OF EXETER.—QUESTIONS.

MR. GILPIN asked the President of the Board of Trade, If his attention has been called to the case of the schooner “William,” of Exeter, which left Hartlepool on the 25th June, and foundered at sea on 1st July; whether he is aware that this ship was known to be so unseaworthy that she had baskets of sawdust drawn under her that the action of the sea might suck the sawdust into the seams, and thus temporarily stop the leaks; whether the Board of Trade inquiry was held on the loss of this ship at Exeter, where the owner lived, instead of at Hartlepool, where the aforesaid facts were known; and, whether, as the finding was that the vessel was not unseaworthy, although it foundered in perfectly fine calm weather, and, to use the language of a correspondent of “The Times,” she “took a header” and went to the bottom, he will cause the strictest inquiry to be made, and report to the House?

MR. CHICHESTER FORTESCUE: I have not heard, Sir, of the baskets of sawdust; there is no mention of that in the evidence. It is true the inquiry was held at Exeter. The question where inquiries of this kind should be held is left to the solicitor conducting them, who decides on the balance of convenience. The Report states that the vessel had been repaired three months previously; but nevertheless she was not in all respects, a seaworthy vessel. The hon. Member is wrong in stating that the vessel foundered in fine, calm weather. Having read the evidence, I find that she was exposed to a very strong gale of wind—one of the witnesses said it blew very hard. She was struck by a very heavy sea at 11 o’clock in the morning of Monday, the 30th June, when it became necessary to work the pumps, and she did not founder till 24 hours after. She went down head foremost three miles off the land, and the crew escaped in the boats.

MR. GILPIN asked the President of the Board of Trade, Whether the Royal Commissioners on Unseaworthy Ships have power under the Order of Reference to appoint assistant-Commissioners to prosecute inquiries during the Recess at the seaports; and, if they have not, whether it is the intention of the Government to supplement their existing powers to this end, so that there may be no delay in prosecuting the necessary inquiries?

MR. CHICHESTER FORTESCUE: Sir, the Royal Commissioners have full power to appoint assistant-Commissioners for the purpose stated. It will depend on the Commissioners themselves whether they exercise that power. I have reason to believe, however, that they think it desirable to see and hear all the witnesses themselves; and, in any case, the House may have full confidence in the way the Commissioners are carrying on their inquiry.

CIVIL SERVICE WRITERS.—QUESTION.

MR. DILLWYN, for Mr. OTWAY, asked Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, When and how he proposes to give effect to the promise he made on the 17th June last, that the Civil Service writers should receive special pay for special kinds of work, that certain holidays should be granted to all writers, that sick leave on medical certificate should be granted to writers without loss of pay, and that an allowance for travelling expenses should be made to writers when ordered away on duty by the Government?

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER: Sir, the mode in which effect should be given to this undertaking is now under the examination of the Treasury and the Civil Service Commissioners, and it will very shortly be made known. I am not in a position to say more at present.

METROPOLIS—THE AUTHORIZED BOOK OF CAB FARES—RAILWAY STATIONS.—QUESTION.

MR. W. LOWTHER asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, Whether the statement is correct that Sir R. Carden said—

“As a matter worthy of attention of the Home Secretary, that from the authorized book of cab fares now in use among cabmen, and which was published in 1870, there were no less than sixteen railway stations in the Metropolis, many of them being principal stations, entirely omitted; and, whether this defect will soon be remedied?

MR. BRUCE: Sir, the last authorized book of fares was published in 1872. New measurements are now being made by the Ordnance Survey Department. These measurements will be given from the 227 principal cab-stands to certain important points in the metropolis. Among the points to which measurements will be given, 35 railway stations are included, and among them all the terminal stations. The measurements to 89 cab-stands have been completed, and the whole will be completed and a new book issued as soon as it can be prepared.

METROPOLIS—FIRES—WATER SUPPLY.
QUESTION.

MR. W. LOWTHER asked the President of the Local Government Board, Whether his attention has been drawn to a letter in "The Times" of the 19th instant, in which it is stated that owing to the want of supply of water a house was destroyed by fire in Weymouth Street between two and three in the morning?

MR. STANSFIELD, in reply, said, that his information was consistent with that contained in another letter on the subject which, perhaps, the hon. Gentleman had seen, in which it was stated that there had been no deficiency of water and no delay in its supply.

CRIMINAL LAW—APPROPRIATION OF PENALTIES.—QUESTION.

MR. W. H. SMITH asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, If his attention has been drawn to a decision of the Magistrate of the Westminster Police Court directing that a penalty imposed under the provisions of "The Nuisances Removal Act, 1855," should be paid to the Receiver of Police for the Metropolis instead of to the Local Board of Works, the prosecuting authority, although the Nuisances Removal Act provides that all penalties under the Act should be paid over to the Vestry, District Board, or other local authority appointing an analyst; and, whether he will consider the expediency of providing that the penalties under this Act imposed in the metropolis shall be paid over to the local authority as in other parts of England?

MR. BRUCE: Sir, I have considered that decision, which appears to me to be in strict accordance with the existing law. There are, undoubtedly, strong reasons of public policy in favour of paying over these penalties to the local authorities, and thereby encouraging active and vigorous enforcement of the laws entrusted to them. On the other hand, the circumstances of the metropolis afford much justification for an exceptional course. The Treasury bears in the metropolis charges which elsewhere are borne by the local funds, especially the cost of the police magistrates and the police courts, and they have therefore a special claim upon these penalties. The subject is not clear of doubt; but I am not prepared to say that a change ought to be made.

Mr. Bruce

IRELAND—REVISION OF LIST OF MAGISTRACY.—QUESTION.

MR. CALLAN asked the Chief Secretary for Ireland, with reference to the answer of the Chief Secretary on the 18th March 1870, Whether the revision of the List of the Irish Magistracy, "with a view of clearing the List of the names of the persons who ought not to be there, or who had ceased to be able to act," which was then stated to be "yet going on," has been completed; and, if so, has an effect been given to the said revision in any one county in Ireland; and, if so, in what county or counties; and, if not completed, what progress, if any, has been made in such revision; whether any effect has been given to the opinion of the then Chief Secretary, "That the Government should use their influence" to have advantage taken of "all fair and proper opportunities to reduce the inequalities" then admitted to exist in the undue disproportion of Protestants to Catholics on the magisterial bench; and, whether the attention of the Irish Executive has been directed to the grave dissatisfaction existing in Ireland with regard to the present condition of the Irish Magistracy?

THE MARQUESS OF HARTINGTON, in reply, said, the revision of the list, promised in 1870, had been going on, and had been completed for 26 counties. The grounds upon which in many cases removals had been made were—insufficient qualification or non-residence, the holding of offices incompatible with the position of justice of the peace, employment in land agency, the temporary appointments of military and naval offices, and death or absence. From the remaining counties no information had been received from the Lord Lieutenants, or the information was not sufficient to enable the Lord Chancellor to complete the revision. The work had been one of considerable labour, involving an enormous number of inquiries, and some of them of a delicate character. A considerable number of Roman Catholic gentlemen who appeared to be duly qualified had been placed upon the Bench; but, considering the distribution of land in Ireland between the two religious professions, it was not to be expected that anything like equality should be established. He was not at all aware that grave dissatisfaction existed with regard to the present condition of the Irish magistracy. He was perfectly aware that dissatisfaction existed on the part of many persons that they had not received commissions; but he was not aware there was any general dissatisfaction.

PUBLIC WORKS LOANS—ENGLAND AND IRELAND.—QUESTION.

MR. DELAHUNTY asked Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, Whether from the 19th of August 1871, to the 31st December 1872, the Public Works Loan Commissioners, with the sanction of Her Majesty's Treasury, have not granted loans, amounting to £869,833, to local authorities in England for sanitary purposes; whether further amounts have not since been granted for like purposes, and to what extent; whether, during the present month, the Treasury has not obtained power from Parliament to raise a further sum of one and a-half millions to enable the Loan Commissioners to grant additional loans at 3½ per cent. to local authorities in England for like purposes; whether from the 19th of August 1871, to the present time, the Treasury has sanctioned any loan to local authorities in Ireland for sanitary purposes, save the one to Waterford at 5 per cent.; and, if any, to state their amounts; whether the maximum period for repayment of such loans in Ireland is not fixed by Law at twenty-five years and in England at fifty years; and, whether, if the facts be so, the Treasury will still insist on exacting in the latter Country a higher rate of interest by 1 per cent. than the 4 per cent. the Law authorizes them to fix and charge?

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER, in reply, said, that from the 19th of August, 1871, to the 31st of December, 1872, the Public Works Loan Commissioners had granted £8,389, and not £869,833, and since then £262,579 had been granted. This month the Treasury had obtained power to raise £1,500,000, to enable the Loan Commissioners to grant additional loans at 3½ per cent. Since the 19th of August, 1871, the Treasury had sanctioned, besides a 5 per cent loan to Waterford, loans to Ireland, through the Public Works Loan Commissioners, of £12,100 for the Inniskillen Waterworks, £800 to the Mill Street Union, Cork, and £4,300 for Dublin; and, through the Irish Board of Works, of £4,000 to Inniskillen. The maximum periods for repayment were in Ireland 25 years, and in England 50 years. He had not the least objection to abolish the distinction of 1 per cent higher interest charged to Ireland; but he was bound by the general rules under which the respective loans were granted. The Waterford Loan was, he believed, from the Public Works Loan Commissioners in England.

ARMY—GUNPOWDER—MR. DUFFEY'S INVENTION.—QUESTION.

MR. RAIKES asked the Secretary of State for War, Whether Her Majesty's Government intend to make any use of the invention of Mr. James Duffey for the protection of gunpowder from explosion, which was tested at the Horse Guards in July 1869, in the presence of Sir Hope Grant, and on Wimbledon Common in 1870, in the presence of His Serene Highness the Duke of Teck and other officers; whether he is aware that the invention has been pronounced to be one of considerable value by them and other military and naval authorities; and, whether he is willing to assign any reward to Mr. Duffey for his discovery, which he patented in 1870, but for which he has not sought an extension of his patent in consequence of his belief that the favourable opinion expressed by the Quartermaster General would be acted upon by the Government?

SIR HENRY STORKS, in reply, said, the Government did not intend to make use of the invention, the advisers of the War Department having expressed a decided opinion that it was unsuited for military purposes. No award could be assigned for inventions which were not adopted into the service.

ARMY—SECOND BATTALIONS OF MILITIA REGIMENTS.
QUESTION.

MR. STANLEY asked the Secretary of State for War, When it is intended to raise the second battalions of Militia regiments referred to in the Army localisation scheme; whether care will be taken to appoint Commanding Officers and Adjutants to the new battalions in sufficient time for them to superintend the posting of the officers and men transferred to them; whether the Commanding Officers of the new battalions will have any voice in the selection of the officers and non-commissioned officers of their battalions; and, whether the officers and non-commissioned officers will be appointed at a time sufficiently before the annual training to enable them to become properly organized before their men are attached?

MR. CARDWELL: Sir, It is intended to raise second battalions in those counties in which the state of the recruiting appears to warrant it; and arrangements will be made for doing so in the course of the autumn. Care will be taken to make the appointments with due notice, and at such time and in such manner as may most conduce to efficiency in each case. The commanding officers of the old battalions will be communicated with in respect to the formation of the new, and, generally, the arrangements will be made as far as possible to meet the circumstances of each regiment.

THE TREATY OF WASHINGTON—THE GENEVA ARBITRATION—PRE-SENTS TO ARBITRATORS.—QUESTION.

MR. CAVENDISH BENTINCK asked the First Lord of the Treasury, Whether he will state to the House the precedents according to which Her Majesty's Government propose to offer presents of plate to three of the Arbitrators in the late Geneva Award, and which precedents were referred to by him in general terms on the 10th of March last.

MR. GLADSTONE, in reply, said, it had been the custom, from time to time, for a very long period, to give presents to foreigners who had discharged special duties or performed special services for this country, as it had also been the custom with other nations to give presents to persons belonging to this country who had rendered special services to them. The precedents he would quote in the present instance were these. There was the precedent of Lord Castle-reagh, who received a valuable service of china from the King of France after the Congress of Vienna, in 1814. There were also the cases of Lord Sidmouth in 1815; Lord Bathurst in 1816; the Russian and Danish Ministers in 1822, from this country; the Bavarian and Spanish Ministers, from this country in 1823; the Danish Minister in 1834; the Brazilian Plenipotentiary in 1827; the Netherlands Ambassador to Constantinople in 1829. Particulars could be supplied if the hon. Gentleman desired them. Perhaps the precedent most relevant to this particular case was that of Sir Edward Thornton, our Minister at Washington, who received a present for his services as Arbitrator between the United States and Brazil, in the case of the vessel Canada in 1870. The hon. Gentleman would remember that in the present instance it was the United States Government which took the initiative.

NAVY—SHIP-BUILDING—PLANS OF THE GOVERNMENT.—QUESTION.

MR. HENRY LENNOX said, that as all the Navy Estimates in regard to ship-building had been already passed, he wished to ask the First Lord of the Admiralty, Whether he would redeem the pledge he gave some weeks ago by stating what type of Iron-clad it was intended to lay down this year? He would further appeal to the right hon. Gentleman to couple with that statement an assurance that he should have in a formal Return the specifications as to the dimensions of the ship and the weights she would carry.

MR. GOSCHEN: Sir, with regard to the latter portion of the noble Lord's Question, I am more or less in the hands of the House; but I venture to submit to the noble Lord that it is not desirable that at the earliest stage of constructing a ship, notice should be given to all the world as to her exact dimensions and specifications. I will, however, make a general statement to the House. Ships are being designed and constructed for other navies to carry guns and armour exceeding in power and thickness anything which has been hitherto adopted, and it is necessary that this ship, which will take from three to four years to construct, should, when completed, be more than a match for any other ship in the world. The ship we propose to build at Portsmouth, to be named the Inflexible, carries out the views of the Committee on Designs for Ships of War. The system is an extension of that adopted in the Warrior, of having a central armoured citadel and under-water shot-proof decks. The requisite reserve of buoyancy in the event of the unprotected ends being penetrated to any extent is secured by the central-armoured citadel. The area of the armour is diminished and its thickness increased in a corresponding degree. It is not advisable to give the figured dimensions of this ship in all their details; but I can state that the armour is thicker than has been contemplated for any ship or fort; that the guns with which this vessel is to be armed will be the most powerful that can be designed and manufactured; and that low freeboard and no sails are not essential features of the design. The ship will have a freeboard of 20 feet forward, and be able to set trysails if required in heavy weather, or in the improbable event of her four sets of engines being disabled. The dimensions, except the beam, which is much greater, are the same as the Fury, with 3 feet less draught of water. The coal endurance is the same; and the ship, with a full speed of 14, will steam 3,000 knots, at 10 knots speed. The estimated cost is the same as the Fury. The Controller of the Navy, with the Director of Naval Ordnance, and the Chief Naval Architect, who has prepared the design, concur in recommending it to the Board of Admiralty, who, after very careful consideration, are unanimous in their approval.

POST OFFICE—REGISTRATION OF LETTERS CONTAINING POSTAGE STAMPS.
QUESTION.

Mr. MACFIE asked the Postmaster General, with regard to a Post Office Notice just issued, Whether he really means after the 31st instant to require letters containing postage stamps to be registered; and if any such letter is not registered, to subject the person to whom it is addressed, before delivery thereof, to a double registration fee of eight-pence; whether this new regulation, or extension of the existing regulation as to coin will be enforced, however small the number or value of the stamps enclosed may be; whether the readiness of the people of Scotland and Ireland to acquiesce in the withdrawal, intended to take place at the same time, of the facility they have long enjoyed and habitually used in the power of remitting small notes by post; if he will lay upon the Table any Report made to him showing necessity for this rigid and novel procedure; if he will lay upon the Table the Correspondence or Minutes alluded to in the following passage from page 7 of his Nineteenth Report to the Treasury, which has been issued this morning:—

"The evil to be remedied is still so great that, as you are aware, I have been obliged to ask for the authority adverted to, and, as you have been pleased to grant it, I have now to announce that, as soon as the necessary arrangements can be completed, the measure will be brought into operation;"

And what is the Act of Parliament on which he relies as his warrant and justification for the intended limitation of the individual convenience of the people?

MR. MONSELL: There is no intention, Sir, to require letters containing postage stamps to be registered, except in cases in which, from bad folding or packing, the contents are obvious. As the object of the regulation is to prevent temptation to theft arising from carelessness, now very common, it will, when applicable, be enforced without reference to the number or value of the stamps enclosed. The reasons for the regulation having been fully given in the Nineteenth Annual Report on the Post Office, just issued, it is not necessary to lay any other Papers on the Table of the House. The Act of Parliament in which power is given to the Postmaster General, with the consent of the Treasury, to lay down such a regulation as the one in question is 3 & 4 Vict., c. 96. I will undertake, however, that the regulation is not put in force until my hon. Friend the Member for Gloucester (Mr. Monk) has had an opportunity of submitting to the House his Motion on the subject.

MR. MACFIE asked, Whether he might hope that the discussion on the subject would be taken this Session?

MR. MONSELL said, that was a question which ought to be addressed to the hon. Member for Gloucester.

NAVY—NAVAL RETIREMENT.

QUESTION.

ADMIRAL ERSKINE asked the First Lord of the Admiralty, If there is any truth in a paragraph in the "Pall Mall Gazette," of Tuesday, the 22nd, to the effect that he has abandoned the intention of proposing a plan for a Naval retirement during this Session; and, if he will inform the House when it is proposed to take the remaining Vote on the Navy Estimates?

MR. GOSCHEN: Sir, there is no truth in the statement in The Pall Mall Gazette, if it is meant to convey the idea that I have abandoned those intentions which I expressed on the last occasion when the Navy Estimates were before the House. The plan then suggested, that, possibly, as a temporary measure, certain modifications of the retirement scheme of 1870 might be proposed, has not been abandoned; and I shall take the opportunity on moving the Half Pay Vote of stating my intentions on that point. I believe the Navy Estimates will be taken on Monday next.

POST OFFICE—THE GLASGOW POST OFFICE.—QUESTION.

MR. ANDERSON asked the Postmaster General, If he is aware that there are still great complaints as to the inefficiency in the delivery department of the Glasgow Post Office; if it is with his sanction that boys of sixteen are employed in the service; and, if it be the fact, that the increase of staff stated by the new Postmaster to be necessary to make the service efficient, has been only partially conceded?

MR. MONSELL: So far, Sir, from its being known that great complaints are still made, a Report from the Postmaster of Glasgow was received only yesterday, stating that the new arrangements are working well and giving full satisfaction to the public. Youths of 16 years of age are employed in the Post Office Service, as they have been for 50 years past, if not longer. [Mr. ANDER-SON: In the delivery of letters?] I am unable to state. The staff of the Glasgow Post Office has been increased to the full extent asked for.

EDUCATION DEPARTMENT—REVISED CODE, 1873, ARTICLE 59—TEACHERS FOR ELEMENTARY SCHOOLS.

QUESTION.

SIR JOHN KENNAWAY asked the Vice President of the Council, If, looking at the difficulty of obtaining teachers for Elementary Schools and the great educational changes going on, he will hold out the hope that the provisions of Article 59 of the Code of 1873, whereby certificates of the third class are granted upon the Report of the Inspector to acting teachers reported to be efficient, will be allowed to remain in force for a further period; and, whether the examination of twenty children with fifteen passes would not be, as in the case of Scotland, a sufficient requirement?

MR. W. E. FORSTER, in reply, said, it was too late to make any alteration this year; but he would promise that the subject should receive the attention of the Government.

POST OFFICE—DUBLIN POST OFFICE—SORTERS AND LETTER CARRIERS.

QUESTION.

MR. PIM asked the Postmaster General, Whether it is true that the Sorters and Letter Carriers of Dublin held a meeting on Monday evening in the large Sorting Room of the General Post Office, at which meeting a Memorial to the Postmaster General was adopted, asking for an increase of pay; whether he has received this Memorial; and, if so, whether he can state to the House what course the Government intend to take in the matter; whether other Memorials on this subject have not been addressed to the Postmaster General on several previous occasions lately, of which no effective notice has been taken; and, whether it is a fact that important reforms in the Post Office arrangements were recommended more than twelve months since by the local authorities in Dublin and approved by the Postmaster General; and, if so, whether he can state to the House why these reforms have not been carried out?

MR. MONSELL: Sir, It is the case that the sorters and letter carriers of Dublin held a meeting on Monday in the sorting office of the General Post Office, and that a Memorial was then adopted, praying for an increase of wages ; but, inasmuch as that Memorial reached my hands only this morning, I am not prepared to state what course will be taken in the matter. Other Memorials having the same object in view had already been received by the Postmaster General. It is not the fact that important reforms in the Post Office arrangements were recommended more than 12 months ago by the local authorities in Dublin and approved by the Postmaster General. The reforms, to which no doubt allusion is made, were recommended by an officer in London who was despatched by myself to Dublin. Of that officer's recommendations one involved an increase in the wages of the letter carriers. This increase was sanctioned in November last, and I can hold out no hope that in their case any further change will be made. The pay they now receive is identical with that of letter carriers in the large manufacturing towns in England, where the rates of wages are certainly not less than they are in Dublin. Others of the recommendations arising out of the mission to Dublin are still under the consideration of the Treasury.

PARLIAMENT—ORDER OF PUBLIC BUSINESS.—QUESTION.

MR. ASSHETON CROSS asked the First Lord of the Treasury, Whether, considering that the Post Office and Telegraph Vote was put off until full inquiry could be made as to the appropriation of balances for the purposes of the Telegraph Service, he will not now allow the discussion on that point to take place before the Vote itself is taken ?

MR. GLADSTONE : Sir, the practical objection to the proposal of the hon. Gentleman is that any postponement of the Vote beyond Monday would involve the postponement of the Prorogation of the Session. The state of the case is this—It is scarcely true that the Telegraph Vote was put off until the conclusion of the inquiry ; but it was put off in order that Members might be sure that they would have an opportunity of discussing the subject. There is nothing in the Vote which has any connection with the inquiry. It is a Vote for the Telegraph Service of the year, and it has no connection with the question of capital account. What the hon. Gentleman means, I apprehend, is that he should have a good and convenient opportunity of discussing the subject. We must go on this evening and to-morrow with strictly legislative business ; but I will keep Tuesday morning, at 2 o'clock, free for the purpose of offering it to the hon. Gentleman, if he thinks proper to avail himself of it. Assuming that Supply will be got through on Monday night, I shall propose to the hon. Member for Sheffield (Mr. Mundella), that on Tuesday evening, at 9 we should take the discussion of his Factories Bill. We will use every effort to have a House, and the subject is one to ensure a House, independently of any endeavour on our part. On Wednesday we propose to take the discussion on the Indian Budget.

MR. BERESFORD HOPE wished to know when the Real Estate Intestacy Bill would be taken ?

MR. GLADSTONE : Not on any one of the days I have named.

SIR JOHN HAY asked when the discussion to be raised by his right hon. Friend (Sir Charles Adderley) upon the subject of the West Coast of Africa would be taken ?

MR. GLADSTONE said, he was afraid it must be taken on some day later than those he had just named.

SCIENCE AND ART—THE BRITISH MUSEUM AND SOUTH KENSINGTON.
QUESTION.

MR. MUNDELLA asked the First Lord of the Treasury, If there is any truth in the Report that the South Kensington Museum and other allied institutions are about to be transferred to the management of the Trustees of the British Museum ?

MR. GLADSTONE, in reply, said, that the question of the present arrangements of the South Kensington Museum was under the consideration of the Government. They connected themselves to a certain extent with the British Museum on account of the necessity for modifying the arrangements of the British Museum, consequent upon the transfer of the Natural History Collection to South Kensington. Beyond that he could not at present go, except to say that the matter was still under process of inquiry.

NAVY—SALE OF GREENWICH HOSPITAL ESTATES.—QUESTION.

MR. FAWCETT asked the First Lord of the Admiralty, How much land belonging to Greenwich Hospital has already been sold; what is the quantity of land now advertised for sale; and what is the quantity still remaining unsold; what security there is that the money obtained by these sales will be retained as capital and not devoted to income; and, whether he will undertake that no more of the land belonging to Greenwich Hospital shall be sold until the House has had an opportunity of expressing its opinion as to the policy of selling land which is held in trust for public uses? He wished to add the further question, Whether it is true that nearly 6,000 acres were going to be sold, and in eleven lots?

MR. GOSCHEN, in reply, said, that two estates containing 1,940 acres, and realizing upwards of £200,000, were sold by public auction in August, 1872—one estate realizing £92,164, and the other £116,000. With regard to the quantity of land now advertised for sale—the Tyneside estate in Northumberland, containing about 5,768 acres, was advertised for sale by public auction at Newcastle-on-Tyne on the 5th of August next. The Admiralty had also under consideration the sale of the remainder of the Langley Barony, &c., estate, containing 8,581 acres; but it was uncertain whether that would be sold before the spring. As to the quantity still remaining unsold, there were 27,865 acres in Northumberland and Cumberland, besides ground-rents and house property in Greenwich and the Isle of Dogs, producing a gross rental of £4,400 a-year. With respect to the security that the money would be retained as capital and not devoted to income, the 31st clause of the Greenwich Hospital Act, 1865, provided that the purchase-money paid in respect of lands sold should be carried to the Greenwich Hospital capital account. There was the further security of the detailed audit, by the Exchequer and Audit Department, of the capital and income accounts of Greenwich Hospital, in order to see that the provisions of the Greenwich Hospital Acts were duly complied with. Lastly, there was the additional security of the presentation of these accounts to Parliament annually, and their review by the Public Accounts Committee. He would undertake that there should be no more sales until spring; but, without knowing what course his hon. Friend might take, he would not pledge himself not to proceed to exercise the powers entrusted to him by Parliament. It was good policy on the part of the House to direct the sales of this land, because the Admiralty had plenty of public business to attend to, without having the management of large estates superadded to their other duties.

MR. FAWCETT said, it would be his duty to move a Resolution expressing the opinion of the House on these sales, and if it decided that they should go on, he should endeavour to obtain an opinion on the part of the House that the land should be sold in small lots.

MR. GOSCHEN said, he accidentally omitted a part of his answer to the hon. Gentleman. He could not tell the precise number of lots in which the lands would be sold by auction. When he said that no more sales would take place before the spring, he did not mean that the lands advertised for sale would be withdrawn.

IRELAND—PEACE PRESERVATION (IRELAND) ACT.—QUESTION.

MR. CALLAN asked the Chief Secretary for Ireland, Whether, considering the eminently satisfactory condition of the borough of Dundalk and the county of Louth, as evidenced by the calendar of prisoners, and the charges of every going judge of assize during the years 1869, 1870, 1871, and 1872, and the present year, both as regards offences against the person and against property, and the statements of—1. Mr. Justice Lawson, at Spring Assize 1871—

"That both the county of Louth and the borough of Dundalk, he might with truth say challenged comparison for peace and order with any portion of Her Majesty's dominions;"

2. Mr. Baron Hughes, Spring Assize 1872, speaking of calendar and report of county inspector of constabulary laid before him—

"They are the most favourable I have ever read since I occupied a seat on the bench, and are highly creditable to every class in your county, but above all to the people in general;"

and, 3. Mr. Justice Lawson, at the Assizes held on the 8th instant—

"That the calendar, a perfect blank, and the constabulary returns laid before him, show a gratifying state of things, and places Louth in the first rank of a model county," he is prepared to remove the Proclamation of that borough and county under the Peace Preservation Acts?

THE MARQUESS OF HARTINGTON, in reply, said, he was happy to state that not only the borough of Dundalk, but that other counties besides the county of Louth, were in an eminently satisfactory condition, and the Government would take into consideration, at the earliest possible moment, the propriety of removing the Proclamation referred to under the Peace Preservation Acts. The decision of the Government, however, could only be arrived at in view of the condition of the surrounding district. The county of Louth, for example, bordered on the county of Meath, which was not in so satisfactory a state, and it would be undesirable to place in the hands of persons arms which would be accessible to the members of the Ribbon Societies of the county of Meath. Dundalk was a considerable port, and after what had occurred not long since in Cork, it was not desirable to give unlimited facilities for the importation of arms into Ireland. While he could not, however, promise the hon. Member that the restriction should be removed, he could assure him that the subject should receive the earliest consideration of the Government.

CRIMINAL PROCEEDINGS (SCOTLAND) —PRIVATE PROSECUTORS.

QUESTION.

MR. CAMERON asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, Whether his attention has been called to a Petition presented to this House, signed by Angus Mackintosh, and to two Petitions from the Commissioners of Supply and Town Council of Inverness, praying that a Committee may be appointed to inquire into the state of the Law with respect to the right of private persons to institute criminal proceedings in Scotland; and, whether, on the part of the Government, he will assent to the appointment of such a Committee next Session?

MR. BRUCE, in reply, said, that he had received Petitions and Memorials on the subject; but inasmuch as the law complained of had been in force in Scotland for the last 120 years, and had generally given satisfaction, it was not his intention to take any steps to alter the law.

BALLOT ACT—BOARDS OF GUARDIANS —VOTING PAPERS.—QUESTION.

MR. BOURKE asked the Secretary to the Local Government Board, If the Local Government Board has received any returns as to the number of votes lost at the election of guardians through informality in filling up voting papers; and, if so, if the very great per-cent-age of such votes lost through the use of the voting paper is such as to render it desirable to take into consideration proposals for altering the present mode of election, and if any proposals have been made from any Union for such alteration?

MR. HIBBERT, in reply, said, that no Returns had been made upon the subject, but he was aware that owing to informalities, a considerable number of votes had been lost. Proposals with reference to this subject had been made by several Boards of Guardians, and were now under consideration, and several of those proposals were to the effect that the voting should be by ballot.

CRIMINAL LAW — PUBLIC PROSECUTORS.—QUESTION.

MR. MAGNIAC asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, Whether he can state what measures have been or are being taken in view of the withdrawal of the Public Prosecutors Bill to fulfil the pledge given by the Government in 1872 to provide a remedy for the grievances admitted to exist in connection with the disallowances of expenses of Criminal Prosecutions?

MR. BRUCE, in reply, said, that, as the hon. Member was aware, the Public Prosecutors Bill would, if it had been passed, have settled this question satisfactorily. Meanwhile, it was impossible that the Treasury supervision over expenses should be discontinued. He had, however, taken care that it should be exercised with due consideration for all parties concerned, and since that time he believed no complaint had been made of anything like unfair or improper treatment.

by the foundation of school boards for the very purpose from which that property, being their own, has been alienated by Parliament. I hope I have put the case fairly and plainly; and I do assure the House that this process is producing a bitterness of feeling of which we may hereafter have disagreeable evidence. Take the case of the parish of Bedworth and the schools there, of which I have been for many years a Governor. This is a charity at Bedworth, near Nuneaton, and was founded by a former clergyman of the parish for the benefit of the labouring classes. I, and my former Colleague, Mr. Dugdale, were two of the Commissioners. Minerals were discovered under that property, and we obtained the leave of the Charity Commissioners to provide for the further development of that property. It was let upon lease; the lessee failed, and for a certain period the Charity Commissioners allowed us to work those minerals until we could let them. That was a mark of confidence on the part of the Charity Commissioners which I hope has been repaid. So, literally, the Governors have created the increase of that property from a source which has given employment to these people upon their own property, and now, when 800 of their children are receiving education in schools which are admitted to be the best in the district, I am likely to have to tell these people that "Parliament has decided that the £800 a-year of your property, property which has been devoted to the education of your fathers, yourselves, and your children, shall be taken away—and why? Because you have been so educated out of your own property!" Well, they will look across the canal which separates this property from mine, and in their homely phrase will say—"They are going to take away our pits; why don't they take Newdegate's?" What answer am I to give? Who would expect me as an honest man in this House not to oppose what I consider a downright robbery? Because, if you object to the form of education, Parliament, in its discretion, might alter that education. I might lament the change, for it is the best education that the Governors can devise and provide; but I should not feel, as I do now, that Parliament was about to take away from this people the property which had been applied beneficially to them and their fathers for generations. Sir, I am directly and distinctly opposed to this principle of confiscation; and we feel it none the less acutely, because this principle is specially applied to property which is devoted to education in the tenets of the Church, of which I and the great majority of these people are members. Hon. Gentlemen opposite, in their sectarian heat, can scarcely have considered the feeling that they must be arousing in the hearts of those possessors of property, who are as sincerely attached to the religion they profess as hon. Members may be to the religious views they entertain. Look at the matter from another point. If there is one denomination of religion in this country more defiant than others in raising their institutions, it is the Roman Catholic denomination. Not less than 300 of these monastic and conventional institutions have of late years been erected in England and Wales, the most of them being for educational purposes; but Parliament which has dealt thus with the property of the educational establishments belonging to the Established Church, has never yet completed even an inquiry into the existence of this other property which is held against the law, is administered in defiance of the law, and yet remains secured from the rough process which is applied to the educational property of the Church of England. I ask hon. Members, then, who are in the habit of talking so much about equality, where is the equality between the treatment that you have extended to the Church of England educational charities, and your abstinence even from inquiry into those increasing establishments of the Church of Rome? I cannot think that hon. Members who represent various Protestant sects can have looked at the subject as it stands; but I feel it to be my duty to bring it distinctly before the House, because I am convinced that Parliament is dealing with this matter in a sense which the people feel to be directly undermining their independence; for, disguise it as you may, this determination that there shall be no educational property, except that administered to the operative classes either out of the poor rate, or an education rate, which is equivalent to a poor rate, levied under an administration similar to that which levies the poor rate, is inflicting upon them a sense of deep degradation, a feeling that when you take away the property which is their own for the same purpose, and saddle them with this great sustained system of rating, you are treating them as if they were indeed a class apart, unfit to possess or to enjoy property, unfit to have it administered to their immediate wants, especially their educational wants, the urgency of which you are perpetually pressing upon the attention of Parliament. Let not hon. Members mistake the feeling which is thus engendered. It is very well for you to tell us that because the rate is to be administered by elective boards, therefore it is more these people's own than the property which they now enjoy. The people feel nothing of the kind. You may suppose that country gentlemen like myself have no sense of responsibility. You may suppose that I could have used this trust property as I liked, and yet go scatheless among my neighbours. You know little of the English people if you believe anything of the kind. I thank God that the people of my district have always been of a very independent mind, and if they suspected me of anything like abuse or foul play, they would let me know it before a week was over, and that in no very doubtful terms. I know that well. With people of that temper, if you think that your present process is pleasing, you are very greatly mistaken; and I tell you that when it is understood it is most distasteful to them. Hon. Members may be pleased to treat this as a question that is closed, whereas it is a question that has only lately opened itself to the understanding of the people, and the right hon. Gentleman the Vice President of the Education Department of the Privy Council admitted the other night whilst apologizing to some of his Friends, that the puny concessions which this Bill contains had been wrung from him by the pressure from without, and by the apprehension that the House of Lords might respect those feelings of opposition. Well, Sir, I believe that whatever the hidden jealousy or sectarian feeling hon. Members may represent, as opposed to those charities because they are connected with the Church of England, still there lies at the bottom of their opposition a recognition of the fact that the process which you are applying is calculated to undermine the independence of the labouring classes; an independence which I have always respected; an independence which I believe to be at the foundation of our national greatness; an independence which I have never done anything to violate; an independence which I hope that the House will ever respect. I have given Notice of my intention to move that this Bill be committed on this day three months, because I believe that this Commission ought to be brought to a close. Had it been a Commission of Inquiry, had it been a Commission for the correction of abuses, had it been a Commission for obtaining the restoration of property that had been misapplied, I should have hailed it; but I have it stated in the correspondence of these Commissioners that no matter what may be the merits of a school, or however thoroughly good may be its administration, the one fact that any such school is sustained out of property which belongs to the inhabitants of a parish, at once condemns the property so applied to confiscation, ipso facto, from no imputation upon its management; but simply because this House will not permit property for elementary education to be held for the people of this country in the form of a trust, the trustees being bound to give effect to the intentions of the founder. Now, Sir, that decision applies not only to the Church of England, but to every denomination that may hold property of the kind; and I say this—I myself may have thought of devoting property for the purpose of continuing elementary education to an increased and increasing population already in the enjoyment of some of this trust property. But I will do nothing of the sort, if Parliament is to pass an Act, that, first confiscates the larger charities applied to those purposes, and vests them in these Endowed Schools Commissioners to be alienated from their original objects, and then, as a concession in this Bill, merely changes the appropriation of the smaller charities, confiscating them from the possession of the locality and investing them in the Committee of Privy Council. Sir, such petty concessions as this are no concessions of principle, as the right hon. Gentleman informed the House the other night, but constitute a perpetuation of the same principle to which I am diametrically opposed. I wish the speech of the right hon. Gentleman had reached the public. I am sorry to say, that, perhaps owing to the lateness of the hour at which it was delivered, the reports of it were very much curtailed; but such was the zeal displayed by the right hon. Gentleman that I made a note of one passage. He said—

"My hon. Friends must be aware that in several instances the House of Lords has rejected schemes which have been proposed by the Commissioners. I very much regret that the House of Lords has possessed that power."

It seems, then, that the right hon. Gentleman is so ardent in the cause, that he would even disfranchise the other branch of the Legislature in order to further his object. That is Sir, an excess of zeal which must be dangerous in its consequences. I object, then, to the continuance of this machinery for the carrying out of that which in my neighbourhood will be a process of confiscation. I object to it the more, because it is a confiscation of the property of the labouring and the poor classes; and it is for these reasons that I have given the Notice which I now beg to place in your hands, that the House do resolve itself into Committee on this Bill on this day three months.

MR. WHEELHOUSE seconded the views of the hon. Member for North Warwickshire, and he did so all the more readily because he was very anxious to leave on record the grounds of his support. He did not think it was just that Parliament should, under any circumstances, ignore the right of inheritance which existed in the children of the poor, especially as every proposal of the Commissioners seemed to be—indeed, was almost openly avowed to be—to take from that class, and to provide for the children of another, which ought to be able to provide for the education of its own children. As soon as that Commission came into operation, they had this state of things—that the Commissioners proceeded to deal with some of the charitable foundations of the country which ought not to have been touched at all, or, at least, not until after all the misused endowments had been thoroughly dealt with. He asked the House to consider whether it had not evidence before it, that the very first schools that were attacked were those which were well conducted and the least requiring alteration. He was one of those who did not believe in competitive examination to the extent to which it was at present carried, because he knew that practically it meant cramming; and he especially disliked competitive examination when it actually dealt with the children of the indigent poor whose early lives were commonly passed in great straits, and who, therefore, had not the pecuniary means to place their children on the same footing as those of comparatively richer people. Under such circumstances there could be no "fair start," inasmuch as the poor man's child must necessarily be overweighted in such competition. He, therefore, cordially seconded the proposition of his hon. Friend, because he wished it distinctly to go forth throughout the length and breadth of the country that, without using the word "confiscation," the alienation now going on was as near confiscation, so far as the heritage of the poor was concerned, as was possible. The time, however, was fast coming when that class of the people would thoroughly understand to whom they were indebted for that state of matters, and, no doubt, it would be precisely and correctly appreciated. For his own part he believed that no man, or no body of men, call them by what name soever they pleased had the right, even under the sanction of an Act of Parliament, to alter the devolution prescribed by the will of a Founder, without the most urgent necessity.

Amendment proposed, to leave out from the word "That" to the end of the Question, in order to add the words "this House will, upon this day three months, resolve itself into the said Committee," — (Mr. Newdegate,) — instead thereof.

MR. HINDE PALMER thought it would be a very serious misfortune and great calamity to the public, if the Bill now before the House did not pass, and the Commission were consequently allowed to expire. In a great number of instances in which the Commissioners had dealt with these endowments, they had conferred a large benefit on the communities of different localities. One great advantage had been that the Commissioners had saved an enormous amount of litigation in the course of their proceedings, because they had settled schemes of endowments for a large number of charities which otherwise could not have been settled without the institution of separate Chancery suits for each individual charity. When the endowments were made there were comparatively very few elementary public schools; but now the national education establishment existed, or would exist everywhere. Why, then, should not some of these endowments be applied towards the provision of a higher grade of education than that given by the mere elementary schools? One of the great wants of the day was, that they should give a better sort of technical education to the children, and this was one of the points recommended in the Report of the Commissioners, which he hoped to see accomplished.

MR. GATHORNE HARDY said, he was not without considerable sympathy with his hon. Friend the Member for North Warwickshire, in regard to several points in his speech; but as the House had arrived at the point of going into Committee on the Bill, he confessed that he would rather prefer seeing what could be done with it in Committee than give any opinion of the measure in its present shape. He therefore hoped the hon. Member would not press his Motion.

MR. W. E. FORSTER agreed with the right hon. Gentleman in the undesirability of a discussion at this stage. He strenuously denied that confiscation was contemplated, or had been committed, under the original Act, and with regard to the case referred to by the hon. Member for North Warwickshire, it had not yet come before the Commissioners. The duty of the Commissioners—which he believed they had tried to fulfil, and which the Government took care that they did fulfil—was not to confiscate the property of the poor, but to see that the property was applied in a manner that would best help the poor. Considering the provision which was made by law for elementary education, it was desirable, in dealing with great endowments, to see whether we could not do something more with them than teach merely reading, writing, and arithmetic. What he said the other night was, that this House was bound to consider facts as they were, and that it was in the power of either House to carry out its own peculiar views in any particular matter on the consideration of a scheme. The hon. Member for North Warwickshire might take some comfort from that fact, seeing that he had so much confidence in the other House. This “confiscating” Commission had been at work for some years, all its schemes, with the exception of some half-dozen, had become law, notwithstanding the check upon them possessed by both Houses; and the unsuccessful schemes had not been rejected on the grounds taken by the hon. Member.

MR. DILLWYN admitted that he had been fairly beaten the other evening, and, accepting the decision of the House, wished to get into Committee, where he would again endeavour to give effect to his views. His objections were exactly the reverse of those of the hon. Member for North Warwickshire; he complained of the Bill clipping the wings of the Commissioners and curtailing their power.

MR. HEYGATE could not admit that schemes met with approval in the country, because the rejection of them was not moved in either House. He knew of several instances in which great discontent had been evinced at the schemes of the Commissioners.

MR. NEWDEGATE explained that he had mentioned the case he had adduced as an illustration and type of those dealt with in schemes, and that the principle to which he had objected, the alienation of endowments from the labouring classes, was embodied in letters he had received from the Commission as Chairman of two Trusts. He wished to take the sense of the House on that principle.

Question, “That the words proposed to be left out stand part of the Question,” put, and agreed to.

Main Question, “That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair,” put, and agreed to.

Bill considered in Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Clauses 1 and 2 agreed to.

Clause 3 (Exception of elementary schools from 32 & 33 Vict. c. 56, and application thereto of 33 & 34 Vict. c. 75, s. 75).

MR. HEYGATE moved, as an Amendment, in page 1, line 13, to leave out “not being,” to “is” in line 16, on the ground that the clause was drawn with certain limitations as to grammar schools and the amount of endowments.

Under the limitation in the clause all grammar schools having endowments of less than £100 a-year would be liable to be deprived of such endowments. The object of his Amendment was to fulfil the promise which his right hon. Friend had made over and over again—that the voluntary schools should not be injured by the Bill of 1870.

MR. W. E. FORSTER said, it was impossible for him to give his hon. Friend an assurance in the matter. His hon. Friend proposed to withdraw all grammar schools under £100 a-year from the purview of the Bill; but he trusted the Committee would not accede to such a proposal, on the ground that there were a large number of small grammar schools which had degenerated into miserable elementary schools, not only not doing good, but harm, by preventing other and better schools being established, and leading the people in the district to believe that no other school was required. He had little doubt that the Commissioners would find a great deal to do with respect to the more important schools first; but he could not consent to omit 416 grammar schools, or nearly one-half from the Bill. For himself, he should have liked to see the clause not go beyond £50; but, nevertheless, there was an advantage in framing the Bill on the recommendation contained in the Report of the Commissioners.

MR. COLLINS hoped the Amendment would not be pressed.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

MR. GATHORNE HARDY said, he wished to propose an Amendment in another direction. There were a great many elementary schools throughout the country, and he could not see why the amount should be limited to £100. The right plan would be to remove all these elementary schools from the operation of the Commissioners till they had concluded their work in regard to grammar schools. It did not at all follow, that because these schools were removed from the jurisdiction of the Commissioners, therefore they would be removed from all improvement. For example, they might be subjected to regular Government inspection, and have the power of charging fees. The Commissioners had stated that the reason why they might fairly divert funds given for elementary education to the purposes of higher education was, that the country had now made provision for elementary education. He maintained, however, that the country had not done so; because where voluntary schools existed it was not necessary to raise rates. He could not see why, when they had to deal with elementary schools provided for out of endowments, they should not be put upon as good a footing as others, nor why they should insist on putting them in the hands of a Commission that did not want them. He would move as an Amendment in page 1, line 18, to leave out from "1870," to "in," in line 21.

Amendment proposed, in page 1, line 18, to leave out from the words "one thousand eight hundred and seventy," to the word "in," in line 21.—(Mr. Gathorne Hardy.)

Question proposed, "That the words proposed to be left out stand part of the Clause."

DR. LYON PLAYFAIR said, the Amendment would produce large results certainly not contemplated by the Select Committee. The clause, as it stood, would affect about 1,200 schools under £100 per annum. Certainly a larger endowment than that could scarcely be applied with advantage to this elementary education in a national school. [MR. GATHORNE HARDY pointed out that under the 3rd section all elementary schools would be liable to inspection.] But the proposal of the right hon. Gentleman would include 400 or 500 additional schools, some with incomes varying from £4,000 to £8,000. In Bristol alone there were three of these large foundations now devoted to mere elementary education. There were two leading objections to the proposal. Firstly, the Education Department had not a staff for investigating the working of such schools, and for making new schemes for them, while the Endowed Schools Commission had been organized for the very purpose. Secondly, it would be unfair to the schools themselves; for if they were handed over to the Education Department they came under the Act of 1870, which gave powers to that Department to ratify new schemes under its own authority, and to amend them at its own discretion. So that the schools would lose all those safeguards which were provided by the Endowed Schools Act. They would thus lose their power of three appeals—from the Commission to the Education Department, from that to the Privy Council, and from that to the supreme authority of Parliament. The right hon. Gentleman could scarcely have contemplated that that would be the result of his Amendment. It was true that, under the Act of 1870, the initiative for reform must come from the schools; but to preserve that motive for sluggishness could not be the object of the Amendment.

Mr. Heygate

MR. W. E. FORSTER said, that the exemption applied to endowed schools that were really elementary schools, and when they were put up to £100 a-year they had to deal with a very different range of schools, some of them with endowments of many thousands a-year. That was the very class of schools that required reform, and he therefore hoped the Amendment would not be agreed to. The Commissioners were bound to take care of the interests of the poor, and they would do so. What the right hon. Gentleman proposed to do by his Amendment was to leave the trustees of these large endowments unreformed, and the effect would be to strike out many schools that really required reform. The Education Department were not provided with the organization and the Staff necessary to send down Inspectors and arrange schemes for these large schools. If such schools as the Colston Schools at Bristol, which ought to be under the supervision of the Commissioners, were to be inspected in the higher branches, they would require a large increase of Inspectors. The duty of the Education Department was to look after elementary education, for the promotion of which large sums were voted to Parliament. Under the operation of that Amendment Emanuel Hospital would have been exempt, and it would exclude from the possibility of reform large institutions which required improvement as much as any endowments that came under the purview of the Commissioners.

MR. GATHORNE HARDY, in reply, said, that his remarks would not apply to the Colston Schools, nor to the Emanuel Hospital, which were really charity schools, and did not come under the description of elementary schools.

Question put.

The Committee divided:—Ayes 129; Noes 88: Majority 41.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 4 (Amendment of 32 & 33 Vict. c. 56, s. 11).

MR. W. M. TORRENS said, this was the opportunity for providing against the assumption on the part of the Commissioners of powers which he felt certain the House never intended them to exercise, and which, if employed, would be attended by very mischievous results. He would therefore move, in page 2, line 20, to leave out all after, "scheme" and insert—

"To make provision, as near as may be, for the educational interests of the class denoted in the gift or bequest of the donor as that for which his endowment was intended, and no proposal shall be inserted in any scheme alienating any portion of such bequest or gift for the benefit of persons in any other class in life or of persons in the same class resident in any other county or town than that named or otherwise indicated by the donor."

No one could doubt, looking at the evidence taken before the Select Committee, that the Commissioners had assumed to themselves a discretion with regard to the transfer of endowments from place to place and from class to class, which Parliament never intended to confer upon them. When introducing the Act of 1869, the right hon. Gentleman the Vice President of the Committee of Council expressed his hope that no attempt would ever be made to apply the school endowments of the country to the purposes of elementary education. He could state from his own knowledge, cases in which, in the opinion of the communities concerned, the most grievous injustice was impending by the exercise of this assumed power on the part of the Commissioners. He had that morning received an answer to a letter he had addressed to a friend, requesting information as to the feeling in South Devon with respect to the manner in which this power had been exercised. In reply his informant stated that with regard to the correction of abuses, he and his friends were perfectly satisfied; but that the Commissioners had exercised an arbitrary discretion concerning many endowments which were regarded with much discontent—that they had taken away the means of education from the humbler and poorer middle class in order to create elementary schools which might be otherwise provided, and had thereby done a greater wrong to the real poor than if they had left the endowments as they were. Now, the real poor were not the members of trades unions, earning 40s. and 50s. a-week, and who could raise for them the price of fuel at their will and pleasure. The real poor were the half-pay officer, the curate, the clerk, the surgeon, and the man of small means of various degrees, whose children it was of the utmost importance to have properly educated, and for whose benefit these endowments were originally given. It was now for the Committee to decide whether, in passing the Endowed Schools Act, Parliament meant to constitute a triumvirate over the endowed property of this country, to do with it what no Department of the State would venture to do—namely, to change altogether the purposes for which it was bequeathed. As a member of the legal profession, he ventured to say that the assumption by the Commissioners of the right to overturn the old doctrine of cy pres, was never intended by Parliament. The doctrine of cy pres rendered into vulgar English was this—when a donor had given of his wealth for purposes of education or charity, and it became difficult in after times to find exactly the object designed by the deed of gift, you were to go as near to it as might be. That was common sense and common honesty, and the Courts of Equity had always upheld it. And was Parliament now, with Communism looking in at the door, to overrule that principle? And, besides, the purpose of the gift, he maintained that place was one of the elements to be considered. The Commissioners had usurped functions which Parliament had never given them. When examined as a witness recently before the Select Committee, Lord Lyttelton had avowed the doctrine that after 50 years property belonged to the State. He asked where were they to stop? Would any gentleman feel his property as secure as before if Parliament gave its sanction to such a doctrine? The right hon. Gentleman had laid on the Table a coil of schemes which he had approved, but which, from pressure of business, the House had not had time to examine. The day was, perhaps, not far distant when Members would bitterly regret that the Anaconda folds of that serpent had not been cut. He submitted that the whole course of their legislation and law was opposed to the discretion vested in the Commissioners, and on which this clause placed no efficient check, and for the purpose of enabling the House to decide whether this check was required or not, he now moved the Amendment of which he had given Notice.

Amendment proposed,

In page 2, line 20, to leave out from the word "scheme," to the end of the Clause, in order to insert the words "to make provision, as near as may be, for the educational interests of the class denoted in the gift or bequest of the donor as that for which his endowment was intended, and no proposal shall be inserted in any scheme alienating any portion of such bequest or gift for the benefit of persons in any other class in life or of persons in the same class resident in any other county or town than that named or otherwise indicated by the donor." — (Mr. Torrens.)

Question proposed, "That the words proposed to be left out stand part of the Clause."

MR. W. E. FORSTER trusted the Committee would abide by the words of the clause which were those agreed upon by the Committee upstairs. The alteration had been determined upon after much consideration, and for the purpose of giving effect to the view arrived at by the Committee after taking a great deal of evidence. His hon. Friend had said that this clause would give to that "Triumvirate" powers which had been given to no Department of the State. It did no such thing. The power given by the original Act was vested in the Government, and the Commissioners were only the machinery made use of in framing the schemes. But the Government had found that there was a disadvantage in their not having the power to amend a scheme, being limited to approval or disapproval, and that power was taken in this Bill. But, undoubtedly, the Bill left the Government absolutely responsible for these schemes, and it was an entire delusion to say that the matter was left to an irresponsible triumvirate. The illustrations given by his hon. Friend referred to schemes not yet agreed upon or approved by the Education Department. He affected to be horrified at the Anaconda coil of schemes that had been laid upon the Table. But, if his hon. Friend was so horrified at that dreadful serpent, which was coiling itself around hon. Members of this House, why did he not himself come to the rescue and cut the coils? He doubted whether the Amendment of the hon. Gentleman would carry out his own object. He had alluded to one scheme—that, he supposed, of Dulwich

College; but no county was named by the original Founder, and the different parishes interested in Dulwich School had different opinions on the subject; a scheme was settled not long ago which did not give full satisfaction to one or other of them. It was the duty of the Commission to examine into the matter and propose a scheme which would be just to all sides. By the clause as it now stood the Government took care that due regard should be paid to the interests of the particular class originally intended to be benefited, and the Amendment of his hon. Friend would only fence round and limit the action of the Commissioners much more than would be desirable.

MR. LOCKE said, he agreed with his hon. Friend who had moved that Amendment, that no greater mistake could be made than the adoption of a policy which took property from some people simply for the purpose of giving it to others. The Commissioners had made many mistakes in the exercise of their functions, and he had the greatest objection to the tyrannical powers with which they were armed. Representing as he did one of the parishes interested in the Dulwich School, he must say great complaints were made of the course they had taken in regard to that school. A scheme had been prepared, but it was kept back from the public, in the hope that in the meantime the powers of the Commissioners would be renewed. The Commissioners were three tyrants in the country, and they seemed to think that they could do anything they liked.

Question put.

The Committee divided:—Ayes 100; Noes 68: Majority 32.

AYES.

Acland, Sir T. D.	Brewer, Dr.
Anderson, G.	Brocklehurst, W. C.
Ayrton, rt. hon. A. S.	Brown, A. H.
Aytoun, R. S.	Bruce, rt. hon. H. A.
Baines, E.	Cadogan, hon. F. W.
Balfour, Sir G.	Campbell-Bannerman, H.
Barclay, J. W.	Candlish, J.
Bass, A.	Cardwell, rt. hon. E.
Bassett, F.	Carter, R. M.
Baxter, rt. hon. W. E.	Cave, T.
Beaumont, Major F.	Cavendish, Lord F. C.
Beaumont, W. B.	Childers, rt. hon. H.
Bentall, E. H.	Colebrooke, Sir T. E.
Biddulph, M.	Corrigan, Sir D.
Bolckow, H. W. F.	Davies, R.
Bowring, E. A.	Delahunty, J.
Brady, J.	Dent, J. D.
Brassey, T.

Dickinson, S. S.	Lubbock, Sir J.
Dillwyn, L. L.	Lush, Dr.
Dixon, G.	Lusk, A.
Dodds, J.	Lyttelton, hon. C. G.
Duff, M. E. G.	Mackintosh, E. W.
Edwards, H.	McClure, T.
Egerton, Adml. hn. F.	M'Lagan, P.·
Enfield, Viscount	Miall, E.
Fitzmaurice, Lord E.	Miller, W.
Fitzwilliam, hon. H. W.	Mitchell, T. A.
Fletcher, I.	Monsell, rt. hon. W.
Forster, rt. hon. W. E.	Muntz, P. H.
Gilpin, C.	Peel, A. W.
Gladstone, rt. hn. W. E.	Pender, J.
Gladstone, W. H.	Playfair, L.
Goschen, rt. hon. G. J.	Price, W. E.
Gourley, E. T.	Rathbone, W.
Grieve, J. J.	Reed, C.
Hartington, Marq. of	Richard, H.
Henderson, J.	Shaw, R.
Henley, Lord	Sherlock, D.
Hibbert, J. T.	Sinclair, Sir J. G. T.
Hoskyns, C. Wren-	Storks, rt. hon. Sir H. K.
Illingworth, A.	Tollemache, hon. F. J.
Jardine, R.	Trevelyan, G. O.
Johnston, A.	Vivian, A. P.
Kensington, Lord	Wedderburn, Sir D.
Knatchbull-Hugessen,	Whitwell, J.
rt. hon. E. H.	Williams, W.
Lancaster, J.	Wingfield, Sir C.
Lawson, Sir W.	Young, rt. hon. G.
Leatham, E. A.
Lefevre, G. J. S.	TELLERS.
Leith, J. F.	Adam, W. P.
Lowe, rt. hon. R.	Greville, hon. Captain

NOES.

Amphlett, R. P.	Manners, rt. hn. Lord J.
Baggallay, Sir R.	Mellor, T. W.
Bagge, Sir W.	Miller, J.
Barttelot, Colonel	Mitford, W. T.
Beach, Sir M. Hicks-	Monckton, hon. G.
Cawley, C. E.	Morley, S.
Charley, W. T.	Mowbray, rt. hon. J. R.
Collins, T.	Nicholson, W.
Craufurd, E. H. J.	O'Conor, D. M.
Cubitt, G.	Parker, Lieut.-Col. W.
Denison, C. B.	Patten, rt. hon. Col. W.
Dimsdale, R.	Pell, A.
Disraeli, rt. hon. B.	Phipps, C. P.
Dowdeswell, W. E.	Pim, J.
Dyke, W. H.	Plunket, hon. D. R.
Egerton, hon. W.	Powell, F. S.
Figgins, J.	Read, C. S.
Finch, G. H.	Salt, T.
Floyer, J.	Sandon, Viscount
Fowler, R. N.	Scourfield, J. H.
Gooch, Sir D.	Smith, S. G.
Gordon, E. S.	Stanhope, W. T. W. S.
Gore, J. R. O.	Steere, L.
Grant, Col. hon. J.	Talbot, J. G.
Hardy, rt. hon. G.	Taylor, rt. hon. Col.
Henley, rt. hon. J. W.	Torr, J.
Hermon, E.	Turner, C.
Heygate, W. U.	Watney, J.
Hodgson, K. D.	Welby, W. E.
Holt, J. M.	Whalley, G. H.
Hope, A. J. B. B.	Wheelhouse, W. S. J.
Kavanagh, A. MacM.	Winn, R.
Kennaway, Sir J. H.
Lindsay, hon. Col. C.	TELLERS.
Lindsay, Col. R. L.	Locke, J.
Lowther, hon. W.	Torrans, W. T. M'C.

In reply to Mr. W.
the Bill was the 1st of S to all such after that a pledge to proved of the present

Clause

Clause
c. 56. s. 1

retained

Mr. I

line 2d press "

constr

Mr

sent, clause

posed

mene

A line

"c

by h:

d

c

e

f

g

h i

j

k

l

m n o

p

q

r

s t

u

v

w

x

y

z

aa

volved a question of principle and not of practice.

Question put.

The Committee divided : — Ayes 84 ;
Noes 40 : Majority 44.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 6 (Extension of 32 & 33 Vict. c. 56. s. 19. as to schools excepted from the provisions as to religion).

MR. GATHORNE HARDY said, he wished to move an Amendment which he considered one of considerable importance. This clause introduced a principle entirely novel, and which had never before been introduced into England—namely, it declared that all endowments connected with religion were to be considered non-religious, unless made subsequent to the reign of William and Mary—that was, in effect to say that all endowments up to that time were not to be respected, because they were made before the Act of Toleration. There were just as strong Church endowments made before that time as since. Even in the case of the Irish Church Disestablishment and Disendowment Act the Government respected the endowments which had been made long previously to the time of the Toleration Act. Were they going to say that in this country they should not be respected ? He begged therefore to move, as an Amendment, in page 2, line 32, to leave out from “endowment” to “if” in line 35.

Amendment proposed, in line 32, to leave out from the word “endowment,” to the word “if,” in line 35.—(Mr. Gathorne Hardy.)

Question proposed, “That the words proposed to be left out stand part of the Clause.”

MR. W. E. FORSTER said, the clause was intended to widen the term by which under Section 19 of the old Act schools were excepted from Section 17 and one or two other sections. That was a question which occupied a long time in Committee, and several propositions were made very much enlarging the scope of the clause. He himself would have preferred that the clause had been left as it stood so far as regarded exceptions; but as now proposed, it was not without argument in its favour. When the majority of the members of the Governing Body, or the principal teacher, or the scholars educated in the establishment were declared by the original endowment to belong to a particular denomination it would be considered a denominational school. That was the first condition. The second condition was that the endowment must have been made under such circumstances as must render it plain that it belonged to a particular denomination. It was only fair to require that in the latter case the words should show a real denominational intention. He must, for those reasons, oppose the Amendment.

Question put.

The Committee divided : — Ayes 88 ;
Noes 40 : Majority 48.

MR. GATHORNE HARDY said, he would not move the other Amendments which stood in his name; but would now look to another quarter to remedy the injustice which had been done him by the Committee.

MR. HEYGATE moved, as an Amendment, in page 2, line 35, after “terms,” to insert, “or manifest intent.”

MR. W. E. FORSTER declined to accept the Amendment, on the ground that it would be very difficult to interpret the words. But with regard to the remark which had just been made by the right hon. Gentleman the Member for the University of Oxford (Mr. G. Hardy), he must say that, both in Committee and in that House, the Government had shown a great desire to meet legitimate objections as far as they possibly could, and certainly they had to show that desire contrary to the feeling of many of their own Friends.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

MR. COLLINS moved, as Amendments, in page 3, line 3, after “of” insert—“or shall attend the public worship;” and in line 10, after “section,” insert—

“In any such scheme it shall be provided that not less than two-thirds of the governing body shall always be members of such church, sect, or denomination.”

He did so, formally, to prevent the Amendments being lost, through the absence of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for the University of Oxford (Mr. G. Hardy), in whose name they stood on the Paper.

Amendment negatived.

On Question, That the Clause stand part of the Bill ?

SIR JOHN LUBBOCK, in moving its omission, said, that Clause 19 of the Endowed Schools Act excepted certain schools from the operation of some provisions of the Endowed Schools Act. The clause now before the House extended these exceptions, and enacted that when by the statutes of the Founder, or by statutes made within 50 years of his death, the members of any Governing Body, or the advantage of any endowment, were confined to any particular sect, such limitation should hold good in perpetuity. Now, that clause seemed to him entirely in opposition to the spirit of recent legislation; it was a distinctly retrograde step—a clause for the perpetuation of schisms and sectarianism. It was quite right to leave great powers in the hands of testators, to allow almost any experiment, provided only the time was limited. But these endowments were not really endowments of religion; they were endowments of individual opinions. It was said that the law of England abhorred perpetuities; but no perpetuity was so bad as that of an erroneous or untenable opinion. In fact, they might with truth say that these endowments tended to the multiplication and perpetuation of temporary errors. They were attempts to influence the opinion of future generations, not by appeals to their intellect, but by taking advantage of the pressure of pecuniary necessities. The Universities had very wisely been thrown open, and yet it was proposed to maintain a spirit of sectarianism in the case of schools. He did not deny that there were advantages in the existence of honest and healthy differences of opinion on religious matters. Nonconformity had done great things for the country, but then it was tested and ennobled by self-sacrifice. A variety of religious sects, dead in themselves, but galvanized by money into unnatural vitality, would be an unmitigated evil. He begged to move the rejection of the clause.

MR. DILLWYN hoped the Committee would not be deterred by the threat which had been held out by the right hon. Member for Oxford University, who had just left the House, from doing their duty. Because he had failed in making a trifling alteration in this clause he had distinctly threatened the House that he was not satisfied with their decision, and would appeal to "another place." It was the first time he had ever heard such a threat held out. Unless there were good grounds for retaining the clause, he should not be influenced by any such threats; but vote for its omission.

COLONEL WILSON-PATTEN said, he had heard the language used by his right hon. Friend, and he could assure the hon. Gentleman who had just sat down, that no threat whatever had been used. His right hon. Friend had been entirely misunderstood. He merely said, as his Amendment had not been adopted by the Committee, he hoped it would be adopted in "another place." His right hon. Friend was the last person in the world who would venture to threaten the House in any way whatever.

MR. DILLYWN was in the recollection of the House, and he hoped the House would express its opinion whether he was right or wrong in his interpretation of the language which had been used by the right hon. Gentleman.

DR. LYON PLAYFAIR observed that, as the clause had been brought in in the interests of conciliation, there was much to be said in its favour. But after what the right hon. Gentleman opposite had said, his feelings were quite altered respecting it. He had taken down the words of the right hon. Gentleman, and they were—"That he would look to 'another place' for that justice which was denied him by the Committee." After they had been told that the clause was to be altered in a certain sense in "another House," the best thing would be to leave no clause to be altered, by omitting it.

MR. F. S. POWELL thought there was nothing disrespectful to the House in expressing the hope that in "another place" a different decision would be arrived at. With regard to the proposal of the hon. Member for Maidstone, he took exception to the hon. Member's statement that this class of endowments were intended to promote, not religion, but the opinions respecting religion held by the founders, and were therefore not entitled to be defended by the law of England. The same doctrine struck at the foundation of every Dissenting place of worship in the kingdom. The maintenance of these endowments was in accordance with the principles of justice. He supported the clause.

MR. W. E. FORSTER rather regretted the remark of the right hon.

Gentleman, but he did not think it was intended to bear the interpretation which had been given to it. To be candid, he must say that that was a clause which he proposed in the Committee in the interests of conciliation, and he thought it was a fair addition to Section 19 of the principal Act. There was fairness in saying, as it did, that since the Toleration Act, no endowment, in which, by the original instrument and by invariable custom since that time, it had been required that the majority of the Governing Body should be members of a certain denomination, and that the principal teacher should belong to that denomination, should be interfered with, and he did not think it went beyond the principle of the original section. He could understand those who objected to the original provision objecting to that also. The reason why it was proposed was that there were certain endowments which everybody expected would come under the provisions of the original Act which had not come under it. It must be remembered that it was even possible for a Church school to have a majority of Governors belonging to Dissenting denominations; at any rate, provision was made for the admission of Dissenters as members of the Governing Body, as well as for meeting the conscientious views of the parents whose children might attend such schools.

MR. CLARE READ remarked that if small men made observations similar to that attributed to the right hon. Gentleman no indignation was aroused by them. ["Oh, oh !"] When the Agricultural Children's Bill was in Committee of the House, and a certain Amendment had been carried, he said he would not trouble the Committee to divide again, because he hoped the Bill would be set right in "another place." No indignant remark was uttered when he made that observation.

MR. ILLINGWORTH said, it was their duty to express their honest convictions, and to leave those in "another place" to do the same. Most of the schools which would come under Clause 19 were in Cathedral cities, where, as might be inferred from the course of that discussion, there was a good percentage of Dissenters. The result of passing that clause would be to prevent many of these Dissenters from being on the Governing Bodies of the schools, for it had been the practice of the Commissioners to confine co-optative appointments to the members of the Church of England. It was both unjust and impolitic to admit Dissenters to a trust, and at the same time to provide that in no case should there be a majority of them. If they had civil and parochial rights, why should they be treated in this exceptional manner? Why were they not to exercise the rights of the majority, if they were the majority? What was done from expediency in the case of the Irish Church was no guide as to what should be done in utilizing schools which were of a national character. So far from being privileged schools they were substantially national schools. What civil, parochial, or educational right had a Dissenter given up by building a chapel and providing for religious services there? He did not thereby subject himself to any disability, in respect of property or privilege of the Church by law established.

MR. HEYGATE said, he should support the clause, as it was a small step in the right direction, but it failed to meet the justice of the case.

Question put.

The Committee divided: — Ayes 88; Noes 48 : Majority 40.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 7 to 10, inclusive, agreed to.

Clause 11) Amendment of 32 and 33 Vict., c. 56, s. 37, as to approval of Committee of Council on Education to schemes).

MR. CRAUFURD moved, in page 4, line 41, the omission of the words "such scheme may be approved of by Her Majesty without being laid before Parliament." He objected to these words, because they took away the control exercised by Parliament over these Commissioners. It was becoming rather fashionable on the Treasury Bench to talk of the inconvenience of the control of the House of Commons, and they knew that with regard to a certain contract the Minister principally concerned had expressed his opinion that Parliament should have no control over such matters.

MR. W. E. FORSTER said, the effect of the Amendment would be that no appeal, such as at present existed, would be possible ; and that was hardly what the hon. Gentleman was aiming at. The Committee thought there were a great number of schemes which it was not worth while burdening Parliament with, and which it was desirable to pass without any unnecessary delay.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 12 to 14, inclusive, agreed to.

Clause 15 (Continuance of powers of making schemes).

MR. COLLINS thought it would be enough if the Commission were continued for three years, instead of five, and would move accordingly in line 28, page 6, to leave out from "one thousand eight hundred and seventy six," to the end of the clause.

MR. W. E. FORSTER said, he would accept the Amendment.

Amendment agreed to.

MR. W. M. TORRENS complained that an Amendment of his, limiting the duration of the Commission to one year, although handed in to the Clerk at the Table prior to that of the hon. and learned Gentleman the Member for Boston, was not placed upon the Paper in its proper course. Owing to that arrangement, the words which he (Mr. W. M. Torrens) proposed to amend were swept away, before he had the opportunity of doing so; but nevertheless, he would stand upon his right, and move the substitution of 1874 for 1876. The Government had not yielded a single point in Committee that night, and now the Vice President of the Council did not scruple to try by taking advantage of a printer's error to shut out an Amendment which challenged the policy of prolonging the existence of the Commission for more than one year. But there was such a thing as being "too clever by half." The Government had brought in three educational measures this Session professedly founded upon a policy of conciliation. The first foundered in a calm sea, and the Ministry had to take to the Brighton boat to get safe to land. They saved the second Bill by throwing over half the cargo; and now upon the third Bill, the House could not agree upon a single clause, although the Bill had had the advantage of a patient examination by a Committee upstairs. The matter became of the more importance when hon. Members were threatened with the loss of their seats, if they did not vote according to the dictation of the Birmingham League. He regarded that as an exceedingly bad Bill, and had voted against the second reading with great pleasure. He appealed to the conscience and fair play of the country against the proposal to increase the arbitrary power of these three Commissioners, and should move accordingly to substitute "1874" for "1876," in page 6, line 28.

THE CHAIRMAN ruled that the date 1876 having disappeared from the clause in the last Amendment, the hon. Gentleman's Amendment, substituting for it 1874 must fall to the ground.

MR. CRAUFURD complained that he had an Amendment on the Paper, which should have precedence of the one now under discussion.

MR. COLLINS, by leave, withdrew his Amendment.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

MR. W. M. TORRENS moved, in page 6, line 28, to leave out "76" in order to insert "74."

MR. GATHORNE HARDY said, he understood that some remarks had been made in his absence on something he had said at the close of the discussion on a former clause. He did not go out of the House at the moment, and he should have thought if any hon. Gentleman wished to comment on what he had said, he would have preferred to do it in his presence rather than when he was away. But if he were to speak over again, he should say exactly the same thing as before. He did not recognize that this House had an absolute right to determine everything, irrespective of the people outside the House, or the Lords, who were a co-ordinate branch of the Legislature. What he had said was that, in his belief, injustice had been done in some of these clauses, and that he looked to the Lords to remedy it. [Cries of "Order!"] He was quite ready to obey a call of Order from the Chair.

MR. GLADSTONE: It is the duty of any hon. Member of the House to rise to a point of Order. The right hon. Gentleman is not warranted in repeating a speech made on a former occasion. The right hon. Gentleman is appealing to Members, and is repeating what he said. I say that is not in conformity with Order.

THE CHAIRMAN: It is, I believe, the universal feeling in this House to concede to any hon. Member a hearing when he desires to offer a personal explanation. In this respect I think considerable latitude is allowed. In my opinion the right hon. Gentleman had no intention to exceed, nor does he exceed that latitude.

MR. GATHORNE HARDY said, that he did not wish to exceed that latitude; but he was in Order, because it must be remembered that he was speaking in Committee, and he had a perfect right to repeat everything and go into every case connected with the Bill. The Motion now before the House was, whether the Endowed Schools Commission should continue one year or five, and he understood that in his absence, some hon. Gentlemen had made some remarks on what he had said. He was quite sure that they would have been glad to have made them in his presence; but what he said was, that he considered some injustice had been done, but that he would not give the Committee the trouble of dividing any further, but that he would look for justice on those points "elsewhere", and nothing more. He did not hesitate to say what his meaning was; he might appeal to the people, or the House of Lords, and he was quite entitled to say that he considered the people to over-ride that House, and the House of Lords to be co-ordinate with it. It was not said in an offensive manner, and he in no way threatened the House, and in point of fact the right hon. Gentleman might just as well be accused of doing so when he had told them that they must do certain things, or it would bring about a collision with the House of Lords. He had never been wanting in respect to any hon. Member, nor had he ever disparaged the House of Commons. On the contrary, he should stand up just as much for the privileges of that House as the House of Lords.

MR. DILLWYN explained that he did express his regret at the absence of the right hon. Gentleman at the time he was making the remarks, and what the right hon. Gentleman now stated quite confirmed what he had said. He admitted that he complained that the right hon. Gentleman had threatened them by dangling the House of Lords before their eyes; but if he had misapprehended him, he must express his regret.

MR. W. E. FORSTER said, he thought they might now go on with the business of the Committee. His hon. Friend had proposed to omit the word 1876 and substitute 1874. The Government were willing to give up the two years, and thus continue the Commission till 1876; but they could not be blamed for supporting the provisions of their own Bill. He was surprised that they should be accused of unwillingness to make concessions, after the one they had just made. Every clause they proposed was in accordance with the views of the Committee upstairs. He hoped the Committee would not accept the limit of one year as proposed.

LORD JOHN MANNERS said, that the decisions of the Committee upstairs were very much the reflex in their essential part of the will of the right hon. Gentleman, and he would therefore urge the hon. Member for Finsbury not to trouble the Committee by dividing.

Amendment negatived.

On the Motion of MR. COLLINS, Amendment made, in page 6, line 28, by leaving out from "seventy-six" to end of clause.

Clause, as amended, agreed to.

Clause 16 agreed to.

SIR JOHN LUBBOCK proposed a clause which would open to the graduates of any British University the office of head master in any endowed school, which was now restricted to graduates of Oxford and Cambridge.

A Clause (Graduate of any University of the United Kingdom, if otherwise fit, shall be held qualified where the statutes require the head master to be a graduate of Oxford or Cambridge,)—(Sir John Lubbock,)—brought up, and read the first time.

Question proposed, "That the Clause be read a second time."

MR. BERESFORD HOPE opposed the clause, which was altogether beyond the scope of the Bill. It appeared to be a very mild, benevolent clause, but it would over-ride the constitution of all endowed schools. He would suggest that the hon. Gentleman should bring in a Bill on some Wednesday next Session for the purpose of carrying out the object he had in view.

SIR JOHN LUBBOCK defended the clause, pointing out that a similar provision had been introduced into every scheme already sanctioned which had become law, and that to their honour be it said, neither Oxford nor Cambridge had made any objection. The provision that masters and head masters should be graduates of Oxford or Cambridge was not intended to favour those Universities, but to secure competent men. The degrees granted by the University of London were as thorough and complete as any other degrees in the world; and he believed there was now no British University the degrees of which were open to criticism. The Committee, therefore, need not fear if they adopted the clause that they would be lowering the standard of qualification for masters. That was a question which could not be determined by a case of individual hardship, but must be dealt with on liberal principles. If necessary, however, he was prepared to show that it was no theoretical grievance which would be remedied by the clause.

COLONEL WILSON - PATTEN observed that the term "British" would exclude graduates of Trinity College, Dublin.

SIR JOHN LUBBOCK said, he would alter the phraseology to graduates of "any University in the United Kingdom."

MR. F. S. POWELL said, the clause differed entirely from the whole framework of the Bill, and of the existing Act. It was not by the provisions of the measure that schools were affected, but by schemes framed under the Act. He did not object to the qualification in favour of a graduate of the London University; but he objected to have an isolated provision acting of itself, and by itself, instead of by schemes adapted to the several cases.

MR. W. E. FORSTER said, it seemed to him that the clause could not be really objected to. He hoped that the hon. Member for the University of Cambridge (Mr. Beresford Hope) would withdraw his opposition to it, or at all events, that the Committee would not think it necessary to divide.

MR. MOWBRAY complained that the hon. Member for Maidstone had proposed his Amendment without one word of explanation. That was only another instance of the irregularities which had characterized the proceedings of that evening.

MR. HENLEY said, that if in past times people were foolish enough to give their money for these purposes, expecting that their wishes would be abided by, he did not see why they should not have full power to choose the graduates of what Universities they liked. It seemed to be the fashion now to try to upset everything. The Scotch Universities existed at the time the Founders made this choice, and he thought that their wishes ought to be regarded. The clause might have something in it, but it certainly introduced a very new and wide principle which was quite alien to the whole framework of the Bill.

MR. BERESFORD HOPE said, he would divide the Committee against it, as he could not accept the suggestion of the right-hon. Gentleman to withdraw the opposition to the clause.

SIR DOMINIC CORRIGAN supported the clause. No one could object to putting all the Universities on a level. The objection, therefore, was merely a technical one.

MR. J. G. TALBOT thought the present was another instance of unnecessary legislation. He thought the proposed alteration could be effected by scheme, and objected to the insertion in an Act of Parliament, on a totally different subject, of a provision that would place all the Universities on the same level, and make no distinction between the ancient institutions of Oxford and Cambridge and the mushroom Universities of modern times. The question, if raised at all, should be considered in a separate measure.

SIR FRANCIS GOLDSMID said, he could not help expressing his surprise at the opposition of the right hon. and hon. Members for Oxford and Cambridge Universities. He believed it would be for the advantage of those Universities that the clause should be inserted. He thought no disrespect could be more marked than that which excluded a graduate of a University from equal competition with the members of the older ones.

DR. LYON PLAYFAIR said, he would remind the Committee that the schemes of the Commissioners included many subjects of modern learning, such as physical science, and therefore it was desirable that they should extend the area of selection for the teachers of these schools as much as possible.

SIR MICHAEL HICKS - BEACH asked why they should over-ride the will of a Founder who designed to benefit graduates of Oxford? He thought the clause went further than the hon. Member intended. If its operation were confined to existing Universities in the United Kingdom it would be a great improvement.

Sir John Lubbock

MR. CRAUFURD objected that there was no reciprocity in the clause, and that if it passed in its present form London University might still enjoy any monopolies of its own.

Question put.

The Committee divided:—Ayes 141; Noses 65: Majority 76.

On Question? That the Clause be added to the Bill.

SIR MICHAEL HICKS-BEACH said, that before the clause was added to the Bill he wished to propose an Amendment which would place all the Universities in the kingdom on an equal footing. He accordingly moved the omission of the words “the University of Oxford or the University of Cambridge,” to make way for the insertion of the words “a University graduate.”

Amendment agreed to.

SIR FRANCIS GOLDSMID pointed out that the Amendment would virtually exclude Oxford and Cambridge, even if named in the will of the Founder, and he suggested that the better way would be to omit “Oxford and Cambridge,” and insert “some specified University or Universities,” which would meet the difficulty.

MR. W. E. FORSTER agreed with the hon. Member as to the desirability of inserting such words.

Amendment agreed to; words inserted accordingly.

SIR MICHAEL HICKS-BEACH moved the insertion of the words “existing at the time of the passing of this Act,” the object being to restrict the clause to existing Universities.

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER said, that Universities did not rise spontaneously, like mushrooms. No University could be created without the consent of the Crown, and they had had experience in the early part of that Session how very difficult it was to create Universities. He did not think the objection of the hon. Baronet ought to prevail. It was not an unreasonable presumption that if new Universities should be founded it would be because some better principle was devised which would make them something more in accordance with the spirit of the times; and he did not see, therefore, that the elder Universities were entitled to any particular preference in this matter, for if any fault were to be found with them, it was that they had been too easy in giving their degrees.

Amendment negatived.

Clause, as amended, agreed to, and added to the Bill.

MR. LOCKE moved the following new clause:—

“The power of the Commissioners under section ten of the Endowed Schools Act (the principal Act) for removing any governors or trustees of schools shall be restricted to those cases only in which it may appear that the governors or trustees have proved themselves unfit for the execution of their duties by reason of neglect or mismanagement.

He thought that some hon. Members were under the impression that it was the duty of the Governors to teach the boys. In fact, their duty was to see that the establishment was managed according to the scheme laid down for that purpose. Any unnecessary removal, or the introduction of new Governors unacquainted with the management, would only tend to produce confusion, and he hoped his right hon. Friend (Mr. Forster) would accept what he considered a very mild proposal. If he could not agree to it in the shape proposed he trusted that the object would be met by some other words.

New Clause (As to removal of governors or trustees of Endowed Schools,)—(Mr. Locke,)—brought up, and read the first time.

Question proposed, “That the Clause be read a second time.”

MR. W. E. FORSTER opposed the clause, which, he said, if carried, would put the whole of this matter in the same position as it would have assumed under the original Resolution proposed in the Committee by the hon. Member for Kent, and which was rejected by the whole of the Committee, with the exception of its Mover and Seconder. Restrictions were already numerous enough, and it would be most difficult to carry out reforms under the conditions which the clause proposed.

MR. HEYGATE thought it would be wise on the part of the right hon. Gentleman to accept the clause, as it would have the effect of lessening the unpopularity of the Commissioners in the country.

MR. A. JOHNSTON observed that the unpopularity of the Commissioners had been so often talked about, that people began to believe in it. According to his own experience, the action of the Commissioners was welcome, popular, and satisfactory.

MR. ALDERMAN LAWRENCE supported the clause, though he had no expectation that it would be carried. He thought that trustees who had faithfully and without legitimate complaint fulfilled their duties to their schools ought not to be liable to removal.

Question put.

House resumed.

The Committee divided :—Ayes 100; Noes 146 : Majority 46.

Schedules agreed to.

MR. BECKETT - DENISON gave Notice that on the Report he would move, as an Amendment to Clause 13, a Proviso to the effect that whenever any Motion for an Address to Her Majesty praying Her Majesty to withhold her assent from any proposed scheme of the Commissioners was made in either House of Parliament, it should be incumbent on the President or the Vice President of the Council to move the assent of the House to such scheme within two months. The object of the Proviso was to prevent the inconvenience which had been suffered in some instances from Motions in the hands of private Members expiring by effluxion of time.

House resumed.

Bill reported; as amended, to be considered To-morrow.

LANDED ESTATES COURT (IRELAND)
(JUDGES) BILL—[BILL 182.]

(The Marquess of Hartington, Mr. Baxter.)
SECOND READING.

Order for Second Reading read.

THE MARQUESS OF HARTINGTON said, that, since his statement that he should proceed with this Bill, the Government had re-considered their position; and, though there would be great convenience in obtaining legislative sanction for the course of not filling up the second Judgeship, it was not absolutely incumbent upon the Government to fill up the appointment even without legislative sanction. The Government, therefore, did not propose to proceed with the Bill, upon the understanding that, unless unforeseen circumstances rendered it necessary to do so, they would not fill up the appointment. He regretted to learn that the learned Judge upon whose advice the Government had acted had been unjustly assailed, and his motives in giving that advice had been entirely misrepresented. That learned Judge did not originate the proposal not to fill up the appointment; but, upon being asked, he gave a straightforward answer, which was the only answer he could give, and he had refused to take the additional £500 a-year which was to have been granted to him during his life-time, unless that increased salary was attached to the office and continued to his successors. He would move that the Order be discharged.

DR. BALL said, the course taken by the Government would give general satisfaction; but he hoped the noble Lord would not meanwhile commit himself one way or the other as to the filling up of the vacancy. In his (Dr. Ball's) opinion the second Judge should be appointed, especially as there was a considerable amount of property which had belonged to the Irish Church which ought to be dealt with in this Court.

Motion agreed to.

Order discharged.

Bill withdrawn.

ELEMENTARY EDUCATION ACT (1870)
AMENDMENT, &c., BILL—[BILL 245.]

(Mr. William Edward Forster, Mr. Secretary Bruce.)

CONSIDERATION.

Bill, as amended, considered.

VISCOUNT SANDON proposed a new clause, taken almost word for word from the Scotch Education Act of last year, providing that any person who took into his service a child under 13 years of age, unable to read or write, should be deemed thereby to undertake the duty of a parent as to elementary education.

New Clause (Any person who takes into his service a child under thirteen unable to read or write shall be deemed thereby to undertake duty of parent as to elementary education,) — (Viscount Sandon) — brought up, and read the first time.

Mr. Hoygate

Question proposed, "That the Clause be read a second time."

MR. VERNON HAROURT observed that it had been often said that an Act of Parliament could do anything but convert a man into a woman, and that clause proposed to convert an employer into a parent. A person who took a poor child into his employment, really from motives of charity, would, in consequence, be saddled with serious consequences, and in his opinion the clause was a most objectionable one. If it were passed, the result would be that a benevolent employer would dismiss the child from his employment, rather than have such heavy responsibilities imposed upon him. The ultimate consequence of the clause would be to drive such poor children into the street, and more unwise or despotic legislation for the purpose in view could not be imagined. He hoped the House would not fulminate such a decree against persons who were acting in the interests of benevolence.

MR. W. E. FORSTER thought that though the clause might, with advantage in some instances, be carried into effect, yet it raised too important and complicated a question to be adopted at the present late period of the Session. He was aware, however, that the clause had been urged by many school boards after much consideration.

DR. LYON PLAYFAIR said, that the hon. and learned Member for the City of Oxford (Mr. Harcourt) had entirely mistaken the object of the clause, which had nothing to do with vagrant children, but was a general clause making education a condition for employment of labour. This kind of indirect compulsion was chiefly relied upon by some countries, as in Denmark, and certainly, before we succeeded in making compulsion universal in this country, direct compulsion must be backed up by some form of indirect compulsion of this kind. But with the doubts which had been expressed by competent authority—that the words of the proposed clause would interfere with other forms of indirect compulsion already existing in the Factory and Workshops Acts, he would suggest to the noble Lord the Member for Liverpool (Viscount Sandon) that he should not push his new clause at present—though, if he did, he would vote for it.

VISCOUNT SANDON remarked, in answer to Mr. HAROURT, that such a system of compulsion as that which he proposed existed at present under the Factory Acts. He had been urged only five minutes ago by the Vice President of Council to bring on the clause; but after being deserted by him in a manner of which he had right to complain, he would not persevere with the clause.

MR. W. E. FORSTER explained that he told the noble Lord that there was a great deal in his proposal which deserved support, but that it would require a good deal of alteration.

MR. SPEAKER put the Question, That the clause, by leave of the House, be withdrawn. [Cries of "No, no!"]

MR. MELLY said, that if it was intended to divide, he should like to say a few words on the clause. It went much further than the Factory Acts, as it provided no modified half-time system at all. The school boards were beginning at the wrong end by taking hold of these children who were learning how to earn their living, instead of turning their attention to the education of those poor children who wandered about the streets of large towns and never went to work.

MR. D. DALRYMPLE expressed it to be his intention, if the House went to a division, to vote for the clause. He, however, hoped it would be allowed to be withdrawn.

MR. GLADSTONE said, that the Government did not object to the principle of the clause, but they must vote against it for two reasons. First, it was a subject upon which a serious difference of opinion existed, and it was undesirable that at so late a stage of the Bill any provisions should be introduced into it that did not meet with the full consent of the House. Secondly, the clause was objectionable in some of its details. It would be the duty of the Government to vote against it; but that must not be taken as an indication that the Government disapproved of the principle of the clause.

Question put, and negative.

MR. CUBITT moved a new clause for dividing the Lambeth division of the London School Board district into the Lambeth and Wandsworth divisions—the Lambeth division to consist of the borough of Lambeth and the parts of the parishes of Lambeth and Camberwell outside the borough; and the Wandsworth division, of the parishes of Clapham, Tooting Graveney, Streatham, Battersea (excluding Penge), Wandsworth, and Putney. The parish contained 500,000 people and had an area of 32 square miles.

New Clause (Division of Lambeth into two School Board districts,—(Mr. Cubitt,)—brought up, and read the first time.

MR. REED said, if that was the proper time, he should fully concur with the hon. Member in thinking that a division of the area of Lambeth was desirable. But there were other large districts, such as Greenwich, Finsbury, and Marylebone, which also required to be divided; Greenwich for area, and Finsbury and Marylebone on account of population. The question was, whether such arrangements could be made at that stage of the Bill. Though he considered the hon. Member had a good case, for the reason he had stated he could not vote for the clause.

MR. HINDE PALMER said, the reasons for the division of Lambeth were so strong that if the hon. Member for East Surrey divided the House he would vote for the clause.

MR. W. H. SMITH supported the principle of the clause, as he thought the population of Lambeth was too large to be represented as they were now on the School Board.

MR. W. E. FORSTER said, the difficulty of the proposition was, that it opened a much larger question than the division of the borough of Lambeth—in fact, it would lead to the consideration of the larger question of the re-distribution of seats on the London School Board. That was a grave question, which ought not to be raised at present, especially as he understood that no representation had been made by the representatives of Lambeth to the Education Department or to the School Board on the subject. It would be quite time enough to consider the question when such an application was made.

Motion made, and Question put, "That the Clause be read a second time."

The House divided :—Ayes 77 ; Noes 128 : Majority 51.

LORD JOHN MANNERS proposed a clause, providing that after a school board had established sufficient schools in a locality it might be dissolved?

Mr. Cubitt

New Clause (After the School Board has established sufficient schools the Board may be dissolved,)—(Lord John Manners,)—brought up, and read the first time.

MR. W. E. FORSTER opposed the clause as introducing a new principle into our legislation. Besides providing sufficient school accommodation, other duties fell upon the Board, one of them being to enforce compulsory attendance at the school.

MR. CLARE READ reminded the right hon. Gentleman that in the case of Highway Boards a Board could unboard itself.

Motion made, and Question put, "That the Clause be read a second time."

The House divided :—Ayes 63 ; Noes 126 : Majority 63.

Clause 3 (Repeal of and substitution of other provisions for 18 & 19 Vict. c. 34. (Denison Act)).

Amendment proposed, in page 1, line 21, to leave out the words "it shall be a condition of such relief that."—(Sir Michael Hicks-Beach.)

Question proposed, "That the words proposed to be left out stand part of the Bill."

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Amendment proposed,

In page 1, line 26, after the word "purpose," to insert the words "relief out of the workhouse may be granted to the indigent parent of any poor child between five and thirteen years of age to enable him to send such child to a public elementary school by withdrawing him from labour, providing him with suitable clothing, and paying the school fees."—(Mr. Stapleton.)

MR. W. E. FORSTER said, the Amendment proposed by the hon. Gentleman would without doubt be an important addition to the clause, but it was open to the objection that it would alter the conditions of Poor Law relief. The clause as passed in Committee not only enabled, but required Guardians to see that the children of out-door paupers were educated and to provide proper relief if necessary for that purpose. But the Amendment would introduce this principle—that a man who was not a pauper, according to the general definition of pauperism, might become one solely for the purpose of the education of his children.

Question, "That those words be there inserted," put, and negatived.

Clause 23 (Regulations as to legal proceedings).

MR. J. G. TALBOT, in moving the omission of sub-section 6, said, it would in effect introduce a new principle into the criminal law, by compelling a man to prove he was not guilty before evidence had been offered against him. It should lie on the Inspector to prove that children in respect of whom the parent was summoned were of an age which rendered them liable to be sent to school.

Amendment proposed, in page 8, line 37, to leave out from the word "certificate," to the words "if a child," in line 41.—(Mr. J. G. Talbot.)

MR. REED believed that his right hon. Friend the Vice President of the Council had introduced that provision on the strong report of the School Board of London, with a view to meet the difficulty which they had experienced in proving the age of a child. If the child were at any employment, a strong temptation was afforded to the father not to allow the age of the child to appear, and he thought that, therefore, was a most reasonable provision.

MR. VERNON HARCOURT supported the Motion, on the ground that the sub-section introduced a new rule at variance with all the ordinary rules for the administration of justice. The argument of the hon. Member for Hackney (Mr. Reed) amounted to this—that because it was difficult to prove a man guilty they ought to assume his guilt. Such a proposition was subversive of the first principle of their law. An Act to that effect would have had a considerable effect in shortening a certain criminal case now in course of trial.

MR. W. E. FORSTER said, they should not forget the interests of the child in considering the interests of the parent. The principle of the clause had been already adopted in the Vaccination and Factory Acts.

MR. W. M. TORRENS was heartily sorry and ashamed to hear that the London School Board had been the authors of this provision. Could anything be more absurd or unjust than an enactment which threw the onus of proving the educational efficiency of a particular school upon the scared and ignorant parent, who was had up for not sending his child to the new Board school? He cordially supported the Amendment.

MR. MUNDELLA regarded the provision in the Bill as being a beneficial one in the interests of the children.

MR. WATKIN WILLIAMS denied that the clause embodied any new principle.

Question put, "That the words proposed to be left out stand part of the Bill."

The House divided:—Ayes 113; Noes 60: Majority 53.

Bill to be read the third time To-morrow, at Two of the clock.

RATING LIABILITY (IRELAND) BILL.

(The Marquess of Hartington, Mr. Secretary Bruce.)

[BILL 246.] SECOND READING.

Order for Second Reading read.

THE MARQUESS OF HARTINGTON, in moving the second reading of this Bill, explained that it abolished the exemption of Government property from rating, and also included in the valuation lists hereditaments which had heretofore been excluded.

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That the Bill be now read a second time."—(The Marquess of Hartington.)

MR. PIM moved that the Bill be read a second time that day three months. He complained that among other defects the Bill contained no provision for the equitable valuation of the revenues of the harbour authorities of Ireland, and he therefore considered himself justified in moving its rejection.

Amendment proposed, to leave out the word "now," and at the end of the Question to add the words "upon this day three months."—(Mr. Pim.)

Question proposed, "That the word 'now' stand part of the Question."

MR. VANCE, in opposing the Bill, said, it was a most imperfect measure, and entirely a step in the wrong direction.

SIR DOMINIC CORRIGAN supported the Bill, contending that in principle it was a step in the right direction, but would admit it might be amended in Committee.

THE MARQUESS OF HARTINGTON hoped the opposition to the second reading would be withdrawn. He would remind the hon. Member for Dublin (Mr.

Pim) that his objection might be dealt with in Committee.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Main Question put, and agreed to.

Bill read a second time, and committed for To-morrow.

LAW AGENTS (SCOTLAND) BILL.
LORDS' AMENDMENTS. CONSIDERATION.

Lords' Amendments considered.

On Amendment made by the Lords, that Writers to the Signet should hereafter be enrolled as law agents.

MR. GRIEVE moved that the House disagree with the Amendment, as it was entirely at variance with the principle of the Bill.

MR. LEITH, on behalf of the Society of Advocates of Aberdeen, disapproved of the Amendment which the Lords had introduced.

THE LORD ADVOCATE said, the object was very fully discussed when before the House of Commons on a previous occasion, and he was entirely against the Amendment which had been introduced by the Lords.

Motion agreed to.

Lords' Amendment disagreed to.

Lords' Amendment, that members of the Society of Solicitors should be enrolled as law agents disagreed to.

On the Motion of the Lord ADVOCATE Lords' Amendment to insert "incorporated" in lieu of "unincorporated," in line 12, page 7, agreed to.

Committee appointed, "to draw up Reasons to be assigned to The Lords for disagreeing to certain of the Amendments made by The Lords to the Law Agents (Scotland) Bill:"—The LORD ADVOCATE, MR. CHILDERS, MR. ADAM, MR. GRIEVE, MR. LEITH, and MR. CRAUFURD:—To withdraw immediately; Three to be the quorum.

APPROPRIATION OF SEATS (CASHEL AND SLIGO).—LEAVE.

Motion made, and Question proposed,

"That leave be given to bring in a Bill for the appropriation to the towns of Kingstown and Queenstown of the seats vacated by the disfranchisement of the boroughs of Cashel and Sligo."—(Mr. Butt.)

MR. J. LOWTHER said, he should feel it his duty to oppose the introduction of the Bill.

MR. VANCE observed that he should likewise have to oppose the Motion, if it were persevered in by the hon. and learned Member.

The Marquess of Hartington

THE MARQUESS OF HARTINGTON assured the hon. and learned Member for Limerick that the matter would receive the attention of the Government, who might possibly find themselves in a position to introduce a Bill on the subject next Session. He put it to the hon. and learned Member, therefore, whether it was worth his while to persevere with the Motion at that late period of the Session.

Motion, by leave, withdrawn.

EXPIRING LAWS CONTINUANCE BILL.

On Motion of Mr. BAXTER, Bill to continue various Expiring Laws, ordered to be brought in by Mr. BAXTER and Mr. WILLIAM HENRY GLADSTONE.

Bill presented, and read the first time. [Bill 261.]

House adjourned at a quarter before Three o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS,

Friday, 25th July, 1873.

MINUTES.]—PUBLIC BILLS.—First Reading—Penalties (Ireland)* (242); Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment, &c. * (243). Second Reading—Public Records (Ireland) Act (1867) Amendment (209); Rating (Liability and Value) (231), negative; Extradition Act (1870) Amendment* (235).

Committee—Revising Barristers (218-244); Turnpike Acts Continuance, &c. * (223-245).

Report—Militia (Service, &c.) * (237).

Third Reading—Medical Act Amendment (University of London)* (214); Exchequer Bonds (£1,600,000)* (222); Treasury Chest Fund* (217); Consolidated Fund, &c. (Permanent Charges Redemption)* (198); Military Manoeuvres* (216); Conveyancing (Scotland)* (238); Steam Threshing Machines, now Threshing Machines* (239), and passed.

NAVY—PEBBLE POWDER—THE REVIEW AT PORTSMOUTH.

QUESTION.

LORD VIVIAN, after again narrating the accident that had occurred to the yacht, on the occasion of the late Naval Review at Spithead, said, that there must have been some mismanagement or the accident would not have happened, and asked, Whether the Admiralty were aware of the effects of pebble powder used without shot, prior to its use at the late Naval Review; whether there was not an ample supply of the small-grained powder ready for use; and whether, if so, the Admiralty still considered that all those in authority were blameless for the accident which was unfortunately occasioned by the use of the pebble powder?

THE EARL OF CAMPERDOWN, in reply to the noble Lord's Question, said, he had to repeat what he stated on the former occasion, that, in the opinion of the Admiralty, no blame attached to the officers or any person on board the gunboat. If the noble Lord were still not satisfied, he would give him the reasons for that opinion. On the morning of the Naval Inspection an official notice to this effect appeared in The Times, and other newspapers, and was put up at Portsmouth—

"It is particularly requested that all yachts and steamers visiting Spithead on the 23rd inst. will refrain from passing between the lines of the iron-clad fleet during the inspection by His Majesty the Shah of Persia; and it is also requested that all vessels will refrain from closing round Her Majesty's yacht and other vessels in attendance. Yachts and other vessels should occupy positions north of the gunboat line, and south of the southern line next the Isle of Wight."

If those instructions had been obeyed, his noble Friend would not have been under the necessity of putting the Questions which he had just asked. There were two persons, and two only, in the gunboat, who might have been responsible. The one was the warrant officer, or gunner, and the other the captain of the gun, by the firing of which the accident was caused. The former, in obedience to orders, was astern, watching the gunboat astern of his. He was in that position for the purpose of taking the time—six seconds—which was to elapse between the firing of each boat. The funnel and funnel-casing were between him and the yacht; consequently he could not see her. She was not seen by the gun's captain in consequence of the high rifle proof shielding around all the forward part of the boat except where the gun protruded. The captain, when he received the order to fire, carried out that order because he saw nothing in front of the gun; but he had not fired the previous round because he saw there was something in the way. This tended to show that the firing was by no means careless. It had been stated that those on board the yacht received a signal from the gunboat that the latter was not about to fire. Two men in the gunboat signalled to the yacht when she was about 50 yards off. They did so by holding up their hands—which they meant to be taken as a signal that the yacht was to keep out of the way. A gentleman on board held up his hands and the two men understood this to be an intimation that the signal given from the gunboat would be attended to. They saw no more. The engineer did see the yacht when she was only about 15 yards from the mouth of the gun; but at this time there was not time to warn her away. The gun was not fired point blank, but at some elevation. He once more expressed his regret for the accident; but a local inquiry had been instituted by the officer who, on the day of the Inspection, had command of the gunboats generally, and, with all the facts before them, the Admiralty could not allow that the officers on board the gunboat were in any way answerable for the accident. In reply to the first inquiry of his noble Friend, he had to say that, of course, the Admiralty were aware of the effects of pebble powder prior to its use on the occasion of the inspection at Spithead. In answer to his second Question, he had to say that there was an ample supply of small-grained powder in the dockyard; but it was not customary to use those large 18 and 25-ton guns for firing blank charges, and no cartridges suitable for them and filled with small-grained powder were ready on board. As to the result, it did not much matter whether pebble powder or small-grained was used, because the yacht was in such close proximity to the gun that she must have been badly scorched whatever the powder used. In reply to the third Question, the Admiralty did still consider that all those in authority were blameless in respect of the accident.

ARMY — THE SHELL "BOXER SHRAPNELL."

ADDRESS FOR CORRESPONDENCE.

THE EARL OF LONGFORD, in moving an Address for Correspondence relating to the invention of the "Boxer Shrapnell" Shell, said: My Lords, I have to ask your Lordships' attention for a short time to a case in which I think that a public Department has scarcely done justice to a gentleman who deserves better treatment at their hands. The Mr. Hope who is named in my Notice, served with distinction in the Army in the Crimea, and obtained a Victoria Cross for valour in the field. At the end of the war he left the Army, and adopted the profession of a civil engineer. His name is well known in connection with works for drainage of towns and for scientific agriculture. Although not an Artillery officer, he had opportunities of which he took advantage, of studying artillery practically, and he noticed specially, defects in the spherical shells then in use in the artillery, uncertainty of flight, and generally, uncertainty in their destructive effect. On his return to England he designed a shell of a different form and construction, in which he hoped to remedy the acknowledged defects of the service shell. He took his pattern to the Artillery authorities of the day, but the time was not opportune, it was unsuitable to the gun of the period, &c., and his invention was coldly received; but he was so satisfied of its merit, and that it would be called for some day, that he deposited his pattern and drawings at the Royal Arsenal at Woolwich, in charge of Colonel Boxer, who was then, and for several years afterwards, attached to the laboratory there. Mr. Hope paid little attention to the subject for some time, being engaged otherwise; but in 1869 he noticed reports of most favourable results from a new shell in some artillery experiments at Dartmoor. He made inquiries, and found that this was substantially his own shell, which without any notice to him had been patented in 1864, by Colonel Boxer with some modification, and had been adopted into the service with the War Office name of "Boxer Shrapnell." Mr. Hope found his own pattern still at Woolwich, and satisfied himself that the two inventions were in all material points identical. Mr. Hope then put himself into communication with the War Office, writing in the plainest terms his claim to the invention, stating that he had himself given the model to Colonel Boxer at the former time named. The result was the correspondence which is the subject of my Motion. It will be unnecessary, and perhaps irregular, for me to take your Lordships through it. The substance is, that Mr. Hope claims that the name and credit, and if there is anything more than credit attaching to the new shell, it is rightfully his. His claim is supported by the legal and scientific opinions of Mr. Grove, now Mr. Justice Grove; Mr. Aston, Mr.

H. Lloyd, Q.C., Mr. Young (Lord Advocate)—gentlemen experienced in cases connected with inventions and patents, who respectively give their opinions that the invention is substantially his; and that if he had taken out a patent originally, Colonel Boxer's patent could not have stood at all. I am quite aware that Colonel Boxer has rendered valuable assistance to the War Office in the scientific development and in the manufacture of war material, and that without entirely neglecting his own interests, he has been an efficient public servant. But that is no reason why he should adopt his friend's shell without acknowledgment; and it is no reason why the War Office should hesitate to make full inquiry into such a claim as Mr. Hope has brought forward. This Correspondence with the War Office lasted about two years. Mr. Hope has never been informed, as far as I can learn, that the War Office is satisfied that he has no claim; in fact, he has had no definite answer at all, except that Mr. Cardwell declined to continue the correspondence. At first there seemed to be a disposition to examine the merits; but Mr. Cardwell subsequently adopted the view that it was a dispute between Mr. Hope and Colonel Boxer, which ought to be settled by a civil action, in which he would take no part; but Mr. Hope having no patent had no claim against anyone for an infringement, and not being commercially interested in the manufacture of shells, he had no claim against anyone for damages, so he was in difficulty about his civil action. Moreover, the War Office, professing to be impartial, had taken a very strong part on one side, by retaining the name of "Boxer Shrapnell" to the invention in dispute; and it is quite as necessary for the credit of the War Department as for the interest of the other parties concerned, that the whole transaction should be known, and that a dispute which involves a grave charge against an officer of the Department should be settled. Mr. Hope has expressed his perfect readiness that his claim should be submitted to the judgment of Sir William Eyre, or of the President of the Royal Society, or of any impartial arbitrator of high standing, and I submit to your Lordships that such would be the best way of disposing of this claim; but the case is one of considerable importance, and could only be decided by a really responsible arbitra-

The Earl of Longford

tor. I am aware, from a short official experience, of the intricacy of claims to inventions, and of the difficulties that surround such questions. Sometimes a worthless invention is pressed, on speculation; sometimes a really valuable invention fails in some detail; and when that is supplied as an invention upon an invention, cross and confused claims arise. But I submit that this case separates itself from such uncertain claims; it is brought forward by a gentleman whose position is known; it is not worthless, for its value has been proved by its adoption into the service; it is not too intricate to be settled by some such reference as Mr. Hope is willing to submit to; and it would be right for the War Office to adopt this course. My Motion in form is an Address for Copies of Correspondence; but I should be glad to hear that the noble Marquess (the Marquess of Lansdowne), in consenting to produce whatever Papers can be properly produced, will be able to say that the matter will be placed in the hands of a competent arbitrator for disposal. The noble Earl concluded by moving that an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty for—

Copies of Correspondence in 1870-71 between the authorities at the War Office and Mr. W. Hope, V.C., late of the 7th Royal Fusiliers, relative to the shell adopted into the service, and officially known as the "Boxer Shrapnell," which Mr. Hope claims to be his invention, and substantially identical with a shell deposited by himself in charge of the late Superintendent of the Royal Laboratory, Woolwich Arsenal, in December 1856:

Also for, Copies of any Correspondence between the authorities at the War Office and Major-General Boxer, or the Judge Advocate-General, or other Law Officer of the Crown, upon the above subject.—(The Earl of Longford.)

LORD NAPIER AND ETTRICK bore testimony to the services of Mr. Hope, who had received the thanks of the War Department. He was one of those to whom Mr. Hope had shown his invention, and he entertained no doubt that the "Boxer Shrapnell" was substantially the same. Mr. Hope's invention had been adopted by many foreign States, who looked upon it as one of the most effective instruments of war; and he trusted Mr. Hope would receive recognition in his own country.

THE MARQUESS OF LANSDOWNE said, the War Office had no objection to the production of such Papers as the Department had in its possession. He was not aware of the existence of any letters addressed to the Judge Advocate General or other Law Officers of the Crown on the subject. He thought their Lordships would agree with him that until the Papers were on the Table of the House he should refrain from entering into this very intricate matter.

Then, the latter part of the Motion being withdrawn,

Address agreed to.

THE IRISH MILITIA—QUESTION.

LORD DUNSANY asked, Whether it is true that two non-commissioned officers of the South Cork Militia had been brought before a court-martial for imputed complicity with a traitorous association in Ireland in an attempt to steal the arms of the regiment for the use of such traitorous association; whether Her Majesty's Government have adopted means other than the reports of commanding officers, to ascertain how far a spirit of disloyalty as evinced by such acts may extend through the same or other regiments of militia; and whether with respect to military offenders sentenced for breaches of military allegiance Her Majesty's Ministers are prepared to leave them to military law, or to consider that the fact of complicity with a treasonable conspiracy gives a political character to such offences entitling the culprit to lenient treatment as "political prisoners?"

THE MARQUESS OF LANSDOWNE, in reply to the first Question of the noble Lord, said, it was quite true that two non-commissioned officers of the South Cork Militia had been tried and convicted for complicity in a robbery of arms, and being convicted, had been sentenced to the maximum period of imprisonment with a full proportion of solitary confinement. He thought the noble Lord would have done well had he abstained from placing on the Paper his second Question, requesting to know what special means had been adopted to ascertain how far a spirit of disloyalty, as was evinced by acts of arms stealing, extended itself through Irish Militia regiments. If special means were adopted by Government for the repression of crime, he thought it not at all for the public interest that those means should be described in a debate in Parliament.

LORD DUNSANY said, the noble Marquess had no right to put such an interpretation on his Question. He had not in any portion of his Question asked that what special means were had recourse to should be disclosed. All he had asked was whether other than the Reports of commanding officers were relied upon to ascertain how far such disloyalty as he had drawn attention to prevailed in either the South Cork or any other Irish Militia regiment?

THE MARQUESS OF LANSDOWNE said, that the Question seemed to him capable of the inference which he had drawn from it, and he left it to others to determine whether that inference was not correct. With reference to the third Question—namely, whether the authorities were prepared to leave military offenders sentenced for breaches of military allegiance to the military law, or to consider that the fact that complicity with a treasonable conspiracy gave a political character to such offences entitling the culprits to lenient treatment as political prisoners—all he could say was that if the noble Lord had paid the same attention to this subject as he usually did to passing events relating to Ireland, he might have noticed that the refusal of the Government to mitigate the punishment which some of the Fenian convicts were now undergoing had been justified on the ground that the offences of which they were convicted were committed while they were serving in the Army.

PUBLIC RECORDS (IRELAND) ACT

AMENDMENT BILL—(No. 209.)

(The Lord O'Hagan.)

SECOND READING.

Order of the Day for the Second Reading read.

LORD O'HAGAN, in moving that the Bill be now read the second time, said, that its object was to provide for the custody and preservation of the records of the Disestablished Church in Ireland. Before the disestablishment—the registries of baptisms, marriages, and burials, and other Church documents were in the care and under the control of the Church officers; but since that time they had been under the care of several persons, and many were kept in unfit and unsafe buildings. The Bill therefore provided that those records should be placed in the custody of the Master of the Rolls in Ireland, and should be removed as soon as practicable to the Irish Record Office. In order to obviate any inconvenience that might arise from this transfer the Bill provided that a certified copy of every record should be sent to the officer who, but for the passing of this Bill would have had the custody of the original; which transcripts would be received in evidence without further proof. He might add that the Church Body had passed a resolution in favour of this disposition of the Church records.

Motion agreed to; Bill read 2<sup>d</sup> accordingly, and committed to a Committee of the Whole House on Monday next.

REVISING BARRISTERS BILL—(No. 218.)

(The Lord Cairns.)

COMMITTEE.

House in Committee (according to Order).

Clauses 1 to 3, inclusive, agreed to.

Clause 4 (Suitable places to be secured for revision courts).

THE MARQUESS OF BATH said, that the clause provided that the clerks of the peace for counties or the town clerks of boroughs should provide a suitable room for the Revising Barrister to hold his courts, and that the expense of such hiring should be reimbursed as part of his expenses in carrying out the Registration Acts. The effect of this would be to throw, directly or indirectly, upon the rates a burden which the 6 & 7 Vict. imposed upon the Treasury. True, the burden would not be a heavy one; but it was the accumulation of these small burdens which had led to the agitation on the subject of local taxation all over the country. He therefore moved the omission of the clause.

Moved, "To leave out Clause 4."—(The Marquess of Bath.)

LORD CAIRNS admitted that a new charge would be imposed by the clause upon the local rates, and that the latitude given to the clerk of the peace might give rise to considerable expenditure in the hire, without sufficient check, of rooms for the purposes of the revision courts. He would therefore consent to omit the clause.

Motion agreed to; clause struck out.

Remaining clauses agreed to, with Amendments.

The Report of the Amendments to be received on Monday next; and Bill to be printed, as amended. (No. 244.)

The Marquess of Lansdowne

RATING (LIABILITY AND VALUE)

BILL—(No. 231.)

(The Earl of Kimberley.)

SECOND READING.

Order of the Day for the Second Reading, read.

THE EARL OF KIMBERLEY, in moving that the Bill be now read the second time, said, its object was to extend the liability to rating for purposes of local taxation to certain kinds of property not hitherto rated. This was the general scope of the Bill. No great question of principle was raised by it; but in order to explain the measure he should be obliged to trouble the House with some details which he feared would be very dry, but which he trusted he should be able to make very brief. The principal classes of property which the Bill proposed to render subject to local rating were—first, metalliferous mines; secondly, woods and plantations; thirdly, rights of sporting, when severed from the occupation of the soil; fourthly, some minor kinds of property used for the purposes of local government, which were not now subject to rates; fifthly, literary and scientific institutions; and, lastly, property belonging to the Government. With regard to mines, he might remind the House that under the present law relating to the subject—namely, 43rd of Elizabeth—only coal mines and quarries were rateable. The expression “coal mine” being used in a clause of that Act, it had been held on the principle expressio unius exclusio est alterius—that metalliferous mines were not included in the clause. The subject had been very often before Parliament, and the Local Assessment Committee, as some of their Lordships might remember, reported in 1860 that it was expedient that all mines should be assessed as coal mines are now assessed. Again, in 1866, a Committee of the House of Commons reported that there was no adequate ground for the distinction in respect of liability to rating between coal mines and quarries and other mines. It had, however, been represented by the owners of tin and copper mines that, owing to the fluctuations connected with the carrying on of those mines, it would be unjust—impracticable, in short—to treat them on the same principle as coal mines. It was, therefore, proposed by the Bill to rate tin and copper mines upon the royalty. That principle had met with the general acquiescence of the owners of tin and copper mines throughout the country. As regarded other mines, which were not coal, or tin, or copper mines, the Bill would place them under the general provisions of the law under which coal mines were rated. It was estimated that at least £500,000 a-year would be made subject to rates by assessing these mines, and relief would thereby be given to the owners of other property throughout the country. He, therefore, hoped that part of the Bill would meet with the general acquiescence of their Lordships. With regard to woods, the Bill proposed to adopt a principle which had long obtained in Scotland, and to rate the land upon which woods and plantations were grown at the same value as the land would be rated if it were in a natural and unimproved state, and let for agricultural and grazing purposes, without any trees growing thereon. Where only saleable underwoods were grown, they were to be rated as if the land were let for that purpose. As to the rights of sporting, where the owner of land reserved to himself the right of sporting, it was reasonable to say that he should contribute whatever might be a just portion in respect of the value he derived from the land. Where the occupier himself had the right of sporting, there was no reason for dissociating the right of sporting from the land. The Bill proposed that in all cases the land should be rated as if the right of sporting was enjoyed by the occupier; but where the occupier did not enjoy that right, he would be entitled to deduct from the rent paid to the owner so much as he (the occupier) had to pay in the shape of rates upon that right. He should, perhaps, next notice that there was an exemption at the present time for literary and scientific institutions, but under certain conditions. Their Lordships were not to suppose that all literary and scientific institutions, without exception, took the benefit of the law as it now stood. As it happened the richest literary and scientific institutions escaped assessment, but those which were poor were rated; and for this reason—that in order to maintain themselves from year to year they were obliged to let some portion of their premises. He submitted, as a general principle that it was not desirable that the exemption of literary and scientific institutions should continue. It amounted to nothing more nor less than this—that the ratepayers in a district where a literary and scientific institution might chance to be established had to contribute towards its maintenance. While fully admitting the usefulness of these institutions, he did not see why the labouring man should be called upon to contribute to their maintenance by paying additional rates. He trusted, therefore, that their Lordships would approve that portion of the Bill. The last and most important part of the measure was that which proposed to bring under assessment all Government property throughout the kingdom. This portion of the subject had been under the consideration of Parliament for a very long time. In 1858 a Select Committee of the House of Commons, of which Sir George Cornwall Lewis was Chairman, made an exhaustive inquiry into the whole system of local taxation, and their Report was to the effect that all property with the exception of that in the personal occupation of the Sovereign, religious buildings, and a few other minor exceptions, should be subject to assessment for the local rates and rates paid upon it accordingly. From that period the subject had been constantly discussed in and dealt with by Parliament. In 1859, under a Conservative Government, a Bill was brought in by Mr. Sotheron Estcourt for abolishing all exemptions whatever; but that measure was not proceeded with. In the following year—there having been a change of Government—it was thought expedient to proceed by way of Vote of the House of Commons in respect of the payment of rates for certain Government buildings, and the sum annually voted for that purpose, which was then £35,000, was now £63,000. In 1863, the Treasury announced that, in all future cases, the Government would be willing to pay rates for fresh property acquired by them on the assessment of the land before it came into the occupation of the Government. This Bill proposed to bring all Government property under the general assessment; and, in framing the Bill, the Government had been influenced by the decision in the Mersey Docks case, which took away the exemption from assessment which had previously attached to land used for docks and other works of a public nature. Then arose the question in what manner this large amount of property was to be assessed. If this vast amount of property were to be thrown down before the local assessment committees to rate as they might think fit, the greatest confusion might arise, and it would be impossible to say what liability the Government would be making themselves responsible for. The Bill therefore provided that the Treasury, in connection with the local assessment committee, should draw up a scheme for the rating of all Government property, situate within their Union or parish, and that in case of it being found impossible to come to any arrangement on the subject the matter was to be referred to arbitration, as provided in the Land Clauses Consolidation Acts. The results of these arrangements were to be submitted to Parliament, and the schemes were only to have effect when confirmed by Parliament. The proposition was the result of considerable labour and consideration, and he saw no reason why, if carried into effect, it should not work fairly. He thought, on the whole, that their Lordships would see no reason for refusing to accept this part of the Bill. There was a clause in the Bill which proposed to make perpetual an exemption in favour of stock-in-trade, which had existed for 33 years, Parliament passing an annual measure to continue it. Theoretically, no doubt, no reason existed for exempting this class of property from rating; but experience had conclusively shown that an attempt to rate stock-in-trade was almost certain to meet with failure. The time had now arrived when Parliament should definitely make up its mind on this subject, and should sweep away this anomalous annual Act from the statute book by rendering the exemption of stock-in-trade perpetual.

He now came to inquire what possible objection there could be to this measure. He was aware that a noble Lord opposite (Lord Henniker) had given Notice of his intention to move that the Bill should be read a second time that day three months, and therefore he had carefully considered the nature of the objections that might be raised to the measure. The question of local taxation having excited considerable interest throughout the country, and the Government having announced that they would deal with the whole question, it was not impossible that it might be urged against the Bill that, in dealing with the question of local rating alone, Her Majesty's Government had merely touched a small part of a great subject, and that it was better, therefore, to delay passing a measure of this kind until the subject of local taxation could be dealt with as a whole. It must be remembered, however, that the question of local taxation was a most complicated and difficult one. Attempts had been made more than once to deal with the subject as a whole;—his right hon. Friend the First Lord of the Admiralty had made such an attempt, but the experience obtained on that occasion was likely to make everyone chary of attempting so large a subject all at once. So many interests would be touched by any scheme, and so many questions raised, that it was scarcely to be hoped that any scheme on the whole subject, however well framed, would meet with the assent of Parliament. The subject of local taxation had many branches. In the first place, there was a strong desire on the part of those who owned property now subject to assessment that a large amount of wealth which existed in this country which was not derived from real property, and which was not now subject to be rated, should be made liable to assessment, and should so be made to contribute, in some degree, to local taxation. Unsuccessful schemes to effect this object had been repeatedly brought forward, and a former Lord Privy Seal had proposed that this should be effected by means of an income tax;—and there had been many other suggestions. He admitted the necessity of dealing with this branch of the subject; but when they attempted to deal with it, they could not confine themselves to the question of local taxation only—they must deal with it in connection with the whole taxation of the country. But he thought that this measure, however small a part of so large a subject, might be conveniently passed in the meantime. Another important branch of the subject was the improvement of our local government. He earnestly desired to see our local government so strengthened, and its powers enlarged, as to enable it to relieve the general government and Parliament from a large portion of the intolerable burden of business now cast upon them; but, at the same time, he did not think that the passing of this Bill would in any way prejudice that question. They would find that they could not deal with local taxation without dealing with the question of local government; because the question of local taxation involved the questions of the boundaries of counties—boundaries of various kinds which governed the local taxation. But in order to deal with that question it was necessary to have an inquiry with respect to it. A Committee had accordingly been appointed to investigate that branch of the subject by the other House, and he hoped their labours would result in Parliament being in a position to consider the whole matter next Session.

He had now referred to three important branches of the subject. It seemed to him a natural preliminary to any dealing our system of local taxation that we should perfect the system which we already possessed, extending it where it required to be extended, and making it consistent in itself. That was what it was proposed by the Bill to do; and it was not inconsistent with, but was a necessary preliminary to, a larger scheme of local taxation.

An objection raised against the measure was, he believed, that it was not accompanied by an Assessment Bill. An Assessment Bill had, however, been introduced by the President of the Local Government Board into the other House, although it had not been proceeded with; and he saw no reason why, because the present system of assessment was not made perfect, the House should decide that it should not proceed in the direction proposed by the Bill. He would, moreover, beg to remind their Lordships that there had been very great improvements made of late years in assessment. He himself had had the charge of a Bill on the subject, and he recollects well that the whole question was in a state of the greatest confusion, and that assessments were made in different parishes without any arrangement among themselves. But since the establishment of assessment committees, although they might have turned out not to be on all points satisfactory, very considerable improvement in the system of assessment had, he was sure their Lordships would admit, been made throughout the country. He, at the same time, admitted that further improvements were necessary, but they involved chiefly matters of detail. The present system of deductions was, no doubt, by no means satisfactory. Different committees established different scales of deductions, and it would probably be better to have some fixed scale, such as already existed under the Valuation (Metropolis) Act. He could, however, see in the existing state of things nothing which would render it undesirable that the House should proceed in the direction now proposed by the Government. In two most important cases—that of mines and Government property—the mode of assessment was distinctly laid down; and although it might be contended that in the cases of woods and sporting there might be difficulties in the way of the working of the measure, he must say that so far as woods were concerned, he saw no reason why a satisfactory conclusion as to the value of lands covered with woods should not be arrived at. As to sporting there might be complications with which the assessment committees might not find it easy to grapple, and there might possibly be conflicting opinions on the subject; but he could not help thinking that they would yield to experience in the working of the law. He had only to add that he was lost in astonishment at finding that a Notice for the rejection of the Bill should have proceeded from the other side of the House. It had been a matter of complaint year after year that the agricultural ratepayer did not obtain that relief which would be the result of bringing other kinds of property under assessment. Chambers of Agriculture throughout the country had urged the propriety of assessing woods and the right of sporting, while from the West of England a cry had been raised for the assessment of mines. Yet now it was to be contended that that outcry on the part of the ratepayers was to meet with no attention, and that the Bill ought to be thrown out, because they were not to obtain that further relief which they might expect to get hereafter. He should have thought that the Bill would be welcomed as clearing the way towards those other measures, and if it were rejected the effect would be that it would be supposed in many parts of the country that their Lordships were not really anxious to relieve the agricultural districts of the burdens of which they complained.

Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2."
—(The Earl of Kimberley.)

LORD HENNIKER said, he would have been extremely unwilling, as so poor an exponent of the view taken of this Bill by many besides himself outside as well as inside their Lordships' House, to raise any opposition to it, did he not believe that a plain, a short, and a simple statement would induce their Lordships to accede to the Motion with which he would conclude. He would be the last person to say the Bill did not contain many good and excellent provisions; it was not so much the provisions of the Bill to which he took particular exception as to the mode in which they were proposed to be carried out. The plan for rating woods and so on was by no means in itself unfair, but it was incomplete. The person who hired a wood simply for the sake of the underwood was liable to be rated for the timber, although underwood growing with timber was far less valuable than where there were few, if any, trees. It was open to the assessment committees to rate the occupier in a case of this sort, either for saleable underwood or for the wood as a plantation, and it was in practice, out of the question to suppose the assessment committee would take the lowest valuation. This would not be at all fair, for the lessee could not possibly have any interest in the timber, and might be rated for it without any claim upon the landlord for assistance. Then, in Kent and elsewhere, the Ecclesiastical Commissioners and other bodies let their estates, including woodlands, for leases on lives or a term of years, reserving the timber; in this case the lessee would pay the increased rates, and would have no power to claim assistance in paying them. Take also the case of copyhold lands; the owner, in many instances, could not cut trees without the permission of the lord of the manor, and, when sold, a third of the value belonged to him. This could easily have been provided for by a deduction of fine or quit rent. In rating game this injustice was fairly met. Then as to the rating of game—he did not object to the rules laid down, if game was to be rated; but the attempt to lay down rules for the guidance of the as-essment committees, rather than lay down a broad rule upon which they could act in their own way as the cases came before them, would probably end in litigation and misunderstanding. It was not always a question as to any real difficulty in dealing with a subject of this sort; it was a great thing to avoid any imaginary difficulty. Nothing was more likely to lead to an imaginary difficulty than the rating of game. The rules in the Bill might appear plausible enough; but it was no easy matter to rate so moveable and varying an article fairly, and he thought it would have been far better to have trusted the local authority entirely, for they must be the best judges of each case as it came before them. Then, with respect to the rating of Government property, that was, no doubt, a popular policy; but what did the clauses dealing with the subject do? They made the property liable to rating on principle, but they by no means enacted that it should be so. It was necessary to bring in a Bill for every scheme agreed upon. Was it really necessary to bring in one Bill to enable the Government to bring in another? He thought not; but that was all that was done by the Bill. Surely, it would have been easier to have ascertained on what grounds an agreement could be made in one or two cases, and to have brought in a Bill or Bills, as necessity demanded, to really enact what was now only recited as a principle to be hereafter carried out. In this respect the Bill, in fact, did nothing practically. The system of arbitration appeared fair enough, but it was, to say the least of it, very extraordinary, for the umpire in certain cases was to be appointed by the Lord Chancellor, or any other noble and learned Lord who might fill that position! What did this amount to? The noble and learned Lord upon the Woolsack, with all his varied duties, so important to the country, could not be expected to choose the umpire himself in every dispute over the rating of Government property, and the result would be that some one would be recommended to him. Either party to the suit could ask for the appointment, but one party would have it entirely in their own hands to appoint whom they pleased. He was far from saying this would not be fairly carried out, but the proposed provision was unique in this respect. Then, as to the rating of stock-in-trade. This was a Bill for the abolition of all exemptions, and here they had the perpetual exemption of stock-in-trade, refused by their Lordships' House on a former occasion. It was true it was necessary to bring in a Bill every year to exempt stock-in-trade; but of all places to choose to insert a clause of that kind that was the most extraordinary. It was done, too, in a roundabout manner; a few words would have embodied the enacting part of the measure and so made the Bill complete. The Bill said that no one should be rated in respect of his ability derived from his stock-in-trade. Upon this arose the question of what was stock-in-trade? Take machinery. It had been laid down by the Courts of Law that machinery bolted down to the ground was rateable. There would, perhaps, be a far larger and more valuable machine alongside of a smaller and less valuable one which required to be fixed in that way, while the larger one kept its place without anything of the kind. It was true it was impossible to rate stock-in-trade; but there would be no difficulty as to profitable machinery, and surely an Act of that kind ought to have been complete in that respect, for this was a Bill to do away with all exemptions, and the present state of the law was very unfair; yet the Bill left the matter just where it was before. Then why were Sunday and ragged schools exempted, and elementary and other schools to be rated? The only reason given was that the one class of schools had been exempted from rating before. There could be no sound argument in favour of that plan of proceeding. Sunday and ragged schools were only a certain proportion of the number of schools now existing in the country. Elementary schools were now one of the best institutions in the country, and either one thing or the other ought to have been done—they should either exempt all schools or rate them all. There was no profit attached to a school, as he knew full well, and it appeared to him they ought all to be exempted. However, he would not trouble their Lordships any further, for he thought he had proved the Bill required amendment. He would only call their attention to a dangerous precedent laid down in Clause 18, where the usual agreement was over-ridden, and the power of free contract interfered with. It was usual for the lessee of a mine to contract in all cases to pay all rates and taxes which might be imposed by Parliament, except property tax, during the term of his lease; but here he was allowed to deduct one-half the amount he would have to pay under the Bill. That clause would, therefore, relieve the lessee at the expense of the lessor from charges which he had deliberately taken upon himself—except, of course, as far as coal mines were concerned. That was a most objectionable principle, and ought not to be adopted without consideration, at all events. The Bill was hardly to be recognized now when compared with its original shape. No doubt, many Bills had been brought into the House of Commons almost as a blank sheet, and had come out of it very useful Acts of Parliament; but if a Bill was passed in that way, sufficient time must be given for its full consideration and for every necessary Amendment. How much time, however, was given to their Lordships? They were told on good authority that next Wednesday was to be the very last Wednesday of the Session. But was that Bill one of the kind which he had described? It was brought in with all the ceremony of a Government measure, and he had the authority of the noble Lord the Chief Secretary for Ireland, who at the now well-known Nottingham Dinner spoke with pride of that measure as one of those which would make that Session compare by no means unfavourably, as far as important Government measures went, with former Sessions. But this measure was more important still, for it was brought in to redeem a pledge, given after a defeat in the House of Commons; and let them look at it for a moment in that aspect. A Motion was carried by Sir Massey Lopes by a majority of 100, which, whatever its wording might have been, was intended to say that local rates were now burdened with charges which ought to be borne by the Imperial Exchequer, and it asked that relief might be given in that respect; although no injustice was complained of where really local burdens were concerned. How had that pledge been redeemed? Three Bills had been brought into the House of Commons; two of them had been withdrawn; and that one, the third, was only printed on May 7, and brought to their Lordships' House on July 22. That Bill was no doubt good in most of its principles, if there had only been a complete plan for dealing with a great question, such as local taxation. The three Bills, they were told, touched only the fringe of the question—in fact, were to pave the way only. Two-thirds of the foundation, however, was gone, and all they had was this Bill—which required amendment—with one of its most important provisions enacting nothing, but merely enabling other Bills to be brought in at some future time to rate Government property. He objected to that piecemeal mode of dealing with a question of that kind—one of no small importance. The necessary measures could have been brought in by degrees, but surely some general and complete plan ought to have been placed before them. Their Lordships were asked at the very last moment of the Session to consider a Bill acknowledged by Her Majesty's Government to be of very great importance, and to redeem a pledge given on more than one occasion. He trusted their Lordships would not consent to read the Bill a second time at a period in the Session when it was quite impossible to put it into a proper shape—such a shape as a foundation for a great measure, at all events, should take before it went out from their Lordships' House. There was a precedent to show that a Bill of this kind was beyond their Lordships' power to amend. In 1840 a Bill for exempting stock-in-trade from rating, to which he had before referred, was brought up from the House of Commons. Objections were taken to it; but it could not be amended. It was withdrawn, and at the last moment of the Session a similar Bill was brought in with its faults corrected, passed through all its stages in one night in the House of Commons, and passed through their Lordships' House without debate. He did not know whether that precedent applied in this case, but if it did it strengthened his argument considerably. They had been told by the noble Earl opposite (the Earl of Kimberley), that night, and they would often, no doubt, be told again, if they did not pass this Bill they would stop all re-adjustment of local taxation; but he would put it to their Lordships whether, after all the discussions there had been on the subject, when the principle was as good as accepted, the Government could not easily, during the Recess, remodel the Bill, so that it might pass in a proper shape early in the next Session, and allow them to bring forward any other measures which might be necessary? However, he trusted their Lordships would reject the Bill, because of the lateness of the period of the Session, the impossibility of putting the Bill into a proper shape, and on the ground that the Bill, which professed to deal with a great question, only did what might now be done in a few weeks at the commencement of the next Session. He moved that the Bill be read a second time that day three months.

Lord Henricke

Amendment moved, to leave out ("now") and insert ("this day three months.")—(The Lord Henniker.)

THE EARL OF MORLEY said, he had expected to hear some more conclusive arguments than had just been urged to induce their Lordships to reject that Bill, and certainly, in their absence, there was ample reason why their Lordships should give it a second reading. He would endeavour to answer some of the objections raised by the noble Lord who had moved the Amendment. As to the clause relating to woods, the noble Lord had brought forward certain objections which he confessed seemed to have some force; but he might observe that when Parliament was imposing taxation on other occasions—he might instance the Union Chargeability Act and the school rate—it was not so careful of the interests of the occupier as to enable him to deduct from the owner of the property. Then, with regard to copyholders, he was informed that the copyholder could refuse to let the lord come upon the land to cut timber unless he paid some portion of the rate. The noble Lord (Lord Henniker) had urged that there would be extreme difficulty in working the provisions referring to the rateability of woods; but he would ask those of their Lordships who lived in Scotland or in Ireland whether that difficulty existed there? Further, in many parts of England woods were rated to the poor by local Acts. The present Bill followed almost the identical method employed in dealing with woods and plantations in Scotland—namely, assessing the ground in its natural and unimproved state; those words making it clear that no capital was to be expended on the land, but that it was to be precisely in the position in which it would be if the trees were removed. In many cases the woods would be on land which was not of the best quality—for instance, on hill-sides. The exemption of woods was unfair in principle and unjust to the ratepayers not possessing woods. As to game, the noble Lord had argued as if the Bill proposed to rate the game itself, which was not the case; what was to be rated was simply the right of sporting, which was a very different matter. This was already the case when it was not severed from the occupation; and it was unfair to exempt it when severed from it, for the preservation of game diminished the rent of the farm, so that the district was mulcted of a portion of the rent on which the farmer would be rated. He apprehended no difficulty in assessing the right of sporting when reserved by the landlord, or when let to a person other than the tenant. With regard to Government property, the noble Lord was mistaken as to the manner in which the umpire was to be appointed—he stated that the umpire who was to decide in the case of a dispute between the Treasury and the assessment committee was to be appointed by the Lord Chancellor. [Lord HENNIKER: In certain cases.] He (the Earl of Morley) did not hear that limitation. The umpire was to be appointed by the Lord Chancellor on the application of one of the parties to the arbitration. It was out of the question to leave the assessment entirely to the assessment committee, owing to the variety of purposes to which such property was devoted. The full rating value obviously could not be placed on the Royal Parks. No fairer plan could have been devised of settling the relative claims of the localities and the Government. He agreed with the noble Lord in regretting the exemption of ragged schools; that was not so in the Bill as originally brought before the House of Commons, and he agreed with the noble Lord in regretting that the exemption should have been inserted; but the feeling of the House of Commons was so strong upon the subject that it was impossible to avoid yielding to it. The fault, therefore, did not rest with the Government, who had been obliged to abandon their original proposal. The exemption, moreover, was not to be absolute, but permissive—it was left to the discretion of the assessment committees to exempt them or not, so that it was not so important a matter as the noble Lord seemed to suppose. With regard to the rating of mines, there could be no doubt that Clause 18 did to a certain extent override existing contracts. But every mine-owner and occupier had agreed to it—not a single person had petitioned or remonstrated against it. Hitherto metalliferous mines had been excluded from rating; but as their value had been estimated at £11,000,000, it would be admitted that the question whether they should continue to be exempted from rating was a very important one. It had been decided to rate them. But tin and copper mines would be rated on a different principle from mines of coal and iron. There were characteristic differences—tin and copper running in lodes of various degrees of productiveness, and the mining being so speculative that one year there might be a rich mass of ore and another year nothing worth washing, the Bill proposed to rate metalliferous mines on the royalty, representing a percentage of the produce; all other mines would continue to be rated on the rental. The Bill did not deal with machinery not affixed to the freehold, that not being germane to it; besides which it would be difficult to exclude furniture if machinery were rated. The exemption of stock-in-trade would be rendered permanent, and rules were laid down for the assessment of corporeal hereditaments. The measure did not pretend to be one of great dimensions, but it was one of practical utility, rendering justice to the classes of property now rated, while it was an indispensable preliminary to the great scheme as to local taxation to which the Government were pledged. It was most inconsistent for the Opposition, who had loudly complained that the present taxpayers were overburdened, to obstruct a Bill which would materially alleviate the burden. Not only did it extend the area of taxation, but by the admission of Government property it assisted local taxation out of Imperial funds, though not as largely as the noble Lord desired. All classes in Cornwall—agriculturists, miners, and assessment committees—were favourable to the scheme, and failing more weighty arguments than those of the noble Lord, it ought not to be rejected.

THE EARL OF SELKIRK opposed the Bill on the ground that the principle of rating on which it was based weighed unequally on different kinds of property and most unfairly on the land. The assessing of underwoods was a great grievance, and would operate very unjustly. He thought it unjust to assess unproductive land, while machinery was unassessed. There was no difficulty in ascertaining the value of the latter, which was perpetually returning its cost.

THE MARQUESS OF SALISBURY said, the noble Earl who represented the Home Department in their Lordships' House (the Earl of Morley), had informed them with great emphasis that the provision in the Bill with respect to the rating of mines had been consented to by every mine-owner in the country; but the fact seemed to be that the mine-owners had simply refrained from petitioning Parliament against the proposal. He anticipated that the same remark applied to the support which was said to have been extended to the Bill by the Chambers of Agriculture. And he was not surprised at the fact in either case, because the measure had been so altered, clipped, and transmogrified in its progress through the House of Commons that it was next to impossible for any one not actually present at, and listening carefully to, the discussions, to know what had been done, until after the measure had passed through the House. [The Earl of KEMERLEY said, the main provisions of the Bill had not been altered.] He could not rely upon the general consent which was alleged to have been accorded to the Bill, and the speeches delivered that evening had rendered him yet more apprehensive than he was before with regard to the measures, and more desirous that it should not pass into law. One of the main reasons which had been urged in support of the Bill was that it would place a large discretionary power in the hands of the assessment committees; but this he regarded as a strong reason against the Bill, inasmuch as to throw down an ill-considered and ill-understood law for their administration, would have the effect of fomenting litigation among a class with a strong natural tendency in that direction. Another great argument in support of the Bill was that it was preliminary to some great scheme of dealing with the question of local taxation which the Government had in contemplation. He, for one, objected strongly to piecemeal legislation on a great question like this, and ventured to urge that before they consented to clear the way for the Government scheme they ought to see it. He believed it was General Trochu who had always got a plan, but nobody ever saw it. Again, it was said that the measure would afford relief to the land-owning class, who alleged that from various causes, historical, financial, and otherwise, they had up to now borne burdens which had been unjustly laid upon their shoulders. But it would simply give them relief by shifting the burden from one shoulder to the other, which was practically no relief at all. It was because of the fragmentary nature of the Bill, the late period of the Session at which it was introduced in the House of Commons, and the fact that it was full of conditions and obligations to which they objected, but which, if they attempted to amend them, would land them in the middle of a squabble on the question of Privilege, that he advised their Lordships for the sake of uniformity in their legislation to reject the Bill.

EARL GRANVILLE reminded their Lordships that in a remarkable speech the other day the noble Marquess who had just sat down said, there was a great decrease of the working power and the wish for work in their Lordships' House. But what had happened that evening? The only speeches, with the single exception of that of the noble Marquess, which had been directed against the Bill, had been expressions of opinion as to points of detail which would have been appropriate in Committee, but were out of place on a question of second reading. Even the noble Lord who moved the rejection of the Bill, expressed his approval of its principle, and objected only to the provisions by which it was to be carried out. The noble Marquess, on the other hand, made sweeping objections to the Bill; one of which was that it was introduced very late in the House of Commons. In answer to this he would remind the House that the House of Commons spent at least a dozen sittings in elaborating the Bill, and that hon. Members of that House representing every one of the interests which could be affected by the measure worked most strenuously to bring it into the shape they thought most desirable. And now their Lordships, who were present in sufficient numbers to thoroughly discuss the principles contained in the Bill, proposed, after two or three short speeches, to reject the measure in a manner which, he was perfectly sure, the country at large would most deeply regret.

THE DUKE OF RICHMOND said, he should not have taken part in the discussion but for the manner in which the noble Earl (Earl Granville) had taken their Lordships to task for proposing to reject the Bill before the House. To the statement of the noble Earl that the House of Commons spent many nights in bringing the Bill to its present shape, he only desired to add that great differences of opinion existed with regard to its provisions up to the time at which it left the other House. All he could say was when a Bill came up to their Lordships' House in such a state as this was, and at so late a period of the Session, it was their duty to reject it. He doubted if his noble Friend himself had had sufficient time to study the Bill; and he ventured to doubt whether he would tell their Lordships that they might amend the Bill as they thought fit—for he apprehended that there were a number of clauses which their Lordships could not amend:—and that being so, it would be far better that their Lordships should reject the Bill. His noble Friend (the Earl of Kimberley) remarked at the close of his speech, in anticipating objections, that the Bill formed part of a very large scheme, and was only a fragmentary portion of the scheme. If he wanted a reason for rejecting the Bill it would not be easy to find a more cogent one. His noble Friend also stated that a Committee was sitting on the question of boundaries, though their Report had not yet been laid before the House, and that this very important point must be dealt with in connection with the rating question. Here again was sufficient ground for the rejection of the Bill. But another measure was so mixed up with the question of rating that the Government thought it necessary to deal with it—he meant the As-essment Bill, with which the Government had not proceeded. The absence of such a measure was another powerful reason against sanctioning the Bill now before their Lordships. No doubt some assessment committees did their work well, but there were large numbers of these committees which came to very different conclusions upon the same points. The carrying out of the Bill was put entirely into their hands, and that was a great objection to it. There was also great inconsistency in exempting certain classes of educational institutions and rating others; and though the exemption of ragged schools was not in the Bill as originally introduced, that was not the fault of their Lordships, who must necessarily deal with the measure as it was placed before them. Another clause, Clause 18, relating to mines, was open to great objection. It introduced the thin end of the wedge by overriding contracts; and if sanctioned now by their Lordships the precedent would certainly be quoted against them hereafter. Much had been said of the advantage to the public which would be gained by the assessment for the first time of Government property; but on reading Clause 10 it seemed to him that the question whether Government property was hereafter to be rated or not would be entirely in the hands of the Government themselves. Under the clause the Treasury were to cause to be prepared, and as soon as possible laid before the House of Commons, a scheme or schemes specifying the Government hereditaments in the various parishes "which, in their opinion, ought to be included in the valuation lists for the purposes of this section." So that Government property would only be rated if the Government themselves thought it ought to be rated; and what, then, became of the boon which was supposed to be offered to the ratepayers in this way? Believing that the Bill dealt with the mere fringe of a very large question, that the limited questions which were so dealt with were not treated in a satisfactory manner, and that it was impossible for their Lordships now to deal in detail with certain portions of the measure, he should give his vote against the second reading.

VISCOUNT HALIFAX said, that if the arguments which had been used against the Bill were to prevail, he saw no prospect of dealing with this question at any time. He submitted that the proper method of proceeding was to clear the way for the greater scheme by a measure like the present. It was difficult in any other way for the Government to redeem their pledge to relieve local ratepayers of some portion of the burden which now pressed upon them. The Bill would give a real and substantial relief to the ratepayers of the country. As to Clause 10, relating to the rating of Government property, the noble Duke seemed to think that it rested with the Government itself to say what should be rated and what not. That was entirely a mistake. The clause provided that the rates shall be payable upon the rateable value of all Government property as shall be included in a valuation list for the time being in force, under the Valuation (Metropolis) Act, 1869, and other assessment Acts. It was to be rated like other property. As to the local assessment committees, he had some experience of their working, and believed that there would be no difficulty in carrying out the Bill through them. There was, indeed, no choice in the matter; they must be trusted to a very great extent in carrying out such a measure. As to the 18th clause, it only did that which had been done before in many cases.

THE DUKE OF RUTLAND said, the speeches that had been made on his side of the House were quite sufficient to convince him that he ought to vote in favour of the Amendment of his noble Friend. The Bill proposed to rate the right of shooting. He wanted to know how it was possible to estimate the value of a "right?"

THE EARL OF KIMBERLEY said, he had to apologize for interrupting the observation of the noble Marquess that no alteration had been made in the mining clauses of the Bill. Immediately after that interruption he recollects that the words with reference to tin and copper mines were inserted in the Bill after it was introduced into the other House. With reference to what had been said as to over-riding contracts in connection with the 18th clause, he would make this observation—that virtually a breach of contract between a lessor and lessee was committed when an Act of Parliament threw upon the lessee the whole of a burden which ought to be shared between the lessor and the lessee.

Instead of the 18th clause proposing to authorize breaches of contract, it seemed to him to be an attempt to apportion fairly between two parties—lessor and lessee—a new rate which Parliament thought fit to impose. He contended that their Lordships ought to agree to the second reading, and to go into Committee on this Bill, where they might strike out such portions as they deemed objectionable, and pass the other portions of it which were admitted to be valuable.

LORD CAIRNS said, the 18th clause would justify a breach of contract in this way—where a tenant of a mine had contracted with his landlord that he would clear him of all rates that were imposed or might be imposed, this clause would enable that tenant, in breach of his contract, to throw half of a rate on his landlord.

On Question, that ("now") stand part of the Motion? Their Lordships divided:—Contents 43; Not-Contents 59: Majority 16.

Resolved in the Negative; and Bill to be read 2<sup>d</sup> this day three months.

CONTENTS.

Selborne, L. (L. Chancellor.)	Ettrick, L. (L. Napier.)
	Foxford, L. (E. Lumsden.)
Saint Albans, D.	Gwydir, L.
Ailesbury, M.	Hammer, L.
Lansdowne, M.	Hatherley, L.
Ripon, M.	Hatherton, L.
Arlie, E.	Houghton, L.
Camperdown, E.	Kenmare, L. (E. Kenmare.)
Chichester, E.	Kenry, L. (E. Dunraven and Mount-Earl.)
Devon, E.	Methuen, L.
Granville, E.	Monson, L.
Kimberley, E.	O'Hagan, L.
Morley, E.	Poltimore, L. [Teller.]
Canterbury, V.	Ponsonby, L. (E. Bessborough.)
Falmouth, V.	Robartes, L.
Halifax, V.	Somerton, L. (E. Norreman.)
Sydney, V.	Stafford, L.
Acton, L.	Sundridge, L. (D. Argyll.)
Boyle, L. (E. Cork and Orrery.) [Teller.]	Truro, L.
Carbery, L.	Ventry, L.
Castletown, L.	Waveney, L.
Elliot, L.	Wrotteley, L.

NOT-CONTENTS.

Buckingham and Chandos, D.	Bath, M.
Richmond, D.	Bristol, M.
Rutland, D.	Hertford, M.
Wellington, D.	Salisbury, M.

Abergavenny, E.	Bagot, L.
Amherst, E.	Boston, L.
Bantry, E.	Brancapeth, L. ( V. Boyne. )
Bathurst, E.	Cairns, L.
Beauchamp, E.	Clinton, L.
Brownlow, E.	Cloncurry, L.
Dartmouth, E.	Colchester, L.
Denbigh, E.	Colonsay, L.
Derby, E.	Denman, L.
Doncaster, E. (D. Boscawen and Queenberry.)	De Saumarez, L.
Faversham, E.	Ellenborough, L.
Gainsborough, E.	Fitzwalter, L.
Leven and Melville, E.	Hartismere, L. ( L. Henniker. ) [Teller.]
Lonsdale, E.	Leconfield, L.
Manvers, E.	Penrhyn, L.
Powis, E.	Raglan, L.
Rosse, E.	Redesdale, L.
Rosslyn, E.	Saltoun, L.
Selkirk, E.	Sondes, L.
Verulam, E.	Stanley of Alderley, L.
Clancarty, V. (E. Clancarty.)	St. John of Bletso, L.
De Vesey, V.	Strathspey, L. ( E. Seafeld. )
Hawarden, V. [Teller.]	Thurlow, L.
Strathallan, V.	Wigan, L. ( E. Crawford and Balcarres. )
Abinger, L.	Wynford, L.
Aveland, L.

House adjourned at a quarter past Nine o'clock, to Monday next, Eleven o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

Friday, 25th July, 1873.

MINUTES.]—NEW WRITS ISSUED—For Greenwich, v. Sir David Salomons, baronet, deceased; for Dundee, v. George Armitstead, esquire, Chiltern Hundreds.

SELECT COMMITTEES—Report—Civil Services Expenditure [No. 352]; Contagious Diseases (Animals) [No. 353].

SUPPLY—considered in Committee—Committee R.P.

PUBLIC BILLS—Ordered—First Reading—Royal Naval Artillery Volunteer Force* [264]; Sanitary Act (1866) Amendment (Ireland)* [266]; Four Courts Marshalsea (Dublin)* [265].

Second Reading—Local Rates and Taxes (Scotland)* [266]; Constabulary Force (Ireland)* [257]; Gas and Water Works Facilities Act (1870) Amendment* [252].

Committee—Report—Crown Private Estates [222]; Defence Acts Amendment* [255]; Merchant Shipping Acts Amendment (re-comm.) [253]; Public Schools (Eton College Property)* [261].

Considered as amended—Conspiracy Law Amendment [190-263]; Endowed Schools Act (1869) Amendment [207].

Third Reading—Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment, &c. [245]; Slave Trade (East African Courts)* [236]; Langbaugh Coroners* [242], and passed.

Withdrawn—Rating Liability (Ireland)* [246].

The House met at Two of the clock.

CRIMINAL LAW—SELF-MUTILATIONS IN CHATHAM CONVICT PRISON.

QUESTION.

MR. R. N. FOWLER asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, Whether any effectual measures have now been taken; and, if so, of what nature, with a view to diminish the large number of serious accidents and self-mutilations recently reported from Chatham Convict Prison?

MR. BRUCE: Sir, considering the humane and considerate disposition of the hon. Member, I was very much surprised not to receive any Notice of this Question till I saw it this morning in the Paper. I immediately wrote to the Directors of Convict Prisons, and have been furnished with the following Memorandum on the subject of the Question, which, as it contains important information, I will read to the hon. Member. It is dated the 25th of July, and states that very minute and careful inquiries have been made into the subject of the self-mutilations at Chatham Prison, with a view to ascertaining whether they could be ascribed to anything in the treatment or management of the prisoners which called for correction. It is probable that some exaggerated ideas have arisen from the application of the word "mutilation," which conveys the idea of some permanent loss of limb or other injury, to cases of a very much slighter character, to which the word "contusion" would more properly apply. The following is an extract from the Report of the Medical Officer for the year ending December, 1872:—

"Contusions and injuries have been reduced from 487 to 358; of the fractures 27 have been purposely produced, 16 requiring immediate amputation. The amputations altogether amounted to 34, which were successful with one exception, when the prisoner died on the eighth day from gangrene of the leg above the amputation. Of the 358 injuries above mentioned, 163 were wilful; all terminated favourably, though some were attended with danger to life from the extensive inflammation which followed. Of the 163 cases of wilful injury during the year, 101 were the creation of sores and the introduction of foreign bodies under the skin, and 62 were actual mutilation or attempted mutilation. Of the 62, there were 36 during the first half of the year, and only 26 during the latter half, thus showing a marked decrease in this description of injury; and of the total 62 cases the majority—namely, 43—were ineffectual, and only 9 can be described as really serious cases."

But during the last few months the practice of self-mutilations has so decreased as to have almost entirely disappeared. In fact, since the 15th of March, there have been only four cases of mutilation, and four of contusions producing no permanent injury, and only one since the 10th of May. There can be no doubt that a very large proportion of these acts are committed for the purpose of evading labour; and only those who are familiar with this class of men are aware of the extent to which malingering to avoid work or service is carried. In the Army it is equally common; and an epidemic of this sort once prevailed in the French Army. Self-infliction of injuries is merely one form of malingering which, in recent years, seems to have become the vogue among the convicts at Chatham. The steps taken to put an end to these practices have been—(1), to remove from the men any facilities for committing the acts which were most common—namely, producing fractures or contusions with the trucks or engines; (2), letting it be clearly understood that severe punishment would follow any such acts; and (3), pointing out clearly and considerably to those who had suffered from them the uselessness, and, at the same time, the unreasonableness, of what they had done. The result of these steps has been that acts of this kind have now become rare, and persistence in the same course will, it is believed, put an end to it almost entirely.

PUBLIC WORKS LOANS—ENGLAND AND IRELAND—QUESTION.

MR. DELAHUNTY asked Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, after referring to the last annual Report of the Local Government Board of England, wherein at page 49 it is stated that the Board sanctioned loans for sanitary purposes, from the 19th of August 1871, to the 31st of December 1871, amounting to £267,562, and from the 31st of December 1871, to the 31st of December 1872, to £602,271, making a total of £869,833; whether he will still adhere to his statement that the total amount of sanitary loans sanctioned in England during the said period was only £8,698; and, after referring to the annual Report of the Commissioners of Public Works in Ireland issued last month, wherein it is stated at page 7 that the Treasury sanctioned a loan of £50,000 to be made by them, the said Commissioners, out of the Public Works Loan Fund of Ireland, to the Waterford Corporation for water supply, whether he will still adhere to his statement that the loan was to be made by the Public Works Loan Commissioners of England?

MR. BAXTER: Sir, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to state, in reply to my hon. Friend's Question, that the amount of the loans sanctioned by the Local Government Board for sanitary purposes, from the 19th of August, 1871, to the 31st of December, 1872, was, as stated in the Question, £869,883. The great bulk, however, of that amount was advanced by public companies and private individuals, from whom, until the passing of the Public Health Act of last Session, local authorities could borrow on more advantageous terms than from the Public Works Loan Commissioners. The Question of yesterday referred to loans made by that Board with the sanction of the Treasury, and the amount so advanced was £8,389, as stated by the Chancellor of the Exchequer. My right hon. Friend, however, fell into a slight inaccuracy when he stated that the £50,000 loan to Waterford was made by the Public Works Loan Commissioners for England. It was made by the Irish Board, but the Treasury consulted the English Commissioners on the subject.

of strong feelings has led men to join it—when it is put down by the arm of the law, the individuals who were parties to it should be dealt with very leniently. But, Sir, I know no reason why single individuals who, without the apology of contagion, have endeavoured to bring about bloodshed, should be so dealt with. I look upon it as an abuse and morbid symptom of the feeling of the day to bring such a class into the category of political prisoners. I desire to gain no popularity founded upon any such supposed tendency, for, instead of entertaining such a feeling, I will always be the first to resist it. That is, I hope, a conclusive answer to the Question; and I am sorry that I cannot make any other answer. The offences of these unfortunate men were committed quite apart from Fenian offences. In point of time, these offences were committed and sentence was passed in 1870. They appear to have been part of a secret organization for distributing arms, and, if possible, laying the foundation for future revolution. In ordinary convictions for political offences we can positively and confidentially say that when once public excitement and hazard have passed away, it may be well to stretch a point on the side of mercy; but we are not able to do so in this case, and therefore I am not able to offer any encouragement to my hon. and learned Friend in reference to the Question he has put.

AMNESTY TO POLITICAL PRISONERS. QUESTION.

MR. BUTT asked the First Lord of the Treasury, Whether there is any objection to extend the amnesty already accorded to political prisoners to Davitt and Wilson, who were convicted of treason felony at the Central Criminal Court?

MR. GLADSTONE: I am sorry to say, Sir, that there is a strong and most conclusive reason, one which over-rides every other reason for not extending this amnesty to the men referred to, and for leading us to conclude that these men are not political prisoners at all in the sense in which indulgence might be extended to prisoners of that character. It is a sound principle of modern administration, that when there has been a convulsion in a country and a contagion

IRELAND—CORONER FOR MEATH. QUESTION.

MR. J. MARTIN asked the Chief Secretary for Ireland, Whether the county of Meath is not at present without any Coroner at all, and whether the office of Coroner for the lower division of that county has not been vacant ever since May 1871, and that of Coroner for the upper division of the same county ever since Spring 1872; whether the Grand Jury of Meath did not at Summer Assizes 1872 certify such vacancy to the Lord Chancellor of Ireland, and recommend that one Coroner should be elected for the entire county; whether certain justices of the peace of said county have not applied to the Lord Chancellor of Ireland through the clerk of the peace, asking for the writ of election for a Coroner; what is the average number of Inquests held in the county per year for the last three years; whether there have not been in the county of Meath cases of sudden death, or other cases proper for inquest, since the county has ceased to have a Coroner, in which considerable delay and inconvenience have resulted from the difficulty of immediately obtaining the attendance of a sufficient number of justices of the peace to perform the service formerly rendered by Coroners; and, whether it is the intention of Her Majesty's Government that the old and important office of Coroner shall not again be filled up in the county of Meath?

THE MARQUESS OF HARTINGTON, in reply, said, he had obtained some information, although it was not complete, respecting the office of coroner for the county of Meath. That county was at present without any coroner at all; the office of coroner for the lower division of the county had been vacant since May, 1871, and that of coroner for the upper division since the Spring of 1872. At the Summer Assizes of 1872 the Grand Jury of Meath certified such vacancy to the Lord Chancellor of Ireland, and recommended that one coroner should be elected for the entire county. Certain justices of the peace for the county had applied for proceedings to be taken under the 9th & 10th Vict. for modifying the divisions of the county, and at a meeting of the magistrates, duly convened, a recommendation was made that the two districts should be united and one coroner appointed for the county. For some reason, however, which he had been unable to ascertain, no action was taken for some time in consequence of that recommendation; but not long ago a case was submitted to the Law Officers, who expressed their opinion that the action taken by the magistrates was illegal, as they had no power under the Act of uniting the two districts, although they could alter or subdivide them. Under those circumstances, warrants for the election of two coroners for the respective divisions of the county were issued, and he was informed they were now in possession of the clerk of the peace. No action had yet been taken upon them, and he was unable to explain why further delay had occurred. He would make further inquiry, and, as far as Government could prevent it, would take care that there should be no more delay. He was obliged to admit that considerable inconvenience had resulted from the difficulty of immediately obtaining the attendance of a sufficient number of justices of the peace to perform the service formerly rendered by coroners.

CROWN PRIVATE ESTATES BILL—

(Lords.)—[BILL 222.]

(Mr. Gladstone.)

COMMITTEE.

Order for Committee read.

SIR CHARLES W. DILKE said, it was not his intention at that stage of the Bill to move the Resolution of which he had given Notice to the effect, that it would be undesirable to proceed with further legislation concerning the "private estates of the Crown," unless provision were made for the publication of accounts of the annual receipts and disbursements of such estates. He proposed, however, to bring forward a clause in Committee, and to divide the Committee on that clause.

Bill considered in Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Clause 1 (Recited Act extended to manors, &c., devised by Her Majesty).

MR. DICKINSON rose to move as an Amendment, in page 2, line 36, at end, to add—

"and all laws applicable to wills and dispositions of private persons, and imposing probate, administration, legacy, and succession duties shall apply to wills and dispositions by or in favour of Her Majesty, her heirs and successors."

THE CHAIRMAN said, the hon. Member was precluded from moving the Amendment, inasmuch as it imposed a charge from which the Crown was at present exempt.

MR. DICKINSON contended that that objection did not hold good with regard to the real property of the Crown to which the Bill applied, if it did with regard to the personal. He would accordingly submit his Amendment in an altered form, declaring that the law should be applicable as regarded succession duties to wills and dispositions by or in favour of Her Majesty, her heirs, and successors.

THE SOLICITOR GENERAL said, the Amendment would impose a new tax on the Sovereign, without her permission or the previous permission of that House, and it was clearly out of Order. If the old Act had imposed the duty, the declaration would be of no effect; but the Act did not impose any such, and it could not be extended by an Amendment of this character.

THE CHAIRMAN said, if the Amendment varied the law otherwise than he had mentioned—by consent of the Crown or of the House—it was not competent to the hon. Member to propose it.

MR. GLADSTONE suggested, independently of the other grounds named, that the Amendment would require the consent of the Crown if it affected the interests of the Crown.

MR. DICKINSON argued, that as that was a Bill to remove a doubt, and so to secure to the Crown certain property, which could not be at present regarded as secure, and in that way to augment its revenue, a restriction effecting an incidental charge upon that source of income which the Bill was necessary to secure could not be considered as imposing a new charge upon the Sovereign.

MR. GLADSTONE submitted there were three distinct grounds on which the Committee ought to decline to entertain the Amendment. The first was a ground upon which the hon. Member ought not to press it; it was not fair to the Promoters and the House to move an Amendment totally distinct from that of which Notice had been given. Upon a question of that kind, involving subtle argument, it was unfair to ask the House for a decision independently of Notice. On that account he hoped the hon. Member would not press the Amendment. Secondly, that was a matter affecting the permanent interests of the Crown, and the Motion proposed a charge which did not exist, and which could not be imposed without the consent of the Crown. Thirdly, irrespective altogether of the question on whom the charge would fall, it was a new charge, unless it were provided for already; and if it were provided for there was no occasion for the Amendment. If it was a new charge, the hon. Member could not proceed without a Resolution passed in Committee.

MR. D. DALRYMPLE suggested whether the discussion was not altogether somewhat irrelevant, and out of Order.

THE CHAIRMAN said, the alteration made in his Amendment did not relieve the hon. Member from the difficulty in which he had placed himself. As the Amendment would affect the rights of the Crown, it would clearly require a Committee and the Royal Assent.

MR. DICKINSON thought the Committee was not being met in the spirit in which the House had met the Government in voting for the Bill. It was undesirable to place the Crown in respect of private property in a position different from that of private persons, and it might become a question, whether the Bill should not be opposed altogether.

MR. ANDERSON said, the object of the Amendment was good, for it would meet the difficulties about the secrecy of the Sovereign's disposition of property. He thought the hon. Member for Stroud had been unfairly treated, and the only course for those who thought so was to give the hon. Member an opportunity of putting himself in Order by delaying the progress of the Bill.

MR. MACFIE suggested that, after what had passed, it would be in the interests of the Crown if the Government were to consult the feeling of the Crown in the matter, and allow the Bill to drop for that Session.

Amendment negatived.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 2 agreed to.

Clause 3 (Section 11 of the Crown Private Estates Act 1862, extended to certain private estates of Her Majesty, &c.)

In reply to Sir CHARLES W. DILKE,

THE SOLICITOR GENERAL said, he was not aware of any express legal decision on the subject; but the most eminent lawyers had never doubted the right of the Crown to leave personality by will.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 4 and 5 agreed to.

New Clause.

SIR CHARLES W. DILKE rose to move a new clause, to follow Clause 3, providing for the publication of accounts of the receipts and disbursements on account of the private estates of the Crown to be sent to the Treasury and laid before Parliament. The Prime Minister had said they were small, and there was no immediate prospect of their becoming large; but if such a concession as the present were not made, they might become very large in a single day, without Parliament having any knowledge of the fact, unless accounts were published. Large legacies might be left to the Crown by persons desirous of notoriety, or wishing to see it independent of Parliamentary Votes, and the money might be invested in land to an enormous extent. If the estates of the Crown were to be treated as private estates, no doubt, it would be inconsistent to require the publication of accounts; but as the Amendment of the hon. Member for Stroud had fallen through, it was the more necessary to press for the publication of accounts respecting them—especially when the fact was remembered that they increased daily in value. They were published in the case of the Duchy of Lancaster, which at the beginning of the reign produced £8,000 a-year, and now £40,000 a-year. The annual publication of the accounts of the Duchy of Lancaster by the authority of Parliament was a case in point. The Prime Minister on a former stage of the Bill was understood to say, that if these private estates of the Crown became considerable, that ought to be considered in fixing the Civil List at the beginning of each reign. The advanced Liberals had often claimed that the estates of the Duchy of Lancaster should be regarded on the same footing as the other Crown lands; but that claim had always been resisted by the Ministry of the day. When Bolingbroke came to the Crown he brought the Duchy of Lancaster with him as his private estate. The Crown had always maintained the private character of the Duchy estates; but the income of the Duchy was annually published, and was taken into account as part of the income of the Crown on the accession of each Sovereign. The late Lord Derby asserted in the House of Lords that the revenues of the Duchy of Lancaster were as little the property of the public as were any of the estates of their Lordships, yet he gladly consented to the publication of the annual accounts of the Duchy. In the Civil List Act of George III., it was stated that His Majesty surrendered the revenue arising from the whole of the Crown estates, "except the revenues of the Duchy of Cornwall." The Duchy of Lancaster was not named, yet it was held by Parliament and the Crown not to be included in the surrender. All he asked for was that accounts of the nature of the Duchy might be presented to Parliament yearly, and the clause which he had placed on the Paper was drawn up exactly in the words which applied to the Duchy of Lancaster, except that he would substitute the Keeper of the Privy Purse, who should render accounts to the Treasury for submission to Parliament, instead of the officer who performed that duty with respect to the Duchy. If, however, the Government preferred to name any officer of the Treasury he should not object, so long as the thing were done. He would conclude by moving the clause of which he had given Notice.

Clause (Accounts of receipts and disbursements to be sent to the Treasury and laid before Parliament,) — (Sir Charles Dilke,) — brought up, and read the first time.

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That the Clause be read a second time."

MR. GLADSTONE thought that it was an improvement that that question was now being considered in Committee on its merits, but, having considered it on its merits, he could not find that it had any. The hon. Baronet the Member for Chelsea (Sir Charles Dilke) was under a mistake as to what he (Mr. Gladstone) said on the second reading of the Bill. He had not used the ambiguous word "considerable" in the reference made by the hon. Baronet. What he stated was that there was not the slightest probability that the private estates of the Crown would ever come to resemble those immense masses of property that were held by private individuals in that country, but that if they ever did come to resemble them, that would be the time for Parliament, on the accession of a new Sovereign, to take the subject into account. With regard to the Duchy of Lancaster, there was not the slightest analogy between that and Osborne or Balmoral, and the hon. Baronet's argument in that respect as to the publication of the accounts of the Duchy was altogether fallacious and irrelevant. That revenue had risen from £8,000 to £40,000 a-year, and the hon. Baronet said that because that was so, the smaller properties of the Queen at the places before-mentioned might have made a similar increase. The hon. Baronet, however, knew no such increase could accrue for this reason—the possessions of the Duchy were large, varied, scattered, and held under different conditions, and the income had been carelessly administered for several generations. What analogy, therefore, would there be between such an estate and property purchased by the Crown at rack-rents and according to modern usages? He was not responsible for the declaration made by the late Lord Derby. Lord Derby's opinion was no doubt entitled to respect, but he declined to be held by it. The hon. Member had no right to quote that opinion and call upon the House to act in conformity with it, unless he was prepared to plant his foot and take his stand upon it. He (Mr. Gladstone) affirmed that there was no resemblance between the Duchy of Lancaster and the private estates which were the subject of the Bill; and it was a mere quibble of words to argue whether the Duchy of Lancaster was in the same sense, a private estate of the Crown. In many vital respects it differed most essentially from the private estates of the Crown. It had been subject to management under the statutes of the realm. It could only be managed by a responsible Minister, whom the hon. Gentleman might remove, if he had influence enough; and it was a large estate and likely to grow. The Duchy of Lancaster had long been brought within the scope of Parliamentary interposition, and it was accordingly most proper that its accounts should be matters of public cognizance. These private estates of the Crown, on the other hand, were purely private property. They were partly the result of thrift and providence, and arose partly from a bequest. Yes; one such bequest had happened in the whole history of this country. These matters could not call upon Parliament for its cognizance, unless they should swell to some considerable amount, and should form some considerable item or element in the power and influence of the Crown, when they might be taken into consideration about once in 20 years, or when a new Civil List had to be granted. The statutes of the land recognized the principle of private property by the Crown, and this Act introduced no new principle in that respect. A doubt, however, had arisen as to whether that property could pass directly and by bequest to the succeeding Sovereign, and in connection with it, a more unhandsome, a more ungenerous use of an occasion given by accidental circumstances he could not conceive; and if it were attempted to make such a use against a railway company or a private individual who had occasion to come to Parliament, and to put upon him some stringent conditions utterly new to the law, the House, he was sure, would immediately reject the proposal.

MR. ANDERSON said, the hon. Baronet below the gangway (Sir Charles Dilke) did not draw any analogy between Osborne and the Duchy of Lancaster—the right hon. Gentleman drew it himself. The right hon. Gentleman put it as applying to Osborne. If the Crown were to accumulate £9,000,000 or £10,000,000, and were to purchase landed estates, would not the clause apply to that. If the hon. Member had intended to apply the clause to Osborne, the remarks of the right hon. Gentleman would have been fair enough, but not otherwise. The hon. Member proposed to do nothing but what Parliament ought to have done in the first Civil List. The fact was, the right hon. Gentleman had made a grievous mistake in bringing the Bill into the House at all, for there was nothing to be said in favour of the Act of 1862, of which the Bill was an Amendment. All the Bill intended to do was to amend a bad Act which passed through that House and the House of Lords without debate, in that extremely degenerate Palmerstonian era of Parliamentary existence. It was only in such an era that the Bill could have been passed without debate. The right hon. Gentleman in speaking of the conduct of hon. Member for Chelsea as unhandsome and ungenerous, was importing a personal character into the debate. [MR. GLADSTONE: I said the proceeding was so on the part of the House of Commons.] That means the House of Commons could attach a personal character. No one has the slightest idea of importing a personal character into this discussion, as against the Queen, whom they all reverenced and honoured. It was simply as against the Crown, not against the individual who occupied it.

If Parliament were to take the estates of the Sovereign on a new accession, it would be necessary for them to have the accounts before them, which the hon. Baronet proposed should be submitted to Parliament every year.

SIR W. CHARLES DILKE, in reply, said, he would be willing to accept words which would exempt from the operation of the clause lands at present held by Her Majesty at Balmoral and Osborne.

Question put.

The Committee divided:—Ayes 15; Noes 104: Majority 89.

House resumed.

Bill reported, without Amendment.

Motion made, and Question proposed, “That the Bill be read the third time upon Monday next.”—(Mr. Gladstone.)

Amendment proposed, to leave out the word “Monday,” in order to insert the word “Friday,”—(Mr. Dickinson,)—instead thereof.

Question, “That the word ‘Monday’ stand part of the Question,” put, and agreed to.

Main Question put, and agreed to.

Bill to be read the third time upon Monday next.

ELEMENTARY EDUCATION ACT (1870)
AMENDMENT, &c., BILL—[BILL 245.]

(Mr. William Edward Forster, Mr. Secretary Bruce.)

THIRD READING.

Order for Third Reading read.

MR. SCOURFIELD said, he could not allow the measure to pass without entering his protest against the principle it embodied, in an inversion of the old rule of law with regard to the onus probandi. He objected that in certain cases parents should be obliged to prove that they were not offenders against the law before any evidence had been offered in support of the charge in respect of which they had been summoned. That was a bad and dangerous principle, and he hoped never to see it extended.

MR. BIRLEY hoped that the passing of the Bill would mark a great abatement—he could not hope for an entire cessation—of the political asperity which had arisen on the discussion of the question. The time had come when the efforts of all parties ought to be directed to making elementary education sound and efficient, rather than treating it as a political and party question. With regard to the schools which the Nonconformists had founded for elementary education, he believed in all cases religious training had been combined with secular education, and certainly that was universally the case with respect to the schools of the British and Foreign Society which the Nonconformists had actively supported. He wished to make one or two remarks on a clause in the Bill to which much attention had not been devoted. The 13th clause was intended to give school boards the power to accept gifts for educational purposes, and in that he hoped he saw the germ of the future development of a somewhat higher class of education than had been general in the elementary schools. The Revised Code, though it had increased the quantity and in some respects the quality of education, had had the effect of diminishing the attention paid to the higher branches and to the more advanced scholars. There ought to be some system by which scholars distinguished by character and ability could pass into middle-class schools, and thence into such institutions as Owen’s College, Manchester. He knew that the Vice President of the Council was afraid that such a system might lead to expense which would not be justified. In his (Mr. Birley’s) opinion, there was no ground for such an apprehension. Private zeal would furnish what was necessary, and all that would be wanted from the Education Department would be some assistance in the way of organization and inspection. He congratulated the right hon. Gentleman on the result of his arduous labours. Whatever blemishes might be in the Bill, he still hoped it would have a good effect, and that numbers of children would be brought into the schools through its operation. He implored hon. Gentlemen opposite to put aside party dissensions, and to join with those on that (the Opposition) side in an honourable rivalry for the education of those poor children.

MR. CANDLISH said, that his right hon. Friend the Vice President of the Council had told the House more than once that the 25th clause of the Act of 1870 was adopted unanimously by the House. He did not believe in any imputations of unbecoming arrangements on the part of the Government with the other side of the House, to make the Bill acceptable to either party; but the fact was, there were not half-a-dozen Members on either side of the House who really understood in 1870 the meaning and effect of the clause, otherwise it never would have passed as it did sub silentio. His right hon. Friend gave it to be understood more than once that the 25th clause should be re-considered; but that had not been done, and his right hon. Friend, by the course which he had taken, had thrown elements of disturbance among the religious party of the country which would be felt in the coming school board elections, and in the Parliamentary elections, and would, he believed, result in a loss to the Liberal party. The necessity for the existence of the clause at all was very small, and he deeply lamented that the right hon. Gentleman had not proposed its withdrawal. The amendment of the Act of 1870, which had been looked forward to so wistfully, had ended in bitter disappointment; and his right hon. Friend would find that at the next election he would be compelled to have recourse to the Conservative party in order to secure his return for the borough of Bradford, as he had had recourse to their assistance in that House in order to maintain the 25th clause. The Vice President of the Council had on that question departed from the principles of his youth, and of his full-grown manhood—[“No, no!”]—hon. Gentlemen who said “no” should have read, as he (Mr. Candlish) had, the speeches of the right hon. Gentleman in his early life, at a time when the right hon. Gentleman's opinions were identical with his own. That had led him at one time to entertain the hope that the right hon. Gentleman would be the future leader of the great Liberal party. They had, however, been disappointed in the right hon. Gentleman; and he (Mr. Candlish) could not allow that occasion to pass without declaring his dissatisfaction at the course taken by the Government, and deplored the loss which in consequence would be sustained by the Liberal party.

Mr. Anderson

MR. W. E. FORSTER said, the House would not expect any long discussion on that stage of the Bill. As to the objection of the hon. Member for Pembrokeshire (Mr. Scourfield), that the onus probandi was thrown on the parent, he might remind him that the illustration which he gave ought to be satisfactory to his hon. Friend, for in the Factory Acts it was found absolutely necessary to throw the same burden of proof on the parent for the protection of the child. He was sorry the hon. Member for Sunderland (Mr. Candlish) had thought it necessary to make the remarks he had done. His hon. Friend could hardly have wished to convey the impression that he (Mr. Forster) on the part of the Government had acted differently from what he stated last year it would be his duty to do. His hon. Friend said that hopes were held out of the repeal of the 25th clause; but if his hon. Friend referred to what he stated, he (Mr. Candlish) would find that not once or twice, but oftener, in answer to Questions from his hon. Friend, from the hon. Member for Birmingham (Mr. Dixon), and others, he said he acknowledged the objections held by his hon. Friends, that he himself did not concur in them, that he would, if possible, remove them; but that he could hold out no hope whatever of doing so unless the right of the parent, when too poor to pay the school fees, to choose the school was reserved. He had always stated that they had no right, in putting compulsion in force, when there were two or more elementary schools from which the parent might choose, to say that the children should go to the schools which the school boards approved, and not to those approved by the parents. Everything, he stated, had that condition attached. That being so, the Government and he himself had done what they could to fulfil what he promised. They brought forward propositions for the purpose, and, on the high authority of the right hon. Member for Birmingham, had to some extent removed the objections to the clause felt by his hon. Friend and those who acted with him. It was true that before the plan was proposed, and before it was known what would be its exact form, it was objected to, or at least an opinion was expressed upon it before it was proposed. He had, however, hoped that full and candid consideration would have been given to it, because a similar provision was brought up in the Scotch Bill, and almost unanimously accepted.

He thought it right to say that much in vindication of the course pursued by the Government. But his hon. Friend said he had not met the difficulty, but rather made it greater by applying it to pauper children. It was quite true that the right of choice was not taken away in the case of pauper children. But had his hon. Friend or any other hon. Member protested against the application of the right to pauper children? His hon. Friend voted for the second reading, when he (Mr. Forster) stated clearly that all that had been taken out of the Bill with the consent of the Government was with reference to the indigent parent, rather than the pauper. His hon. Friend had thought fit to foretell the reception that awaited him in his own borough in connection with this subject; but he should be able to state that so strong was the feeling of the House that the pauper should not be deprived of this right, that neither his hon. Friend nor any other hon. Member had ventured to propose to deprive him of it. He did not make these remarks in any feeling of irritation, but it was impossible to pass by some of the remarks of his hon. Friend. He said that he (Mr. Forster) had deserted the principles of his youth, and he spoke not only of the effect which would be produced on himself, but also on the party. That was hardly a remark that should have come from the hon. Member, who knew nothing of the principles in which he (Mr. Forster) had been brought up, and of which he had been so unworthy a representative; but the fact was, that education question had been one of great difficulty and responsibility to him, and he felt from time to time that he had to consider, not the good of his party, nor the advantage of any temporary measure, but what he thought was right and just in itself, and he knew from the lessons he had received from his old Quaker father, that there was not a step he had taken on this question, especially with regard to religious education, that he would not have approved. He was confirmed in that opinion by some of his persuasion who were now alive. Then as to the effect that would be produced on his own interests, did the hon. Member suppose that he should be afraid of that? He appealed to those who knew him intimately whether he had ever viewed these questions as they affected his own interest or those of his friends in preference to the manner in which they influenced the welfare of the country and the children of generations to come? He considered that he should be utterly unworthy of occupying the position he did if he allowed such considerations to have the slightest weight with him; and, looking forward to the opposition with which he was threatened in his own borough, he could assure the House that he did not fear the result. He was prepared to meet not only the whole constituency, but the Liberal constituency of Bradford, What the result might be he did not know; but he was quite sure that, after they had heard what he had stated, they would admit that he had acted in the manner which he thought best for the interests of education; and his firm conviction was that he should not be worthy of taking any part whatever in politics if he had either deserted his principles or lent himself to taking away the freedom of religious teaching in schools. When his hon. Friend said he had deserted his principles, his reply was, that so far as he had said anything in regard to education, he had simply repeated what he had always stated, and he would find that in addressing a large meeting at St. James's Hall, in the year 1868, he expressed the sentiments he had done now.

Mr. H. W. VILLIERS-STUART (Waterford): I feel that it may be thought presumptuous in me, a Parliamentary baby so lately born into this House, to venture to utter a word in its august presence. I plead in extenuation the fact that I have had a species of experience on the elementary education question, which I believe no other Gentleman present has had. I have for some years of my life had the honour—the high honour—of being in charge of a large parish. It was a rural parish in an English midland county. During those years I have been in constant and intimate intercourse with the cottage labourers. I am intimately acquainted with their feelings, their views, wishes, and wants. My experience leads me to hail with the greatest satisfaction the amended Elementary Education Act Bill. I am convinced that the advantage likely to be derived from it can scarcely be exaggerated. The cottagers receiving out-door relief are precisely the class whom it is most difficult to induce to send their children to school. I shall mention an instance in point—a type of thousands of similar cases scattered throughout the country. I well remember a pauper family, the head of which was disabled by slight paralysis, and who was, therefore, a chronic case of out-door relief. This man had a large family of children. Every means were tried to induce him to send them to school; we offered to pay their school fees; we assisted them with clothing; we plied the parents with arguments and entreaties, but all in vain. The children grew up wild and neglected; the girls became instruments of vice and immorality; the boys became poachers and vagrants; the whole family were the plague-spot of the parish. Now, what would we have given in those days for such powers as the amended Act of 1870 will confer on parish Guardians? Those children would all have been sent to school, and would probably have grown up to be useful members of the community. The hon. Member for Sunderland has stated that the results of the Act of 1870 were insignificant—that they were represented by an expenditure of only £5,000 a-year. My experience would quite have prepared me for this, because I know the rural Guardians to be a class of men who shrink from responsibility. The Act of 1870 was permissive, and therefore implied responsibility; the present Act is compulsory, and I feel convinced that the Guardians will gladly carry out the provisions of the Act, now that it will no longer entail responsibility or odium. Before I sit down I wish to say a few words on one point which has arisen during the debates upon this Bill, with reference to a different class to the out-door relief pauper. The hon. Member for Brighton, in his eloquent speech, said much about calling a spade a spade. He argued that if a man received parish relief in the shape of school fees for his children, that constituted him a pauper. I venture to join issue with him there. I deny that the spade in this instance is a spade. The definition of pauper is a man who cannot provide himself or his family with the physical necessities of life, but education is not a physical necessary of life. Paupers are the failures and incapables of the community. There is a very large class who can and do provide their families with the necessities of life, who cannot further afford the luxuries of education for their children, and whom, yet, it would be unjust and impolitic to brand as paupers. The cottager, who has fed and clothed half-a-score of children on 12s. a-week, and who has besides paid his provident club subscription, has, I think, done enough to entitle him to our earnest admiration. When the problem of making both ends meet has been so arduous we can scarcely expect that many pence, if any, will be left for school fees, and he may without reproach accept educational aid from the wealthier members of the community without being dubbed a pauper. What is it which nerves his arm, and furnishes the stimulus for this hard battle and struggle? Why, it is the honest feeling of self-respect and independence. It is his glory and his pride that he has never come upon the parish for food or clothing for his family. But if you now tell him that all that hard struggle has been in vain—that if he cannot, besides, pay his children's schooling, he is but a pauper after all, then you break that man's heart—his arm will fall nerveless by his side, and you will make him indeed what you have made him in name, a pauper. I trust that the hon. Member for Brighton who said—"Let us call a spade a spade," and also hon. Gentlemen who applauded the sentiment, will re-consider their verdict. I hope that they will call to mind the words of the poet—"Who robs me of my good name robs me of that which not enriches him, and makes me poor indeed." I hope also that the hon. Member for Brighton will forgive me for challenging anything he has said, and will excuse me, too, for speaking a word in favour of my old and most sincerely esteemed friend, the labouring man.

MR. R. N. FOWLER said, the hon. Member for Sunderland (Mr. Candlish) had stated that the 25th clause was an outrage on his conscience. He wished to ask the House why his hon. Friend's conscience was entitled to respect, while his (Mr. Fowler's) was not. He had co-operated for many years past with Nonconformists in promoting ragged schools, and in those schools Churchmen and Dissenters had been able to work harmoniously together in inculcating these great truths in which they were agreed. He could not see why the same system should not be followed in Government schools. He was quite ready to contribute to schools in which the Nonconformists should teach their own religious views; but it was a violation of his conscience to support schools from which the Bible was excluded. He thought he had as much right to ask to have his scruples considered as hon. Gentlemen opposite. It had been a subject of great grief to him to see the Nonconformists, whom he had always believed to be sincerely attached to the Bible, ready to exclude it from education. He, however, rejoiced to believe that the policy of his right hon. Friend the Vice President was supported by an overwhelming majority of the people. They had seen how large the majority was in this House, and he believed it was still larger in the country, because many of the minority obtained their seats, not in consequence, but in spite, of their views on this question. There was one subject of a personal nature to which he wished to refer. The hon. Member for Sunderland had reproached the right hon. Gentleman with having abandoned the principles of his ancestors. Now, it had been his great privilege to know the parents and the family of his right hon. Friend, and he could bear witness that they had devoted their lives to philanthropy, and especially to religious education. He had himself, at the time the Education Bill was passing in 1870, visited a venerable friend of his—a near relation of the right hon. Gentleman—shortly before his death, and he expressed to him the great satisfaction he felt that his nephew had maintained the principle of Bible education.

MR. MORLEY shared the desire of the hon. Member for Manchester (Mr. Birley) to get rid of points of difference, and to unite all parties in promoting that degree of religious education which was wished for by the masses of the people. His complaint was, that in many districts where there was but one school—and that a National School—the schools were being to a large extent worked in support of Church principles. In 1870, he recognized the magnificent efforts which had been made denominational, and therefore supported the Vice President, being simple enough to think that, in country districts where schools were scarce, some common ground for the inculcation of religious instruction would be found, and that it would be suitable to the entire population. It was exceedingly difficult to prove the contrary, because there was a great indisposition on the part of those affected to give evidence on the subject; but he knew enough to be convinced that there was a large number of instances in which the Conscience Clause was inoperative, particularly in villages where there was no owner of property who sympathized with its spirit, and that persistent attempts were made to promote Church interests in the schools. That was accounted for by the fact that those standing high in the Church of England had given utterance to the most stimulating suggestions that the schools should be managed in the interests of the Church alone, that the teaching was to be dogmatic, and that teachers were to be secured who were members of the Church of England, and who would pay supreme regard to the preparation of children for confirmation. In proof of that, he might refer to speeches of Lord Lyttelton, the Rev. Canon Norris (Inspector), the Bishops of Lichfield, Ely, Peterborough, and Gloucester, and the report of the National Society; and he would contrast, with their utterances, those of Dr. Fraser, Bishop of Manchester, who said that the Birmingham League was greatly misunderstood, and that on its platform clergymen might very well maintain a position which would show they were not afraid to act upon a common ground, on a subject on which they were supposed to have deep feelings. He could not be a party to the third reading of this Bill without appealing to hon. Members to shake themselves loose from Church prejudices, so that they might get to the end of these bickerings about Church and Chapel, and exert themselves in a united and hearty movement for the thorough education of the people. He especially appealed to the Vice President, who apparently had failed to see anything of danger that needed to be checked. He must, at the same time, tell him there was not one word in the Bill that touched in the remotest degree the grievance of which Nonconformists complained. As a Nonconformist, he protested against the application of public money to these purposes, and if that spirit continued to be manifested, it was child's play to talk of any cessation of the present agitation.

SIR CHARLES ADDERLEY said, he would not enter into a discussion on the third reading of the Bill; but he would say that the efforts of the Church on educational matters had been recognized on all occasions, and he did not think the claims they put forward were extravagant. The House had not expressed any regret at the passing of the 25th clause, and he attributed the agitation against it to jealousy of the Church, rather than zeal for education. He should not care much if the maintenance of the clause did split up the Liberal party. A maintenance of the struggle on the question must only end in disgusting the people of England, and increasing their sympathy for Church and denominational education.

MR. H. RICHARD: The right hon. Gentleman who has just sat down (Sir Charles Adderley) ought to show some consideration for those who contend for what is called secular education in day schools, for there was a time when he himself shared their views. When the late Mr. Fox, then Member for Oldham, some years ago introduced into this House a Bill for secular education, the right hon. Baronet, much to his honour as I think, strenuously supported that measure. He has probably changed his views; but he ought not to be hard on those whom he has deserted. I will not enter into the controversy between my hon. Friend the Member for Sunderland (Mr. Candlish) and the Vice President of the Council, as to whether the latter has forsaken the principles of his youth; but I have always understood that the religious body among whom he was brought up, held this as one of their fundamental principles—that the application of public money, extracted from the pockets of the people by taxation, to teaching religion, whether in church or chapel or school, is not consistent with the freedom and purity of the Christian dispensation. But I arise principally to protest against the use that has been made of the word "sectarian" in the discussions that have taken place on the Bill. My hon. Friend the Member for Brighton (Mr. Fawcett) fell into the use of the merest clap-trap, when the other day he spoke of "sectarian wrangling" and took care by what he said before and after, very distinctly to point the application of the phrase to the Nonconformists. I suppose there must be something very fascinating to the ear and heart in a loud cheer, especially when it comes from the ranks of your opponents. I infer that from the pains that are taken, and the sacrifices that are made to gain it. But the danger is, of being betrayed into clap-trap, in trying to secure the enjoyment. And I must say I think the hon. Member for Brighton has been a little exposed to the temptation of late of courting the applause of the party opposite, rather more than some of his friends think quite safe. Nothing can be more utterly unfair and unjust than to apply the epithet "sectarian" to the course taken by the Nonconformists on this education question. We are emphatically the unsectarian party. We are contending for national against sectarian education. The simple truth is—and it is vain to attempt to disguise the fact—that the conflict in which we are engaged is only a part of that which is going on all over Europe, and in respect to which the whole of the Liberal party in every country in Europe are at one—against delivering up the education of the people into the hands of the priesthood. Then we are charged with inconsistency, because we refuse the application of rates for denominational education, while we sanction it in Parliamentary grants. But who has sanctioned it in Parliamentary grants? Not the Nonconformists. On the contrary, they have steadfastly and consistently opposed it. If my hon. Friend the Member for Brighton has followed the history of Nonconformist opinion on this subject, he must be aware that for many years the great body of the Nonconformists opposed State education altogether, and especially, and emphatically on this ground—that the appropriation of public money by Votes from the Consolidated Fund to denominational, or even to religious teaching of any kind, was a clear violation of their principles and a wrong done to conscience. In 1843, at one of the largest and most important conferences of the Congregational Body ever held in this country, this resolution was carried unanimously—

"That this meeting, utterly repudiating, on the strongest grounds of Scripture and conscience, the receipt of money raised by taxation for sustaining the Christian religion, feels bound to apply this principle no less to the work of religious education."

And they gave the best proof of their sincerity by refusing to accept the grant for their own schools, and so placing themselves at an enormous disadvantage. And their views on this subject have been expressed in this House with perfect explicitness. My right hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, in the debate on the Minutes of Council in 1847, though he was almost the only Nonconformist in the House, with characteristic courage spoke out our sentiments fully. The Nonconformists were charged with "clamour" then, as they are now charged with "sectarian wrangling," and in reply to this, my right hon. Friend said—

"Just recollect, when the whole of the Nonconformists are charged with clamour, what they mean by being Nonconformists. They object, as I understand, at least I object, to the principle by which the Government seized hold of public funds to give salaries and support to the teachers of all sects of religion, or of one sect of religion, for I think the one plan nearly as unjust as the other."—[3 Hansard, xci. 1094.]

Perhaps I may be asked why, if we object to Parliamentary grants for denominational education, we do not oppose those grants when they are brought forward in the Votes? For a very obvious reason, and one which I think is not dishonourable to us. Because we know that, however opposed to our principles they may be, Parliament and the country were committed to those grants many years ago, at a time when we, the Nonconformists, had scarcely any voice in this House at all, and that many schools which have done and are doing excellent service in the work of popular education—and I have always ungrudgingly acknowledged the great service which the Church of England has rendered in the cause of education—have been established on the public faith that the grants would be continued. We felt that it would be unfair and unjust to attempt to withdraw suddenly the aid on which the strength of such schools has been led to depend. To allow a system which has come down to us from past times, to remain without active or immediate resistance, is one thing; but to allow the same system to be recognized and consecrated in a new direction, and by fresh legislation, is quite another thing. There is a great disposition to sneer at the conscientious objections alleged by the Nonconformists on this matter. Well, they have given at least some proofs of their sincerity, when they have pleaded conscience on former occasions. For ages they submitted to be deprived of all the most precious privileges of citizenship, of the right of filling any office in the service of their country, of the honour of a seat in this House, and of the priceless advantages of University education, because their conscientious religious convictions stood in the way of their complying with the conditions by which those rights and privileges might be enjoyed. I must repeat again, what I have often said in this House—that the position taken by the Nonconformists on this subject is misunderstood, if not misrepresented. We do not ask for education without religion. I will yield to no man in this House, or in the country, in my anxiety to secure religious education for the people of this country. I believe that the best basis for a virtuous and prosperous population, is to have a population thoroughly imbued with religious principle and feeling. We only ask that religious instruction should be given by those to whom it could be best discharged, parents of the children, ministers of religion, and the teachers in our Sunday schools.

MR. BAINES said, he felt it his duty to bear his testimony to the conscientious, consistent, and useful course taken by his right hon. Friend (Mr. Forster) during that long educational controversy. For several years he himself had been opposed to his right hon. Friend, not indeed on great and essential points, but in regard to the intervention of the State. They had both been advocates of the universal education of the people, of freedom of education, and of the combining of religious with secular teaching. His right hon. Friend and himself had supported the system of undenominational Bible instruction which was founded 60 years since by the British and Foreign School Society, under Joseph Lancaster, the Duke of Bedford, and others; and among the life-long friends of that society were the father and uncle of his right hon. Friend. He knew the writings and speeches of his right hon. Friend on the subject, and he bore witness that his conduct had been straightforward and consistent. Where they had differed, he was ready to say that his right hon. Friend had generally been in the right, and he (Mr. Baines) in the wrong. Yet he had not been altogether in the wrong. He had foreseen the enormous difficulties that would arise on the score of religious teaching, when Government should take the national education under its control. Perhaps he and his Nonconformist Friends had strained their religious scruples; but he must be permitted to point out the great change which had taken place in the attitude of Government and Parliament, and which seemed to him to justify his own change of action. In the Minutes of Council of 1846, introduced by that venerable friend of education, Earl Russell, it was made an absolute condition of a school receiving a Parliamentary grant, that it should give religious instruction, or at least should have the Bible read daily. His hon. Friend the Member for Bristol (Mr. Morley) and himself went to the Government during the Administration of the Earl of Derby, as a deputation from an influential meeting of Nonconformists held in the metropolis, and urged that that condition should be withdrawn. They said they gave, and should continue to give religious instruction in their schools; but they could not do it at the dictation of the Government, or receive a pecuniary bonus for doing it; and they wished that the Government should neither enforce nor prohibit religious teaching, but leave that element to the supporters of the schools, and confine their own action and superintendence to the secular department, and should aid secular schools as well as religious. That was precisely what had been done by his right hon. Friend (Mr. Forster) in the Education Act of 1870. In that Act it was over and over again declared that the grant was made exclusively for the secular teaching; the School Inspectors were instructed not to examine in religious subjects; a strict Conscience Clause was enacted; the use of religious formularies was forbidden in board schools; and it was left to the school boards, elected by the whole body of the ratepayers, to decide whether there should be any religious teaching in their schools, and of what character it should be. The Act was a purely secular Act. When some of the Nonconformists objected to grants being still made to denominational schools, he thought they were mistaken; because the grants were made purely for the secular teaching; and he knew of no Nonconformist principle that forbade the State from making grants even to religious bodies for secular education, provided they were made to religious and secular bodies impartially. Before he sat down he must be allowed to express an opinion that would be distasteful to some of his hon. Friends opposite who were very sensitive as to any increase of rates. He must declare that he believed the question of national education would never be effectually settled until a school board was elected, and at least one undenominational school opened in every school district of the kingdom. At present an enormously disproportionate amount of public money was granted to Church schools, and in many parishes there was no school but a Church school to which Nonconformist children could go. He did not blame those who had provided the schools, and he would not consent to do them injustice or to break faith with them. But Churchmen must see that Nonconformists were not likely to be satisfied with a system which practically forced their children into Church schools; and he believed it would be the best policy of the friends of the Church to promote, rather than oppose, the establishment of undenominational board schools, to which Dissenters could with satisfaction send their children.

Mr. H. Richard

MR. COLLINS said, that if unsectarian schools were to be established in every district for the children of Dissenters, as recommended by the hon Member for Leeds (Mr. Baines), Churchmen might ask that school boards should also establish schools which should be satisfactory to Churchmen. Churchmen preferred that children should receive what they believed to be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, and, as a mere rate-paying question, if Nonconformists were entitled to have unsectarian schools set up by authority of Parliament, the Members of the Church of England were equally entitled to have schools set up that would be suitable to them.

Bill read the third time, and passed.

MERCHANT SHIPPING ACTS AMENDMENT (re-committed) BILL.—[BILL 253.]

(Mr. Bonham-Carter, Mr. Chichester Fortescue,
Mr. Arthur Peel.)

COMMITTEE.

Bill considered in Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Clause 1 and 2 agreed to.

Clause 3 (Particulars to be marked on British ships).

MR. NORWOOD said, that, as several of the clauses contained in the Bill were of a highly penal character, it was only fair to give shipowners time to prepare for the necessary changes. He would, therefore, move as an Amendment, in page 1, line 14, to strike out "January," in order to insert "July." Time should be given for the circulation of the Act before it came into operation. As the Bill now stood, many of its provisions would come into operation immediately on receiving the Royal Assent, and might thereby prove hurtful to many ships which were now away in foreign waters.

MR. CHICHESTER FORTESCUE said, that he would be sorry to postpone the operation of the clause beyond the 1st of January, yet as regarded certain ships not at the time within British jurisdiction, he would specify a period of one month after their arrival in any port of the United Kingdom. There were some other clauses which, perhaps, ought not to come into immediate operation, and he would consider how words could be best introduced to delay their operation upon the Report.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 4 (Particulars to be entered in record of draught of water).

MR. CHICHESTER FORTESCUE moved an Amendment which would prevent any reference being made to the depth of a ship's hold for purposes of registration. It might be very difficult at the last moment to obtain that depth, and he found that, under ordinary circumstances, the Board of Trade had ample means for obtaining such information, without inserting a provision to that effect in an Act of Parliament.

Amendment agreed to.

MR. NORWOOD said, that the measurement of ships contemplated by the clause, to ascertain their buoyancy, was to be taken amidships only. That would not give a full or fair idea of their buoyancy, and he therefore moved in page 2, line 40, to add the words "amidships and at the stem and at the stern," in order that the measurement should be made in three places instead of one. The object of the Amendment was to guard against erroneous impressions as to a ship's seaworthiness that might arise from the fact of the single measurement being put on record. Some vessels had long poops and topgallant forecastles, and others had more sheer than was usual, and so might be safely loaded deeper amidships than other vessels.

Amendment proposed, in page 2, line 40, after the word "side," to insert the words "amidships and at the stem and at the stern."—(Mr. Norwood.)

Question proposed, "That those words be there inserted."

MR. CHICHESTER FORTESCUE observed that the point was a very technical one. He had taken the best professional advice with respect to it, and had been advised that the measurement should be amidships only. He could not, therefore, accept the Amendment.

MR. CANDLISH, in supporting the Amendment, said, that the buoyancy of a ship could not be ascertained if she were measured amidships only.

MR. BATES hoped the right hon. Gentleman the President of the Board of Trade would not assent to the proposed alteration of the clause.

Question put.

The Committee divided: — Ayes 32; Noes 117: Majority 85.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 5 to 18, inclusive, agreed to.

Clause 14 (Appeal from decision of Board of Trade).

MR. HANBURY-TRACY, in moving as an Amendment, in page 6, line 40, to leave out "by the Board of Trade," said, the object of that and following Amendments he wished to make in the clause was to obtain an impartial survey.

MR. CHICHESTER FORTESCUE said he accepted the spirit of the Amendment, but would propose, that instead of leaving out the words suggested, the words "or shipowner" should be added after them.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

On the Motion of MR. CHICHESTER FORTESCUE, Amendment made, in page 6, line 40, after "Trade," by inserting the words "or shipowner."

Clause, as amended, agreed to.

Clause 15 (Power for Board of Trade to vary requirements as to boats.)

MR. MUNTZ proposed an Amendment providing for the enforcement of proper regulations for the lowering of boats on occasions of emergency. They all knew how often lives were lost from the want of some such regulations.

MR. SAMUDA said, the proposed Amendment would saddle the Board of Trade with a large responsibility, and one which the Board would not be able satisfactorily to carry out.

MR. COWPER-TEMPLE hoped the Board of Trade would initiate inquiries, as to what were the best means of saving life in case of shipwreck. He thought that the Amendment ought to be adopted.

MR. CANDLISH said, that if the regulations of that kind were adopted by the Board of Trade the responsibility would be taken off the shoulders of the shipowners, which he thought undesirable.

MR. T. BRASSEY said, it would be simply impossible to keep up the constant supervision which would be necessary if the Amendment were passed.

MR. R. N. FOWLER inquired whether, in the opinion of the right hon. Gentleman, the present state of the law was satisfactory as to life boats?

MR. CHICHESTER FORTESCUE said, he was not prepared to recommend the Committee to impose such serious responsibilities upon the Board of Trade as the Amendment proposed. The clause itself was only intended to be a temporary provision, and it would no doubt be strengthened hereafter, according to the success of the experiments which were being made for saving life. Before the Board of Trade could adopt any of the best appliances the trials must be made at sea, subject to all the conditions of stormy weather. The law as it stood at present did provide that vessels should be duly supplied with boats and all requisites for their use, and, therefore, as the Board of Trade could not at present hope to fulfil the conditions of the Amendment with satisfaction to the public, he must decline to accept it.

MR. MUNTZ said, what he wished to do by his Amendment was to give the Board of Trade power to provide means especially for lowering boats with safety down the sides of vessels when the lives of the passengers and crew were endangered by shipwreck. The want of such means, he believed, was the principal cause of disaster.

MR. BATES believed that the loss of life was chiefly caused by the great fear and tumult which prevailed when a ship was foundering. The clause had better remain as it stood, so that the responsibility of providing the best means of saving life might rest on the shipowner, and not upon the Board of Trade.

MR. ALDERMAN LUSK concurred, and expressed a hope that the responsibility would never be taken away from those on whom the prevention of accidents more immediately depended.

Amendment negatived.

On Question, That the Clause stand part of the Bill?

MR. NORWOOD approved of the clause as far as it went, but regretted that it did not go further. A blot in the original Act of 1854 was the fact of the supply of boats being made proportionate to the scale of the tonnage of the ship, and not to the number of passengers carried. That was a great mistake, and he hoped the Board of Trade would find a remedy for it. Every passenger ship ought to be compelled to carry boats adequate to the number of persons on board. When he had crossed the Channel to the Continent, he had observed that there was nothing like the number of boats required for the passengers on board; while on the other hand, large vessels going long voyages with few passengers had much more boat accommodation than could be of any use.

MR. SAMUDA was of opinion that the clause already went in that direction as far as was practicable. There was the difficulty of stowing the boats, and it was not for want of them that loss of life often occurred. Indeed, one of the greatest shipowners in this country had assured him that the closest observation over a great number of years had led him to the conclusion that these boats had actually caused more loss of life than they had ever saved.

MR. COWPER-TEMPLE suggested that as many of the boats now carried on ships were useless for the purpose of saving life, their place could be supplied by boats and modern appliances which would be of real service.

SIR JOHN HAY entirely approved of the object of the clause, but was desirous of making it more explicit with reference to collisions such as that which resulted in the loss of the Northfleet. He suggested whether words might not be inserted in the clause, providing that in cases of collision the two vessels should be bound to stay by each other until each had ascertained from the other whether any assistance was required.

MR. CHICHESTER FORTESCUE promised to consider the suggestion, and to see whether he could not on the Report bring up words to meet the object in view.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 16 (Duties of masters in case of collision).

MR. MAGNIAC moved the addition of the following words, as a Proviso to the clause :—

"Provided, That the benefit of this clause shall not extend to any foreign vessel, unless mutual advantages shall have been granted by convention or otherwise by the Government of the country to which such foreign vessel may belong."

MR. CHICHESTER FORTESCUE opposed the Amendment. He held that the master of a vessel who was guilty of a crime like that committed by the captain of the Murillo at the beginning of this year ought to be considered to be guilty of a misdemeanour.

Amendment negatived.

MR. CANDLISH complained that the punishment for offences to which the clause related was thrown not upon those who were guilty of such offences—the captains—but upon the unfortunate underwriters.

MR. CHICHESTER FORTESCUE said, that in that respect the clause was a mere re-enactment of the existing law, excepting that for a certain offence the captain was held guilty of a misdemeanour.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 17 (Rule for steamers in narrow channels).

MR. HANBURY-TRACY moved the omission of the clause.

Question put, "That the Clause stand part of the Bill."

The Committee divided:—Ayes 75; Noes 45: Majority 30.

House resumed.

Committee report Progress; to sit again this day.

And it being now Seven of the clock, House suspended its sitting.

House resumed its sitting at Nine of the clock.

SUPPLY.

Order for Committee read.

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair."

INDIA—OFFICERING OF THE INDIAN ARMY.

MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS.

MR. BOURKE, in rising to move—

"That an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty, praying Her Majesty to be graciously pleased to appoint a Royal Commission to inquire into the mode in which European Officers are supplied to the Native Army of India, and to the promotion, pay, pensions, and retiring allowances of such officers," said, that although the subject was a military one, no one could take an interest in Indian affairs without feeling that the efficiency of our Native Army was a subject of prime importance to the future of our Indian Empire. Tranquillity now prevailed in India, but tranquillity there was different from tranquillity in England. In India there were always turbulent tribes on our frontier to watch, and dependent States that were liable to disturbing influences; and although he admitted that good government was the best guarantee for peace, yet good government in India was impossible unless there was behind it a reliable amount of physical force, and that physical force must in a great measure depend upon the Native Army. Again, there was no portion of Indian finance more important than military finance, and no portion of military finance more important than that which related to the European officers of the Native Army. He would exclude all reference to the Artillery in India, which was substantially part of the Royal Artillery. The officering of the Artillery was essentially different from the officering of the Line, to which his Motion would be confined. The House was aware that there prevailed in India what was called the Irregular, as well as the Regular system. The difference between the two systems was this—the Regular regiments were organized very much like our Line regiments, and had a nominal complement of 25 officers. The regiments of the Irregular system had a complement of three European officers, selected from the Regular Army. The duties which the officers of the Regular regiments were called upon to perform, besides their own immediate regimental duties, were numerous. The Army Staff, the military departments, the Commissariat, and the Pay Office were all supplied from the officers of the Regular Army, borne on the effective strength of their regiments, besides the numerous diplomatic, judicial, and police executive duties, which were in many cases performed by officers borne on the regimental strength of the Army. The result of that system was, that instead of there being 25 officers with the Regular regiments the number amounted to about 8 to 12. Upon the policy and effect of the system he would say nothing, except that it had an inevitable tendency to interfere with the military spirit of the officers, and induced them to seek other than military employment with their regiments. There was no subject which had been the theme of more interesting essays and despatches. Forty years ago Lord Metcalfe wrote some most able despatches, and it was curious to see how they applied to the subject now agitating the public mind. The evils were frequently admitted, and before the Mutiny the Directors had authorized an inquiry as to how officers could best be provided to perform detached and State duties. Then came the great event of 1857. Almost the whole of the Bengal Army revolted and disappeared. The Bombay Army generally remained faithful. One regiment of Madras Cavalry showed signs of disaffection, and was disbanded; but almost all contingents, except the Hyderabad Contingent, followed the example of the Bengal Army. In 1858 the government of India was transferred from the Company to the Crown, and by 21 & 22 Vict.

c. 106, s. 56, the advantages with regard to pay, promotion, &c., were secured to the officers on their being transferred to the Crown. Just before the Act passed, a Royal Commission was issued for the purpose of examining generally as to the character of the Army it was desirable to maintain after tranquillity should be restored. That Commission, presided over by General Peel, made their Report on the 7th of March, 1850. The whole matter was referred to India for discussion. All the greatest authorities, military and administrative, were consulted by Lord Canning, and the most elaborate replies, filling a large blue book, were given in answer to queries circulated by Government. Lord Canning called for a Report from the Military Finance Committee, consisting of Colonel Jameson, General Balfour, and General Burn, and in the following year they sent in their Report. Lord Canning wrote an elaborate Minute, and sent home Sir Henry Durand to confer with the authorities; but here he must take care to assure the House in justice to Lord Canning, that he did not suggest or approve of the scheme which was afterwards carried out. General Norman, who was at home at the time, was consulted by Sir Charles Wood. General Norman was an officer of very great administrative talents, and was as distinguished in the field as he was in the council chamber. A General Order was issued on the 10th of April, 1861, by the Governor General, framed in pursuance of Royal Warrants and directions conveyed to him in despatches by the Secretary of State. By that Order, the amalgamation of the two Armies was effected, and the terms of the amalgamation and of the organization of the Native Armies were elaborately set forth. The Native regiments, both Cavalry and Infantry, were to be officered on the Irregular system; and, by a principle of selection, there were to be seven European officers to each regiment. All regimental appointments were to be Staff appointments, to be made from a body then constituted, called the Staff Corps. All existing officers of the Indian Army were to be retained on full pay, and assured promotion, whether there was employment for them or not, or whether qualified or not. Here they were called upon to deal with men, many of whom were unwilling and unqualified.

to enter the Staff Corps, and who had important but undefined rights guaranteed to them, independent of any Regulation which might be framed. They had to deal not only with regimental officers, but with those who were performing Staff duties, police duties, and all other duties. Whether it would have been wiser to have then cut the Gordian knot, and separated the Civil officers who were nominally regimental officers from those who were purely military, he could not say. But the clause guaranteeing existing rights made that very difficult; and, considering the great work which had been done in days of old by the class of men called military civilians, it was not surprising that the Government thought it advisable, on the whole, to retain a system by which military men could be retained for civil employment. The rules, therefore, establishing the Staff Corps were framed, not only for the purpose of establishing a permanent body, to be recruited in future on certain principles, and of regulating the pay, pension, and promotion for the future, but also for the purpose of admitting the old officers into the Staff Corps, who under the Parliamentary guarantee had already statutory rights which could not be interfered with. And besides these, they had the officers on the General List, who had been admitted after the outbreak of the Mutiny, on condition that they would serve where their services were required. The permanent and general rules of the Staff Corps were these—First, admission to the Staff Corps was to be through the Imperial Army, based, in the first instance, on selection, and open to all officers under the rank of captain. But no person was to be selected who was not qualified by a certain amount of service in India and by examination tests; nor without service of a year in a Native regiment. Nor could any officer enter the Staff Corps permanently without having passed a probationary period in that branch of the service for which he might be selected, whether civil or military. Then promotion in the Staff Corps was governed by length of service. 1. Officers after 12 years' service, of which four must have been in the Staff Corps, were to become captains. 2. Officers after 20 years' service, of which six must have been in the Staff Corps, were to become majors. 3. Officers after 26 years' service, of which eight must have been in the Staff Corps, were to become lieutenant-colonels. The pay of the several ranks was laid down; but besides that pay, it was also laid down that every officer would receive, in addition, such a sum as would make his total pay up to the sum assigned by the Government of India to the particular office which he held. A pension list was also laid down for the future; also it was laid down that a certain proportion of the senior officers of the Staff Corps were to receive colonels' allowances in the proportion of one for every 30 officers in the Staff Corps. The colonels' allowances amounted to about £1,200 a-year. All the old officers in civil and military employment who were borne on the cadres of their own regiments, were to be provided for. Rules therefore were made for them. It was decided to admit, in 1861, all the officers in the British and Native Armies below the rank of colonel then on Staff employ in India who were duly qualified; and Staff employment included all civil and political employments of every description, and also employments in the Irregular Corps; but the option of joining the Staff Corps was open only to those who were considered fit for the Staff Corps. Under these rules, therefore, it will be seen that some of the regimental officers might and did join the Staff Corps, while others, who did not, constituted what is called the local officers. Changes were very soon found necessary—I will explain the reason why. I have already said, promotion in the Staff Corps was and is regulated by length of service; the promotion of the local officers, who did not join the Staff Corps, by seniority. The two systems clashed. The system of promotion by length of service interfered with the rights and privileges of the old officers, guaranteed by Act of Parliament. The result, therefore, was that, so far as regimental officers were concerned, great irregularity of promotion occurred, and some officers were superseded by their juniors. Great discontent, great irregularity was the result; and the grievances of many of the officers were brought to the notice of the authorities. A Royal Commission was therefore appointed, which was presided over by Lord Cranworth. In consequence of the Report of that Commission, an Address to the Crown was moved for, in 1865, as to the grievances of officers, and a Commission was appointed, presided over by General Aitchison. Then took place a change, which the admirers of the Staff Corps said had spoiled the whole system. The Staff Corps was thrown open to the whole of the Indian Army. All limits as to the number of colonels' allowances were removed, and two additional pensions of £600 and £750 a-year were added to the pension list. The result of that Order was, that in one year the number of officers leaped from 1,485 to 2,197. There was no doubt that the Staff Corps' system possessed some advantages. The position of the regimental officers in India, belonging to the Staff Corps had been very much improved. Under the new system, every officer must be a colonel in 26 years, and if he commanded a regiment his salary was £1,700. Under the old system, he would probably, if a regimental officer, be still a captain drawing about a third of that sum. There could be no doubt, also, that the officers were very much improved, and for efficiency, they could compare favourably with any service in the world; and though some were superseded by their juniors in regimental command, yet, at the same time, the position of the officers as a whole was incomparably better than it was before 1861. As it was necessary to provide in 1861 for all the officers of the Indian Army, many of whom were unfit for important employment, and as it was necessary, also, to continue to recruit the Staff Corps in order to obtain young and efficient officers, it followed that a great number of unemployed officers must remain on hand as a dead weight. That was one of the most serious sources of embarrassment at the present day. On that subject General Norman said that under a new system, requiring vigour and judgment, many officers who had become unemployed through the Mutiny were not now thought fit for employment, and yet a Government like that of India would be loth to treat them with harshness. The question of those unemployed officers required immediate attention. As to the excess of field officers, in 1862 we had about 4,000 altogether to provide for; while in 1873, we had altogether in the Staff Corps and local body on full pay 3,216, 400 being unemployed. Field officers being allowed to attain that rank after a specified time of service, the number far exceeded the requirements of the service. In 1862 there were 568 lieutenant-colonels and majors; in 1873 there were 1,334; and there was no reason to suppose this proportion would decrease at present. In fact, calculations had shewn that in a few years the number of field officers would be double that of captains and subalterns. In 1862, 4,167 officers cost £1,800,866; in 1873, 3,216 officers cost £2,050,000; so that the staff of officers in 1873 cost £200,000 more than in 1862, although the numbers had been decreased by 20 per cent. Financially, there was no probability that the expense would not go on increasing. Supposing things to remain as at present, the officers drawing colonels' allowances in 1873 were 64, their pay being £72,000, while in 1892 there would be 513, costing £577,000. As remarked by General Broome, military history presented no instance of an Army so constituted, or of one so costly; and not only was a further increase in the proportion of field officers inevitable, but under the rule granting the colonels' allowances to lieutenant colonels of 12 years' standing, a large and steadily augmenting proportion of field officers would be in receipt of that allowance. That the present system of officering the Indian Army would bear the strain of war was doubted by men of the highest authority, and in Abyssinia it completely broke down. Eleven officers were posted to each regiment instead of seven, and the Madras Army was largely indented upon for subalterns to make up that complement. Lord Sandhurst had been obliged to represent that the three Presidencies had been simply drained to supply Lord Napier's wants, some British regiments having been emptied of their officers in a manner almost unexampled, and most injurious to the interests of the service. Lord Sandhurst added that had the war lasted, all future demands for officers, which from the nature of the service would have been considerable, must have been supplied from England, Indian resources having come to an end while if in the service now proceeding in the Hazara District, 30 or 40 officers were put hors de combat—a likely enough contingency whether from sickness or wounds, he should not know where to find the men to replace them, and the Native regiments might easily come to be devoid of good officers. There were defects in the Staff Corps' system which nobody could deny. In the first place, every step of advancement was liable to separate the officer from his regiment; and, further, it could not be denied that a system of selection led to jealousies and heart burnings. The view he was expressing was supported by many eminent authorities, and, among others, by Sir Henry Durand—

1st. That regarded as a system of military organization, the Staff Corps, constituted as it was at first, and modified as it has since been, was a mistake and proves a failure.

2nd. That regarded as a system of ancillary civil organization and administration, it is full of anomalies, inelastic and teaming with sources of embarrassment and difficulty.

3rd. That strive as we may to bolster up and improve the Staff Corps system thus constituted, it cannot last, and that consequently it is only a question of more or less time given to temporary shifts and expedients ere a thorough reorganization will be forced upon Government. That event may take place, either in prudence before or else after a signal collapse under the strain of war; but it is to my mind absolutely inevitable. Shifts and expedients may delay, but they cannot dispense with the unavoidable and pending necessity for a radical reform.

Looking at that question as a financial one, he regarded it as one which might damage altogether the finances of our Indian Empire. Those finances had during the last few years shown a steady progress, and it would be a great calamity if anything should occur to prevent the continuation of that progress and improvement. He believed it was not too late to devise measures to prevent that increase in our military expenditure which he believed to be desirable. No stone, therefore, ought to be left unturned, and no pains spared to accomplish that great object. He believed the proposal he was about to make was a prudent one. The Government of India had at its command able and experienced men who understood the Staff Corps system; but they were all men who had given opinions on the system, and he thought it would be a great assistance to have the opinion of men who would bring fresh minds to the subject, and give their opinion without prejudice or foregone conclusion. The ultimate decision would, of course, rest with the Secretary of State, and upon this subject he wished to say a few words. The proposal of his hon. Friend the Member for the Border Burghs. (Mr. Trevelyan) proposed to leave everything as it was at present. He believed that if that course was taken the proposal of the Government, if indeed any were made, would lack the authority and weight which they would have had if made upon the authority of a Royal Commission; and so strongly did he feel that, that he should certainly take the opinion of the House on his proposal, unless he was assured by his hon. Friend the Under Secretary of State for India that steps were being taken in order to effect reforms in a direction which would in his opinion contribute to the future welfare and the general interest of our Indian Empire. The hon. and learned Gentleman concluded by moving the Resolution of which he had given notice.

MR. R. N. FOWLER, in seconding the Motion, said, that the question was one of vast importance, and ought to be fully discussed. He was sorry that the forms of the House would prevent the second Amendment, of which Notice had been given by his noble Friend the Member for Haddingtonshire (Lord Elcho), from being put, for he thought the claims of the officers of the late Indian Army for compensation for the loss of regimental bonus ought to be abolished. The Amendment of the hon. Member for the Border Burghs (Mr. Trevelyan) proposed to leave the matter to the Government of India; but he thought it would be well to entrust the inquiry to eminent men who would be able to give their whole attention to the subject, because, although he fully acknowledged the great talents of those who were now connected with the Government of India, he thought their time was too fully occupied to undertake an investigation of this sort. As a Member of the Committee which was sitting on the question of Indian finance, he was fully alive to the importance of reducing the expenditure of the Indian Government as much as possible; but at the same time, full justice ought to be done to those gallant men who were the successors of those who had won India for us. It was most important, in any reductions which might be made, that efficiency should be combined with economy, and we should not therefore send out more officers than were absolutely necessary to maintain the efficiency of the service. A point, also, well worth ascertaining was whether a Native Army was specially necessary for the interests of India, and whether it should or not be maintained.

Amendment proposed,

To leave out from the word "That" to the end of the Question, in order to add the words "an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty, praying Her Majesty to be graciously pleased to appoint a Royal Commission to inquire into the mode in which European Officers are supplied to the Native Army of India, and to the promotion, pay, pensions, and retiring allowances of such officers,"—(Mr. Bourke,)—

—instead thereof.

Question proposed, "That the words proposed to be left out stand part of the Question."

MR. TREVELYAN, who had given Notice of his intention to move the following Resolution as an Amendment to the Motion of the hon. and learned Gentleman the Member for King's Lynn (Mr. Bourke)— said, that Amendment was not of a hostile character to the Motion which had just been made. That discussion could not do anything but good, and his object was the same as that of the hon. and learned Gentleman who had just sat down, though he (Mr. Trevelyan) differed as to the appropriate remedies which were necessary in our Indian military system. Speaking roughly, our Indian Army consisted of 65,000 European troops, with a Native Army of 180,000 men, the latter being composed almost entirely of Cavalry and Infantry, for since the Mutiny the Artillery had been almost entirely European. Thus the 3,800 officers, with whose grievances we had so much to do, and of whose defective organization we had heard so much, belonged exclusively to what in England was called the Line. The conditions of service of these officers were absolutely unprecedented in the history of any civilized nation. He used the words "civilized nation" advisedly, because it really required a high state of civilization to invent a system so cumbersome, and one so utterly wanting in all the essential attributes of military effi-ency and financial economy as that on which our Indian Army was at present officered. A system so monstrous never was devised, was never even foreseen as a whole by any human intellect, nor did the responsibility of the system rest with any single Minister. It reached its present position by gradual growth under one Minister after another, and under circumstances of great and special difficulty. The old Indian Army consisted of 275,000 men, comprising 155 regiments of Infantry and 21 of Cavalry, besides 37 Irregular regiments. During the Mutiny that vast Force underwent an entire change. Excepting 12 Regular regiments, the old Bengal Army melted away, and in the crisis of the Mutiny was replaced by numbers of corps of Punjabees, Ghoorkas, and loyal sepoys, raised by the exertions of individual officers. The suppression of the Mutiny left us with an immense amorphous force of officers without regiments, and regiments with the merest handful of officers, and it was not till May, 1861, that some order was evolved from this military chaos. The whole Force was broken up, the Indian Army in all the Presidencies being reduced to about 140 regiments; and at the same time an important change occurred—the transformation of the Army from a Regular to an Irregular Force. Of the grievances of the officers of that Force much had been heard. He begged the House to keep the two questions of the grievances of the officers and the organization of our Indian Army, quite separate. He did not wish to depreciate the importance of the question, or to disparage the claims of so splendid a service; but those grievances concerned mere individual interests and financial considerations, whereas the organization of our Indian Army was a question upon which, to our shame, we had heard little, though it concerned the very existence of our Indian Empire. The regiments of the old Indian Army had a full complement of 25 officers, who were attached to their regiments in the same manner and on the same terms as the officers in the English regiments, indeed, in some respects, far more closely. Exchanges had not been allowed for 35 years. The regimental system, of which so much was heard in 1870, existed in all its integrity. Each officer had definite duties, commanding a company or a troop, and though many of the more able and fortunate were withdrawn for Staff employment, enough remained to officer every portion of the regiment. Side by side with that system existed also 35 or 40 Irregular regiments which had been raised by officers of great ability; they picked their own subalterns from the entire body of the Indian Army, and the consequence was, that they got the very best men for officers. In the Cavalry, the soldiers owned their own horses, and were of a much higher stamp than ordinary soldiers, and they had the greatest confidence in their leaders. The success of those special corps inspired the Government with the idea of forming the whole Army upon their model; and therefore each regiment, instead of being commanded by a regular hierarchy of colonel, major, captain, and lieutenant, with special duties, was to be officered by six or seven officers—a commandant, two wing officers, two wing subalterns, a quarter-master, and an adjutant. When the Army was attempted to be constituted upon this plan, the essential vice of the system was that it was worked by picked officers. Formerly we had 4,000 officers out of whom to choose for 37 regiments; but by turning the whole Army into an Irregular force, we did not, unfortunately, turn all the officers into men like Nicholson and Chamberlain, Jacob Fane and Probyn. The case was still more important when we came to the rank and file. The old Irregular regiments were made out of warlike races on the North-West frontier, and they required constant fighting on the frontier to keep up their warlike spirit, for the great characteristic of half-civilized races was that when they ceased fighting among themselves their warlike spirit died out rapidly; and most fortunate for us that was. There were large portions of India from which we still drew sepoys, where there was no more natural taste for a military life than there was among the Syrians or Egyptians under the Roman Empire; for instance, the inhabitants of Madras, and to a great extent of Bahar and Bombay, were not natural soldiers, and required perpetual drilling and the constant supervision of European officers to make them efficient at all, and even then it was doubtful whether they were worth much. We could not change the nature of a population by a stroke of the pen, and it was the very fanaticism of theory to imagine that by dressing a fat old Madras rassaldar in a turban and jack-boots you could turn him into a dashing partisan, like one of Probyn's Punjabees. In fact, with regard to the Madras Cavalry, the absurdity of the notion was so egregious, that the transformation of them into Irregular Horse had been indefinitely postponed. The plain thing to be done was not to continue in that unfortunate and ruinously expensive course of keeping up a large force drawn from an unwarlike population; but we ought to disband, or largely to diminish that force, and replace it by a much smaller number of real fighting men, drawn from the warlike population of the North-West Provinces, and officered on a proper system. That was the more necessary from the large increase that was going on in the Indian police. The police in India now numbered from 130,000 to 150,000 or 160,000 men, and the expense of keeping it up had been increasing by something like 500,000 of rupees during the last six years. If that were done, where would be the necessity for appointing a Commission? The appointment of a Commission would convey an indirect censure on the Indian Government, which had proved itself to a high degree capable of facing the difficulties which must be surmounted before India was provided with a reasonably cheap and an entirely effective force. In 1869, the Home Government called upon the Indian Government to make a searching and general revision of military expenditure in all its branches; and the Indian Government, under Lord Mayo, instituted that inquiry, and sent home recommendations for large reductions in the Madras and Bombay Armies, but they stated that the Bengal Army could not be reduced with any safety to the Empire. In an evil hour the Secretary for India wrote that it was impossible to take this plan into consideration, because, in breaking up regiments, they did not dispose of the officers, or relieve the state of their military pay, and that there should be some general system of gradual reduction in all portions of the Empire equally. That despatch, dated the 27th of January, 1870, was a confession that an excess of military force was kept up in India, not for the sake of the efficiency of the Army, but for the sake of the officers. On that consideration Her Majesty's Government recommended that the reduction should be made not in Madras, where the Army was comparatively useless, nor in Bombay, but that it should be equally carried out in all the Presidencies, including that in which our military force was only just equal to the demand. It was all very well to say that they wanted a Commission; but the men actually concerned in the matter said they did not need any inquiry, that the House was already in possession of all the information necessary for its purpose, and that further inquiry would not be necessary for at least two years more. The present Viceroy brought to bear on the question a familiarity with military organization acquired during an altogether exceptional period of activity in our War Department. It was beyond doubt that it was possible to make our Native Army a far more formidable fighting machine at a far less cost to the taxpayers of India. That was a task by which the present Viceroy might be well satisfied if he could illustrate his tenure of office; and that task, seconded as he would be by the assistance of the ablest officers that could be secured, without aid or hindrance from a Royal Commission, he was well able to perform. Then as to the alleged enormous expense of the Staff Corps, to which his hon. and learned Friend alluded, and as to which he failed to suggest any remedy. He (Mr. Trevelyan) doubted whether a Royal Commission would have more wisdom or discernment in connection with that subject than his hon. and learned Friend himself. The evil of the system was, officers had been promoted, not according to the requirements of the service, but with a small decreasing number of exceptions according to a General List, on which they rose according to the length of time during which each officer had served in a particular grade. Of course, at the foundation of the Staff Corps it was intended that the rapidity of regimental promotion should only represent the average rapidity of regimental promotion. The result showed the danger of departing from a healthy system. The only justifiable system of promotion was according to the exact requirements of the public service. The consequence of departing from that system was, that the pressure of private interests became so strong that the period of passing from rank to rank was unduly shortened. The moment the Government attempted to solve the question by substituting for the Parliamentary guarantee the right of admittance to a privileged corps, it was morally certain that no peace would be had until every officer obtained the same advantages. In fact, it would have been far better to have swallowed the whole thing at once, and to have admitted all officers to the Staff Corps; and whatever might be the ultimate burden, whether half a million or a million, it would be the greatest sum ever drawn from a subject-nation not for Imperial purposes, but to subsidize individual interests. It was absolutely essential that the Government should, without delay and without the possibility of giving rise to any future controversy, lay down clearly and for ever the terms on which all officers not belonging to the old Indian Army who had joined the Staff Corps since 1860, and who were joining it now, should serve. The experience of the past told us how dangerous it was to leave open these questions of promotion and pension. The whole story of Indian military organization during the last 12 years had taught us that in dealing with public servants during a great change in the conditions of their service, it was absolutely necessary that pecuniary compensation should be exactly proportioned to pecuniary loss. The present Government, in their Bill of 1870, adopted a sound policy, directly opposed to that which had brought the finances of the Indian Army into such inextricable confusion. The Government would be assisted in their task by the heads of the civil and military Departments in India, and to their combined efforts, warned as they would be by this discussion, and by the disclosures made before the Select Committee upstairs, he should leave the re-organization of our Native Army with more confidence than he should feel in those of any Commission, however well selected.

"That, while immediate and earnest attention should be given to the mode in which European Officers are supplied to the Native Army of India, and to the position and emoluments of those Officers, the responsibility of ascertaining and proposing such steps as should be taken for the reform of the present system ought, in the opinion of this House, to be left to the authorities entrusted with the Government of India."—

Lord ECHO thought the hon. and learned Member for King's Lynn had shown good ground for the gravest consideration of the state of the Indian Army by Her Majesty's Government. It was essential, in the mode of appointing the Army, that they should have content, and not discontent, in all the grades, from the highest to the lowest; and it was the more necessary because the question could not be decided by the vote of the House on that occasion, but would have to be left to the discretion of the Indian Government, and of the Home Government. He (Lord Elcho) had intended to move as an Amendment to the Motion of his hon. and learned Friend, an addition to the effect that the claims made by a large number of officers of the late Indian Army for compensation for the loss of their regimental bonus should be also referred to that Royal Commission. But he was precluded from moving the addition by the Forms of the House, and, as no Commission was likely to be appointed, all he could do was to urge upon the Government the necessity of dealing with the two questions together, as he did not think they could be kept separate or distinct. The question should be considered by some impartial tribunal either here or in India. A system of regimental bonus for the purpose of accelerating promotion had existed in the Indian Army, and was finally sanctioned by the Government, in order to induce contentment amongst the officers, upon which feeling depended the efficiency of that Army. Lord Derby, when Secretary of State for India, said that the privileges of the officers would be reserved; and, in 1860, Sir Charles Wood repeated the same assurance. Could any case be stronger? There were—the title, from the East India Company, of 1837, the Parliamentary guarantee of 1858, the statement then that it was a Parliamentary guarantee, a confirmation of this two years later, and another statement at that time by the Secretary of State of what was intended. Yet, in spite of this, the claims of the officers were disregarded when, in 1861, the introduction of the system of Staff Corps destroyed the regimental system, and no compensation was given. The result being an appeal from Caesar on the Treasury bench to Ossar in the House of Commons, on a Motion made by the hon. and gallant Member for Harwich (Colonel Jervis), in May, 1865, when the House decided by a large majority that the matter should be considered by the Government, and the claim of the officers dealt with in the sense of these guarantees. No further action was taken until

Lord Cranborne (the present Marquess of Salisbury), as Secretary of State, directed that the question should be considered, subject to deduction for any benefit the officers might have derived from their subscriptions. As Colonel Sykes afterwards said, the generous-minded Lord Salisbury must have acted upon the sordid advice of subordinates, in offering compensation with one hand and taking it away with the other. Claims of £250, £420, and £4,421 were reduced to nothing; and, to quote Colonel Sykes again, the claims of the officers were met with meanness and heartlessness. That that was the opinion of the House of Commons was shown by a Resolution it adopted at the time, directing a further consideration of the subject. Since then, in answer to the Address on the subject, the Duke of Argyll sent to the different Presidencies in India instructions to see whether Lord Cranborne's despatch had been put into operation, with a due regard to the interests of the officers. He might mention that the officers absolutely repudiated that despatch in regard to the way in which it proposed to deal with their claims. In the Presidency of Bengal it was held that the interests of the officers had been well considered; but from that opinion Lord Napier, the Commander-in-Chief, evidently dissented, because his name was not appended to the document; and the Presidencies of Bombay and Madras were very strongly opposed to the opinion of the Madras Presidency. That was the position of this matter in the year 1870. He now came to the year 1871, when upon the Bill for the re-organization of the Army, we were called upon to consider the analogy between the bonus system in India and the purchase system in this country. That analogy was this—that both were intended to secure more rapid promotion and enable younger men to get to the heads of regiments; but the difference was this—that the bonus system and the purchase system were both forbidden nominally by law, and although in England there was a semblance of standing by the law, things were allowed to go on to such an extent that a Royal Commission reported that Parliament could not avoid dealing with the question. The House then felt it necessary to deal with over-regulation as well as regulation prices, and pay officers in full, on their retirement, under the Bill of 1870. The East India Company acted more fairly; because instead of winking at it, they considered it was necessary, and said they did not intend to make any alteration, as the officers were entitled to it when they left the Army. The principle of the Bill having been carried, the fights in Committee were upon the way of giving effect to the abolition of purchase; the majorities of the Government were reduced from 120 to 16; and the hon. Member for Gravesend (Sir Charles Wingfield) got an Amendment put into the Bill of 1871 for the benefit, not of all the officers who had served in India, but only for a section of them—namely, the Infantry regiments of the Line; and within the last week the same hon. Gentleman had been assured by the Secretary of State that the Engineers and Artillery would be placed on a similar footing. In conclusion, he maintained that the officers who complained had a strong and good case, resting on a Parliamentary guarantee, and on the statements made in that and the other House by Ministers responsible for the government of India; and he did hope, whether by a Royal Commission, or whether by the Government themselves, that the matter would be considered fairly and generously as regarded the officers. He believed that distrust and discontent existed, arising from a sense of injustice; and he did not think it was wise in any Government, however strong, to ignore the prevalence of feelings of that kind among such a body. It had been wittily said, that the difference between a man with a strong will and one with a weak will was, that the former said, "I will," and the latter, "I won't;" and it would be not only a gracious act, but a sign of strength, if the Government yielded to the reasonable request of the officers, whether of the English or the Indian service, and he trusted they would bear in mind what His Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief had said in "another place," a few days ago, about the discontent in the Army, and the expediency of steps being taken to satisfy the officers that their complaints would be heard.

GENERAL SIR GEORGE BALFOUR said, at that late hour of the night, and in view of other hon. Members addressing the House, on the present important question, he would endeavour to condense his remarks in the briefest possible way. That was the more practicable, seeing that the hon. and learned Member for King's Lynn had placed before the House a remarkably clear exposition of the former and present system of officering the Army of India. He could not refrain from expressing to the hon. and learned Member his best thanks for the labour he had devoted in order to make the question quite clear to the House and to the country. He would only add that the regimental system of India, which had the sanction of Pitt and Dundas in the last century, and had borne the strain of war for a long period, was changed in 1861 by Sir Charles Wood, contrary to the wishes of the Indian Government. It was also introduced at a most unfavourable time, when the finances of India were in an embarrassed state, owing to the expenditure to quell the Mutiny of the Bengal Army. It distracted attention from the great question of financial reform, and it came on the country when all were labouring to aid the hon. Member for Orkney (Mr. Laing) to free India from the serious embarrassments which then weighed upon that country. That change was made in spite of advice and warning, and with nothing whatever to guide the Secretary of State in introducing such vast changes as were made by Sir Charles Wood in the entire constitution and organization of the Indian Army. It was based upon the plea of economy; whereas it had involved India in an unlimited expenditure, and they now saw its results in discontent and dissatisfaction, and with great distrust as to its efficiency in war, as the hon. and learned Member had so clearly pointed out. As one who had had long experience of Native troops, as an adjutant of a Native battalion of India, and from having served in the field both with Europeans and with sepoys, he maintained that though an admirer of the Native Forces, yet the efficiency of the Native Army of India depended entirely on the number and efficiency of European officers; that unless the white faces were well to the front, leading on the men, and setting them an example, it would be found some day that a failure would happen to us, and some great disaster prove the inefficiency of the present organization. There ought to be a searching inquiry made, and the Secretary of State who introduced those changes ought to be required to explain his reasons for doing so, and to be held responsible for the bad results of his administration. With regard to the principle of selection, which was the most prominent feature in the Staff Corps system, he would ask what selection could they have from a body of officers even now quite insufficient in number for the duties which had to be performed? The strongest objection to the organization which Sir Charles Wood destroyed was the selection of regimental officers from regimental duties for Staff employ, leaving a residuum with the regiments. But that was even now the practice. At present, they had many battalions with not fewer than five field officers, and, in some instances, three of these were full colonels. They had also many regiments without any subalterns, but all consisting of captains and field officers. They could not expect old officers to go and do the work which should be done by subalterns. Where were they to select from, and who were to be the selectors? Instead of selection, they would come to an absolute system of seniority. Indeed, so difficult was it now to pass over old but respectable officers, that commands of battalions were, as shown by the list, entrusted to the senior colonels in the service, thus proving that seniority, and not selection, was in force. That result had been long foreseen, for the Duke of Cambridge had stated in evidence, that selection would be fatal, and that all they could do was to have a veto on the rise of officers. He hoped that defective system would be put an end to, for it was causing the greatest discontent and dissatisfaction in India. The second question before the House was the Resolution regarding the bonus payments of the old India Army; and, having considerable experience of the practice of paying old officers to retire from active service, he must add that he entirely agreed with all that had been said by the noble Lord the Member for Haddingtonshire with regard to the bonus system. These contributions were begun at the distinct instigation and encouragement of the Indian Government, at home and abroad, and, in proof, he would refer to the despatch of the 25th April, 1829, from the Government of India, pointing out the necessity for accelerating the promotion of the European officers of the Indian Army. That document was obtained from the India Office, on the Motion of the hon. and gallant Member for Harwich (Colonel Jervis), who, 10 years ago, earnestly laboured on behalf of the Indian officers, and had his advice been then taken, many of the difficulties now felt would have been prevented. The despatch from India advised the Home Government to establish a fund for the purpose of accelerating promotion by buying out old officers. That despatch was from Lord William Bentinck, the Governor General and Commander-in-Chief in India, one of the greatest of economists. The principle it advocated was approved of by a despatch from the Board of Control in 1832, conveying to the Directors of the East India Company the approval of the Government of England for retiring funds being formed in the Indian Army. That system, as at first proposed, was a subscription on the part of regimental officers, combined with a subscription on the part of the Government, by which the retirement of old officers should be accelerated. The Court of Directors distinctly authorized the formation of these funds. They encouraged officers to subscribe as he could positively assert from his own experience, for soon after his arrival in India he was actively engaged, in conjunction with a comrade now not far distant, in the management of one of those subscriptions to the regimental fund. They were then young subalterns amenable to a committee of seven officers, and would have been immediately reported and restrained by their superior officers, and by the commandant of the regiment, had they been infringing the orders of Government. But, on the contrary, the superior officers themselves joined in the management of the fund, and the collection of subscriptions was carried on publicly, with the full knowledge of all the high authorities, and with the sanction of Government, who facilitated the collections through the Accountant General; and the system thus practically recognized continued in force throughout all his term of service, until it was put an end to by the change in the organization of the service which was made in 1861. That change was made by the Secretary of State for India of his own accord, without the approval of the Government of India, and as it was made for the good of the service, as asserted at the time, it was only just that compensation should be given to officers who had paid their money without any chance of obtaining value for it, or of having it returned to them owing to these changes. Those payments had effected great good. They enabled many old and formerly good officers to retire at a time when they felt a difficulty in continuing in active employment. Without that purchased retirement, the Government would have expended much larger sums to effect those promotions of officers which the efficiency of the service demanded. It was, therefore, most ungrateful for the Government to refuse the payment of compensation, now that the officers could no longer help themselves. He had himself paid upwards of £2,000, for which his promotion had been accelerated by six months. That was all the advantage he got by it, and, yet, if afterwards he had applied for the payment of the bonus on retirement, he would have had the amount of the pay for the six months' acceleration of rank deducted from the bonus; and that, notwithstanding he had been upwards of 18 years in the rank of subaltern, and 32 years in the rank of subaltern and captain. That was the course ordered by Lord Cranborne's despatch of 8th August, 1866; but it was not consistent with justice. It was, moreover, in marked contrast with the liberality of the right hon. Gentleman the Secretary of State for War, who, only a few evenings since, announced to the House that any officer of the Home Army could, when desirous of leaving the Army, walk down to the office of the Purchase Commissioners, and there obtain, without any deduction, a cheque for the full value of his commission. There was, indeed, a marked difference between that and the treatment of the India bonuses under Lord Cranborne's despatch. He hoped the question would, at length, be fairly considered. He entreated the Government to put an end to the discontent which prevailed, and appoint an independent arbitration to decide, in order that justice might be done to the officers whatever might be the consequences.

MR. GRANT DUFF said, with a view to shorten this discussion, and fix attention upon the issue they had to decide, he would pass over the early history of the bonus question, which had been so often before Parliament, and come at once to January, 1861. There existed in the old Army of the Company, which became at that date the Indian Army of the Crown, a practice of subscribing in each regiment to buy out officers who retired, for the purpose of accelerating promotion, before reaching the rank of lieutenant-colonel. That practice was in most regiments irregular and spasmodic—sometimes followed, sometimes not. It had been pronounced illegal by the Courts of Law, but was, nevertheless, after being winked at for some years, permitted by the Government. Still, it was a perfectly private arrangement, nothing like our authorized system of purchase ever having existed in the Company's Army. The amalgamation of the Indian Army of the Crown with its Western Army made the continuance of the bonus system almost useless, and indeed to a great extent impracticable, and those who had maintained it began very naturally to cast about for some method of getting compensation. First they tried to have its cessation represented as a breach of the Parliamentary guarantee, and accordingly they took measures to have it considered by Lord Cranworth's Commission, which reported in 1863. That Commission, however, reported that it was no breach of the Parliamentary guarantee, and that Parliament had never guaranteed the bonus system in any shape or form. A second Commission was appointed under the presidency of Sir John Aitchison, with reference to the Parliamentary guarantee, and that Commission reported in 1865; but again that Commission treated the bonus system as altogether outside the Parliamentary guarantee, and did not even notice it. The argument from the Parliamentary guarantee was then abandoned, and the question was argued on the broad ground of equity as between a State and some of its servants. The principle of Lord Cranborne's settlement was this—he gave up the contest as to the legality or illegality of the bonus system. He said—"I will recognize your bonus system; and I will do more. The arrangements consequent on a great State exigency having had the incidental effect of making your bonus system unworkable, I will take care that each of you shall have returned to him the money which he subscribed under the bonus system, after setting off the money which he received in consequence of the arrangements which led to the sweeping away of the bonus system. You shall, in short, lose nothing, and the State—that is, the Indian taxpayer—shall lose everything which is necessary to shield you from loss.” Lord Cranborne’s concessions were announced by himself on the 6th day of August, 1866, and were received with every appearance of acquiescence and satisfaction. His despatch to the Government of India embodying his concessions was laid upon the Table. Not a word was said against it. It was not till long afterwards that any symptoms of dissatisfaction arose, when the committees in India, composed, be it remembered, of persons who naturally sympathized with the complaining officers, were found not to give to the complaining officers such large sums as they had expected. Then it was that recourse was had once more to the old agitation. But it was said that Lord Cranborne had no right to deduct the money advantages gained by promotion from the sums advanced by the various officers under the bonus system. If he had not a right so to do, why did not the persons who had then charge of the case of the officers object at the time? The answer was obvious. They saw the equity of the arrangement. The money was paid by the various officers for the express purpose of obtaining rapid promotion, and if they got rapid promotion they got what they paid for. Promotion, and rapid promotion, was what the Indian officer sighed for, and what he meant to buy by his bonus payments. Authorities on all sides of politics were against the demands now made. The House of Commons of 1866, a long and unbroken succession of Secretaries of State and of Viceroys, with their respective Councils, were to be put in the one scale, as against a single Governor of Bombay on the other. Parliament having deliberately created the Indian Council for the express purpose of guarding the India Treasury, was the House of Commons, yielding to pressure against which the Council was guarded. going to pass a Resolution in the very teeth of the Indian Council, which would be inoperative unless the sum of £600,000 should be straightway taken out of the Indian Treasury and given to various claimants whom the Council, in spite of their natural sympathies with men along with many of whom they had lived all their lives, believed to have no just claim whatever upon the Indian Treasury. He could not believe a proceeding so unjust and impolitic as the re-opening of this question by referring it to a Royal Commission would find favour with the House. With regard to the present organization of the Indian Army, it was the result of very extraordinary and terrible events, the suddenness of which hardly allowed the country or its rulers to consider what should be done with the calmness and deliberation appropriate to great affairs. Possibly what was done was the best that could have been done under all the circumstances. Very possibly it was, but he would not say that as modified by what had been done since, it was the final outcome of human sagacity. The mode in which European officers were supplied to the Native Army of India, and to certain civil and political offices and Departments deserved careful scrutiny, and it, or indeed all the matters referred to in his hon. and learned Friend’s Motion, might be susceptible of improvement. Many unjust strictures as well as some just ones had been directed against the Staff Corps, which had been held responsible for things which formed no part of it as originally devised, and would form no part of it, if it were to exist till the end of the century. The unhappy plethora of field officers formed no part of the original Staff Corps organization, but was the result of a Resolution carried in that House against Sir Charles Wood and the then Government of India, and the adoption of this Resolution would repeat one of the worst mistakes ever made in Indian government. The act which produced this plethora was taken by the late Conservative Government; but neither it nor any other Government could, under the circumstances, have done otherwise. Its consequences, however, would cease as soon as the officers of the old local Army then allowed to join the Staff Corps had died out, which in the nature of things would happen before the end of the century. The number of field officers, indeed, would reach its maximum in about four years, and by 1891 or so, the Staff Corps, if it existed, would be constituted as originally intended. The anticipations of enormously increased colonels' allowances were the result partly of miscalculations, but largely of a desire that such miscalculations should be correct; many officers in India being anxious, as there happily seemed no prospect of active service, to get a good round sum from the Government in compensation for their prospective allowances, and to bid India adieu. The last figures put before him showed that while in 1861 the officers' pay and colonels' allowances amounted to £2,046,993, and in 1871 to £2,128,095, in 1881 the sum would be £2,180,519, and in 1891 only £1,914,859. Obviously, therefore, the writers who predicted a terrible burden to the Indian taxpayer from colonels' allowances had forgotten to set off the diminished amount of pay to effective officers and retiring pensions. He might go on to point out that in many other ways the Staff Corps had had scant justice done to it by half-informed opinion. Nevertheless, he did not come down to-night to defend it as a perfect machine, or even to assert that it would be a permanent institution. The tenor of advices from India was such as to lead the Government to believe that the present Viceroy was going to take up the whole subject of our military organization, and to examine it impartially, precisely in the way in which the hon. and learned Member for King's Lynn desired that it should be examined by a Royal Commission. He had telegraphed to this country, begging the Government in the very strongest way not to complicate his position by agreeing to the appointment of a Royal Commission, and his hon. and learned Friend would doubtless be unwilling to increase the Viceroy's difficulties. If Lord Northbrook and the Home Government, in whatever hands that Government might be, failed to place the local military service in India on such a footing as might be acceptable to his hon. and learned Friend, then it would be time enough to move for a Royal Commission. He trusted his hon. and learned Friend would feel that he had done enough by calling public attention to the subject in a very able speech, and by eliciting from him (Mr. Grant Duff), as the representative of the Government of India here and in India, the fact that the Government was prepared to—nay, he might say, had actually begun to, take the large subject which he had laid before them into its consideration.

Mr. Grant Duff

MR. LAING, being the only Member of that House who had served on the Council with Lord Canning in India at the time when the change was introduced, felt it due to that Nobleman's memory to bear testimony to the fact that he was in no degree responsible for that measure. The changes which led to the deplorable results described by the hon. and learned Member for King's Lynn were forced in successive steps upon Lord Canning's Government by influences at home. Under the old system, prior to the establishment of the Staff Corps, we had an Indian Army, separate from that of the Queen, the supply of its officers being kept up by the nomination of cadets, who were generally the sons of country gentlemen who had been connected with India. On the amalgamation of the Armies that system was recklessly destroyed. There never, in his opinion, was a greater want of political wisdom shown than in the measures which were adopted in consequence of the transfer of the East Indian Service to the Crown. The Staff Corps was regarded at the time as a means of recruiting our Indian officers from the Queen's officers who chanced at the time to be serving in India. The assimilation of the services, however, was to lead to the necessity of establishing a most expensive Staff Corps with very great prizes, and to the general adoption of the Irregular instead of the Regular system. The testimony of all military men, however, who were connected with India was, that, in order to make the Native regiments efficient for actual warfare the first condition was that they should have a large complement of European officers. Even the Madras regiments, which had been so much decried, had on many occasions done good service, when they were led to action by European officers whom they respected, and who set them a gallant example. When, however, these were converted into Irregular regiments they were worth nothing; therefore, in his judgment, it was impossible to reconcile efficiency with economy so long as the Irregular system was made the starting point. While he perceived the magnitude of the evil, he hailed with great satisfaction the pledge of his hon. Friend the Under Secretary of State that the Staff Corps should not be a permanent institution. He hoped, however, the authorities who would have to consider the matter, would be prepared to go a good deal further, and that if they were satisfied the system founded contrary to the advice of Lord Canning in 1861 was a failure, they would be prepared to sweep it away, giving of course a liberal compensation to all vested interests. As regarded compensation to officers, he wished to vindicate the memory of Lord Canning, and also his Advisers, from all responsibility for what had since occurred. He could say that had his hands been as free to deal with the Indian Army as he had been to deal with the Indian Navy, none of this discontent would have occurred. It had been too much the custom to appoint officers who had names from birth, rather than from merit to high and efficient positions, thereby destroying that emulation which was necessary in the Army. More than that the Government had resorted to a system of economy, which was not consistent with efficiency. His experience in India proved to him that the most economical way in which the grievances in question could have been dealt with, was by the adoption of the policy to which the Secretary for War had recourse in abolishing Purchase—namely, the giving of a just and liberal compensation to all who had vested interests. They had had a body of officers for an Army of 250,000 men, but from the effects of the Mutiny and the financial exigencies of the war, that number was reduced to 130,000. The difficulties which necessarily resulted would have been best met by the adoption, not of half measures, but of a liberal policy, for the most fruitful source of extravagance was ill-timed parsimony. He believed that that like other serious evils, had arisen from the united wisdom of the Governor and his Council in India being controlled and over-ruled by the Government at Home. He had more confidence in Lord Northbrook getting out of the difficulty than in a Royal Commission dealing with the matter; and therefore he could not vote for the Motion of the hon. and learned Member, although he cordially agreed in all he had said, and trusted that after the assurance of the Under Secretary of State, he would not go to a division.

SIR STAFFORD NORTHCOTE hoped his hon. and learned Friend who had brought the question forward would be content with the discussion that had taken place, and would not press his Motion to a division, especially when he considered that it had taken so satisfactory a direction. He agreed with the hon. Gentleman who had just sat down, that India had suffered to a considerable extent from the way in which this country had interfered with the Indian Government. What had been the weakness of the present Army system of India was, that there had been too great a desire to make it as a whole into an Irregular Army, and the adoption of that course had led to considerable difficulties. A mistake was made at first, so far as the officers were concerned, in not looking the matter boldly in the face, and compensating those officers who were not required, and parting with them on satisfactory terms both to themselves and to the Government. He hoped the Government would still deal boldly and liberally in the matter, and that they would place the system on a footing which would be perfectly satisfactory and sound. He did not think the Staff corps as at present organized could be maintained without alteration; but Lord Northbrook, whose service in India had given the highest promise of a useful and valuable Viceroyalty, could be safely entrusted to deal with the matter. He fully concurred in the opinion that it was most injudicious to interfere in Indian affairs by the action of Parliament or of Royal Commissions in matters which could not possibly be so well understood at home. The position of the Indian Army was very different from that of our home Army. He also thought it very unadvisable that the House should much discuss the claims of any particular class of Indian officers on the Indian Treasury; and holding that view, he dissented from the views put forward by the noble Lord the Member for Haddington. Two Commissions respecting them had decided against them, and Lord Cranborne's proposals were fully accepted by the House, and had been as fully carried out; and that being so, he did not think it would be right to affirm, in any way, that any officers should receive more money than had been awarded to them by the responsible officers—especially when the money to be paid for the purpose was to come out of the hands of people not represented in that House. He hoped the Motion would not be pressed, but that a satisfactory conclusion would be arrived at by the ordinary Government machinery for the purpose.

COLONEL JERVIS said, he hoped the House would not accept the views of the right hon. Baronet the Member for North Devon as being shared by those who sat behind him. There was a wide difference between the officers in the English Army who could have their position and mode of service changed at any moment, and the officers of the Indian Army who had been taken over from the East India Company, and with whom the British Government had on many occasions broken faith in the most glaring manner. The fact that that was being done was perfectly well known to the Native populations, who not unnaturally asked themselves whether they were not likely to share the fate of the Army which was charged with the maintenance of the Empire. It would have a bad effect upon them, which was very impolitic, when it was considered that the amount of money at stake was really very small. The Government had paid large sums of money to English officers in respect of purely illegal transactions, whilst they refused that small consideration to the Indian officers, who had right on their side.

SIR CHARLES WINGFIELD would be glad if the Government could see their way to modify their policy with regard to the claims of the Indian officers. He would be prepared to support a substantial proposition to compensate those officers who had suffered loss by the abolition of the bonus system.

MR. DENISON thought it a scandal that officers should be promoted, not according to the requirements of the service, but by seniority, without any reference to their particular merits or usefulness. There could be no doubt that the Indian Army was less efficient than it was in former times. He was one of those who thought that it was only in cases of extreme urgency that the House should take upon itself the grave responsibility of interfering between the Government of India in India, and itself, and he also concurred in the opinion expressed—that no man could be more fitted to take up this question than Lord Northbrook. He was afraid that the Indian Office at Home had been smitten with an apathy on this subject, and thought that they should be now aroused to the necessity of greater activity. He joined cordially with those who had preceded him, in thinking that the question should not be allowed to sleep, and that before another Session of Parliament they would receive an assurance to that effect.

MR. BOURKE, understanding that the subject was now being considered by the Government, begged leave to withdraw his Motion. [“No, no!”]

Question put, and agreed to.

CUSTOM-HOUSE OFFICERS AT THE OUTPORTS.

POSTPONEMENT OF MOTION.

VISCOUNT SANDON, in consequence of the lateness of the hour (one o'clock), said, he would postpone a Motion which stood in his name on the Paper until Tuesday next, having reference to Custom House Clerks at the Outports.

THE LICENSING ACT—OBSERVATIONS.

MR. VERNON HARCOURT, in rising to call attention to the operation of the valuation sections of the Licensing Act upon the property now invested in existing Beer Houses; and to move

“That the owners and occupiers of beer-houses who have invested their money in premises licensed previously to the passing of the Act of 1872 ought not to be subjected to the forfeiture of their property by the imposition of new and more onerous pecuniary conditions in respect of the renewal of their licences,” said, he wished he could consistently take the same course as the noble Lord the Member for Liverpool (Viscount Sandon) who had just postponed his Motion; but the grievance to which he desired to call attention should be remedied at once, if it was to be remedied at all. In the Licensing Act of last Session various regulations were made with respect to beerhouses which placed them in a different position to other licensed public-houses. The point at issue was, whether those beerhouses should continue in the exceptional position which it appeared they had been placed in by that Act. He believed that it was not the intention of the Legislature to place those houses in the position the owners now found themselves—that the legislation was intended to operate in future, and did not apply to houses which previously possessed licences, but who might find it difficult, if not impossible, to find new premises or extend the old ones, so as to comply with the new regulations as to rateable value. By the Act the rateable value had been changed to the annual value of the premises; but in taking that annual value, they excluded the fact that the house had a value above the annual value in consequence of being a public-house.

MR. BRUCE said, the hon. and learned Member misapprehended the real state of the case. The point referred to affected public-houses, and not beerhouses.

MR. VERNON HARCOURT contended that in consequence of the decisions which had been arrived at last September a great hardship and injustice had been inflicted on the owners of beer-houses. Whether it was desirable that those houses should exist or not was not a question into which he was going to enter. All he contended was, that having under the old law obtained a certain status, and having invested their capital and applied themselves to that occupation as a means of living, they ought not to be arbitrarily and unjustly deprived of those means by a new system of valuation. He might refer to the debate which had just closed as an illustration of the injustice which had been and would be done to beerhouse keepers. In the case of officers of the Army, it had been agreed not only to pay regulation prices, but over regulation prices, in consideration of previous existing facts. Why should the occupiers of beerhouses be treated in a different spirit? But he did not ask any favour for them; all he asked was that they should be treated justly, and that, by what he thought was an accidental and unintentional operation of a particular clause in a Bill, those people should not be deprived of their means of living. Last September many of those houses were closed under the operation of the Act. Next September, when the licensing sessions were resumed, unless some action were taken in the matter, the whole of them would be shut up without any fault on the part of the occupiers. That would be the case in every parish throughout the country, and those houses would not be the worst, but the best of their class. He did not believe that the advocates of the Licensing Act themselves intended this to be the result of their legislation, and he confidently appealed to the Government for an immediate remedy to an urgent grievance.

The hon. and learned Member having been informed by MR. SPEAKER that according to the Forms of the House his Motion could not be put—

MR. BRUCE said, he could not understand the object the hon. and learned Gentleman had in view in bringing forward this subject. An Act of Parliament was passed last Session making certain provisions with respect to beerhouses. If the hon. and learned Gentleman had carried that Resolution of which he had given Notice, what effect would it have on the proceedings before the Justices at the next Brewster Sessions? When the Bill he referred to was introduced, notice of it was given to the keepers of beer-houses throughout the country, and that particular provision was distinctly mentioned by Lord Kimberley in introducing the Bill in the House of Lords, and although objection was taken to many parts of the Bill, no objection was taken to that one. When the Bill came down from the other House he (Mr. Bruce) also referred to the provision in terms as distinct as those of Lord Kimberley. Some discussion was raised on the Motion by the hon. Member for Stroud (Mr. Dickinson) but only with the view of making the restriction greater, by excluding from the rateable value for qualification that of any fields which might be attached to the House. In the case of public-houses, it had been assumed that magistrates would exercise their functions to ensure that these houses would be of the proper rateable value; but the case of beerhouses was different—a low class of beerhouses had come into existence, and so strong was the feeling on the subject, that not the slightest objection was taken to this provision as regarded beerhouses in either House of Parliament. Then, did they act harshly with the beerhouses in calling on the magistrates to see that they possessed the rental required by the Act of Parliament? That was done in the case of public-houses; but in that of beerhouses, the only security they could have was by seeing that they were of the proper rateable value, and requiring them to bring their houses up to the required rateable value within a given time. To him it seemed a just and fair provision. And when his hon. and learned Friend compared the case of the beerhouses with that of the officers, he would remind him that the officers were at least of some value to their country, and that it was just they should be compensated—which could not be said of these houses. He failed to see any advantage that his hon. and learned Friend proposed in bringing forward this question.

Mr. Vernon Harcourt

MR. GREENE said, he was astonished at the reply of the right hon. Gentleman the Home Secretary, for anything more unjust he had never heard in his life. His remarks might very well apply to the state of things which originally existed, when the beerhouse licences were first issued 30 years ago, when they were not under the control of the magistrates. That was not their fault, and the Government were now taking advantage of a sin of their own creating. But the Home Secretary ought to have recollected that that did not apply now, for the beerhouses had for 12 months previously been placed under the control of the magistrates, and he would appeal to the testimony of any Chief Constable to say whether they were not as well conducted as the fully licensed houses. If they were to require a beerhouse to come up to a certain standard of value, they would in many country districts require a very large place; but it was monstrous to place such a restriction upon a poor man, who intended to sell beer to poor men. The result would be that the whole trade would be handed over as a monopoly to the brewers. They had only to look to the Act to see that it was only intended to deal with future licences, and that there was not the slightest idea or intention of making it retrospective. He had recently purchased a beerhouse, and if the licence was refused on this ground he intended to try the case by applying for a mandamus, and he had been advised by eminent counsel that he had a good case. All this showed with how little reflection the Act of last Session was passed. When once a dog was given a bad name it was as well to hang him, and that was the principle on which the Home Secretary appeared to be dealing with the beerhouse keepers. The Act was so unjust that it could not possibly last. He would appeal to the hon. Baronet the Member for Carlisle (Sir Wilfrid Lawson) to say whether the beerhouse which supplied beer to the poor man was half so bad as the full licensed house which supplied spirits; and he should call on the hon. Baronet to support the Motion, which he regretted could not by the Forms of the House be put. If it could, he was certain the Home Secretary would have been left in a minority.

SIR HENRY SELWIN-IBBETSON said, that if his recollection of the debates of last year was correct, there was a general desire to avoid any possible mistakes. It was certainly his belief at the time the Bill was under consideration last year, that its object was, as far as possible, to protect existing interests, and that the clauses under consideration were not to affect the old, but only new licences, and he was convinced that they were discussed by hon. Members under the impression that they were only dealing with the new, and not with the old beerhouses. He believed if it had been generally known when the Licensing Act was before the House, that so large an amount of rateable interests would be affected by the change proposed, there would have been more minute discussion, they would have taken greater care of those vested interests, and they would have guarded against the mistakes which had been made. During the discussion on the Bill the hon. Member for Boston (Mr. Collins) had called attention to the fact that in many mountain districts there were only a few houses of low rateable value that practically afforded to a comparatively large population any accommodation whatever. For many years previous to the passing of the Licensing Act, in some districts the rateable value of beerhouses was made up of many ingredients, and practically the value of those houses was of low standing indeed. That state of things, however, did not apply to a large number of beerhouses which the passing of the Licensing Act affected. In many towns an immense number of houses would be swept out of existence at the next licensing sessions. In that case, a great injustice would be done. In many towns, at the corners of streets land could not be had for the purpose of extending existing beerhouses, so that it was perfectly impossible to bring the annual value up to £15. Though they were conducted respectably for generations, they would be refused licences, because they were below the required rateable value. It did seem a great hardship, indeed, that houses of this character should be swept away. In one town within his own knowledge, at least 200 such houses would be swept away, as they could not build up to the rateable value required by the Act. The Legislature would act wisely, if the attempt were limited to wipe out beer-houses or public-houses. The question of renewing licences ought to be affected by the fact whether they had been properly conducted. If they had been badly conducted, then he was free to confess that their licences ought not to be renewed; but when they had been respectably conducted for generations—when they had been carried on within the legal requirements of the Act—it did appear to him a very great hardship indeed that they should be swept away simply on the ground of rateable value. The right hon. Gentleman the Home Secretary said, he could not see what good could result from the Motion of the hon. and learned Member for Oxford as, practically, it was too late to take action in the matter. But that was not the first time during the present Session that the attention of the Government had been called to the grievance complained of. He (Sir Henry Selwin-Ibbetson) had himself urged the necessity of doing something in the matter; but he felt as a private Member the difficulty he would have, unaided by the Government, in dealing with the question. He thought the Home Secretary would act wisely if by a short Act passed during the present Session, he and his Colleagues in the Administration rendered impossible that which must be admitted to be a great injustice.

MR. CAWLEY said, the language of the 46th section of the Act was so clear that it never could have been for one moment doubted by anyone who paid attention to the Bill when before the House that the Licensing Act was intended to have a retrospective effect on the point of rateable value with regard to beer-houses. He knew there were cases where from the houses having changed owners injustice would be done, at the same time it must be remembered that if the value of the house had been properly stated when the licence was granted, no injury could be done. There must have been misrepresentation in obtaining the licence, which was frequently done when the licence was granted by the surveyors of taxes. He thought that some discretion should have been left to the magistrates in dealing with this particular class of houses instead of binding them down as they were by the 46th and 47th sections. At the same time, he could not concur in the Motion of the hon. and learned Member for Oxford.

POST OFFICE—COMPULSORY REGISTRATION OF STAMPS, &c.

MR. MONK said, he had a Notice on the Paper—

"To call attention to a notice of the extension of compulsory registration to letters and packets containing bank notes, postage stamps, jewellery, or watches, issued by command of the Postmaster General; and to move—that, in the opinion of this House, it is undesirable that letters, not duly tendered for registration, which contain bank notes or postage stamps, should be subject to a double registration fee of eight pence."

At that late hour, however, he would not trouble the House on the subject. He believed he would have an opportunity on Monday, on the Post Office Estimates in Committee of Supply, to draw attention to the matter, and he wished now to give Notice that he would then ask the Postmaster General to withdraw the new regulation, so far as it referred to bank notes and postage stamps. If he did not receive a satisfactory reply from the right hon. Gentleman, he (Mr. Monk) would, on the Report of Supply, move the Resolution which he had put upon the Paper for to-day.

MR. J. LOWTHER said, the regulation in question was a most monstrous one, and he hoped no time would be lost in calling the attention of the House to it. He trusted the hon. Gentleman (Mr. Monk) had ascertained that he would have an opportunity on Monday of bringing the matter before the House.

Main Question, "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair," put, and agreed to.

SUPPLY—considered in Committee.
House resumed.

Committee report Progress; to sit again upon Monday next.

Sir Henry Selwin-Ibbetson

ENDOWED SCHOOLS ACT (1869) AMENDMENT BILL—[Bill 207.]

(Mr. William Edward Forster, Mr. Secretary Bruce.)

CONSIDERATION,

Bill, as amended, considered.

MR. GOLDNEY moved a new clause, requiring the consent of Governing Bodies to applications of apprenticeship fees, and other benefits under certain limitations.

Clause (Consent of governing bodies to application of apprenticeship fees, &c.,)—(Mr. Goldney,)—brought up, and read the first time.

Motion made, and Question proposed, “That the said Clause be now read a second time.”

MR. W. E. FORSTER admitted that if the Governing Bodies had a strong opinion on these matters, the Commissioners ought to pay special attention to their views.

Motion and clause, by leave, withdrawn.

MR. DENISON moved to amend Clause 13, by inserting words to render it incumbent on the President or Vice President of the Council, in the event of a Motion for an Address to Her Majesty praying her to withhold her assent from a proposed scheme of the Commissioners being made in either House, to move the assent of such House within the period of two months prescribed in this clause.

Amendment proposed,

In page 6, line 19, at the end of Clause 13, to add the words: “Provided, That whenever a Motion for an Address to Her Majesty, praying Her to withhold Her assent from a proposed scheme of the Commissioners had been made in either House, it shall be incumbent on the President or Vice President of the Council to move the assent of such House within the period of two months prescribed in this Clause.”—(Mr. Denison.)

Question proposed, “That those words be there added.”

MR. W. E. FORSTER objected to the Amendment.

Question put.

The House divided:—Ayes 9; Noes 33: Majority 24.

Amendments made.

Bill to be read the third time upon Monday next.

ROYAL NAVAL ARTILLERY VOLUNTEER FORCE BILL.

On Motion of Mr. GOSCHEN, Bill to provide for the establishment of a Royal Naval Artillery Volunteer Force, ordered to be brought in by Mr. GOSCHEN and Mr. SHAW LEFRAYRE.

Bill presented, and read the first time, [Bill 264.]

SANITARY ACT (1866) AMENDMENT (IRELAND) BILL.

On Motion of The Marquess of HARTINGTON, Bill to amend “The Sanitary Act, 1866,” so far as the same relates to Nuisance Authorities of Ports in Ireland, ordered to be brought in by The Marquess of HARTINGTON and Mr. Secretary BRUCE.

Bill presented, and read the first time. [Bill 266.]

FOUR COURTS MARSHALSEA (DUBLIN) BILL.

On Motion of The Marquess of HARTINGTON, Bill for the discontinuance of the Four Courts Marshalsea (Dublin), and removal of Prisoners therefrom, ordered to be brought in by The Marquess of HARTINGTON and Mr. Secretary BRUCE.

Bill presented, and read the first time. [Bill 265.]

House adjourned at half after Two o'clock till Monday next.

HOUSE OF LORDS,

Monday, 28th July, 1873.

MINUTES.]—PUBLIC BILLS—First Reading—Langbaugh Coroners* (248).

Committee—Salmon Fisheries* (215-249); Metropolitan Tramways Provisional Orders* (229).

Committee—Report—Extradition Act (1870) Amendment* (235).

Report—Revising Barristers* (244); Turnpike Acts Continuance, &c.* (245).

Third Reading—Militia (Service, &c.)* (237), and passed.

Royal Assent—Exchequer Bonds (£1,600,000) [36 & 37 Vict. c. 54]; Intestates Widows and Children [36 & 37 Vict. c. 52]; Prison Officers Superannuation (Ireland) [36 & 37 Vict. c. 51]; Highland Schools (Scotland) [36 & 37 Vict. c. 53]; Medical Act Amendment (University of London) [36 & 37 Vict. c. 55]; Treasury Chest Fund [36 & 37 Vict. c. 56]; Consolidated Fund, &c. (Permanent Charges Redemption) [36 & 37 Vict. c. 57]; Military Manoeuvres [36 & 37 Vict. c. 58]; Tramways Provisional Orders Confirmation [36 & 37 Vict. c. cxcvii]; Drainage and Improvement of Lands (Ireland) Provisional Orders (No. 3) [36 & 37 Vict. c. cxcviii]; Local Government Board (Ireland) Provisional Order Confirmation (No. 2) [36 & 37 Vict. c. cxcix].

ENDOWED SCHOOLS COMMISSIONERS
—DENBIGH FREE GRAMMAR SCHOOL.

EXPLANATION.

THE MARQUESS OF RIPON said, that in compliance with a request from the Rector of Denbigh, he wished to correct a statement he made on a former evening with reference to the schools with which the Endowed Schools Commissioners had proposed to deal. It appeared that a deduction of some £17 a-year had been made by the Education Department from the Government grant to the elementary school because of the endowment. He must, however, say that he did not think that fact in any way affected the argument he addressed to their Lordships on the occasion to which he had just referred.

OFFICERS OF HER MAJESTY'S ARMY—

ABOLITION OF PURCHASE.

THE QUEEN'S ANSWER TO THE ADDRESS.

The Queen's Answer to the Address of Monday last reported by the Lord Steward, as follows, viz.:

"My LORDS,

"I have received your Address, praying that a Royal Commission may be issued to inquire into the allegations of the officers of my army as to the grievances which they state that they suffer consequent upon the abolition of Purchase:

"The terms of the pecuniary indemnity provided by the Army Regulation Act for the officers of the Army upon the abolition of the system of Purchase were adopted by Parliament upon a very full and long continued deliberation. I am advised that to refer for consideration to Commissioners nominated by the Crown any allegations of grievance which involve the principle of the pecuniary settlement so deliberately incorporated in the Act would be a course not warranted by usage, and that it would be likely to be attended with serious inconvenience:

"I have reason to believe that the provisions of the Act have been carried into effect in a liberal spirit by my government and by the Army Purchase Commissioners:

"I have also directed that certain cases which have appeared to fall within the principle of the Statute, though they were not formally included in its words, should be submitted in the annual votes to the favourable consideration of Parliament, by whom the votes for this purpose have been approved; and I will now direct that the allegations contained in the memorials which have formed the subject of your Address shall be carefully examined by a Royal Commission in order to ascertain whether any of them fall within the principle of and may properly be dealt with by the same form of proceeding."

MARRIAGE OF H.R.H THE DUKE OF EDINBURGH.

MESSAGE FROM THE QUEEN.

Message from The Queen—Delivered by the Earl Granville, and read by the Lord Chancellor, as follows:

"VICTORIA R.

"Her Majesty having agreed to a marriage proposed between His Royal Highness Alfred Ernest Albert Duke of Edinburgh, Earl of Kent, Earl of Ulster, Duke of Saxony, Prince of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha, and Her Imperial Highness the Grand Duchess Marie Alexandrovna, only daughter of His Majesty the Emperor of All the Russias, has thought fit to communicate it to the House of Lords:

"The numerous proofs which the Queen has received from the House of Lords of their loyalty to the Throne, and of their attachment to Her person and family, leave Her Majesty no doubt of their readiness to concur in enabling Her Majesty to make a further provision for His Royal Highness: V.R."

Ordered, That the said Message be taken into consideration To-morrow.

EAST AFRICA—THE SLAVE TRADE.

OBSERVATIONS. RESOLUTION.

LORD CAMPBELL: My Lords—In rising to make a few remarks upon the Notice I have given, I am in want—although not for a long time—of much indulgence from your Lordships. When I first brought the subject forward, more than 10 years ago, I could depend on the support of Lord Brougham, who, in the ordinary lapse of time, has passed away, and of a right rev. Friend, whose recent fate has suddenly withdrawn him from our body. To be deprived of such pre-eminent allies would be sufficient to weigh down the mind of any man, if it was not weighed down already. As regards the right rev. Prelate, I will not attempt to heighten the tributes which in this House have lately been devoted to him; still less to enter into rivalry with all the pulpits of the town, in which, a few hours ago, his qualities were handled. On a theme of this kind, which comes home to me from many special circumstances, except in those who may be leading an Opposition or a Government, it is scarcely prudent to betray our thoughts to a political Assembly. But it is my duty to inform the House with the accuracy of a witness, of the degree to which the lamented Prelate was a party to the Resolution I shall offer to them. Some weeks ago when he was invited to correct it, he approved of every phrase and every particle which it contains. He engaged to be here at 5 o'clock to-day in order to support it. He expressed a sanguine hope that it would be adopted by the Government, and determined to exert his influence upon the noble Earl the Secretary of State for that result. It will hardly be denied therefore that, if sufficient argument is found to recommend it, to adopt the Resolution would be a homage to the memory which all desire to exalt. I know no shorter method of engaging the House to such a course than a reference to the case by which, in 1860, your Lordships were induced to address the Crown, in order to restore our Consular authority in the Portuguese possessions of East Africa, since, unfortunately, the same arguments which then prevailed continue to be relevant. I will not state them fully, as they were mixed up with international transactions and party struggles which ought not to be revived. It was contended by Lord Brougham, the right rev. Prelate, and myself, that Portugal had entered into treaties with Great Britain for the prevention of the slave trade on the Eastern Coast of Africa, that for years remonstrances, despatches, and anathemas had gone to Lisbon as regards their non-observance; that at last it was resolved to appoint a British agent on the spot who would be able to watch the colonial officers of Portugal, and keep them on the path Great Britain perfunctorily insisted on. We pointed out that during his residence the Vice-regal power at Mozambique was strenuously exerted against the slave trade, and that in one of its most insidious branches. When temporary difficulties occasioned his withdrawal it was essential, we maintained, that the function should not cease, its necessity having been placed beyond the reach of doubt, and its advantage having been triumphantly established. We touched on the commercial argument, and the lamented Prelate in particular insisted that unless your Consular authority enlightened them, darkness would always hang over those waters, under which no traffic could grow up, except the traffic he was in the habit of denouncing. We were not so rash as to deny that the French Government, who at that time were engaged in transporting negroes to Réunion, viewed the British agency as something of an adverse force; but we denied that such a fact was a sufficient ground for its extinction, or that the French alliance, if it tended to retard our policy against the slave trade, would any longer be esteemed among the people of this country. Your Lordships were not determined by what fell from us alone. The noble Earl the Secretary of State, the noble Duke who at that time presided at the Admiralty, the noble Earl who now directs the Colonies, came forward to oppose us, and said whatever could be said against the Motion. The majority in our favour included several adherents of the Government, and the opinion of the public out-of-doors decidedly supported it. I shall, therefore, ask the House what new considerations have been evolved by time in support of our former case, which time has not substantially affected? The first is, that Sir Bartle Frere, in a despatch of the blue book, confirms all we had advanced, and urges the re-appointment we demanded. The next is, that during 10 years Great Britain has been accountable for the lamentable traffic she was on the verge of utterly annihilating; and which would not now exist if the voice of this House, instead of being neglected, had been listened to. Popular attention is more directed to the subject than it used to be; a considerable body in connection with the Anti-Slavery Society have instructed me to urge it on the Government, and there is not the slightest pretext for inaction. Events have taken place by which the Sovereignty of Portugal has been a good deal undermined upon that coast. Events are not improbable in which the want of British agency from Cape Delgado to Delagoa Bay would be remarkably disastrous to our objects. It is useless to arrest the slave trade from Zanzibar, as we hope to do, while it is flourishing—and on this point Captain Sullivan and Captain Colomb, two naval officers, have given recent evidence—for 900 miles to the south of that dominion. My Lords, society is under a delusion if it imagines that to check the slave trade from Zanzibar is to deliver Eastern Africa from its oppression. If it is to leave that coast, it is more desirable that its guilt should fall upon an Arabian than on an European Power—that it should proceed at a considerable distance from, than in close proximity to our colony of Natal. Last of all the Treaty with Zanzibar, which has been just negotiated, cannot be expected to have much practical effect if the Sultan is aware that from the conterminous dependency of Portugal slave trade is going on unwatched and unrestrained. This view is strengthened by referring to the mission of Sir Bartle Frere, of which as yet I have said nothing. You Lordships well know that since the return of Sir Bartle Frere, a Treaty has been obtained which the Sultan would not grant while he was present. How far it may be traced to the exertions of Sir Bartle, and how far to those of Dr. Kirk the resident, is a secret in the inner conscience of the Sultan. At first sight the conduct of the Sultan seems to be inexplicable. According to an acute and eminent historian, referring to a potentate of Africa, Regia voluntates, quum vehementes, tam mobiles, ex quo etiam ipsi adversa. "The will of Sovereigns is vehement as variable, and often clashes with itself." It is possible, however, that the Sultan may have been guided by a deeper train of thought than it is usual to ascribe to him. He may have seen that in the end the Treaty was inevitable and yet have resolved to inflict a deep humiliation on the Government which asked for it. As it was generally thought that France inspired his resistance, for many weeks he held up this country as having been deceived by an ally who wanted its support, and baffled by a State whom it had lately called into existence. At last he flung before the Consul what he had denied to the Ambassador and thus proclaimed the inutility of the mission which had taken place while he disarmed the hostile preparations likely to succeed it. In dealing with a mind so resolute, so guarded and vindictive, we should not venture on a weak or an assailable position. But our position towards him will be of this character, so long as the Portuguese possessions in his neighbourhood are left without a British representative. It will be open always for the Sultan to remark, when he is taxed with an imperfect execution of the Treaty—is there to be one law for the Mahometan and another for the Christian? Is slave trade only to be persecuted when joined to a faith which either sanctions or extenuates it? To the north of Cape Delgado shall it be rooted out, while to the south of that point it is allowed to flourish with impunity? Is it to be denied to Zanzibar, while Portugal, whom Britain guards upon the map of Europe, is tacitly invited to engage in it? My Lords, unless these questions had been easy to suggest and difficult to answer the Treaty would have been more rapidly negotiated; and until their foundation disappears we have not any moral right to count on its observance. Well, my Lords, if the former case was accepted by the House as irresistible, if nothing has occurred to shake it, if late events have given it a basis of which it did not stand in need, there would be no excuse for a protracted statement upon my part. It will scarcely be contended that the Resolution is unnecessary after the long delay which has occurred and the mysterious reluctance which has seemingly occasioned it. The only class of minds to which the Resolution ought to be obnoxious, is the class of minds who question our policy in Africa, and who deny that European wealth ought to be made a stepping-stone to a contingent, a remote, as yet, at least, an unattained civilization. No doubt that class of minds deserves to be respected. The idea which first sent our ships to either coast of Africa may be seen in many lights. Its origin is generally traced to 1815. At that time emerging from a struggle which aspired to the deliverance of Europe, the country was disposed to effort in another sphere, which to a colder or less excited age may wear the aspect of extravagance. To blockade the best part of a Continent, to fertilize inhospitable deserts, to regenerate the lowest race of bondsmen and barbarians, to stop a traffic which had darkened the ocean for 1,000 years, and which many States were interested in preserving, appeared to be a feasible exertion to those who had contended against the genius of Napoleon, not only for the balance of power but the safety of their homes. The project may have been too great for modern statesmanship to enter on. But the illustrious Duke who commands the Army of the Queen explained to us not long ago that public undertakings which ought not to be begun, are not on that account to be unfinished or abandoned; the more when a considerable outlay has already been devoted to them, from which you are entitled to some return, although it might have been more cautiously or more judiciously invested. Your Lordships might be disposed to add that honour will sometimes demand the end, when prudence has not wholly sanctioned the commencement. Since its cost is insignificant to neglect this measure any longer would be rather a concession to fatigue than to economy. Fatigue, however subtle and imperious its action upon men, is not so easily permitted to communities. From their perpetually renewing elements they are less exposed to age and to exhaustion; to the corroding indolence and deadly lassitude by which individual efforts are too frequently restrained. For them it is more practicable to revive the warmth of an original design amidst the languor, scepticism, and disgust, by which its final execution is inevitably thwarted. For it should not be forgotten that when our Consular authority in the Portuguese possessions is revived, no further steps on this extensive subject will be called for. The naval power will adapt itself to the want the Consular authority discovers, and be directed by the knowledge it acquires. The Treaty with Zanzibar will have an outwork to protect it. The triumph we have gained upon the Western Coast will be unquestioned unless, the market of Brazil or Cuba should unhappily revive. Your steamers will plough the waves from Aden to the Cape, although not at so grand a cost as that designed by the Treasury. A long and what appeared a hopeless labour will be crowned at last. Great Britain will have gained a laurel which time can hardly strip away; and on Africa, so far as it is connected with the slave trade, the ear of Parliament will enjoy a long, a well-deserved, an often coveted repose—to which, that I may hasten to contribute, I move, without another observation, the Resolution of which I have given Notice.

Lord Campbell

Moved to resolve, That in the opinion of this House late proceedings and events in East Africa render it desirable that the consular authority of Great Britain in the Portuguese dominion from Cape Delgado to Delagoa Bay should now be re-established.—(The Lord Campbell.)

EARL GRANVILLE said, that when last he had occasion to make a statement to their Lordships' House on the subject of the Mission of Sir Bartle Frere, he stated that the Mission had been a complete success except on one important point. He had succeeded in renewing our Treaties with the principal Chiefs on the Persian Gulf, and had concluded one with the Imaum of Muscat, and another with other influential Princes; but he failed in completing a Treaty with the Sultan of Zanzibar. With that potentate Dr. Kirk has since concluded a Treaty. Sir Bartle Frere, in visiting numerous places, had collected a fund of most valuable information for Her Majesty's Government. By his investigations he had been able to confirm much that was already known here, and also to inform the Government of additional facts. He had communicated many things and made many suggestions in reference to creeks, to interpreters, and to Consular agents in the Portuguese settlements and elsewhere, and, generally, as to the best means of putting an end to the capture of slaves. To all this Her Majesty's Government were giving their most anxious consideration. But it was not a subject that could be dealt with by one Department only—the Foreign Office, the Indian Office, and the Treasury were all acting in the same spirit, and were all considering what ought to be done. At the beginning of the Session Lord Derby gave the Government a prudent advice—that they should not be led away by the philanthropic object in view so far as to incur unlimited difficulty and expense. The Government would keep that warning in mind, while at the same time they would do whatever might be necessary to deal efficiently with this horrible traffic on the East Coast of Africa. But clearly this was a matter which would require a little time, in order that the Government might come to a determination, after consideration, how to carry out their intentions in the most efficient and the best way. Under these circumstances, he hoped the noble Lord would not think it necessary to press his Motion.

THE MARQUESS OF SALISBURY joined in the suggestion that the noble Lord should not press his Motion to a division. All must admit that the Foreign Office had not departed from the position of English statesmen—that this slave trade ought to be put an end to. The conduct of the noble Earl at the head of the Foreign Office in conducting these negotiations had been marked by conciliation and kindness. Having been successful in reference to one of the outlets of the slave traffic on the Eastern Coast of Africa, they had every reason to believe that proper precautions would be taken for preventing a continuance of it through other outlets. He believed that they had better leave the matter in the hands of the Government; because if they came to any decision in that House upon the subject it would attract unnecessary attention in foreign countries, and would tend rather to defeat the object which the noble Lord sought to accomplish. The difficulty lay rather with foreign nations than with our own, and he thought that the best way would be to take the assurance which had been given, and resign themselves to the action of the Government.

LORD CAMPBELL, in reply, said, that he was quite unable to concur in the proposition of the noble Earl the Secretary of State that this measure might be fairly left to the discretion of the Foreign Office. If that was so, why, for ten years and upwards, had it been neglected without a shadow of defence? If it could be so left, why, when Sir Bartle Frere went out to Zanzibar, was the vacancy in the Portuguese Possessions suffered to remain, although demonstrably calculated to weaken his appeals, and even paralyze his Mission? In spite of a remonstrance from the House of Lords, in spite of new and pressing reasons for obeying that remonstrance, the measure had been year after year withheld, and they were now asked to confide in the despatch of the authority which had so pertinaciously withheld it. The case for interference from their Lordships could not be resisted; but if the noble Earl and the noble Marquess had united to prevent it he should divide the House in vain. He should also give the House the unworthy and undignified appearance of reversing the decision at which they had arrived so long ago, when stronger grounds than ever for maintaining it existed. He would therefore withdraw the Motion. But the public out-of-doors would see that the responsibility of its withdrawal did not rest with him, but with the noble Earl and the noble Marquess who prevented its adoption.

Motion (by leave of the House) withdrawn.

STANDARDS COMMISSION, 1870—

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

OBSERVATIONS. QUESTION.

LORD OOLCHESTER rose to call attention to the Report of the Standards Commission, 1870, relative to inspection of weights and measures, and asked, Whether any legislation on the subject was contemplated? The Standards Commission, of which he had had the honour to be a Member, had inquired very carefully into the subject. They reported that in various parts of England the weights and measures differed very much, and the system was so defective that weights and measures were in many places false. In some parts of the country the inspection appeared to be satisfactorily carried out, in some it was indifferent, and in some it was altogether unsatisfactory. In small shops particularly, articles sold by weight were often found deficient. It was not to be supposed that the manufacturers of scales and weights were to blame for the frauds committed on the public; but he had heard of a case where an order was given for scales and weights for Australia, which were expressly directed to be false. In this case the order was indignantly declined, but it was plainly the intention of the parties giving that order to cheat the purchasers. He thought it objectionable that the Inspectors of Weights and Measures in small towns should be appointed by the town councils; because many of the members of those town councils were small shopkeepers, with whom they would, in the transactions of their business, have intercourse. The Commission reported so long back as 1870, and the subject had not been touched since. There might be some practical difficulties in the way; but he thought their Lordships and the country should have some information as to whether the Government meant to introduce any important changes, and that such changes, if contemplated, would not be much longer delayed. True, the question was not an exciting one; but it was an important one, nevertheless, because it had direct relation to the suppression of dishonest practices, and affected in no small degree the welfare of the poor.

EARL COWPER admitted that the question introduced by the noble Lord was an important one. The Government were alive to its importance and the suggestions of the Standards Commission were receiving their careful consideration; but, owing to the great pressure of legislative business, they had not yet been able to completely frame a measure on the subject. He agreed that the present system of inspection was most irregular and unsatisfactory, and that there was great need of some central control over the Inspectors, and he thought that that general supervision might be properly committed to the Board of Trade. He hoped that next Session a Bill on this subject now under the consideration of the Board of Trade and partly prepared would be introduced.

ACHIN.

ADDRESS FOR CORRESPONDENCE.

LORD STANLEY OF ALDERLEY called the attention of the House to the affairs of Achin, and to move an Address to Her Majesty for a Copy of the Correspondence relating to the abrogation of the Treaty of 1824. The noble Lord said that a Convention was signed at the Hague on the 2nd November, 1871, and ratified February, 1872, between Her Majesty and the King of the Netherlands for the settlement of their relations in the Island of Sumatra. That Convention was presented to Parliament in 1872; but it did not appear to have attracted any attention till this year, when its effects made themselves felt. The Convention abrogated that part of the Treaty of 1824 between Great Britain and the Netherlands which prevented the Dutch extending their dominion in Sumatra north of the Line. No cause had been shown for signing this Convention. Its effects had been most injurious to British interests; and the interests of this country in the Indian Ocean and Straits of Malacca, which should have been carefully watched over by the Government, had been sacrificed to that department of the Colonial Office which looked after the West Coast of Africa, and which, in its anxiety to include the whole of that Coast within its jurisdiction, had saddled us with an Ashantee War, besides the other injurious effects to which he now wished to call the attention of their Lordships. The Treaty of 1824, which had subsisted for almost 50 years, had become part of the public law of the countries adjoining the Malacca Straits, as much so as the Treaty of Vienna was the public law of Europe; and Her Majesty's Government was not justified in abrogating it without regard to the interests and obligations which had grown up under it. Under this Treaty Her Majesty's subjects carried on trade with Bender Achin, and other parts of Sumatra, and the population of Sumatra had friendly relations with the British Straits Settlements, and trusted to the Treaty of 1824. This had been abrogated without any necessity even on the part of the Dutch, who had no grounds for quarrel with Achin, which had done them no injury. The Dutch had attacked Achin, and failed. There were grounds for hoping that they would not renew the attack, and that Her Majesty's Government might use their utmost endeavours to engage them not to renew it; for should it be renewed, and be successful, the fall of Achin would be ruinous to our prestige throughout Southern Asia, and the utmost dissatisfaction would be felt, not only by Her Majesty's European and Malay subjects in the Straits Settlements, but also by all the Malays in the Malay Peninsula, whose goodwill was very important to us. It was not only the prestige of this country, but also its commercial interests, that had been injured by this new Convention; for if the Dutch should carry out their designs of last spring the whole of the pepper trade of Penang would be lost. The Dutch system in Java, besides being one most opposed to freedom of trade, differed so little from slavery—for the Dutch called it unpaid labour—that it did not appear why Her Majesty's Government should have been desirous to promote its extension to the whole of the north of Sumatra, or why they did not make the necessary reservations on behalf of Achin, which State was entitled to expect that we should not forget its ancient independence, and a history which at some periods had been brilliant;—for Achin was an independent State at the time when Holland was a Spanish province. After that time Achin exercised a great influence in the Malacca Straits, and sent out large fleets, which frequently engaged the Portuguese fleets victoriously. Rather more than 300 years ago Achin put itself under the protection of the Ottoman Porte, and the heavy guns which Sultan Selim sent as presents to the King of Achin were still to be seen at Pidir and Pasé. This fact was mentioned in a Dutch history of the East Indian Islands by Mr. Temminck. It was now for the fourth time that Achin had sought the protection of the Ottoman Porte. It might be asked why the Dutch had attacked the independence of a free State which had done them no harm, and this at a time when they had not yet recovered from the fears which they had good reason to entertain for their own independence after the late French war—for it was well known that a party in Germany aimed at absorbing Holland and acquiring the Dutch colonies, and a still larger portion of the Germans had been persuaded into the false belief that the Dutch would be not unwilling to be united or annexed to Germany. Under these circumstances, it was not a matter for surprise that a Dutch General should have been despatched to renew the attack upon Achin, under the auspices and with the encouragement of the German Minister at the Hague. But this policy was equally shortsighted on the part of Holland and Germany; on the part of Holland, because this aggressive policy must diminish the sympathies which would otherwise be felt for that country if its independence was menaced; and on the part of Germany, because if German hopes should ever be realized, and should Germany acquire Holland and a claim to the Dutch colonies—and Germany had as much and as little right to annex Holland as Holland had to attack and annex Achin—the recognition of that claim by England would be far more doubtful if Sumatra were included with Java. In such a contingency the conduct of Her Majesty's Government was already marked out by what took place when Holland fell into the hands of France at the beginning of the century; and whilst it might be possible that Great Britain should acquiesce in the transfer of Java to other masters, it would be impossible for England to suffer Achin to pass into the hands of a strong military Power. For, as Admiral Sherard Osborn had recently pointed out, Achin was a station of extreme importance in maritime strategy; it commanded not only the Straits of Malacca and the China trade, but also the approaches to Rangoon and British Burmah. It was true that the new Convention gave to British subjects the right to trade with Indrapura, and with other Sumatran States that might become dependent on the Dutch Government; but it made a distinction between Her Majesty's European and Asiatic subjects, placing the latter under the exceptional and harsh Dutch legislation, and, as this trade was carried on by Her Majesty's Asiatic subjects, it would be much discouraged. But it was not only the policy of this Article which was bad—its legality also was doubtful; for after the words of Her Majesty's Proclamation on assuming the government of India, it was not open to Her Majesty's Government to contract to make distinctions between Her Majesty's British and Indian subjects, and the treatment to which they might be subjected and the amount of protection to be afforded them. The words of the Proclamation were—

"We hold ourselves bound to the Natives of our Indian Territories by the same obligations of duty which bind us to all our other subjects, and those obligations, by the blessing of Almighty God, We shall faithfully and conscientiously fulfil."

And, again, Her Majesty declared her will and pleasure—"That all shall alike enjoy the equal and impartial protection of the law." There was a case of a similar nature, that of the Free Blacks; the State of South Carolina had passed a law providing for the imprisonment of all negroes who might come to that State, and who were not slaves, for fear of their communicating ideas of freedom to the slaves. Under this law coloured sailors from the Bermudas and Bahama Islands on arriving in British ships at Charleston were clapped into prison. Lord Palmerston, however, never accepted that state of things, and protested against the validity of a law passed by one of the States in opposition to the rights of all British subjects under the general treaty with the United States. There was one Article in this Convention which would have been perfect had it only been reciprocal, instead of being only in favour of the Dutch. The 4th Article provided that the Convention should remain without effect until it had received the approval of the States General:—and it was to be regretted that there was not a similar reservation in respect of the sanction of the British Parliament. In moving for the Correspondence relative to this Convention, he did not ask for any Correspondence with regard to the benefits to be obtained by bringing all the Gold Coast under British dominion and our troops into conflict with the Aahantees; but he asked for any Papers which would show on what grounds or by whose advice the Government sanctioned the abrogation of the Treaty of 1824, and the sacrifice of its valuable provisions without any necessity, advantage, or equivalent.

Moved, “That an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty for Copy of the Correspondence relating to the abrogation of the Treaty of 1824.” — (The Lord Stanley of Alderley.)

EARL GRANVILLE was understood to say that he had followed the policy commenced by the Earl of Clarendon, and pursued by the Earl of Derby, in regard to this question. He had been unable to follow his noble Friend's speech with perfect clearness, but he would answer it in the best way he could. The Treaty of 1824 failed to prevent the gradual annexation of the island by the Dutch. Under it England ceded to Holland all her possessions in Sumatra, and engaged to form no British settlement and conclude no treaty with any native Power there. This concession was made, in part requital for the cession of Malacca to England, and the withdrawal of Dutch objections to the British occupation of Singapore. Security against Dutch encroachments injurious to British trade was thought to be given by the Article which bound either party not to conclude treaties with native Powers detrimental to the other. But the Dutch annexed the territories of those Powers, and thus put their ports outside the Treaty by making them Dutch territory. The British Government protested in vain; and the Dutch continued their encroachments till in 1858 the whole of the East Coast which faces our Straits Settlements was in their hands except the kingdom of Achin. The latest annexation was that of Siak, in taking which the Dutch took certain districts the sovereignty over which was disputed between Siak and Achin. But the Dutch were galled by our protests, though they neglected them; and when it became obvious that the Treaty of 1824 afforded no protection to our trade with Sumatra, we resolved to change our policy and endeavour to obtain that protection in exchange for our power of protesting. This is the principle of our conduct in the negotiations which have been pursued for the last 10 years and have now been brought to a successful issue. The Dutch have agreed to place British trade on an equality with Dutch trade in all the ports of Siak, and in any districts of Sumatra that may hereafter be annexed by them; and we in return have simply abandoned our right of protest against encroachments, past and future. In other words, we allow the Dutch to civilize Sumatra if they can, we ourselves being absolutely precluded from doing so; and we have gained substantial concessions in favour of British trade, which we could not have gained but for the growing liberal feeling in Holland. The supposition that we made a sacrifice in Sumatra in order to gain territory on the Gold Coast is exactly the reverse of the fact; for by taking over the possessions of the Dutch in the Gold Coast we conferred a benefit on them; and by concluding the Sumatra Treaty they have conferred a substantial benefit on us, since we have gained solid advantages whilst losing nothing. Nor is there any ground for the idea that we have treated Achin badly. In 1819, we formed, by Treaty, a defensive alliance with Achin, accompanied by an engagement that she should exclude the subjects of all Powers except England from a fixed residence in her dominions, and should not conclude a Treaty with any foreign Power without our consent. When, in 1824, we undertook to withdraw altogether from Sumatra, this Treaty became impossible; and it was consequently agreed that it should be modified into a simple arrangement for the hospitable reception of British subjects and vessels in the port of Achin. The modification was made, not by a formal deed, but by practice which, for half-a-century, has been fully under-

1083

LAW AGENTS

{LORDS}

(Scotland) Bill.

1084

stood both by England and by Achin. England has never claimed the exclusion of all Europeans except Englishmen from Achin. But, if our repudiation of the Treaty of 1819 has been negative, that of Achin has unquestionably been positive; for, in 1857, she ratified a Treaty of peace, friendship, and commerce with Holland, placing her in the position of the most favoured nation. If the Treaty of 1819 had been in force, this Treaty of 1857 would have been a direct breach of faith towards Great Britain; but we never made such an objection, knowing that the Sultan was perfectly justified in considering himself freed from his obligations. If, however, he is relieved, England is also relieved. The only engagement now in existence between the two countries is that which has, in practice, been always observed by Achin, that British vessels and subjects should be hospitably received in her ports. He really thought that the Government of this country had made a very good bargain in carrying out their new policy. The Treaty of 1824 had proved to be wholly impracticable, and he considered that his noble Friend had made out no case showing that British interests would be injured by the course which the Government had pursued.

Motion agreed to.

PUNJAUB, &c.—MOTION FOR A RETURN.

THE MARQUESS OF CLANRICARDE moved for a

Return of the services in the field of the army on the Punjaub frontier from 1849 to 1863 for which medals were granted; showing the strength of the force employed, the name of the officer who commanded, the number of casualties, upon each occasion separately: And for,

Similar Return respecting the Bazottee Expedition of February 1869; and to ask the Secretary of State for India, why the provisions of the Warrant of 1863, granting medals for frontier services, were not extended to the forces of which the last-named expedition was composed?

THE DUKE OF ARGYLL had no objection whatever to lay the Papers asked for upon the Table, although his noble Friend had inadvertently misnamed one of the documents. There was no "Warrant" of 1863, but a mere "General Order," providing that medals should be given to the soldiers engaged in the various expeditions between 1849 and

Earl Granville

1863. His noble Friend asked why similar medals were not granted to the forces employed in the Bazottee Expedition? That Question was capable of a very simple answer. Medals were only given upon the recommendation of the Government of India, who were the proper judges of the military merit displayed by the troops employed in that country, and as a rule, the recommendations of the Indian Government were never set aside by the Home Government. While, however, he had no objection to lay the Returns before the House, he must say that it was setting a bad precedent. Parliamentary agitation with respect to claims of this nature was a thing to be avoided. Public discussion of the merits of particular individuals and the services they had performed was calculated to weaken the discipline of the Army.

THE MARQUESS OF CLANRICARDE said, that in taking the course he had done he was not without precedent. A similar request had on one occasion been preferred by the late Duke of Richmond.

Motion agreed to.

LAW AGENTS SCOTLAND BILL.

COMMONS REASONS CONSIDERED.

Commons Reasons for disagreeing to certain of the Amendments made by the Lords (according to Order) considered.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR moved, not to insist upon the Amendments made by their Lordships.

THE MARQUESS OF CLANRICARDE regretted that his Amendments respecting the Writers to the Signet were not assented to by the House of Commons. He was sorry that a society which had shown such a good example of how legal business should be conducted, and which was calculated to produce such a good effect upon other societies connected with the practice of the law, should have been treated in such a harsh manner. Yet he did not at this period of the Session, and under the existing circumstances, wish to insist upon dividing the House respecting the matter.

Motion agreed to ; Lords' Amendments to which the Commons have disagreed not insisted on.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Moved, That for the remainder of the Session the Bill or Bills which are entered for consideration on the Minutes of the day shall have the same precedence which Bills have on Tuesdays and Thursdays.—(The Lord Redesdale.)

Motion agreed to.

House adjourned at a quarter before Eight o'clock, till To-morrow, half past Ten o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,
Monday, 28th July, 1873.

MINUTES.]—SELECT COMMITTEE—Third Report

—East India Finance [No. 354].

SUPPLY—considered in Committee—CIVIL SERVICE

ESTIMATES — SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES —

NAVY ESTIMATES.

WAYS AND MEANS—considered in Committee—Consolidated Fund (£26,470,716).

PUBLIC BILLS—First Reading—Threshing Machines* [270].

Second Reading—Expiring Laws Continuance* [261]; Telegraphs* [262]; Royal Naval Artillery Volunteer Force* [264]; Four Courts Marahalsea (Dublin)* [265]; Sanitary Act (1866) Amendment (Ireland)* [266].

Committee — Report — Slave Trade (Consolidation)* [249]; Constabulary Force (Ireland)* [257]; Local Government Provisional Orders (No. 8)* [244]; Statute Law Revision* [240]; Public Health Act (1872) Amendment* [238].

Considered as amended — Third Reading — Merchant Shipping Acts Amendment* [253], and passed.

Third Reading—Endowed Schools Act (1869) Amendment* [207]; Crown Private Estates* [222]; Defence Acts Amendment* [255]; Public Schools (Eton College Property)* [251]; Conspiracy Law Amendment* [263], and passed.

Withdrawn — Juries* [35]; Local Rates and Taxes (Scotland)* [256]; Entailed and Settled Estates (Scotland)* [130]; Spirituous Liquors (Scotland)* [247]; Vexatious Objections (Borough Registration)* [37]; East India (Great Southern of India and Carnatic Railway Companies)* [258].

IRELAND—FRANKFORD BENCH OF MAGISTRATES.—QUESTION.

SIR PATRICK O'BRIEN asked the Chief Secretary for Ireland, Whether his attention has been called to a Return presented to the House relative to the attendance of Magistrates at the Frankford Petit Sessions in the King's County, which states the attendance of Magistrates at such sessions during the six months embraced by the Return to be that of the paid official Magistrate (alone) on five occasions, and on the remaining eight Petit Session days to have been nihil; whether he is aware that the attention of the Lord Chancellor of Ireland has been called to such non-attendance; and whether, failing the Lord Lieutenant of the County to recommend a gentleman of character, position, and intelligence resident in the neighbourhood who had expressed his willingness to attend the Frankford Bench, the Lord Chancellor of Ireland has declined to appoint this gentleman to the Commission of the Peace, on the sole ground that the local Lord Lieutenant's statement that his predecessor had declined to include this gentleman in the Commission, afforded in his the Lord Chancellor's judgment a valid excuse for such refusal; and, further to ask, what course the Government means to adopt to prevent a denial of justice to persons resident in the large district in and about the town of Frankford?

THE MARQUESS OF HARTINGTON said, in reply, that the attention of the Lord Chancellor of Ireland had been called to the non-attendance of the magistrates at the Frankford petit sessions, in the King's County. His Lordship had stated that he would take steps to communicate with the Lord Lieutenant of the county on the subject.

ELEMENTARY EDUCATION ACT—
EXAMINATION IN MUSIC IN TRAINING SCHOOLS.—QUESTION.

MR. WINGFIELD BAKER asked the Vice President of the Privy Council, Whether Mr. Hullah's Report on his examination in Music of the Students in Training Schools, for 1872, has not been in print since February last; and if he will inform the House why it has not been circulated among Members; and, whether Mr. Hullah will not commence his examination for this year in the ensuing month; and, if so, if the General Annual Report is not immediately to be circulated, the Vice President of the Council will provide that the separate Report of Mr. Hullah be immediately circulated, so as to enable those who are interested in the cause of popular music to make such representations to the Educational Department as may appear important?

MR. W. E. FORSTER, in reply, said, he hoped that it would be possible in the ensuing year to make arrangements for circulating the General Report, including the examinations of the students in training schools earlier than was possible this year. He did not think, however, that Mr. Hullah's Report on his examination in music could be issued separately. The fact of that Report having been in print since February last was no reason why the Department should publish it earlier than the other Reports, or that any different rule should be made in regard to it than obtained with other Reports.

POST OFFICE—TELEGRAPHHS—RETURN MESSAGES.—QUESTION.

MR. ALDERMAN W. LAWRENCE asked the Postmaster General, If he would consider the expediency of authorizing, for the benefit of the Revenue and of the public, the sender of a telegram to receive a reply not exceeding ten words on the payment of an additional sixpence?

MR. MONSELL: I have made inquiries, Sir, on the subject to which the Question of the hon. Member refers, and I am sorry to say that it would not be advisable to take the course indicated. The Department are put to exactly as much trouble in sending a reply, as in sending the original message; and we do not believe the number of replies would be so much increased by the reduction my hon. Friend proposes, as to justify us in making the change.

COMMERCIAL TREATY BETWEEN AVA AND FRANCE.—QUESTION.

MR. MACFIE asked the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, If he will lay upon the Table of the House Copy of the Commercial Treaty or Commission recently negotiated between the Courts of Ava and France?

VISCOUNT ENFIELD, in reply, said, it was not usual to lay upon the Table of the House Treaties of Commerce concluded between countries other than our own. However, if the hon. Gentleman would move for a copy of the despatch of Lord Lyons relating to the treaty recently negotiated between the Courts of Ava and France, there would be no objection to lay it on the Table.

METROPOLITAN POLICE—LIGHTING OF CELLS.—QUESTION.

MR. R. N. FOWLER asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, Whether it is intended by the authorities to adopt, at the large number of Metropolitan Police Stations, a mode of lighting the cells similar to that successfully carried out in the six City stations of London?

MR. BRUCE, in reply, said, that for some months past arrangements had been in progress for lighting 38 cells in the interior district of the Metropolitan police district and 19 in the outer district, by the same mode as that adopted in the City police stations. The change would be extended to the stations in course of erection.

ARMY—ADJUTANTS OF YEOMANRY REGIMENTS.—QUESTION.

MR. BROCKLEHURST asked the Secretary of State for War, Whether the Reports of the Inspecting Officers of Yeomanry Cavalry, containing recommendations relative to the necessity of increasing the pay of Adjutants of Yeomanry Regiments, have been received; and, if so, whether it is the intention of the Government to comply at an early date with those recommendations?

MR. CARDWELL: Sir, one of the Reports has been received, but not the other. The subject is one which requires and will receive careful consideration.

ARMY—MEDICAL DEPARTMENT—THE MEDICAL WARRANT.—QUESTION.

MR. D. DALRYMPLE asked the Secretary of State for War, Whether he has been able to give the attentive consideration he promised to the representations made to him by the Parliamentary Bills Committee of the British Medical Association and other bodies on behalf of the Army Medical Officers affected by the recent Army Medical Warrant, and what the result of that consideration is?

MR. CARDWELL: Sir, the subject, which is one of much detail, has undergone careful consideration in the Department; but I have not yet been able so far to consider it as to submit the result to the Treasury, which is a necessary preliminary to the submission of any modifications of the Warrant for the sanction of the Queen. No time shall be lost in taking the necessary steps, and an answer shall be returned without any unnecessary delay.

AGRICULTURAL LABOURERS MEETING AT LEIGHTON BUZZARD—ALLEGED DISTURBANCE.—QUESTIONS.

COLONEL GILPIN asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, Whether, in consequence of a question by the noble Lord the Member for Calne (Lord Edmond Fitzmarice) on Wednesday last, relative to an alleged disturbance at Leighton Buzzard, county of Bedford, he has received any information on the subject; if so, whether he would be good enough to state the purport of that information, especially as it affects the conduct of the police on the occasion?

MR. BRUCE: Sir, since the Question was put by the noble Lord I have received a Report from the Chief Constable. One of the allegations made by the noble Lord on the information he had received, was that a policeman had challenged one of the speakers at this public meeting to fight. That and other statements were explicitly denied by the Chief Constable. I am further informed that the irritating language used by the speakers caused great excitement, and that the police experienced great difficulty in defending them from violence. Indeed, the safety of those gentlemen was due to the exertions of the police.

COLONEL GILPIN asked the noble Lord the Member for Calne, Whether he would state the authority on which his statement was based and on which he accused the Magistrates of conniving at illegality?

LORD EDMOND FITZMAURICE: Sir, in reply to the hon. and gallant Member, I wish to state that the evidence on which I based my Question was private information and newspaper extracts. As regards the names of my private informants, while having every wish to oblige the hon. and gallant Member, I do not think that I am under any obligation to mention them. At the same time, as the evidence was of an ex parte character, I, for that reason, purposely framed my Question so as not to imply any personal guarantee of the accuracy of the account sent to me, though I have no reason to doubt the veracity of my informants. I wish to add that I had been informed, and I now find correctly informed, that the right hon. Gentleman the Home Secretary had had his attention called to the occurrences at Leighton Buzzard, and I was consequently under the idea that he might be able to give the House some authentic information as the result of inquiry on his part. It was, I have no doubt, owing to an oversight that he stated he had no information. I only allude to that part of the question as a personal justification. With reference to the charge that I accused the magistrates of conniving at illegality, I think the hon. and gallant Member will find if he looks at my Question, that I did not do so. What I said was, that that imputation was being disseminated in the country, and that it was desirable to take whatever steps were necessary to remove any apparent justification for it. I did not say I believed the imputation myself. I hope this explanation may be satisfactory to the hon. and gallant Member opposite.

MR. BRUCE said, that the Question was put down for Tuesday night. He came down when the House met, and was there until nearly three in the morning. It was impossible to make inquiries, and he was unaware of any such communication having been made as had been referred to. It was possible that the Under Secretary had communicated the information; but he (Mr. Bruce) had desired all the information to be sent to himself.

LORD EDMOND FITZMAURICE said, he was quite sure it was purely an oversight; but he was astonished when the right hon. Gentleman said he had received no information. As a matter of fact, he held in his hand the answer of the Home Office, which was entirely at the right hon. Gentleman's disposal.

FORESHORES—ENCROACHMENTS AT TRURO.—QUESTION.

COLONEL HOGG asked the President of the Board of Trade, Whether his attention has been drawn to the Report of Captain Graves on certain alleged encroachments on the shore of the river at Truro; and, whether such encroachments are in accordance with the order of the Board of Admiralty (made after the inspection and Report of Mr. Rendal, C.E., in 1841), which laid down that—

"No erection of any kind should thereafter be made on the shores of that part of the Truro river and harbour shown on that plan, without being first inclosed by wharf walls built in position and direction as shown by red lines on that plan?"

MR. CHICHESTER FORTESCUE said, in reply, that he found on inquiry that the facts were as follows:—A firm of merchants at Truro having bought some foreshore from the Duchy of Cornwall, submitted to the Board of Trade plans of works which they proposed to construct. The matter was referred to Captain Graves, the Inspector of the Coast Guard station, who reported upon it; and the Board acted upon his Report. With respect to the Admiralty Order of 1841, their jurisdiction had been transferred to the Board of Trade, who felt themselves at perfect liberty to alter a regulation made more than 30 years ago, if upon careful inquiry, it should seem desirable to do so. He was, however, instructed that the present case was not affected by the red lines shown on the plan referred to, which did not reach up as high as the site of the new works in question.

PARLIAMENTARY REPORTING IN THE COLONIES.—QUESTION.

MR. PIM (for Mr. MITCHELL HENRY) asked the Secretary of State for the Colonies, Whether he can give the House any information as to the system of official Parliamentary Reporting which exists in some of our Colonies?

MR. KNATCHBULL-HUGESSEN: Sir, there is a system of official reporting in some, if not in all of our principal Colonies. I have seen specimens to-day, and the work appears to be excellently done. Considering, however, the bulky volume which is required for the speeches delivered in Houses containing 70 or 80 Members, I confess that I should view with some apprehension the extension of the system to a Legislature numbering more than 650. The temptation to lengthy speaking afforded by the certainty of full reports would, I fear, greatly protract our Sessions. If the hon. Gentleman wishes for specific information from the principal Colonies as to their precise systems, I have no doubt that I shall be able to obtain it for him before the re-assembling of Parliament next year.

TREATY OF WASHINGTON—BOARD OF ASSESSORS—CLAIM FOR AVES ISLAND.—QUESTION.

VISCOUNT SANDON asked the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, Whether the Aves Island is or was one of the possessions of the British Crown; and, if so, for what reason the claim of Messrs. Hayman and Co. was not referred to the Arbitration Commissioners?

VISCOUNT ENFIELD: Sir, the right of Great Britain to the possession of Aves Island was disputed by Venezuela, and the question was allowed to drop after 1856, without this country having abandoned its claim. Messrs. Hayman's claim was against the Government of Venezuela, who interfered to prevent them from exporting guano from the island. It amounted to £21,000, for which they received about £1,950. A similar claim of some United States' citizens was afterwards settled more advantageously, whereupon Messrs. Hayman transferred their claim from the Government of Venezuela to that of the United States; but Her Majesty's Government were advised that there were no grounds for such a proceeding, and refused to present it to the Commissioners at Washington. They were supported in their opinion by Mr. Carlisle, our counsel to the Claims Commission, and by the Law Officers of the Crown.

ARMY—WAR OFFICE—CHIEF CLERK, MILITARY DEPARTMENT. QUESTION.

MR. WATNEY asked the Secretary of State for War, Whether it is a fact that the Chief Clerk of the Military Department, whose appointment was struck out of the Army Estimates (which were in the hands of Members of the House of Commons in February last), has not yet been informed what provision has been made for him by way of superannuation; whether the Chief Clerk (Mr. Freeth), who has served nearly thirty-five years, retires voluntarily or in consequence of the abolition of his appointment; whether, as far back as the 4th of April last, His Royal Highness the Field Marshal Commanding-in-Chief was pleased to recommend Mr. Freeth for full pay, or the highest rate of retirement to which his special services seemed to His Royal Highness justly to entitle him; and, whether such recommendation, together with Mr. Freeth's appeals of the 22nd and 25th of February, and 8th of March, containing high testimonials from Generals Sir Richard Airey, Sir Charles Yorke, and Lieutenant General Forster (under whom Mr. Freeth served) have been laid before the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury; and, if so, with what result?

MR. CARDWELL: Sir, the question between the War Office and the Chief Clerk of the Military Department, has only now been finally settled between the Departments, and therefore, the final result has only now been communicated to Mr. Freeth. He retires not voluntarily, but in consequence of the abolition of his appointment. The usual course has been taken—namely, that the recommendation of His Royal Highness has been laid by the Secretary of State before the Lords of the Treasury. The letters referred to in the Question were not given to me, except that of the 8th of March, on which the recommendation of His Royal Highness the Field Marshal Commanding-in-Chief was made, which formed the substance of the official letter to the Treasury. The Lords of the Treasury have assigned to Mr. Freeth a retiring allowance of 40-60ths of his pay, being the highest amount they considered they had it in their power to give under the Superannuation Act.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER—GUIDE OVER LANCASTER SANDS.—QUESTION.

MR. F. STANLEY asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, Whether the report that the guide over the Lancaster Sands has been or is about to be dismissed is correct; and, if so, whether it is contemplated to abolish the office?

MR. CHILDERES: Sir, in consequence of charges brought against the guide over the Lancaster Sands, a public inquiry was held, at my request, by the Chairman of the Ulverstone Petty Sessions. As the result of that inquiry I found it necessary to dismiss the guide as from Michaelmas next. But, so far from abolishing the office, I propose to put it on a much more satisfactory footing. The justices have consented to appoint a committee who will supervise this officer, and I have every reason to hope that his duties will be more effectually performed.

SPAIN—RECOGNITION OF THE CARLISTS.—QUESTION.

MR. CALLAN asked the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, Whether the Despatches forwarded by Her Majesty's Representative at Madrid confirm the accounts received from other sources in Spain, that the Carlist cause is rapidly gaining ground in that Country and that Don Carlos is advancing on Madrid; and, if such be the case, whether Her Majesty's Government are prepared to consider the propriety of recognizing the supporters of Don Carlos as belligerents?

VISCOUNT ENFIELD: Sir, the information which can be obtained at Madrid respecting the operations of the Carlists is necessarily meagre; but from it and from the accounts in the public journals, it would seem that Carlist bands have over-run large districts in the north of Spain. Matters have not arrived at a state to call for a consideration of the question of the recognition of Carlist belligerent rights.

ROYAL COMMISSION ON LOSS OF LIFE AT SEA—MR. PLIMSOLL AND THE BOARD OF TRADE.—QUESTION.

MR. SCLATER - BOOTH (for Sir STAFFORD NORTHCOTE) asked the President of the Board of Trade, Whether he has yet had any Reply from the honourable Member for Derby to the inquiry addressed to him on the subject of the charges made by the honourable Member for Derby against the officers of the Board of Trade?

MR. CHICHESTER FORTESCUE: What has happened, Sir, is this—On the 8th July I wrote to the hon. Member for Derby calling upon him to furnish the names of the many officers of the Board of Trade whom he charged with corruption and bribery, or else to withdraw the charge. On the 18th of July I received a note from the solicitors of the hon. Member for Derby, stating that he was absent from ill-health, and that they had reserved the letter until he should be in a condition to have it submitted to him. I must add that a few days afterwards I saw a letter addressed to the Editor of The Times by the hon. Member for Derby, in which he referred to a Question asked me in the House of Commons and my answer to it, and said it was necessary for him to take the advice of his solicitors and counsel before he answered my letter. The answer to my letter reached me on Saturday last, the 26th instant. It is a letter of considerable length, which will no doubt be made public without delay. It complains of the violent attack which, in the opinion of the hon. Member, I had made upon him by asking those questions; it alleges that the inquiry into the evils of the merchant service is being steadily resisted by the Board of Trade—the inquiry before the Royal Commission; it goes on to say—

"Here let me say that a money bribe is not the only form of corruption. Underhanded social pressure may be scarcely less mischievous and no less powerful than a gift in bank notes."

The letter then goes on to state three or four cases or classes of alleged misconduct by the Board of Trade which are most inaccurate and unfounded in point of fact and information, and which, if inquired into, would not afford any ground, in my opinion, for anything approaching to a charge of corruption. The letter then contains a passage which I am glad to read to the House. The writer says—

"Nevertheless, I have confidence in the independence, zeal, and ability of the Royal Commission as a whole, and I trust that its labours will result in the accomplishment of the objects I have in view."

The letter ends by proposing to refer the conduct of the Board of Trade to a Committee of this House, to be appointed by the Committee of Selection. What I have to say in answer to that is, that an inquiry into the conduct of the Board of Trade, if necessary, would be most legitimate; but that is not the question I asked the hon. Member. My question was, who were the individuals among the officers of the Board of Trade whom he accused of corruption, and the charges against whom it was my duty to investigate. The result is, that the hon. Member has furnished me with no materials whatever for investigation. He has mentioned the name of no person; he has given no grounds of the slightest validity, even of a prima facie kind, to enable me to discover the unnamed and imaginary persons whom he charges with corruption. Under these circumstances I will not trust myself to characterize the charges that have been made against a number of officials whose character I am bound to protect. I shall leave it to the House and the public to judge of this case, because I hope the hon. Member will move for the Correspondence.

NAVY—CHATHAM DOCKYARD—NEW RIVER WALL.—QUESTION.

MR. J. B. SMITH (for Mr. Cawley) asked the First Lord of the Admiralty, Whether it is true that a portion of the new river wall supporting the extension of Chatham Dockyard has fallen or seriously given way; and, if so, what length of wall has been so affected, and whether there is any reason to fear that other portions of the wall may give way in a similar manner; and, whether he can give any estimate of the probable cost of re-instating the wall? He also wished to know whether the Government have abandoned the intention of erecting the new factory, for which no definite designs have yet been submitted, nor any provision made in the Estimates?

MR. GOSCHEN said, in reply, that it was not true that a portion of the wall in question had given way, therefore no apprehension was entertained as to further portions giving way. The Government had not abandoned their intention of erecting the new factory.

H.R.H. THE DUKE OF EDINBURGH.

THE QUEEN'S MESSAGE.

Message from Her Majesty brought up, and read by Mr. Speaker (all the Members being uncovered), as follows:—

VICTORIA R.

Her Majesty having agreed to a Marriage proposed between His Royal Highness Alfred Ernest Albert, Duke of Edinburgh, Earl of Kent, Earl of Ulster, Duke of Saxony, Prince of Saxe Coburg and Gotha, and Her Imperial Highness the Grand Duchess Marie Alexandrovna, only daughter of His Majesty the Emperor of All the Russias, has thought fit to communicate it to the House of Commons.

Mr. Chichester Fortescue

The numerous proofs which the Queen has received from Her faithful Ottomans of their Loyalty to the Throne, and of their attachment to Her Person and Family, leaves Her Majesty no doubt of their readiness to enable Her Majesty to make a further provision for His Royal Highness.

V.R.

Mr. BRUCE: In the absence of my right hon. Friend at the head of the Government, owing to indisposition, which I hope and believe is only a passing one, I have to make a Motion that this House will to-morrow, at Two of the Clock, resolve itself into Committee to consider Her Majesty's gracious Message; and I give Notice that my right hon. Friend will to-morrow, at the same time, move in Committee a Resolution on the subject. I have to express my extreme regret on account of the particular time this Message has been communicated, that I must throw myself on the courtesy of the hon. Member for South-west Lancashire (Mr. Cross), and to ask him to allow the Government to have precedence to-morrow at 2 o'clock over the Motion of which he has given Notice, and for which the Government had promised the use of that hour. The Government are anxious to make arrangements the most convenient for my hon. Friend and the House, and they therefore propose that his Motion shall immediately follow that of my right hon. Friend with reference to Her Majesty's Message. Supposing Supply is closed the Report will follow, and if it should be impossible to terminate the discussion at 7 o'clock, it will be resumed at 9 o'clock. The right hon. Gentleman concluded by making the Motion to which he had referred.

Mr. ASSHETON CROSS said, he would not for one moment do anything to stop the proceedings of the Government in reference to the gracious Message which they had just received from the Queen. He was quite content that his Motion should come on after the Message was considered, on the understanding that if the debate was not concluded, it should be resumed at 9.

Mr. MUNDELLA begged to remind the right hon. Gentleman the Home Secretary that the right hon. Gentleman at the head of the Government distinctly and emphatically promised to give Tuesday evening for the discussion of the Factory Acts Amendment Bill.

Mr. BRUCE said, the promise of his right hon. Friend was carefully worded and was conditional. It was the intention of the Government to fulfil the promise as far as possible, and they proposed to make the Order for the resumption of the debate on the Bill of his hon. Friend the first Order for Wednesday.

Motion agreed to.

Committee thereupon To-morrow, at Two of the clock.

PARLIAMENT — BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.—PRECEDENCE OF GOVERNMENT ORDERS.

Mr. BRUCE moved, that on Wednesday next, and every succeeding Wednesday, Government Orders of the Day do have precedence.

Mr. OSBORNE said, that the result of the proceeding just taken by his right hon. Friend would be to prevent any private Member from bringing forward any subject. He would, therefore, ask the Secretary of State for War, whether, and when, he intends to nominate the Royal Commission on Officers' grievances arising from the Abolition of Purchase? He had been unable to give Notice of the Question; but after what had occurred "elsewhere," the right hon. Gentleman would, no doubt be prepared to answer it.

Mr. CARDWELL said, an Answer to an Address from the other House of Parliament ought, in the first instance, to be communicated to that House. When that Answer had been given, he should be able to afford the hon. Gentleman any information he desired.

Mr. OSBORNE said, he would take the earliest opportunity of calling attention to the subject.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY—CIVIL SERVICE ESTIMATES.
Order for Committee read.

SUPPLY—considered in Committee.

(In the Committee.)

CLASS I. PUBLIC WORKS AND BUILDINGS.

(1.) £57,800, to complete the sum for New Courts of Justice and Offices.

MR. CAVENDISH BENTINCK wished to know from the First Commissioner of Works, what progress had been made with regard to the erection of these buildings, and whether it was true, as reported, that the Government were going to proceed to the erection of a stone groined ceiling for the Central Hall—an erection which would require to be supported by heavy buttresses?

MR. W. FOWLER asked what had been done with respect to the completion of the contract?

MR. AYRTON said, the Government had accepted a tender not for the whole of the works for which tenders were originally asked, but for those works with certain deductions. Specifications in detail had been examined, and were now being completed. The plans had been brought to that stage when they could be annexed to the contract, and the matter now was in the hands of the solicitor to the Office of Works, and the solicitor to the contractors and the architect. It was true that a stone groined ceiling was going to be erected in the Central Hall in accordance with the design of Mr. Street, and that it would have to be supported by buttresses which would take up considerable space. Professional opinions were very much divided on the subject, but it was intended to adhere to that design. Copies of the plans and drawings would be shown to any hon. Members or to the legal profession or others who had a right to see them, but it would not be possible at present to exhibit them to the public.

MR. SCLATER-BOOTH asked when the work would be proceeded with?

MR. BOWRING wished to know with reference to the New Courts, whether it had been finally determined to use wood rather than tiles for the flooring? In the case of the new National Gallery, the First Commissioner had unfortunately resolved to introduce wooden floorings throughout, in opposition to the views of the architect and the general feeling in favour of tiles.

MR. ALDERMAN W. LAWRENCE asked whether the contract for the building of the New Courts would be within or something near the original estimate, and whether the extent of the buildings had been reduced in order to bring them within the original estimate of cost? He understood there had been a rise of 6 per cent on ordinary labour, and 10 per cent on skilled labour.

MR. GOLDSMID expressed a hope that the contract would be signed as early as possible, so that there should be no further postponement.

MR. GREGORY said, it would be satisfactory to the members of his profession to know that there was at last a chance of the work being begun.

MR. AYRTON said, that the building would, like other buildings in this country, be constructed with a wooden flooring; but due precautions would be taken against fire. Of course a contract could not be entered into without reference to changes in the price of labour in the market. With regard to the expenditure, it would be more than had been sanctioned by Parliament. The estimate was £750,000; he was not in a position to state the exact amount of the excess, but it would be a considerable sum. That, however, would be a question between the Treasury and the House. If the policy under which these Courts of Justice were being built should be adhered to, application would be made to Parliament next Session to sanction an increase of expenditure, and to charge it upon the fund specially appropriated for the erection of these buildings. The present contract would be signed as soon as all the preliminary steps had been taken.

LORD ELCHO believed the question was not answered—namely, whether any alteration had been made in the contract to meet the increased price of provisions and the cost of labour. He would also ask whether, as in the case of the Natural History Museum at South Kensington, any changes would be made in the form of the building in consequence of the change in prices?

MR. AYRTON said, he had already stated that the Government had accepted the tender for the works as specified by the architect, subject to certain deductions he had proposed—which might be generally described as economies in the construction of the buildings, the general form of the building remaining the same.

Vote agreed to.

(2.) £207,445, to complete the sum for Consular Establishments Abroad, &c.

MR. SCLATER-BOOTH, in accordance with Notice, called attention to the Report of the Committee on Consular Services which was laid on the Table last Session, and enquired whether it had been considered by the Foreign Office as a whole and in detail, and whether the opinion of the Secretary of State and of the proper officers of the Department had been placed on record respecting it? This might seem a superfluous inquiry, but the fact was that the Committee, having occasion to refer to the Reports of two previous Committees, one of which—that of 1858—was of an elaborate and detailed character, stated that they were unable to say that those recommendations were ever taken in hand and examined. The Committee made two recommendations, one of them of a very stringent and urgent character. One of them was that a classification and organization of the Consular offices should be made and introduced tentatively only, so as to avoid the necessity of pensioning off a large number of officers capable of rendering considerable service to the country. The second recommendation was very important, because it was in conflict with the recommendation of a previous Committee. That Committee said that the unpaid Consular service was a thing to be discouraged; but the last Committee thought that excellent service might be rendered by foreign merchants undertaking the duty of Consul and recouping themselves by means of fees, and they recommended that some clear distinction of title should be made between paid and unpaid Consuls. The service in China, Japan, and Siam was supplied by persons going out in their youth for the purpose of learning the language. Little change was recommended as to these establishments, but the Committee thought the expenses at Siam might be considerably reduced. Had the noble Lord become acquainted with a serious defalcation? £2,000 had been appropriated by the acting Consul at Hankow who had left the country and not been heard of since? Great difficulty was experienced by the Committee in reconciling the claims made by the Consuls to increased salaries, owing to the increase of prices, with the necessary requirements of the public service; and he did not know that they would have been able to arrive at any satisfactory conclusion if they had not received valuable evidence from a gentleman in the Foreign Office (Mr. Kennedy) who gave it as his opinion that all the necessary increase of salaries might be provided for by reductions which he saw were feasible in the service as now constituted. This able and intelligent officer made a journey to the Levant, visiting many of the Consulates there, as to which there had been most difference of opinion in this House; and from his statement the Committee gathered that a great deal too much tenacity had been shown by the Foreign Office in retaining the Consulships of the Levant. Some of these Consulships had recently been suppressed, and if the recommendations which had been made were carried into effect, they would cause the suppression or reduction of several more. The same remark applied to the Consulates in Morocco. The noble Earl at the head of the Foreign Office had had the opportunity of reducing two or three, but still further reductions were necessary there. It was the opinion of the Committee that this gentleman, who had shown so much capacity, might be usefully employed by the Foreign Office in visiting other parts of the world, especially the coasts of France, Spain, and Portugal, with a view to some more comprehensive plan of reducing the Consular establishments. The North German and Americans, for example, had a more simple and cheaper organization than we had, by means of Consuls General who supervised a long stretch of coast, and officers subordinate to them carried on the detailed work at less expense. Then the evidence which had been given before the Committee showed that the Consular Service in America was not in a satisfactory condition, and it also appeared that the Consuls were inadequately paid in several parts of the world. No doubt it was for the interest of the community that there should be proper Consular establishments throughout the world—Consuls had functions to perform of a legal and notarial character, which, as all agreed, should be paid for by the levy of fees as for services rendered to private individuals, and it was desirable that the discharge of their duties connected with shipping and the like should, as far as practicable, be paid in like manner by the persons resorting to them for such purposes, while the residue of their remuneration should be provided by Parliament. It had been suggested that the last mentioned payments might be commuted for a small tax on British shipping—an arrangement by which, if the shipping interest consented to it, matters might be greatly simplified. Consuls were guided in the performance of their duties, in a great degree, by regulations issued by the Foreign Office and the Board of Trade, and the Committee recommended that the regulations issued to them by the Board should be reconsidered. In conclusion, he asked whether the noble Lord the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs was prepared to make any statement to the Committee on that subject?

MR. RYLANDS, as a Member of the Committee, thought the subject was one well deserving the attention of the House. There were many points in respect to which, if the views of the Select Committee had been carried out, considerable economies might have been effected. Some reduction in that matter had, indeed, been made by the Foreign Office, but last year the net decrease was only £37, because while there was a nominal reduction of £2,863, it was counterbalanced by other increased charges amounting to £2,826. The noble Lord the Under Secretary ought to state what the Government had done to give effect to the Report of the Committee on the Diplomatic and Consular Services. The Foreign Office very rarely carried out recommendations effecting economy, but appeared always happy to carry out those involving additional expenditure; and in this case, considerable impression might be made on their Consular expenditure, if the recommendations of the Committee were carried out in a right spirit. One of these recommendations was the general appointment in the small trading centres of Vice Consuls in the persons of merchants, who would be glad to undertake the duty simply for the honorarium or fees they would receive. In many subordinate places respectable merchants would be glad of the distinction that would attach to holding the office of Consul or Vice Consul, and to discharge the duties for fees. Economy might be further effected in many places by the consolidation of the Diplomatic and Consular Services. In China, Japan, and parts of America, we had Representatives holding Diplomatic as well as Consular offices; but in Stockholm, Copenhagen, St. Petersburg, and Lisbon, we had both Ministers and Consuls. In these cases the Consular duties might very well be discharged by resident members of the Diplomatic Service. By consolidation something like £50,000 a-year might be saved. Unless something was done next year, he hoped the hon. Gentleman opposite the Member for North Hampshire would give them an opportunity of voting for the reduction of the Vote.

MR. OTWAY was not surprised that the hon. Gentleman opposite had called attention to the subject, seeing that so little result had followed the recommendations of the Committee to the appointment of which Lord Clarendon assented, which examined Lords Clarendon, Derby, and Malmesbury, and which investigated the whole subject so thoroughly. The evidence given was sifted with very great care, and after due consideration the Committee made their Report; but hardly anything had been done in consequence of that Report:—the tendency of Departments was generally to do nothing, if they could avoid the trouble. Having served on that Committee, he was satisfied that considerable economy might be effected by a consolidation of offices, and by taking advantage of the facilities afforded by railway and telegraphic communication, instead of keeping a great number of officials in inferior positions. It was incumbent on the Government itself to take some action in this matter, or else, when a similar question was raised again, the House would perhaps refuse to be satisfied with a Committee, when they could have no security that its Report would be attended to. The Report of the Committee in this case was one of a very moderate character, and its recommendations were calculated to improve the efficiency of the service and to reduce the expenditure; and if the noble Lord was not prepared to announce that its recommendations would be carried out during the present year, he trusted he would assure the House that they should receive early consideration.

MR. GOLDSMID said, it might be a good thing in some instances to accept the services of merchants as Vice Consuls; but it was bad policy to reduce the salaries of our Consuls at important stations in the East, because the impression produced was that a new Consul at a lower salary was an inferior man, whose decisions were entitled to proportionately less respect. Many of these Consuls required to have as much knowledge of law as a County Court Judge in England; they lived in climates fatal to the members of their families; they were in some instances so isolated as to be practically banished from civilized society. All this had to be borne in mind in fixing a salary, and in some cases injury had been done to British interests by unwisely lowering a salary, as the result was that less respect was paid to the official who accepted it, even though he was not inferior to his predecessor in ability. A difficulty in the way of consolidation of the offices of Minister and Consul was, that Ministers were changed oftener than Consuls, and sometimes had conflicting duties, as in the case of the siege of Paris, when the Minister properly left, in order to maintain his communications with the French Government and with his own, while the Consul remained in Paris, though he did not remain as long as he ought to have done. No doubt, in some instances, the offices would bear consolidation; but, as he had pointed out, disadvantage would arise if it were too extensively carried out.

GENERAL SIR GEORGE BALFOUR said, that so far from being in favour of closing the ports in China, he would strongly urge the extension of our commercial relations in that country by the establishment of Consuls or Vice Consuls. There would be great difficulty in extending the trade there, if they once commenced closing the ports. It would be better to extend, rather than reduce them, and to free commerce by the removal of fees. In his opinion the salaries of Consuls ought to be paid entirely out of Imperial funds.

MR. F. STANLEY said, the Select Committee did not mean to recommend that ports should be closed in China, but that the Foreign Office should not be deterred by any question of loss of prestige from closing ports which otherwise it would be undesirable to keep open. The Committee were also of opinion that in order to meet the claim put forward by the larger Consulates for additional pay and allowances, it would be necessary to cut off such smaller branches of the service as might be dispensed with.

MR. MAGNIAC concurred with the hon. Member for Warrington that there ought to be a union of the Diplomatic and Consular Services. He wished to call attention to the case of the British Consul in Sicily, the trade of which island he considered was of immense importance to this country, and he thought that case ought to receive the attention of the Government. The Consul was a gentleman eminently qualified for the post. At Palermo he had 10 Vice Consuls under him, with whom he was in constant communication, and he was incessantly called upon to discharge functions of the utmost importance to trade, and frequently, also, to the native population. That officer, he regretted to say, was left by the Government in the position of a mere trading Consul, who would be altogether incompetent to perform the duties fulfilled by the gentleman in question. He trusted that state of things would receive the attention of the Government during the coming winter. He was informed that the irregularities which formerly occurred in the Consular Service in China had now entirely ceased.

MR. WHITWELL hoped the Foreign Office would carry out the recommendations of the Select Committee. He could hardly agree with the hon. Member for Warrington that a union of the Consular and Diplomatic Services could be carried out to any great extent. In some of the Chinese stations it might answer very well; but except in a few cases, it would be found to be totally unsuited to Europe and the West.

VISCOUNT ENFIELD said, he could assure hon. Members that Lord Granville had given the fullest and most impartial consideration to the Report of the Select Committee, and in the spring of this year had addressed a letter to the Treasury on the subject. He could not read the whole of that long communication, as it was a departmental correspondence; but he would remind hon. Members that the Committee spoke in highly favourable terms of the way in which the Consuls performed their work. Although the Committee sat for two Sessions, and although any complaint on the part of our merchants would have received the careful attention of the Committee, yet no evidence was forthcoming to show that the commercial or mercantile world was dissatisfied with the Consular body. It appeared to him (Viscount Enfield), that if the mercantile and commercial world had thought their interests were not sufficiently protected by the Consular Service, they would have availed themselves of the opportunity of proving it before the Committee. The Committee testified to the economical administration of the British Consular Service. There had been a net decrease of £3,000 in the five years ending 1873-4, after allowing for the salaries of the Consulates in the Levant first placed on the Estimates in 1870-1. One of the most important recommendations was referred to in Paragraphs 1 to 20, where the Committee mention the classification of the Consular Service which they think might be carried out with great advantage. Lord Granville concurred generally with that recommendation. It must, however, be a work of time, and the interests of the present Consular officers must be consulted. Lord Granville thought that a classification might be made, by which juniors might pass through various grades by transfers and promotions. There might be three grades in the Consular Service, so that a gentleman entering in the first grade might pass into the second, and so on, and thus make it more of a service than it was at present. Paragraph 28 left it open to the Secretary of State to appoint persons otherwise on his own responsibility. It was not desirable that the service should be made strictly a close one, and lists were being prepared, and a classification carried out which would show how that important recommendation could be applied. Paragraphs 24 to 27 recommended a revision of Consular ports in the Levant, and the adoption of the changes recommended by Mr. Kennedy. Many of these had been already acted upon, showing a saving of £500 a-year, and others, such as the Janina Consulate, would be shortly completed. Paragraph 28 recommended personal inspections of Consulates such as Mr. Kennedy carried out in the Levant. Had it not been for the labours of Mr. Kennedy in carrying out the Treaty of Commerce, this inquiry would before now have been completed. Mr. Kennedy had been in Paris as British Commissioner under the Treaty of November 5, 1872, but he would now visit the Consulates in France, Holland, and Belgium; Mr. Wylde had visited Spain, Portugal, and Morocco, and would visit

Italy in the autumn; and Mr. Victor Buckley would visit and report upon the Consulates in Denmark, Sweden, Norway, the Baltic Provinces of Russia and North Germany. Inquiries were also being made into the accounts of the several Consular Church establishments to which grants of public money were made under the Act of 6 Geo. IV., c. 87. These grants still amounted to £9,000 a-year, but might very likely be reduced. Paragraph 32 hinted at a certain increase of expenditure in expensive ports, more liberal outfit, calculations in allowing pensions for work done in unhealthy localities, more liberal leave of absence, &c. To carry out these views there must be complete harmony and agreement between the Treasury and the Foreign Office. A Committee of both Departments had been appointed to look carefully into all these matters. The Committee of the Treasury consisted of Mr. S. Blackwood and the hon. Member for Whitby (Mr. W. H. Gladstone). The Committee of the Foreign Office consisted of Lord Tenterden and Mr. W. H. Wylde, of the Consular Department, assisted by Mr. Buckley. That Committee had already met. The Select Committee of that House, as regarded fees, suggested either a revision of fees or the substitution of a tonnage duty. British fees were very low in comparison with those levied by other countries; but if a tonnage duty were imposed, and if the notarial duties of Consuls were extended, the Consular Acts would require to be amended. The Committee next recommended that greater power should be given to Consuls to deal with refractory seamen. That could only be done by Consular Conventions with other countries, and Parliamentary legislation would be needed to record the reciprocity demanded by foreign Governments. The Board of Trade would be consulted by the Foreign Office, and Mr. Reilly had drawn up a Memorandum on the subject. Another point recommended by the Select Committee was greater amplification in the returns and forms of the Board of Trade; and a revision of their Code of Rules and Instructions was recommended by many of our Consuls. That could not properly be done until the new Merchant Shipping Amendment Act had been passed. These were the chief points in the Report of the Committee, and he would repeat that they were dealt with by Lord Granville in a very long letter which he had addressed to the Treasury. The defalcation of one of the Consular agents in China had been brought under the notice of the Foreign Office. The Treasury insisted on his immediate suspension, and that steps should be taken for his arrest. There would be difficulty in obtaining a conviction, as the matter would have to be treated as a breach of trust, and not of fraud. The Treasury, however, were of opinion that a prosecution should be instituted, even if it failed, as an example to others. This officer, who had escaped from justice, had been apprehended and held to bail, but his trial had not yet taken place. With regard to the closing of certain ports in China, that had been done in two or three cases, but it had been found very inconvenient to trade, and the Consulates in those localities had to be re-established. The hon. Member for Warrington advocated the consolidation of the Diplomatic and Consular Services; but he could hold no hopes that Lord Granville, as long as he held the seals of the Foreign Office, would consent to such a consolidation, which would, in his opinion, be for the advantage neither of the Diplomatic nor of the Consular Service. The hon. Member for St. Ives had adverted to the case of the Consul at Palermo. His claim was now under consideration, with others of a similar nature, with a view of ascertaining whether Consuls, who were neither willing nor able to trade, might receive in lieu a fixed salary. Lord Granville had given immediate attention to the recommendations of the Committee, and if it should be his (Viscount Enfield's) duty to move the Votes for the Consular Service in another Session, he believed it would be found that economy had been promoted and the efficiency of the Service increased by the action of the Foreign Office in carrying out the main recommendations of the Select Committee.

Viscount Enfield

GENERAL SIR GEORGE BALFOUR expressed a hope that next year there would be a considerable reduction in the payment by India of the Consular and Diplomatic Services in Persia.

MR. KINNAIRD inquired whether the Reports of the gentlemen who had made a personal investigation in foreign Consulates would be laid upon the Table or be regarded as departmental only?

VISCOUNT ENFIELD said, that those Reports, which would be regarded as strictly confidential, would probably be referred to the Departmental Committee now sitting.

Vote agreed to.

SUPPLY—POST OFFICE SERVICES.

(3.) £2,745,342, Post Office Services, &c.

MR. MONK said, he had given Notice of a Motion for Friday last, on the subject of an Order recently issued by the Postmaster General, for the compulsory registration of letters containing postage stamps, but was unable to bring it on. The delay had, however, he hoped, enabled the right hon. Gentleman so to re-consider the matter that he would be able to announce that the Order had been rescinded, so that it might be unnecessary to submit the Motion on the Report of Supply. The Order in question extended to bank notes, letters containing postage stamps, watches, or jewellery; and, as to the last two items, he had no objection to urge. The reason assigned for its issue was to diminish the temptations to which servants of the Post Office were exposed by the sending of articles of value in unregistered letters; and it was clear from the Notice that had been published, that it was the intention of the Post Office authorities, that the registration of letters containing any of the articles enumerated should be compulsory; but the Postmaster General, in replying to a Question last week, said it was not intended to require letters containing postage stamps or notes to be registered, except in cases where they were so badly folded, or fastened that their contents were exposed, in which case they would be liable to a double registration fee of 8d. Since he gave Notice of his Motion, he had received a large number of letters on the subject. Some of his correspondents were in the habit of receiving 30 or 40 letters a-day, each containing postage stamps, and one gentleman stated that the average number of letters he received each day covering postage stamps was over 100. Great inconvenience would be caused by the Order in question, and it would occasion considerable losses to many poor persons and charities. The regulation upon the subject said nothing about compulsory registration, unless the letter or package was insufficiently fastened, or the bank notes or postage stamps obtruded. How did the right hon. Gentleman proposeto carry out the Order? Was it intended that the Post Office employés should become detectives, in order to determine whether there were postage or draft stamps in letters? If the law was to apply to postage stamps, surely it should be extended to draft stamps or cheques payable to bearer. The person who would be punished by it would not be the careless sender, but the unfortunate receiver, who would oftentimes suffer a considerable loss. He believed there were very few dishonest servants in the Post Office, and yet, for the sake of protecting those few, it was proposed to pass a law which would be one of extreme hardship to the public. Why, they might just as well pass a law with regard to the exposure of articles in shop windows. He believed that, however carefully a letter was folded and sealed, if it contained more than a dozen postage stamps, its contents would be obvious to many of the skilled men employed in the Post Office. There were, he had heard, many of the sorters who could tell in a moment whether postage stamps or bank notes were contained in a letter. He trusted that after the strong opinion expressed by the public Press, and that would, he had no doubt, be expressed by hon. Members, the right hon. Gentleman would declare his readiness to rescind his Order so far as bank notes and postage stamps were concerned. The Post Office was, he believed, the most popular Department connected with the Government, and he hoped the Postmaster General would not find it necessary to interfere with the facilities which his predecessor had given to the public, of sending small sums of money in postage stamps, which the Post Office afterwards cashed at a small commission. That boon ought not to be lessened by what he could not help considering an unnecessary interference with the rights and privileges of the people.

Mr. MONCKTON also urged the right hon. Gentleman to rescind the regulation in question. In many of the poorer districts, and especially rural ones, people were in the habit of remitting small sums in stamps, and were not very well skilled in the folding of letters, and the carrying out of the Order would practically be a heavy tax upon persons who could ill afford to pay it.

Mr. MONSELL said, he could assure his hon. Friend that the interpretation which he desired to be put upon the Order was that contained in the regulation, and he had already expressed his disapprobation of the form in which the public Notice had been couched. He believed that had it not been for that, probably the difficulty which had now occurred would never have arisen, and it would have been possible to carry out the Order, which he believed was an important one, because it dealt with a temptation which seriously contributed to promote dishonesty among the letter-carriers. The number who could be charged with such an offence was very few; but the temptations were much greater than the hon. Gentleman supposed. In the Chief Office in London there were from 300 to 400 letters per day, the contents of which, consisting principally of stamps and jewellery, were found scattered about the room in which the letters were sorted, and he thought the hon. Member would agree with him that there was a sufficient cause for making an effort in that direction. He entirely agreed with him that the Post Office and the Post Office regulations, in order to be successful, must rest upon public opinion; and he therefore thought it was far better to give up regulations, even though, if properly carried out, they might have been useful, than to force them upon an unwilling people. He, therefore, proposed to withdraw the regulation in question, so far as regarded postage stamps and bank notes, maintaining it in other respects. Perhaps, in some other years, if the regulations were better framed, the House might take a different view of the subject.

Mr. W. H. SMITH said, he was sure that the course taken by the right hon. Gentleman in withdrawing the regulation would commend itself to public opinion. He wished now to bring under the notice of the right hon. Gentleman Memorials recently sent to the Postmaster General from the officers of the minor Post Office establishments in London. These Memorials were adopted at meetings held with the cognizance of the Postmaster General, who, in his Report just circulated, said the men generally had acted in a very proper and praiseworthy manner. He (Mr. W. H. Smith) thought the men deserved the greatest possible consideration, on the ground that they had abstained from every act which could imperil the public service, or endanger the discipline of the service with which they were connected. They asked for consideration because nothing had been done for them for the last 10 years; their pay was exceedingly low, their responsibility was very great; and they were engaged in all weathers, and at all hours, in the discharge of a duty which demanded a very considerable amount of intelligence. The maximum salary of the letter-sorters was 45s. The salary of a letter-carrier rose by 1s. a-week to 25s., and stopped at that point for eight years, when he received another rise of 1s. till he reached a maximum of 30s. The Treasury had refused to listen to the appeal, just as the metropolitan police had been refused any increase of pay, but had obtained it when circumstances became serious. He condemned that line of policy as unwise and as extravagant. To repudiate reasonable claims, and refuse to meet representations properly made, was bad management in every sense of the word, and after what had occurred it was in effect saying—"You do not make this demand in such a form as that we are afraid of you." Speaking as a large employer of labour, he should never put his men in the position of coming to threaten him. Although it might be possible to fill up a few of those places as cheaply as at present, it was the duty of an employer to consider the circumstances of the whole body, and it was his interest to make them attached servants rather than discontented ones. He hoped the right hon. Gentleman would be able to give the Committee some assurance that a favourable reply would be given to a body of men who were paid so little, who discharged such responsible duties, whose claims had been so temperately advanced, and might be met at such comparatively small cost to the public.

MR. MACFIE congratulated the right hon. Gentleman upon the wisdom of the course he had adopted with regard to the new Order. He wished to inquire why the offer of the Corn Exchange, on very advantageous terms, as a post office for Leith had not been accepted?

COLONEL NORTH supported the statement of the hon. Member for Westminster (Mr. W. H. Smith). The mem-whose case was under consideration were actuated by the best feeling, and anxious to do everything in the most proper manner; but they were driven almost to despair by the way in which they were treated, their respectful petitions to the Department not being attended to. He was waited upon, in common with other Members of Parliament, by the letter-carriers, and he was bound to say he never saw a more respectable body of men. It was, he believed, 15 or 16 months since they sent in a Memorial to the right hon. Gentleman the Postmaster General asking for an increase of salary, but no attention had been paid to it. That, in his opinion, was not a proper way to treat them, and if they "struck" let the House remember what serious consequences would be the result. The country was with them, and he hoped the Government would accede to their reasonable demand.

MR. T. HUGHES also expressed concurrence in what had been said by the hon. Member for Westminster, and wished to call attention to the case of the letter-carriers in the country. In the districts with which he was familiar, they were paid less at that moment than agricultural labourers, although their work had increased 50 per cent. The rounds they made daily amounted on an average to some 16 miles. From the greater number of houses the letter-carriers had to go to, and the changes that had been made in the postal arrangements, they had much more work to do than formerly, and yet they had got no rise of wages, although the gains of the Department had, through their labours, increased 100 per cent. These letter-carriers in the country had got no advance in the rate of pay for 20 years. He trusted that the Postmaster General would consider the matter fairly, as any other employer of labour would do, and, looking at the increased cost of living, the additional work that had to be done by these men, and the gain that had accrued to the Post Office from their labours, see whether they were not entitled to better terms.

MR. KINNAIRD concurred entirely with his hon. Friend the Member for Westminster as to the reasonableness of the demand made by the letter-carriers, and he believed that to refuse their demand was an inexcusable economy. He hoped his right hon.

Friend the Postmaster General would take their demand into his immediate consideration. There had been very undesirable economy with regard to country letter-carriers, those in Perthshire walking considerable distances and receiving paltry wages.

Mr. WHEELHOUSE hoped the wish expressed by hon. Members on both sides of the House, on behalf of the letter-carriers would be acceded to. He believed they were as honest a body of men as could be found in the public service, and he hoped that in granting the demand of the London letter-carriers he would not forget those of the great commercial towns and cities in the United Kingdom.

Mr. LOOKE said, he had had an opportunity of meeting a deputation of these men within the precincts of the House, and was bound to say that nothing could be more straightforward than their conduct, and nothing was more certain than that they received inferior and inadequate salaries, and he was sure their case would meet with due consideration. His right hon. Friend the Postmaster General must be aware that 30s. a-week was not a sufficient remuneration for men with long hours of work, and from whom a knowledge of reading, writing, and ciphering was required. Skilled mechanics were much better paid. He hoped a fair inquiry would be made, and that a new scheme would be adopted, the result of which might be a considerable addition to the pay of those who were employed in the Post Office.

Mr. PIM said, that as an employer of labour he should consider it exceedingly bad economy to delay the consideration of a claim of this kind which had any element of justice in it. An increase had been made in every Department of the public service, and his right hon. Friend the Postmaster General could not expect to form an exception. He reminded him that an increase was made to the pay of the Dublin police only when they threatened to "turn out," which was in his opinion a most unworthy and unsatisfactory way for a Government to settle a reasonable and just demand.

Mr. MUNDELLA said, he had been repeatedly conferred with by the representatives of the Post Office service, and his advice to them had always been that they should not do anything to inconvenience the public, but present their Memorials in a respectful manner, and trust their cause to the justice of the House of Commons and the consideration of the Department. There had been no disposition on their part to give the slightest inconvenience to the public. They could not—it was right that they should not—hold mass meetings as was done in other cases, and it was the more incumbent on the Government, on that account, to consider their case and anticipate somewhat their reasonable demands. For 10 years these men had got no advance of wages, although in other employments wages had during that period risen 25 to 30 per cent. Parsimony in the public Departments in such cases was worse than profusion. Having meritorious servants, the public Departments, like other employers, should always seek to encourage them and to give them fair play. He would also remind the right hon. Gentleman of the serious consequences that would ensue, if one fine morning all the letters which arrived in this great metropolis were not delivered in consequence of a sudden strike among the letter-carriers. The example set by the Dublin police might be followed, but he hoped the right hon. Gentleman would at once remove the dissatisfaction which prevailed.

Mr. SCLATER BOOTH said, he did not think it creditable to the Representatives of the people to be urging the Government to increase the salaries and wages of those whom they employed. He did not mean to say that those wages did not require revision; but it should not be forgotten that the position of men in Government employ was superior to that of men in other employments. In addition to their wages, the letter-carriers had their clothing found them, and they were also permitted to receive Christmas boxes, which often amounted to a considerable sum of money. It should also be remembered that they had great opportunities of doing other work between intervals.

Mr. MILLER said, he was not one of those who would pay more than was just and right, but he had had for some time urged upon him by the constituents he had the honour to represent, that the work the Post Office employés had to perform was enormous, and that their pay was altogether inadequate. That having been brought before him, he inquired minutely into the matter, and he found that in the City of Edinburgh, a city not easily gone through by Post Office officers, that the work was perfectly enormous, the hours long, and the pay quite inadequate to support the men and their families. He had brought the question several times before his right hon. Friend the Postmaster General, and he was quite sure unless something were done towards raising the pay, there would be no satisfaction among the officers themselves, or among the inhabitants, for the latter would consider that if the officers were not adequately paid the service would not be well done. The work of the Post Office officers was not remunerated as it ought to be. The hon. and learned Member for Frome had brought on the inadequate pay of the rural messengers. Some of these only received 14s. a-week, though they had to walk 16 miles a-day, and to deliver letters in the villages through which they passed. These men without other means could not support themselves. No doubt they could go round with the hat and pick up a sort of alms on their way; but it seemed to him (Mr. Miller) very extraordinary that officers bearing the livery of Her Majesty should be required to go about in that sort of way. It would be far better for Government to pay them the full value of their services. Another question which he must bring forward was the position of the General Post Office in Edinburgh. He understood that the secretary of that office was abolished and another post given to the holder, which rendered it impossible for him to fulfil the duties. He would ask if that change were to be carried out to the full extent? It had given great dissatisfaction to the district around Edinburgh. It forced all communication to be made with London instead of being done in Edinburgh. He hoped the right hon. Gentleman would explain these subjects.

MR. EYKYN said, he for one could submit patiently to the castigation given to hon. Members of the House by the hon. Gentleman opposite the Member for North Hants (Mr. Sclater Booth). An important part of the public service—the Army—had lately received an increase of pay. The Post Office employed a valuable body of men, who were well worthy of their hire. A large amount of property was constantly passing through their hands, and but a very small proportion of it was ever lost or mislaid. The whole tone of the men in that agitation showed that they had considerable intelligence, and that they approached that matter in no unbecoming spirit. Although it was impossible at that period of the Session to obtain an increase of the Estimates, he asked the right hon. Gentleman to consider the claims both of the metropolitan and the rural and provincial letter-carriers, whose remuneration was inadequate; and he trusted that before next Session the Postmaster General and the Treasury would have agreed on a new scale of wages which would be satisfactory to the men and also to the House.

MR. GILPIN thought the remarks of the hon. Member opposite (Mr. Sclater-Booth) were very seasonable and required. It was easy to declare that no Ministry was worthy of support that could not govern without spending so many millions a-year; and yet those who said that, were apt to press the Government, when a practical question was raised, for an increase of expenditure. He did not deny that the case of these applicants might deserve favourable consideration; but there he would leave it, without putting undue pressure on the Government. While the House leaned towards liberality, it should remember that it was out of the pockets of the taxpayers that any additional expenditure must come.

MR. W. FOWLER said, he did not know what hon. Members sat there for if they were not to express an opinion on a question of that sort without being called to Order for it. The wages of messengers and clerks in some of the rural post offices were extremely small and insufficient for the services rendered; and he hoped the Postmaster General, after that discussion, would look narrowly into the case of those persons, and see whether something might not be done in their favour. He held that it was a very false economy to underpay men for their services.

MR. M'LAREN said, that he observed the letter-carriers in Dublin and Edinburgh were equally ill-paid. They began at 18s. a-week, and advanced to 24s. 18s. a-week, for men of the class required to carry letters, was far too little to induce respectable men to take the duty. He had been personally cognizant, of the kind of men employed as letter-carriers for more than half-a-century, and he could state that they were not nearly the same class of men in point of steadiness and knowledge as they were. At that time joiners had 18s. a-week, and masons about the same. Now all these classes had 30s. or more. Letter-carriers had 18s. still. It was impossible to get steady, trustworthy, active, painstaking men for 18s. a-week. That led him to remark upon the enormous amount of labour of letter-carriers. He found there were 142 of them in Dublin and 95 in Edinburgh. He did not know why that difference in numbers should be, more especially when it was considered that the population of Edinburgh and Leith together was exactly equal to that of Dublin, according to the last Census. Then, as they had been told by his hon. Colleague, a process of cutting down the superior officers in the Edinburgh establishment was going on. The Dublin expenditure was £50,895; Edinburgh, £36,355. One would have thought if there was to be any cutting off, they would be more likely to cut off from the £50,000 than from the £36,000, more especially as the town he was connected with must have much the larger number of letters. The business should be managed on principle, and if any cutting down was required, they should begin where there was room for lopping off, and not cause inconvenience by taking away the secretary from the establishment in Edinburgh, and necessitating the sending of official correspondence to London. Altogether, he thought the thing might be better managed. At the same time, he concurred in the general impolicy of making a rush at a Department of the Government. Exceptional cases, such as those of the letter-carriers and the clerks, required remedies, and he thought if some of the large salaries could be cut down, considerable addition might be made to the lower.

Mr. MONSELL said, his hon. Friend the Member for Leith (Mr. Macfie) might be quite satisfied that the claims of his constituents with regard to a Post Office were being fairly considered. The question was in the hands of the First Commissioner of Works, who would very soon decide on a fitting place for one. It was true that a very beneficial change had been made in the Edinburgh Post Office, and one which he should very much like to see introduced into Ireland. In place of the secretary an officer called the surveyor general had been appointed, who discharged the duties of secretary and also those of surveyor for all Scotland, except Glasgow, which had a surveyor of its own, and had ample time for the discharge of the duties of both offices. The result was to prevent the delay which formerly arose in the communications between the Post Office authorities in Edinburgh and London, and a great benefit was conferred on the people of Scotland. He heard with considerable astonishment many of the remarks made as to the rate of wages of the letter-carriers in the great towns and also in the rural districts. Anyone unacquainted with the subject would have believed that nothing had been done in the way of raising those wages, whereas the fact was, that every week the wages of letter-carriers in rural districts were being raised. They were not raised all in a lump, because the circumstances of different parts of the country were different; but where representations were made, they were very carefully considered, and in a very large number of instances greatly increased pay had been given to those rural messengers. With regard to the large towns, Liverpool, Manchester, Dublin, Glasgow, Edinburgh, and many others, the wages of the letter-carriers had also been raised. In some cases, those who had their wages raised last year very naturally desired that they should be raised again this year; but the Department could not go on at that rate. What the hon. Member for Westminster (Mr. W. H. Smith) said with regard to the metropolitan letter-carriers was perfectly true. The present scale was 21s. a-week, rising by 1s. a-week annually to 25s., and after 12 years' service to 30s. But it must be recollect that a mere statement of the rate of wages did not represent all that the letter-carriers received. Besides those wages, every letter-carrier received two suits of uniform, which he (Mr. Monsell) was informed could not be put at less than 1s. 6d. a-week. Then he had medicine and attendance when ill; if laid up by ordinary sickness he received two-thirds, if by accident, the whole of his wages. That rendered it unnecessary for him to belong to a benefit society, and at least 1s. a-week was thus saved. Every letter-carrier was also entitled to a pension if his conduct was good, and he had served a certain number of years. In the case of a boy who began at 16, as they often did now, when he arrived at 56 he might retire on a pension of £50 a-year. Allusion had been made to Christmas boxes. What the London letter-carriers received in Christmas boxes amounted, it was said, on an average, to something about 4s. a-week. It was not fair, therefore, to represent the wages of the letter-carriers of London at merely the nominal sum. But he would be perfectly candid. It was for the Treasury to decide as to the pay of the different Departments. That was the duty of one Department, and it was right it should be so; otherwise you would have one Department raising the salaries of those employed by it, and other Departments following the example, the result being the greatest extravagance. But, as the Secretary of State for War and the Vice President of the Council said the other day, if hon. Members would join with him (Mr. Monsell) in trying to soften the heart of his right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer, so that some slight improvement might be made, he would be very happy. He had no doubt that any well-grounded claim for concession to the letter-carriers would be carefully considered by the Treasury, and granted, if found to be in accordance with principles of justice. But he could not avoid expressing his opinion that the bringing up of questions like that in the course of a debate in Parliament was to be deprecated, for it could only end in creating discontent among the officers of the Post Office. They might rest assured that any real grievance would be fairly considered with a view to a remedy; but he must say, that such a course was not facilitated by pressure being put on him by Parliament.

MR. MELLOR wished to know whether the new and improved terms to be paid to letter-carriers were to be extended to the men employed in rural districts, whose pay at the present time was wretchedly bad? In the district in which he lived, the letter-carriers had to depend a good deal on the earnings of their wives for the support of themselves and their families.

MR. RYLANDS said, however much he might admit the justice of the claim, it was a pity that such discussions should be raised in that House, especially as the authorities of the Post Office Department were always willing to listen to and consider any representations made to them with reference to particular cases. It would be better that such matters should be brought before the Government privately, rather than in the House of Commons, as public discussion upon them was certainly calculated to excite discontent.

MR. CAVENDISH BENTINCK wished to know how long the French railway companies were to continue in their present system of blocking up the high road to Italy? Letters posted in Rome on Sunday ought to be delivered in London on the Wednesday evening, instead of being delayed as was the case at present. He wished also to know whether arrangements were being made whereby letters could be posted in travelling post-office vans on the lines of railway, in order to the saving of time and the convenience of the public.

MR. MONSELL, in reply, said, there was no fixed scale for the letter-carriers in the rural districts, but that their remuneration differed in different parts of the country. With respect to the Mont Cenis tunnel, he admitted that the present system of conveying the letters was unsatisfactory; but he hoped that before long, the letters would be sent through the Mont Cenis tunnel instead of being sent all the way round. As to the grievances of the employés in the Dublin office, he was happy to state that the wages of the letter-carriers had already been raised, and the question of following the same course in the case of the sorters was now under consideration.

Vote agreed to.

(4.) £679,000, Post Office Telegraphic Service.

SUPPLY—SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.

(5.) £15,000, Metropolitan Police Courts.

(6.) £8,500, New Palace at Westminster and further Embankment of the River Thames.

MR. RYLANDS said, the Government ought to explain why these Supplementary Estimates were not brought forward at an early period of the Session. He protested against the Committee pledging the House by the adoption of that Vote to a very large expenditure of money. The sum of £8,500 was a portion of an expenditure of £35,000, that would be required to complete the work of embankment, and would lead to the expenditure of £138,000 for the completion of the buildings to be erected thereon. The Government ought to show the Committee that they could not bring on the Vote at an earlier period of the Session; and if they could not satisfactorily explain it, the Vote ought to stand over until next year. He was led to insist upon that course, the more especially as neither plans nor estimates had been furnished showing the need of the outlay. Before the right hon. Gentleman the First Commissioner of Works acceded to office he often insisted that piecemeal Votes of this sort should not be agreed to before the Government explained what was the total amount of the expenditure contemplated.

MR. AYRTON said, it was quite true that when he sat in the place now occupied by his hon. Friend, he always contended for the principle, with regard to the administration of the Office of Works, that no Estimate should be proposed unless at the same time the whole expenditure to which that Vote would lead was fully brought under the consideration of the Committee, because he had repeatedly observed that Estimates which appeared to sanction but a small expenditure at first were but the beginning of a very much larger outlay. He was sorry he was not able to vindicate that view with reference to the present Estimate. It was an Estimate with which, though in a certain form prepared by himself as First Commissioner of Works, he was not in reality responsible. It was prepared in its present form by the Treasury, and proposed on their own responsibility, and he had first seen it, like other hon. Members of the House, when it was distributed as a Parliamentary Paper. That, therefore, entirely acquitted the Department over which he presided. He could not tell the Committee what the nature or the extent of the expenditure was to be, because he was not in possession of information on the subject. All he could say was that this Embankment was for the purpose of obtaining land on the bank of the river Thames, embanking it to form a terrace in continuation of the terrace in front of the Houses of Parliament, he understood with the purpose of erecting public offices on some portion of the land. What those public offices were to be, or what they would cost, he did not in the smallest degree know. As to the question of the hon. Gentleman—namely, what urgent necessity was there for bringing these Estimates before the House of Commons at that period of the Session—he could not give him the least information on that point. If it was urgent that this Embankment should be made, and that the erection of these public offices should be commenced, of course, it was urgent that the Committee should vote the money. If there was no urgency in the matter he thought it might be postponed till next Session.

COLONEL GILPIN protested against Estimates being brought forward in the last few days of the Session. The Government ought to inform the Committee why these Estimates had not been brought forward at an earlier period of the Session, and also show why they could not now be postponed till next year. A very bad system had been pursued lately. At an early period of the Session the Government got certain sums "on account" which they required, but they consulted their own convenience, and not that of the House, as to when they got the remainder; and the consequence was, that the Estimates were put off till near the close of the Session.

MR. WHITWELL hoped the Secretary to the Treasury was able to give the Committee the explanation which was due from the Government, the right hon. Gentleman the First Commissioner having declared his ignorance of the subject.

MR. LIDDELL protested against one Department of the Government being made responsible by another Department with reference to expenditure, without any information being given to the Department thus made responsible of the reasons for that expenditure. This matter of Ministerial responsibility was becoming serious. The First Commissioner of Works was fully imbued with the principles of economy, and he was ready at all times to carry them out at all risks. He had a great respect for the right hon. Gentleman; but it appeared he was totally ignorant why, and for what this expenditure was required. It was right the Committee should know if the Treasury could impose on the Board of Works, for which he (Mr. Ayrton) was not responsible, the carrying out a scheme of expenditure of which he knew nothing. He, therefore, trusted the House would set its face against that scheme of expenditure.

LORD EDMOND FITZMAURICE said, the Vote was headed "Acquisition of land and Embankment," but during last year and the two previous years the principle had been strongly laid down by Her Majesty's Government, that all works for the embankment of the Thames should be executed at the expense of the metropolitan ratepayers, and not at the expense of the country. He wished to know why that principle was not adhered to in the present instance; and, whether it was absolutely necessary, in reference to the Palace of Westminster, that that additional piece of embankment should be constructed? If the hon. Member pressed his Amendment to a division, he should give him his support unless these questions were answered satisfactorily.

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER proceeded to explain the matter by stating that there formerly existed beyond the Victoria Tower, and in dangerous proximity to the Houses of Parliament, a large stack of old buildings, which, together with the land on which they stood, were purchased by the Government under an Act of Parliament, and the houses were then pulled down in order to prevent the danger of their taking fire, which might be communicated to the Palace, and it was now proposed to embank the land which had thus become the property of the Government. It was deemed desirable that a building should be erected fronting the Victoria Tower, one of its flanks resting on the river, and the other on Abingdon Street, and of a sufficient height to screen the buildings beyond from the Houses of Parliament; but before such a building was erected, it would be necessary that the land should be embanked, in order to provide the necessary extent of ground for it to stand upon. Taking into consideration the very advantageous situation of the property, it was intended that the building to be erected upon it should be appropriated to public purposes—probably it would be used for the purposes of Royal and other Commissions, the lodgings for such Bodies at present entailing considerable expense on the country. The cause of the delay had arisen from the doubts and difficulties that had existed how the land should be laid out. Seeing what had already been done in the way of embanking the Thames by the Metropolitan Board of Works, it was only fair that the Government should do their own share of the work, and the Committee, he hoped, would not object to that course. He trusted that the hon. Member would not press his Amendment.

MR. R. N. FOWLER regarded that discussion as a striking proof of the inconvenience occasioned by the Government postponing Votes until the end of the Session when they could not be properly discussed.

MR. WHITE, in view of the statement of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, that the proposed new building was to be appropriated for Royal and other Commissions, wished to know from the First Commissioner of Works, whether there were not a large number of unoccupied rooms in the Palace which were well fitted for the purposes of such Commissions?

MR. F. S. POWELL said, he had no objection to the Embankment scheme, but he wished to know, if the Committee sanctioned the Vote, whether it would pledge them to the erection of any new public offices? When the ground in question was purchased, they were told it was to be cleared so as to guard against the possibility of fire from the adjoining houses; but now they were going to put up new buildings upon it, which would be exposed to fire from the houses which lay beyond it. Were they to buy up those houses, too? If so, he did not see where the process would end.

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER explained that by agreeing to the Vote the House would in no way be pledged to provide funds for the erection of any building whatever. The Vote was for embankment only. It was intended that the interval between the new building and the Houses of Parliament should be more than the 150 feet prescribed by the Act of Parliament, in order to protect the Houses of Parliament against fire. It was desirable that the proposed building should be erected in order to shut out the view of the low class of property which lay beyond.

DR. BALL complained that the Vote had been put upon the Paper in so ambiguous a form that it was impossible for an uninitiated person not connected with a Government Department to imagine that it was intended for the purposes which had been explained. It had led him to believe that the Embankment was to be constructed between the Palace and the river, and not in continuation of the Palace river terrace. He thought it very desirable there should be an Embankment in the direction proposed, and he should have been prepared to vote for a larger sum, and for a further continuation of the Embankment.

MR. ALDERMAN LUSK also expressed his approval of the plan, which was the proper complement to the original purchase of the property. As the House had bought the property, they ought to put it into a proper condition and make it useful.

MR. AYRTON, in answer to the question put by the hon. Member for Brighton (Mr. White) said, it was quite true that there were numerous rooms in the Palace which had not been used for many years, but which at one time he had thought might be used for the purposes of Commissions. When, however, he thought thus, he was not aware that the Treasury contemplated erecting a block of buildings for that purpose. If the hon. Member for Brighton (Mr. White) had adverted to an opinion which he formerly expressed in the House; he must now be pleased to consider that opinion as obsolete. With regard to this particular Vote, there was, perhaps, thus much to be said in favour of it. The land in question was of considerable extent, and it was necessary that part of it should be left unoccupied for the purpose of protecting the Palace from fire, by not allowing other buildings to be in close contact with it. The land gained from the river by embanking in front of the land to be left vacant would be a part of that protection; but the expense of making the Embankment for that land would not amount to anything like the sum stated in the Vote. The rest of the Embankment would be an improvement of the remaining land for any purpose whatever. The hon. Member for Warrington (Mr. Rylands) had challenged him with having brought forward a proposal which was contrary to the views he had expressed, and he wished to explain that he had done nothing of the kind. So far as related to the construction of the Embankment, that was a part of the question which stood entirely on its own merits, and the House was perfectly able to pronounce a judgment on the matter. For himself, he thought that it would be necessary. The erection of buildings for the accommodation of Commissions, or any other purpose, was, however, a totally different matter, and one on which he would rather not express an opinion until after a full investigation of what was proposed, and of the necessity for it, and the expense that might have to be incurred. As he had no information on the subject, beyond what he had heard in the House, he was no wiser than any other Member of the Committee.

MR. W. M. TORRENS thought that among the numerous virtues which his right hon. Friend possessed, there was one which hon. Members had scarcely given him credit for before that evening—he meant diffidence. It was quite clear he was most anxious to impress upon the Committee that he knew nothing about the erection of the buildings in question, and that he was seized with a strong desire to obtain all the information which he could from the Government to which he belonged. As the Committee appeared to be equally in the same state of dense ignorance and helplessness as his right hon. Friend, on their part, and on behalf of his right hon. Friend, he should like to hear the reason why it was proposed to embark upon an expenditure to which he could see no limit. It was the duty of the Committee to refuse to grant money unless they were made aware how it was to be laid out, and he was glad to think that five years on the Treasury Bench had not debauched that virtue for which his right hon. Friend was distinguished as an advocate of economy when he sat below the gangway. Governments might come and go, but virtue, like the river, “ran on for ever.”

MR. CRAWFORD wished to know, whether the new club-house being erected at the end of Westminster Bridge was not being built in violation of the rule that no building should be raised within 150 feet of the Houses of Parliament?

MR. RYLANDS asked the Committee to resist the Vote. The Chancellor of the Exchequer had not assigned any reason why, even if it were ultimately required, the Vote could not be postponed till next year. The right hon. Gentleman appeared to be ignorant of the fact, that in the large building in which they were then assembled, there were rooms that were utterly unused, and no steps were ever taken to utilize them; yet they were now asked to embark on a large expenditure for buildings, without its being shown for what purpose they were wanted. He hoped the Vote would be withdrawn until next year.

Dr. Ball

MR. BAXTER pointed out that the scheme which the Chancellor of the Exchequer had explained, would be proposed to the House at some future time; but that the Committee were simply asked on the present occasion to grant the sum necessary for the construction of the Embankment, which was a work it was necessary to have done whether buildings were erected on the property or not. The Estimate had not been brought forward earlier because it was not until the beginning of June that the arrangement mentioned by the Chancellor of the Exchequer had been made. The Embankment, he might add, would be proceeded with as soon as possible.

MR. SCLATER-BOOTH pointed out that the money asked for was, in accordance with the statement of the First Commissioner of Works, more than sufficient for the construction of the Embankment. If there was to be some other work beyond that undertaking, plans ought, he maintained, to have been laid before Parliament.

MR. BAXTER said, that the money was intended for the Embankment only.

MR. SCLATER-BOOTH pointed out that, if that were so, the money should have been asked for as an Ordinary and not in the shape of a Supplementary Estimate.

MR. DICKINSON remarked that the length of the proposed Embankment would be greater than the 150 feet which was said to be necessary for the protection of the Houses of Parliament.

Vote agreed to.

(7.) £28,740, Embassy Houses at Vienna and Washington.

MR. RYLANDS said, that that Vote should not have been brought on now. If the Government were not prepared to include it in the Ordinary Estimates, they might have postponed it altogether.

He now asked the Committee to reject it, because looking at the cost of the Embassy houses of Great Britain at Paris and Constantinople, they had been exposed to so heavy an expenditure, as not to feel any encouragement to enter upon any increase of it. In 28 years, according to Returns before Parliament, the Embassy house at Paris had cost the country £158,799; while the Embassy house at Constantinople had cost £378,203, or together, nearly £500,000. The reason which had induced the Foreign Office to own a house at Constantinople was, that it could take means to protect it from fire, it having been burnt down 30 or 40 years ago; and yet, when it was burnt down a year or two ago, it appeared that the neglect of all ordinary precautions against fire had been disgraceful, that the water tanks were empty, and that the fine-engines were unworkable. A great disadvantage in having a large palace was, that it involved all Ambassadors alike in the necessity of maintaining large establishments, whether they wished to do so or not. These large sums were far from representing what those establishments cost the country, and though it was used as an argument in their favour, when their erection was proposed, that they would be a great saving to the country, there could be no question that it would be much cheaper to hire a suitable residence for an Ambassador. The fact was, that these gentlemen put a strong pressure on the Government, and the Government yielded to it. An Ambassador went out to his post, and found the house occupied by his predecessor too large or too small, and then complaints were made, and it was represented that it would be better and cheaper to provide a house, and the consequence was, that it was determined to provide, furnish, and maintain houses large enough for all. The house at Paris cost £1,000 a-year to light and warm; there were similar charges at Constantinople, and some of these payments were made to the servants on the establishment. The present Vote included £14,000 for Vienna and £14,700 for Washington; and the total sums it was proposed to spend were £42,000 at Vienna and £31,000 at Washington. He hoped the Committee would support him in resisting this expenditure by refusing the Vote.

MR. NEWDEGATE remarked that the situation with regard to the signing of the Treaty of Vienna was being repeated now in the case of the new Commercial Treaty with Paris. The Revenues of the country were about to be pledged, without the House having an opportunity of expressing itself.

MR. ILLINGWORTH rose to Order.

THE CHAIRMAN said, the hon. Member must be aware that he was not addressing himself to the subject-matter of the Vote.

MR. NEWDEGATE said, he should make his remarks the subject of a Question to the Government.

MR. W. C. CARTWRIGHT said, that our ownership of Embassy houses had been twice recommended by Committees of the House of Commons on economical grounds. The recommendation had been insufficiently attended to, owing to the prevalence of an unwise parsimony; and it was well worth the attention of the Committee, now that they were dealing with the cases of Vienna and Washington to take into their consideration the Embassy houses at Rome and Berlin, which were very inadequate as regarded accommodation. In the latter place, they had rented a house on a short lease at £1,000 a-year; but on the expiration of the lease, they would not be able to replace it, under at least £1,500 a-year. There was no more economical Government than that of Prussia, which had bought Embassy houses, he believed, not only in all the principal capitals of Europe, but also in the smaller capitals, and such a course had been found most advantageous. He felt perfectly convinced that if the Committee refused to endorse the Vote, or if Parliament set itself against purchasing sites for our Embassy houses, the expenditure of the country, so far from being diminished, would be very much increased.

MR. F. S. POWELL said, it was not at the largeness, but at the smallness of the sum asked for in the Vote that he was surprised. He rejoiced that the Government had taken the matter in hand; but he wished to obtain from the Government some assurance that £42,000 in the one case and £31,000 in the other represented the whole amount which would be required.

VISCOUNT ENFIELD begged, in the first place, to remind hon. Gentlemen of the Resolution agreed to by the Select Committee on the Consular and Diplomatic Services, of which both himself and the hon. Gentleman the Member for Warrington were Members, to the effect that though it would be attended with some increase of charge on the Exchequer, the Committee agreed in the opinion expressed by the Committee of 1861, that it would be of advantage to the public service that there should be permanent official residences in all the large capitals for the heads of Missions. The allowance for the Embassy house at Vienna had up to the 31st of March of last year been £1,200 a-year. Since then it had been £1,500. The facts were as follow:—The lease of the present Embassy house expired on the 1st of November of the present year, and could not be renewed. The allowance for house rent made to the Ambassador was £1,200 a-year, for which sum he found it utterly impossible to find a house in any way suited for an Embassy. Under these circumstances, he entered into negotiations with the Ban Verein, a Vienna building society, who seemed at first disposed to build a house and let it to the Embassy on a long lease for a sum not exceeding the allowance. As the negotiations proceeded, however, it became evident that the company would not give a long lease at all, being made cautious by the steady rise in value of house property; they would only consent either to sell outright, or to let on a short lease at a high rate of interest for their money. The offer was then put in this shape—For sale, a sum of about £26,000 was required; for that sum the company would make over land and build the house. For a lease they would not take less than £2,200 for a term of 15 years; or £1,520 (after considerable bargaining) for a term of six years. Upon these propositions Her Majesty's Government had to decide. The Embassy must be housed, and the Ambassador had with great difficulty found temporary accommodation for a year from the 1st of November next for £1,700 a-year, this accommodation being in many ways very unsuitable for the purpose. There could be no doubt that the most economical course was to buy; the price eventually agreed upon for sale was about £27,000, representing, at 30 years' purchase, an annual sum of about £1,100. If at any time the house built had to be sold, it could hardly fail to prove a good investment. With regard to Washington the case was this—The building of a Legation house at Washington had long been contemplated, having been advocated by Sir Frederick Bruce. The present house was obtained with great difficulty, was inconvenient, and had only a very short lease. The choice lay between purchasing land and building upon it, purchasing a house, or obtaining one on a long lease. No house of a proper size could be found with a long lease; when one was offered for sale in August last, which, with necessary additions and furniture, would have cost about £21,150, Sir Edward Thornton was allowed to buy it, whereupon the proprietor increased the price, and the offer was declined with the approval of the Government. This year the question became urgent, as he was to vacate his present abode, and nothing was obtainable except at an extravagant price, increased by the knowledge that the house was wanted for Her Majesty's Legation. Sir Edward Thornton was thereupon allowed to purchase a site on his own responsibility. One containing 29,055 square feet was found in a fairly favourable situation for £2,741, which, for fear of losing, he agreed to purchase and pay down the money on the 25th of April. On the 22nd of April he received the necessary sanction, and plans and descriptions of the house which is to be built, have since been sent home, which have been adopted after some alteration by the Board of Works. His hon. Friend had no idea how enormously house rents had increased in the capitals of Europe, and he (Viscount Enfield) agreed with the hon. Member for Oxfordshire (Mr. Cartwright), that if, following the example of the German Government, they had purchased land and built houses some years ago, they would have found it a most economical arrangement for the country. In Berlin the lease of the Embassy house would expire in 1876, and the landlord would not renew the lease except at double the present rent. Offers had been made by other parties, but the amounts demanded were most extravagant, and far higher than in Vienna. For one house, and that of an inferior character, £45,000 was asked. Another house was offered for £112,500. But those were all declined. Another person offered his house for £300,000. That was not accepted either. The house of Prince Adelbert was in the field for sale, and the price asked for it was from £50,000 to £60,000. He trusted, after the explanation he had given, the Committee would not think that very disadvantageous terms had been made.

MR. W. H. SMITH said, as he had been in Washington last year, he wished to state that if the thing could be done for £31,000 it would be an excellent bargain. If we could get an Embassy house in Washington, in which the Embassy could be properly lodged for such a sum, he believed the arrangement would be one which would do credit to the most economical Government that ever existed.

MR. D. DALRYMPLE also approved the arrangement as being economical.

MR. GOLDSMID recommended the Government to build or buy an Embassy house at Rome, where the price of land and houses was rising enormously.

Vote agreed to.

(8.) Motion made, and Question proposed,

"That a Supplementary sum, not exceeding £5,000, be granted to Her Majesty, to defray the Charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1874, for the Superintendent of Convict Establishments, and for the Maintenance of Convicts in Convict Establishments in England and the Colonies."

In answer to MR. F. S. POWELL,

MR. BRUCE said, that Millbank, which was built in the beginning of the present century, was a cluster of six or seven prisons, and so ill-adapted to its present purpose that it was intended to replace it by a new prison at Wormwood Scrubs. Millbank was an exceedingly expensive prison, in consequence of the large proportion of warders required, and the number of warders who, for want of accommodation, were obliged to live outside the prison. In exchange for the £10,800 required for the site at Wormwood Scrubs, the Government would gain 24 acres in the middle of Westminster, and of much greater value. The new prison would be built by convict labour at a cheap rate, and the whole building would cost less than the sum sacrificed by the present costly establishment. There was, therefore, good reason to believe that the exchange would be highly economical and advantageous.

COLONEL BARTTELOT said, it was commonly reported that Millbank Prison was to be turned into a cavalry barrack. It was said to be an unhealthy place for prisoners, and it did not seem therefore very fit for a cavalry barrack.

MR. BRUCE said, he was not aware to what purpose Millbank was to be turned by the Government.

MR. WATNEY asked how many prisoners the new gaol at Wormwood Scrubs would contain?

MR. BRUCE said, that the number at Millbank at present was 1,277, and there was no reason to suppose that the number would be less hereafter.

LOD ECHO said, he rose at the same time with the hon. and gallant Member for West Sussex (Colonel Barttelot) to put the same question. He did not think the Home Secretary had answered the question, whether the convict prison at Millbank was to be turned into a cavalry barrack? If the Embankment were continued upwards from Westminster Bridge, it would be desirable that Millbank should be occupied by buildings more ornamental than either a prison or a barrack. Perhaps, if the right hon. Gentleman the Home Secretary were not in a position to give the House an assurance on the subject, the Secretary of State for War could tell the Committee whether Millbank was to be turned into a cavalry barrack.

MR. CARDWELL said, it could never be supposed for a moment that the prison would be turned into a barrack. It had been long intended to remove the cavalry barracks from Knightsbridge, and among the places contemplated for the site of a new barrack was Millbank. That, however, was not the ground on which the present Vote was asked.

COLONEL BARTTELOT said, that as the right hon. Gentleman declined to pledge himself that the Millbank site would not be adopted for the barracks, he should like to know where the saving was to be effected?

MR. CARDWELL said, the value of the Crown land upon which Knightsbridge Barracks now stood was very considerable. But he was not committing himself, or asking the House to commit itself, to any definite opinion as to the place to which these barracks would be removed.

Mr. Bruce

COLONEL STUART KNOX said, he should like to know if it was intended to build private houses on the site of the Kensington Barracks?

MR. CARDWELL said, the subject referred to was not in his Department, and suggested that the question should not be discussed in the present Session.

COLONEL BARTTELOT said, he was compelled to move the omission of the Vote, with the view of eliciting from the Government some expression of their determination with reference to the erection of cavalry barracks on the site of Millbank Prison.

MR. CARDWELL said, he was quite unable to give a definite answer when a definite proposition had not been arrived at.

LOD ECHO supported the Amendment. That was not a mere question of erecting a new prison, but part of a general scheme with all the details of which they ought to be made acquainted.

MR. CARDWELL suggested that further time should not be wasted in discussing a question which had already been fully considered.

Question put,

The Committee divided: — Ayes 129; Noes 45: Majority 84.

(9.) Motion made, and Question proposed,

"That a Supplementary sum, not exceeding £26,000, be granted to Her Majesty, to defray the Charge, which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1874, for the Salaries and Expenses of the Commissioners of Police, of the Police Courts, and of the Metropolitan Police Establishment of Dublin."

THE MARQUESS OF HARTINGTON, in moving the Supplementary Vote of £26,000 for the Salaries and Expenses of the Commissioners of Police, the Police Courts, and Metropolitan Police Establishment of Dublin, said, the question of the pay of the Metropolitan Police and the Irish Constabulary had been inquired into by a Commission, which reported in favour of a considerable increase of pay to both Forces, and he thought that every hon. Member who had read the Report, and the grounds on which it was based—namely, the increased facilities which men eligible for that Force had of obtaining employment and good pay in England—would come to the conclusion that the increased pay which was recommended was fully warranted by the circumstances. An additional amount of £12,600 had already been voted in the ordinary Estimates, and the sum now asked would make the total increase for the year £38,600. This sum would include four months' extra pay before the commencement of this present financial year, in accordance with the recommendation of the Commission, and the total annual increase for future years would be £28,700. Of the entire annual charge for the police service a considerable sum was drawn from local resources. The Consolidated Fund contributed 5½ per cent., and local taxation 4½ per cent. If, of the additional sum now moved for, the City of Dublin contributed the former proportion, it would be a tax of 4d. in the pound. Having regard, however, to the high taxation of the City of Dublin, the Government were willing to fix the tax, not at 4d., but at 2d. in the pound; but, as the question of local taxation was being considered by Parliament, it was thought that for the present the Imperial taxation ought to bear the entire increase. It was not, however, to be understood that that state of things was to continue beyond the present year, and he therefore hoped to be able to propose to Parliament next Session a measure for the purpose of dividing on some equitable basis that additional expenditure between the Dublin police district and the Imperial Exchequer.

MR. M'LAREN said, a fortnight ago he gave Notice of his intention to move a Resolution to the effect that the people of Dublin should be called upon to pay a further portion of the expenses of their police, instead of the Consolidated Fund being called upon to pay the amount it was. He found, however, that the Formis of the House would not allow him to move that Resolution, and he should now move the reduction of the Vote by £25,000. [Laughter.] The Committee might appear startled, but the facts of the case were startling. In the Miscellaneous Estimates for the present year the increased cost of the Dublin police was put at £13,000, and now they had an Estimate for an additional £26,000, making the increase for this year alone £39,000. He found that the Dublin police force cost the Government no less than £106,784; indeed, as other sums, amounting together to over £11,000, obtained from the taxes on carriages and pawnbrokers' licences, were paid for the same purpose, it might be said the Dublin police force cost the national Exchequer over £118,000. That was a most extravagant expenditure. In all England outside the metropolitan area, the police cost the Government £290,000, and in all Scotland the cost was £45,000. The Dublin police cost, therefore, two-and-a-half times as much as those in all Scotland, and taking England and Scotland together, the Dublin police cost the country one-third more. The population of England and Scotland, outside the metropolitan area, was 22,000,000, and the population of Dublin was about 300,000. That large expenditure was going on from bad to worse, and it seemed that the more peaceful Ireland became the greater was the police force required in Dublin. By-and-by Parliament would be asked to pay the house-rent of the people of Dublin. By that Supplementary Vote the amount which the Committee was now asked to vote for the Irish Constabulary was raised to £1,137,000, and if the Dublin police force were added the amount was increased to £1,277,000. A penny in the pound might be taken off the income tax in England and Scotland, if the Irish people would pay their own police expenses.

Motion made, and Question proposed,

"That a Supplementary sum, not exceeding £1,000, be granted to Her Majesty, to defray the Charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1874, for the Salaries and Expenses of the Commissioners of Police, of the Police Courts, and of the Metropolitan Police Establishment of Dublin."—(Mr. M'Laren.)

MR. VANCE said, he wished to remind the Committee that it was an arrangement made by Sir Robert Peel that the expenses of the Irish Constabulary should fall upon the Consolidated Fund. In Dublin, however, only one-half was paid out of the Consolidated Fund, the remaining moiety being defrayed by the inhabitants. The hon. Member for Edinburgh must remember that the situations of Dublin and Edinburgh were widely different. Dublin was a seat of government, whilst Edinburgh was not. Dublin contained double the number of inhabitants that Edinburgh did; and it was a real metropolis, which Edinburgh was not. The financial arrangements of the City having been concluded before the increase was granted, the Government had wisely borne the whole this year, intending that hereafter the Dublin people should pay a proportion, to which they did not object. Unless the hon. Member for Edinburgh was jealous of Dublin, he ought not to oppose the Vote.

MR. PIM, while supporting the Vote, said, that the hon. Member for Edinburgh had fallen into error in regard to the population of Dublin; but, taking everything into the account, the cost of the police in Dublin appeared to be very high compared with the cost in Edinburgh. The amount available for the payment of the police might, however, be considerably increased by the removal of exemptions of Government and other classes of property from the police rate, and by the enlargement of the Dublin police area. He would ask the Government whether there were no means of diminishing the number of the police?

LORD ECHO recommended the withdrawal of the Amendment, on the ground that a strong police Force, coupled with the Peace Preservation Act, formed part of the policy of the present Government.

MR. CANDLISH regretted that a question of such magnitude should have been brought forward at so late a period of the Session. Last year the maintenance of police in Ireland cost £978,000. The cost this year, including these Supplementary Votes, would be £1,277,000, or an increase of £299,000. This charge was becoming so serious as to call for the gravest consideration on the part of the Government and of Parliament. The increased pay to the men was inevitable; but, considering the peaceful state of Ireland and the loyalty of the people, a force of 12,000 was too large. Another alternative was to make the Irish people themselves pay for the maintenance of their own police, as the English people paid for theirs. He hoped his hon. Friend (Mr. McLaren) would take the sense of the House on his Amendment.

MR. SCLATER-BOOTH said, if that increase of 25 per cent to the pay of the Dublin metropolitan police was justifiable, what a comment it was upon the policy of the Government that they should be obliged to accept en bloc the recommendations of their Commissioners in that manner. Such a proposal could never have been seriously made to the House except in the last week in July. The noble Lord the Chief Secretary for Ireland said that next year he would propose that the City of Dublin itself should pay an increase of 2d. in the pound for the additional pay of the police. He (Mr. Sclater-Booth) had no great hope that that proposal would be carried out; but in order to stimulate the Government to make it, he would suggest that the hon. Member for Edinburgh should propose to reduce the Vote by £10,000, which would be the amount yielded by a 2d. rate. If the hon. Member would agree to that alteration, he should be happy to support him in his Amendment. While the Government resisted the Motion of the hon. Member for South Devon (Sir Massey Lopes), they were in this case proposing a large grant from the Imperial Exchequer in aid of local rates. Some explanation was required from the Treasury as to why they accepted the recommendations of their Commissioners so implicitly in that matter, and yet declined to accept their recommendations in regard to the Civil Servants in Dublin, into whose position and remuneration they were also authorized to inquire. Before adding 25 per cent to the pay of the Dublin police, surely the Government ought to have seen whether the whole Force might not have been reconstructed.

MR. BUTT thought when a comparison was drawn between the cases of Dublin and Edinburgh, it should be remembered that the Edinburgh police were under the control of the municipality of that city, whereas the Dublin police were exclusively controlled by two Commissioners appointed by the Lord Lieutenant. In Ireland they had a system of government based on distrust of the people, while in England they had a system of government based on trust of the people. He should be glad to see the police of Dublin placed under the control of the municipality, and employed for the purpose of keeping the peace, and then the inhabitants of Dublin would be willing to pay for them. But at present the police of Dublin were used for political purposes, and to prevent peaceable meetings of the citizens, and that spoilt them for the purpose of keeping the peace. While that system was continued justice required that the whole cost of police in Dublin should be borne by the Imperial Exchequer.

SIR DOMINIC CORRIGAN said, he had often been astonished by speeches which he had heard in that House, but he was never more surprised than that night. His Scotch Friends—who now said “Ireland is peaceable, therefore reduce the Irish police”—were, at least some of them, the same party who not long ago said “Double and treble the police force in Ireland.” Why was that change? It was “money”—nothing but “money.” His hon. Friend the Member for Edinburgh said the police of the City were under the municipality; and, that being so, he (Sir Dominic Corrigan) had no doubt their duties did not extend beyond the municipality; but the duties of the Dublin police extended nine miles beyond the city, and many miles along the coast with the foreshore and river and some distance out to sea. In London, if he was rightly informed, they had a river police. In Dublin their police must do both land and sea service. When they compared the Dublin with the London police, the difference in the conduct of the two was great. What did the London police do recently when there was wanted an increase of salary? They marched to Trafalgar Square, and said, addressing the authorities—“Pay us properly; if you will not, we will leave you.” The Irish police bore their sufferings; and did not threaten. He hoped the Committee would pass the Vote as proposed, without any reduction, and that more especially when they considered the fidelity the Force had evinced throughout the Fenian disturbances. He attributed much of the costliness of the Dublin police to the practice in that City of keeping the public-houses open all day on Sunday and to a late hour on Saturdays.

COLONEL BARTTELOT regarded that as an important question, but thought the hon. Member for Edinburgh had asked them to reduce the Vote too much. They paid not long ago a little more than half of the cost of this Force, and now they were called upon to pay the whole of this increase. He thought they ought to keep on the lines which had been already laid down, and if the hon. Member for Edinburgh would move to reduce the amount by £12,000, he thought a good many hon. Members would be inclined to vote with him.

COLONEL STUART KNOX was surprised to hear the speech of his hon. and gallant Friend. Every country ought to pay according to its resources; but although Ireland was a poorer country than either England or Scotland, she was called upon to pay more than her just proportion to the Imperial Exchequer. That Vote, then, would only tend in some small measure to adjust the disproportion which at present existed, and he would therefore support it. If the public Exchequer did not bear the expense, the Fenians and Home Rulers who kept up a state of disquietude in the country ought to do so, and therefore he would have no objection to Government placing a poll-tax upon those gentlemen.

MR. HUNT said, there were two faults in the proposal made by the Government. One was, the time when it was brought forward, and the other, the merits of the proposition itself. No explanation had been given why that addition to the charge for the Dublin Police Force had not been brought forward in the Original Estimates which were in the hands of hon. Members at the end of February. As the Report of the Commission was presented before the close of last year, the Government had ample time before now to decide whether they would grant the increase to the police or not. For his own part, he entertained a strong objection to the proposition on its merits. The question as to the proportion of payment by local authorities for police purposes had been repeatedly raised in that House, especially by his hon. Friend the Member for South Devon (Sir Massey Lopes), in a discussion which resulted in a majority of 100 against the Government; but, notwithstanding that circumstance, the Government had since refused to give any assistance to the local authorities for the payment of the police throughout the kingdom. It was now proposed, however, to make an alteration in the proportion paid by the Imperial Exchequer and the local authorities respectively in the case of Dublin. It was proposed, indeed, that the whole of the addition should come out of the Imperial Exchequer. He objected to the question being dealt with in that piecemeal way, on the ground that if any change were made, it ought to be made with regard generally to the whole of the United Kingdom. It appeared to him that the right proportion of the addition would be for the local rates to bear £12,000, and the Imperial Exchequer £14,000, and he would support the Amendment if it were altered to that sum.

MR. PLUNKET asked the House to hesitate before they adopted the Amendment of the hon. Member for Edinburgh. The increase of pay to the Dublin police was but an act of justice, and the money was asked for in order to carry out the recommendation of the Commissioners, who reported that when there were strikes of the police in London and great excitement, the Dublin police maintained an attitude of the most stoical and loyal calmness. For that very reason the Commissioners pressed on the Government not to delay doing what was right in the matter. It was true the apprehension of further delay caused something like a threat of a strike on the part of the Dublin police, since all the men declared they would give as a body a week's notice, which individually they were entitled to do; but Colonel Lake, who had secured their confidence, made an appeal to their loyalty and forbearance, and a strike was prevented. If, however, the present measure of justice were longer delayed, hon. Members might regret the consequences. He hoped it would not go forth to the public of Ireland that this so long-delayed act of justice was still to be postponed. All he could say was that the consequences would be that the House would probably hear of the matter again.

VISCOUNT SANDON thought that if Ireland desired legislation separate and distinct from that of England as she had in respect to the Church and as regarded landed property, she ought to pay for it. At the same time, Irish Members should make allowance for the interference of English Members, whose constituents otherwise would have to bear the pinch of that kind of legislation.

DR. BALL said, the proposition of the Government was an exceedingly fair one—that hereafter the proportion of increase should be paid by the City of Dublin. It was but a simple act of justice to the police to give them the increase; but at present, there were no means of making the City of Dublin pay it. It was impossible to reduce the number of the Force, and the effect of the proposal of the hon. and learned Member for Limerick that the police should be placed in the hands of the Corporation would be that it would become necessary to send over a military Force to take care of them.

THE MARQUESS OF HARTINGTON said, in answer to the remark of the hon. Member for North Hants (Mr. Slater-Booth), that the Report of the Commission was received in December, and, although the Estimates were laid on the Table in February, they were, as a matter of fact, prepared long before—too long before to admit of the Government having fully considered the Report. They, therefore, inserted in the ordinary Estimates an item for provisional increase, seeing, whatever might be their decision on the general recommendations, a considerable increase would be necessary. Since that time they had gone into all the recommendations, and, not seeing that any modification could be made, they had nothing to do but to propose them en bloc. No one acquainted with Dublin could suppose that the constabulary there was in excess of the ordinary police duties, and it was a matter of fact that the officer in command would be glad to have the Force increased for purely police purposes. Why Dublin should require a larger police Force than Edinburgh he left it to the hon. Member for Dublin (Mr. Pim) to explain. The hon. and learned Member for Limerick (Mr. Butt) had maintained that the Irish constabulary was a political Force; but, whatever might be said in regard to the Royal Irish Constabulary, he thought nobody could contend that the Dublin police was not a success for police purposes, or that it was a political Force in any sense of the word. A reduction of the Vote would have a most unfortunate effect on the Force, and he trusted the Committee would not assent to it.

MR. HENLEY said, it was, perhaps, unavoidable that the Government at the fag-end of the Session should have to propose such a large increase in the pay of the constabulary of Ireland; but still it was neither just nor politic to alter the proportion of Imperial aid given in one case without reference to others. One would have thought that that was a question which the Government ought to have carefully avoided; and, whatever happened that night, the fact would not be easily disposed of. The pay of the police had been increased in most counties; but the Government had not increased their contribution; and why should the Government do for Dublin what it had not done for any other part of the country? The proportions ought to be kept the same in all places; and, if any alterations were to be made, the claims of the United Kingdom should be fairly weighed. That was a wholly separate question from increase of pay, and he did not see why the Government had mixed up the two.

MR. M'LAREN said, the first vote he gave in the House was against the suspension of the Habeas Corpus Act in Ireland; he was then in a minority of 5 against 300, and he had since warmly supported all measures which Irish Members believed to be for the benefit of Ireland. The question now was, not whether the increase of pay should be given, but who should pay it. In compliance with the suggestions made, he would, if permitted, withdraw his Amendment and move another.

Motion, by leave, withdrawn.

Original Question again proposed.

Motion made, and Question put,

"That a Supplementary sum, not exceeding £14,000, be granted to Her Majesty, to defray the Charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1874, for the Salaries and Expenses of the Commissioners of Police, of the Police Courts, and of the Metropolitan Police Establishment of Dublin."—(Mr. M'Laren.)

The Committee divided:—Ayes 71; Noses 124: Majority 53.

Original Question put, and agreed to.

(10.) £153,750, Constabulary Force (Ireland).

THE MARQUESS OF HARTINGTON said, it was the intention of the Government to revise the whole of the expenditure under this head, and, if possible, not only reduce the Force during the Recess, but devise some scheme by which the Irish counties should contribute a reasonable proportion of the expense.

MR. HUNT complained that the Government had not made up their minds upon the subject long before this. It was most extraordinary that they should have waited until the last days of July to increase the Vote for the Irish constabulary to the extent now proposed. He protested against that course.

Vote agreed to.

(11.) £23,725, Supplementary sum, Miscellaneous Legal Charges in Ireland.

MR. CALLAN said, there was an impression in Ireland that the Vote was applied to corrupt purposes. He protested against such a Vote being brought forward at the fag-end of the Session.

THE MARQUESS OF HARTINGTON said, he had listened with patience to what the hon. Gentleman had said, believing that he would have given some reason for saying that the Vote was for corrupt purposes.

MR. CALLAN explained what he had said was, that the feeling in Ireland was that it was intended for corrupt purposes.

THE MARQUESS OF HARTINGTON asked the hon. Gentleman to say what were the corrupt purposes to which he had alluded? If the hon. Gentleman objected to the Vote, he should have opposed the 63rd clause of the Irish Land Act, which provided that remuneration should be given to certain parties, and it was to carry out that object this Vote was proposed. The hon. Gentleman ought to have given some grounds for making such an extraordinary statement, and stated against whom, or to what it referred.

LORD ELCHO asked if the charge was in consequence of the Irish Land Act?

THE MARQUESS OF HARTINGTON: Yes; the 63rd section of the Act was, that additional remuneration for duties cast upon the Chairmen of Quarter Sessions should be paid out of the Imperial Exchequer.

LORD ELCHO said, that if the 63rd section was what the noble Marquess stated, then the Act was not what he thought.

MR. VANCE asked, why the case of the officers of the Civil Bill Courts was not considered as well as that of the Chairmen of Sessions?

MR. BAXTER said, it was under consideration; but a difficulty had arisen with respect to them as they were paid by fees, and not by salaries.

Vote agreed to.

(12.) £27,000, Supplementary sum, British Museum.

Lord GEORGE HAMILTON said, he must draw attention to the increased duties which would be thrown upon the officers of the Museum by the purchase of the Castellani and other Collections. The noble Lord was proceeding to urge the propriety of increasing the salaries of these officials, in consequence—when

THE CHAIRMAN called the noble Lord to Order. The Vote now before the Committee was of a definite sum for a specific purpose—the purchase of the Castellani Collection. The grant of salaries having already been voted, it was not competent to the noble Lord to revert to that question.

LORD GEORGE HAMILTON submitted that if he was out of Order, the Chairman was still more out of Order in proposing to the Committee a Vote for the "Salaries and Expenses of the British Museum," when it was in reality a Vote for purchasing a Collection of Greek and Roman antiquities. It was, he ventured to suggest, still more out of Order for the Treasury, through the Chairman of Ways and Means, to ask the Committee to vote £27,000 towards the salaries and expenses of the British Museum, when that sum was not to pay such salaries and expenses. If he was out of Order, it was because the Treasury had not correctly described the Estimate.

MR. BAXTER explained that the heading of the Estimate was prescribed by the Exchequer and Audit Act, but the Vote put from the Chair did not bring in the words of the Estimate.

MR. BAINES said, he had given Notice to the right hon. Member for Cambridge University of a Question which the right hon. Gentleman had consented to answer. He wished to ask if there were not upon the shelves of the British Museum a large number of duplicate copies of books, which—["Order!" "Question!"]

THE CHAIRMAN said, the Question before the Committee was a Vote for the purchase of the Castellani Collection, and it was very desirable that hon. Gentlemen should keep to that question.

MR. HUNT said, he thought the whole matter of the Vote might be brought under discussion upon a Supplementary Vote, as he understood this Vote was for a sum required to supplement the sum already voted for the salaries and expenses of the British Museum. He submitted that his noble Friend was perfectly in Order, when it was proposed to add to the duties of the officers of the British Museum by entrusting to them the care of certain acquisitions, to discuss the question whether they were adequately paid for their duties.

THE CHAIRMAN said, he did not interrupt the noble Lord (Lord George Hamilton) whilst he confined his remarks to the question of the additional duties which would be imposed upon the officials by the purchase of the Collection; but when he departed from that to discuss the general questions of duties and salaries, he thought it his duty to interfere.

MR. CAVENDISH BENTINCK thought the noble Lord had a perfect right to move the omission of the Vote, and, as an argument for the Motion, to refer to the inadequacy of the present salaries.

MR. BAINES said, he would repeat his Question to the right hon. Gentleman the Member for the University of Cambridge to-morrow.

LORD GEORGE HAMILTON expressed his regret if what he had said should be deemed to imply any discourtesy towards the Chairman—he had merely desired to call the hon. Gentleman's attention to what he considered a mistake in his ruling. As the Chairman ruled that he was out of Order, he would not pursue the observations which he had intended to make, but would simply ask the Secretary of the Treasury, whether the Government would reconsider the scheme or memorial which was forwarded to them in March last?

After a pause—

LORD GEORGE HAMILTON moved to omit the Vote.

On Question? Vote agreed to.

(13.) £1,500, Supplementary sum, National Gallery.

(14.) Motion made, and Question proposed,

"That a Supplementary sum, not exceeding £3,711, be granted to Her Majesty, to defray the Charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1874, for the Expenses of Her Majesty's Embassies and Missions Abroad."

MR. CAVENDISH BENTINCK complained that the discussion of the Vote had been postponed to one of the last days of July. He objected to the Vote on a principle of public policy—namely, that no presents should be made to Judges, and Judges these Arbitrators were to all intents and purposes. A few days ago the Prime Minister, in answer to a Question he (Mr. Cavendish Bentinck) put to him on this subject, referred to five cases which he called precedents in support of that proceeding; but not one of them applied to this case. All of them were cases in which gifts were presented to agents of Foreign Governments for services rendered to British subjects. Nobody could doubt that if a present were offered to the Lord Chief Justice of England for having taken part in that Arbitration, he would refuse it. If presents were to be made to the Foreign Members of the Geneva Arbitration, why was it not proposed to offer a present to the Emperor of Germany who had discharged judicial duties of, perhaps, more importance to this country than had those Arbitrators? In 1824 a sum of £533 was voted to the Danish Minister; a Vote of £1,000 was passed for a present to the Emperor of Morocco on his accession; and in 1829, £2,000 was voted as a present to the Grand Seignor. Arbitration, it seemed, was to be the guiding principle for the future. But was it not right to stop the practice of giving presents in such cases? In foreign countries it was true the giving of presents to Ministers was of common occurrence; but he altogether objected to such payments as this, and should therefore move the rejection of the Vote.

VISCOUNT ENFIELD explained that under the 8th Article of the Treaty of Washington the two Governments proposed to pay the personal and travelling expenses of the Arbitrators appointed by the Brazilian, the Italian, and the Swiss Governments. The Italian and Swiss Arbitrators accepted the payment of those expenses, the Brazilian Arbitrator declining to accept them. Near the close of the Arbitration, the American Counsel proposed that he should consult the English Agent as to what should be the remuneration to be given to the three Arbitrators. The English Agent declared that he was not empowered to make any proposal of that nature, but that he would refer home for instructions. He did so, and the instructions he received from Her Majesty's Government were to the effect that, in their opinion, it would not be seemly to offer a sum of money to the Arbitrators, considering their judicial capacity and the functions they had performed; but that, in accordance with diplomatic usage, they thought it might be perhaps advisable to present them with some complimentary testimonial in the shape of a piece of plate. To that the American Government agreed, and they had themselves provided three pieces of plate for the Arbitrators. It became the duty of Her Majesty's Government to provide the same; the sum asked for was about equal; and he trusted that after that explanation the Vote would be agreed to.

Question put.

The Committee divided: Ayes 138; Noes 16; Majority 122.

(15.) £51,706, Supplementary sum, Colonial Local Revenue, &c.

(16.) £15,000, Supplementary sum, Tonnage Bounties, &c.

(17.) £14,000, Supplementary sum, Temporary Commissions.

MR. MACFIE objected to the Vote, and asked whether it was the intention of the Government to send out a Royal Commission to Vienna?

MR. BAXTER said, there was no intention to do anything of the kind.

MR. BOWRING complained of the late period at which the large Supplemental Vote for the Vienna Exhibition Commission had been applied for. Owing to the niggardly Vote taken in the first instance, to the small amount of which he had before called attention, the Commissioners had actually been compelled to defray many of the expenses out of their own pockets.

Vote agreed to.

(18.) £7,000, Supplementary sum, Miscellaneous Expenses.

MR. ANDERSON objected to the manner in which the Vote was put in, inasmuch as the House might be called on hereafter to pay a further sum. He thought the whole charge ought to have been placed on the Civil List.

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER said, that, as he understood, £7,000 would be the whole expenditure charged to the public. Her Majesty undertook one portion of this expenditure and the Treasury the other, and he believed the public would have the best of the bargain.

Vote agreed to.

(19.) £5,760, Repayment of Moneys under the Kensington Station and North and South Junction Railway Act 1859 (Repayment of Moneys) Act 1872.

(20) £10,000 Dover Harbour.

MR. CHICHESTER FORTESCUE explained that the Vote was intended to be applied towards the completion of these works, according to a plan which had been sanctioned by high engineering authority.

MR. RYLANDS said, if the Vote were agreed to, the House would be committed to an expenditure of £850,000, or perhaps £1,000,000.

MR. CHICHESTER FORTESCUE said, £500,000 would be lent by the Public Works Loan Commissioners on security of the harbour dues.

Vote agreed to.

(21.) £43,000, Supplementary sum, Telegraph Extension Works.

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That the Chairman do report Progress, and ask leave to sit again."—
(Mr. Miller.)

Motion, by leave, withdrawn.

SUPPLY—NAVY ESTIMATES.

(22.) £847,462, Half-Pay, Reserved Half-Pay, &c., Navy and Royal Marines.

(23.) £167,740, Freight of Ships, &c.

(24.) £12,000, Supplementary sum, Navy (Scientific Branch).

(25.) Motion made, and Question proposed,

"That a Supplementary sum, not exceeding £15,000, be granted to Her Majesty, to defray the Expense of the increased Rate of Retired Pay to certain Classes of Officers now on the Active List."

SIR JOHN HAY, in moving to omit the item of £15,000, said: Mr. Bonham-Carter—At this period of the night, I shall detain the Committee as short a time as possible on the subject of the Vote which has just now been proposed. The Committee will remember that not long ago, by the indulgence of the House, I took an opportunity of moving for a Committee to inquire into the discontent which at present exists in the Navy, owing partly to the scheme of retirement, and partly to the great absence of promotion which at present exists. I, on that occasion, had an opportunity allowed me by the House of pointing out the stagnation of promotion, mainly due, in my opinion, to the Retirement Scheme of 1870, and that the public charge which it had been anticipated would be reduced in the course of the past three years had not been so reduced, but remained at the same figure at which it was before with reference to the retired pay, the half-pay, and the reserve pay of the Navy. I had hoped that the inquiry by the Committee for which I moved would, if the House had granted it, have given further information to this House, and would have enabled the Government to make proposals with the view of modifying the present arrangements, and of restoring in some degree that contentment to the officers of the Navy, which at present is so sadly wanting. But my hon. Friend the Member for Hastings (Mr. T. Brassey) thought it better to move as an Amendment to my proposal, for a Committee which should inquire into only part of that subject; and the House agreed with my hon. Friend in that course. If that Committee had been appointed—I attribute no blame to my hon. Friend, who explained to the House the reasons why it was not appointed—I believe we should have had an opportunity of inquiring partially into this matter; and the right hon. Gentleman the First Lord of the Admiralty, in proposing on the last day of Supply a further grant of £15,000, would perhaps have been able, as I think, to apply it in a better manner than he now proposes. Even supposing the Committee were ready to grant this sum, it might have been rendered unnecessary by making certain changes which I think would be advisable to have proposed to the House, instead of voting a sum of money at this period of the Session after the Estimates have all been considered. Now, the House must remember that when the scheme of Naval Retirement was proposed in 1870, it was stated, in proposing it to the House, that at the end of three years that increased charge would be diminished to the sum at which it then existed. But a Return which is on the Table of the House shows that there is no diminution, and therefore we may assume that this £15,000 will also be a continuous charge for the future upon the Naval Votes. I wish to point out to the House why I think it is unadvisable that they should at the present time grant this additional £15,000 for this purpose. Let me say, first of all, that there are one or two kinds of naval retirement which the House will always sanction. There is, for instance, the retirement of those officers who are too old to serve, and whom it is wise, no doubt, to retire upon pensions for the services which they have previously rendered, but which they are not able to render any more. But the object of retiring these officers is that younger men may be appointed in their place. Now, this scheme is not made with that view. The object of this proposition, as I understand it, is to reduce the Lists to the given number which is supposed to be the number which is right and proper for this House to maintain as officers on the Active List of the Navy. Now, I wish to point out to the House that the number so proposed is far too small for the purpose. It must be remembered by the Committee that it is quite the same to the country whether the pay of the officers is on the Retired List, or on the Active List, so far as the public charge goes; excepting that they cost a little more upon the Retired than upon the Active List, and that, singularly enough, we of all nations in Europe—it is very difficult to explain what we do—we buy men, who are active and efficient, out of the Navy, on condition not that they should serve, but that they will not serve. That is to say, active and efficient persons who have been trained in that profession are given considerable sums of money not to trouble the First Lord of the Admiralty to give them commands or employment. That is the sole object of this proposition. If it were that these men were inefficient, or that they were too old, then one would understand that it would be wise to give them sums of money to go away; but if they were simply inefficient they might be got rid of in a cheaper manner—and that is by court-martial, which would turn them out of the service. If, however, they are too old, it is quite right to pension them; but in the place of those so retired others should be promoted, so as to keep up a proper flow of promotion. Now, I have with considerable trouble—and thanks to a gentleman, whose name I mentioned before—Mr. Hickman—a most competent authority—had carefully prepared the present condition of the Active List, both of its ships and the officers upon it. I am not now going into the question of the Flag List, because I understand this proposition is not for retiring flag officers. Be that as it may, all I am now going to do is to see whether it is wise to reduce the Active List of the Navy as low as it is proposed to reduce it, and whether it is wise to buy out of the Navy efficient officers whose places you will have to fill—I do not say in the event of a naval war, but in the event of any disturbance which obliges you to commission the ships which you have. Now, you have at this moment 88 post ships in commission, and of captains 88 employed; and you have of ships 66—ships which with some repair might be commissioned. (I have carefully excluded wooden line-of-battle ships, which I think ought not to be considered efficient men-of-war.) I have taken ships, which without any considerable repairing or expense are at the disposal of the right hon. Gentleman the First Lord of the Admiralty, and which he would be required to commission in the case of the slightest naval disturbance. The names of these ships which I have taken are entirely at his service—I hold them in my hand—but at so late a period in the evening I will not trouble the Committee by going into that detail. I hope they will believe that this Return is accurate. Well, there are 88 captains in ships in commission. There are of ships in the Reserve a very small number fit for service—namely, 66. These together make 154 captains who would be required if these ships were commissioned. It is proposed to reduce the number of captains to 150. Now, that is to say, that we should have four captains less than the ships in which we require to put them. But surely it is necessary to have a margin for men who may be ineffective—for men who will require leave; and therefore it cannot possibly be right to reduce the number below the number of ships which in three months time it may be necessary from political exigencies to find captains for. I have no doubt the right hon. Gentleman will answer—"I will promote commanders;" but what will be the effect of that? There are at present 110 commanders' commands, and there are 49 commanders employed in the Coastguard, making 159. There are 76 commanders' ships in the Reserve, which would make the total required for ships and the Coastguard, 235. The proposal is to reduce the commanders' list to 200. We should therefore—unless we took all the commanders out of the Coastguard, which under the circumstances would have to be done—be 35 commanders short. What we should be required to do would no doubt be to take commanders out of the Coastguard. In that case you would have a surplus of 14 commanders. But then you would have no commanders in the Coastguard, and no Reserve commanders, and would have to fall back upon the lieutenants' list. Let us see how the lieutenants' list stands. There are now afloat 485 lieutenants employed actively, and there are required for these 66 captains' commands and 76 commanders' commands, 369 lieutenants. The ordinary complement—I am not speaking of the extraordinary complement for war, but only the complement for these ships as at present regulated—so that the number of lieutenants actually required would be 854, if we were to commission the very small number of ships which we at present have, and without looking to the necessity for hiring ships in the event of a great naval war, or the thousand and one duties which lieutenants have to be employed in, in the event of actual hostilities. It is proposed to reduce the lieutenants' list to 600, leaving 254 lieutenants short in the event of a naval disturbance. Now, it is no discovery, for hon. Gentlemen who have taken the trouble to read the Reports of Royal Commissions or of Committees of this House which have inquired into this subject, will have found that the lowest number of lieutenants ever put by any First Lord was 900. Some First Lords put the numbers as high as 1,200, and 1,000, and there were then 900. Some naval officers examined before a Committee of this House, presided over by the right hon. Member for Cambridge University (Mr. Spencer Walpole), put the number at 800 and 700; but the Duke of Somerset, who was then First Lord, said he would not be responsible for the Navy with less than 900 lieutenants. Now, that is a calculation which I confess I have never made so carefully before, but I have had it carefully made for me by Mr. Hickman, who gives the names of the ships in commission and reserve, with the number of officers actually in them and their different ranks, showing that if you reduce your captains' list as you propose to reduce it, you will be four short; that if you reduce your commanders to 200, the establishment proposed, you will have 35 commanders short, and that if you reduce your lieutenants to 600, you will be 254 lieutenants short. Now, I do not propose to go through the other ranks, nor to delay the Committee by a long discussion upon this point; but it does seem to me that it will be very disadvantageous to the Navy if we grant this money for the purpose of persuading active men to go out of the Service; and I think it is a most wasteful expenditure of the public money to buy efficient men out of the profession, and not keep them in some reserve where you could call upon them to serve in case their services were required. It may be said that there are a considerable number of junior officers whom it is desirable to promote into these ranks. Well, I confess I look with some alarm on the very large number of junior officers. The Return which was laid on the Table very lately has shown that there are between 900 and 1,000 officers below the rank of lieutenant, and at the present rate of promotion they may be 50 years in that rank; but if the lists were made up to the number required, if new promotions were made so that you should have at least 200 captains, at least 250 commanders, and at least 900 lieutenants, you would have a due and proper flow of promotion at once in the Navy, and relieve the right hon. Gentleman from the difficulty under which he labours with regard to these junior officers who have been admitted to the Navy, and for whom at present in these reduced Lists there seems to be no prospect of advancement. Now I say this also, that if the Committee intends to give grants to the First Lord of the Admiralty for this purpose, and to the Government, it would be desirable that the half-pay of the Navy should be increased and not the retired pay. Either you are going to buy out the best men and to give them an increased salary for going away from your service, or you are going to reward worse men by giving them higher pay for leaving, than the good men whom you wish to retain on the half-pay list. The course I have suggested would certainly ensure the most prudent application of the public money. The numbers of the Navy ought at least to be adjusted so that ships if commissioned may have fit and proper officers put in them; and if the House is generous and about to grant this money to the Admiralty, it should be applied in raising the half-pay of the good officers of the Navy whose services you desire to retain, and not in buying out those who either do not wish to serve or whom you do not wish to retain in your service. I therefore, Sir, move to reduce the Vote by the sum of £15,000.

Sir John Hay

MR. GOSCHEN said, he was glad to hear the admission that there were 66 ships in command of captains fit to go to sea in three months. The fact was that there were 21 captains in command of peace or non-fighting ships, and the same remark applied in proportion to the number of commanders and fighting lieutenants. There were a large number of junior officers coming up, and thus a constant supply of lieutenants would be maintained. What was wanted was to ensure more constant employment of captains and commanders than at present, and the Admiralty had made one or two alterations in the scheme proposed by his right hon. Friend (Mr. Childers), in order to meet the views of officers of different ranks if they would retire at once. The captains above seven years' seniority would receive a minimum retired pay of £450, or £100 in addition to the retired pay to which they were now entitled, but not to exceed in all £600. The captains under seven years' seniority would receive £400, or £100 in addition; but also not to exceed £600. The commanders above three years' seniority were to receive £300, and under three years' seniority £260, or £100 in addition to retired pay, but not to exceed in all £400. The lieutenants were to receive £75 per annum in addition to retired pay to which they were now entitled, but not to exceed in all £300. The sub-lieutenants would receive 5s. a-day. The scheme would be a temporary one. The opportunity of retirement would only be left open for a given time, and only 70 captains, 100 commanders, and 80 lieutenants would be allowed to retire. The object was to reduce the list in order to give more frequent and constant employment to those who remained—a point to which the Government attached the greatest importance, both as regarded the position of the officers and the efficiency of the Navy.

ADMIRAL ERSKINE expressed his strong disapproval of the plan. In a financial point of view the scheme was preposterous, and would in no way satisfactorily remedy the extreme disproportion which existed between the senior and junior officers.

ADMIRAL EGERTON thanked the First Lord of the Admiralty for his concessions. He differed with his hon. and gallant Friend, and cordially approved of the plan proposed by the Admiralty. It was most important to have at all times a sufficient number of officers to meet any emergency that might arise, and he considered it a great advantage to keep them employed, and give them an increased chance of promotion.

Question put.

The Committee divided :—Ayes 69 ; Noes 30 : Majority 39.

(26.) £142,901, Greenwich Hospital and School.

House resumed.

Resolutions to be reported To-morrow at Two of the clock.

WAYS AND MEANS.

Considered in Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Resolved, That towards making good the Supply granted to Her Majesty for the Service of the year ending on the 31st day of March 1874, the sum of £26,470,716, be granted out of the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom.

Resolution to be reported To-morrow, at Two of the clock.

House adjourned at Three o'clock.

---

HOUSE OF LORDS,

Tuesday, 29th July, 1873.

MINUTES.]—PUBLIC BILLS—First Reading—Endowed Schools Act (1869) Amendment* (253); Merchant Shipping Acts Amendment* (254); Defence Acts Amendment* (255); Conspiracy Law Amendment* (256). Second Reading—Penalties (Ireland)* (242); Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment, &c. (243); Langbaugh Coroners* (248).

Report—Salmon Fisheries* (249); Metropolitan

Tramways Provisional Orders* (229).

Third Reading—Petitions of Right (Ireland)* (233); Revising Barristers* (244); Extradiation Act (1870) Amendment* (235); Turnpike Acts Continuance, &c. * (245), and passed.
Withdrawn—Pollution of Rivers (230).

HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS THE DUKE OF EDINBURGH.—THE QUEEN'S MESSAGE.

Her Majesty's most gracious Message of yesterday considered (according to Order).

EARL GRANVILLE: My Lords, I rise to move that an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty, to thank Her Majesty for the most gracious communication which it has pleased Her Majesty to make to this House of the intended marriage between His Royal Highness Alfred Ernest Albert, Duke of Edinburgh, Earl of Kent, Earl of Ulster, Duke of Saxony, Prince of Saxe Coburg and Gotha, and Her Imperial Highness the Grand Duchess Marie Alexandrovna, the only daughter of His Majesty the Emperor of all the Russias, and to assure Her Majesty that this House, always feeling the most lively interest in any event which can contribute to the happiness of the Royal Family, will concur in the measures which may be proposed for the consideration of the House, to enable Her Majesty to make a further provision for His Royal Highness on this occasion. My Lords, this is not the first occasion on which I have had to ask your Lordships to agree to a Motion such as this, and past experience enables me to anticipate that your Lordships will now give expression to the same feelings of satisfaction that you have invariably manifested on previous similar occasions. In the first place, your Lordships' House, as well as the other House of Parliament and the country at large, has always evinced a lively satisfaction in anything calculated to promote the happiness of Her Majesty and of the Members of her Family. In the second place, your Lordships have always felt the more pleasure in returning a humble Answer in response to a similar communication from Her Majesty, because of the fact that, in reference to the marriages of their children, the Queen and the Prince Consort always proceeded on the principle that they should be marriages of mutual affection, and that precedent has been faithfully observed on the present occasion. I believe I need hardly mention how young the Duke of Edinburgh was when he first conceived the hope of this union; and, my Lords, the basis on which the negotiations for this marriage were conducted by Her Majesty and the Emperor of Russia was, that the proposed union was based upon mutual affection, and of such a character as to promise happiness to both. That this is the case in the present instance there is no doubt. Formerly, much importance was attached to marriages made with political objects; but your Lordships are aware that such unions have but rarely resulted in accomplishing the political objects for which they were intended, and certainly we are aware how little in these days alliances between Royal Families affect the policy of nations. There can, however, be no doubt that it is for the interest of both Russia and England that the two countries should be on good terms; and there have not been wanting proofs of the desire of His Majesty the Emperor of Russia to maintain friendly relations with this nation. Although, however, I do not think that this bears in any degree on the question of this marriage, it is, my Lords, a fortunate circumstance that in this instance, all circumstances combine to render the marriage one on which we can sincerely offer our congratulations to Her Majesty. With these few remarks, my Lords, I beg to move the Address.

THE MARQUESS OF SALISBURY: My Lords, in the absence of my noble Friend the Duke of Richmond, I beg to second the Address which has been moved by the noble Earl. I am sure that it will be acceded to most cordially by your Lordships, because whatever gives pleasure to Her Majesty must also give pleasure to every class of her people, by whom she is so much beloved. His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh is well known for his abilities—he is popular for his personal qualifications, and on account of his connection with a popular profession—and the prospect of happiness which he has in this marriage will give unfeigned satisfaction to all classes of Her Majesty's subjects. Of course it is impossible not to concur in what the noble Earl says respecting Royal matrimonial alliances. I quite agree that they do not, as in past times, affect the policy of this country—that is to say, I believe it is true that they can never again be the means of dragging this country into war. I am not, however, quite sure that they may not be the means of conducing to the maintenance of peace. No doubt, it is a matter of no slight congratulation that our Royal House is now connected with the Royal Houses of the three great nations—the Scandinavian, the Slavonic, and the Teutonic—by which the policy of Europe is determined. I cannot help thinking that peoples who have learned to respect and love Members of our Royal Family will to some extent look less as strangers on those over whom that Royal Family has so prosperously reigned. On these grounds and from motives of personal regard, and affection, as well as from motives of public policy, I believe this marriage to be one worthy of all felicitation, and I beg very heartily to second the Motion.

Then an humble Address of thanks and concurrence ordered nemine dissentiente to be presented to Her Majesty thereupon: The said Address to be presented to Her Majesty by the Lords with white staves.

POLLUTION OF RIVERS BILL.—(No. 230.)
(The Duke of Northumberland.)

COMMITTEE.

Order of the Day for the House to be put into Committee read.

THE DUKE of NORTHUMBERLAND said, that at that late period of the Session he felt that the only course open to him was to move the discharge of the Order for Committee; but he would bring the subject under the notice of their Lordships next Session, if the Government did not introduce a measure of their own.

THE EARL of MORLEY said, the Government were considering the subject with a view to legislation next Session.

THE MARQUESS of SALISBURY said, that the question was an important one, and the difficulty was to know how a remedy could be applied to the evil. The Select Committee found that each locality was so different in its circumstances that it would be necessary to place in the hands of the Government the most extensive powers, so that, practically, they would have power to legislate as they pleased in connection with the subject. That, however, was not a healthy state of things, inasmuch as it would be placing Government in a false position, and in one which Parliament itself ought to occupy. He believed that the proper course would be to appoint a body of conservators in each drainage district, giving them powers to act according to the peculiar circumstances of each. He thought it necessary to make these few suggestions, with the view of legislation on the matter next Session.

Motion agreed to; Order discharged; and Bill (by leave of the House) withdrawn.

ELEMENTARY EDUCATION ACT (1870)
AMENDMENT, &c. BILL.
(The Lord President.)
(NO. 243.) SECOND READING.

Order of the Day for the Second Reading, read.

THE MARQUESS of RIPON, in moving that the Bill be now read the second time, said, the object of the measure was to introduce into the educational system established in 1870 various practical Amendments, which experience of the working of the Act had shown to be required. There was much cause for congratulation in respect of the working of the Act of 1870—it had greatly stimulated educational efforts throughout the country. In 1869, before the passing of the Act, the number of schools was 14,404—in 1872, these had increased to no less than 17,056. In 1869 the number of scholars in schools receiving annual grants was 1,397,379; in 1872 it was 1,668,679. In the former year the number of certificated teachers was 11,752; in the latter it was 14,771. Then, the number of pupil teachers in 1869 was 12,357, and in 1872 was 21,297. In London, with a population of 3,266,987, the whole were under school boards and compulsory by-laws. Of 224 boroughs, containing a population of 6,531,892, no fewer than 103, containing a population of 5,241,762, were under school boards, and of these boroughs 80, with a population of 4,789,828, had compulsory by-laws. Of 14,082 civil parishes, with a population of 12,913,387, the number under school boards was 445, and these contained a population of 1,485,833. Of these parishes, 110, with a population of 869,534, were under compulsory by-laws. There were school boards for 40 per cent of the whole population, and 80 per cent of the borough population; and compulsory by-laws for 39 per cent of the whole population, and 74 per cent of the borough population. Up to the 26th of July, 1873, "first notices" were issued to 10,315 parishes, of which 4,170, or 40 per cent, were now sufficiently provided. About 3,000 more parishes remained to be dealt with, after taking into account those in London and the boroughs which were already under the school boards. The number of "final notices" issued preparatory to the compulsory election of school boards was 228. In a very large proportion of those parishes in which a deficiency had been declared voluntary effort had undertaken to supply the deficiency declared in the notices. In 1872 voluntary effort did a great deal. It contributed £339,825 to meet building-fund grants, and £506,708 for annual maintenance. This latter item showed an increase of about £100,000 over the money paid by subscribers in 1869, which amounted to £406,125. Altogether very little short of £1,000,000 had been voluntarily contributed towards the cause of education which, but for such an effect, would have had to be provided by rates. He thought that, with those figures before them, their Lordships would be of opinion that the Education Department might, with good cause, congratulate themselves upon the success of 1870, and anticipate still greater success in the future. Neither on behalf of his right hon. Friend (Mr. Forster) nor for himself did he claim any praise in respect of the manner in which the details of that great measure had been worked out—much the larger portion of that praise was due to the permanent officials of the Education Department. On his own part, and that of his Colleagues, he took this opportunity of saying how great were their obligations to Sir Francis Sandford, the Secretary, and the other gentlemen of the Department who acted under the orders of the Committee of Council. Of their energy, ability, industry, tact, and what he might call their diplomatic skill, it would be difficult to speak in terms of too great praise. The Bill now before their Lordships would not introduce any very large or extensive changes. The 3rd clause was the only one involving any question of gravity. The Act of 1870 enabled school boards, by means of by-laws, to establish a system of compulsion in order to secure the attendance of children at school; but that system of compulsion could only be applied in parishes or boroughs where school boards existed. The figures he had already quoted showed that in 103 boroughs there were school boards, so that there were such boards for 80 per cent of the population; and that in only 445 of the civil parishes were there school boards and compulsory by-laws only in the case of 39 per cent of the population generally. Last year an Act was passed which established a system of compulsory education throughout Scotland. It could not be denied that the existence of such a system in Scotland contemporaneously with that of a system of partial compulsion in England was an anomalous state of things; but Her Majesty's Government, having given the matter an attentive consideration, came to the conclusion that it was desirable to wait for further experience in both countries, and in England to look for the present to other arrangements tending in the same direction as the Scotch system. They expected great results from a Bill which was now passing through the other House of Parliament, applying the principle of compulsion indirectly to children employed in agriculture—and this might be regarded as a step towards a general system of compulsion under what was known as Denison's Act. Boards of Guardians had power to provide for the education of out-door pauper children; but this power was permissive only, and not compulsory. About two-thirds of the Unions of the metropolis had put this power in force, and about one-half of those in the country. The 3rd clause of the Bill now before their Lordships repealed the provisions of Denison's Act and substituted others in their stead—providing that where out-door relief was given to the parents of any child between 5 and 13 years of age, or to any such child, it should be a condition for the continuance of such relief that elementary education should be given to the child; but there was a proviso in the clause that relief should not be granted or refused on condition of the child attending any public elementary school other than such as might be selected by the parent. This provision was one of great importance in regard to the fact that 145,000 of the children were either orphans or children of widows receiving out-door relief, and these, he thought, were a class eminently deserving of consideration in any educational measure; and he confidently expected that their Lordships would approve the principle on which the Government had acted in framing the 3rd clause, and would make no difficulty in passing the Bill.

Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2<sup>a</sup>."
—(The Lord President.)

LORD LYTTELTON said, what was requisite on public grounds was that all children should be educated up to a certain point; but if the parent of a child were not able, out of his own means, to pay for that education of his child he should be required and enabled to provide the child with it as he would with food or any other necessaries of life, out of the poor rates, unless he were aided by private benevolence. But the question of the school-pence, as was well known, was not the most important point—the difficulty would arise not so much from the amount to be paid for the schooling as from the giving up of the earnings of the child. If a child who was earning money for the family were taken away from his work and sent to school, so much of the general means of support for the family was gone, and to the extent of that the rates must come in. If, therefore, there was to be compulsory education, a considerable increase in the rates must be looked for throughout the country.

EARL FORTESCUE concurred with the noble Lord that the practical question was not so much the payment of the school-pence as the diminution of earnings. He felt satisfied that the facility with which in populous districts school boards might be imposed upon, in consequence of their not having, like the Guardians, any machinery for the detection of imposture, would have a pauperizing effect. He feared that the benefit of education to the children would in many cases be considerably counteracted by the demoralizing habits of successful imposture thus fostered in their parents. He looked upon the present system under which pupil-teachers almost all drawn from the wage class, were trained for an increasingly remunerative calling at an expense of 75 per cent to the State and 15 per cent to charity, as utterly unsound. It would be much better as a general rule to allow those who wished to become teachers to bear the expense of their own training. In that way, after testing their competency, we should have some security that they would adhere to their profession. If we did this instead of eleemosynarily training an excessive number of pupil-teachers in order to make allowance for the diversion of a certain proportion to other professions, we might attract all that would be required by giving a pension for a specified number of years' good service.

EARL NELSON drew the attention of the Lord President to the sub-sections which threw the burden of the proof of the age of the child and the efficiency of the school on the parent, who might be very ill qualified to furnish the proof required.

THE MARQUESS OF RIPON explained that there would be no difficulty in proving the efficiency of the school, because the Board assumed that every elementary school was efficient. As to age, if the child was born in the parish, the parent could easily obtain the necessary certificate; and if born in a distant parish, the parent would be the most proper person to call on to furnish the proof of age. He could not agree in the view taken by his noble Friend (Earl Fortescue) of the training colleges, for he doubted whether it would be possible to procure all the schoolmasters that would be required without them.

Motion agreed to; Bill read 2<sup>a</sup> accordingly, and committed to a Committee of the Whole House on Thursday next.

CONFESSOR IN THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

ADDRESS FOR A PAPER.

THE EARL OF HARROWBY, in moving an Address to Her Majesty for Copy of a Petition recently presented to Convocation in reference to the training and licensing of a body of Confessors in the Church of England, said, their Lordships were aware that a few weeks ago a Petition was presented by the Archbishop of Canterbury to the Upper House of Convocation of that Province, signed by a considerable body of clergymen, praying for the training and licensing a body of Confessors within the Church. He had no wish to take up the time of their Lordships by any discussion on the subject of the Confessional. Convocation, however, was a most important body as regarded the Church, and being so it was of the utmost importance that it should possess the confidence of the laity. Now, there could be no doubt that the petitioners made a very startling proposal. He was aware that several clergymen had individually advocated confession, but they had done so on their own responsibility; but this was the first time since the Reformation, that a proposal had been made to give it the authorization of the Church itself, and it was of the utmost importance to know how it had been received by Convocation. As far as he could learn, the Bishops received the Memorial, and had offered no reply to it; but, at the same time, they had thought it right to take that opportunity of expressing their opinion upon the main subject raised by the Memorial. The consequence was that a Committee was appointed, and a very valuable Report was presented by them to Convocation. That there might be no misconception on the subject, and that the public might know not only the nature of the Petition, and the number and importance of the signatures, but also what was the reply of the Bishops, he thought it right that the transaction should in a formal way be laid before Parliament. He, therefore, begged to move the Address of which he had given Notice.

Moved, that an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty for, Copy of petition presented to the Upper House of Convocation of the Province of Canterbury by the Archbishop of Canterbury, praying among other things for the training and licensing of a body of confessors in the Church of England; together with the names of the subscribers and copy of the answer to the same presented by the Committee of the whole Upper House.—(The Earl of Harrowby.)

THE BISHOP OF LONDON, in the absence of the Archbishop of Canterbury, said, there would be no objection to lay a Copy of the Petition on the Table of the House. With respect to the Report referred to by the noble Earl, he wished it to be understood that it was in no way an answer to the Petition. A Committee of Convocation was appointed to consider the subject and draw up a

The Earl of Harrowby

Report on it. That Report had been drawn up and presented, but had not yet been adopted. Strictly speaking, therefore, the matter was still under consideration; and the document asked for being thus incomplete, he thought it was, at least, premature to ask for its production.

LORD HOUGHTON hoped the noble Earl (the Earl of Harrowby) would not press his Motion. It would be a great error for their Lordships to interfere with Convocation—if they did they might in time find themselves drawn into the arena of theological controversy—a thing which was to be avoided as much as possible. He thought it was a pity that the noble Earl had brought forward the Motion in the absence of the Archbishops, who might have given some explanation which might have proved useful. Moreover, they had heard, too, from the right rev. Prelate, that the action of Convocation in the matter was as yet inchoate and incomplete, and had not yet assumed a character which would warrant their Lordships in adopting the course recommended. There was another objection to the Motion of the noble Earl. Matters of a transitory character like the one involved in the Petition, in connection with which there was necessarily a good deal of excitement, ought not to have their importance too much magnified. That, he was afraid, had been too much done in the case under discussion. He was told that a very considerable number of those who had subscribed to it had done so hastily, without comprehending its real import, and possibly under some confusion of ideas as to the real principle involved. For these reasons he thought the Petition in question ought not to be made the subject of an Address to the Crown. By adopting the course advised by the noble Earl, they would simply be giving permanent importance to a document which in itself was transitory and of small moment in its character. Above all, they would arouse a large amount of public animosity against many gentlemen who had, as he had explained, signed the Petition unwittingly.

THE BISHOP OF GLOUCESTER AND BRISTOL ventured to think that some inconvenience would result from giving publicity to the names of those who had signed the Memorial. Many of those gentlemen had appended their names without serious thought; and it had transpired that several had withdrawn their signatures, and not a few had even expressed regret for having signed the Petition under the impression that it was something else. Under these circumstances he hoped, at all events, that the noble Earl would withdraw that portion of his Motion which asked for the production of the names of the subscribers.

EARL NELSON said, their Lordships could scarcely ask Convocation to lay before them a document which was imperfect and incomplete in its character. When both Houses of Convocation had definitely given their decision upon it, the Motion of the noble Earl might be moved with perfect propriety; but at present it was premature. He thought it most undesirable to publish the names of the signers—it might hurt the prospects of many young men who had signed the Petition somewhat hastily.

THE MARQUESS OF SALISBURY also strongly urged his noble Friend to leave out that portion of his Motion relating to the names of the subscribers.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR'S opinion was that it would be as irregular to ask for the production of the Petition while it was still under the consideration of Convocation as it would be for the House of Commons to ask for a Report of one of its Select Committees before it was laid on the Table; he did not at all see how they could ask for the Report of the Committee until Convocation had adopted it. He strongly objected to the production of the names of those who had signed the Petition—especially as it appeared that a large proportion of them were not aware of the precise nature of the document they were signing. He could not but take notice of the evidence which this and other late instances afforded of the mischievous effects of the practice of hawking Petitions about the country in order to obtain promiscuous signatures. Nothing was to his mind more objectionable or reprehensible, whoever were the parties who did it, or whatsoever might be their objects. One result of the practice was, that they found people coming forward one after another confessing that when they appended their names to a document, purporting to be a serious expression of opinion upon subjects of the gravest importance, they really did not know what they were signing. He was afraid that this was too often the case in respect to Petitions presented to both Houses of Parliament.

THE BISHOP OF CHICHESTER hoped the noble Earl would withdraw his Motion, because the carrying of it might embitter the controversy.

LORD HATHERLEY wished to ask the noble Earl whether it was worth his while to press his Motion? The Petition itself was of very grave importance, but not of such importance as to require an Address to the Crown that a Copy of it might be presented to their Lordships. Their Lordships had been told that a number of those who signed the Petition had signed it in ignorance of its contents, and that others had signed it under a total misapprehension of the subject. He remembered the case of a Petition which was presented on behalf of a woman who had attempted to murder both her father and mother. The Petition stated that if her life were spared she might be useful as a teacher in a school in one of the Colonies. He must join his humble request to that of the noble Lord below him, that the noble Earl, for the present at least, would not press his Motion.

THE EARL OF HARROWBY said, it did not require the intercession of so many Members of the Ecclesiastical Bench and of their Lordships generally to induce him to yield at once to the appeal made to him. It would certainly be better that the answer of the Committee of Convocation should not be placed before Parliament before it had been formally accepted by the whole body. As to the condemnation passed by the noble and learned Lord on the Woolsack on the practice of hawking about Petitions for promiscuous signature, he quite agreed with the noble and learned Lord. As for this particular case he should not have attached such importance to the isolated action of a few eccentric clergymen, if it had been such; but the fact was that the Petition in question was the work of an organized body, which had divided all England into districts for the purpose of extending the practice of auricular confession. Their zeal and their organization were unbounded. He had seen a circular specially addressed to children, marked "the eighth thousand," urging them to go to a priest at the earliest moment for the purpose of confessing their sins to him. It was most important that some corrective of this abuse should be set up, and he trusted the Bishops would promulgate their opinion at the earliest moment possible.

Motion (by leave of the House) withdrawn.

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE
BILL [H.L.] .

Returned from the Commons with the amendments to which the Lords have disagreed not insisted on; and with the amendments made by the Lords to the amendments made by the Commons agreed to, with an amendment; and with consequential amendments to an amendment made by the Commons: The said amendment and consequential amendments to be considered on Thursday next.

House adjourned at a quarter past Seven o'clock, to Thursday next, half past Ten o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

Tuesday, 29th July, 1873.

MINUTES.] — SUPPLY — Resolutions [July 28] reported.

PUBLIC BILLS—Ordered—First Reading—Landlord and Tenant (Ireland) Act (1870) Amendment* [271].

Committee—Four Courts Marshalsea (Dublin)* [266]—R.P.

Committee—Report—Telegraphs [262]; Railway Regulation [232]; Expiring Laws Continuance [261]; Gas and Water Works Facilities Act (1870) Amendment* [252]; Constabulary Force (Ireland) (re-comm.)* [257]; Royal Naval Artillery Volunteer Force* [264]; Sanitary Act (1866) Amendment (Ireland)* [266].

Considered as amended—Slave Trade Consolidation* [249]; Local Government Provisional Orders (No. 6)* [244]; Statute Law Revision* [240].

Considered as amended—Third Reading—Public Health Act (1872) Amendment* [238], and passed.

Withdrawn—Tribunals of Commerce* [57]; Clerical Justices Disqualification and Justices of Peace Qualification* [197].

The House met at Two of the clock.

WEST RIDING MAGISTRACY.
QUESTIONS.

MR. CARTER asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, If he is aware that in a district of the West Riding, consisting of the important and populous townships of Pudsey, Idle, Calverley, and Faraley, with a population of 29,214, an area of 8,447 acres, and a rateable value of £81,153, there is only one magistrate, a clergyman, who usually resides, not in the district, but in the township of Leeds?

The Earl of Harrowby

MR. BRUCE, in reply, said, the facts stated in the Question of the hon. Member were substantially correct; but he was informed that there were sittings twice a-week at Bradford, distant about four miles, with good railway communication. There had been no local expression of a desire for more magistrates and no complaint of inconvenience from the existing state of things. If there were any such desire, it should be conveyed to the Lord Lieutenant or the Lord Chancellor; but, considering the population of the neighbourhood, perhaps they could not do better than combine to appoint a stipendiary magistrate.

MR. CARTER asked if the right hon. Gentleman was aware that no railway passed through any one of the parishes named?

MR. BRUCE said, he was not; he knew only what he had been told in the letter sent him by the clerk of the peace.

RAILWAYS—RAILWAY PASSENGERS' COMMUNICATION.—QUESTIONS.

COLONEL NORTH asked the President of the Board of Trade, Upon what grounds the Board of Trade have further extended for one month the period of use of the rope system upon the Railways of the United Kingdom; and, if this extension is not intended to be final, what course the Board or the Government will pursue to ensure a compliance with the Act of 1868 as to a proper means of communication between passengers and guards, which it was the intention of Parliament should be provided for the safety of travellers?

MR. CHICHESTER FORTESCUE, in reply, said, he had extended for a month the period of use of the present rope system, in order to give time for the expression of opinion by railway companies upon a very different rope system in use in the United States, in which the rope is conveyed through the carriages inside under the roof. On the 1st of August he should withdraw absolutely the sanction of the Board of Trade to the ordinary rope system, and would leave, as he was bound to do, the companies to propose other means of communication, instead of it. For the present he should be ready to sanction the American rope system.

MR. J. G. TALBOT asked the right hon Gentleman, Whether his attention has been again drawn to the failure of the cord system of communication between passengers and guards on Railways; whether he has, in accordance with his statement on the 13th June, 1872, withdrawn the provisional approval given by the Board of Trade to that system; and, whether there is any hope that the electric communication will soon be established on all Railways?

MR. CHICHESTER FORTESCUE, in reply, said, the electric system of communication had succeeded upon some of the lines on which it had been tried, and it was equally true that it was attended with difficulty in its application on lines where the trains were frequently separated. He could not say how far the withdrawal of the old rope system would bring about a larger adoption of the electric system.

ARMY—RETIRED ADJUTANTS OF MILITIA AND VOLUNTEERS.

QUESTION.

LORD ELCHO asked the Secretary of State for War, Whether he will insert the words "late Adjutant" in the "Army List" after the names of the officers who, having been Adjutants of Militia or Volunteers, have had conferred upon them the rank of Major on retirement, or whether he will place these Officers in a separate list; and, whether he will allow these names to appear in the Index of the "Army List" as is done in the case of all other Field Officers who have served, throughout their service, under the provisions of the Mutiny Act?

MR. CARDWELL, in reply, said, that if there was any general wish on the part of the officers in the direction indicated in the Question, he was not aware of any reason why that wish ought not to be gratified.

SOUTH KENSINGTON MUSEUM— NATURAL HISTORY MUSEUM. QUESTIONS.

MAJOR BEAUMONT asked the First Commissioner of Works, Whether the public have ever had an opportunity of judging of the plans now being carried out in the construction of the Natural History Museum; and, if not, whether he would permit plans or models to be exhibited in any place to which the public have access?

MR. AYRTON, in reply, said, that the plans were annexed to the contract signed by the contractor, and could not, therefore, be submitted for public inspection. The contract and plans were required at the Office of Works, and it was quite impossible to make an exhibition of them.

MAJOR BEAUMONT said, there could be no difficulty about exhibiting copies of plans.

MR. AYRTON said, that would require copies to be made. The making of copies would take a considerable time, and would involve expense. [Cries of "Photographs."] A plan would not be an expensive matter; but it would take a considerable time to make copies of the whole.

MAJOR BEAUMONT said, he did not ask for all the details. The plans would be quite sufficient to enable the public to judge of the general character and effect of the building proposed to be erected. He should be glad to know if the plans might to this extent be shown to the public?

MR. AYRTON said, that a mere plan, as distinct from elevations, could be easily prepared in a short time. The drawings and elevations, to be of any use, must be complete, and the preparation of complete copies would take a considerable time. As the contract was signed for the execution of the works, and could not be altered, he did not see that it would be of any particular use to the public to see them.

MAJOR BEAUMONT said, it was with the view of enabling the public to form a judgment upon the elevation that he was anxious they should see it. There was no difficulty in obtaining photographs, which, for this purpose, were equally as good as the originals. He wished to know whether photographs could be submitted for the inspection of the public.

LORD ELCHO asked, whether the elevations and designs were generally the same that were exhibited for a short time in the Library of the House of Commons at the close of the Session before last; and whether, if they were the same, they had been altered in consequence of the rise in prices, or for any other reason; and, if so, what was the extent of alteration in the general appearance of the building?

MR. AYRTON said, that some change was made in the plans after they were exhibited in this House. If the noble Lord wished to know the details, he should be happy to state them if the noble Lord would give Notice of a Question.

MAJOR BEAUMONT said, he was sorry to have to press his point; but he should like to have an answer as to whether copies of the general plans and elevations would be submitted for public inspection? If it was inconvenient to the right hon. Gentleman to answer now, he would give Notice of a Question for to-morrow.

MR. AYRTON: The hon. and gallant Member had better give Notice.

MAJOR BEAUMONT: Then I give Notice at the present time.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR SERVICE —FOREIGN REPRESENTATIVES IN MOROCCO.—QUESTION.

MR. GRAHAM asked the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, Whether his attention has been drawn to a statement made by Mr. Consul White, in his Report on the Trade of Morocco, that

"In Morocco the foreign representatives reside at a considerable distance from either of the capitals of the empire, and but seldom or never see the Sultan or any save one of his Ministers; and that, so long as the absence of personal intercourse between the representatives of Foreign Powers and the Sultan and his Court continues to exist, it is hopeless to expect useful reforms in the government, or any considerable extension of the trade or civilization of the country;"

whether Sir John Hay, our representative in Morocco, shares in and has repeatedly urged the same opinion upon Government; and, whether the Government can hold out any hope of their taking the matter into consideration, with a view of removing our Embassy to the capital, and securing personal communication between our representative and the Sultan?

Major Beaumont

VISCOUNT ENFIELD: Sir, Her Majesty's Government are not prepared to change the residence of the British Mission in Morocco, which, if recommended by Sir John Drummond Hay, would not, it is believed, be agreeable to the Moorish Court, and would entail increased expenditure. There are, besides, countervailing advantages in the residence of the British Minister being at a seaport. Her Majesty's Minister is enabled, under existing arrangements, to obtain private interviews with the Sultan, and reported lately that the results were satisfactory.

FRANCE—THE NEW COMMERCIAL TREATY.—QUESTION.

MR. NEWDEGATE asked the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, Whether the Treaty between France and this Country, which is reported to have been under consideration by the Parliament of France, is intended to continue, or to establish for some years, obligations binding upon this Country with respect to certain portions of the Revenue analogous to the engagements under the Treaty of 1860; and, if so, whether it is the intention of Her Majesty's Ministers to consult this House with respect to such engagement?

VISCOUNT ENFIELD: Sir, it will be seen by the Treaty of which a Copy was laid on the Table of the House yesterday, that it is not intended to continue, as binding on this country, the provisions with regard to tariffs in the Treaty of 1860 beyond 1877, when the Treaties between Great Britain, Austria, and Germany are terminable. The new Treaty provides that it shall be terminable on the 10th of June, 1877, when that with Germany is also terminable. Perhaps the hon. Gentleman will address the latter portion of his Question to my right hon. Friend at the head of the Government.

MR. NEWDEGATE asked the Prime Minister, whether it was the intention of Her Majesty's Government to consult the House upon the provisions of the Treaty?

MR. GLADSTONE said, the state of the case was this—the Government had no such intention, because we were not really contracting any new binding engagement which bore on the tariffs or on the commercial law of this country with regard to exports and imports. When the French Treaty was made in 1860, the House of Commons was consulted upon it in full, and if the Government had been extending its terms it might have been matter for serious consideration whether they should not again consult the House of Commons upon it. In consequence of the French Treaty of 1860 other Treaties were made with Austria and Germany, which gave to them the full benefit of the French Treaty down to 1877, the Treaty with Germany expiring on the 10th of June, 1877. What the Government had done was to prolong the French Treaty until the latter date, and as the French Treaty gave to France the benefit of the Most Favoured Nation Clause, the prolongation of the French Treaty constituted no new engagement.

MR. NEWDEGATE asked, Whether, if it should be found that the terms of the present Treaty varied from those of the Treaty of 1860—that variation extending to the Most Favoured Nation Clause—the Ministry would reserve to the House of Commons the opportunity of considering any variation from the Treaty of 1860?

MR. GLADSTONE, in reply, said, the hon. Member would have a more satisfactory means of judging of the matter when he read the Treaty than he could afford by any verbal information. But he might say there was no such variation as the hon. Member appeared to suppose. There was no alteration whatever in the tariff terms of the Treaty. Its ratification would depend on the assent of the French Assembly, which he trusted would be given.

NATIONAL EDUCATION (IRELAND)—TEACHERS IN IRISH WORKHOUSE SCHOOLS.—QUESTION.

MR. PIM asked the Chief Secretary for Ireland, Why the National School Teachers in the Workhouse Schools in Ireland are not paid for results in addition to their salaries, as is done in the case of the Teachers in other National Schools in Ireland, and the Teachers in the Workhouses in England?

THE MARQUESS OF HARTINGTON, in reply, said, teachers in workhouse schools in England and Wales were not paid in the same way as the National School teachers in the workhouse schools in Ireland. In Ireland the Workhouse teachers were paid directly by the Local Government Board, and without any reference to the results of the teaching or the efficiency of the schools under their management. He had no doubt it would be an improvement to introduce the English system in some form or other; but he must guard himself against admitting that any payment made for results should be a payment in addition to the salaries of the teachers.

THE BRITISH MUSEUM—DUPLICATE BOOKS.—QUESTION.

MR. BAINES asked the Right hon. Member for the University of Cambridge, Whether it is possible for the Trustees of the British Museum to furnish for the information of the House and the public, a Return of the number of Duplicate Books in the Library of the Museum; and, whether there would be any objection to such Duplicates being distributed among the Free Libraries of the Country?

MR. SPENCER WALPOLE, in reply, said, there was in the Question an ambiguity as to the meaning of the word "duplicate." The Trustees of the British Museum had always rightly considered that there were three particulars in which what might be termed duplicates in a private gentleman's library would not be superfluous in the Library of the British Museum. In a great National Library it was a matter of primary importance for literary people to have the means of referring to variations in the different works, and the variations in different editions. Again, there were in the British Museum three collections at least which had been given to the nation as integral collections—namely, the King's, the Grenville, and the Bankseian Libraries; and there might be in those collections duplicates which must be preserved distinct from the general library books in the Museum. Moreover, it was for the general advantage of readers that there should be duplicate copies of some books which were in great demand, as it often happened that more than one student required to consult them at the same time.

Roughly estimated, the duplicates in the Museum amounted to between 10,000 and 12,000 books, subject to deductions on account of each of the categories to which he had referred. To compare all the books in the British Museum for the purpose of ascertaining whether they were duplicates or not would be a labour of months, if not of years. Under these circumstances, it would not be possible for the Trustees to furnish a Return of the superfluous duplicate books in the British Museum with a view to their distribution among the Free Libraries of the country.

POST OFFICE—CAPE OF GOOD HOPE AND ZANZIBAR MAIL CONTRACT.
QUESTION.

MR. SCLATER-BOOTH asked Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, What course he proposes to take with respect to the Contract for Mail Services between Zanzibar and the Cape, in consequence of the Report of the Select Committee on that subject?

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER: Sir, it is the intention of the Government to give the fullest effect in their power to the Report of the Committee. They are not, of course, unaware of the great difficulty of the task, from the manner in which the question has been left; and when they state that they will endeavour, to the utmost of their power, to give effect to the Committee's Report, they trust that they will receive the assistance of the House.

ELEMENTARY EDUCATION DEPARTMENT—NEW CODE 1873—THE MUSIC FINE.—QUESTION.

MR. BROGDEN asked the Vice President of the Committee of Council for Education, If he will suspend the operation of sub-section d of Article 32 of the New Code 1873, commonly known as the Music Fine, until there has been an opportunity for further discussion next Session?

MR. W. E. FORSTER, in reply, said, that neither he nor the Committee of Council on Education had any power to suspend the operation of any Article of the Code after it had once received the approval of Parliament. He might add that the Department saw no reason to disapprove of the regulation as to music.

Mr. Spencer Walpole

PARLIAMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE—THE POST OFFICE BALANCES.

MR. GLADSTONE moved—

“That the House will proceed, this day, with the Motion relating to Post Office Balances, of which Notice has been given, after the Order of the Day for a Committee to consider of Her Majesty's Message.”

Motion agreed to.

H.R.H. THE DUKE OF EDINBURGH—THE QUEEN'S MESSAGE.

Message from Her Majesty [28th July] considered in Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Queen's Message read.

MR. GLADSTONE said: Sir, the practice in the House of Commons on occasions of this nature varies somewhat from the practice which is adopted in the House of Lords; and it is right that I should make an explanation to the Committee on the subject. The usual practice of the House on occasions of this nature is to vote an Annuity without presenting an Address. In the House of Lords, where there is no Annuity to be voted, and the House waits for the communication of a Bill from the House of Commons, the course taken is to present an Address. In the instance of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, an Address was also presented by this House; but I believe I am pursuing the regular and established practice, from which in such a matter we certainly should not wish to vary, in proceeding to propose an Annuity in the case of a Prince who is not the Heir Apparent to the Throne. But, Sir, although the House will not be called upon by the Government to present a formal Address, assuring Her Majesty of the sentiments with which it has learnt the purport of the communication which Her Majesty has been pleased to make, I am quite sure I do not misconstrue or overstate the general sentiment when I venture to express my conviction that it is a communication which has been received, not only with those emotions of loyalty which, upon all occasions, govern us in our relations with the Crown, but likewise with a solid and a lively satisfaction, so far as the contents of the communication itself are concerned. This is an occasion on which a Marriage has been arranged, which, in the first place, presents to us that feature of all others, in my judgment, the most indispensable and the most satisfactory for a Royal Marriage—namely, that it is a Marriage which has been contracted, and which is to be solemnized on grounds of human, and personal affection. So far as this country is concerned, I trust we have passed by the day when it was found necessary to enter into engagements of this kind without that great, indispensable, and I may well call it, consecrating, element of personal attachment. It is upon that most solid basis that the present union has been founded, and it constitutes the first and strongest reason for our wishing that it may be crowned with every blessing during the lives of the Illustrious Persons concerned. I may also say that, although in the vicissitudes of history the time came when we were compelled from special circumstances to regard the Russian Empire as a hostile State, yet God forbid that we should contemplate the recurrence of such a period—or, what is still worse, that we should accustom ourselves, or allow ourselves, to cherish sentiments of hostility or suspicion against a Power with which we are in alliance. I rejoice—and I believe the House and the country will rejoice—at the formation of this new tie of amity between two great Empires; and, permit me to say, that if we were to exercise a choice as to the period of time at which we could desire that a relation of this kind should be formed between the Imperial Family of Russia and the Royal House of the United Kingdom, we may well be pleased that it has happened in the reign of an Emperor like His Imperial Majesty, who has already signalized his sway—not by schemes of reckless aggrandizement, nor by mere pomp and display in the face of a too easily admiring world, but by that one great act of legislative wisdom and humanity which stands almost without a parallel in history, and which is of itself enough to make a reign not only honourable, but illustrious—I mean the emancipation of the serfs of Russia. Lastly, I rejoice that it falls to me to make this proposal at a time when, even within the last few months, the Imperial Government, under the direction of its Illustrious Head, has given to us more than one practical assurance of its desire to pursue a friendly policy towards this country. Now, I come to the proposal which I am going to submit, and which I trust—indeed, I entertain not the smallest distrust; I feel confident—will meet with the approval of the Committee. It will be recollect by the House that this is the closing portion of a transaction which awaits its full consummation. In the year 1866 it was my duty, on behalf of the Crown, to ask the House of Commons to grant to His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh, then Prince Alfred, an annuity of £15,000 a-year upon his coming of age. That was done by an Act of the same year, cap. 8, and there were two special observations with which my statement on that occasion was accompanied. One was, that if His Royal Highness should at a future time contract a marriage with the consent and to the satisfaction of Her Majesty, it would probably be the duty of the Executive Government of the day, whatever it might be—at any rate, I prepared the House to expect they would find it their duty—to make to the House a proposal, with a view to some increase of the income which was then so freely granted to His Royal Highness. The second special observation with which I accompanied the brief statement I then made was a reference to the fact that His Royal Highness is heir to a Principality abroad—namely, the Duchy of Saxe Coburg-Gotha; and accordingly in the Act of 1866 a Proviso was inserted, that—

“In the event of his said Royal Highness succeeding to any sovereignty or principality abroad, it shall be lawful for Her Majesty or her successors, with the consent of Parliament, to revoke or reduce the said annuity, by warrant under the Sign Manual.”

Of course, it need not be said, with regard to the power of Her Majesty and of Parliament, that such power, considered in the abstract, requires no reservation; but it is customary in many classes of Bills to insert a notice of this kind, which disposes of any question of good faith which might be involved in the matter, and makes the reservation of the discretion as well as of the power of Parliament perfectly effectual for its purpose in case the occasion should arise for the exercise of that discretion. The proposal which I shall now make is—

“That the annual sum of Ten Thousand Pounds be granted to Her Majesty, out of the Consolidated Fund of Great Britain and Ireland, towards providing for the Establishment of His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh

and Her Imperial Highness the Grand Duchess Marie Alexandrovna of Russia, the said annuity to be settled on His Royal Highness for his life, in such manner as Her Majesty shall think proper, and to commence from the day of the Marriage of their Royal Highnesses, such annuity to be in addition to the annuity now enjoyed by His Royal Highness under the Act of the twenty-ninth year of her present Majesty."

The Proviso which I have read would not be represented in the Resolution which I invite the Committee at present to accept; but it will be inserted in the Bill, which in due course will be founded upon the Resolution, the practice being, as those who are conversant with our method of conducting business know, that in Parliamentary Resolutions it is usual to state the general proposition, and that any limitations are for the most part introduced into the Bill when it is laid before the House. That is the first and the principal branch of the proposition which I have to make in the name of the Government. The second branch relates to that contingency which we all trust either may never arrive, or may be a very distant one. That contingency is the widowhood of the Illustrious Princess; and my second Resolution will be—

"That Her Majesty be enabled to secure to Her Imperial Highness the Grand Duchess Marie Alexandrovna, in case she shall survive His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh, an annual sum not exceeding Six Thousand Pounds during her life, to support her Royal dignity."

This is, I think, the first occasion upon which it has been my duty, or the duty of any Minister during the present reign, to make a full and final proposal to Parliament having reference to one of the Members of the Royal Family not being the Heir Apparent. And although I am fully persuaded that the House will not think that the proposal I have made is one requiring very special or elaborate justification, I may say one or two words upon its amount. A good many years have now elapsed since the Government of Lord Palmerston took into its consideration the general subject of a provision for the children of our Sovereign and the Prince Consort, and Lord Palmerston endeavoured to arrive at something like a consistent and general, though it could not be absolutely a binding view—except for that Government—as to the manner in which it would be proper to proceed in making these provisions. One question, indeed, which has been raised by some persons is, whether these provisions should be made by Parliament at all. Upon that question I do not propose to enter. We discussed it at some length when it was my duty to ask for a grant from the Legislature upon the occasion of the marriage of Her Royal Highness the Princess Louise. The arguments in favour of such a provision appeared to me overwhelming and conclusive to such a degree as to put the matter out of possible doubt as room for fair controversy. They were seconded by the right hon. Gentleman the Leader of the Opposition, were supported by other Members of the House, and were felt to be of such a nature that it is totally needless; and, if needless, it would be officious and impertinent on our part to revive any such discussion upon the new proposal we are now making. With regard, however, to the amount of the provision, what I wish to say is this—It is quite possible that those who refer to some former precedent may find occasion for criticism and objection, either from one point of view or another. Cases may be discovered in which larger grants have been asked from Parliament, and possibly have been obtained. Other cases will be found by those who have diligence enough to search for them in our Parliamentary records, in which, perhaps, grants not quite so large have been given. At this time of day—when I think Parliament has shown a great consistency of view, as well as great moderation of view, upon this subject—it is not necessary for us to go back to times when the arrangements between the Crown and Parliament with reference to the support of its dignity and the support of the junior branches of the Royal Family were much less well understood and regulated than they now are. We have passed, happily, from a state of things in which the Civil List, settled at the beginning of a reign, represented no final arrangements at all, but was liable to be disturbed from time to time by new applications to Parliament. We have passed out of that irregular state of relations into one in which with some—I may say with great—success something like rule and method have been introduced. And what we have endeavoured to has been—both in former years and upon the present occasion—to look back to the general effect of our records, and of the cases which they bring before us, and to the general equity and reason of the case, in fixing the proposal which it will be our duty upon our responsibility to submit to Parliament. I think that those who are disposed to examine the matter upon such a basis as I have endeavoured to describe will think that the provision which we now ask Parliament to sanction—a sum of £25,000 a-year—is a provision which, while it does not err on the side of parsimony, certainly does not err on the side of excess. If that be so—and I believe that will be the general feeling of the House and of the country—I venture humbly to remind the House that the readiness and cheerfulness of a gift like this adds to its value. I would even make an appeal to that very small proportion of the Members of the House of Commons who—I have no doubt actuated by the most patriotic motives—have on a former occasion raised objections not merely of amount, but directed to the very foundation of the proposal. On the occasion of the marriage to which I have referred—the marriage of Her Royal Highness the Princess Louise—we thoroughly sifted and discussed the principle involved in these grants, and the question of principle was decided not by a mere majority of this House, but by what I may almost presume to call a moral unanimity—a majority approaching so nearly to unanimity that there would be no discredit and no deviation from public spirit—on the contrary, there can be nothing but consideration, courtesy, and taste—in recognizing the decision of the House upon that occasion, and in forbearing to revive the discussion. I think the general feeling will be that this proposal is one which, on the ground of its reasonableness and moderation, may safely be commended to the approval of the House; and if it is one which may be safely commended to the approval of the House, the gracefulness of the act will be much increased, and our own feelings of loyalty and attachment to the Sovereign and her Family will be spared what, even at the best, amounts to something like a painful jar; should it prove upon the present occasion that we can, without difference of opinion, go forward with this offering in our hands, and lay it at the foot of the Throne, adding to it our fervent prayer to the Disposer of all Events that the marriage which is about to be contracted, as it has been founded on right principles of mutual attachment, may be crowned with all the happiness of which such a union ought to be both the pledge and the fulfilment. The right hon. Gentleman concluded by moving Resolutions.

The Resolutions having been formally proposed,

MR. HUNT: I rise, Sir, to second the proposition made by the right hon. Gentleman opposite, and I feel sure that he did not assume too much when he said that the marriage announced in Her Majesty's gracious Message has afforded great gratification to the House and to the country generally. These are not days when dynastic alliances much affect the fate of nations; but, at the same time, we cannot but rejoice that the friendly feeling which exists between the two countries will be cemented afresh by this alliance. With respect to the amount proposed by the right hon. Gentleman, I think that the terms in which he has alluded to it are amply justified. Had the right hon. Gentleman proposed even a larger amount than he has thought proper to do, I feel certain that this House would cheerfully have granted it. At the same time, in those matters we look to the direction and guidance of the Government, and I feel satisfied that in proposing the amount the right hon. Gentleman has done on the part of the Government, he has had due regard to all the circumstances of the case. I can only echo the sentiments which the right hon. Gentleman has expressed, and hope that this alliance between these two Illustrious Houses may be followed not only by the happiness of the principal parties concerned—His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh and Her Imperial Highness the Grand Duchess Marie—but that it will give satisfaction to Her Majesty and to the other Members of the Royal Family.

MR. P. A. TAYLOR said: Sir, although a very humble Member of this House, I have thought it my duty to rise to protest against the proposition made by Her Majesty's Government, as being unwarranted by precedent, and wholly uncalled for, by the circumstances of the case. ["Oh, oh!"] I can only say—and I say it with a sincerity that I think ought to find credit even in the minds of those who disagree with me—that it is a painful thing to me that I cannot respond to the appeal of the Prime Minister. [“Oh, oh!”] I am by no means so fond of standing alone or of occupying an unpopular position, and nothing but a deep sense of duty compels me to take the decision of the House upon this question. I have been informed by the highest authority that it is most in accordance with precedent and the custom of the House that any opposition to a Vote of this nature should take place not at the present stage, but on the second reading of the Bill that will be brought in. I am quite aware that those who agree with me are few in number, and may be a small minority, and it is neither my inclination, nor would it be morally right in me to attempt any factious opposition to the measure. I therefore content myself with giving Notice that on the second reading of the Bill I shall raise a discussion, and take the sense of the House upon it.

MR. HOLT: On a former occasion some statement was made to the House by the Government with reference to the religious convictions of the Illustrious parties. [“Oh !”] I know that it will be in accordance with the feelings of a large number of persons that some communication should be made to the House on that subject; and I hope the right hon. Gentleman will be prepared to do so. [“Oh ! oh !”]

MR. GLADSTONE: It may be well, because other persons may fall into the same misunderstanding as the hon. Member has fallen into, that I should say that the Constitution of this country does not, as a general rule, investigate those matters connected with personal religious convictions, either within the precincts of the Royal Family or out of it. It is quite true that under the Act of Succession security is taken against the possession of the British Throne by a person professing a particular religion. That security is taken, not on the ground of what is properly religious in that religion, but on account of political dangers which were conceived—and I hope I will offend no one if I say rightly conceived—to attend the profession of that religion when the Act was passed, in conjunction with the occupation of the British Throne. That was the ground, I apprehend, beyond all doubt, of the Act of Settlement. That being so, it is obvious that the question of the hon. Gentleman goes beyond that ground; and if I were to undertake to answer it I would be forming a precedent for an investigation which, in my opinion, would be equally odious in itself as it would be wholly unjustifiable. I hope, and believe, that what the House of Commons intends to do is to respect religious convictions wherever it finds them; and, at the same time, I trust that I do not very far deviate from the principles which I have laid down in this instance, when I express my confident belief and expectation, from the nature of the arrangements that are in course of being made upon this occasion, that the marriage about to be contracted will be productive of no difficulties whatever, and will in every respect be found to give satisfaction to the country.

MR. NEWDEGATE: The right hon. Gentleman seems to concur with those Members of the House who think that the Question of the hon. Member for North-east Lancashire (Mr. Holt) is anomalous and unusual. I beg to remind the House that on the occasion of our being asked to make provision for Her Majesty upon her marriage, and also upon the occasion of the marriage of the Prince of Wales, questions analogous to that of my hon. Friend were put. I hold in my hand the reply of Lord Palmerston, to whom on one of these occasions I put the Question, after consultation with that noble Lord. Although on this occasion we are providing for the happiness of a Member of the Royal Family who is not the Heir Apparent, still I think that the question of my hon. Friend, seeing that the children of this marriage might possibly become Heirs Apparent to the Throne, is quite justifiable and ought to be answered.

MR. BEACH asked what day the second reading of the Bill to carry the Resolutions into effect would be taken?

MR. GLADSTONE replied that at the present period of the Session, in accordance with precedent, they proposed to proceed with the Bill de die in diem. The Second Reading would be made the first Order for to-morrow.

Motion agreed to.

(1.) Resolved, That the annual sum of Ten Thousand Pounds be granted to Her Majesty, out of the Consolidated Fund of Great Britain and Ireland, towards providing for the Establishment of His Royal Highness the Duke of

Mr. P. A. Taylor

Edinburgh and Her Imperial Highness the Grand Duchess Marie Alexandrovna of Russia, the said Annuity to be settled on His Royal Highness for his life, in such manner as Her Majesty shall think proper, and to commence from the day of the Marriage of their Royal Highnesses, such Annuity to be in addition to the Annuity now enjoyed by His Royal Highness under the Act of the twenty-ninth year of Her present Majesty.

(2.) Resolved, That Her Majesty be enabled to secure to Her Imperial Highness the Grand Duchess Marie Alexandrovna, in case she shall survive His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh, an annual sum not exceeding Six Thousand Pounds during her life, to support her Royal Dignity.

Resolutions to be reported To-morrow.

POST OFFICE (BALANCES)—TELEGRAPHIC DEPARTMENT — MISAPPROPRIATION OF FUNDS.—RESOLUTION.

MR. ASSHETON CROSS, in rising to move—

"That this House, having considered the Reports of the Select Committee of Public Accounts, records its disapproval of the conduct of the Post Office in respect of the misappropriation of balances therein mentioned; and is of opinion that the control of the Treasury over the Post Office as a Revenue Department having proved inadequate for the earlier detection and rectification of such irregularities requires to be more watchfully exercised," said, that no one knew more than he did the great advantages the public derived from the services of the Post Office. He was sure he only spoke the feelings of the House when he said in the words of the Committee of Public Accounts, that the organization of the Department was admirable and its administration skilful. It afforded the maximum of advantage to the public, and returned to the Chancellor of the Exchequer the maximum amount of money compatible with the duties it had to perform. Having said so much, he only regretted that he should have to complain of irregularities committed by any person connected with the Post Office. In laying the history of the case before the House he preferred to quote the language of those better qualified than himself to express an opinion on it. He might cite the language of the Committee on Public Accounts, he might cite the language of the special Commissioners appointed by the Treasury to inquire into the matter, or that of the Committee on Public Accounts; but he would rather quote words, which could not be gainsaid, used by the Government itself in their description of the offence. A Bill brought in by the Chancellor of the Exchequer and the Financial Secretary of the Treasury—persons who were not likely to state the case higher against themselves than needs be—and which was read a second time last night, so that the Preamble might be deemed to have received the assent of the House, contained these words, the like of which certainly could not be found in the records of Parliament—

"Whereas by the Telegraph Act, 1869, and the Telegraph Money Act, 1871, the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, in this Act referred to as the Treasury, were authorized to raise for the purposes of the said Acts any sum or sums of money not exceeding in the whole eight million pounds. . . . and whereas an estimated sum of about £812,800, part of the Post Office revenue which ought to have been paid into the Consolidated Fund, has been improperly expended for the purposes of the said Telegraph Acts, and it is necessary that funds should be provided to make good to the said Fund the sum so improperly diverted from it."

Well, this Preamble was his case. Was there ever a stronger case put before the House? If possible, two observations which he had to make would leave it still stronger. First, it was not a single act of the Treasury or any Government official; it was not a matter which came upon them by surprise; it was not a matter done in one month and settled in the next. It was not an act which the Treasury could not have discovered at the proper time, nor was it a mere inadvertence; but it was a deliberate and wilful misapplication, going on for a long time, of moneys which should have gone from one fund to another. The Chancellor of the Exchequer, in his examination before the Committee, said—

"The distinction that I should take would not be so much as to the quantity of the loan that remained to be paid the money still due to them, as to their going on knowingly and wilfully to do it. I can conceive that it may have been possible for them to have got to this £200,000 without being aware that they had exceeded; and considering the largeness of the transactions, and the great allowance that ought to be made for an office like the Post Office, struggling with a new subject like this, I would be disposed myself to look leniently on anything of the kind, even to a large amount; but—" when the the right hon. Gentleman said "but" there was sure to be something coming—and he went on to say—

"where there is no reasonable excuse to be offered is, I think, that after being aware that they had exceeded the sum by £200,000, as stated in the letters and memoranda, they should then go on to take £700,000 (£812,800); I am really not aware what excuse can be offered for that."

The sum had now grown to £812,800. Secondly, it would have been bad enough had it been a case of applying money urgently needed for the service of the year in excess of the annual Vote; but it was the deliberate pursuance of a policy of improperly spending the money in hand on capital account, practically putting Parliament aside, instead of waiting for its sanction for further capital. The Chancellor of the Exchequer, whose examination might be regarded as a kind of Confessional Unmasked said upon this point—

"The money exhausted was not a Vote in Supply, but a loan authorized by Act of Parliament, and when that was expended there was only one legal and constitutional course—that is, to go to Parliament for a fresh loan. The inference that because a loan was exhausted payments must be made from the balances in so far from being inevitable that it never entered into the mind of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, nor of any person in the Treasury, that such a course could possibly be contemplated. The reason is plain. A necessity for money does exist in the case of ordinary expenditure for the daily business of a Department, but not for capital expenditure, which can, and therefore ought to, wait till money has been legally provided for it."

There were thus two aggravating circumstances—the Act was a deliberate and continuous policy, and the money was not for the ordinary service of the year. It would naturally be asked how the money was obtained? Now, the Post Office, in addition to its postal business, issued money orders, collected money for the Revenue, and received Savings Bank deposits, thus having large sums of money which ought to be applied as soon as conveniently could be done to certain accounts. Its balance in hand was generally £160,000, a portion of this, however, being balances outstanding in the various post-offices in the kingdom, while the bills sent up by postmasters had sometimes a little time to run. The actual balance was kept in one account at the Bank of England, and as regarded the postal business, the entire receipts had to be made over to the Treasury, all the expenditure being met by the Votes of Parliament. As to the telegraphic receipts, the 19th section of the Telegraph Act directed that the gross revenue should be paid into the Exchequer to the account of the Consolidated Fund, and that the expenses incurred with the sanction of the Treasury, in working, maintaining, or extending the Telegraphs, should be paid out of the moneys to be voted by Parliament. The Act establishing Savings Banks empowered the Post Office, with the sanction of the Treasury, to regulate the transfer of the deposits to the National Debt Commissioners, in order that they might bear interest, and save the State the loss which would accrue if they remained in the hands of the Postmaster General. Such regulations were accordingly issued, the effect being that the transfers were to be based on summaries of the daily receipts and withdrawals, compiled in the Money Order Office and forwarded by the Controller of the Savings Bank Department to the Receiver and Accountant General. At first a weekly transfer would be sufficient; but if a daily transfer were required, it could readily be made. That was an excellent rule for carrying on the Post Office Savings Bank. The money was to be handed in weekly, and the rule contemplated the time when there should be a daily transfer from the Savings Bank to the National Debt Commissioners. Now, the Act of Parliament which enabled them to make these rules had an express Proviso that these rules should be laid before Parliament. The rules were divided into two parts—public rules and rules with regard to internal arrangements. For some reason they laid before Parliament those rules which related to the public, but not those which related to the internal administration of the Savings Bank; and, unfortunately, he thought, for this case, among the rules not laid before Parliament was the rule requiring transfers to be made in the way he had pointed out. What was the consequence? When he came to deal with the relations between the Treasury and the Post Office, they would see how the fact of the Treasury not laying these rules before Parliament affected this case. They not only broke the rule, but did away with it, and made another rule. Instead of weekly balances, paid over by the Post Office Savings Bank to the National Debt Commissioners, they said "the gross collection should be paid over as frequently as may be desirable." From the breaking down of that rule, which ought to have been carried out, a great deal of the mischief now complained of had practically arisen. [The CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER: What is the date?] The 13th of September, 1861. What had been the result? The transfers to the National Debt Commissioners in 1862 amounted to 55; but when they came to the time of the Telegraph Service the transfers became gradually less; and instead of 55, as in 1862, the transfers were in 1871 16, and in 1872 only 13. Looking to the balances kept in hand, the difference appeared still more striking. In 1862 the first balance kept in hand was £12,000; in 1863 the balance kept in hand was £15,000; but when they came to the formation of the Telegraph Service there was a sudden jump. Instead of £12,000 or £15,000, the average monthly balance kept in hand was in 1870, £119,000; in 1871, £264,000; in 1872, £268,000; and when they came to the disclosures now made, the balances held in hand were something like the enormous sum of £430,000. Of that sum the Post Office was the trustee; and by the mode in which it had been treated considerable loss had been occasioned to the Savings Bank funds. So far as the Treasury Commissioners made out, the result of the transactions of the Post Office in this matter had been a loss to the Savings Bank funds in interest to the extent of £5,000. It had not affected the security of the depositors in the Savings Bank, because they had a guarantee for their money; but the loss to the Savings Bank funds in interest amounted to £5,000 a-year. He had rather understated than overstated the facts; but, he asked, did not these facts appear practically to bear out his Motion? Of course, there remained in the background the question of who was responsible for this state of things? He thought the House was quite clear that this was a bad state of things, and that it ought never to have existed. If proper control had been exercised on persons in the employ of the Post Office and the Treasury such a state of things never could have existed. Something had been said of the responsibility of the Audit Office. He was not going at length into that matter, which had been gone into very fully by the Commissioners of the Treasury; and what they said was that at that time the Audit Office had not the power of going into the audit of anything spent on the capital account, although their attention might probably have been called to the reduced amount of money paid over to the National Debt Commissioners. But there was a sum of £382,000 which was placed to Revenue in the Spring of 1872 which did immediately attract their notice, and they called the attention of the Public Accounts Commissioners to it. They said it ought to have gone to capital account. It was practically through the Audit Office that the true scent was given and followed up. So far as the National Debt Commissioners were concerned, they had nothing to do with the Telegraph money—although they might have been surprised, supposing the Post Office, a very improving office, that so very little money came into their hands—but they had only to receive the money that was paid to them—whether the amount was the right amount or not was a question for other hands. They had no means of finding out anything in the shape of misappropriation of balances, or tracing it in any way, before the money came into their hands. Who then was responsible? He would first consider very shortly the case of the Post Office itself. By the 14th section of the Act of 1868, which enabled the first loan of £8,000,000 to be raised, the stock so created was directed to be placed in the Bank of England to the account of the National Debt Commissioners; the Postmaster General was to draw the money from the Bank of England, and was responsible for it. In 1870 the Act was passed to extend the Telegraph to the Isle of Man and other places; but in 1871 rather an extraordinary matter occurred, to which he must call attention for a moment. It was found in 1871 that more money would be wanted. When the Government came to balance up in March, instead of having spent £7,000,000, they had overspent that sum by £200,000 or £300,000. The balance was only made up at the Post Office at the end of 10 or 11 weeks. The result was the Post Office applied for more money. One would have thought the Postmaster General would have been the person to communicate with the Chancellor of the Exchequer upon a question of money; but, instead, the officials of the Post Office, without, in the first instance, saying a word to the Postmaster General, wrote, not to the

Chancellor of the Exchequer, but to the Controller of the National Debt Office, Sir Alexander Spearman. Why should the underlings of the Post Office do that? The best advice Sir Alexander Spearman could have given would have been "Consult your own superior;" but he referred them to the Chancellor of the Exchequer. The matter was laid before Parliament, which in that year granted £1,000,000. So ended 1871. He now came to 1872. Early in March in that year the Committee on Public Accounts traced the application to Revenue of the £382,000 which ought to have gone to the capital account. Mr. Scudamore had said in 1871 he should be able to show that the Department was on the eve of fulfilling its promises to Parliament and the public, and yet in 1872 he found himself in this financial difficulty. He communicated with the Chancellor of the Exchequer, whose private secretary, Mr. Rivers Wilson, wrote to Mr. Scudamore asking for further information as to what would be required. In reply, on the 20th of March, 1872, Mr. Scudamore sent a memorandum stating that £8,000,000 had been granted by Parliament and rather less than £8,200,000 laid out—£6,640,000 in purchases and £1,500,000 in re-arrangements and renewals. He went on to say that the arrangements to be completed were of very little moment, and that the extensions which remained to be carried out were very inconsiderable; that an additional outlay of from £100,000 to £150,000 would meet the requirements of the service; that the capital account might be closed at the end of the coming financial year; that a Report would be in the hands of the Chancellor of the Exchequer in two or three weeks; and that, in addition to the further sums required on capital account, a Supplementary Vote of from £120,000 to £130,000 would be required for the working expenses of the year. Mr. Scudamore on the same day wrote to the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and referring to a letter written in June, 1871, and to the Act of Parliament, and the application made by the Department for a portion of the sum authorized to be raised by the Act, said he now began to see that the sum authorized to be raised would be required before the termination of the financial year to make good the sum which had been expended, and that, in fact, the sum of £400,000 would be required to make good the sums expended in the purchase. The capital account up to that time had never been properly stated, but Mr. Scudamore said that it was in course of preparation; that a good deal of it was in the printer's hands; and that it would be laid before the Committee on Public Accounts. That was in March. Autumn came, November and December passed, but no capital account was presented; and it was not until 1873 that the capital account was finally made out, and a great deficit was discovered. Must it not be held that the Post Office, in daily spending capital and saying nothing about it, had been guilty of a grievous neglect of duty? He could not help saying that Mr. Scudamore's zeal had greatly overrun his discretion in the management of this matter. In his examination Mr. Scudamore said it was entirely through his labours that the difficulties had been overcome, and that the irregularities only were remembered. He now came to another part of the case. It was desirable to find out who was responsible for the manner in which the Post Office had acted. No doubt the mischief in this case had arisen from the fact that the whole management was left to Mr. Scudamore without any proper supervision being exercised over him; but if the officers of the Post Office were to be left to themselves, to do exactly what they liked, what was the use of a Postmaster General? The Treasury Commission, who went carefully into the subject, laid down the duties of the Postmaster General in these terms—

"The Postmaster General as the head of the Department is responsible for its constitution and efficient administration, and, under the rule which governs every other Department of the State, the permanent officers of the Post Office can have no authority independently of him. The Secretaries give directions in his name and under his authority, and though in a large Department like the Post Office they must often act upon their own judgment; they only do so with his permission."

Therefore the Postmaster General was bound to look to the efficiency of the Post Office Service, and if there were irregularities he was responsible to the House for them. It might fairly be asked whether the Postmaster General had actual personal knowledge of what was going forward, or whether it was purposely concealed from him? The present Postmaster General was appointed early in 1871. Seeing that the Telegraphs had just been transferred to the Post Office, which was entrusted with £8,000,000 of money, he ought on his appointment to have made inquiry as to the state of the accounts; and when in June, 1871, it was found that the Post Office had overspent the money voted by several hundreds of thousands of pounds, and was obliged to go to the Chancellor of the Exchequer for a further loan of £1,000,000, it was his bounden duty to have made himself fully acquainted with the state of the facts at that time. When Mr. Scudamore was asked if a letter which had been written was communicated to the Postmaster General, he stated that the circumstance was communicated to him before the letter was sent, and that a fair copy was afterwards laid before him, and that he made no comment either of approval or disapproval, probably believing that the matter was one for the Chancellor of the Exchequer, with which he need not concern himself. At all events, that was a warning to the right hon. Gentleman that the Service required narrowly watching, and having been warned of this over-expenditure, it was his bounden duty to see that nothing of the kind happened again. The question was, whether the Postmaster General knew what occurred in the Spring of 1872, and whether he was cognizant then of the fact that the Post Office had overspent itself in 1871, and had incurred a further expenditure of £200,000 in March, 1872? At all events, after the warnings of 1871 and 1872, the right hon. Gentleman ought to have exercised great discretion and judgment in carrying on the business of the Post Office. Was the Postmaster General aware in March, 1872, of the correspondence which was passing between Mr. Scudamore, Mr. Rivers Wilson, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer? Why, it was clear that at that time the Postmaster General had distinct notice from the Chancellor of the Exchequer that this correspondence had taken place.

"I had forgotten," said Mr. Scudamore, "that this note had been sent to me; but I find I sent a reply to Mr. Rivers Wilson on the 21st of March, I have no doubt, however, that I told the Postmaster General what I told the Chancellor of the Exchequer."

This overspending of £200,000 of the public money without authority was no light matter; and yet the letters which had passed between the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Postmaster General, Mr. Rivers Wilson, and Mr. Scudamore had all been lost with the exception of one small scrap of the correspondence, and both the Postmaster General and Mr. Scudamore had entirely forgotten this letter. The Postmaster General, in his evidence, said he presumed the reply must have been satisfactory to him, because he had never mentioned the matter to Mr. Tilley, whom he always consulted when a difficult question arose, and because it had not aroused his attention to the matter. It was not surprising, if the correspondence of the Post Office was conducted with this want of regularity and order, that these irregularities had taken place. There was another extraordinary matter which strengthened the whole case against the Postmaster General. The correspondence having gone on for some time, the whole matter was fully inquired into, and in 1873 Mr. Scudamore brought up a memorandum, which was forwarded to the Chancellor of the Exchequer, accompanied by a note from the Postmaster General. In that note the Postmaster General tells the Chancellor of the Exchequer that he regrets very much that the Treasury had not been consulted as to the expenditure of the capital account, and that the proper forms had not been drawn.

"Forms!" exclaims the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his evidence, "it is no question of 'forms.' How could the Post Office suppose that by going through any number of 'forms' the Treasury could have sanctioned such proceedings?"

This clearly showed that the Post Office authorities were not aware of the real nature of the transaction. They were not aware how grievous an error they were committing by applying the balances in the way they did. No doubt they thought that, as the Chancellor of the Exchequer had whitewashed them in 1871 and 1872, he would go on whitewashing them. Having disposed of the case of the Postmaster General, he would now say a word about the Treasury. The same Act of Parliament which gave the loan said it was to be disposed of according to the order of the Postmaster General, with the sanction of the Treasury. Now, if the Postmaster General chose to allow his subordinates to correspond with the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and to waive his own authority, he could not expect the business of his Department to be well carried on. If, on the other hand, the Chancellor of the Exchequer interfered with the business of the Postmaster General, he could not expect that it would be carried on as efficiently as it ought to be. It was singular that the Financial Secretary of the Treasury was never mentioned in the correspondence, and that the Treasury Accountant did not vouch for the accuracy of any of the accounts. The Postmaster General gave evidence before the Public Accounts Committee to show how badly the interference of the Chancellor of the Exchequer worked. The right hon. Gentleman had some plan for the better investment of the savings of the poorer inhabitants of the country, and this was mentioned to the Chancellor of the Exchequer. One would have thought that the Chancellor of the Exchequer, after taking the subject into consideration, would have framed some regulations in regard to it, and sent them to the Postmaster General for his approval. But the Chancellor of the Exchequer did no such thing. He consulted Mr. Scudamore, and a code of regulations was drawn up, and was in force for several months before the Postmaster General had any sort of idea of the matter. Under the Act of 1869 the Treasury was responsible for seeing this money was properly applied. If the two Departments were connected the Treasury ought to keep a sharp eye on the Post Office, because it was practically a Revenue Department. In 1871 Mr. Scudamore informed the Chancellor of the Exchequer that the Post Office owed the Exchequer £390,000 for Telegraphs, and other large sums to their own balances, and that he could not state that the sum then asked for would be all that would be required, nor could he state the precise limits of future requirements. Did not that give the Chancellor of the Exchequer fair warning that in 1871 it was a dangerous service, and that more money had been expended than ought to have been? On the 26th of July in that year the Telegraph Bill was brought in. It passed through all its stages without a word of explanation from the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Postmaster General, or the Financial Secretary of the Treasury, although a full explanation ought to have been given after the full warning which the Chancellor of the Exchequer had received. He received another warning in 1872. In that year he was made aware that another sum of £200,000 more than ought to have been spent was being expended. The right hon. Gentleman knew that the balances of the capital account had never been rendered. He had asked for them two or three times; but he had allowed himself to be hoodwinked, and they never were rendered, until the discovery was made by the Committee on Public Accounts in 1873. In point of fact, the Chancellor of the Exchequer had interfered where he ought not to have interfered, and he had never consulted the Postmaster General where he ought to have consulted him, thus practically taking upon himself the whole responsibility. The Postmaster General ought to have discovered what was going on from the Savings Bank balances, for how could such a sum as £430,000 be allowed to remain in the Bank, when £50,000 would have been quite sufficient for all the requirements of the service? In submitting the present Motion to the House, he (Mr. Cross) maintained that every word it contained was true. He asked the House to affirm nothing that was not contained either in the Report of the Treasury Commissioners, or the Report of the Committee of Public Accounts. But he was not content to rest his case either on one or the other; he rested it on the evidence of the Chancellor of the Exchequer himself, and every word of his Resolution was taken practically from the evidence given before the Committee of Public Accounts by the right hon. Gentleman. He asked the House—

"Having considered the Reports of the Select Committee of Public Accounts, to record its disapproval of the conduct of the Post Office in respect of the misappropriation of the balances therein mentioned."

This word "misappropriation" was used by the Chancellor of the Exchequer no less than four times in his evidence. He was asked the following question:—

"We (the Committee) go on to say, so far as those balances consist of Savings Bank deposits, such dealings must be held to amount to misappropriation of a peculiarly serious character."

The Chancellor of the Exchequer properly and wisely replied—"I quite agree with that." The House was asked by his Resolution to disapprove, as the Chancellor of the Exchequer had disapproved, the conduct of the Post Office in respect of the misappropriation of balances. Then the Resolution went on to say that the House—

"Is of opinion that the control of the Treasury over the Post Office as a Revenue Department having proved inadequate for the earlier detection and rectification of such irregularities, requires to be more watchfully exercised."

The Chancellor of the Exchequer gave three answers before the Committee, in which he admitted that this was his own opinion. In answer to Question 2,085, he said—

"I am afraid that in the multiplicity of affairs our attention was not directed to that as it ought to have been. I frankly admit that."

He was asked again (Question 2,060)—Why, no answer having been received from Mr. Scudamore, the matter was allowed to run on till the month of March, 1873? The Chancellor of the Exchequer replied—"In candour, I am bound to say that I think we were to blame in that respect." A third time he was asked (Question 2,063)—

"You agree, then, with what is suggested in the 171st paragraph of the Treasury Commissioners' Report—'It may be questioned, indeed, whether the Treasury did not trust too implicitly to the Post Office, and whether it sufficiently exercised its right of control?'"

The Chancellor of the Exchequer replied—"I think so; that censure is just." If these were the words of the right hon. Gentleman, how could the House refuse to go as far as he himself went? He was told—although he could hardly credit the rumour—that the Government were not willing to accept his Amendment, but that they had resolved to accept the Amendment of the hon. Member for Maidstone (Sir John Lubbock); but the Motion and the Amendment, though they differed in words, were in substance the same. Would the Chancellor of the Exchequer appoint a Committee to consider what was the difference between the two? He regretted that the House had not got before it at the same time two or three other Reports from Committees on the state of matters at the Treasury. If the terms of his Motion were true, why should not the House accept it? If untrue, he was ready to strike out any portion of it. It was the duty of that House, where a fault had been committed, to put its finger on the blot. Here the fault was with the Post Office and the Treasury, and the House was bound to do what it could to stop such practices for the future. The real meaning of the Amendment was that, although the House was sorry for what had happened, it would not blame anyone, and that some further alteration was required in the law to prevent a repetition of such proceedings. But everything that had happened might have been prevented without any alteration of the law if the Post Office and the Treasury had exercised a proper control. He abided by his Resolution; and if, as he believed, it was true, he trusted that the House would affirm it. The hon. Member concluded by moving his Resolution.

MR. W. FOWLER, in seconding the Motion, said: I cannot, Sir, regard this as a party question, and I have agreed to second this Motion, because I consider it to be a question removed from all party considerations. I cannot understand how the Public Business can be carried on if this House declines to express its opinion when such transactions as those referred to by the hon. Member opposite have taken place. I entirely agree with what the hon. Gentleman has said as to the conduct of the Post Office. I think that the cause of the whole difficulty is that the Postmaster General has allowed his subordinates to do his work. If he had really conducted the business of his Office himself, these things would not have happened, for he would have remonstrated against the misappropriation of balances, and he would have insisted on a stop being put to these irregularities. Mr. Chetwynd, the Receiver and Accountant General of the Post Office, has given evidence before the Committee of Public Accounts, which throws much light on the conduct of the Office. At p. 185 of the last Report, he says, that early in 1871 he knew that "a large sum was due from the Telegraphs to the Post Office;" and, at p. 131, he says he told Mr. Scudamore "that we were making large advances;" or, in other words, large sums were being spent out of Post Office revenue and out of Savings Banks balances, to forward the Telegraphs. Mr. Scudamore again admits that he spent the money "knowingly," and he says he informed the Postmaster General in January, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer in June, 1871. I wish to refer again to the letter of 3rd June, 1871, for the language used in it was well calculated to arouse the suspicions of the Chancellor of the Exchequer. After saying that they wanted £610,000, and that they owed of it £330,000 to the Exchequer "for Telegraph revenue," Mr. Scudamore says, "the remainder we owe to our other balances." Now, the Chancellor must be supposed to know what "other balances" there were, and I think he ought at once to have made inquiry. As to the Post Office officials, it is quite plain they did not desire to be very specific, for (p. 111), Mr. Scudamore says he could not have got through the work if he had informed the Treasury beforehand and got their consent to everything. This, in my opinion, is the root of the whole matter. Mr. Scudamore, in his zeal and eagerness, has done what he had no sort of right to do, and he did not obtain the sanction from the proper authorities which he was bound to obtain. We get a further insight into the Post Office from Answers (1650 and 1659) of Mr. Chetwynd, where he tells us, on being asked why he had not paid the money over to the National Debt Commissioners which he knew was due to them, that he could not pay it because he had got no money, his superior officers having ordered him to pay over all the money he had in other ways. When asked why he did not tell the Postmaster General, his reply was, that there was no occasion, as the "fact was patent." When we consider such a state of things as is thus disclosed, the most extraordinary thing is that the Postmaster General could endure his position, and consent to be set on one side—his own Secretary writing to the Treasury independently of him, and as though he were of no account. If the right hon. Gentleman had asserted his authority, he would not have heard the disagreeable things which are now said of him, or been placed in the difficult position in which he now is. When we turn from the Post Office to the National Debt Commissioners, the only excuse for them is, that their Chief was in a bad state of health when these things were going on. If he had made inquiry, he would have seen at once, from the state of the balances, that something was wrong. The best proof of this is that, within a week of the appointment of a new Chief, a large sum of money was paid over. It seems to be agreed on all hands that the Post Office was wrong; but, when we speak of Mr. Scudamore, who says he alone is responsible, we find that he is not responsible, as only the head of the Department can be. We naturally turn to the Treasury, and we find in Q. 1302 an excellent definition by Mr. Welby of what the responsibility of the Treasury is. He lays it down in the strongest terms, and accepting his definition, I hold that we cannot exonerate the Chancellor of the Exchequer. I have read the letter of 3rd June, 1871, by which he had warning; but, in August, 1871, he passed an Act which really endorsed the then past acts of the Post Office in spending public money without the authority of the Treasury. Nothing more was done till March, 1872, and then the Chancellor was informed that yet more money would be wanted. At p. 96 of this Report, you will find a letter from Mr. Rivers Wilson, stating that the Chancellor was "surprised and alarmed;" but nothing more was done. It seems clear that then, at any rate, the suspicions of the Chancellor ought to have been aroused; but the Treasury did nothing, except ask for a capital account time after time. So matters went on till March, 1873, when the Report of the Committee aroused the attention of everyone. I cannot admit the excuse of the Treasury—that they thought everything was right, and did not suspect anyone. It is the duty of the Treasury to look most watchfully after the finances of the country; and if, in such a case, they did not suspect that something was wrong, I think they failed in the performance of their duty. One thing alone ought to have aroused their suspicions. They might have contrasted the statements of the Savings Banks balances with former statements, and then they would have seen that something was irregular. I wish to avoid giving pain by personal remarks. Probably no one in the House regrets what has occurred more than the Chancellor of the Exchequer does. But the House has a duty to discharge independently of personal feeling, and I feel that every part of the Resolution is justified. The Amendment seems to me to be, in substance, exactly the same as the Resolution, though the Amendment may have more of the smoothness of butter than the Resolution. The right hon. Gentleman may, perhaps, say of the hon. Member (Mr. Cross) that, though his words are smooth, there is war in his heart. At all events, there is no war in my heart. Looking at the subject independently of party considerations, I cannot but regret that the Government has not accepted the Motion, instead of having an Amendment moved which really means nothing new, and is only calculated to blind the eyes of the public.

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That this House, having considered the Reports of the Select Committee of Public Accounts, records its disapproval of the conduct of the Post Office in respect of the misappropriation of balances therin mentioned; and is of opinion that the control of the Treasury over the Post Office as a Revenue Department having proved inadequate for the earlier detection and rectification of such irregularities requires to be more watchfully exercised."—(Mr. Cross.)

SIR JOHN LUBBOCK, on rising to move, as an Amendment—

"That this House regrets to find, from the Reports of the Committee on Public Accounts, that the Post Office revenue and Savings Bank balances have been largely employed for the purposes of Telegraph capital expenditure without the authority of Parliament, and is of opinion that it is the duty of the Government to take effectual measures to prevent the recurrence of such a proceeding."

said, the subject which the hon. Member for South-west Lancashire (Mr. Cross) had brought before the House was one of great public importance, and he felt that he had undertaken a grave responsibility in asking the House to assent to the terms of his Amendment rather than those of the original Motion; but he hoped to show the House that notwithstanding what was said by his hon. Friend opposite, there was a great difference between the Amendment and the Motion. Fortunately, although the subject was very intricate, and there were some points even now not entirely cleared up, still, thanks to the care with which the Committee of Public Accounts had investigated the question, and to their very lucid Report, the main facts of the case were clearly before the House. No one, he believed, in the House had any desire to under-rate the gravity of the irregularities which had occurred. It was most serious that nearly £1,000,000 of public money should have been spent without the sanction of Parliament, without the consent of the Treasury, and even without the knowledge of the head of the Department responsible for the expenditure. That such a state of things should be possible was a strong argument for those who considered that Government ought, as far as possible, to avoid entering into commercial and manufacturing undertakings. Fortunately, in the present case there had been no fraud. They had to complain of excessive zeal for the public service, and too little regard to necessary checks and rules, but there was no question of personal dishonesty. Another time, however, they might be less fortunate, and it was surely, therefore, important that any Resolution which the House might pass should cover all those who had been to blame, and condemn everything which had been irregular. But before he proceeded to those points he must say that the latter part of the hon. Gentleman's Motion was somewhat ambiguous. It said that the control of the Treasury over the Post Office "having proved inadequate, requires to be more watchfully exercised." If the power of control proved inadequate, the inference was that it ought to be strengthened. Indeed, from one point of view, the Resolution might almost be regarded as an exculpation of the Treasury. Without, however, dwelling on a question of wording, it seemed to him that in some important respects the Resolution of the hon. Member for South-west Lancashire did not go far enough. He asked the House to record "its disapproval of the conduct of the Post Office in respect of the misappropriation of balances," omitting any reference to the fact that the expenditure itself was incurred without any Parliamentary sanction. But suppose Mr. Scudamore had made contracts for those extensions and carried them out on credit; there need then have been no misappropriation of balances, but would there have been nothing to complain of? The improper application of balances ought not to make the House lose sight of the other irregularity. He regretted the expenditure which had been incurred, not only on account of the manner in which the funds had been obtained, but also because that expenditure was incurred without the sanction of Parliament. The hon. Member asked the House to censure the Post Office and the Treasury; but there were others who were not free from blame in the matter. In the first place, the National Debt Office could not, he thought, be wholly acquitted. The Committee of Public Accounts reported that they ought to have observed the irregularity with which payments had been made, and especially the diminution in 1870 as compared with 1869. In fact, the present Controller, immediately after his appointment, in March last, wrote to the Postmaster General requiring an account, in consequence of which £430,000 was at once paid over. Indeed, one high authority, The Economist, considered that "the National Debt Office was, above everybody, to blame." Again, the Audit Office, as the Committee of Public Accounts pointed out, seemed also to have neglected its duties. The evidence on this point was most remarkable. Mr. Philips was asked by the hon. Member for Sunderland (Mr. Candlish)—

"We understand that since the summer of 1870 the question of auditing the Savings Bank accounts has been in abeyance?"

To which Mr. Philips replied—"It was in abeyance long before that time." The Chairman of the Committee then said—

"But you have continued to receive these monthly statements of balances?"—"We were bound to continue to receive them." "What have you done with them?"—"The accounts subsequent to the 31st of December, 1870, have not even been looked at. They have been received, but not looked at at all."

Surely that was a very grave and unsatisfactory state of things. As regarded the Treasury, it must in justice be admitted that after the attention of the Chancellor of the Exchequer had been called in March, 1872, to the fact that Mr. Scudamore's powers were exhausted, the Chancellor of the Exchequer wrote four times to the Post Office for further information. Moreover, the general regulations which had been laid down by the Treasury had worked well, and the Treasury might urge that they could not have supposed that the distinct provisions of the Savings Bank Act would have been set aside, as appeared from the Report of the Select Committee and from the evidence of the Controller of the Savings Bank Department, without a word of notice to the Treasury, on the sole authority of the Post Office, he must in fairness add before the appointment of the present Postmaster General. The Resolution of the hon. Member for South-west Lancashire, moreover, would point to a more active interference on the part of the Treasury with the responsibilities of other Departments, a direction in which he was disposed to think they had gone far enough already. But, whatever blame might attach to the Audit Office, the National Debt Office, or the Treasury, for not having perceived what was being done, after all the Post Office, and particularly Mr. Scudamore, not only ought to have known, but did know, and were responsible for what the Government itself called "improperly diverting" funds to telegraphic purposes. As regarded the Post Office, however, it was one of the most remarkable things about this extraordinary affair, that they must detach the case as regarded Mr. Scudamore from that of the Postmaster General. He must say that the Postmaster General had grave reason to complain of his permanent Staff. No doubt much importance was to be attached to the principle of individual responsibility. It was desirable, and even necessary, to leave much power in the hands of the permanent officials; but he had always understood that it was an invariable practice, and, indeed, a fundamental rule in all Government Departments, that the permanent Staff kept their Chiefs well informed of everything of real importance. Not only was this required by that loyalty which ought to prevail in every office; but, considering the unremitting calls on the time of every Minister, he did not see how otherwise the business of the country could be carried on. Yet Mr. Scudamore and Mr. Chetwynd seemed to have kept their Chief studiously in the dark. Moreover, the communications between the Post Office and the Treasury should go through the Postmaster General; whereas it had for some time been the habit for the Secretary of the Post Office to communicate with the Treasury direct. If those communications had passed through the Postmaster it was probable that the present state of things would never have occurred. But, however that might be, the Committee of Public Accounts truly observed that the course adopted by Mr. Scudamore was

Sir John Lubbock

"destructive of all control by Parliament or the Executive Government, and would be of disastrous precedent if unmarked by some expression of disapproval."

Mr. Scudamore urged that he always understood that the management of the Telegraph business was practically left in his hands; and he (Sir John Lubbock) believed that a large portion of the sum laid out had been absolutely required by the extension of business. Parliament itself must also, he thought, accept some share in the responsibility. In Mr. Scudamore's letter to the Chancellor of the Exchequer on the 3rd of June, 1871, he distinctly observed that a sum of £610,000 was required, £330,000 of which was due to the Exchequer for Telegraph revenue, and he added, "the remainder we owe to our other balances." Nevertheless, when the Telegraph Act was passed that year, not a word was said on the subject, and, though the amount was comparatively small, that did not affect the principle. He believed, also, that the House and the country would agree with the Committee on Public Accounts that

"The Post Office, speaking generally, seems to be admirably organized and skilfully administered; so that it goes far to combine the maximum of public accommodation with the maximum of gain to the Exchequer. Again, to the abilities and energy of Mr. Scudamore is mainly owing the introduction of the plan of a Government Telegraph Department, its rapid realization and effective working. Much must be excused to a public servant to whom individually the public must feel under obligation."

He had not the pleasure of knowing Mr. Scudamore, nor did he appear as his apologist. Mr. Scudamore had frankly taken the responsibility—"I did it," he said, "and I am alone responsible for it." No doubt he had committed a very grave error, and that it should pass unnoticed would be a national misfortune; but, if past services ought not to affect the verdict, they might at least weigh in the consideration of the terms in which it was couched. In conclusion, he could not help saying that between the different Departments of Government there seemed to be a want of that harmonious feeling which was so necessary in the public interest. The Resolution of the hon. Member for South-west Lancashire appeared to him defective, inasmuch as it did not cover all those concerned, and expressed no condemnation of the large expenditure which had taken place without any Parliamentary sanction. Under these circumstances, without exculpating the Post Office, or the Treasury, or Mr. Scudamore, it seemed to him that the Amendment sufficiently met the case as regarded the past. With reference to the future, the Committee of Public Accounts, after going most carefully into the whole matter, had reported that when the alterations recommended in the Treasury Minute of the 28th of June last were brought into operation "the requisite checks may be considered to be secured." Under these circumstances, he could not but think that it would be sufficient to place on record a Resolution substantially adopting the views of the Committee, and expressing the regret of the House at the irregularities which had occurred. The hon. Gentleman concluded by moving his Amendment.

Amendment proposed,

To leave out from the word "House" to the end of the Question, in order to add the words "regrets to find, from the Reports of the Committee of Public Accounts, that the Post Office revenue and Savings Bank balances have been largely employed for the purposes of Telegraph capital expenditure without the authority of Parliament, and is of opinion that it is the duty of the Government to take effectual measures to prevent the recurrence of such a proceeding,"—(Sir John Lubbock,)—

—instead thereof.

Question proposed, "That the words proposed to be left out stand part of the Question."

MR. MONSELL: Having been put in the front of the battle by the hon. Member for South-west Lancashire (Mr. Cross), I think it will be most respectful to the House to rise at once. I shall not endeavour to throw any responsibility properly belonging to me on another, and the House can hardly need my assurance that I recognize as fully as any man the gravity of the case, and their constitutional right and duty to watch in the most vigilant manner over every misappropriation of public money. The hon. Baronet (Sir John Lubbock)—and I am almost content to leave the case as he put it—mentioned that measures will be at once taken to prevent any repetition of the irregularities. Nobody can be more interested than I am in preventing the recurrence of anything of the sort; and I feel most strongly that it is the bounden duty of the House to prevent the possibility of any such occurrence. A man is a bad judge in his own case; but I do not think my conduct is so entirely indefensible as the hon. Gentleman opposite (Mr. Cross) thinks. It is not pleasant to sing one's own praises; but I feel bound to say that, as regards the Post Office branch of the Department, since I have had the honour to hold my present office no one has had any reason to complain of its administration. I believe the most important changes that have been made for years have been made during my tenure of office. Changes have been made to reduce largely the rate of postage and improve the parcels' post, and considerable steps have been taken in a matter to which a great many hon. Gentlemen concur with me in attaching the greatest interest—the getting rid of postal subsidies. The money-order system has been developed to a considerable extent; and the country has derived great advantage from the extension of the Telegraph system. Where my responsibility was undivided, I paid the greatest attention not only to the matters I have referred to, but to their financial results. Returns were prepared by my direction to show from week to week and month to month the effect on the revenue of the changes I had made; and I cannot reproach myself with any negligence in that particular. But in the Telegraph Department my responsibility was not undivided. I hope to be able to satisfy the House that the circumstances of that Department were so peculiar as to afford me a justification. I took office in January, 1871, and the hon. Member for Cambridge (Mr. W. Fowler) was mistaken in attributing to me the receipt of a communication of prior date. At the time I entered on office many of the irregularities on which, in a proper spirit, the hon. Gentleman opposite has commented existed. Take the case of the regulations as to the mode of keeping the Telegraph accounts. They were founded on an Act of Parliament, and went on this principle—that the Telegraph capital money was to be kept strictly separate from the Post Office balances. It is obvious that, had that been done, none of these irregularities could have happened. I found, however, when I came into office, that large sums of money—I think as much as £500,000—had been transferred from the National Debt Commissioners, not to the Telegraph account, but to the Post Office balance. The money was removed from the stream in which it flowed in one direction and for one purpose, and was absorbed in that great vortex—the Post Office account. The hon. Member for Cambridge referred to the balances of the Savings Bank branch. A month before I took office—in December, 1870—the balance which remained to be paid into the Exchequer from that branch was £178,545, while in December, 1869, it was only £24,395. In January, 1870, it was £248,000; and in January, 1871, it amounted to £444,241, nearly the largest sum ever reached. Very soon after this the amount which had been voted by Parliament had been exceeded by £500,000. The hon. Gentleman has referred to the exceptional position of Mr. Scudamore. Now, I must say with regard to that exceptional position, if the House will consider the work done by Mr. Scudamore, if it will consider that at the time when we purchased the Telegraphs, our Telegraph system was inferior to that of any other country, while it is now the first in the world, it will be inclined to look with not too much severity on the means by which those great results were gained. But who, I ask, placed Mr. Scudamore in that exceptional position? He was placed there by the Duke of Montrose, and maintained there by my noble Friend now Chief Secretary for Ireland. I found him in that position, and though I think it possible that a greater amount of superintendence over him would have been desirable, still I am perfectly convinced that unless he had been left in a position of much greater independence than ordinarily belongs to the permanent head of any Department, the country would not have had the benefit of the results produced by his extraordinary talents and exertions. From the time he took charge of the Savings Bank department, Mr. Scudamore was, I believe, in the habit of constantly communicating with the Treasury through Sir Alexander Spearman. The letter which has been referred to, Sir Alexander Spearman recommended should be addressed to the Chancellor of the Exchequer. Unfortunately, without consulting me, Mr. Scudamore wrote directly to the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and from that letter the hon. Gentleman (Mr. Cross) has quoted very largely. Mr. Scudamore undoubtedly did look to the Treasury as to his Chief for his Telegraph demands. That was the view he took of his position; and the difficulties which have arisen are very much owing to the fact that in the Telegraph department there was not that undivided responsibility that there was in other portions of the establishment. Mr. Scudamore, having been in communication with the Chancellor of the Exchequer once, looked to him afterwards; and it was because he did not look more to the head of his own Department, and keep him informed of all that occurred that these unfortunate difficulties have arisen. Mr. Scudamore's evidence before the Committee of Public Accounts clearly shows that direct communication between the Chancellor of the Exchequer and the Secretaries of the Post Office on financial matters has been the habit for many years. Hon. Gentlemen who have ever filled office must be perfectly aware that it is the universal practice in every public Department that when the political Chief of the Department is asked to sanction any urgent work to be done, if it so happens that there are no funds to meet it, the fact is stated in a Minute to be presented to the Chief; and in no single instance was that done to me. I never was informed that there were no funds available for the purpose. I therefore venture to submit to the House that my position as regards the Telegraph portion of the Post Office was entirely different from my position as to the other departments of the Post Office. The hon. Member for Cambridge has referred to three letters addressed by the Treasury to the Postmaster General; but he omitted to state that it appears by the evidence that not one of those letters was ever shown to me. I was not informed of them till the matter came before the Committee of Public Accounts. I have already stated that I have nothing to complain of in the language used by the hon. Gentleman with reference to myself. I say at once that I regret very much indeed—I shall always regret—that my name should in any way have been mixed up with these unfortunate transactions; but I shall at the same time recollect the kindness with which I was received when I came forward to make my defence; and if hon. Gentlemen will only reflect on the simple explanation I have offered, and the difference that existed between the Telegraph department and every other department in the Post Office with reference to its Chief, they will find the key to the whole affair. I have only again to assure the House that I lament as much as anyone can do these occurrences; and it is to me the deepest source of regret that they should have happened while I had the honour of holding my present office. I do not know that it is necessary for me to detain the House further. I have frankly stated the causes which led to the present difficulties, and it has been my most earnest desire to enable the House to arrive at a just conclusion upon the whole matter. I thank the House most sincerely for the kindness with which they have received me.

MR. SCLATER-BOOTH said, he felt that the House had been exhausted by the very elaborate discussion which this matter had received; but, as Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee, it was his duty to make a few remarks on the present occasion. He had felt the greatest anxiety in investigating the matter to arrive at not only a just but moderate conclusion. He was also anxious that his hon. Friend the Member for South-west Lancashire should, in his Motion and his line of debate not only be strictly within the terms of the Report of the Committee, but of the evidence which accompanied it. The hon. Baronet the Member for Maidstone (Sir John Lubbock) had complained that his hon. Friend had not alluded to two departments which, in his opinion, were in some degree to blame—the National Debt Commissioners and the Audit Office. Now, he thought his hon. Friend had done right in not mixing up the conduct of those two departments with this question, because the first was a department of the Treasury, with ample means of control existing in the Treasury over that department; and, because the case as against the Commissioners, so far as there was a case, should be left as stated in the Report. And his reasons for saying that the Audit Office was rightly left out of the question was that as these misappropriations occurred between March, 1872, and March, 1873, many months had yet to elapse before the appropriation accounts in respect of that year could come before it. For three years, however, the Auditor General had complained of the confusion that existed in those accounts. If he had any fault to find with the Motion of the hon. Member for South-west Lancashire, it was because, it being couched in general terms, he had gone into too particular an analysis as to the relative amount of blame which ought to be attached to the various individuals mixed up in the transaction. Everyone must have listened with sympathy to the statement of the Postmaster General as to the difficult position in which he had been placed. Two years ago, when he entered office, these irregularities were in full swing, and it was impossible to apportion blame amongst the officers of the Post Office Department as stated in the Report, and which the Committee thought the most just mode of treating that portion of the subject. The words of the Motion of the hon. Member for South-west Lancashire were not only true, but they were as moderate and reasonable as the House could desire them to be. If the House had a function at all, it was jealously to watch over the expenditure of money on a large scale without the authority of the House; and it had now been expended in one case without the authority of the Votes in Supply, and in the other without the authority of a money Bill. Could there be a greater farce than their spending the time they did to vote money in Committee of Supply, and hedging the issue of money around with so many securities, if, when a case of this kind occurred, and the authority of the House was so flagrantly disregarded, they forebore to place their disapproval on record? If there was a word in the Motion of his hon. Friend which was open to exception, it might be remedied; but he trusted that the House would prefer it to the Motion of the hon. Member for Maidstone, which, although similar in its effect, was less decided in its language.

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER: If there be no difference between the two Resolutions in the opinion of hon. Gentlemen, we prefer that of the hon. Member for Maidstone (Sir John Lubbock); and if hon. Gentlemen are indifferent they cannot object to it either. Therefore, let us come to a unanimous conclusion on the matter. I am afraid, however, hon. Gentlemen will discover some difference, and I am not sanguine as to my proposal being accepted. I am not here to argue the question polemically or to throw blame on anyone, but merely to offer explanations with regard to the Department of the Treasury, to observations made in a fair and reasonable spirit. Having looked at these transactions with some attention and anxiety, I have the greatest pleasure in rendering a tribute of approbation to the manner in which this very difficult and delicate investigation of the Committee of Public Accounts was carried on; it was a most laborious, fair, and impartial inquiry, and it gives me great pleasure to make this acknowledgment. The words of the Motion of the hon. Member for South-west Lancashire (Mr. Cross) imply more than appears. It refers to the Reports of the Select Committee of Public Accounts, and expresses disapproval of the conduct of the Post Office in respect of the misappropriation of balances therein mentioned, and it implies that it was the duty of the Treasury to exercise its power so as to detect and rectify the misappropriation of balances, and calls upon them to do so. This is a very serious assertion to make, and unless it can be supported on fact ought not to be embodied as a Resolution of this House. Although it is quite right the Treasury should be censured for failing in the duties cast upon them, it is equally undesirable they should be censured for failing in duties which really do not belong to them. Therefore, I must trouble the House with a few words upon the real duties of the Treasury. It is a Department having control over other Departments; but the word "control" implies, not that it is its duty to watch them and act the part of a detective towards them, but that whenever changes are made and difficulties occur and scandals are detected, it is the duty of the Treasury to devise regulations for meeting, correcting, and remedying them. In this sense only does it exercise control. It is impossible that it ever should or that it ought to watch over and inquire into the expenditure of the other Departments; it has no machinery for doing so; this was never considered its duty; and if it is to undertake it, the Department must be strengthened in numbers and have its organization remodelled. It would be a much more serious thing than censuring me, or any person connected with the Treasury, that the House should, under a mistake, censure the Treasury for not performing duties which really do not belong to it. As to what the duties of the Treasury are, I will quote a high authority—an answer given by Sir William Anderson before the Public Moneys Committee in 1856 in reply to Mr. James Wilson. The following are the Question and Answer:—

"Mr. Wilson.—Parliament having granted certain sums of money to various Departments, whether for Army, Navy, or Civil Departments, imposes upon these Departments the responsibility of spending that money, subject to the general control of the Treasury, as laid down by the Appropriation and other Acts? Mr. Anderson.—Yes; the detailed application of the moneys granted for these services rests entirely with those Departments. The control of the Treasury does not interfere with the incurring of expenditure in any shape—all that belongs to the Executive Departments; but if the Treasury thought that the Departments were spending—and they could only know it through the issues—more than they thought ought to be spent in a given period, the Treasury might call for explanation."

This I believe to be as exact a definition as it is possible to give of the duties of the Treasury. [Mr. HUNT: Does that refer to the revenue or the spending Departments?] It is quite general; it applies to both the spending and the revenue Departments. There is no doubt of this—whenever a thing comes to the knowledge of the Treasury it is the duty of the Treasury to act upon it. If, for instance, as frequently occurs, a Department should report irregularities, it is the duty of the Treasury to act by making fresh arrangements. If it should find something going wrong in a Department, it is then the duty of the Treasury to act; but the Treasury is not bound to exercise a strict surveillance or watch over the other Departments, nor is it provided with the machinery for doing so. This is a distinction I wish to impress upon the House. Therefore, it is not the practice of the Treasury to take precautions to see that any regulations it makes are worked by a Department; it is always assumed that the Department for which the regulations are made will give its co-operation, and the Treasury does not interfere or inquire whether its regulations are being complied with. For instance, in 1861, when Post Office Savings Banks were introduced, the Treasury made rules and regulations, and under the Duke of Montrose, in 1868, these were set aside without the Treasury knowing anything of it.

[Mr. ASSHETON CROSS: That was made known in a document laid on the Table of the House.] I cannot say whether that is so; but it was not actually known to the Treasury, nor was their consent invited. In 1854 an Act was passed providing for the payment of the whole revenue into the Exchequer; regulations were made by the Treasury for all these Departments; and these regulations are in force, and have hitherto worked satisfactorily. This being the state of the case, I quite admit that the Treasury is bound to act if anything comes to its knowledge, and to exercise control. Therefore, the whole question we have to put before the House resolves itself into this—Was there anything in the state of affairs detailed to the House which should have made the Treasury suspect anything so strange as that a trusted and highly-placed officer of great standing should have fallen into such an irregularity? I fearlessly say there was not; and if the House will favour me with its attention for a few moments I will prove that to be so. We had no Report on the subject; there was nothing given to us; and if we were to blame it was in this—that we had good and reasonable grounds for suspicion, not that more money was spent than the exact sum that was appropriated for the service, but suspicion that there was something wrong in the matter, and that money was being wilfully diverted from its purpose. What grounds were there for that? In the first place, one ground would have been if we had found that the revenue did not correspond with the estimate—if it had fallen much short of the estimate, and there had been nothing in the state of trade, or anything else to account for it. That would have been a reasonable ground for suspicion. But it so happens that, although there was a slight fall in the revenue in 1870, in 1871 it exceeded the estimate by £100,000, and so it did also in 1872. Whether that was a matter of accident or not I do not know; but there was nothing in the issues to attract our attention in that direction. Then we come to 1871, about which so much has been said. Mr. Scudamore then acted in a manner peculiarly calculated to disarm suspicion. He came to us with the utmost promptitude; he came as soon—even sooner—than the matter was discovered, because he spoke of £600,000 as the amount that had been exceeded, when in fact there was £300,000 of the money borrowed under the Acts which had not been expended. That cut down the amount to £300,000; and when we came to investigate, we found that it had been reduced to £285,000, which was the whole of the excess on this account. But we thought nothing of it. As I said before the Committee, there was nothing to excite suspicion, because the sums were large; the accounts were not, and could not, be kept up to the time for which the estimates were made; there was a good deal of conjecture, and no one knew exactly how the thing stood. It would have been unjust and unfair if at that time we had cherished suspicion against an eminent public servant like Mr. Scudamore. We have heard condonation talked of. I think there was nothing to condone. It was a thing likely to happen unless we could exactly adapt the expenditure—which was almost impossible—so as to eat up the precise sums already at their disposal. It would be most unreasonable to lay such a burden on public servants who were doing this difficult work. I confess it did not raise my suspicions, and if it had they would have been perfectly ill-founded, because I know that at that time Mr. Scudamore had been guilty of no impropriety, and had worked the matter fairly and bond fide. The next case is that of 1872. In that year Mr. Scudamore also behaved with the greatest promptitude. He was over-prompt, in fact, because he came to us in March, 1872, and stated the state of the account, when he only knew how matters stood up to the end of December. His statement was quite conjectural on that subject, and in transactions of such magnitude the sum he mentioned was not very large, or in any way alarming. There, again, had we nourished suspicions in regard to the statement of Mr. Scudamore we should have done him great injustice. Up to that time he had been guilty of no irregularity or impropriety. But, more than that, Mr. Scudamore, no doubt innocently and sincerely, did everything to lull one's suspicions to the last. At pages 12 and 14 of the statement of the Treasury officers, will be seen letters which he addressed to me of a nature certainly to lull any sort of suspicion. He said the re-arrangements were completed, the renewals yet to be completed of very little moment, and the extensions which remained to be carried out inconsiderable, and not pressing for completion; that an additional outlay of £100,000 or £150,000 would meet the requirements of the service in that respect; and that, as far as the re-arrangements and extensions were concerned, the capital account might be closed at the end of the financial year. Besides the re-arrangements and extensions there was nothing left except the payments under the arbitrations to the railway companies. Therefore, we had the strongest representation that, although he could not fix the exact amount, no considerable amount would be required, and that the matter might be wound up in the financial year. In another letter, written to me about that time, Mr. Scudamore promised to do his best to get the materials for an estimate of what the railways were likely to get, and to take care that the Chancellor of the Exchequer should not have to propose another money Bill except upon data that would be satisfactory to him. What did that mean? That money was to be spent in no other way than by the agency of that Bill. Did it not amount to an undertaking which would be understood between gentlemen, that not a farthing would be spent until the materials for another Bill were prepared. [An hon. MEMBER: What is the date of that letter?] The 22nd of March. It is not included in the Appendix to the Report of the Committee. I do not make any complaint of that, because there are matters in it which I can quite understand the Committee did not deem it would be convenient for the public service to publish; but I still think it was an error to omit that letter altogether. The Report he was writing, he said, would contain the data; it would be in the Chancellor of the Exchequer's hands in a fortnight or three weeks, and if he would wait till he saw it, he was sure he would be satisfied with the result. These, then, were the representations made to me—that the sums required were in themselves insignificant; that the materials for a Bill would be obtained as quickly as possible, but that there was some difficulty in getting them; and therefore the impression left, and intended to be left, on my mind was that there was nothing very pressing in the matter, and that a Bill could be passed any time when it was completed. Well, almost immediately after that a large measure was introduced on behalf of the Post Office for regulating the whole establishment last year. That was a matter of great complexity and difficulty, and the Treasury was occupied two or three months incessantly in coming to a conclusion upon it. I made allowances for the difficulties of that, and did not feel much inclined to press a Department that was over-worked, and had more to do than it could possibly get through. We did not receive the materials for the Bill, and Parliament being once up, we thought the matter did not press much, and that if it was brought in next Session it would do. I have not scrupled to take blame upon myself. I think we were lax, and did not exert ourselves to the full extent we might have done, judging by the event. Not that we had the grounds of suspicion, or entertained the least suspicion on the subject; but I think we should not have allowed ourselves to be so easily put off in a matter of this importance. I have no scruple in making that admission, and if the hon. Member for South-west Lancashire likes to put my admissions into Parliamentary language, I am not the man to vote against him. But what he has placed on the Paper is entirely different from that. The hon. Gentleman said I was perpetually interfering with the Post Office authorities, I am sorry to say my fault has been that I did not interfere enough. That is the fault I confess, and the only one that can be imputed to me. I was too loth to interfere, and was not stringent enough in my demands. As to interfering in any other way, I have not done it. It was absolutely necessary that we should have the information, and it was right that we should not come to Parliament without it, because we had been again and again to Parliament, beginning with estimates of £2,000,000, and we were anxious to get correct data and have done with it. The hon. Gentleman says we had to be consenting parties to all this expenditure. He makes an entire mistake. If he refers to pages 114 and 115 of the Report of the Committee of Public Accounts, he will see that the Treasury are required by statute to lay down regulations for the expenditure, and he will find that we have laid down such regulations; so that we were guilty of no fault in that respect. The hon. Gentleman also referred to the plan for making the Post Offices agencies for buying stock in the Funds for people. Now, so far from making any new regulations as to that, in defiance of the Postmaster General and Mr. Scudamore, no new regulations were made, and I did not adopt the proposal. That, then, is the case which I have to lay before the House, and I think they will see that, so far as the Treasury are concerned, with the exception of the single fault which I have indicated, there has been no cause of complaint as to its conduct.

SIR FREDERICK W. HEYGATE considered it would be wrong to allow the debate to close without saying how much the House was indebted to the Committee of Public Accounts for their inquiries into this matter, and to the hon. Members for South-west Lancashire (Mr. Cross) and Maidstone (Sir John Lubbock) for the admirable way in which they had placed the matter before the House. It would have been a serious scandal if the House of Commons, which boasted of its control over public expenditure, had passed it over in silence. As an attempt had been made to throw the blame on the Postmaster General, he must say that when he had occasion to confer with the right hon. Gentleman he had always been received with great courtesy and kindness. With regard to Mr. Scudamore, he knew perfectly well that had it not been for that gentleman's energy and ability the present excellence of the telegraphic system would not have been achieved. He did not wish to detain the House, but both Resolutions were so much alike that he could vote for either; but, for his own part, he had rather not vote at all. What had been said could not be without good results, and he thought the House had vindicated its supervision over the financial administration of the country. If his hon. Friend the Member for South-west Lancashire divided the House, he should certainly vote in favour of the Motion.

MR. OSBORNE: If I wanted any evidence of a decaying Government and a worn-out Opposition, I need not go further than the debate which has taken place upon this most grave question. A graver question has never in my time been debated before Parliament. [Murmurs.] Why, if we sit here in any capacity at all, it is as the guardians of the public purse. How have we guardians of the public purse conducted this debate? With a mealy-mouthedness, and with an apology from the Chairman of the Committee (Mr. Sclater-Booth), not for censuring, but for attempting to question, the conduct of the Post Office and the Treasury upon this most important and grave question. Now, the whole of this debate has rested upon the question, who are the responsible parties for having misappropriated nearly a million of money without the consent and with the utter ignorance of the House of Commons? Is not that a grave question? We are asked now—"Who are the responsible parties?" My hon. Friend who moved this Motion (Mr. Cross), in a speech unequalled, I think, alike for its moderation and its perspicuity, endeavoured to apportion the blame as evenly as he could. He says the Post Office is in the first instance to blame; but if I gather anything from his speech and the facts he has adduced, it is the Treasury, and the Treasury alone, which is to blame—having, as it has, the supreme control of the financial arrangements of this country. I think he might have fairly applied to my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer the inspired words—"Nathan said unto David, 'Thou art the man!'" Why, Sir, it is all nonsense, and worse than nonsense, for any hon. Gentleman to endeavour to put the onus on a second clerk in the Post Office. Mr. Scudamore, no doubt with a chivalry that does him honour, acted in a way that reminds me of the humble champion of the old Duchess of Marlborough, who, when a grave social impropriety was committed, said,—"Say it was I." Mr. Scudamore says—"Say it was I," and takes the whole responsibility on himself; but is that sufficient for this House? This House has nothing to do with Mr. Scudamore. He is not responsible to us. We ought to look to the heads of Departments; for if we are to shuffle off these questions by saying that a clerk in the Post Office, however distinguished and disinterested he may be, is to take the burden of the blame on his shoulders, there is an end to Parliamentary government. It strikes me very much that the Motion of my hon. Friend the Member for South-west Lancashire is as lenient a Motion as, under the circumstances, could be brought before this House; because it must be palpable to every Gentleman here that what would have assumed the grave form of a Vote of Censure in the month of March, dwindles down to a soft admonition at the end of July. The Government are so far lucky in the absence—which I very much regret—of the Leader of the Opposition from the opposite benches; but, at the same time, I think we owe a duty to our constituencies—at least, such Gentlemen as are returned by independent constituencies—and we ought not to make everything smooth for the right hon. Gentleman and his Colleagues, considering how soon we may have to account on the hustings for our laches. [Ironical cheers.] That, however, is not my reason. I am perfectly indifferent whether I sit in this House or not, and I am the more indifferent when I see the way in which this grave question has been treated by the House. As far as I can gather from the speeches of hon. Gentlemen, it appears that my right hon. Friend the Postmaster General is a very ill-treated individual. He is to be made a sort of Paschal Lamb on this occasion, and Mr. Scudamore is to be made the whipping-boy or scapegoat of the transactions. Is the House content to receive that? The Amendment moved by the hon. Baronet the Member for Maidstone (Sir John Lubbock) is a curious Amendment, and I cannot for the life of me see how the Government derive consolation from it.

"Strange that such difference should be Twixt Tweedledum and Tweedledee."

The only fault I find with the Motion of my hon. Friend opposite is that it resembles milk, while the Amendment resembles the water to that milk. The great defect of the Amendment is that it takes no cognizance of what has been done, and if, instead of "The House is of opinion that it is the duty of the Government to prevent a recurrence of such proceedings," it said, "The House is of opinion that it was the duty of the Government to take effective measures to have prevented such proceedings," I should have voted with the hon. Baronet. As it is, I can have no scruple—nor do

I understand how any Gentleman, unless he be a bigoted follower of the right hon. Gentleman and his harmonious Colleagues, can have any scruple in giving a vote for the Motion of my hon. Friend the Member for South-west Lancashire. I was surprised to find in the hon. Baronet's Amendment no mention of what he referred to in his speech. With regard to the blame imputed to Sir William Dunbar, hon. Gentlemen will find, on reference to the book, that he gave as a reason why the accounts were not looked to sooner, the circumstance that he has not a sufficient Staff to examine them. He actually wrote to the Treasury to ask for a sufficient Staff. Not a word about this was said by the hon. Baronet the Member for Maidstone. These are the red herrings which are drawn across our track. The real responsible man in this transaction is the Chancellor of the Exchequer. I sincerely pity my right hon. Friend the Postmaster General, because he is unable to make the true defence, which is that the Chancellor of the Exchequer entirely superseded him in his office, and that my right hon. Friend, with that meekness and gentlemanly feeling which characterizes him withdrew altogether when he found he was not communicated with, but that communications were held with his subordinates. If hon. Gentlemen will turn to page 78 they will find the remarkable opinions which one Colleague has of another. When asked if it be possible for any Postmaster General to be blamed for misappropriations if he were not communicated with, the Chancellor of the Exchequer said—"Of course, the Government cannot treat him as the head of the office, unless it is the will of the Postmaster General to be so treated." This is the right hon. Gentleman's opinion of a Colleague. The Chancellor of the Exchequer goes on to tell the Committee—

"If the Postmaster General chooses to transact business through his Secretaries that is his affair, provided that the Secretary has the power to bind the Department. That is all we have to consider. It would be mere pedantry for us to insist on anything else. Whether the Postmaster General does wisely by being in the background is a matter for him."

Now, in the teeth of all this, I think the House has been rather apt to take this thing as a matter of course. But here is a case of £800,000 appropriated by a clerk in the office with whom Parliament has nothing to do. And notwithstanding all that has been said against Mr. Scudamore—and no one doubts his honesty or ability—the only thing I regret is, that he is not at the head of the Exchequer. I think that we should then have a more efficient Chancellor of the Exchequer. I do not know whether Mr. Scudamore is a member of the London University; but if he will take my advice he will endeavour to gain a seat in this House. But at present this House has nothing to do with Mr. Scudamore. I go to the heads of the office—to the responsible people in Parliament. Now, it is in evidence that the Postmaster General has been kept in the dark by the Treasury. He has been superseded in his office. Whether he finds that consistent with his duty to the county of Limerick, that is an affair, as the Chancellor of the Exchequer says, for himself to consider; but as a Friend of the right hon. Gentleman I regret the position in which he has been placed, and the contempt which he has suffered. If this were a single case occurring at the Treasury, something might be said in explanation. But I cannot forget that no less than four Committees have been sitting this Session to inquire into the conduct of the Treasury, and there have been other important things besides to which I do not feel at liberty to allude. I am therefore of opinion that it is necessary this Treasury should be reformed altogether. I do not think that the Chancellor of the Exchequer has been particularly successful there; and there have been Chancellors of the Exchequer who, when such charges had been made against them, and with such a vote hanging over them, would not have conddescended to involve themselves in a fog of figures from the Treasury Bench, but would have thrown up the office in disgust. But that, as the right hon. Gentleman said of the Postmaster General, is "a matter for his own consideration." With respect to the speech delivered by the hon. Member for North Hants (Mr. Slater-Booth), in which he seemed to be apologizing for the Report of the Committee of Public Accounts, I was a little surprised that he gave us so little information as to his own opinion of these transactions. When the Chancellor of the Exchequer says he knew nothing about these matters, I should like the House to turn to the Report of the Committee of Public Accounts, page 96, and to read the letter of Mr. Rivers Wilson, private secretary to the right hon. Gentleman, addressed to Mr. Scudamore, in which it is clear that the Chancellor of the Exchequer was aware that the money voted by Parliament had been spent and how. But to-night the right hon. Gentleman says he knew nothing about it. With a taciturnity that does him credit the right hon. Gentleman never opened his mouth for nearly a year, showing that he deserves to be a Cabinet Minister, because he knows how to keep a secret. It is well known that at this period of the Session no discussion can be successfully carried on, and the best advice I can give the Chancellor of the Exchequer and the Postmaster General is to follow the example given in The Beggar's Opera, when Peachum embraces Lockit, and says "Brother, brother, we were both in the wrong." My right hon. Friend the Postmaster General has been singularly placid and uncomplaining. The Chancellor of the Exchequer has shown himself rather lax. Now, the laxness of a Chancellor of the Exchequer is, in my mind, equivalent to a crime. However leniently the House may be disposed to view these transactions there is a public opinion out-of-doors which will be anything but satisfied with the result of this debate.

MR. GLADSTONE: The time has, I know, arrived for a division; but I cannot refrain from saying a few words. My hon. Friend who has just sat down observed with lamentation the absence of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Buckinghamshire (Mr. Disraeli), but while he bewails that want he does all that in him lies to supply it. What I will endeavour to do, as far as time permits, is to refer to the mode of argument of my hon. Friend. One thing, however, I should do, lest I should forget it, and that is to join in the tribute which has been deservedly paid to the judicial conduct and language of the Committee of Public Accounts and of the Chairman of that Committee (Mr. Slater-Booth). The constitution and efficiency of that Committee are of the greatest consequence to the welfare of the State, and I rejoice to think that we can have a party man and ex-official acting as Chairman of that Committee, and yet we can have Reports proceeding from it the impartiality and ability of which is recognized by the whole of the House. I assure my hon. Friend behind me that I entirely concur with him in every word he has said with respect to the gravity of the matter in issue. I would not wish to take from it in the slightest degree, and I also agree with him that in the last days of July we do not discuss these matters with that energy and vigour with which we should have approached them in February or March. But let me direct the attention of the House for a moment to the course recommended by my hon. Friend. He lays the whole blame on the Treasury. He says to my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer—"Thou art the man." [Mr. OSBORNE: I did not.] He is going to vote for the Motion of the hon. Member for South-west Lancashire; but does that Motion say to my right hon. Friend "Thou art the man?" The Motion of the hon. Gentleman (Mr. Cross) is drawn up with great clearness and force; but in the first part the disapproval of the House is aimed exclusively at the Post Office. When the Motion refers to the Treasury the language is mild and supplementary, and yet my hon. Friend behind me records his vote for that Motion which pays no respect to his opinion. That is not the only flaw in the argument of my hon. Friend, and I will now state what I regard as a serious objection to the Motion of the hon. Member for South-west Lancashire. Speaking generally, I should say I prefer the Motion of my hon. Friend the Member for Maidstone (Sir John Lubbock), because I think it is more entirely in accordance with the spirit of the Report of the Committee of Public Accounts. At the same time, I make no complaint against the Motion of the hon. Gentleman opposite. But when I come to examine the terms of that Motion I find an objection arise which is certainly not weakened, but strengthened, when I interpret the Motion by the light of the speech of the hon. Gentleman. The hon. Gentleman has censured—and very naturally, from his point of view—the conduct of the Postmaster General, but he does not confine his Motion to the conduct of the Postmaster General. He extends it to the entire Department, and both in the interpretation of the terms of the Motion and in the speech of the hon. Gentleman I read a strong censure on Mr. Scudamore. To censure the Post Office is not the phrase that a man would adopt if he meant to pass a censure upon the Postmaster General exclusively; and the attack upon the Post Office distinctly includes an attack upon Mr. Scudamore. Now, Mr. Scudamore is a very proper subject for animadversion, if he has done wrong, in the Report of the Committee, but he is not a fit subject for the censure of this House. It is the political officers of this House who stand between the permanent officers and its censure. Mr. Scudamore has committed a great error, but that great error is, in my judgment, balanced by still greater services; and upon the merits of this case, I refuse to censure Mr. Scudamore. What I stand upon with those who are not so well aware as myself of the great services of Mr. Scudamore is that we should do wrong to adopt a Motion which does not confine the sweep of its censure to political officers, but includes within it these important permanent servants of the Post Office. The hon. Member for Waterford (Mr. Osborne) is going to vote for a Motion which does not censure the Treasury, which he wishes to censure, but he is going to vote for a Motion which does censure Mr. Scudamore—[“No, no!”]—whom he wishes not to censure. It is not necessary for me, after what has fallen from my right hon. Friends, to enter upon their case. Their acts have been presented and have been fairly and manfully accepted by the House in that spirit of candour and kindness with which the House, whether in February or July, invariably approaches a question of this kind. The House would do better to adopt the Resolution of the hon. Member for Maidstone (Sir John Lubbock), which is in exact accordance with the Report of the Committee of Public Accounts, instead of the Motion of the hon. Member for South-west Lancashire, which goes beyond it. The House is bound to take the utmost care that the phraseology of a Motion should be such as to avoid the cardinal error of treating the permanent servants of the Post Office as proper objects of Parliamentary censure.

MR. ASSHETON CROSS merely wished to say that he used the words “Post Office” as meaning the Parliamentary Representatives of the Post Office, just as in using the word “Treasury” he had meant the Parliamentary Representatives of the Treasury.

Question put.

The House divided:—Ayes 111; Noes 161: Majority 50.

Words added.

Main Question, as amended, put, and agreed to.

Resolved, That this House regrets to find, from the Reports of the Committee of Public Accounts, that the Post Office revenue and Savings Bank balances have been largely employed for the purposes of Telegraph capital expenditure without the authority of Parliament, and is of opinion that it is the duty of the Government to take effectual measures to prevent the recurrence of such a proceeding.

AYES.

Amphlett, R. P.	Hamilton, Lord C. J.
Anderson, G.	Hamilton, Lord G.
Arbuthnot, Major G.	Hamilton, I. T.
Arkwright, A. P.	Hardy, J. S.
Arkwright, B.	Hay, Sir J. C. D.
Aytoun, R. S.	Henley, rt. hon. J. W.
Baggallay, Sir R.	Hermon, E.
Balfour, Sir G.	Heygate, Sir F. W.
Barrington, Viscount	Heygate, W. U.
Barttelot, Colonel	Hodgson, W. N.
Bates, E.	Holms, J.
Bathurst, A. A.	Holt, J. M.
Beach, Sir M. H.	Hood, Captain hon. A.
Bentinck, G. C.	W. A. N.
Birley, H.	Hornby, E. K.
Bourke, hon. R.	Hunt, rt. hon. G. W.
Bourne, Colonel	Jackson, R. W.
Bouverie, rt. hon. E. P.	Knight, F. W.
Callan, P.	Laird, J.
Cameron, D.	Langton, W. G.
Candlish, J.	Laslett, W.
Cartwright, F.	Leatham, E. A.
Chadwick, D.	Lennox, Lord G. G.
Cobbett, J. M.	Leslie, J.
Corry, hon. H. W. L.	Lewis, C. E.
Denison, C. B.	Liddell, hon. H. G.
Dickson, Major A. G.	Macfie, R. A.
Dimsdale, R.	M'Laren, D.
Eaton, H. W.	Mahon, Viscount
Egerton, hon. A. F.	Mallor, T. W.
Elphinstone, Sir J. D. H.	Meyrick, T.
Fawcett, H.	Miller, J.
Feilden, H. M.	Mills, Sir C. H.
Fielden, J.	Monckton, hon. G.
Figgins, J.	Monk, C. J.
Fowler, R. N.	Morgan, C. O.
Garnier, J. C.	Mowbray, rt. hon. J. R.
Gilpin, Colonel	Newdegate, C. N.
Goldney, G.	Newry, Viscount
Gordon, E. S.	Parker, Lt.-Col. W.
Gore, J. R. O.	Peek, H. W.
Gray, Colonel	Pemberton, E. L.
Gregory, G. B.	Phipps, C. P.
Hambro, C.	Plunket, hon. D. R.
Hamilton, Lord C.	Powell, F. S.

Raikes, H. C.	Tomline, G.	Massey, rt. hon. W. N.	St. Aubyn, Sir J.
Round, J.	Torr, J.	Matheson, A.	Samuelson, H. B.
Samuda, J. D'A.	Turner, C.	Melly, G.	Seely, C. (Lincoln)
Sandon, Viscount	Walpole, rt. hon. S. H.	Miller, W.	Sheridan, H. B.
Sclater-Booth, G.	Waterhouse, S.	Milchell, T. A.	Stansfeld, rt. hon. J.
Scott, Lord H. J. M. D.	Wells, E.	Morgan, G. O.	Stapleton, J.
Scourfield, J. H.	Wheelhouse, W. S. J.	Morley, S.	Stevenson, J. C.
Smith, A.	Wyndham, hon. P.	Mundella, A. J.	Storks, rt. hon. Sir H. K.
Somerset, Lord H. R. C.	Yarmouth, Earl of	O'Conor, D. M.	Stuart, hon. H. W. V.
Straight, D.		O'Donoghue, The	Torreens, W. T. M'C.
Talbot, J. G.		Ogilvy, Sir J.	Tracy, hon. C. R. D.
Taylor, rt. hon. Col.	TELLERS.	O'Reilly-Dease, M.	Hanbury-
Tollemache, Maj. W. F.	Cross, R. A.	Otway, A. J.	Walter, J.
	Osborne, R.	Palmer, J. H.	Wedderburn, Sir D.

NOES.

Amcotts, Col. W. C.	Fitzmaurice, Lord E.	Peel, A. W.	West, H. W.
Ayrton, rt. hon. A. S.	Fitzmaurice, hon. C.	Pender, J.	Whithbread, S.
Backhouse, E.	W. W.	Philips, B. N.	Whitwell, J.
Baker, R. B. W.	Fletcher, I.	Pim, J.	Williams, W.
Bass, M. T.	Foljambe, F. J. S.	Portman, hon. W. H. B.	Wingfield, Sir C.
Bassett, F.	Forster, C.	Potter, T. B.	Winterbotham, H. S. P.
Baxter, rt. hon. W. E.	Forster, rt. hon. W. E.	Power, J. T.	Young, A. W.
Bazley, Sir T.	Fortescue, rt. hon. C. P.	Rathbone, W.	Young, rt. hon. G.
Beaumont, W. B.	Gilpin, C.	Reed, C.
Beaumont, Major F.	Gladstone, rt. hon. W. E.	Richard, H.	TELLERS.
Bentall, E. H.	Gladstone, W. H.	Rothschild, N. M. de	Adam, W. P.
Biddulph, M.	Goldsmid, Sir F.	Russell, Lord A.	Greville, hon. Captain
Bolckow, H. W. F.	Goldsmid, J.	Rylands, P.
Bonham-Carter, J.	Goschen, rt. hon. G. J.
Bowring, E. A.	Gourley, E. T.
Brassey, T.	Gower, Lord R.
Brewer, Dr.	Graham, W.
Bristowe, S. B.	Grieve, J. J.
Brooklehurst, W. C.	Grove, T. F.
Brown, A. H.	Hartington, Marq. of
Browne, G. E.	Henderson, J.
Bruce, Lord C.	Henley, Lord
Bruce, rt. hon. H. A.	Hibbert, J. T.
Buckley, N.	Hodgkinson, G.
Bury, Viscount	Hodgson, K. D.
Butt, I.	Holland, S.
Cadogan, hon. F. W.	Hoskyns, C. Wren-
Campbell - Bannerman,	Howard, J.
H.	Hughes, T.
Cardwell, rt. hon. E.	Hughes, W. B.
Carington, hn. Col. W.	Hurst, R. H.
Cartwright, W. C.	Illingworth, A.
Cave, T.	Jardine, R.
Cavendish, Lord F. C.	Jessel, Sir G.
Childers, right hon. H.	Johnston, A.
Cogan, rt. hon. W. H. F.	Kensington, Lord
Coleridge, Sir J. D.	King, hon. P. J. L.
Corrigan, Sir D.	Kingscote, Colonel
Cowen, Sir J.	Kinnaird, hon. A. F.
Cowper-Temple, right	Knatchbull-Hugessen,
hon. W.	right hon. E.
Craufurd, E. H. J.	Lancaster, J.
Crawford, R. W.	Lawrence, Sir J. C.
Dalrymple, D.	Lawrence, W.
D'Arcy, M. P.	Lea, T.
Davies, R.	Leemant, G.
Delahunty, J.	Lefevre, G. J. S.
Dickinson, S. S.	Leith, J. F.
Dixon, G.	Lewis, H.
Dodds, J.	Locke, J.
Downing, M'C.	Lowe, rt. hon. R.
Duff, M. E. G.	Lubbock, Sir J.
Edwards, H.	Lusk, A.
Egerton, Admiral hn. F.	Mackintosh, E. W.
Enfield, Viscount	M'Clure, T.
Eykyn, R.	M'Lagan, P.
FitzGerald, right hon.	Magniac, C.
Lord O. A.	Martin, P. W.

It being now Seven of the clock, the House suspended its Sitting.

The House resumed its Sitting at Nine of the clock.

SUPPLY—CIVIL SERVICE ESTIMATES.

REPORT.

CUSTOM HOUSE CLERKS AT THE OUTPORTS.

Resolutions [July 28] reported.

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That the said Resolutions be now read a second time."

Viscount SANDON rose to call attention to the difference of position of the Custom House Clerks at the Outports as compared to that of the Custom House Clerks in London with respect to the date of the increase of their salaries, promised in the Treasury Minute of November 28, 1868, and promulgated in the Minute of the Board of Customs of December 8, 1868. The noble Lord said, the question was one which he had felt great hesitation in touching, as he thought it, as a general rule, undesirable that the House of Commons should interfere between the Government and the members of the Civil Service, or that Members should bring before the House cases like the present, in which they might be supposed to be personally interested, owing to their constituents being affected; but being convinced that a wrong had been committed, and having tried all means of securing an impartial consideration of the subject, he felt bound to put aside his personal feeling in the matter, and to ask the House to express an opinion on the subject. The case was first brought under his notice last autumn, and he had tried in every possible way to induce the Government to reconsider the decision they had come to on the matter. They were first approached by means of a deputation, but that met with no substantial result. He then, in concert with others, put a Question to the Chancellor of the Exchequer entreating the right hon. Gentleman to re-consider his decision on the subject; but he refused to do so on the ground that he would thus "establish a precedent that whenever an improvement was made in an office, the Government would be bound to pay persons in the office from the time they first conceived the idea of making that improvement;"

whereas they based their case on an announcement of a Treasury Minute, promulgated officially by the Board of Customs. This answer was so unsatisfactory and so much put aside the real point at issue that he felt still more bound to prosecute the question. He had suggested to the Government that they should appoint a Committee next year to go into the grievances of the Custom House clerks at the outports; but the Government had seen fit to refuse to give any pledge. Under these circumstances, believing that these clerks had a real and genuine grievance, he felt that he had no other resort, except to bring the subject under the consideration of the House. He had no wish to attack the Chancellor of the Exchequer, for they had cause to be thankful to him for watching over the public purse; but in many cases the vices of mankind were merely the corruptions of their virtues; and he feared that the Chancellor of the Exchequer sometimes pushed his regard for the public purse too far. In the year 1868 the Custom House officers, as a body, petitioned the Treasury for a revision of their salaries, and a Treasury Commission was thereupon appointed, which made its Report in 1868. Upon that Report was founded a Treasury Minute, dated November 28, 1868. This Treasury Minute was promulgated by the Board of Customs on December 8, 1868, and announced that the Lords of the Treasury desired the Board "to make known to the officers concerned" the decisions at which they had arrived. It stated that their Lordships had recommended certain improvements and advantages with regard to the London clerks, and the Minute summed up to the effect that—

"The Lords of the Treasury have also desired the Board to submit a scheme for extending to the clerks at the outports the principles adopted by their Lordships in dealing with the clerks in London."

He could imagine nothing more distinct as an official promise than that Minute. That was how the matter stood at the end of the year 1868. In December, 1868, a change of Ministry took place. At that moment men of distinguished ability came on the Treasury Bench for the first time, many of them being profoundly impressed with the folly and ignorance of the party which preceded them; and also profoundly impressed with a conviction of their own superior wisdom and general qualifications. But what did they do? In the heyday of their enthusiasm they suspended the Treasury Minute altogether, supposing, he imagined, that their predecessors had unduly raised the salaries of the clerks, and a year passed during which consideration was accorded to the scheme of their predecessors. When their decision was announced it was found that they had increased, instead of diminished the proposed increase of salary of the London clerks, but unfortunately the year had not sufficed for going into the case of the outport clerks, who were thus again put off, after the Treasury Minute of November 28, 1868, had recognized the insufficiency of their pay, of which they complained in 1866, and after this Minute had been promulgated to them by the Board of Customs in December, 1868. After a time the Government agreed to ante-date the time of the commencement of the higher rate of pay to the London clerks from the date of the promulgation of the Treasury Minute of November 28, 1868. In 1872 a new classification was issued for the outport clerks, raising the scale of their pay; but when it came to the question of paying up the arrears in the way in which the arrears due to the London clerks had been paid up, the economical spirit of the Government stepped in, and they said—"No, you are not to have the arrears in the same way as your London brethren had them, because the full details of the increase of the London clerks were mentioned in the Minute, and yours were only directed to be made following the scheme adopted for them." He was not asking the House to consider whether the two Boards of the Treasury were right or wrong in saying that there should be an increase in the salaries, neither was he asking them to settle whether the Liberal Treasury had been right in paying up the arrears of the London clerks. He quite acknowledged that it was an open question whether the Treasury was bound to date the increase of pay from the date of the Minute of 1868, and not from the later date when they came to their final decision about it; but he contended that a distinct pledge was given that the same principles would be adopted with regard to those engaged at the outports as were adopted in dealing with the London clerks; and he would remind them that a distinct pledge was also given in that House that no one should suffer by the suspension of the Minute. He asserted that the question was simply one of even-handed justice between the London and the outport clerks, and he hoped the House would express an opinion whether, when once the arrears of pay, whether rightly or wrongly, had been given to the London clerks, the Treasury was not bound, considering the promise of their own Minute of 1868, promulgated to every Custom House clerk, to pay the arrears in like manner to the outport clerks. It might be said—"It is wrong to bring a case of this kind before the House. You should put all your trust in the Executive of the day, and especially put your trust in the Treasury." But, without any want of respect to the Treasury, or those who held office in it, he would ask the House whether the conduct of the Treasury of late had been such as to give the country general confidence in its management of these matters? He had watched the evidence that was given before the Committee with reference to the Civil Service Writers, and that certainly seemed to point the other way. ["Order!"] Well, not being allowed to refer to the evidence of a Committee that had not reported, he might cite the case of the Zanzibar Contract Committee. Surely the state of things thereby, and in many other ways lately, disclosed, afforded abundant justification for not placing implicit confidence in the Treasury; for it was extremely difficult to know who was the Treasury. Was it the Chancellor, was it a Lord of the Treasury, was it the Financial Secretary, was it the permanent head of a Department? Recent inquiries had shown how little concert there was in the Treasury. If it were merely the Chancellor of the Exchequer, we might have confidence in him; but it was extremely difficult to find out who it was in the Treasury that we were to look to. This was not a small matter, but a matter affecting the well-being of a large service throughout the country. We did not deal with our Civil servants in a perfectly just and liberal way. Civil servants in foreign countries were very far below the Civil servants in England in point of honesty and uprightness. The character of our Civil servants had been high; but, if in pursuance of a false economy, the dictates of equity and justice were put aside, a feeling would grow up which must have the effect of driving the best men from the service, and the consequence would be to inflict on the country a much more serious loss than could be sustained by paying them their just claims. He was quite aware that in bringing forward a case of this kind he ran a risk of being accused of talking for his constituents, but he entirely repudiated any such idea, and he felt quite sure that the House would acquit him of any such object. But if Members for the outports declined to bring forward grievances like this which affected the outports alone, who was to do it? He had tried in every way to get the matter considered without troubling the House with it; but now, to secure that the subject should be settled on its own merits, which was his only wish, he thought the best way of settling the question would be to refer it at the beginning of next Session to the judgment of an impartial Committee of that House, from which Representatives of the outports should be excluded. He left the matter now with perfect confidence to the independent judgment of the House of Commons.

MR. WHEELHOUSE said, this question was one of considerable interest, affecting as it did the rights of a large number of Civil servants. It was a question that seriously concerned the clerks of the outports and also the Government clerks in several other Civil Service Departments. The clerks in the Custom House had been promised and had received an increase of pay; but there was another class of clerks for whom he was concerned—namely, those doing duty in bonding warehouses, and such places in the several large towns in the provinces—take Leeds for instance—who performed equally important duties, and who were equally entitled to consideration. He did not see any distinction between them. The duties of the one class were equally as important as those of the other, and if there were any distinction it ought to be pointed out. The clerks of the port of London went in for an increase of pay, which was promised, and subsequently given to them, and they also sought to obtain the back pay; but the clerks in the Inland Revenue Department, whose duties were quite as important, and who knew and discharged those duties equally well, had not yet had their claims recognized. They only desired to be treated as the clerks of London had been treated. They considered that they were entitled to receive an increment of salary; and he submitted that whatever applied to the outports in an arrangement for an increase of salaries applied in an equally forcible manner to the case of clerks employed in and discharging the duties of their situations in the Inland Revenue Department. He knew of no distinction between them, the one discharging their duties in as efficient a manner as the other. The simple truth was, that efficient services must be paid for, and it was most unwise economy to starve servants—especially public servants—upon salaries with which they could only remain dissatisfied and discontented. He (Mr. Wheelhouse) knew sufficient of daily life to feel that such a course was nothing but a direct temptation to be careless of duty, and, he feared, often, even to direct fraud.

MR. GRIEVE presumed that, although the noble Lord had made no Motion, unless the Chancellor of the Exchequer gave a satisfactory answer on that subject, it would be competent for them to take a division on the Report of Supply.

MR. MACFIE said, he should offer no apology for taking part in this debate, and he regretted very much that no division could take place upon it. In the port he represented there were a large number of Custom House clerks, who had shown themselves extremely patient and well-conducted under the grievances they suffered. He could not help thinking that their claims had been shamefully neglected by the Government; and he hoped that now the matter had been brought before the House the Government would take immediate measures to do them justice, and thus prevent a feeling of sorness and discontent becoming rife among them.

MR. R. N. FOWLER said, it was a great hardship that while the Government conceded the claims of the gentlemen in London they did not take the same liberal course with regard to the outports. He hoped that Her Majesty's Government would early in the next Session take the case into their consideration; and, if they failed to do so, then he hoped the question would be referred to a Select Committee.

MR. ANDERSON said, he could not help expressing his regret that the noble Lord did not conclude with a Motion, because anything in the form of a debate in that House which could not be tested by a division was extremely unsatisfactory. He was one of a deputation who waited on the Chancellor of the Exchequer on this subject in order to represent the claims of the outport clerks to the arrears of the increase of their salary, and although he could not say that he was surprised—because he was not surprised at anything which the Chancellor of the Exchequer could say or do—he felt hurt at the peremptory manner in which he refused to interfere, without giving the slightest reason for so doing; or rather, the only reason was that it was a mistake to allow the arrears to the London clerks. [The CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER: No, no!] He certainly understood that to be the tenor of the reply of the right hon. Gentleman. He said it was a mistake to give it to the London clerks. He did not complain of economy, but he did of inequality, and was of opinion that if it were given to one it ought to be given to all. They might obtain equality by levelling up or levelling down; but, at all events, there should be equality. He thought this demand a perfectly justifiable one, and it was one which ought to be brought to an issue. If therefore the noble Lord should bring a Motion forward on the subject next Session, he would certainly vote for it, being of opinion that the matter was one requiring the urgent attention of the Government.

MR. CRAUFURD also thought this was a question on which the sense of the House ought to be taken. The House could not move an Amendment on the Report of Supply, but it was competent for the House to consider the Report of Supply a second time, unless Her Majesty's Government gave a satisfactory assurance that the clerks in the outports should have the same benefits extended to them that had been granted to the clerks of the port of London. He was one of a deputation that waited on the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and when he expressed his astonishment that a refusal had been given to the clerks at the outports on a mere question of justice, what was the answer? Why, that if they (the Government) were to concede the application, they would be setting up a precedent. As a matter of justice, a pledge should be obtained from the Government to give an increase of salary to the outport clerks. If the Government declined to do so, they would be "penny wise and pound foolish," for men underpaid could not be expected to work as men would when properly remunerated.

MR. PIM concurred in what had fallen from other speakers, and reminded the Government that it only required a sum of about £5,000 to render justice to the whole of this class of Civil servants. He hoped that the Government, if they did not make any promise now, would at least take action during the Recess, and prevent the necessity for bringing the subject before the House again. These discussions about Civil servants were not only unpleasant, but also injurious to the public service.

MR. BAXTER concurred in the last observation that had fallen from the hon. Member who had just sat down. There was a time when the House of Commons was regarded as the guardian of the public purse, and when the province of the Representatives of the people was to come down and check profuse expenditure. Now, the state of things was altogether different, and the present Government had every week during the present Session to defend itself against the continual attacks made upon the public purse. It would be probably necessary to change the Standing Orders; because it was intolerable, when the Government attempted to do their duty by keeping down expenditure, that they should be assailed by all parties in the House, and urged to act in such a way as must add to the public burdens. Both his right hon. Friend now at the head of the Local Government Board and himself had paid a great deal of attention to this question of Custom House clerks, and a great change for the better had been made in their position. A Return with regard to the principal ports of the kingdom, exclusive of London and Liverpool, showed that from the 1st of January 1858, up to 1872, or in a period of 15 years, the salaries had been increased 44½ per cent. When hon. Members talked of the increased cost of living, he asked whether in any commercial or manufacturing establishment the salaries had been increased to anything like that extent? They found that there were, as in all Government establishments, too many clerks, and that, in many instances, the salary was too small. Large reductions were made in the number of clerks in London, and the salaries raised; and he expected that his right hon. Friend and himself would have received the thanks of the gentlemen who participated in the results of those labours. But no sooner were their salaries augmented than they raised the question of back pay. ["Hear, hear!"] The hon. Member for Leeds (Mr. Wheelhouse) cheered that statement, as if there was a case made out; but the hon. Member did not appear to have read the Papers relating to the subject. In 1868, after some Memorials had been addressed to the Treasury from the clerks in the Customs, the Government then in office determined to inquire into the case of the clerks in the port of London. A certain revision was made, which it was intended should be subject to the approval of Parliament, and that revision, it was intended, should come into operation on the 1st of April, 1868. The Government, however, went out of office and the present Government, on succeeding, determined still further to reduce the number of the clerks, and they therefore suspended the arrangement which had been made. A new revision was made, and the Government thought that as the clerks of the port of London had been promised an increase of salary by the former Government, their new scale ought to commence, as originally contemplated, from the first of April, 1869; but in the case of the clerks in the outports, no such engagement had been entered into, and, consequently, the Government did not think that their salaries ought to be increased from the same date. His contention was that the increase of salary should date from the time that increase was fixed on; and, that being so, there was no reason why the clerks in the outports should receive their additional pay from any date earlier than that on which they had received it.

MR. HUNT agreed that they should not have these discussions on the Civil Service night after night; but that was not so much the fault of the House of Commons, or of the Civil servants, as of those who superintended the Civil Service. The Civil servants of the Crown were compelled to appeal to independent Members of the House against the decisions of their superiors in office. The question of revising the salaries of Custom House officers with a view to their increase was taken in hand by the Government of which he was a Member in 1867, and a small Commission was appointed to inquire into the whole matter. The Commission recommended a scheme in which the salaries of the London and outport officers were to be similarly dealt with; but the Government which succeeded them regarded the course as extravagant and suspended the carrying out of the Minute for two years. If the original scheme had been acted upon, the clerks in the Port of London would have been paid on the revised list from the financial year of 1869, and the outport clerks from the commencement of the financial year of 1870. This struck him as being a perfectly equitable proposal, and he thought the case would be met if the increased pay of the outport clerks were to date from the time at which it would have commenced, if the instructions contained in the original Minute had been carried out. The Government had not acted in this matter as private employers had been compelled to do in consequence of the increased cost of living in late years; nor had they on this question of date of increase acted consistently with their own conduct in other similar matters, as was shown by the course they had taken only on the previous day in regard to the pay of the constabulary in the City of Dublin. He thought that in this case the Government were penny wise and pound foolish. Their policy was to refuse these applications as long as they possibly could, and the consequence was that at last such pressure was brought to bear upon them, that they had to give way to a far greater extent than if they had yielded with a good grace at first.

SIR DOMINIC CORRIGAN maintained that the question before the House was not whether the pay of the Custom House clerks had been largely increased of late years, but whether the same measure of justice was to be meted out to the London clerks and the clerks at the outports. When a deputation of Members of Parliament recently waited on the Chancellor of the Exchequer in connection with this subject, the latter distinctly stated that the Government would not entertain the case of the outport clerks, because a mistake had been made in the case of the London clerks. The course of the Government was in this case one that any private man of business would be ashamed of.

DR. BREWER denied that the Custom House clerks at the outports were not grateful for what had been done for them; but they could not consider there was anything irregular in asking that the increase in their salaries should date from the same time as that of the clerks connected with the port of London.

VISCOUNT SANDON said, that having been informed by the highest authority at the Table of the House that he could not properly divide the House, as a matter of form, at this stage of business, he had informed the Government at the Morning Sitting that he should not divide this evening, but should only wish to get a discussion of the question, so that the Government might be induced to re-consider it. As a matter of personal honour he could not divide. He appealed, therefore, to the hon. Member for the Ayr Burghs (Mr. Craufurd) not to press for a division, as it would not be fair thus to steal a march upon the Government.

MR. CRAUFURD said, the answer of the Government was so entirely unsatisfactory that he should feel it his duty to divide the House on the question of agreeing to the Report of Supply, in order to mark his disapproval of the conduct of the Government.

MR. RYLANDS protested strongly against taking a snap division. There was a strong feeling out-of-doors in favour of economy; but when the Government were seeking, as far as they could, to promote economy, a number of private Members came down to that House, night after night, to press upon them expenditure which the Government themselves thought to be unnecessary. This question was one entirely for the Government; and when it was considered that in connection with these salaries there was an increasing amount of pensions every year, it was a mistake to say that the Government were paying lower than the market price for labour.

MR. SCOURFIELD said, the sum was not worth talking of, and it was ridiculous for Government to complain that hon. Members were forcing them to this expenditure, when during the whole of the morning they were complaining of their hands being tied up in respect to the expenditure of millions.

MR. CRUM-EWING maintained that this was a simple question of justice, it being unfair and unjust to place the clerks of the outports on a different footing in regard to back pay to that of the London clerks.

MR. BOWRING said, the Custom House clerks in his constituency asked, and with reason, to be put in the same position with respect to back pay as the clerks in the port of London. He would venture to suggest that the Motion should be that the Report be considered to-morrow.

COLONEL HOGG said, he hoped the Government would grant a Committee of Inquiry into the subject. In London there had been an increase of salary and the back pay; and it seemed to him that other officers with equivalent duties had a right to ask that their claims should, at all events, be considered, say at the early part of the next Session. He moved that the debate be now adjourned.

Moved, "That the Debate be now adjourned."—(Colonel Hogg.)

MR. CANDLISH said, the adjournment of the debate could not lead to an inquiry in the present Session. It would have no other effect than protracting the Session. Whatever could be done practically could be done next Session; nothing practical could be done now. The Government had fairly entered into an examination of this question. ["No, no!"]

MR. LIDDELL said, he thought the House was entering into a factious opposition; but the House was shut out from dividing on the question that night by the Rules of the House.

COLONEL HOGG rose to Order.

MR. SPEAKER ruled that the hon. Gentleman (Mr. Liddell) was not out of Order.

MR. LIDDELL said, that hon. Gentlemen wanted to carry their opinions into effect; but they could not accomplish that object by a division. He believed that the proper course would be to move next Session for the appointment of a Select Committee to inquire into the subject. These gentlemen, whose case had been so ably advocated, had in their minds an idea that there had been a breach of faith, and that ought, if possible, to be removed. It was mischievous to the interest of the public service to allow a feeling of injustice to continue in the minds of those who served the Government.

MR. SPENCER WALPOLE admitted the inconvenience that would result from a prolongation of this discussion at the present period of the Session, but pointed out that a single sentence from a Member of Her Majesty's Government, promising either to take the case of these clerks into their consideration, or to assent to the appointment of a Committee at the commencement of next Session to investigate their alleged grievances, would at once put an end to the debate. In his opinion, the Government were committing the same error they had fallen into yesterday, when, after they had resisted every reasonable representation which had been made to them to put the constabulary of Dublin on the same footing as regarded pay as the constabulary of England occupied, the Chief Secretary for Ireland came down to the House the moment after a division on the subject had been taken, and stated that the Government were prepared to consider the question. He hoped that the Government would put a stop to the discussion by promising to consider the subject.

MR. WHITWELL observed, that a Committee was granted to examine into the grievances of the Civil Service Writers. All that was asked of the Government was a promise that this matter should be referred to a Departmental Committee, or to a Committee of that House next Session, and he trusted that the Chancellor of the Exchequer would intimate the adoption of one course or the other.

MR. HUNT expressed his great disappointment that no Member of the Government had risen to state that they were prepared to consider the matter. [Loud cheers.] It was unfortunate that the Government refused to be guided by the expression of opinion which had been uttered from all parts of the House. [Cheers.] Sometimes sleeping a night over a question induced a change of opinion, and if the Government persisted in refusing to adopt the view of the House, perhaps it would be better that the debate should be adjourned. He thought that that would be a mild and indulgent mode of intimating to the Government the feeling of the House on the subject. He confessed, however, that he had still hope that the Government would relent.

MR. BUTT said, he should support the Motion for adjournment, for he thought the prolongation of the Session was a small matter when there was a question of injustice to be dealt with.

Question put, and agreed to.

Debate adjourned till To-morrow.

TELEGRAPHS BILL.—[BILL 262.]

(Mr. Bonham-Carter, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Baxter.)

COMMITTEE.

Order for Committee read.

MR. SCLATER-BOOTH complained that the form in which this Bill had been drawn was different to that in which other Bills of the same kind had been prepared, and he said he was the more anxious about this, because it was partly in consequence of the form in which previous Telegraph Bills had been presented to the House that there had been such confusion in the accounts of the Post Office. He did not see any reason why the Government should depart from the established mode of proceeding, which required that money for these purposes should be paid into the Consolidated Fund, subject to the check of the Exchequer audit. He doubted whether the right hon. Gentleman had considered the memorandum which the Auditor General had submitted to the Committee. The precedent of the Military Forces Localization Bill of last Session had been referred to as a precedent, but he saw no reason why, if the Secretary of State for War had a mind to commit the same irregularities as had been committed in the Post Office, it would not be possible for him to do so under the provisions of that Act.

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER said, the Government had considered this matter very carefully, and, after taking advice, had devised this scheme of having the money paid over to the Paymaster General. He was not strongly of opinion that that was the best course to adopt; but he did not think the proposal of the hon. Member for North Hants would meet the difficulty.

MR. BOUVERIE concurred in the remarks of the hon. Member opposite, and hoped the right hon. Gentleman would adopt the ordinary practice of having the money paid in to the Consolidated Fund, in connection with which there was always an officer to see that the money issued was applied to the purposes for which it was appropriated, and no loophole was left for such proceedings as those which the House had been engaged in discussing that afternoon.

MR. PLUNKET said, that from a remarkable Return it appeared that £20,406 was due and owing as part of payments to railway companies, and also an item of £87,200 as part of a larger sum of £1,250,000. He should like to hear some explanation of these matters.

MR. GOLDSMID asked for an explanation of the item of £230,000 for commutation of pensions.

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER said, that the railway claims were omitted from this Bill, and would form the subject of another measure. It would not be right to include them here, because the Government did not know the amount, and it would not be advisable to guess, because then they might prejudice the case when it came before the arbitrator. The commutation of pensions, amounting to £230,000, related to the persons formerly employed in the different telegraph offices, who had received pensions and were displaced by the Government taking charge of the telegraphs.

MR. HUNT said, that as there had been laxity on the part of the Treasury in recent transactions, the House would like to be informed what shape the regulations would assume.

Bill considered in Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Clauses 1 to 3 agreed to.

Clause 4 (Mode of issuing moneys raised).

In reply to Mr. DENISON,

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER stated that up to the end of September extensions would be paid for by loans, and after that time out of revenue.

MR. BOUVERIE moved to omit the words "Paymaster General," in order to raise the question as to whether certain moneys should be paid into the hands of the Paymaster General or to the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt. In all Acts of this kind for raising funds it was provided that all moneys should go into the Consolidated Fund, to be subject to the general order of the Treasury, and he did not think that this principle should be departed from in the present instance.

MR. SCLATER-BOOTH approved, under all the circumstances, of the introduction of the Paymaster General. All cheques on this loan should be drawn in favour of those who were to receive the money, and not in favour of the Postmaster General.

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER said, it was true that these Acts all went upon the principle to which the right hon. Gentleman referred; but the departure from that principle in the present instance had reference only to a small sum. He thought it better that it should be taken out of the hands of the Commissioners of the National Debt and placed in the hands of the Paymaster General.

MR. BOUVERIE said, he would not press his proposal to a division; but he must enter his protest against these departures from the constitutional practice.

MR. LIDDELL supported the view taken of the matter by the right hon. Member for Kilmarnock.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Clause agreed to.

In reply to Mr. GOLDSMID,

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER stated that a great many of the persons employed by the Telegraph companies were now employed by the Post Office, but great economy of labour had been effected.

Remaining clause agreed to.

Bill reported; as amended, to be considered To-morrow.

RAILWAY REGULATION BILL.

(Mr. Chichester Fortescue, Mr. Arthur Peel.)

[BILL 23.] COMMITTEE.

Bill considered in Committee.

(In the Committee.)

MR. DENISON considered it was to the interests of railway companies to do all in their power to prevent railway accidents, and thought a great deal too much pressure was put upon them.

MR. HINDE PALMER said, he did not notice that the "block system" was mentioned in the Bill, and considered it advisable that that system should be adopted as far as possible by railway companies.

MR. GOLDSMID was understood to say that of 31,000,000 passengers who travelled last year only one had been killed. He thought the constant pressure on railway companies ought to cease. He was enabled to state that the "block system," on the recommendation of Captain Tyler, was now very extensively introduced.

MR. DODSON asked the hon. Gentleman who had just addressed the Committee, from what source he obtained his returns of the statistics of the deaths that occurred owing to railway accidents —whether from the railway companies or from the Registrar General?

MR. GOLDSMID said, he had mentioned in that House on a former occasion that he had received his returns from the Board of Trade.

MR. DODSON said, that he had found, from the Registrar General's Report a year or two ago, that the deaths caused by railway accidents were many times greater than those given in the returns of the railway companies.

MR. A. PEEL explained that the Board of Trade took all necessary care to obtain returns of railway accidents, deaths, and injuries.

MR. ANDERSON called attention to a system in operation on railways in America, which was found to work admirably—namely, the passing of a very long rope through the carriages, the pulling of which rope, when anything wrong occurred, caused a large bell at the head of the train to ring, and thus give an alarm.

MR. MILLER said, there were very many more people injured, and many more deaths caused by railway accidents, than the returns indicated.

Bill reported; as amended, to be considered To-morrow.

EXPIRING LAWS CONTINUANCE BILL.

[BILL 261.]

(Mr. Baxter, Mr. William Henry Gladstone.)
COMMITTEE.

Order for Committee read.

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair."—(Mr. Baxter.)

MR. BUTT moved that the House resolve itself into Committee on that day month. This was a new system of legislation which had sprung up of recent years, to re-enact important laws in a Continuance Act at the end of the Session. Only one of the Acts which this Bill proposed to re-enact expired before the next Session. The Bill proposed to re-enact the Unlawful Societies (Ireland) Act, a coercive measure of great stringency, and the Elections Petitions Act for two years.

Amendment proposed, to leave out from the word "That" to the end of the Question, in order to add the words "this House will, upon this day month, resolve itself into the said Committee,"—(Mr. Butt.)—instead thereof.

VOL. COXVII. [THIRD SERIES.]

THE SOLICITOR GENERAL pointed out that nearly all the Acts which it was proposed to renew had been passed by Parliament upon the understanding that they should be continued from Session to Session until Parliament dealt otherwise with them. If the hon. and learned Gentleman opposed certain Acts being re-enacted, it was quite open to him to move a Resolution in any Session, which would prevent their being retained in the schedule of the next Continuance Act; or he could bring in a Bill to repeal the particular Acts. He hoped the Amendment would not be pressed.

MR. HINDE PALMER said, that many of the Acts proposed to be continued were of a highly penal character, and should be discussed separately and at a proper time.

MR. O'CONOR thought the continuance of these Acts was very objectionable, and the Bill should not pass without due consideration. He did not think at that late hour the question should be proceeded with.

MR. BUTT said, he would withdraw his Amendment.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Question, "That the words proposed to be left out stand part of the Question," put, and agreed to.

Main Question, "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair," put, and agreed to.

Bill considered in Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Schedule.

MR. BUTT protested against proceeding with the Bill at such a late hour in the morning. It would seriously affect the liberties of the people of Ireland, and ought to receive due deliberation. He moved the omission of No. 2, "Societies Unlawful, Ireland Act."

Amendment proposed, in page 2, line 15, to leave out the words "2 and 3 Vict. c. 74, Societies, Unlawful (Ireland)."—(Mr. Butt.)

Question proposed, "That the words proposed to be left out stand part of the Schedule."

THE MARQUESS OF HARTINGTON said, it would be inconsistent on the part of the House to pass a Bill in June giving the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland most extensive powers for the purpose of arresting persons supposed to belong to one of these secret societies, and then at the end of the Session to repeal the Act which made these societies unlawful.

Question put.

The Committee divided: — Ayes 72; Noes 7: Majority 65.

MR. BUTT took exception to including the Preservation of the Peace (Ireland) Act, as it was continued by a measure passed this Session.

THE MARQUESS OF HARTINGTON said, the continued inclusion of the Act would secure its continuance when the measure of this Session expired, if it were allowed to do so.

MR. HINDE PALMER moved to omit section 14 from the Master and Servant Act, the clause being that which affords a criminal remedy to a master for the breach of a civil contract by a workman. The working classes in every direction had expressed themselves strongly anxious for the abolition of this section. The Bill had been brought in by the noble Lord the Member for Haddingtonshire (Lord Elcho), with the best intention to benefit working men, and while some of it was unobjectionable this clause was felt to be an extreme injustice. While it gave a right of appeal to Quarter Sessions the workman might be imprisoned in the meantime, the magistrate not being bound to take bail, as he was under the old Acts against workmen. A Congress at Leeds, representing 700,000 of their body, had relied upon the interference of Parliament to rectify this wrong, and he should take the sense of the House upon it.

Amendment proposed, in page 5, line 20, after the word "Act," to insert the words "except Section 14." — (Mr. Hinde Palmer.)

Question proposed, "That those words be there inserted."

MR. BRUCE opposed the Amendment. At the time of the passing of the Act it was felt that there were aggravated cases which could not be adequately dealt with as civil offences. In the case of the gas stokers, for instance, who were sentenced to short terms of imprisonment, the public generally approved the decision. The law was a just and necessary law, and he would maintain it.

MR. NEWDEGATE said, he should be disposed to give magistrates a discretion in admitting defendants to bail, and that, he thought, would get rid of the harshness of the clause.

Question put.

The Committee divided: — Ayes 25; Noes 45: Majority 20.

MR. P. A. TAYLOR moved, in page 5, line 43 (No. 33), to leave out "34 and 35 Vic., cap. 87, Sunday Observance Prosecutions." The hon. Member said, that all the old tyranny of Sabbath prosecutions was revived under the recent Act with more than its former anomalies and absurdities. Under the present law the worst features of permissive legislation were exhibited through the police discretion allowed, and a cruel tyranny was enacted. He believed that the Act of Charles II. was wrong; but, at any rate, let them have it in a form in which it would press equally on all classes of society, and not oppress the very poor alone.

MR. BRUCE opposed the Amendment, and deprecated the contempt displayed by the hon. Member for the feelings of 99 in every 100 of the population, who simply wished to stop unnecessary and obtrusive trading on Sunday.

Amendment negatived.

Bill reported; as amended, to be considered To-morrow.

LANDLORD AND TENANT (IRELAND) ACT (1870) AMENDMENT BILL.

On Motion of Mr. Butt, Bill to remove doubts that have arisen as to the provisions of "The Landlord and Tenant (Ireland) Act (1870)," as to notices to quit, ordered to be brought in by Mr. Butt and Mr. P. J. SMYTH.

Bill presented, and read the first time. [Bill 271.]

House adjourned at Three o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

Wednesday, 30th July, 1873.

MINUTES.] — SELECT COMMITTEE.—Report—Civil Service Writers [No. 370].

WAYS AND MEANS—Resolution [July 28] reported.

PUBLIC BILLS—Resolutions reported—Ordered—First Reading—Duke of Edinburgh's Annuity* [272].

Ordered—First Reading—Consolidated Fund (Appropriation)*; Militia Pay Acts Amendment* [273].

Second Reading—Factory Acts Amendment [47], adjourned debate resumed and further adjourned. Considered as amended—Telegraphs* [262]. Considered as amended—Third Reading—Expiring Laws Continuance* [261]; Railway Regulation* [232], and passed.

Third Reading—Royal Naval Artillery Volunteer Force* [264]; Slave Trade (Consolidation)* [249]; Constabulary Force (Ireland)* [257]; Local Government Provisional Orders (No. 6)* [244]; Statute Law Revision* [240]; Sanitary Act (1866) Amendment (Ireland)* [266], and passed.

NAVY—ASSISTANT SURGEONS.

QUESTION.

SIR DOMINIC CORRIGAN asked the First Lord of the Admiralty, Whether at present Assistant Surgeons in the Royal Navy, even when not serving on Foreign stations, are denied the privilege known to be generally accorded to Assistant Surgeons in the Army and to Officers generally, of voluntarily retiring from the service; whether there is any limit of time to the refusal of the Admiralty to permit such Naval Medical Officers to retire, or whether they are liable to be forced to remain in the service for any number of years at the pleasure of the Admiralty; and, whether there are not at present Navy Medical Officers on the half-pay list whose services could be had to supply the places of Assistant Surgeons desiring to retire but refused permission?

MR. GOSCHEN said, in reply, that the first question was one of law. The Admiralty had full power to retain the services of medical officers, and that right had always been exercised with a certain amount of discretion. Retirement had been refused to three surgeons who had gone through a course of instruction for 18 months, because their services were required on foreign stations. He thought when a young man had gone through a course of instruction at Netley Hospital at the public expense, he should not be permitted to retire until he had rendered a corresponding amount of service to the public. On the other hand, applications to retire had been acceded to because in one case the applicant was an invalid, and in the other long and good service entitled him to ask for retirement.

IRELAND—THE COUNTY OF LOUTH.

QUESTION.

MR. CALLAN said, that in the absence of the Chief Secretary for Ireland, he would ask the right hon. Gentleman at the head of the Government the Question of which he had given Notice, Whether, considering the freedom from crime which in the words of Mr. Justice Lawson "places Louth in the first rank as a model county," the Government will any longer retain in that county an extra police force, and exact payment therefor from the payers of county cess, without at least giving them an opportunity of expressing, in some official or authoritative manner, their opinion as to the necessity under existing circumstances of burthening the rates with increased taxation for the maintenance of an extra police force?

MR. GLADSTONE said, he had not had time to examine the Question. He understood that his noble Friend the Chief Secretary for Ireland had not received the necessary information from there, and that he would answer the Question at the earliest moment.

MR. CALLAN gave Notice that he would repeat his Question on Friday.

METROPOLIS—HYDE PARK—BATHING IN THE SERPENTINE.—QUESTION.

SIR THOMAS CHAMBERS asked the First Commissioner of Works, Whether any complaints have been made to him of the limited area allowed to bathers in the Serpentine; and, whether he can arrange for more ample accommodation?

MR. AYRTON said, in reply, some persons had taken exception to what the hon. and learned Member called the "limited area" for bathing in the Serpentine; but he (Mr. Ayrton) ventured to think that, as the practice, scarcely decent, if not disgusting, of a number of persons bathing in the evening just at the time when a great number of persons were enjoying their leisure in the Park, was one that had better be discouraged than increased, he did not think that the area was of too narrow limits. At the same time, he had always been desirous the public should have facilities for bathing in the Park, and he had intended to make a proposal to the Government on the subject, when a lady who had long resided in the metropolis offered to make large baths at her own expense. Plans were prepared and were submitted to Her Majesty, who expressed great satisfaction at the benevolence of that lady in this undertaking; but just as the contract was being made, the lady unfortunately died without leaving any powers to fulfil her intentions. Her estate had fallen into the hands of the Crown at present, but was likely to be claimed by some one of those persons who always turned up when large fortunes were at stake. Whether the estate reverted to the Crown or not it would be necessary to give the question of bathing accommodation full consideration. If it did, he could not doubt that some part of it would be applied to carry out the intentions of the lady.

METROPOLIS—NATURAL HISTORY MUSEUM AT SOUTH KENSINGTON.

QUESTION.

MAJOR BEAUMONT asked the First Commissioner of Works, Whether he will permit the public to judge of the general character of the building now in course of erection for the Natural History Museum at South Kensington by means of photographs of the plans, or in any other way, as may be most convenient?

MR. AYRTON said, he would communicate with the architect, and if he found that a drawing could be photographed it should be done.

PARLIAMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE—PRECEDENCE OF ORDERS OF THE DAY.

OBSERVATIONS.    QUESTION.

MR. COLLINS said, he rose on a point of Order. A Bill, of which he had the charge, had been placed No. 21 on the Paper, while the Bill of the hon. Member for Sheffield (Mr. Mundella) had been placed No. 4, and he wished to know from the Speaker, Whether that precedence was in accordance with the Resolution of Monday last, by which the

Mr. Ayrton

Government were allowed precedence for their Orders on that day?

MR. SPEAKER read the Standing Order, and said that the proper construction of the Order was that the Government had not only power to place their own Orders, but those of private Members, according to their pleasure, and therefore the Bill of the hon. Member for Sheffield properly had precedence that day.

MR. HUNT asked the Prime Minister, Whether it was to be considered that the Bill of the hon. Member for Sheffield had been adopted by the Government?

MR. GLADSTONE said, it did not follow because the Bill referred to had been placed No. 4 on the Paper that therefore the Government were going to support it, or make it a Government measure. They might just as well say that any Motion implying a Censure, or a Vote of Want of Confidence in the Government, to which the Government gave precedence, was necessarily adopted by them—a proceeding which would be simply absurd. In reply to the hon. and learned Member for Boston, he might say that the Government had proceeded in accordance with the spirit of his (Mr. Gladstone's) declaration the other evening; but he was not, at the time when he made that declaration, aware of the large power which the Standing Order gave to the Government. He knew that it was the desire of the House that the Session should not be prolonged, and also that the Bill of the hon. Member for Sheffield should be discussed, and therefore he took upon himself to give it precedence that day.

MR. NEWDEGATE pointed out that the Standing Orders ought to be revised, it appearing that the Government had not only the power of giving precedence to Bills of private Members, but of displacing the Bills of other private Members. He regretted that the Leader of the Opposition had not taken a more active part during the discussions upon the subject, and hoped that next Session independent Members would exert themselves to obtain a revision of the Standing Orders.

MR. J. LOWTHER asked the Prime Minister, Whether what had been done was in accordance with the spirit of his declaration; because he (Mr. Lowther) understood that precedence should be given only to Government Orders?

MR. GLADSTONE said, it appeared to him that he had already answered the Question. His intention was to use all the power which he legitimately possessed; but he did not know at the time referred to how considerable that was.

MARRIAGE OF H.R.H. THE DUKE OF EDINBURGH—REPORT.

Resolutions reported from the Committee on the Message from Her Majesty [28th July];

(1.) "That the annual sum of Ten Thousand Pounds be granted to Her Majesty, out of the Consolidated Fund of Great Britain and Ireland, towards providing for the Establishment of His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh and Her Imperial Highness the Grand Duchess Marie Alexandrovna of Russia, the said Annuity to be settled on His Royal Highness for his life, in such manner as Her Majesty shall think proper, and to commence from the day of the Marriage of their Royal Highnesses, such Annuity to be in addition to the Annuity now enjoyed by His Royal Highness under the Act of the twenty-ninth year of Her present Majesty."

(2.) "That Her Majesty be enabled to secure to Her Imperial Highness the Grand Duchess Marie Alexandrovna, in case she shall survive His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh, an annual sum not exceeding Six Thousand Pounds during her life, to support her Royal Dignity."

Resolutions agreed to:—Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. BONHAM-CARTER, Mr. GLADSTONE, and Mr. CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER.

Bill presented, and read the first time.
[Bill 272.]

SUPPLY—CIVIL SERVICE ESTIMATES.

CUSTOM HOUSE CLERKS AT THE OUTPORTS.

REPORT. ADJOURNED DEBATE.

Order read, for resuming Adjourned Debate on Question [29th July], "That the Resolutions which were then reported from the Committee be now read a second time."

Question again proposed.

Debate resumed.

MR. GLADSTONE said, he hoped that the Report might now be received with the general concurrence of all parties, because it was desirable to avoid any needless delay in winding up the business of the Session, and the Appropriation Bill, which it was desirable to bring in as soon as possible, was a measure the obstruction of which ought not to be resorted to except under extraordinary circumstances. He regretted to say he himself was obliged to leave the House last evening at an early hour, leaving his right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer under an impression which he himself shared. There was before the House a Motion for the Report of Supply which did not admit of Amendment. Had it admitted of Amendment it would have been in the power of his right hon. Friend to speak on the Motion and likewise on the Amendment; but as it happened he had only the power of speaking once on the question, whereas there were two subjects on both of which it would have been right for him to address the House—the one relating to the subject brought forward by the noble Lord the Member for Liverpool (Viscount Sandon), and the other relating to the salaries of the officers of the British Museum. He left his right hon. Friend under the impression—and he himself concurred with him in the impression—that the proper course would be for him to speak when both subjects were before the House. Practically, however, he (Mr. Gladstone) understood the state of the case to be as follows:—Very many hon. Members of the House, and the majority of those who were present last night, were under the impression that in respect to the date assigned for the commencement of a particular arrangement as to the pay of the Custom House officers at the outports, those officers had suffered a grievance, and it was thought the subject ought to be favourably considered by the Government. The view of his right hon. Friend was not in unison with that of the House; but he would, when the circumstances of the case permitted, consult with, and state the view entertained by his Colleagues upon the subject. They were not at present cognizant of all the facts of the case in detail, but they would make them the subject of careful inquiry. He might mention that there was a general disposition on the part of his Colleagues to meet the wishes which were widely entertained in the House; but, as the information possessed by the Members of the Government generally, as distinguished from the Chancellor of the Exchequer, was not perfect, he could not state what conclusion they would arrive at. On the other hand, the noble Lord the Member for Liverpool would remain perfectly free to raise the question without prejudice, should he not be satisfied with the conclusion at which the Government might arrive. Under these circumstances, he trusted there would be no difficulty in allowing the Report to be received.

VISCOUNT SANDON hoped the House would allow him, though out of Order, to thank the First Lord of the Treasury for the handsome way in which he had met the question; but he should, of course, reserve to himself the full right of asking next Session for the appointment of a Select Committee to investigate the subject.

MR. SCOURFIELD hoped the claims of the clerks in the British Museum would also be favourably considered by the Government.

SIR JAMES ELPHINSTONE took occasion to advert to the extraordinary circumstances under which important matters in Supply were brought before the House. The Navy Estimates had not been considered since May last until half-past 2 o'clock the other morning, when it was too late to discuss them. He intended to bring several important subjects connected with the Navy under the consideration of the House on the earliest opportunity next Session.

Question put, and agreed to.

First Five Resolutions agreed to.

SUPPLY—SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.

CLASS I. PUBLIC WORKS AND BUILDINGS.

THE NEW PALACE AT WESTMINSTER AND THE EMBANKMENT.

(6.) £8,500, New Palace at Westminster, and Embankment of the River Thames.

"That a sum, not exceeding £8,500, be granted to Her Majesty, to defray the charge that will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1874, for the Acquisition of Lands for the purpose of the New Palace at Westminster, and for the further Embankment of the River Thames."

On Question? That this House doth agree with the Committee in the said Resolution,

MR. BOUVERIE: I think, Sir, there are some circumstances with reference to this Vote which require a little explanation from Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Gladstone

I understood the right hon. Gentleman the First Commissioner of Works to say the other evening that he was not responsible for the expenditure of this sum of money, whereas the House considers that he is responsible to it for this kind of work being properly done. It is a most extraordinary thing that the head of a Department should know nothing about the work undertaken by his Department. He is a Minister of the Crown who is responsible to this House in regard to the duties imposed upon him by Act of Parliament, and the main portion of his duties is the superintendence of buildings erected at the public expense. The right hon. Gentleman is clearly responsible to this House for the business of his Department being transacted in a right and proper way. This is a Vote for the commencement of a great building operation; but the Minister upon whom rests the responsibility of doing the work properly, gets up in this House and disavows having anything to do with it, adding that he is not the person to be applied to for an explanation. This is altogether a new theory of Ministerial responsibility, and is not the proper position in which the matter should be placed before the House. Suppose the matter comes up again, as it must do, and suppose the right hon. Gentleman still continues to be the First Commissioner of Works, and is called upon to explain either what has been done or what is going to be done; he would probably say—"I told you from the commencement I had nothing to do with the matter. It is true I am the First Commissioner of Works; but over these particular works I have no control, and in regard to them I incur no responsibility." If the right hon. Gentleman has undertaken to discharge these public functions which are cast upon him by Act of Parliament, he must discharge them to the best of his judgment, and according to his notion of what is right; but he is not entitled to stand up in the House of Commons and say—"I will do this work as a mere instrument of the Treasury; but I am not responsible for its being done, for it is entirely contrary to my view of what ought to be done, and somebody else must bear the blame, if any blame is subsequently imputed." Though this is a small matter, it shows the way in which the transaction had arisen between the Post Office and the Treasury, which had been discussed the previous day. The Postmaster General had certain public functions and duties to discharge to this House and the country; but another great Department stepped in over his head, and undertook the management of the business which he ought to have done. And when the Department had got the Postmaster General into a mess—which was to be expected from the way in which the transaction was conducted—we were told there is a divided responsibility, we cannot exactly say who is to blame, and that no blame attaches to anyone at all. I implore the House not to allow this state of things to grow up. The duty of this House is not to approve plans, or to constitute itself a Committee of taste. Its business is, as our ancestors stated, "to bring ill Ministers to account," and we can never do that, or keep the responsibility for bad work improperly done on the shoulders of a Minister, unless when we commence an operation involving the expenditure of public money we take care that the Minister is clearly responsible for what is done. Unless a more satisfactory explanation is offered than was given the other night, I shall, if I get any support, take the liberty of dividing the House on this Resolution.

MR. SCLATER-BOOTH pointed out that a sum of £35,000 had been asked for for the Embankment of about 200 feet, and he thought that that was an enormous sum for the purpose. The Chancellor of the Exchequer had said it was required for that purpose; but the right hon. Gentleman the First Commissioner had stated that it was more than sufficient, and he (Mr. Sclater-Booth) wished to know which statement was the correct one?

MR. GILPIN said, he should go into the Lobby with the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Kilmarnock if he divided the House, unless he heard a satisfactory answer as to who was responsible in the matter.

MR. BECKETT-DENISON said, there was a general feeling that the sum of £8,500 was not too much for the Embankment; but as to the buildings referred to, he wished to point out that they knew nothing of their details, nor of their ulterior object, and he thought that the House was entitled to more information respecting those buildings. It could hardly have escaped the notice of any hon. Member that there was a want of accord between the Treasury and the Board of Works. If the right hon. Gentleman felt himself at liberty to declare the real state of the case, it would probably appear that this disagreement was at the bottom of the explanation he gave to the House the other night.

MR. AYRTON: The Question is put to me whether the report in a newspaper of what I said the other evening is correct or not. After reading that report I looked at several other reports of what I said; but they so entirely differ from one another that it is difficult to say whether they were reports of the speech I am supposed to have delivered. What I stated was this—and I stated it clearly, because when the hon. Gentleman was addressing the House I interrupted him in order to make it clear that what I said was quite consistent with what I stated to the House some years ago about the Embankment. I then said I thought it necessary, in order to protect the Houses of Parliament against fire and other injury, that there should be a clear space on the southern side of this building, and that this space should be embanked from the Thames so as to separate this building from any other which might be subsequently erected. A Bill had been passed before I took office for reclaiming a much larger space of ground and for embanking that ground; but, in my opinion, it was not necessary to reclaim so much land unless the House desired to embark on what I may term a metropolitan improvement. I thought it better to take my stand on this—that metropolitan improvements ought to be undertaken by the Metropolitan Board of Works at the expense of the rate-payers. It was my opinion that this great city ought not to go to the Chancellor of the Exchequer to have its improvements effected, instead of carrying them out itself. Such are the views which I expressed to the House two or three years ago. Having stated that view I did nothing more when this Vote came before the House than repeat the opinion I had previously expressed—namely, that a certain portion of the Embankment mentioned in the Vote was necessary and desirable for protecting the southern side of the Houses of Parliament, and that any further extension of the Embankment and the purchase of land for building was a project disconnected with the Houses of Parliament, and that it ought to be so treated by this House. With regard to the particular Estimate, I stated that I had prepared an Estimate consistent with that view; and on the face of the Estimate I stated that a part of the Embankment was proposed for the purpose of public buildings. The Treasury, however, altered the Estimate, which was laid on the Table on the authority not of the Office of Works but of the Treasury;—and the Treasury has an undoubted right to alter any Estimate which I may prepare. It has before exercised that power without my knowledge, and such was the case on this occasion. I only acquired the knowledge of what had been done in the same way as every other Member of the House. Therefore, I stated that I did not hold myself responsible for this Estimate, because it appeared to be entirely at variance with the Estimate I had prepared. I had not changed the opinion which I had formerly expressed, and accordingly I disclaimed the Estimate. The hon. Gentleman who addressed the House the other day (Mr. Rylands) challenged me with acting at variance with opinions which I had repeatedly expressed, and his challenge amounted to a suggestion that I was, in fact, deceiving the House. I replied to the suggestion of the hon. Gentleman that nothing of the sort had occurred, for I entirely adhered to the opinion I had often expressed that it was the duty of the Office of Works never to submit to the House any proposition for the commencement of expenditure without frankly stating to the House the conclusion to which that expenditure might lead. On one occasion when Lord Palmerston was at the height of his power I nearly carried a Motion in a large House on a question of this kind, and we never heard any more of the project which led to that division. I think myself, therefore, committed to this opinion. And I think it essential for the due conduct of public affairs. I have witnessed in times gone by that the House has been induced to pass comparatively small Votes, and that the Government has afterwards come forward for further Votes on the ground that they were absolutely necessary in consequence of what had been already done. I have always resorted to the opposite course. I have always endeavoured, since I have been connected with Her Majesty's Government, that every transaction involving public expenditure should be explained fully to the House in the first instance. As soon as I took possession of my present Office, I drew up Instructions which were delivered to every person employed in the Office of Works, by which Instructions he was required to state in his estimate, not only the mere work then proposed, but every collateral work to which it might lead, in order that I might know the full extent of the expenditure which the Office might ultimately have to adopt. Now, that being my view, it was right that I should state exactly what I thought when my hon. Friend (Mr. Rylands) imputed to me a departure from the views which I was known to have entertained. I must now state my position in regard to the present Vote. I had to explain to the House, as regards the Embankment, that, so far as it was necessary for the protection of the Houses of Parliament, I thought it a desirable work; but that as to any buildings on the Embankment I did not know the nature of them, and declined to have anything to do with them. That, I think, put the matter plainly before the House. But the right hon. Gentleman (Mr. Bouvierie) says he cannot accept such a divided responsibility; and this gives rise to the following extremely complicated question:—"What is the responsibility of the First Commissioner of Works?" That is just what I myself should very much like to know. I am obliged to suggest this definition—he is responsible exactly to the extent and degree to which his communications with the Treasury make him responsible. I am unable to find any other definition of his responsibility, for the Act of Parliament under which his Office was established is so singularly drawn that I believe it defeats the chief purpose for which the Office of Works was established. Well, the legislation being of this character, the First Commissioner of Works looks in vain to discover what his responsibility is. In order to be responsible to the House of Commons for everything done in connection with public works the First Commissioner must hold his appointment under some Act of Parliament which gives him a power negative or affirmative in connection with public works, and which so vests that power in him as to make him the head of a Department independent of the action of the Treasury—as separate and distinct from them. But the Act of Parliament says the Office of Works shall do whatever it is ordered and directed to do by the Treasury:—therefore, the Treasury is by law an executive and not a controlling Department. The Treasury in regard to the Office of Works constitutes itself an executive Department, and when it does so you cannot have two executive Departments. You may have a controlling Department having a negative; but if it can also direct anything to be done with or without assigning any reason even to the First Commissioner of Works, it is quite clear that the First Commissioner of Works can have no responsibility in regard to what is so directed to be done. As I understand, we are going next year to have a Select Committee re-appointed to inquire how the public Departments are managed; what I have stated are matters of fact, to which I hope the attention of the Committee will be drawn. What I stated the other day, and what I now wish to repeat is this—so far as this money is required for the acquisition of land necessary for the protection of the New Palace of Westminster, and for embanking the land so acquired, I think it necessary and desirable; but I know nothing, officially or otherwise, of the object or destination of the land beyond that which has been purchased and is proposed to be embanked, either as to the application of the land itself or of the buildings to be erected on it, except what has been stated in the Committee of Supply.

MR. GLADSTONE: I have taken, Sir, the rather unusual course of presenting myself to the House, because, under the circumstances, and considering the nature of the appeal of my right hon. Friend the Member for Kilmarnock (Mr. Bouvierie), and the wide scope of the duties which he attached to the office of my right hon. Friend who has just sat down, I think it my duty, considering the position I hold, to give at once to the House my views upon the subject. In the first place, I must say I think my right hon. Friend behind me is perfectly sound in the principle he has laid down.

It is the right and the duty of this House to hold the Executive Government to account in the strictest manner in regard to proposals for the expenditure of public money, and on that point I shall endeavour to give my right hon. Friend those assurances which appear to be required by the nature of the case. Therefore, I shall not commit myself in any manner, except in the manner in which the whole Executive Government is prepared to be responsible. I shall, however, endeavour to meet the right hon. Gentleman's very fair and equitable demand. The House has just heard the statement of my right hon. Friend the First Commissioner of Works, which I will divide into its several parts. My right hon. Friend has stated—and I think in the exercise of a perfect right—that this is a question in regard to which he feels himself bound, and honourably bound, by declarations made on former occasions before he became a member of the present Administration. My right hon. Friend, acting with that manliness for which I must give him credit, and with which I may remark he constantly opposed me in this House while I was Chancellor of the Exchequer, set himself to maintain the perfectly sound principle that the metropolis ought to be called upon to defray the cost of metropolitan improvements. But it may be difficult at times to draw the line so as to say exactly what is a metropolitan improvement, and upon whom the responsibility as to such improvement should rest. I speak now as to the principle, and not as to the matter of fact. I myself, and I think my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in particular, and the other Members of the Government are entirely of one mind with the First Commissioner of Works upon that subject, they being distinctly of opinion that for metropolitan improvements properly so-called, which do not directly address themselves to the special duties incumbent on the Government in connection with the Government property and Government obligations, the metropolis ought to be called upon to pay. I must speak with frankness in regard to the other portion of my right hon. Friend's speech. I own I doubt whether my right hon. Friend has stated with perfect accuracy the law of Ministerial responsibility. I noticed when he said, in a passing observation of good humour, that he should like to know what the responsibility of the Board of Works was, some hon. Gentlemen opposite applauded and seemed amused, and appeared to concur with him in the idea that there was something cloudy in the matter; and there is occasionally an idea entertained in the public mind that there is a doubt about Ministerial responsibility. I do not share that doubt. Sometimes a difficulty will arise, as, for instance, in the matter we were discussing yesterday, when there is a subject in regard to which various Departments are called upon to interfere, and when the law has not defined with precision how the several duties are to be discharged. But when the law has spoken clearly, or when the practice is well understood, I have never found any difficulty in fixing Ministerial responsibility. In this matter, in my judgment, the Treasury is not an executive Department, but a controlling Department; but occasionally, and, indeed, frequently, there are things to be done in the multifarious concerns of the country in regard to which the Treasury is compelled to act as a Department invested with the initiative, simply because there is no other Department to do so. Still, this ought not to be done when there is another Department which is able to take the initiative, and it is not in the power of a Minister representing a Department to remove himself from responsibility for the public expenditure of that Department, by saying that it had been ordered by the Treasury. The Treasury are invested with certain functions in these cases, and in this particular one the respective functions of the Treasury and the Board of Works were very clearly defined. The Act of Parliament passed in 1867 authorizes the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Works and Public Buildings to acquire lands for the purposes of the New Palace of Westminster and for the construction of the Embankment on the north shore of the River Thames in the parish of Saint John the Evangelist, Westminster. By the 2nd section they are invested with the power and the duty of carrying the Act into effect; but the 16th section provides that with respect to money matters their action is to be subject to the control of the Treasury, and that no charges should be made by the Commissioners without the consent of that Department. Here, therefore, is a statutory power placing the matter in the hands of the Commissioners of Works, and a power is also placed in the hands of the Treasury to limit and restrain the Commissioners of Works in the exercise of the functions which Parliament has intrusted to them. And now arises the question—What is the responsibility of an officer of the Government who is invested with certain statutory powers? Is he simply to look at the statute, and is he by the grant of such powers exempted from all control and interference on the part of his Colleagues other than that which the Act of Parliament gives; or is he, on the contrary, subject to the intervention of the Government as a whole? I answer that question without any doubt whatever. It constantly happens that for convenience sake this House and the Legislature find it necessary to intrust the discharge of a particular duty by statute to a particular Department of the Government; but it does not follow on that account that the whole Government is not responsible. In regard to this statute my opinion is perfectly distinct. I hold it is not the Treasury as a Department which has or could have any power to take out of the hands of the Commissioners of Works any authority given to them by the statute; but I hold also, on the other hand, with regard to the First Commissioner—and with regard, indeed, to every Secretary of State who exercises statutory powers—that he must act as a Member of the Government, and be necessarily subject to the control of the Government as a whole. Therefore, I consider that my right hon. Friend near me (Mr. Ayrton), in the exercise of the positive powers given to him by the statute, is subject not to the control of a particular Department, otherwise than is laid down by the statute, but that he is subject to the control of the Government as a whole, and to no other control whatever. However, a question arises which all Members of all Governments have to put to themselves in the inner forum of conscience from time to time. If they are men of sense, as they sometimes are, they are occasionally obliged to forego their individual opinions on particular questions of avoiding greater evils, or less benefit than the, or think attainable. I apprehend that happens to all Members of the Government, and therefore it must happen among others to the First Commissioner of Works, and my right hon. Friend, by acting on the same principle, can yet act with the power and responsibility of the whole Government. Every Member of the Government may adopt a measure which is not that which his own mind would have dictated, and which may yet accord with the inner mind of the Government on the subject; but this does not exempt him from Parliamentary responsibility, which remains whole and entire; and Parliament has a right to exact from him a perfect responsibility for everything which is done in his Department, equally with that which appertains to him as a Member of the Government. After what I have said, I hope my right hon. Friend will not think I have done anything to weaken or extenuate the doctrines of Ministerial responsibility, or to evade the responsibility which rests upon the Government individually, and as a whole. With regard to the particular Vote before the House, the First Commissioner of Works is of opinion that there is a certain duty incumbent upon the House which involves a limited project of Embankment with a view to secure the Palace in which we meet from danger, and possibly also with reference to the beauty of the site. He thinks that beyond that the Government ought not to go. The Chancellor of the Exchequer, looking at the Act of Parliament, observes that the Act appears—and the question, I admit, is one of some difficulty—to give the authority of the Legislature to the execution of a considerable work, while it does not appear to contain that provision which some might think necessary for the division of the charge between the Government and the Metropolitan Board of Works. That involves a matter of very considerable difficulty, and one upon which no person can be greatly blamed for holding either one opinion or the other, but with respect to which the rights of this House are perfectly clear. I believe that the Vote which is now asked is a Vote which, so far as actual money is concerned, would be required by the limited view of the First Commissioner of Works. I do not know that it is precisely so, but it is substantially so. The Vote is within what the limited plan will require; but nothing can be done under this Vote which in any degree, great or small, will tend to commit the House to the larger plan. The question of that larger plan, which is of some importance and difficulty in connection with the terms of the statute, is one which shall be reserved entirely and absolutely for the future judgment of Parliament. That my right hon. Friend may fairly claim of me, and I give to him and the House the distinct pledge I have mentioned with reference to the execution of these works.

MR. HUNT: We have had to-day one more addition to the many curious revelations we have lately witnessed as regards the Treasury and its subordinates; but I think the episode of to-day exceeds in curiosity all those which have preceded it. I take no exception to the doctrine of Ministerial responsibility laid down by the Prime Minister. He says truly that any subordinate Member of the Government may be overborne by the opinion of his Colleagues on any matter under their consideration; but that so long as he consents to remain in the Government and acquiesces in its decision he must accept a part of the responsibility. The Prime Minister has alluded to the period when the First Commissioner stood up in a manful manner in this House and opposed him as Chancellor of the Exchequer on some proposal which he made. That, no doubt, was a very proper course to take so long as he was an independent Member of this House; but now we have the extraordinary spectacle of the First Commissioner of Works standing up from the Treasury Bench and protesting against the proposition made by his superiors at the Treasury and by the Government as a whole. In all the experience I have had in this House, I certainly never remember such a course being taken. The nearest approach to it was when the Prime Minister himself was continually protesting against the military expenditure which had received the sanction of the Cabinet of which he was a member. I am speaking of former years, before the right hon. Gentleman occupied his present position. The First Commissioner of Works says he sent an Estimate to the Treasury, and the Treasury, without consulting him, altered the Estimate, and that he is not responsible for the Estimate as it now stands.

MR. AYRTON: What I said was that the Estimate was altered—not that it was altered with reference to the amount. The Estimate was made with reference to the particular work which the Treasury desired to have constructed. But, as I said before, the Estimate was altered with reference to that work, and the matter imputed to me was that I had not disclosed the purpose for which the work was undertaken. I simply said that the Estimate had been altered, and therefore the charge as regards myself was without foundation. ["Oh!"] Perhaps the House will allow me to explain, as the right hon. Gentleman rather misunderstood what I said. What I said was that I did not oppose any part of this expenditure or impugn it, but that I was not acquainted with the circumstances, and therefore I expressed no opinion upon the matter. That was the fact.

MR. HUNT: I accept the right hon. Gentleman's correction, but it really comes to much the same thing. What I understand is that in his view the acquisition of the land required only a limited portion of the Embankment to be made, and that he sent in an Estimate to the Treasury with that view; but that the form was altered, and that he never knew it was so altered as to embrace the larger scheme. I understand further that he had no opportunity of consulting with the Treasury, and that he only received information on the point in the same manner as other Members of this House.

MR. AYRTON: The particular accusation made against me was that this Estimate did not disclose the purpose for which this money was required. In the Estimate I sent to the Treasury a Note was put for that purpose. The Treasury altered the Estimate, and struck out that Note. That Note had nothing to do with the amount of the expenditure for the Embankment.

MR. HUNT: What I understand is, that the right hon. Gentleman sent to the Treasury an Estimate with a Note defining the purpose for which the Vote was taken. Is that correct? [Mr. AYRTON: Yes: it stated the purpose.] I also understand that without consultation with the right hon. Gentleman the Treasury struck out that Note, and therefore altered the statement of the purpose for which the work was undertaken. We have heard that a certain incompatibility of disposition existed between the right hon. Gentleman the First Commissioner of Works and the Chancellor of the Exchequer; but I thought the interposition of a broad street between the two right hon. Gentlemen would produce that amicable disposition which would allow the public service to be carried on. What I want to know is, whether it is the case that the Chancellor of the Exchequer is not on speaking terms with the First Commissioner of Works? [Laughter, and "Oh, oh!"] Well, what is the revelation that the First Commissioner has made? What could be the relation between the right hon. Gentleman and the Treasury, when, without any communication between them, the Treasury altered the form of his Estimate, and that the right hon. Gentleman only learned it through the same channels as other people. Such a mode of administering affairs at the Treasury I never heard of before in my life. What is the practice of the Treasury? Is it that the subordinate Departments send in their Estimates to the Treasury, which exercises its control in cutting them down? But when any serious alteration is made by the Treasury communications are held between the Treasury and the head of the Department, the Treasury having the ultimate decision, and it is after those communications that the Estimates are finally prepared and laid before Parliament. In this case no such practice was adopted, and therefore such an exposition as that of the right hon. Gentleman might be left without further comment. But when the right hon. Gentleman stands up and protests that he cannot be held responsible for this Estimate, I will call the attention of the House to the form in which the Estimate is presented. The right hon. Gentleman is there described as the accounting authority for the spending of this money; and yet he stands up in his place and protests against any responsibility resting upon him with regard to that part of the Estimate applying to the project of extending the Embankment beyond where he thought it ought to be extended. I now leave the matter as it stands.

MR. GLADSTONE: I have to ask the indulgence of the House for a moment to say a word of personal explanation.

The right hon. Gentleman the Member for North Northamptonshire (Mr. Hunt) has found it necessary to illustrate the matter by stating that some seven or eight years ago it was my practice as Chancellor of the Exchequer to denounce the expenditure proposed by the Cabinet to which I belonged, and to deny my responsibility for it. I beg to meet that statement with the most explicit and unequivocal denial.

MR. HUNT: What I said was that the right hon. Gentleman was in the habit of protesting against it.

MR. GLADSTONE: And so I am now.

MR. LIDDELL said, it was due to the House that it should not be asked to embark upon this expenditure without knowing what it would amount to in the future. He regretted that relations of a more friendly character did not exist between the Treasury and the Board of Works. He had listened to the speech of the Prime Minister; but he had by no means made it clear what the responsibility of the First Commissioner really was. If the law were hazy the House had a right to expect that the Government would take some steps to make it clear and distinct. It was a sound principle that the House should look to the Heads of Departments as responsible; but if the Treasury had the power of controlling the expenditure or plans of the Board of Works that responsibility was taken away from the First Commissioner. What had occurred to-day involved a very important constitutional principle and was very deplorable in itself, revealing as it did a lamentable state of affairs.

MR. BAXTER said, that neither the buildings nor any part of the plan to which the right hon. Gentleman the Chancellor of the Exchequer had referred the other night formed any part of the plan for which the present Vote was asked. It was simply for the Embankment of the Thames, and that Embankment would be very much longer than had been at first thought necessary. It would now be nearer 300 feet than 230 feet, and would cost every penny of the sum now asked for. Under no circumstances would anything be done under the present Vote to involve the House in any expenditure except for the Embankment.

MR. J. LOWTHER said, he was afraid he was one of the Members referred to by the Prime Minister as having derived amusement from the very extraordinary scene which had just been witnessed. When the House saw considerable discord arising between the Treasury and the Board of Works, it seemed that the dramatist was not very far wrong in his idea that Ministerial existence was spent in a Happy Land from which, however, the ordinary vicissitudes of human life were not entirely eliminated. He would, however, say, with regard to the First Commissioner of Works, that he had never shared—he would not say the general, but the not inconsiderable condemnation which had been expressed in regard to his proceedings, a condemnation arrived at in ignorance of many circumstances connected with the facts of the case. He (Mr. Lowther) had had occasion before now to mark by his vote his opinion of the right hon. Gentleman's manner of proceeding upon certain architectural matters, and wrangles upon such affairs as lighting fires in hot-houses and gardens in the metropolis and elsewhere, and he believed that the right hon. Gentleman had always been considered by a discriminating section of that House—and a not inconsiderable portion of the public—as having watchfully exercised most important executive functions in controlling the excessive desire on the part of many subordinate public functionaries to gratify the hobbies, and even the crotchetts, of a limited section of society at the expense of the public purse. He thought that the right hon. Gentleman had been somewhat precipitately thrown over by the Prime Minister. The First Commissioner had stated explicitly and clearly his view of the doctrine of Ministerial responsibility, which had been confirmed by the Postmaster General and the Chancellor of the Exchequer at no distant period; and whatever might be the views of the Prime Minister on the point—and for the most part they were sound—he had not during five years succeeded in inculcating those views upon those Colleagues with whom he was most closely identified. He trusted that the House would not allow this occasion to pass without expressing its deep sense of the importance of the question of Ministerial responsibility. No more important question could be submitted to it, and he hoped that the House would not allow the Session to close without recognizing the grave public danger of allowing Ministers to shift from one to another the burden of Departmental and Ministerial responsibility.

MR. RYLANDS said, although on many occasions he had differed from the right hon. Gentleman, yet he himself, and he thought they all, believed that the First Commissioner of Works was one of the most valuable of public servants. He never lost his head, and before committing himself to any expenditure he always liked to see beforehand how much it would amount to. He trusted that this remarkable discussion would be attended with beneficial results. It had been found that the Chancellor of the Exchequer had great powers of silence, but a policy of that kind would not always be successful. The House of Commons was not likely to vote a large sum of money because the Chancellor of the Exchequer chose to override the First Commissioner of Works and then refused to give him any information. He felt much indebted to the Prime Minister for having taken a course which would prevent the House from being compromised on this Vote. His opinion was, that the Board of Works was not an executive Department in reference to its own business, but was under the control of the Treasury; and that if there was to be a control Department it should have distinct statutory powers to enable it effectually to control the expenditure and preparation of Estimates by the subordinate Departments.

MR. NEWDEGATE said, that he felt much indebted to the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Kilmarnock (Mr. Bouvierie) for having raised the question; because, although he (Mr. Newdegate) did not wish to undervalue the Vote which the House was asked to pass, a much graver question was involved in the discussion which had been promoted by the right hon. Gentleman, and that was, what was Ministerial responsibility? There was a collective responsibility on the part of the Government; but it would be a very great misfortune if, in that collective responsibility, the individual responsibility of Members of the Government were to be submerged or ignored. The Government existed through confidence, and it was a confidence extended to them collectively, and not merely a confidence reposed in the head of that Government; and as a Member of this House, he begged to thank the First Commissioner of Works for having refused to ignore the pledges he gave to his constituents, and his position as a Member of the House; or to evade, or seek to evade his responsibility for the opinions he had expressed, and by the expression of which he gained the confidence of his constituents, and established his position in this House; because he (Mr. Newdegate) held this—that when the right hon. Gentleman found himself unable to give the explanation which was demanded as to the purpose for which this space of ground and Embankment was eventually intended, the right hon. Gentleman behaved much more respectfully to the House, and much more consistently with his position, by at once avowing that he was unable to give that information, than if he had invented some excuse or put forward the idea of some project for the validity and carrying out of which he was fully conscious that he had no security to offer. Under these circumstances, he (Mr. Newdegate) rejoiced that this discussion had taken place. In his opinion, the right hon. Gentleman the First Commissioner of Works had vindicated his position not only as a Minister, but as a Member of the House.

MR. COWPER-Temple thought the House had been fortunate in having elicited from the Prime Minister so clear and constitutional a statement of the doctrine of Ministerial responsibility. The practice of that House had, however, more weight than any theory, and the practice of the present Government had differed very widely from the doctrine laid down by the right hon. Gentleman. The head of the Department which had charge of the Vote found fault with it, and the scene of that day was unexampled. When the First Commissioner undertook to justify the Vote, he should have acted on the theory of the Prime Minister, and accepted his share of the responsibility. The Board of Works was by Act of Parliament subordinate to the Treasury, and if the Treasury had interfered with the right hon. Gentleman, and if the Estimate was really that of the Treasury, why had not the Secretary to the Treasury taken charge of it, and explained it to the House? As it was, the House was between two stools, and had neither the responsibility of the First Commissioner nor the Treasury. It was the first scene of the kind the House had ever witnessed, and he trusted it would not be drawn into a precedent. The First Commissioner of Works should have done one of two things. If the Estimate was so contrary to the right hon. Gentleman's convictions, he should have declined to propose it for the acceptance of the House. If, on the other hand, he took the official charge of the Vote, he ought not to have come down to the House to complain of the Treasury, and endeavour to attract the sympathies of the House on the ground that he had been ill-used. That was not the way in which the business of the public ought to be done. Such a course deprived the House of its fair right to know who was responsible for the Estimates, and what was to be done with the money to be voted. The statement of the Prime Minister, that this money was not going to be laid out in the manner against which the First Commissioner protested, was satisfactory to the House; but this was a most improper way of bringing the Estimates before the House, and he repeated that he hoped it would not be brought into a precedent.

MR. WHITWELL said, that it was not the First Commissioner of Works but the Secretary to the Treasury who moved the Estimate. He did not see how the First Commissioner of Works could do otherwise, under the circumstances, than to say that he knew nothing about the Vote. He trusted that the result would be that these Votes would be drawn up in a more precise and definite form for the future.

MR. GLADSTONE: I will ask the indulgence of the House to say that I may have spoken rather too sharply to the right hon. Gentleman the Member for North Northamptonshire (Mr. Hunt) when I denied having denounced expenditure which I myself proposed. I intended to say that I had pursued the same course in the late and in the present Government.

MR. HUNT: I did not take exception to the right hon. Gentleman's manner as being uncourteous.

Question put, and agreed to.

The next Resolution agreed to.

(8.) £5,000, Supplementary Sum for the superintendence of Convict Establishments, and for the maintenance of Convicts in Convict Establishments in England and the Colonies.

"That a Supplementary sum, not exceeding £5,000, be granted to Her Majesty to defray the Charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1874, for the Superintendence of Convict Establishments, and for the maintenance of convicts in Convict Establishments in England and the Colonies."

On Question? That this House doth agree with the Committee in the said Resolution, MAJOR ARBUTHNOT thought the House ought to have further explanations upon the Vote before it was passed.

MR. BRUCE said, that Millbank Prison, owing to faulty principles of construction, cost £3,000 a-year more for its maintenance than a properly constructed prison would cost. £3,000 a-year capitalized would amount to some £90,000, and for this sum he would undertake that an efficient prison should be built by convict labour, and a valuable site of 24 acres would then be at the disposal of Parliament. With the ulterior disposition of the site he had nothing to do. Parliament would have the subject in its own hands, and was in no way pledged to make use of Millbank for the purposes of cavalry barracks, in place of those at Hyde Park.

MR. LIDDELL said, he had no faith in the value of forced labour. The proposed new prison might be cheaply built by convicts; but he doubted whether the work would be good work, and whether the prison would not in the end be more cheaply built in the ordinary way.

MR. BRUCE knew his hon. Friend to be one of the most candid men in the House, and could show him additions made at Pentonville and a chapel built at Portsmouth entirely by convict labour which would convince his hon. Friend that the work could not have been better done by the most skilled labour in the country.

MR. HERMON said, he wished to point out that convict labour in those cases was congregated. Did the right hon. Gentleman propose to bring up troops of convicts to build the new prison, and had he considered the difficulty attending such an operation?

MR. GILPIN, having watched the results of convict labour, agreed with the Home Secretary that the work thus done was equal to anything done by unforced labour.

MR. BBUCE said, all the circumstances of the case had been considered, and no difficulty was apprehended in the case.

Question put, and agreed to.

The next Eleven Resolutions agreed to.

Twentieth Resolution,

"That a sum, not exceeding £10,000, be granted to Her Majesty, to defray the Charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1874, for the enlargement of Dover Harbour," read a second time.

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That this House doth agree with the Committee in the said Resolution."

MR. RYLANDS said, the Vote was brought forward late on Monday night, or rather Tuesday morning, and it was only by mistake that a division was not then taken upon it. He thought no sufficient excuse had been offered by the Government for having put off to this late period of the Session a Vote of this character, and he objected to the large expenditure which the project was likely to involve. The history of it was this—Originally a Bill was prepared by the Dover Harbour Board, by which certain improvements were to be carried out for the benefit of the trade of the port and of railway companies who had their termini at Dover. The Bill came under the notice of the Admiralty and War Departments, who thought it afforded them an opportunity of reviving an old scheme for making a large harbour of refuge and strengthening the approaches to Dover. Two eminent engineers—Mr. Hawkshaw and Sir Andrew Clarke—were engaged to report on the subject. Their estimate was that the scheme would cost some £850,000, of which the South Eastern and the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Companies were to bear a certain proportion. A most absurd balance-sheet was prepared by the Harbour Board of their estimated receipts and expenses, and it showed that in the course of 20 years they would have a surplus, in addition to paying interest to the amount of £30,000, of £60,000 a-year. The Treassury condemned these calculations as being delusive. They also condemned the scheme, on the ground that the railway companies had not agreed to terms which would render them contributory parties; and on the ground that it was immature. However, on June 13, 10 days after pronouncing this condemnation, without any change of circumstances meanwhile, the Treasury assented to the scheme, apparently for no other reason than that the War Office, the Admiralty, and the Board of Trade had sanctioned it. This was an instance of the weakness of Treasury control. The Treasury were pertinacious in small matters; they tried the temper of the House by this pertinacity in small things; and it was therefore most disappointing that the Department should allow their convictions to be over-ruled, and that the Government should at the end of July place upon the Table an Estimate for £10,000, which would commit the House to an expenditure of at least £850,000, and in all probability of a much larger sum. He would express no opinion upon the merits of the scheme; but upon the ground that according to the Treasury's own admission the scheme was immature and the Estimates unreliable, he appealed to the Government to postpone the Estimate until next Session, when there would be an opportunity of discussing it.

COLONEL BARTTELLOT said, he thought the Government could have no difficulty in coming to the conclusion advised by the hon. Member for Warrington. Since this Vote had been determined upon, some definite plan must have been formed in reference to the scheme by the heads of the Admiralty, the War Department, and the Board of Trade; and, if so, the whole plan should be laid on the Table. That should have been done, in fact, at the commencement of the Session, and he protested against the course which the Government were taking in the matter. The House ought not to be asked to vote £10,000 in this manner for a work which would cost £850,000, and might, before its completion, cost £1,850,000, but ought to have a definite plan before it to decide upon. He protested against a subject of this importance being brought forward at the very end of the Session.

MR. CHICHESTER FORTESCUE said, that the hon. Member for Warrington (Mr. Rylands) and the hon. and gallant Member for West Sussex (Colonel Barttelot) could not have read the Report and studied the plans for the extension of the harbour at Dover, which had been laid before Parliament for the last 10 days, or they would not have spoken on the subject as they had. That Report and those plans were the fruit of the labours of Mr. Hawkshaw and Sir Andrew Clarke. There could be no higher authorities. The latter had carried out most important harbour works; his estimates had never been exceeded, and he had every confidence that he had not made any miscalculation in the Estimate before the House. The reason why the Vote had been brought forward so late in the Session was, that a private Bill had been introduced dealing with Dover Harbour from the point of view of private interest. The three Departments were thus compelled to look into the matter and see what should be done; and they were unwilling year after year to continue what might be called a dog-in-the-manger policy, by raising objections to private schemes for improving Dover Harbour, without being able, on the part of the Government, to suggest any plan of their own. The negotiations entered into with the promoters of the Private Bill led to a prolonged correspondence, and necessarily delayed the Vote. With regard to the resources of the Dover Harbour Board, upon which it was proposed that a loan should be made by the Public Works Loan Commissioners, it was intended to increase those funds by enabling a passenger duty to be levied upon passengers making use of Dover Harbour. The Treasury had satisfied themselves that the surplus revenue of the Harbour Board would enable the Public Works Loan Commissioners to advance a very large portion of the funds required for the construction of this work. Parliament had already laid out £750,000 upon the Admiralty Pier at Dover, which was only a fragment of the intended works, and supplied only a partial advantage to the harbour. He believed that from every point of view it was desirable, in the public interest, that the scheme now proposed should be carried out through the instrumentality of the Dover Harbour Board, and it would be a pity not to make a start in the present year.

MR. COLLINS said, he wished the House to pause before granting the Vote. In the case of the Harbour of Alderney, it was only to cost £500,000, but in the end the actual expenditure upon the work was near £2,000,000; and now they had to choose whether they should let the harbour go to decay, blow it up, or put it in repair. That experience should teach them to be careful how they embarked in a similar course of expenditure; and he urged that the Government should not persevere with this scheme at the present period of the Session.

MR. KINNAIRD supported the Vote, knowing that there was a most anxious desire on the part of France to improve the Channel communication, and when so small a sum was asked for to commence the work he did not think the policy of delay was a wise one. He thought the country would support the House in endeavouring to improve the means of communication between the two countries. With regard to the works at Alderney, he thought it would be cheaper to lay out more money upon the harbour there, so as to make it effective, than to blow it up.

MR. R. N. FOWLER said, the French Government, if they were so anxious to improve the communication between the two countries, should set us the example by improving their own harbours. You could get into Dover at any time of the tide, but not into Calais or Boulogne. This was a most important matter, and as it would involve a vast expenditure he did not think the House ought to proceed with it on almost the last day of the Session.

MR. BECKETT-DENISON reminded the House that the proposed works had nothing to do with the Admiralty Pier, which was now unfinished, but formed part of an entirely new scheme. In his opinion, the plans required more mature examination than they had yet received, for the Correspondence showed that up to a very late date the authorities themselves had not come to a conclusion as to what was the best scheme. From every point of view it was important that Dover should be made a first-class harbour; but at this late period of the Session it would be well for the Government to withdraw what seemed to him to be a crude and ill-digested proposal.

MR. GOSCHEN, in reference to the assertion that the scheme had not received the mature attention of the Government, said, it had received the most earnest and accurate attention of the authorities engaged; and, speaking for the Admiralty, he would say that they attached the greatest importance to the carrying out of this plan. The Government thought it to be their duty to construct a harbour which would not only serve for naval purposes, but facilitate communication between this country and France; an object, he need scarcely say, most earnestly desired. The Government were not proposing a new scheme; but they were substituting a new terminus for the work which was originally designed. It had always been contemplated that the harbour was to have two piers, the Eastern and the Western. The Western pier had been completed; the Eastern remained to be done. Various plans had been proposed for improving Dover Harbour for commercial purposes; but the Admiralty and the War Office were under the disagreeable necessity of rejecting them, because they interfered with the completion of the Admiralty Pier. Under these circumstances, the Government thought it their duty to propose a plan which would combine the double object, and it had received the sanction of the local authorities and the railway companies, as also that of eminent engineers and the Hydrographer of the Admiralty. With respect to finance, the sum to be contributed by the public funds would not be considerable, as it would be supplemented by contributions from harbour dues and from the railway companies, and also from a passenger tax. He trusted the works would not be deferred until next year.

MAJOR DICKSON expressed a hope that, as the proposed expenditure would be money well laid out, and absolutely necessary, in the interests of the town of Dover and of the navy and merchant shipping of the country, the Vote would receive the sanction of the House.

SIR JOHN HAY believed that the Public Works Loan Commissioners, of which body he was a member, had made no Report upon the subject of the security for advances to be made for the completion of the work. [Mr. CHICHESTER FORTESCUE said they had not.] The House, then, was now called upon, in the absence of full information, to sanction a small loan; but it was one which involved the ultimate expenditure of £850,000. For his part, he thought, however advantageous it might be to complete Dover Harbour, it would be wiser to defer the Vote till next year.

MR. W. H. SMITH thought it very unwise to impose restrictions upon the passenger traffic between France and England, and inquired what the amount of the passenger tax would be?

MR. WHITWELL also thought the House should be informed what the passenger tax would amount to, and whether a fixed revenue would be paid by the railway companies?

MR. J. LOWTHER said, that according to the new view of Ministerial responsibility, the Government were not bound by the views of the First Lord of the Admiralty. He did not object to the passenger tax, and was not unfavourable to the Vote; but he thought the House should be informed to what extent it was proposed to tax passengers.

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER said, it was stated in the Treasury letter which was on the Table with the other Papers that the passenger tax would amount to 1s. a-head—6d. only, however, to be levied after the completion of the landing jetty, and the 1s. to be deferred until the completion of the works. It was not intended that the railway companies should escape from contributing to the expense.

MR. HUNT thought even 6d. a very high passenger tax, and hoped the House would hesitate before they sanctioned a scheme which involved such an impost.

MR. MILLER strongly recommended the House to be cautious before they hurriedly assented to a Vote which involved so many serious considerations.

MR. ILLINGWORTH gathered from the smallness of the Vote that the object in view was not so much to carry on the works as to commit the House to the future expenditure which those works involved. As to reference about Alderney Harbour, it was commenced in the days of a generation now passing away. If it were intended to secure peace by increasing the means of communication between this country and the Continent, the object was praiseworthy; but he would suggest that the Vote should be postponed.

MR. HERMON observed, that the passenger tax would be an indirect way of taxing French shipping, and would probably interfere with the Treaty of Commerce.

Question put.

The House divided:—Ayes 61; Noes 60: Majority 1.

The next Two Resolutions agreed to.

SUPPLY—NAVY ESTIMATES.

(23.) £167,740, Freight of ships, &c.

"That a sum, not exceeding £167,740 be granted to Her Majesty, to defray the expense for the Freight of Ships, for the Victualling and for the Conveyance of Troops, which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1874."

On Question? That this House doth agree with the Committee in the said Resolution, MAJOR ARBUTHNOT said, that owing to certain regiments not having been relieved according to the Queen's Regulations, they had suffered great hardships in the passage home from North America. He had been informed that the thermometer stood much below 23 degrees, the point mentioned as the lowest reached during the voyage by his right hon. Friend opposite the Secretary to the Admiralty, in reply to a Question of his; and, indeed, he had seen the transport ship on her arrival covered with many tons of ice. He had been informed that in the daytime the temperature was below zero, and at night it must have been much lower. He hoped that when the Himalaya returned from the Gold Coast inquiries would be made into the matter. Ministers ought to impress on those who prepared their Answers to Questions put in that House the desirability of not treating them as if it did not signify what answers were given.

MR. GOSCHEN said, he had the greatest reliance on the credibility and honesty of the gallant Admiral who, at his request, investigated the case and gave him information, and he could assure the hon. and gallant Gentleman that Heads of Departments who supplied Ministers with answers were quite sensible of the necessity of candour and truth. It was not right, therefore, that such imputations should be cast on them. What the explanation of the discrepancy as to temperature might be he could not say; but there was no desire to throw dust in the eyes of the House. The greatest care was taken with respect to the transport of troops at the proper season and to the comfort of the troops.

LORD ELCHO remarked that the House had nothing to do with the sources of the information supplied by the Heads of Departments in the House. Those Heads alone were responsible, and not their subordinates.

MR. GOSCHEN concurred in this, explaining that his remark had been elicited by the hon. and gallant Member's wish to acquit himself at the expense of his subordinates.

LORD ELCHO asked whether the question of placing the transport service under the War Office was under consideration, and whether the Resolution of the House that soldiers under 20 should not be sent to India had been acted upon?

SIR HENRY STORKS replied that the complicated question of the transport service was under the consideration both of the War Office and the Admiralty. The Horse Guards had, to the best of their ability, taken care that no man under 20 embarked for India.

MAJOR ARBUTHNOT disclaimed any reflection on the truthfulness of subordinates preparing answers, and any wish to fix the responsibility on them.

Question put, and agreed to.

(24.) £12,000, Supplementary Sum, Navy (Scientific Branch).

"That a Supplementary Sum, not exceeding £12,000, be granted to Her Majesty, to defray the expenses of the Scientific Branch of the Navy which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1874."

On Question? That this House doth agree with the Committee in the said Resolution,

LORD ELCHO called attention to the Vote of £4,000 for cases for naval models to be transferred from South Kensington to Greenwich. He expressed a hope that the models should be complete, and was advertizing to the mode of working the guns of the Devastation by hydraulic pressure, when

MR. SPEAKER said, the noble Lord could not find on the Vote a discussion on the guns of the Devastation. Among the items of the Vote was a sum of £4,000 for supplying cases for models; but it was not open to the noble Lord upon such a Vote to discuss the structure of guns.

LORD ELCHO, after alluding to the few opportunities now enjoyed by private Members of raising discussions, asked the right hon. Gentleman whether he was out of Order in discussing the principle of working guns?

MR. SPEAKER said, that the Vote being for cases for naval models, the noble Lord was out of Order in discussing upon a Vote of that limited character the system of gunnery in the Navy.

LORD ELCHO thereupon stated that he should resist any attempt next Session to renew the Resolution as to Motions on going into Committee of Supply.

MR. GOSCHEN said, every care would be taken to make the collection at Greenwich as complete and satisfactory as possible.

Question put, and agreed to.

Subsequent Resolutions agreed to.

FACTORY ACTS AMENDMENT BILL.

[BILL 47.]

(Mr. Mundella, Mr. Morley, Mr. Shaw, Mr. Philips, Mr. Cobbett, Mr. Anderson.)

SECOND READING. ADJOURNED DEBATE.

Order read, for resuming Adjourned Debate on Question [11th June], "That the Bill be now read a second time."

Question again proposed.

Debate resumed.

MR. FAWCETT, in rising to move the following Amendment:—

"That, in the opinion of this House, it is undesirable to sanction a measure which would discourage the employment of women, by subjecting their labour to a new legislative restriction to which it is not proposed to subject the labour of men," spoke as follows:—Mr. Speaker*: It will be in the recollection of the House that at the close of the long speech with which my hon. Friend the Member for Sheffield (Mr. Mundella) introduced the second reading of this Bill, not more than about five minutes remained before the debate, by the Rules of the House, had to be suspended. It was only possible for me, during these few brief minutes, to protest against some asper-sions which had, I thought, been unjustly cast upon the character of those employers who are opposed to this measure, and to indicate in very general terms the reasons which have induced me to meet the second reading of the Bill with the Amendment of which I have given Notice. In order to present as clear an issue as possible to the House, I am desirous at the outset to state that the Bill may be divided into two entirely distinct portions. One part of the Bill asks us to legislate for children; by another part of the Bill it is intended both directly and indirectly to subject the labour of adults to certain new legislative restrictions. So far as the Bill affects the employment of children, I have not a single word to say in opposition to it. On the contrary, no one would more cordially welcome proposals to raise the age at which children should be permitted to commence working, to extend the period of half-time, and to provide additional securities for the more efficient education of children when employed as half-timers. So far as we are able to judge from the opinions which have been expressed by employers in reference to the employment and education of children, it would appear that the portion of the Bill which refers to children might be passed with the general approval of the House. It is important to bear this in mind, in order to obtain a distinct idea of the real points at issue between the supporters and the opponents of the Bill. It has been attempted to make the country believe that many of the employers are anxious to have children overworked, and are perfectly indifferent to their education. Probably there is no one in this House who is pecuniarily less interested in industrial undertakings than I am. I have not a shilling embarked in any one of the trades which would be affected by this Bill. This has been one reason which has induced me to assume the responsibility of opposing the Bill. If the Amendment of which I have given Notice had been moved by some employer, interested motives would not improbably have been attributed to him, and perhaps he would have been accused of being more solicitous for his own gains than for the welfare of his workpeople. As it may be difficult for many of the employers to defend themselves without being charged with self-laudation, I feel bound in common fairness to say that many of those who are most prominent in opposing this Bill are acknowledged to be among the best employers in the country. It has been admitted that there is no one in Lancashire who is more respected by those whom he employs for his great generosity and his judicious kindness than Mr. Hugh Mason, and there is no one who has written and spoken with greater ability and force against the proposals in this Bill to subject the labour of adults to legislative restrictions. Many hon. Members of this House, who hold opinions similar to those of Mr. Hugh Mason, are as much esteemed as employers as he is. Having made these few remarks in defence of those who, in the course of the agitation which this measure is likely to excite, will doubtless be subjected to many unjust insinuations, I will at once ask the House to consider the vitally important issues which are raised by this Bill so far as it will affect the labour of adults. It can, I think, be proved beyond dispute that this measure must operate in one of two ways. It will either be a Nine-hours Bill for men as well as for women, or it will place the labour of women under such serious disadvantages as greatly to restrict their employment. If the Bill is intended to be a general Nine-hours Bill, then the House has not been fairly dealt with; for why do not the promoters of the measure boldly come forward and tell us what they want? If they want this House to decide how long the artizans of this country shall be permitted to work, let them at least have the courage to tell us at what they are aiming. Do not let them cloak their intentions in the garb of a generous zeal for the welfare of women. I am perfectly ready to admit that the hon. Member for Sheffield has emphatically denied that this is a general Nine-hours Bill. He has told us that nothing would induce him to have anything to do with a Bill which would impose legislative restrictions upon the labour of men. But there may be the widest possible difference between what the promoter of an Act of Parliament wishes to be its consequences and what its ultimate consequences may actually be. The hon. Member may not intend this to be a general Nine-hours Bill, but it may become one, in spite of anything that he may say or wish to the contrary. But if it is not, as he asserts, a general Nine-hours Bill, then it can at once be proved that the Bill must most seriously interfere with the employment of women. The labour of men and women is so inextricably intertwined in the various manufacturing processes, that it seems nothing can be more absurd than to suppose that the women, after working nine hours, should be compelled by law to leave the factory, and then the men should go on for another hour working without them. It is therefore absolutely certain that if women are not permitted to work more than nine hours a-day, one of two things will occur: either the manufacturers will be unable to employ their men for more than nine hours a-day; or, if they wished to keep their machinery working for a longer period than this, they would only be able to do so by dispensing with the labour of women altogether or by employing them in double shifts, like half-time children. It can only be proved by experience which of these results will ensue. In those branches of industry in which the labour of women is indispensable—and I believe this is the case with the great majority of industries affected by this Bill—it is evident that if we impose certain legislative restrictions upon the labour of women, we virtually impose the same restrictions upon the labour of men. In some branches of industry, however, in which women form a very small minority of the entire number who are employed, this Bill would probably have the effect of causing the labour of women to be altogether dispensed with, or of reducing them to the position of half-timers. The question, therefore, which the House has to determine is this—Are we, in the first place, prepared for some of the most important trades in the country to enact a general nine-hours' law? Or are we prepared, with regard to other trades, to discourage and prohibit the employment of women? We probably have never been asked to give a decision upon issues of greater importance. Let me begin with the first. I am perfectly well aware of the prejudice which will be industriously excited against those who oppose such legislation as is now contemplated. It therefore becomes of greater consequence that we should make the grounds of our opposition as intelligible as possible.

Mr. Speaker

I therefore desire, in the first instance, to affirm that this House has no right to interfere with the labour of adults; and, secondly, if it had the right, it would be singularly impolitic to exercise it at the present time. If we once accept the principle that grown-up persons cannot determine for themselves the number of hours which they shall work, we virtually treat them as if they were helpless children, who find it so impossible to get on without our control and guidance, that we shall soon have to regulate their wages. And when are we asked to start on this career of paternal legislation? When are we asked to wrap the artizan population of this country in the swaddling clothes of babyhood? Why, at the very time when our working classes are proving, in a thousand hard-fought industrial contests between themselves and their employers, that they have not only the will but the power to protect their own interests. But even if the State had the right to decide how many hours a-day a grown-up person should work, I confidently appeal to the House, whether it would not be impolitic to exercise this right. My chief contention is this—that the working classes can settle such a question as this far better for themselves than the State can settle it for them. No one now would think of invoking the aid of Parliament to determine the amount of remuneration which our artizans should receive for their labour, and if they can regulate the amount of their wages, why, in the name of common sense, cannot they also arrange the number of hours which they shall work? Not only have they the power to decide for themselves what shall be the length of the day's work, but I believe they will decide it far better without than with the interference of this House. Employers and employed know the peculiar circumstances of each branch of industry infinitely better than they can be known by this House. Employers and employed, if left to themselves, can make such arrangements as are most fitted for each special trade. Occasionally it may happen that it may be desirable to work somewhat longer than the ordinary time. The employed recognize the truth of this just as much as do the employers, for it is particularly to be noted that in those trades where the employed have been most successful in shortening the hours of labour, they have always suggested certain arrangements for occasionally working overtime. Arrangements for controlling trade, which are voluntarily made between employers and employed, have not the rigidity and unchangeableness of a legislative enactment. They possess sufficient elasticity to be adapted to the peculiar circumstances of each special case; but this Bill, on the contrary, proposes to lay down one uniform rule for a great variety of industrial processes which often differ widely in the character and quality of the work they require. If we pass this Bill, it will be decreed by an inflexible rule, that in the most important trades in the country no women shall, under any circumstances whatever, work for more than a prescribed number of hours. It has been said, and it will no doubt be often repeated, that it is now too late to raise objections to Parliamentary interference with the labour of adults; such interference was sanctioned by the Factory Acts, and no one would now think of repealing them. As I have before remarked, so far as these Acts refer to the labour of those who are not adults, not only do I not wish to repeal them, but I should be perfectly willing to strengthen them, and to attempt to render them more efficient. But legislative interference with the employment of adults cannot, at the present time, be regarded in precisely the same light as it was when the Factory Acts were passed, a quarter of a century since. The trade of the country has now to contend with many difficulties which were then scarcely foreseen. I shall presently refer to the serious effects which may be produced upon the industrial future of our country by the rise in the price of coal. Again, if the existing Factory Acts are to be quoted as a conclusive argument in favour of this Bill, the same kind of reasoning would justify an eight—nay, even a seven—hours Bill. Lastly, it may be asked—what becomes of the great progress in the people's condition, which was quoted as an unanswerable argument in favour of their political enfranchisement, if they require the protection of the State just as much now as they did 25 years since? Those, I think, do a very serious injury to the working classes, who are perpetually encouraging them to ask the State to do what they could far more effectually do for themselves. It has lately been shown how much more promptly and properly a matter is dealt with when the people take it into their own hands than when they rely upon Acts of Parliament. It will be in the recollection of the House that last year the Home Secretary introduced a Bill with the view of putting down truck. Something like 60 Acts had already been passed with the same object, and we were told that, in spite of all this legislation, truck was flourishing as vigorously as ever. Directly I read the Bill of the Home Secretary, I determined to oppose it with an Amendment which asserted the principle, that all questions as to the time when, and the manner in which, wages should be paid, had better be settled by the employers and the employed rather than by Parliament. Many came to me then, as they have come to me now, and said—"We wonder that you are insensible to the evils of truck, and that you wish to see them perpetuated." I simply replied—"If I held such opinions as you attribute to me, I would do all in my power to promote the passing of the Home Secretary's Bill; because experience has shown that innumerable Truck Acts may be passed, and truck will continue to exist, until those who are interested in its discontinuance take the subject into their own hands." It could scarcely have been foreseen that the truth of what has just been stated would be so soon proved. The Bill happily not having passed, the Home Secretary was lately asked whether he intended to re-introduce it during the present Session. What was his reply? It was so significant, that I earnestly commend it to the particular attention of this House. After having stated that he did not intend to re-introduce the Bill this year, he went on to confess that one of the chief reasons which had induced him to come to this decision was, that since his failure to legislate last year the working classes had to a great extent taken the matter into their own hands, and had by their own voluntary efforts abolished truck. If Parliament would only once declare that it would never have another Truck Bill introduced into this House, I believe that, in five years, all that is mischievous in connection with truck would have ceased to exist. Just in the same way do I believe that if we would once declare that it was entirely beyond the province of this House to decide how many hours an adult should work, we should do far more to cause the day's work to be adjusted to such a length as would be most advantageous both for employers and employed, than will ever be done by such a Bill as we are now asked to approve. This is not simply a theoretical opinion; for it is to be particularly remarked that those trades in which the hours are at the present time the shortest are exactly those to which it has never been proposed to apply any legislative interference. In the nine-hours struggle which commenced in Newcastle, and has been so successfully continued in other parts of the country, the aid of Parliament was never invoked. But the hon. Member (Mr. Mundella) will probably rejoin: "It is very well to leave men to take care of themselves. They are independent, they are free, they have the power to do what they think is best for themselves. But when we come to consider the case of women, what are they?" The hon. Member has told us that they are servants up to the age of 16 or 17; they then enjoy a year or two of independence; they then marry, and are henceforward the slaves of their masters. In the former debate, some who are opposing this Bill were taunted with being "cold-blooded economists." But we have never been so cold-blooded as to bring such an accusation against our fellow-countrymen. If this assertion were as correct, as I believe it to be incorrect, instead of sending an expedition to Zanzibar to put down the slave trade, we ought to send an expedition to Lancashire and Yorkshire to emancipate our countrywomen from the fetters in which warm-blooded philanthropists are content to see them bound. But the hon. Member was shrewd enough to see that the principles of his Bill forced him into the position of saying that the women for whom he proposes to legislate are slaves. There is only one justification for limiting the hours of labour of women, unless it is proposed to subject the labour of men to similar legislation, and that is, that women are not free agents. This is, in fact, the justification for legislating on behalf of children: they are not free agents; and this suggests at once the fundamental distinction between State intervention on behalf of children and on behalf of adults. But we now have to consider what may possibly be the second effect of this legislation—namely, that it may in some instances discourage the employment of women. Anyone who considers the social condition of this country; anyone who knows how many women there are who have a severe struggle to maintain themselves by toil; anyone who reflects that if a woman is driven from honest labour, she may be forced by dire necessity into a life of misery and degradation, will hesitate to sanction legislation which may possibly have the effect of throwing impediments in the way of women earning their own maintenance. I know that the workmen who are demanding this Bill indignantly repudiate the idea that they are jealous of women's labour. No one would more regret than I should to bring against them any unjust accusations. We are bound at once to accept their assurance that they are no longer influenced by any jealousy of women's labour, and we may indeed rejoice that that is not to happen in the future which has, undoubtedly, sometimes occurred in the past. For fairness compels me to say that our workmen have not always been uninfluenced by this jealousy of women's labour. We cannot forget that some years ago certain trades-unionists in the Potteries imperatively insisted that a certain rest for the arm, which they found almost essential to their work, should not be used by women when engaged in the same employment. Not long since, the London tailors, when on strike, having never admitted a woman to their union, attempted to coerce women from availing themselves of the remunerative employment which was offered to them in consequence of the strike. But this jealousy of women's labour has not been entirely confined to workmen. The same feeling has extended itself through every class of society. Last autumn some of the Post Office clerks objected to the employment of women in the Post Office, which had been so wisely decided upon by Mr. Soudamore; and we have lately had abundant opportunities of judging of the extent to which the medical profession is jealous of the competition of women practitioners. I think it necessary to make these remarks, as we should at any rate be very cautious and very watchful when we are asked to interfere with the employment of women. But we have been told that one of the great arguments in favour of this Bill is, that it is demanded by the fathers and husbands of the women affected by it. But, in pressing this argument, does the hon. Member forget that upon his own authority we have been assured that these very women are in servitude and slavery to these fathers and husbands, and therefore he asks us to place ourselves in the ridiculous position of letting those whom he has himself described as slave-masters, decide what is best for their slaves? But enough has now probably been said on the general principles involved in this Bill. I will therefore proceed to deal with the specific facts and statements on which the hon. Member supports his case. The Government, through the Home Secretary, having stated that—

"Greatly as our knowledge has been supplemented by the Report of the Commissioners recently appointed to investigate the condition of the women and children employed in factories, it is not large enough to justify the great economic changes proposed by this Bill," the hon. Member naturally came to the conclusion that this assertion of the Home Secretary must be controverted. Anyone who reads the hon. Member's remarks in the previous debate, and at the same time remembers with how much ability and ingenuity he can speak, will at once see how extremely weak is his case. Instead of directly meeting the assertion of the Home Secretary, he endeavoured to disprove it by introducing a great mass of matter entirely irrelevant to the measure we are now considering. We remember, for instance, the piteous picture he drew of women coming to work in all weathers, bedabbled in mud and wet up to their middles. He surely does not think that his Bill will regulate the elements, and convert a wet day into a fine one. It really might be thought that there was a clause in the Bill to supply women with waterproof cloaks and umbrellas. He also gave a harrowing description of the evils resulting from working in bad smells and in ill-ventilated rooms; but we look in vain in the Bill for a single sanitary regulation. Again, we had a frightful account of the increasing number of accidents. The fallacies involved in these statistics of accidents will be referred to by subsequent speakers. But it is sufficient here to say that even if it is admitted that accidents have increased, this Bill can exert no influence whatever in diminishing their number. There is not one word in it which would either cause machinery to be better fenced, or which would enable those who may be injured more easily to obtain compensation from their employers. We next listened to an eloquent description of the terrible consequences which ensue from a woman returning to work too soon after her confinement. On the authority of the Commissioners we were told that when a woman thus returned to work, it was virtually a sentence of death to the child. But if this Bill became law to-morrow, a woman would be able to return to work within a week, nay, even a day, of her confinement. It was next attempted to shame this House into accepting this Bill, because we were asked to believe that in factory legislation, we were behind almost every other European country. In one respect this is no doubt true. In those countries, such as Prussia, where there is a general system of compulsory education, greater security is taken for the education of factory children than is the case in our own country; but, as I have before said, this is not the part of the Bill which we are opposing. We are as anxious as the hon. Member for Sheffield can be to provide additional guarantees for the education of factory children. The point of difference between him and us is, that we object to the new restrictions which he wishes to impose upon the labour of adults; and with regard to this kind of legislative interference, instead of being behind other European countries, we have already imposed restrictions far more stringent than those which have been imposed in Germany, Austria, Baden, Holland, Belgium, Italy, Switzerland, Sweden, Russia, or France. The Beakie, newspaper, the leading organ of the trades-unionists in this country, which has not only warmly supported the hon. Member's Bill, but which has with the utmost asperity attacked those who venture to oppose it, has recently said—

"England is, without doubt, far in advance of every country in this matter, whether we consider the law itself, or the strictness of its execution."

Again, the hon. Member for Sheffield endeavoured to make it appear that the employment of women in the textile manufactures produced great mortality, and was particularly destructive of infant life. He seemed to think that he had proved his case when he showed that there was a much greater mortality among women in the manufacturing districts than there is in four towns in the Black Country. These four towns were alluded to as if they were so unhealthy that the sanitary condition of a district must be most deplorable if it had a higher rate of mortality than prevails in these towns. But on referring to the Returns of the Registrar General, what do we discover? These towns in the Black Country, so far as the mortality of married women is concerned—and the hon. Member was careful to confine his comparison to this point—take rank, not among the most unhealthy, but amongst the very healthiest districts in the kingdom. As an instance of the caution which ought to be exercised in drawing conclusions from incomplete statistics, it may be remarked that the rate of infant mortality is not greater in the textile towns than it is in these four towns where the rate of mortality of women is so low. But now I come to certain statements which the hon. Member made, when he was not anxious to prove the unhealthiness of the manufacturing districts, but when he was pleading for their healthiness. I should be the last to accuse any man of inconsistency. We all, probably, in some period of our lives, have changed our opinions. [Mr. MUNDELLA: Hear, hear!] Oh, I quite understand that cheer. When I came into this House, when I was younger and perhaps more enthusiastic than I am now, I was more in favour of legislative interference. But is it to be supposed that anyone coming into this House when still young, is to learn nothing from experience? But the inconsistency which I am referring to with regard to the hon. Member is not a change of opinion which has gradually come over him as facts have dawned upon him or as years have rolled by. I wish to direct the particular attention of the House to certain statements he made in reference to the Report of the Factory Commissioners, when a few weeks since he was speaking in favour of the repeal of the Contagious Diseases Acts, and to compare what he then said with the statements he made in reference to the same Report when moving the second reading of this Bill. On the former occasion we were reminded that two Commissioners had lately been down to the manufacturing districts; they had examined 10,000 children entirely at haphazard, and had found them healthy and entirely free from diathetic disease. But this is not the strangest part of the story. The hon. Member was anxious to make a point against the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Droitwich (Sir John Pakington), who had spoken in the debate on the Contagious Diseases Acts. He therefore said — “Let the right hon. Gentleman (Sir John Pakington) see the width and weight of the men of Sheffield, and then he will cease to deplore a sickly population.” Well, if the right hon. Gentleman will give a similar invitation to the hon. Member for Sheffield, and ask him to visit the textile towns, he, in his turn, will cease to deplore a sickly population; for he will discover that in the health of their population, whether estimated by the death-rate of women between 15 and 45, or between 45 and 55, or the death-rate of children under 10, the 15 principal textile towns are from 15 to 20 per cent healthier than the sanitary paradise the hon. Member has the happiness to represent. I have now gone through most of the statements of the hon. Member, and I will refer again to the remark of the Home Secretary—that although the knowledge of the Government has been extended by the inquiries of the Commissioners, the facts do not justify such a great economic change as is proposed by this Bill. I hope the Home Secretary is of the same opinion still; I hope this sensible remark of his will not be repudiated by the Government, and that upon this question he represents not only himself, but the Government. I shall be able to show from the Report of the Commissioners, who were specially sent down to ascertain the facts of the case, that the Home Secretary did not speak half strongly enough, and that he ought to have said not only that the facts did not justify the Bill, but that they absolutely disproved the necessity for this legislation. All the facts that I am about to mention are taken from this Report, and their significance is greatly increased when it is remembered that the Commissioners evidently have a bias in favour of this legislation. In the first place, there is this most remarkable fact—they asked 163 medical men whether the present hours of labour were injurious to women. If a great majority of these medical men had answered this question in the affirmative, I could understand this Bill being introduced; but far from a majority being of the opinion that the present hours of labour are too long, only 32 out of the 163 are of this opinion, the remaining 131 distinctly affirming that the present hours are not too long. But this is not all; 171 medical men were asked whether factory labour was especially injurious to women; 99 gave a direct negative to the question, 12 returned answers which were irrelevant, and the remaining 57 chiefly confined their remarks to defective sanitary arrangements, which are injurious to men and women alike, and which are not in the slightest degree touched by this Bill. Medical testimony, therefore, entirely fails to provide a justification for this Bill. I will now refer to another very remarkable admission contained in the Report of these Commissioners. Anyone who is practically acquainted with cotton manufacturing processes knows perfectly well that the great majority of the women who are employed are engaged in the five processes of reeling, doubling, winding, warping, and weaving. The Commissioners themselves admit that three-fourths of the women employed in factories are engaged in one or other of these occupations, and they further admit that these occupations have no debilitating tendency. It is particularly worthy of remark that in almost every instance the complaints of the Commissioners refer to evils resulting either from defective sanitary arrangements, or from the employment of married women. Thus, with regard to defective sanitary arrangements, they speak of cesspools. It surely cannot be supposed that a Nine-hours Bill will empty or purify a cesspool. Once more let me say that there is not a single sanitary clause in the Bill. Then, again, with regard to the employment of married women, it is to be observed that the Bill makes no distinction whatever between married and unmarried women. It has been calculated that only a small minority of the women at work are married.

Mr. Fawcett

The proportion is said to be about one-tenth. [Mr. MUNDELLA: One-third of the women employed are married.] I believe such an estimate is far too high; but even if we assume it to be correct, we must remember that perhaps not more than one-third of the married women have young children. Now, the evils upon which the Commissioners lay the greatest stress are to be attributed to women going to work too soon after their confinement, and to their neglecting their young children. Now, it appears from the figures just quoted, that these evils can only happen in the case of a small minority of the entire number of women who are at work. I will now ask the House for a moment to consider some of the absurdities into which we shall be led if we are prepared to legislate upon the Report of these Commissioners. In mentioning various disadvantages associated with the employment of women and children in factories, there is one subject on which they lay particular stress. They bring forward medical evidence to show that the diseases of the digestive organs prevalent in the factory districts are induced by the excessive use of tea. Well, I suppose, if this mania for legislative interference continues, we shall soon have introduced into this House a Permissive Prohibitory Tea Bill. Having studied the Report of the Commissioners with the greatest care, I believe I am justified in saying that it does not contain one single argument to justify legislative restriction upon the labour of adults. They adduce some facts with the object of showing that certain restrictions should be imposed upon the employment of married women, and they mention many facts to prove that the sanitary condition of the mills, although improving, is still in a state which leaves much to be desired. Now, as I have occupied so much of the time of the House, I will refer very briefly to the vexed question of foreign competition. Others are far more competent to deal with it. I confess I have no special knowledge of the subject; but this I am bound to say, that considering the serious and gratifying rise of wages—serious in one aspect, and gratifying in another—considering, I say, the marked rise of wages in this country, the great increase in the price of coal, the rapid development of manufacturing industry in countries in which formerly there were few manufactures—considering all these facts, we must come to the conclusion that foreign competition presents itself in a very different light from what it did some years since. I can speak with impartiality upon this subject, because I have no personal interest in the matter. But it is a subject which I have examined with the greatest possible care, and I believe this to be the case—that at the present time, in many most important branches of industry in this country, the competition between us and foreigners is so keen and so close, that if you place the slightest legislative impediment in the way of industrial development, the balance may be turned against us, and our trade may greatly suffer. There cannot be a greater delusion than to suppose that with regard to foreign competition employers are chiefly concerned. They have accumulated capital. If trade declines, they can retire from business and live upon their means. But the decline of trade means loss of employment to the labourer, and upon him will fall with maximum intensity the bitter consequences of industrial depression. There is one other consideration which, if the House will allow me, I will present to them for a moment. Now that the artisans of this country have happily been enfranchised, if you once concede their demand for a Nine-hours Bill, where is this legislation to stop? High pledges and great expectations will be held out to them, and at the coming Election we shall see with what eagerness and avidity candidates will rush in and pledge themselves in favour of a Nine-hours Bill. Can there be any security that we shall stop there? Why, what security can we have that we shall not next have an Eight-hours Bill? Some operatives came to me the other day and said—"If you don't give up your opposition, we will demand an Eight-hours Bill." "Well," I said, "you will not stop there; of course, you will demand a Seven-hours Bill." Encourage these demands, and what shall we see? We shall see the industry of this country, we shall see the self-reliance and independence of its people, put up to a demoralizing Dutch auction of degrading promises and delusive pledges. I have opposed this Bill in the interests of the working classes. I ask the House to reject this measure as far as it applies to the labour of adults, because I believe that at the present moment we can render no greater service to the working classes of this country than firmly to check the growing tendency they show to rely upon State intervention. If we encourage this tendency, step by step we shall so enervate them, that at length they will come to us like helpless children and ask us to be their guardians, to say what wages they shall receive, what time they shall go to bed, and to prevent them doing a hundred things which they know they ought not to do. I entreat the House to remember this—that it is not by the act of the despot alone that liberty is destroyed. That vigour of national life which is the only guarantee for freedom must inevitably decline if the Government is permitted to envelop the people in a great network of officialism. I believe the day is not far distant when, if we are not very careful, the labouring classes of this country will find, from bitter experience, that their worst enemy is not the so-called cold-blooded economist, but that they have infinitely more to fear from a misguided benevolence and a mistaken and meddlesome philanthropy. The hon. Member concluded by moving the Resolution which stood in his name upon the Paper.

SIR THOMAS BAZLEY, in seconding the Amendment, said, much had been expressed on this question by the professed advocates of benevolence; but say what they might, they could not establish true benevolence by Act of Parliament. The promoters of the objects of this Bill did not confine their professed objects to the protection of women and children. There was the remarkable fact that the employers of labour in the textile manufactures had offered to concede everything that was just and considerate in relation to women and children; but the promoters of the movement were not satisfied, and agitated for the employment of adult labour, short hours, and increased wages. It was stated in The Times and other papers that the deaths and accidents in manufactories were very great; but he and those who acted with him confined themselves to the manufacture of textile fabrics, and were able to show that the accidents in them were few. The advocates of this Bill did not do so; but they embraced in their calculations various factories in which the labour and danger were great, and amongst those manufactories were blast furnaces. Now with those factories neither women nor children had anything to do. The accidents in the year in those various factories he found, set down in Returns at 14,168, including 308 deaths; and it was imputed that women and children were severe sufferers by those accidents, but so far as the textile fabric manufactures were concerned that was not so. Out of the 50,000 accidents of all kinds that annually happened in this country, resulting in 29,176 deaths, only 4,346, resulting in 65 deaths, were referable to our textile manufacture; and he submitted that, so far as the allegation that textile manufactures were fraught with danger to women and children, they were, on the contrary, their best source of help and protection. Then, compare their work with that of the "maid-of-all-work," the poor servant who rose early in the morning and worked hard throughout the long day until 11 o'clock at night, who was an object entitled to sympathy. Why, there was, in fact, no comparison between her labours and those of women and children in the textile fabric manufactories, whose employment was light and agreeable, while that of poor domestic servants was most laborious. With regard to the manufactories in Manchester, he might state that large numbers of the young persons employed in them went in the evenings, when their day's work was over, to dancing saloons, and passed a considerable portion of time in the amusements of those saloons. He thought the House should not lend itself to raise wages by Act of Parliament, and yet such was the object of the Bill now before the House, because to lessen the hours of labour meant, in point of fact, to grant additional wages. The manufacturers of this country, who were most heavily taxed, were exposed to foreign competition—by Russia, America, Germany, Belgium, France, and other foreign countries; and it was a fact that the competitors in those countries had purchased latterly the very best machinery produced by the skill of this country, and, by the aid of that machinery, were now competing with British manufacturers, the cost of production to them being in every respect much less than that of the cost of production in England. Would the employers of agricultural labour in this country like to be told that the hours of labour of their labourers must be shortened and that their wages must be increased? He could not understand upon what principle they could consistently join with the agitators for the adoption of short hours and increased wages in the textile fabric manufactures. This interference with trade by Act of Parliament could not but be productive of the worst results to common industry. The manufactures of the country were not at present in a satisfactory state, as many manufacturers were, he believed, paying wages out of capital. All this ought to make the House very careful not to legislate in the direction of increasing the cost of manufacture, as, if we did, we should most certainly diminish the amount of our business. The hon. Member concluded by seconding the Motion of his hon. Friend the Member for Brighton.

Amendment proposed,

To leave out from the word "That" to the end of the Question, in order to add the words "in the opinion of this House, it is undesirable to sanction a measure which would discourage the employment of women, by subjecting their labour to a new legislative restriction to which it is not proposed to subject the labour of men," —(Mr. Fawcett,) —instead thereof.

Question proposed, "That the words proposed to be left out stand part of the Question."

MR. T. HUGHES regretted that his hon. Friend the Member for Brighton (Mr. Fawcett) was not content with merely expressing his opposition to the Bill, and that he had made an attack upon those feelings of philanthropy which were manifested by its promoters in relation to the working classes. He had always regarded his hon. Friend as a philanthropist, and he should like to know when it was he ceased to be a philanthropist and turned "a man hater." His hon. Friend condemned freedom of contract; but seeing that Parliament had provided 14 years ago for that principle in those Acts, the question now was, whether the freedom of contract ought to be extended or contracted? Let him remind the House how the question now stood. They had come to the conclusion that inquiry into the subject was necessary; and he held that a more fair and important Report was never submitted to Parliament. His hon. Friend the Member for Brighton said that no inquiry and no Report were necessary. He (Mr. Hughes) would show by one or two facts stated in the Report that they were necessary. The hon. Member was proceeding to argue in support of the Bill, when—

It being a quarter of an hour before Six of the clock, the Debate stood adjourned till To-morrow.

CONSOLIDATED FUND (APPROPRIATION)
BILL.

On Motion of MR. BONHAM-CARTER, Bill to apply a sum out of the Consolidated Fund to the service of the year ending the thirty-first day of March, one thousand eight hundred and seventy-four, and to appropriate the Supplies granted in this Session of Parliament, ordered to be brought in by MR. BONHAM-CARTER, MR. CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER, and MR. BAXTER.

Bill presented, and read the first time.

MILITIA PAY ACTS AMENDMENT BILL.

On Motion of MR. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN, Bill to explain the Militia Pay Acts 1868 and 1869, ordered to be brought in by MR. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN and MR. SECRETARY CARDWELL.

Bill presented, and read the first time. [Bill 273.]

House adjourned at five minutes before Six o'clock.

~~~~~
HOUSE OF LORDS,

Thursday, 31st July, 1873.

MINUTES.] PUBLIC BILLS—First Reading—
Public Health Act (1872) Amendment* (257); Constabulary Force (Ireland)* (261); Expiring Laws Continuance* (268); Railway Regulations* (259); Royal Naval Artillery Volunteer Force* (260); Sanitary Act (1866) Amendment (Ireland)* (262).

Second Reading— Endowed Schools Act (1869) Amendment (263); Merchant Shipping Acts Amendment (254); Defence Acts Amendment* (255); Conspiracy Law Amendment (256).

Committee— Public Records (Ireland) Act (1867) Amendment* (209), discharged; Penalties (Ireland)* (242); Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment, &c. (243-265); Langbaurgh Coroners* (248).

Third Reading— Salmon Fisheries, now Salmon Fishery* (249); Metropolitan Tramways Provisional Orders* (229), and passed.

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE
BILL.

Commons' Amendments &c. considered.

Commons' Amendment to Lords' Amendments to Commons' Amendments and Commons' consequential Amendments considered (according to Order).

LORD CAIRNS said, he was sorry to find that he had been misunderstood in the reference he made the other evening to the appointment of Mr. Mountague Bernard to the Privy Council. He was made to insinuate that Mr. Bernard was appointed to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council with the object of influencing the decision in the Bennett case. He had never contemplated any such insinuation. What he did say was that a feeling existed out-of-doors that a Court might be constituted for particular cases, but that he knew that every effort was made to secure the best tribunal in every case.

THE MARQUESS OF RIPON was glad that the noble and learned Lord had taken the earliest opportunity of removing a misapprehension which his remarks should not have occasioned, and which if allowed to continue might have produced evil consequences. For himself, he had not at all misapprehended the noble and learned Lord. He (the Marques of Ripon) knew that the greatest possible care was always taken to have the best men sitting on the Judicial Committee. Mr. Bernard was summoned on quite different grounds from those suggested. Knowing the importance of the Bennett case, he (the Lord President) took the unusual course of inviting the attendance of every legal Member of the Judicial Committee whom age or infirmity had not incapacitated.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR was also glad that the subject was introduced. He had enjoyed the friendship of Mr. Bernard for a great many years, and he knew that although the right hon. Gentleman had never the opportunity of enjoying considerable practice, yet he was not entirely without that kind of experience. In point of general ability and attainment, no man could possibly stand higher, and there were some branches of jurisprudence in which he had few equals and no superior, which might make his presence upon the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council not seldom eminently useful. With respect to the particular appeal, to which reference had been made, he had received a letter from Mr. Bernard; who stated that he had never been in the habit of speaking or writing on theological subjects; and that with respect to the particular questions involved in Mr. Bennett's case, he had never, to his knowledge, expressed any opinion before that appeal was heard.

Motion agreed to.

Commons' Amendments agreed to.

ELEMENTARY EDUCATION ACT (1870)
AMENDMENT BILL—(No. 243.)
(The Lord President.)
COMMITTEE.

House in Committee (according to Order).

Clauses 1 and 2 agreed to.

Clause 3 (Repeal and substitution of other provisions for 18 & 19 Vict. c. 34 (Denison's Act).

THE MARQUESS OF RIPON moved, in page 2, line 5, to leave out

"a certificated child within the meaning of 'The Agricultural Children Act, 1873,' whose certificate is for the time being 'in force'" and insert ("employed in pursuance of a certificate under 'The Agricultural Children Act, 1873,' and is not attending school.")—(The Lord President.)

Motion agreed to.

Amendment made.

Clause, as amended, agreed to.

Clauses 4 to 9, inclusive, agreed to.

Clause 10 (Amendment of 33 & 34 Vict. c. 75, s. 57, as to loans).

LOD CHELMSFORD moved to add a proviso, that the consent of the Education Department to loans should be conditional on proof by the school board of the necessity of additional accommodation. This proviso was required to meet cases such as had already occurred where a narrow majority of a school board had attempted to saddle a parish with a loan for new schools where the existing accommodation was both efficient and sufficient. In this case, the Department, while refusing to recommend the application to the Public Works Loan Commissioners, declared its inability to prevent the borrowing of money in the open market, and this proviso would give them the required discretion.

Amendment moved, page 4, line 19, after ("fund") add—

"Provided, that no such consent of the Education Department shall be granted unless proof be given to their satisfaction that the additional school accommodation which it is proposed to provide and the works which it is proposed to execute are necessary in order to supply a sufficient amount of public school accommodation for the district."—(The Lord Chelmsford.)

THE MARQUESS OF RIPON objected to the proposed proviso as imposing a needless obligation in cases where additional schools were obviously desirable. The distinct recommendation of the Department was essential to a loan by the Public Works Commissioners; in the cases of other loans it did not exercise so close a control, but accepted prima facie evidence for the scheme, unless there was distinct proof to the contrary. In the case referred to, the school board had made a Return showing the need of further accommodation.

THE MARQUESS OF SALISBURY feared the facility of borrowing would bring embarrassments on the ratepayers of the future. Both in education and other matters a check was required, and if a school board had evidence satisfactory to themselves, they could communicate it to the Department.

LORD STANLEY or ALDERLEY and LORD LYTTELTON supported the Amendment, as a safeguard in doubtful cases.

Amendment agreed to.

The Report of the Amendments to be received To-morrow; and Standing Orders No. 37. and 38. to be considered in order to their being dispensed with; Bill to be printed, as amended. (No. 265.)

ENDOWED SCHOOLS ACT (1869) AMENDMENT BILL—(No. 263.)
(The Lord President.)
 SECOND READING.

Order of the Day for the Second Reading, read.

THE MARQUESS OF RIPON, in moving that the Bill be now read the second time, said, that the late introduction of the measure was due to a long inquiry by a Committee in the other House into the working of the principal Act. The principal alterations proposed by the Bill were these. The Endowed Schools Act 1869 was continued to the 31st December, 1876: schools having endowments not exceeding £100 per annum are taken from under the operation of the Endowed Schools Acts and placed under the Elementary Education Act 1870. Under the 17th section of the principal Act clergymen were in certain cases ineligible as members of Governing Bodies. This provision had naturally given rise to much dissatisfaction, and it was now provided that where by the original instrument of foundation the holder of any particular office is a member of the Governing Body nothing in the section referred to shall prevent the holder of such office for the time being from being retained as a member. Another provision related to schools excepted from the provisions as to religion; and it is enacted that where by the original foundation of any school it is required that the Governing Body and officers shall be members of some particular denomination—such school shall be excepted from the provisions of the 19th section of the Act. The Bill further amended the Act of 1869 in respect to approval of schemes by the Committee of Council, and in respect of appeals to the Queen in Council; and provided that if, at the expiration of the time for a Petition to Her Majesty in Council against any scheme no such Petition has been presented, Her Majesty may by Order in Council declare her approbation of such scheme without the same being laid before Parliament. Lastly, it was provided that a graduate of any University of the United Kingdom, if otherwise fit, shall be held qualified, where the statutes of any school require the head master to be a graduate of Oxford or Cambridge. The subject had been already considered by several Committees, and had been introduced into the other House on the Report of the Endowed Schools Commissioners, and having been well considered by the other House, he trusted their Lordships would be willing to pass it.

Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2<sup>d</sup>."
—(The Lord President.)

THE MARQUESS OF SALISBURY said, that it was impossible that their Lordships could give sufficient consideration to this Bill at this period of the Session, when the Appropriation Bill had been brought in, and the Prorogation would probably take place three or four days

hence. This amended Bill had been looked forward to by many oppressed interests for two years past. It was hoped that it would either entirely terminate the power of the Endowed Schools Commissioners, or else that Parliament would so restrict and modify those powers that the oppressive consequences which had previously occurred would never be brought into operation again. Certainly it was impossible for their Lordships now seriously to amend the Bill. Without entering into a discussion as to the true construction of the pledges given by the noble Marquess and by Mr. Forster in 1869, it was unquestionable that when the Endowed Schools Act was passed a general impression prevailed in both Houses of Parliament that it was a measure for enabling the Commissioners to deal compulsorily with endowed schools which were really and undoubtedly abused; but the result had shown that it enabled them to deal with all endowed schools whatever, without any restriction arising from the mode in which the trusts had been discharged. This result was attributable to the circumstance that the gentlemen who were selected to discharge the duties of Commissioners, though men of great purity of motive and of great business capacity, were of all people in the world the least fitted to administer a highly and widely discretionary Act, in which it was necessary to carry with them the opinions, feelings, prejudices, and traditions of a large number of people all over the country. The feelings of the Commissioners were hostile to the very idea of endowment, and they treated the notion of what was called the sacredness of trusts with something very like contempt. Knowing the opinions of those gentlemen, Parliament ought not to have sanctioned a Bill which contained their names. He regretted to say that further reflection and further appointments had not altered this peculiar feature of the Commission. Mr. Hobhouse, before leaving England, described the endowments of past ages as "no man's land," which anybody could claim. The noble Lord (Lord Lyttelton) expected posterity to think it a strange superstition that the directions of dying men should be adhered to for all time, unless they were palpably absurd or impossible, and that there should then be the minimum of variation; while Mr. Roby deemed it the duty of the State to apply endowments to some other use, if under the circumstances it was more beneficial. Whether those views were correct or not was a question upon which he would not ask their Lordships to enter, but undoubtedly they were deeply opposed to the feelings of the local bodies who had the management and enjoyment of the endowments. Be those local bodies right or wrong, they held that a Founder's will, though made many years ago, ought to be a guide in disposing of the endowment, and that the State had no right to do what it willed with it. The consequence of this diversity of opinion between the butcher and the lamb as to the right of the butcher to use his weapon as he pleased was a great deal of turmoil and dissatisfaction. The noble Lord at the Table (Lord Lyttelton) and his Colleagues did not set to work in a spirit showing the greatest possible amount of conciliation, or with a desire to carry with them the largest possible amount of consent. They seemed rather to have proceeded in a despotic spirit, very much in the same way as the Emperor Nicholas was said to have made his railways—by taking a ruler and drawing, regardless of every other consideration, the shortest line from one point to another. The result was that a large amount of discontent had been called into existence. What he wished their Lordships to understand was that it was not the Act but the mode in which the Act was administered which had caused all the difficulties. No doubt power was given to the Commissioners to do what they pleased with the Governing Bodies, but they were not forced to treat those Bodies as they did. It was true the Governing Bodies had no vested rights; but they were persons of influence in their respective neighbourhoods, great sympathy was excited in their favour, and a great amount of antagonism aroused against the action of the Commissioners. Then, again, how had the Commissioners acted with regard to endowments for elementary education? To use the noble Lord's phrase, the middle classes came in for "the lion's share;" and the elementary schools were thrust out of the enjoyment of those endowments which had been left to them. One of two things was the necessary consequence. If the Elementary Education

Act of 1870 became a failure, it followed that the poor were ousted out of that of which they ought never to have been deprived; and if the Act proved a success it followed that the ratepayers were saddled with expenses from which, by virtue of those endowments, they had a right to escape. But the greatest amount of opposition had been roused upon the religious question, and the noble Marquess (the Marquess of Ripon) was certainly right in saying that the peculiar interpretation of the 17th clause given by the Law Officers of the Crown, and subsequently by the Privy Council, had given rise to a great deal of discontent. When Parliament inserted that clause, it never dreamt that they were going to exclude rectors and vicars, deans and Bishops from the Governing Body, simply because they were rectors and vicars, deans and Bishops. He never heard any such suggestion made during the passage of the Bill through either House of Parliament, and his belief was that such an idea never entered into the minds even of those who represented the Dissenters. In foundation after foundation it was provided that spiritual persons, Bishops and Archbishops, should have the power of approving or disapproving the statutes made by the Governing Body of the school. That was a clear dedication to the Church of England, because there was no doubt in what direction those who possessed that power would exercise it. But in sweeping away the power of the Ordinary the Endowed Schools Commissioners acted entirely at their own discretion, for they did what they were not required by the Act to do. The 19th clause said nothing about the religious instruction to be given in the majority of the schools. The 17th clause had forbidden any test for the Governing Body, and the 16th had insisted upon a stringent conscience clause. The 19th clause said that where there was any express indication of the intention of the Founders that certain religious doctrines should be taught in the schools, these schools should remain denominational. But it did not say that there was to be no Church of England education in other schools. He did not in the least blame the Commissioners for refusing to impose a test on the Governing Body of the latter schools; but what he did complain of was that there was no provision, whatever made by them for religious instruction according to the doctrines of the Church of England in schools in which that instruction may have been given for 100, 200, or 300 years. When Parliament abolished tests in the Universities it nevertheless enacted that religious instruction according to the doctrines of the Church of England should be provided for Church of England students. But all that the Commissioners had said was that religious instruction should be given; whether it was to be Church of England, Roman Catholic, Presbyterian, or Buddhist, they did not say. There were many ways of deciding what religious instruction should be given, but the very worst way was to leave it to be fought out by the ratepayers. If the ratepayers were to decide what doctrines were to be preached in the parish church it would be productive of nothing but confusion and dissension; and the result would be pretty much the same if the ratepayers were called upon to say what religious instruction should be given in the schools. He would like for a moment to refer to the special exemption which had been made in favour of the Moravians and Quakers. The Endowed Schools Commissioners had spared the Quaker and Moravian foundations, but had swept away the power of the Archbishops and Bishops. The question to be decided was as to the course to be taken in regard to the present Bill. He could not regard it as satisfactory, because in many points it took the Church of England at an unfair disadvantage. Disestablishment might or might not be wrong, but it could not be fair or just to attempt a bit of disestablishment by means of a Bill like the present. The course which the Endowed Schools Commissioners had taken would please neither of the parties who could be affected by the provisions of the Bill—the contrivance was, perhaps, the worst that could have been adopted; but it was impossible to do properly within three days of the prorogation of Parliament that which would require for its accomplishment long and anxious consideration in both Houses of Parliament. The only course which, under the circumstances, he saw to be open, and one which he believed would not be resisted, would be to provide that the operation of the Bill should be limited to one year from the date of its passing. The adoption of such a course would give security that there should be a discussion of all the important points involved in the course of the coming Session. He could not admit that the points to which he had adverted would be settled by the adoption of the course he suggested even for the limited period which would intervene between this and June of next year, and he therefore suggested further that the Amendments which were introduced in the other House of Parliament by Mr. Hardy and others who thought with him should be regarded as sub judice as far as their Lordships were concerned—as matters on which Parliament had not really decided. Some of these Amendments ignored in important respects the expressed intentions of the Founders; and if he proposed the rejection of future schemes of the Commissioners drawn on the principle of these Amendments their Lordships must not think him troublesome or importunate. If the Session could be prolonged for six weeks it would be possible to deal with the questions involved, but as that was out of the question, he hoped the course he suggested would be adopted. It had seriously weighed upon his mind and upon the mind of the noble Duke who was absent (the Duke of Richmond) whether they ought or ought not to move the rejection of the Bill upon the second reading. There were strong reasons in favour of that course, but against it there was the extreme inconvenience of breaking up a piece of administrative machinery which would occupy some time in the repairing; and, he might add, there was the fact that the Dissenters in the House of Commons were exceedingly anxious for that consummation. On the whole, therefore, he thought it would be best to amend the Bill, instead of rejecting it.

LORD LYTTTELTON said, he must assume that the course suggested by the noble Marquess (the Marquess of Salisbury) would be adopted. The precarious position of the Commission would be inconvenient to some, and he hoped that if the need arose their interests would be duly remembered. He did not speak for himself when saying this, for he had found the Commission by no means a Garden of Eden, and the possibility of being again his own master was to him no matter of lamentation. But for the Commission, as such, he thought the limitation very undesirable, because it would curb its freedom of action and prevent it from dealing with any except unimportant or unopposed schemes. Yet he could not but admit that there was some Parliamentary ground for the limitation proposed. It might be not unfairly said that they had reached the dregs of a Parliament which had continued for a long time—he would not say the dregs of the present Government, although since a remarkable event in the early part of the Session the Government, as had been observed in some newspaper, had been like a man who had suffered a paralytic stroke; it might continue to live, but its movements, till a new Parliament, would be feeble and restricted. There had been, indeed, no delay in the consideration of the Bill. The Committee upon it was appointed at the very commencement of the Session, and no delay had occurred in its proceedings. But in the actual circumstances he did not complain, only he hoped it might be found possible to have no more of these short and inconvenient prolongations. At present there was an obvious and further reason why the noble Marquess had taken the course he had adopted. The noble Marquess and his Friends expected to come into power soon, and it was not unreasonable that they should say—"We shall not allow our political opponents to deal for the next three or four years with these important subjects which have so long been discussed, and many of which still remain undecided. We shall limit the operation of the Commission to one year, and then perhaps we may have our turn, and be able to give effect to some of our own opinions." In a party sense this was not unreasonable. He had no intention of extolling the merits of the Commission, but he hoped that before the question was finally settled, noble Lords would take the trouble carefully to read the evidence which had been given by the Commissioners before the Committee of the House of Commons. That evidence treated fully all the points that had been raised by the noble Marquess, and many more. What he ventured earnestly to impress on their Lordships was that when the time arrived for Parliament again to deal fully with the question as it had done in 1869, it should say what it meant and mean what it said. He hoped that Parliament would not intrust the Commissioners with the largest possible powers, and then turn round and call them to account for having acted upon them merely because of some vague reports of the opinions of individual Commissioners—some of them expressed before the Act was passed, or speeches of certain Ministers. The Commissioners were bound by the terms of the Preamble of the Act, by its general scope, spirit, and intention, and not by their own private opinions; and mainly by the 9th and 10th clauses as interpreted by the Preamble. He admitted, as had been done in their Report, that the country was not yet prepared for the Act being carried out with that stringency which the Act itself directed. Under the limitation now proposed they would probably have to proceed with "bated breath"; and indeed pending the more leisurely consideration of the whole subject, and having regard to local feelings and the sentiments of the people, he expected they would concede some points on which they had hitherto insisted. There were two points, and two only, which he considered to be vital, and unless they were maintained he would have nothing to do with the further administration of the Act. One was that special rewards and gratuitous or cheap education should be given solely for merit, properly understood. He differed from the noble Marquess, who had said that the giving of prizes for merit was part of the jargon of the day, and could mean nothing but competitive examination. Prizes might be given as the reward of industry and exertion, and not necessarily of superior talent. The other was that Parliament should not in the slightest degree fetter the Commissioners in dealing with Governing Bodies, especially in regard to the infusion of the popular element, which had in their judgment much to do with securing the prosperity of schools and the continuance of their usefulness. As to the question of religion, his own opinion was that it was better to leave that matter, except with regard to a few schools, to be decided by the Governors of the schools. If Parliament should choose to lay down anything intelligible and specific, for the purpose of defining what schools were Church schools, for the guidance of the Commissioners, he believed they would have no objection to act on it, but without some such further definition he did not know what a Church school was. With regard to elementary education, it was so difficult for them to deal with that matter that if Parliament should think fit to take all elementary schools out of the jurisdiction of the Commissioners, to himself it would give much satisfaction. He had been incorrectly supposed to object to endowments generally; for he held that endowments might be made of the greatest value, and he had no wish to discourage them. On the contrary, in the evidence he gave before the Committee of the House of Commons he said he did not believe that a power given to proper tribunals to deal within certain limits and after a certain time with endowments would discourage them.

The Marquess of Salisbury

Motion agreed to; Bill read 2<sup>d</sup> accordingly, and committed to a Committee of the Whole House To-morrow.

MERCHANT SHIPPING ACTS AMENDMENT BILL.—(No. 254).

(The Earl Cowper.)

Order of the Day for the Second reading, read.

EARL COWPER, in moving that the Bill be now read the second time said, that it did not deal with the points that were now under the consideration of the Commission which was sitting to inquire into the subject. This measure was little more than an expansion of the Act of 1871, and was intended to fill up the gaps in that statute. The Bill embraced a number of small details with which it would not be worth while to occupy the attention of the House at the present moment.

Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2<sup>d</sup>."
—(The Earl Cowper.)

LORD CAIRNS hoped that by the time the Bill reached its next stage certain of the clauses would be considerably modified.

Motion agreed to; Bill read 2<sup>d</sup> accordingly and committed to a Committee of the Whole House To-morrow.

CONSPIRACY LAW AMENDMENT
BILL.—(No. 256.)
(The Earl of Kimberley.)
SECOND READING.

Order of the Day for the Second Reading, read.

THE EARL OF KIMBERLEY, in moving that the Bill be now read the second time, said, that the Bill, as originally framed, was introduced by Mr. Vernon Harcourt in the other House of Parliament, and applied to conspiracies which were connected with combinations concerning trade. The Government, however, did not deem it desirable to deal with the law of conspiracy on only a single point, and were of opinion that any Bill on the subject should be extended to the law of conspiracy generally. The occasion which gave rise to the consideration of the question was that of the strike of the gas stokers. It would be remembered that several of these persons were sentenced, for conspiracy to commit an offence, to much severer punishment than were others who had actually committed the offence itself. Now, the general effect of the present Bill would be that it would remove altogether from our law punishment for conspiracy to effect any object by a mere breach of contract, which would hereafter be left to be dealt with under the Criminal Law Amendment Act and the Masters and Servant Act; while in such grave cases as a charge of conspiracy for the purpose of extortion, to defeat the course of justice, or to murder, the sentences which might be pronounced were left subject to the existing law. The first clause, therefore, provided that no person should be liable to any greater punishment for a conspiracy to be carried out by a breach of contract than he would be liable to for a breach of the contract itself; and no person would hereafter be liable to punishment for conspiracy by reason only of his being a member of a trade combination. The clause defined "trade combination" as "a combination between masters or workmen or other persons for regulating or altering the relations between any persons being masters or workmen or the conduct of any master or workman in or in respect of his business or employment or contract of employment or service." He was aware that the Bill came up to their Lordships' House rather late in the Session, relating as it did to a question of great importance; but it had been carefully examined by the Law Officers of the Crown, and they had endeavoured to make it as complete as possible. He hoped, therefore, their Lordships would pass it, for it was not desirable that a penalty should continue to hang over the working classes of this country which Parliament, he believed, never intended should be imposed for the particular offence with which the Bill dealt.

Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2<sup>a</sup>."
—(The Earl of Kimberley.)

LORD CAIRNS said, he had not the slightest objection to have the question fully considered how far it was desirable to treat the offence to which the Bill related as a criminal act. The matter was one which was, in his opinion, well worthy the attention of Parliament, and the law on the subject might stand in need of revision, more especially when a breach of contract of the kind under discussion was carried out by what was termed a conspiracy, but which would more properly be called a combination. He must add, however, that the Bill filled him with considerable apprehension. It proposed a great change in the criminal law; it had not been introduced as a Government Bill, but was proposed in the other House by a private Member, and it came before their Lordships at a very late period of the Session. It was desirable to have the opinions and the advice of the learned Judges on the matter before such an alteration of the law was made; but, in the present case, that assistance could not well be obtained, as the Judges were on their circuits. It appeared to him to be a very serious and somewhat dangerous thing at that period of the Session, for the purpose of effecting the object sought by that Bill, to alter the whole law in regard to conspiracy. He would now make no objection to the second reading of the measure, it being understood, however, that he would to-morrow, at its next stage, call their Lordships' attention to the points to which he had briefly referred, and ask their earnest consideration as to what course ought to be taken under the circumstances.

Motion agreed to; Bill read 2<sup>a</sup> accordingly, and committed to a Committee of the Whole House To-morrow.

House adjourned at a quarter before Eight o'clock, till To-morrow half past Ten o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

Thursday, 31st July, 1873.

MINUTES.]—PUBLIC BILLS—Ordered—First Reading—Law of Evidence* [274].
Second Reading—Duke of Edinburgh's Annuity [272]; Consolidated Fund (Appropriation); Militia Pay Acts Amendment* [273].
Committee—Four Courts Marshalsea (Dublin)* [265]—a.p.
Third Reading—Telegraphs* [262], and passed.
Withdrawn—Betting Houses (Scotland)* [185]; Stipendiary Magistrates (Scotland)* [129].

ELEMENTARY EDUCATION ACT—
SCHOOL BOARD, HOLME ST. CUTHBERTS.—QUESTION.

MR. F. S. POWELL asked the Vice President of the Committee of Council on Education, Whether his attention has been directed to a statement made by Mr. Perez, inspector of schools, in the Education Report, page 113—

"At Holme St. Cuthbert's the state of things seems hopeless; one member of the five having died, the four remaining members of the School Board are pitted two against two. The site once agreed to is now rejected by one party, consequently nothing can be done. The malcontent party have kept aloof, and not attended the meetings, so that a quorum cannot be made;"

and, whether the state of affairs so described still continues; and, if so, what steps have been taken, or are to be taken, in order to awaken the School Board of Holme St. Cuthbert's to a more active sense of their educational duties?

MR. W. E. FORSTER, in reply, said, that the dead-lock described by Mr. Perez had been removed since the Report was written; several members of the board had resigned, and orders had been issued by the Education Department for new elections, which he hoped would result in the school board work being discharged more satisfactorily in the future.

CRIMINAL LAW—FORGED TELEGRAMS: QUESTION.

MR. PEEK asked Mr. Attorney General, Whether his attention has been called to the subject of forged telegrams; and, whether, during the Recess, he will consider the propriety of making the Law on the subject more stringent?

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL, in reply, said, his attention had been called to the subject, which was well worthy of attention. He had been in consultation with his right hon. Friend the Postmaster General on the matter. If there was an opportunity in the course of next Session he would endeavour to deal with the subject; but it was not an easy one to take up.

NAVY—THE ROYAL MARINES.

QUESTION.

MR. WATNEY asked the First Lord of the Admiralty, Whether the appointment in the Marine Artillery of "Lieutenant and Acting Adjutant for duties as Military Instructor," has been substituted for that of "Second Captain and Adjutant," thereby reducing the number of Captains by one; and, if so, by what authority?

MR. GOSCHEN: Sir, in a scheme for the re-distribution of the Royal Marines, which is now awaiting an Order in Council to give it effect, it is proposed to substitute a Military Instructor for one of the captains and adjutants, Royal Marine Artillery. This officer is to be a captain or lieutenant, to have passed the Staff College, and to be employed in instructing the officers in military law, field fortification, field sketching and reconnaissance, and military history and administration. This is considered a most desirable change, as the Staff captain and one adjutant are found sufficient for the military and office duties of the Royal Marine Artillery, and an instructor for officers is urgently required. By Board letter of the 7th of March, 1873, their Lordships appointed one of the captains and adjutants (Captain Suther) to be Instructor of Fortification at the Royal Naval College, Greenwich. Pending, therefore, the bringing out of the Order in Council, it was considered advisable to appoint a Staff College officer (Lieutenant Needham) as Acting Adjutant for duties as Military Instructor. As this officer happens to be a subaltern, and no captain is eligible for the appointment, it reduces the number of captains by one; but the change is a most desirable one. The vacancy will be regained on this officer's promotion.

ARMY—THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF IN IRELAND.—QUESTIONS.

MR. ANDERSON asked the Secretary of State for War, If the Correspondence as to the Accounts of the Commander in Chief of the Forces in Ireland is yet complete; if the "portions" of them that "objections have been raised to" by the Accountant General had been objected to by that officer previous to the 10th June, when the Question was first put on the paper; and, if he will state the nature of the "objections" that have been raised, and if they involve any censure to any one, or any repayment of money by the Commander in Chief in Ireland; and, if so, how much?

MR. CARDWELL: Sir, the Correspondence has resulted in the objections raised by the Accountant General being sustained by me. The nature of them was that the periods during which the General was absent from Ireland in excess of the period for which pay during leave is allowed by the Royal Warrant had not been entered in the pay-lists as absent on leave or otherwise, the principal ground assigned being that such absence, which was in a considerable degree absence while attending Parliament, was understood by the General as not being required to be so entered, and as being permitted to carry Staff pay and allowances. The inquiry made in pursuance of the hon. Member's Question brought these circumstances to the knowledge of the Accountant General, and led to the objections which I have sustained. The amount retrenched is £753 11s. The Accountant General, however, informs me that if the hon. Member's Question had not been put objections would have appeared on the face of the accounts now under examination, which would have led to the inquiry. The Correspondence and the pay-list will be laid on the Table without delay if my hon. Friend will move for them. I am glad of the opportunity of saying that the General observes upon the form of the pay-list as being deficient, of which those who see it will judge.

MR. OTWAY asked, if he was to understand that the General commanding-in-chief had certified that he was in Ireland when in reality he was absent?

MR. CARDWELL said, he had already stated the particulars.

MR. ANDERSON asked, if the sum of £753 11s. had been re-paid?

COLONEL NORTH said, surely attendance in Parliament was a performance of duty, and did not involve stoppage of pay.

MR. CARDWELL said, the regimental pay was not stopped, but Staff pay and Staff allowances were stopped. He was willing to lay the pay sheets and the Correspondence on the Table.

CRIMINAL LAW—THE WEAVERHAM COCK-FIGHTING CASE.
QUESTION.

MR. P. A. TAYLOR asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, Whether it is true that in the Weaverham cock-fighting case the magistrates have inflicted the modified penalty of £5 on the persons implicated, they being gentlemen of influence and position, and the fine therefore a nominal punishment; and he would take this opportunity of asking, whether it is true that a boy has recently been imprisoned for two months for ill-treating a cat?

MR. BRUCE: I think, Sir, my hon. Friend's manner of putting Questions is very unfair to the Minister questioned and to the magistrates generally when he attempts to cover all magistrates with such blame as may arise from the misconduct or an error of judgment on the part of one. ["No, no!"] Some days ago my hon. Friend put to me, with reference to this case, on the authority of an unverified statement in a Manchester newspaper, a Question imputing gross partiality to the Weaverham Bench of Magistrates. I was then able to show that the imputation was undeserved, and, indeed, utterly unfounded. My hon. Friend now returns to the charge with the same imputation in another form. He asks me whether the magistrates have not inflicted a modified penalty of £5 on the persons implicated, they being gentlemen of influence and position, and the fine therefore a nominal punishment? Now, Sir, in the first place, the fine is not a modified, but is a maximum, penalty under the Act. In the next place, although there were persons in the position of gentlemen among the defendants, there were also persons of a much humbler rank in life, and only one gentleman was connected with the county (Cheshire) in which the offence was committed. My hon. Friend's complaint against the magistrates appears to be that they did not use the power given them by the 18th section of the Act to commit the offenders to prison without giving them the option of paying a fine. I am not prepared to find fault with the conduct of the magistrates in this respect. It would have been difficult for the magistrates where all parties were equally guilty, and where the only difference lay in their rank and wealth, to distinguish between them, and imprison some of them while they only fined others. It would have been impossible to draw the line. It should also be remembered that no long time has elapsed since these so-called sports, now justly deemed barbarous and disgraceful, were popular amusements, held to be innocent, if not manly. I am glad that the Law has given its sanction to the higher public morality and imposed punishments for such practices as these; but we must not forget that the chief object of punishment is to deter, and that to men of "influence and position" the heaviest part of the punishment is the shame which follows exposure and the conviction for having broken the Law.

AGRICULTURAL LABOURERS MEETING —LEIGHTON BUZZARD — ALLEGED DISTURBANCES.

Mr. BRUCE: I may, Sir, perhaps, be permitted to refer to a Question put to me on Wednesday, the 23rd instant by my noble Friend the Member for Calne (Lord Edmond Fitzmaurice) with reference to the disturbance of a public meeting at Leighton Buzzard. My noble Friend placed his Question on the Paper on Tuesday. The House sat to a very late hour, and I only saw the Question a few minutes before entering the House on Wednesday, at 12 o'clock. I then stated that I had received no information on the subject. On Monday last, in answer to the hon. and gallant Member for Bedfordshire (Colonel Gilpin), the noble Lord stated that I was mistaken, for that I had received and answered a communication on the subject, and that he held my letter in his hand. I have inquired into the matter, and find that, while it was quite true that no memorial or communication specially referring to the Leighton Buzzard disturbance was received at the Home Office, a letter was received from Mr. Joseph Arch complaining of the conduct of the police at two public meetings at which he had not himself been present, one of which meetings was at Leighton Buzzard. Mr. Arch's question was—

"Whether the police are justified in pandering to local farmers and others who, for a pint of beer, are made their dupes in order to put down free speech?"

He was answered by the Under Secretary, in my name, that—

"the Secretary of State has no control over county and borough police, and that any complaints respecting their conduct should, therefore, be addressed to the local authority."

I made my answer in the firm conviction that no memorial emanating from persons actually aggrieved and stating facts within their knowledge would have been answered without being first submitted to me, and I am justified in that belief by the actual facts.

PARLIAMENT—THE NEW PALACE OF WESTMINSTER—THE FRESCOES.

QUESTIONS.

Mr. BOWRING asked the First Commissioner of Works, If it is true that symptoms of decay have recently manifested themselves in additional Frescoes in the Houses of Parliament, especially in those by Mr. Maclise and Mr. Herbert; and, if so, whether he proposes to take immediate steps with a view to arresting, if possible, the further progress of such decay?

Mr. AYTON, in reply, said, it was undoubtedly true that for some time past the surface of these pictures had presented an appearance which greatly detracted from their effect; but what the exact cause of that appearance really was had not hitherto been clearly ascertained. There was a great difference of opinion on the subject. It was doubtful whether the appearance of one of the pictures arose from the natural decay of the picture itself, or from the efflorescence on the surface of some substance capable of being removed without injury to the picture. He had watched the picture with great interest, and had consulted several persons with regard to it. Recently he had the advantage of consulting Mr. Richmond, R.A., who had arrived at the conclusion that the appearance of the picture was owing to an efflorescence which might be removed from the surface, after which it would be nearly as good as ever. The subject, however, was one which required careful consideration. Dr. Percy, the eminent chemist attached to that House, was endeavouring to ascertain the nature of the substance on the pictures. He was also now making arrangements to secure the services of an eminent picture-cleaner, who had been recommended by Mr. Richmond as being best qualified for the purpose, and it was hoped that the result would be satisfactory.

MR. BOWRING asked whether the right hon. Gentleman's remarks applied to Mr. Madise's picture of "The Death of Nelson?"

MR. AYRTON was understood to reply in the affirmative.

FISHERY BOARD (SCOTLAND)—BRANDING FEES.—QUESTION.

MR. MACFIE asked the Secretary to the Treasury, If he intends, or will consider whether he ought, to reduce the fee charged by the Fishery Board in Scotland for branding of herring barrels from the present rate of fourpence per barrel, at which, according to the Brands recent Report, it yields much more than pays expenses, to such lower rate as, while leaving no demand to be made on the Exchequer to cover a deficiency, will be less oppressive to persons engaged in the fishery business?

MR. BAXTER: It is not, Sir, intended at present to reduce the fee charged by the Fishery Board in Scotland for branding herring barrels, but I have no doubt the whole system of branding will eventually be abolished, as it is no part of the business of Government to affix an official stamp to any article of merchandize.

IRELAND—THE IRISH CONSTABULARY.
QUESTION.

SIR FREDERICK W. HEYGATE asked the Chief Secretary for Ireland, Whether, in any scheme to be considered by the Government for the contribution by Irish counties of a share in the cost of the Irish Constabulary, such charge will be proportioned to the relative number of Constabulary required and allotted to each county, and to the cost thereof?

MR. BRUCE: I am requested, Sir, by my noble Friend the Chief Secretary for Ireland to give the following reply to the Question:—It is impossible at present to give the details of the scheme which will be proposed by the Government next Session; but the object will be to give to each county a substantial interest in the reduction of the number and cost of the constabulary force maintained in it. The difficulty lies in devising any plan which will secure this object without imposing on some counties an amount of taxation which might prove excessive.

IRELAND—LABOURERS' COTTAGES.
QUESTION.

SIR FREDERICK W. HEYGATE asked the Chief Secretary for Ireland, Whether he can give any assurance that he will, early next Session, promote a measure to give additional facilities for the erection of Labourers' Cottages in Ireland?

MR. BRUCE (for the Marquess of HARTINGTON) said: I can only promise that the Reports from the Inspectors of the Local Government Board which have been laid on the Table this year shall be carefully considered during the Recess with the view of an early introduction of a measure if we can see our way to making any satisfactory proposal.

PATENT RIGHTS—INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE, VIENNA.—QUESTION.

MR. MACFIE asked the Secretary to the Treasury, If Mr. Webster, Q.C., has been authorised to act or speak on behalf of the Vienna Exhibition Commission in the approaching Conference on Patents for inventions at Vienna; and, whether, if this eminent gentleman's opinion in favour of the policy of Patent Laws is not the opinion of Her Majesty's Government their want of assent thereto will be made known to the Conference?

MR. BAXTER: Sir, Mr. Webster, Q.C., has been authorized by the Commissioners to attend the Conference simply for the purpose of making a Report. It is distinctly laid down that he is not to consider himself as in any respect representing Her Majesty's Government.

POST OFFICE—REGISTRATION OF LETTERS.—QUESTION..

MR. MACFIE asked the Postmaster General, If he will consider whether it is not expedient to encourage the registering of letters that contain stamps, notes, and jewellery by reducing the fee for registration to twopence?

MR. MONSELL: It is very doubtful, Sir, whether a fee of 2d. for the registration of each letter would cover the expenses. Therefore, I can hold out to my hon. Friend no hope of the reduction of the fee.

METROPOLIS—KNIGHTSBRIDGE BARRACKS, MILLBANK, AND HYDE PARK.

QUESTION.

SIR THOMAS BATESON asked the Secretary of State for War, Whether the site at Millbank has been at any time reported on by a Board of Military Medical Officers, with a view to the location there of one of the Household Cavalry Regiments; and, if so, whether their report was favourable or otherwise; whether many tons of ammunition are not frequently stored in the magazine in Hyde Park, with only a non-commissioned officer's guard in charge; and, whether on these grounds the late Duke of Wellington was not opposed to the removal of Knightsbridge Barracks?

MR. CARDWELL: Sir, I have always understood that the Duke of Wellington was favourable to the continuance of Knightsbridge Barracks on their present site. If they shall at any time be removed, it will not be on military grounds, but for other and very different reasons. The fitness of the site at Millbank on sanitary grounds was much canvassed some years ago before the Embankment on the opposite side of the river was made. If at any time Parliament shall be asked to sanction the erection of a barrack on that site, full information of the state of the question as regards the sanitary considerations will no doubt be laid before it. In the meantime, I am informed by the Director of Convict Prisons that it is now a remarkably healthy place. Ammunition for the Guards and Volunteers is kept in the magazine under a sergeant's guard. The hon. Member is welcome to the Return on the subject of which he has given Notice.

SIR THOMAS BATESON said, the right hon. Gentleman had not answered his Question in reference to the Board of Military Medical Officers.

MR. CARDWELL: I will not enter into the details of this subject, because it has been much canvassed; and, in order that the House may be able to form a correct judgment respecting it, all the Papers ought to be on the Table. There was a Committee of Officers a long time ago, of which, I think, Sir Hope Grant was the President, and which condemned the site at Millbank on sanitary grounds. The matter was afterwards referred to the Army Sanitary Committee, and their Report was of a different character, being favourable to the site on the whole, provided certain objectionable buildings were removed on the opposite side of the river. The Embankment on the opposite side of the river has been made in the interval, and therefore the House will not be able to form a judgment without being in possession of the whole of the Papers. When a proposal is made on the subject, no doubt those Papers will be laid before the House.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND—WEST INDIES CLERGY ACT—THE BISHOP OF KINGSTON.—QUESTION.

SIR CHARLES ADDERLEY asked, the Under Secretary of State for the Colonies, Whether Bishop Courtenay of Kingston is not at least equitably entitled to £1,600 a-year from the Consolidated Fund, under the first section of the Act of 1868, for relieving the Consolidated Fund of salaries of West India Bishops and Clergy, which provides against any diminution of the salary of any Bishop which he may have been receiving at the passing of that Act; whether the Right Reverend Reginald Courtenay was not appointed Coadjutor Bishop of Kingston on the retirement of Bishop Spencer of Jamaica in 1856, by Letters Patent expressly providing that he should hold that office till a successor was appointed, and act for all purposes as Bishop of Jamaica; whether the £8,000 assigned out of the Consolidated Fund for that bishopric was not thus divided—£1,400 as retiring pension to Bishop Spencer, £1,600 to Bishop Courtenay; but an excuse for discontinuing the latter payment on the death of Bishop Spencer in 1872, has been found in the mere arrangement that the whole sum was made payable to the latter bishop on the understanding that he should pay over to the former his share; whether the subsequent disestablishment of the Jamaica Church has not precluded the Crown from the recommended appointment of Bishop Courtenay as Bishop Spencer's successor; and what steps Her Majesty's Government will take to protect Bishop Courtenay in his equitable claim, or to aid him in securing the position he has had so assured an expectation to hold in the new voluntary Church of Jamaica?

MR. KNATCHBULL-HUGESSEN: It is difficult, Sir, to give a full answer to the five Questions of my right hon. Friend without making a longer statement than I should feel justified in doing. I will, however, state generally that his first Question turns upon the construction of an Act of Parliament, under which we do not consider that Bishop Courtenay has an equitable claim for £1,600 a-year from the Consolidated Fund. The arrangement by which Bishop Courtenay received a portion of Bishop Spencer's salary during the life-time of the latter must be held to have been a private arrangement between the two Bishops, which terminated on the death of Bishop Spencer. It is true that Bishop Courtenay was appointed Coadjutor Bishop by Letters Patent, which provided that he should hold that office until a successor to Bishop Spencer was appointed; but this evidently referred to the interval which would in any case elapse between the death of Bishop Spencer and the appointment of a successor, if one were appointed. I do not know by whom or to whom Bishop Courtenay's appointment was "recommended;" no expectation was held out to him by authority; but any such appointment, with a salary from the Consolidated Fund, was prevented, not by the Jamaica Church Disestablishment Act, but by the Act passed by my right hon. Friend in 1868, removing these charges from the Consolidated Fund. I must remind the House that this matter has been already before the House of Commons, which decided against the Bishop's claim; and having gone most carefully into the case, with every disposition to do justice, my noble Friend at the head of the Colonial Department has come to the conclusion—in which I entirely concur—that there is no reason to reverse the decision of the House of Commons. As we consider that the Bishop has not established an "equitable claim," we cannot, of course, advise Her Majesty's Government to take steps to put him in a better position.

HARBOURS, DOCKS, AND PIERS ACT, 1847.—QUESTION.

MR. STEVENSON asked the President of the Board of Trade, If he will direct his attention to the 74th section of "The Harbours, Docks, and Piers Act, 1847," as recently interpreted by the Court of Queen's Bench, whereby a shipowner is declared liable for unavoidable accident caused by his ship to a pier, even when it is admitted that no blame attaches to the shipowner or master; and, if he will consider the propriety of amending the Law so that all shipowners in cases of inevitable accident may enjoy the same exemption from liability in such cases as is conferred by the section on shipowners employing a compulsory pilot, and the propriety in every case of a ship's collision with a pier of limiting the liability of the shipowner, as is done in the case of collision with another vessel.

MR. CHICHESTER FORTESCUE, in reply, said, that where the collision was absolutely unavoidable, it was a most difficult question to say which of the two innocent parties was to suffer. It might indeed be said that the ship might easily be in fault, while the pier could not be in fault. He would promise to direct his attention to the subject; but he did not think it possible to deal with particular cases of this sort without raising other points in which harbour authorities were interested as against the shipowner.

POST OFFICE (IRELAND)—SUB-POST-MASTERS.—QUESTION.

MR. PLUNKET (for the Marquess of HAMILTON) asked the Postmaster General, Whether a memorial signed by 250 Sub-Postmasters in Ireland, asking for an increase in the scale of their pay and allowances, has been received by him; whether he will have any objection to lay a Copy of same, and of the answer thereto, if any, upon the Table of the

Sir Charles Adderley

House; and, whether it is the intention of the Postmaster General to refer the case of the Sub-Postmasters of Ireland to the Departmental Commission which is about to inquire as to other branches of the Irish Civil Service?

MR. MONSELL, in reply, said, he had received the memorial to which his hon. and learned Friend referred, and in answer to that Question he had to state that there would be no objection to lay the memorial before the House with his reply to it. In answer to the third Question, he had to state that it was not intended to refer the case of the sub-postmasters of Ireland to the Departmental Commission to which he referred, because the sub-postmasters were appointed exactly in the same way as the sub-postmasters in England and Scotland. There were no fewer than 11,000 sub-postmasters in the United Kingdom, and as there was no difficulty in finding suitable persons who eagerly asked to be appointed, any increase of pay would involve a large additional expenditure, without any corresponding advantage to the public.

EPPING FOREST—EXPENDITURE AND CHARGES.—QUESTION.

MR. R. N. FOWLER asked the First Commissioner of Works, Why the Return "of the public expenditure and charges incurred but not paid under the Epping Forest Acts of 1871-2," ordered by the House on February 13th, has not been laid upon the Table?

MR. AYRTON, in reply, said, the reason why the Return had not been laid on the Table was, that the officer on whom the duty of preparing the Return devolved had somewhat neglected his duty—that was to say, he fell sick; and though he recovered from his sickness he did not recover that particular attention to this Return which was due from him.

POST OFFICE—TELEGRAPH DEPARTMENT—HERRING'S TELEGRAPH PRINTING INSTRUMENT.

QUESTION.

MR. W. M. TORRENS asked the Postmaster General, Whether, in the trials about to be made of Mr. Herring's telegraph printing instrument at the Central Station, he will direct that one or more eminent telegraphists shall be present, to be named by the inventor, in addition to those representing the Department?

MR. MONSELL: Sir, Mr. Herring's instrument has already been very fully tried and reported upon by two eminent telegraphists who are unconnected with the Department. At present no further trial appears to be required. If there should be a further trial, and Mr. Herring should wish any other telegraphists to witness it on his behalf, every facility will be afforded to them. But it must be on the distinct understanding that they are employed by Mr. Herring, and not by the Department.

SUPPLY—CIVIL SERVICE ESTIMATES—THE VOTE FOR DOVER HARBOUR.

QUESTION.

MR. RYLANDS asked the President of the Board of Trade, Whether, seeing that the Vote for Dover Harbour had been carried by a majority of only 1, he would undertake that no proceedings should be taken upon the Vote until after next Session?

MR. CHICHESTER FORTESCUE, in reply, said, he was not aware that it was the duty of Her Majesty's Government to give any further opportunity to the House to exercise its judgment upon the matter. He would remind his hon. Friend that the Vote was a very small one, and that there was no serious opposition or difference of opinion between the House and the Government as to the merits of a completed harbour at Dover. The question was mainly one as to whether they should make any beginning during the present Session.

ARMY—7TH LANCASHIRE MILITIA.

QUESTION.

THE O'DONOGHUE asked the Secretary of State for War, If he has any objection to place upon the Table of the House the whole of the Papers connected with the removal of Lieutenant Langford Rae from the 7th Lancashire Militia?

MR. CARDWELL, in reply, said, the case was one in which the Commander-in-Chief had, with his approval, removed the officer in question. It would not be right to lay upon the Table the Reports of the commanding and inspecting officers.

1885

Parliament—

{ COMMONS }:

Public Business.

1885

PARLIAMENT—PUBLIC BUSINESS.
QUESTIONS.

MR. BAILLIE COCHRANE said, with respect to the Business of the House, he understood the right hon. Gentleman at the head of the Government, that though there was no Supply down for to-morrow, the ordinary Motion for Adjournment would be made to-morrow, with the laudable object of allowing hon. Members, who had Notices on the Paper an opportunity of bringing them forward. He now heard that there was to be no adjournment to be moved to-morrow, but that the House would sit on Saturday. He wished to know, in that case, in what form he could bring before the House to-morrow the Question which stood in his name?

MR. GLADSTONE said, his hon. Friend was quite right in saying that as it would be necessary for the House to sit on Saturday, it would not be possible to afford that opportunity for the Motions of hon. Members which they had anticipated by means of the Motion for the Adjournment. He was, however, going to propose that the House should meet to-morrow at 2, and re-assemble at 9, as usual on Fridays; and the Government would not put down any Order of the Day that would interfere with the Notices of Motion to which reference had been made by his hon. Friend; so that the list would be kept as open for them, he trusted, as it would have been had there been the ordinary opportunity for moving the adjournment. If further Orders should be put down of a nature to interpose a serious obstacle to the bringing forward of his hon. Friend's Motion, he thought it would be right to move that those Orders of the Day be postponed until after the Notices of Motion were taken.

MR. BAILLIE COCHRANE said, in that case he should bring forward his Motion to-morrow.

MR. NEWDEGATE expressed a hope that the recommendations of the Committee of 1861, in reference to this subject, would be observed, and that the Prime Minister would allow the Adjournment of the House to be moved to-morrow, so that hon. Members might have the opportunity they desired of bringing forward their Motions.

MR. GLADSTONE said, he had really no power to put down anything upon the Paper on Supply, as Supply was closed on the introduction of the Appropriation Act.

MR. BAILLIE COCHRANE presumed there would be no such thing as a "Count-out" to-morrow night.

MR. GLADSTONE said, the hon. Gentleman must exercise his influence among his Friends.

In reply to Lord ELCHO,

MR. GLADSTONE said, that to-morrow he hoped to be able to inform the House with regard to the new constitution of the South Kensington Museum. With reference to the business for Friday, this was how the matter stood. To-night the First Orders were the Duke of Edinburgh's Annuity Bill and the Appropriation Bill. He did not anticipate that the first would tend to a prolonged debate; but on the Appropriation Bill a Notice had been given by the hon. Gentleman opposite (Mr. Slater-Booth) which would lead to some discussion. It was possible, therefore, that these two would make such a considerable aggression on the time for the Indian Budget as to make it difficult to finish that subject to-night. It would be recollect that the Government promised the hon. Member for Sheffield (Mr. Mundella) Wednesday for the debate on the Factory Acts Amendment Bill; but, unfortunately, he only obtained about an hour and a half of that day. He therefore felt that his hon. Friend had a first claim on the Government; and if he were disposed to make that claim—a point on which he had not had an opportunity of communicating with his hon. Friend—his Bill would be put down for 2 o'clock. In the event of his not making it, Friday would be available for the continuation of the debate on the Indian Budget, if it were not concluded to-night. Should the hon. Member for Sheffield go on with his Bill, there would be some hours available on Saturday. [A laugh.] The hon. Gentleman who laughed was jocose; but he (Mr. Gladstone) could not make time. He wished it were in his power to do so. It would save an infinity of trouble, and some needless interruptions, which might well be dispensed with. On Monday the right hon. Baronet opposite (Sir Charles Adderley) would have precedence.

LORD ELCHO said, it was unusual to make such a concession as the right hon.

Gentleman proposed to make to the hon. Member for Sheffield, and he wished to know whether it was a personal favour to one Member, or whether the Government meant to support the Bill of the hon. Gentleman?

MR. GLADSTONE said, the Government had formed no opinion as to the measure of the hon. Gentleman, nor was any personal favour intended, but only the fulfilment of a pledge which had not been fully redeemed by the partial debate of yesterday.

MR. BOUVERIE reminded the Government that on Friday, Orders of the Day had precedence over Notices of Motions, so that the hon. Member for Sheffield, without any engagement on the part of the Government, might by the Rules of the House bring on his Bill to-morrow evening if he chose to do so. Remembering, however, that the Bill was now a debating club question, and not a practical question, he hoped the hon. Member would allow Motions to have precedence of it.

MR. FAWCETT asked whether he was to understand that the Indian Budget would be divided into three snips, beginning to-night, continued to-morrow after the Bill of the hon. Member for Sheffield, and concluded on Saturday, and that the hon. Member for Sheffield, if he wished it, would have precedence of the Indian Budget to-morrow?

MR. GLADSTONE answered in the affirmative. He hoped that Parliament would be prorogued on Tuesday, and he wished to divide the interval in the manner most convenient to the House.

MR. FAWCETT gave Notice that upon one of the stages of the Appropriation Bill he should call attention to the way in which the Government managed its Business.

DUKE OF EDINBURGH'S ANNUITY

BILL—[BILL 272]

(Mr. Bonham-Carter, Mr. Gladstone, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer.)

SECOND READING.

Order for Second Reading read.

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That the Bill be now read a second time."—(Mr. Gladstone.)

MR. P. A. TAYLOR, in rising to move that the Bill be read on that day month, said: Mr. Speaker, if it were not the dream of an enthusiast to suppose that there is such a man as an English Republican, no one would feel more than such a man the respect and authority that attaches to the English Monarchy. I have no doubt there is no one in this House more entirely participates in this feeling than the right hon. Gentleman himself, yet it seems to me he is for ever bringing something before the House and the world which has a tendency to derogate from that respect. The Prime Minister brought a Message the other day to the House from Her Majesty, that she rejoiced in the approaching marriage of her second son, under circumstances most favourable to the happiness, and so forth. The people prepared to rejoice in the rejoicings of Her Majesty; but then the Prime Minister had his bitter potion to administer; the people must rejoice with tears, having to pay more taxes. Now, Sir, I have never been a professed enthusiast for Monarchy in the abstract; but I confess there is something to me repugnant and inappropriate in the fact that this ancient Monarchy is for ever being dragged before the already sufficiently oppressed taxpayers, in the character of the daughter of the horse-leech, for ever crying—"Give, give." And, Sir, in my opinion, this position of the right hon. Gentleman is entirely a mistaken one. There is no class in this country, I believe, who are desirous of dealing with the Crown in a niggardly or parsimonious spirit. I believe there is but one desire among all classes of the population, and that is that the Queen should be treated liberally in her Civil List. But what they do desire is, that this should be done upon some intelligible principle, and that they should be able to understand to what extent it is to be carried out—how far that principle is to be made to extend. In a word, the people of this country do not like to be alternately goaded and cajoled, and in either case to be left in utter darkness. The Solicitor General, speaking the other day on the Crown Private Estates Bill, drew a distinction—and a very fine one—between concealment and non-disclosure. I will take either expression, and I will say either concealment or non-disclosure in regard to the accumulations of the Crown and its pecuniary relations with the people, if not a crime, is what is sometimes considered worse than a crime—a blunder. The right hon. Gentleman has been peculiarly unfortunate, for within the last fortnight he has brought into the House, and carried, the Crown Private Estates Act, upon which I must say a few words, as it has an apparent relation to the matter now in hand. That Bill was very tough reading for a layman. I found it more than ordinarily confused and difficult to comprehend, and I do not think the House understood it better, for we had one interpretation from the Prime Minister, and another from the Solicitor General, while the hon. and learned Member for Taunton (Mr. James) did not make it more intelligible and distinct. But it became sufficiently apparent that the idea and principle recognized there was, that the occupant of the Throne can hold and accumulate wealth, for himself or herself, and can give or bequeath it in the form of realty or personality, just as though it were the property of an individual. We have passed that Act, and now the right hon. Gentleman comes to the House and asks for an allowance for one of the sons of the Queen, and bases the demand on the old principle and on the old form. I do not know whether the words used are the same now; but they used to be that the Crown asked Her faithful Commons for a provision for Her son, on the specific grounds that by law She is prevented from providing for him herself. Charles James Fox, on the debate on the Civil List of the Duke of York, in 1792, in which debate he took a warm interest and gave a hearty support to the Crown, laid down this principle—

"With respect to provision for princes of the blood, the first question, when application was made to Parliament would naturally be—Is the Civil List inadequate to the purposes of fully maintaining and supporting them?"—[Parliamentary History, xxix. 1008.]

Now, I think the right hon. Gentleman should let the House and the country distinctly understand what are his views on this matter. Does he hold with the old constitutional doctrine—that the Crown is not entitled to accumulate and bequeath—at any rate, landed possessions? The hon. and learned Member for Taunton (Mr. James) spoke of those who hold that opinion as antideluvian people—behind the spirit of the age. Yet, not so very long since, Sir George Lewis, a high constitutional authority, put this in as strong and powerful language as the English language is capable of. He said—

"It has been deemed a matter of policy in this country to strip and denude the Sovereign of all hereditary property, and to render him during his life entirely dependent upon the bounty of Parliament."

Does the right hon. Gentleman hold with that theory, or does he not? If he holds with the theory that the Crown can hold property, he is bound to show us the necessity of this grant he brings forward, and bound to lay before us an account of the property the Crown has to dispose of; but, if he does not hold with that principle, we want to understand what is the meaning of the Crown Estates Act which the right hon. Gentleman has just passed. The Solicitor General said the other day in relation to the Civil List—"Hon. Members said that if on a future occasion the House should be about to settle the Civil List, and the Crown should be in possession of large landed estates, it might affect the settlement. Certainly it might; but before the House of Commons settled the Civil List it would ask for a statement of what this property consisted of. Had the House never heard of such inquiry being made into the revenues derived from the Duchies of Cornwall and Lancaster?"

This was the view put forward when the object was to find an argument for the Crown Estates Act; but as soon as we have to do with a grant such as is asked for to-day, the Government steadily refuse all information on the subject. In the same debate the right hon. Gentleman (Mr. Gladstone) observed—

"It was only during the present reign that they had learnt to look with any feeling of kindness on the economy and good husbandry of the Civil List. . . . It was for the interest of the country in every sense that there should be thrift and good husbandry in the Civil List."

No doubt, the people do desire economy and good husbandry in the management of the funds which they generously give for the benefit and the comfort of the Crown, and they do desire that they should not be spent lavishly. But what they object to is, the habit of concealment on all these matters. If there were frank openness and freedom as to what are the pecuniary relations between the Crown and the House, these difficulties would never arise. But it has been openly declared and hardly denied, while all inquiry has been steadfastly refused, that the grants in the Civil List for specific expenses based upon the actual expenditure of the last reign, amounting to upwards of £300,000 a-year, have been largely economized; that the money has not been expended; that the honour and dignity of the Crown did not therefore demand these large amounts; but that the savings are not applied in diminution of taxation—a species of thrift which would indeed be for the interest of the country—but that large sums are, by the connivance of the Treasury, systematically placed to the credit of the Privy Purse. I do not know whether it is true or not. I should like to believe that there is not a word of truth in it; but with this concealment is it wonderful that it should be believed that the result is an enormous aggregation of the Privy Purse? It must be common to most of us to hear it whispered, with every appearance of belief, that enormous accumulations have, in fact, been made by such savings from the Civil List. I mentioned, in giving Notice of opposition to this Vote on Tuesday, that this demand was absolutely unprecedented, and this I will now proceed to prove. My assertion is, that there is no instance,—take the last century—in which a demand for money has been made upon the marriage of any Royal Prince, apart from the question of its importance to the country in regard to the succession to the Throne. Now, I do not know whether it is necessary to enter into the question of the possible succession to the Throne in this case. But this point was only just alluded to, and had any importance attached to it, the House would hardly have been content with the off-handed way in which the Prime Minister answered the hon. Member for North Warwickshire (Mr. Newdegate) and the hon. Member for North-east Lancashire (Mr. Holt), as to the religion of the Bride that is to be. I should entirely agree that it was an impertinence to ask that question; but what reason could the right hon. Gentleman have for saying, that it was no use to ask it, unless he means to repeal the Act of Settlement. It is really just as easy to ask the Grand Duchess whether she is a member of the Greek Church, as to ask her whether she is a Papist. But there is not, in fact, any idea that this marriage affects the immediate succession to the Throne. As to another assertion which may be made—that it is distinctly for the political interests of this country that an alliance should be made between us and Russia—I will allude only very briefly. The time when political interests were supposed to be forwarded by marriage alliances has passed away. When I remember the time of the Crimean War, and the lame and impotent conclusions by which we gave up those things which we once thought worth fighting for, and which we believed we had justly obtained, I believe it is true that we lose more by diplomacy than we gain by force of arms. Without sinister anticipations, I am not at all sure whether the interests of this country will be advanced by an alliance with the Colossus of the East. His aims and purposes are rather at variance, than in harmony with ours. I come now to one of the grounds on which I oppose this grant, and that is that it is unprecedented. The first instance to which I shall refer is in 1792, when provision was moved for the Duke of York, specifically on the ground that it was highly desirable that there should be a direct heir to the throne, and the heir had shown no apparent desire for marriage. The position of affairs is so well described in the words of Sir Matthew W. Ridley, in 1815, that with the permission of the House, I will quote them. He says, speaking on the question of the allowance to the Duke of Cumberland—

"Nothing came near to this question as a precedent, except the marriage of the Duke of York, which only bore to it a very remote analogy. On making a provision for the Duke of York, a view was had to the probability of the succession of his marriage, as the Prince of Wales entertained at that time no idea of marrying. But a material change had since occurred." [In the birth of the Princess Charlotte.] "With respect, however, to the marriage of the Duke of Cumberland, it was not one which ought to be looked at in a national point of view, or which rendered it necessary on this ground for Parliament to step in to vote a grant for increasing the income of the parties."—[1 Hansard, xxxi. 1024.]

That grant was refused. The whole case changed within the next few years. The whole nation mourned with an intensity—as I have been told by those who preceded me—before unheard of, the death of the Princess Charlotte. The position of affairs is described in Martineau's History of England during the 30 years' peace—

"Some rather remarkable proceedings took place in the course of the Session in relation to the Royal Family, no fewer than four members of which were married in the early part of this year. 1st Elizabeth, 3rd daughter;—in this case the two Houses of Parliament were asked only to offer their congratulations to the Regent, the Queen, and the new-married couple. As the bride had completed her 48th year, her marriage could not be expected to contribute anything towards continuing the line of the old King, who now, notwithstanding his 15 sons and daughters, twelve of whom were still alive, was left without any descendant beyond the 1st generation."

April 18th—a few days later—Messages were sent to both Houses from the Regent stating that treaties of marriage had been drawn up for the Duke of Clarence and Duke of Cambridge, and which went on to say that—

"After the afflicting calamity which the Prince Regent and the nation have sustained in the loss of his Royal Highness's beloved and only child, the Princess Charlotte, his Royal Highness is fully persuaded that the House of Commons will feel how essential it is to the best interests of the country that his Royal Highness should be enabled to make a suitable provision for such of his royal brothers as shall have contracted marriage with the consent of the Crown."—[1 Hanover, xxxviii. 1.] [Asked £10,000 for Clarence, and £6,000 for Cumberland, Cambridge, and Kent if he should marry. The £10,000 was reduced to £6,000 with loud shouts of approbation; the £6,000 for Cambridge was carried by 177 against 96, and the Duke of Cumberland's negatived.]

Of the proposed Vote of £6,000 a-year for the Duke of Kent the same historian says—

"Of all these Royal marriages this was the one which the heart of the country went most along with; the Duke of Kent had attached himself to the popular party, and the relationship of the lady to Prince Leopold and the lamented Princess Charlotte, was of itself sufficient to awaken a strong interest in her favour. If the nation might have had its wish, it would have been from the first that that should happen which has actually fallen out, that to the issue of this marriage the inheritance of the Crown should descend. Yet even the grant of the additional £6,000 a-year to the Duke of Kent was stoutly opposed in the Commons; 51 Members, among whom were Lord Althorp, Mr. Coke of Norfolk, Lord Folkestone, Mr. Lambton, and Mr. Tierney voting against it."

All these extracts bear upon the point that it was essential there should be Heirs to the Throne. I will further, with your permission, read a few extracts from the reports of that time, and I may say in reading over those reports that, although I have always been a zealous Parliamentary Reformer, yet I have felt a degree of shame that the debates of the unreformed Parliament showed a manly independence and absence of sycophancy and flattery which a reformed Parliament might do well to imitate—

Lord CASTLEREAGH said—"Of the twelve children of his majesty, seven were sons, and five daughters. But not one of them had a child to present a hope of direct inheritance of the throne. . . . To excite some of the members of the royal family to marriage, was now an object of much importance to the country. . . . A single marriage would not satisfy the anxiety of the people."—[Ibid. 79-80.]

"Mr. CANNING—With respect to his royal highness the duke of Clarence, he could assure the House that his royal highness would not have thought of contracting this marriage, . . . if it had not been pressed upon him as an act of public duty."—[Ibid. 107.]

"Mr. BROUHAM—He was justified in saying, that while the House would not hesitate to vote some allowance to those members of the royal family whom it was desirable to see married, and who would not be enabled otherwise to contract marriages, so they were bound by their duty to their constituents to refuse grants to those to whom they were not necessary. . . . If the noble lord, therefore, could not assert that without this allowance his Royal Highness's private and public income would not enable him to marry, he should give the motion his negative altogether. . . . It was also understood that her majesty had very considerable property. . . . It seemed to be natural, that those who had large incomes, and property saved by a wise practice of economy, should furnish at least a part of the assistance wanted."—[Ibid. 122-3.]

"Mr. TISBURY: If the noble lord would say that the proposed marriage could not take place unless this grant were acceded to, he would immediately vote for it—if not, he felt that he must vote against it."—[Ibid. 136.]

"Mr. PLUMBERT: The application of the noble lord rested on the abstract principle, independent of time or circumstances—that on the marriage of any individual connected with the Crown, his income should, of necessity, be increased. Where precedents were to be found for such a system, he knew not; and he was sure that nothing in reason or in justice could be discovered to sanction it."—[Ibid. 137.]

Mr. Curwen (on Duke of Kent)—

"He did not know that he had ever acceded to any pledge, by which he was bound, in all cases, to make a provision for every branch of the royal family, when a marriage was about to take place. . . . Had not the illustrious duke parents? Was not her majesty in possession of a very considerable sum, derived from the privy purse?"—[Ibid. 727-8.]

Now, I say that the whole course of these debates proves the position which I have laid down—that there is no precedent in the last century for the grant upon marriage of an additional allowance to a Royal Prince, unless it could be shown to have some distinct relation to the interests of the people with regard to the succession to the Throne. I say upon this ground the grant to the Duke of Edinburgh fails altogether, for it is not on the ground of any particular advantage to the community that his marriage takes place. But suppose the marriage was an advantage to the country, he has £15,000 a-year already, and at any rate we are bound to know that an increase is necessary, and until the right hon. Gentleman gives us that assurance he is not entitled to ask for an increase of that amount. I say £15,000 a-year is, under any circumstances, in my opinion, ample allowance. At present this country is divided into two great classes, the veriest poor, and a small number of the very rich; putting on one side, for the moment, the middle class. Now, I look upon it as unconstitutional and dangerous for the Prime Minister to be continually intimating to us that the incomes of our Princes should be put on the level of the wealthiest classes in this country. But, Sir, this grant is not as Lord Brougham said, the question of amount—it is a question of principle. I shall not profess to speak for any number of persons outside the House—such assertions are easily made and equally easily denied—but I have some right to speak for 10,000 working men of Leicester, enfranchised by the last Reform Bill, who have sent me here to look after their interests. They are persons who, with the utmost industry and exertion, can do little more than exist, and who certainly do not enjoy many of the luxuries of life; and I am not here to give their sanction—however small the increase to their taxation—to an addition to a rent-roll which even as £15,000 a-year will appear to them something like the wealth of the cave of Aladdin. I do not know what the hon. Members for Scotland are going to do in this matter; but I would ask them whether, when one-third of their population live in houses of one room, this is a time for an increase to a Royal income, which already amounts to £15,000 a-year? But perhaps the most remarkable feature of this proposal is that it is made by an economical Government; by a Government which largely based its claims to the confidence of the people on the ground of their intended economy. I fear that their economy comes to an end when they have practised the principles of what they call political economy. This Government based its claims to the confidence of the people on the ground that they were to study economy. I fear they only study economy when they practise political economy upon some overworked Post Office official, or some underpaid Civil Service clerk; but when they come to a Zanzibar contract, or a Royal requisition, the lavish looseness of their economy was never exceeded. We get some insight into the elastic nature of the economical principles of the Government in a speech by the hon. Gentleman the Under Secretary of State for the Home Department (Mr. Winterbotham) who at Colchester, the other evening, in the course of an admirable address, said—

"The present quiet he disliked, and preferred a good hot contest. It was in these quiet times that measures of class and personal interests got the upper hand of Parliament. For instance, one strong point of the Liberal programme was the question of economy, and no doubt, great reductions had been made; but in this quiet time they found men representing small personal interests getting up, and through them resolutions were passed pledging men to expenditure which, in the earlier days of the Government, would have been impossible."

There was published a few days ago a list of the pensions granted in the last year—a list of England's penurious liberality. Seventeen names! One only need glance at it to see that they represent an amount of worth and useful work which a nation may well be proud of. Seventeen names, with an average of less than £75 each; such names as Somerville, Waghorn, and Livingstone. To these the right hon. Gentleman adds an eighteenth—H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh for condescending to marry the richest heiress in Europe, £25,000 a-year! In conclusion, I will venture to address one word to the independent Members of this House. Let them judge of the truth of what I have said upon its own merits; do not let them despise it because it comes from one of the humblest Members of this House—one of a small band of so-called extreme men. We are usually governed by party in this House, and in case of any gross outrage—some enormous extravagance to be carried out—there will be lynx eyes ready to warn this House; but on questions connected with Royal dowries the independent Members are left to their own resources. There is a conspiracy of acquiescence between the two parties in the House. We are told in the memoirs of Baron Stockmar, that ever since the unfortunate cutting-down of the allowance to the Prince Consort such matters have been arranged be-the great body of the House does not agree with him, and I am perfectly convinced that the great body of his fellow countrymen do not share his sentiments. He belongs to a very advanced party. He thinks there is a good time coming—Heaven forbid I should live to see it—when we shall have no Crown, no Peers, no parsons, no partridges, and even no Church. Such are, I believe, the aspirations of my hon. Friend; but such are, I think, not the feelings of the great bulk of Englishmen. They as well as I, I am sure, feel not only in reference to ourselves, but comparing our condition with that of neighbouring nations, that we ought to be very thankful we have a Royal Family, and that the race of that Family is likely to be continued. The very facts which have been brought forward by my hon. Friend indicate to what risks we might be reduced in that respect, for I believe it to be in the highest degree essential to the happiness and prosperity, and even the liberties of this country that we should always have a Constitutional Royal Family. The statesmen of the time to which my hon. Friend has referred contemplated—and must necessarily have contemplated—with alarm that the succession to the House of Brunswick might have failed altogether; and, looking upon the matter in the lowest and most utilitarian point of view—laying aside any question of sentiment, and that feeling of loyalty which, I believe, still burns in the hearts of the great majority of our countrymen—it would, in my opinion, be the greatest possible affliction to the material interests, to the commerce and progress of the nation, that questions of dispute as to the succession to the Throne of these realms should arise, and that we should be subjected to anything like that which we see on the other side of the Bay of Biscay in the Spanish Peninsula. But it is not upon this lower ground that I base my support of the present Bill. We have in this country a Royal Family who sympathize with us in our pursuits and feelings, who enter into our ordinary enjoyments, whom we see day by day, and who endeavour to play a useful part among their countrymen. The particular Prince, the grant to whom we are now discussing, takes his part like an Englishman in discharging the duties of his station. He belongs to a profession which is most popular among us, he has distinguished himself as an officer in that profession, and is supposed to be one of its ornaments. Are we, then, who represent the taxpayers of this country, to say that we shall debar him or the other Princes of the Royal Family from entering into domestic life? [“No, no!”] Yes, it really comes to that—the Royal Princes of a previous generation to whom my hon. Friend referred, appear to have considered themselves debarred, owing to the arrangements made in their case, from entering into domestic life. We regard that as the happiest side of English life; at least I do for one, so long as the ladies have not that preponderance in the state for which my hon. Friend wishes, but which I say Heaven forbid. But as long as the home and the fireside are the true objects and sources of happiness of English men and women, so long we ought, I think, to do all in our power, within reasonable and moderate bounds, to promote those objects in the case of a Royal Family, which for the best part of two centuries has contributed largely to the prosperity, welfare, happiness, and enjoyment of the people over whom they reign. I will only add that I give my most hearty support to the proposal of the Government.

MR. GLADSTONE: I am extremely sorry that my hon. Friend (Mr. Taylor) has found it necessary to offer an opposition to this Bill, as it will entail upon me the necessity of detaining the House for a few minutes; because, as he has been compelled by his sense of duty to enter upon a discussion of the question, it would not be right that I should leave the points mentioned by him unnoticed, although I believe, so far as the general sentiments of the vast majority of the House are concerned, they have been expressed with perfect truth by the hon. and gallant Gentleman opposite (Colonel North) and my right hon. Friend who sits behind me. In the first place, as to the charges of the two hon. Gentlemen against the Government, I will dispose of them very briefly. My hon. Friend says I have maintained a habit of concealment as to the condition and circumstances of the Royal Family. He gave no particulars of that charge, and I affirm that I have maintained no such habit of concealment. I believe, myself, that, in a reasonable sense, the better the country understands the circumstances of the Royal Family the better it will be satisfied. But the hon. Gentleman says my doctrine is that the income of the Duke of Edinburgh ought to be raised to the level of that of the richest classes in the country. I appeal to the House whether I laid down any such doctrine. Nothing fell from me that could by any licence of exaggerated construction be twisted into such a doctrine. The hon. Gentleman must know perfectly well that the wealthiest classes in this country—the great manufacturers, merchants, and landowners—have incomes far exceeding that which we ask the House to vote on this occasion; and he must also know—or ought to know—that the incomes of members of the Royal Family are, to a considerable extent pledged, and, I may say, predestined to meet expenses in the nature of establishments, with regard to which the demands of society leave them no option whatever; whereas the wealthy merchant or manufacturer may spend his money exactly as he pleases. Therefore, nothing could be more unjust than the comparison the hon. Member has drawn in that respect. He also twists the Government as to its economy. I suppose he was not here during the discussions on the Supreme Court of Judicature Bill, or he would have known whether, as to the salaries of the Judges of the new Court, we were more yielding than we were in regard to the salaries of clerks. The hon. Gentleman says Mr. Fox asked in the last century, whether the Civil List was adequate for the maintenance of the Royal Princes? and he states that the Liberal leaders of the present day are making demands which would not have been made by Mr. Fox. I can give him a pretty good proof of the state of circumstances in which Mr. Fox spoke of the adequacy of the Civil List. The Civil List was, at that time, of an enormous amount, and was also charged with many public expenses with which it is not now charged, but it was computed to yield a larger sum to pay for the expenditure of the Court than the present Civil List. But what were the circumstances in which Parliament was placed in those golden days to which my hon. Friend referred? Why, Sir, they were these: that although George III. was proverbially economical, and although he was a most honourable and upright man, yet demands for the payment of his debts on the Civil List were made to Parliament and answered by Parliament in 1769, in 1777, in 1802, in 1804, in 1805, in 1815, and in 1816. The aggregate amount of those demands was £3,297,000. These were the circumstances of the time to which the speech of my hon. Friend, if his reference was worth anything, would tend to carry us back. Then he tells us that the late Sir George Lewis said the policy of this country was to strip the Crown of hereditary property. He did not give us the reference to the passage; but he knows perfectly well that when Sir George Lewis spoke of that he spoke of the Crown estates, and made no allusion to the few hundred acres of land that surround Osborne, or the few thousand acres of moor that surround Balmoral; and my hon. Friend's reference could only have the effect of bewildering the House if it were not too well informed for that to be possible. The hon. Member further says I gave the other day an off-hand answer to the hon. Members for North-east Lancashire (Mr. Holt) and North Warwickshire (Mr. Newdegate). At any rate, I gave more of an answer than the House appeared to desire; and I had the most intelligible admonition from the House that it would be better pleased if I gave no answer at all. I gave that reply not because the House required it, but because, perhaps, some people out-of-doors who are not well informed on the subject—probably some of them may be in Leicester—might have misunderstood my silence on that occasion. It would be easy for me, if it were necessary, to give the assurance to the House, which, I think, is really quite needless, as to the intentions of the Crown, which could never be doubted in the case of a British Sovereign, and least of all in the case of Her present Majesty, to observe in letter and in spirit the ancient laws governing the succession to the Throne and the marriages of members of the Royal Family. And if the question had been asked of me, not in the manner in which it was asked, as to the personal habits which the illustrious Princess was to pursue, but with regard to that in which the country might naturally feel an interest—namely, the children with which I hope the union may be blessed—I should have had no hesitation in saying that the children will be brought up in the Protestant religion as professed by the Duke of Edinburgh. My hon. Friend went on to say it was requisite that the Civil List of this country should be founded on an intelligible principle. Well, I contend that it is founded on an intelligible principle. You must proceed in either of two ways—either you must give the Queen a Civil List with a very large margin, and then you may fairly expect that she will not come to Parliament to make provision for the Royal children; or, if you choose, you may give Her a Civil List carefully adapted to the probable expenditure of the Court, and then you may be prepared to face contingencies. Which of these courses is the most constitutional? I affirm that the course actually pursued is so. It maintains the control of Parliament; it enables Parliament to observe the conduct of the Royal Prince; to back up the parental authority of the Sovereign, and to form its own judgment from time to time as to the course it may be right to adopt. But the doctrine of the hon. Member, if it has any effect, comes practically to this—that we are at the commencement of every reign not merely to reckon the amount of the probable expenses of the Privy Purse, and have a Civil List proportioned to that amount, but that we should also throw in a large sum to enable the Sovereign to make provision for her younger children, and thus establish to a great extent the independence of the Crown of Parliament, instead of its dependence upon Parliament. If that dependence is to be established, as I hope it always will be, it requires the exercise of great wisdom and discretion on the part of Parliament to meet that state of things. It would be alike unwise and ungenerous for Parliament—for purposes such as seem to be contemplated by my hon. Friend—to take advantage of that arrangement which binds the Crown to come to Parliament to provide for these occasions when they arise. My hon. Friend has laid down in one part of his speech something like a proposition, with which it is practicable to grapple. He says there is no precedent for a grant on a Royal marriage except with reference to the succession to the Crown. That is in the first place not correct, and in the next place it is not relevant. As to the case of the Duke of Clarence, the third son of George III., the hon. Gentleman is aware that on that occasion, when he quoted the language of Mr. Canning, which did not fail to amuse the House, the House was willing to vote, and did vote, a sum to be offered on the marriage of the Duke of Clarence, although not so much as he expected; and that, acting ingenuously on the declaration which Mr. Canning made, he allowed the matter to go by. But there is another case—namely, that of the Duke of Cambridge, who was the youngest son of George III., and, in respect to that Prince, who had £21,000 a-year, an additional £6,000 was voted in 1820 on his marriage. Therefore, my hon. Friend is not accurate in stating that these steps have not been taken by Parliament otherwise than in reference to the succession to the Crown—unless, indeed, he deprives his own proposition of all meaning by saying that everything that is given on the marriage of a Royal Prince has reference to the succession to the Crown; and in that case we have a right to claim that our proposal should have the benefit of that principle. But my hon. Friend's proposition is irrelevant. The question is whether the aggregate allowance which is proposed is an unbecoming allowance; is it an extravagant allowance? My hon. Friend speaks of the 10,000 men of Leicester who would oppose the vote. I desire to say that I have more faith in them than he has; and I doubt whether he has correctly represented their opinions. What is the real state of things? £130,000 a-year is now the aggregate of the incomes granted from the taxes of the country to the Royal Family, together with £385,000 for the Civil List. These sums make a trifle more than £500,000 per annum; and I ask, whether, for a country with an annual income of at least £800,000,000, that is, after all, an extravagant sum. And not only that, but, looking at the number of men in the country who count their share of that vast revenue by tens, fifties, and some even by hundreds of thousands, we maintain that, under those circumstances, allowances of this kind must have some relation to the state of society, some reference to the expectations formed from those social relations and ties which it would be very difficult to break, and which it would be mischievous to break.

if the thing were possible. I was sorry to find my hon. Friend use against this proposal the argument that it was to be rejected because the Duke of Edinburgh was about to marry the wealthiest heiress of Europe. My hon. Friend was well told by the hon. and gallant Member opposite that if he chooses to declare on his own authority this illustrious Princess to be the wealthiest heiress of Europe, he ought to be certain that such is the case. Does he know it? He does not know it. He has taken up the idle rumours of the street — rumours doubling and trebling anything that we have the least reason to suppose will be possessed by the illustrious Princess. I rejoice to believe—although we are not in possession of accurate particulars—that this Princess is well endowed relatively to the usual rates of such jointures. But, I ask, are we really reduced so low that because a British Prince is going to marry a Princess abroad who has somewhat more than would, perhaps, be commonly found to be possessed in these cases, we are to go, cap in hand, to make that marriage, and to require and pray that there may be deducted from the allowance we are to vote as much as has been added on by the fact of her being a wealthy Princess? Does the hon. Gentleman think he could himself stand up in the face of that 10,000 men and make such a proposal? For my part I reject the idea altogether. I submit to the House that the real question is the reasonableness of this allowance. Is it to be a reasonable allowance in the aggregate? It is politic and it is wise that, with the sanction and approval of Her Majesty, instead of giving the full allowance to the young Princes while they were still bachelors, we should reserve a portion of it until they are married. I say that we are acting on a sound and wise principle. If, on the other hand, it be the judgment of this House, in the circumstances in which we are placed, that £25,000 a-year is an improper and extravagant sum for us to vote for the second son of the Queen of Great Britain and Ireland, in the century and the society in which we live, and with the expectations which are entertained by a person of that station, then let us vote with my hon. Friend. I believe, on the contrary, that the firm conviction of the House is exactly in the opposite direction; and I entreat hon.

Members to vote by such a majority as will distinctly express the view of the entire Parliament of this country that they will grant to Her Majesty a sum, which we believe to be moderate and just, for I think that if we fell short of it we should fall short of the duty we owe to the Queen and the country.

Question put, "That the word 'now' stand part of the Question."

The House divided:—Ayes 162; Noes 18: Majority 144.

Main Question put, and agreed to.

Bill read a second time, and committed for To-morrow, at Two of the clock.

NOES.

|                         |                    |
|-------------------------|--------------------|
| Bright, J. (Manchester) | Miller, J.         |
| Brown, A. H.            | Muntz, P. H.       |
| Buckley, N.             | Potter, T. B.      |
| Carter, R. M.           | Rylands, P.        |
| Dilke, Sir C. W.        | Shaw, R.           |
| Dixon, G.               | Wedderburn, Sir D. |
| Ewing, H. E. Orum-      | White, J.          |
| Fawcett, H.             |                    |
| Lawson, Sir W.          | TELLERS.           |
| M'Laren, D.             | Anderson, G.       |
| Mellor, T. W.           | Taylor, P. A.      |

CONSOLIDATED FUND (APPROPRIATION) BILL.

(Mr. Bonham-Carter, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Baxter.)

SECOND READING.

Order for Second Reading read.

MR. SCLATER-BOOTH said, he was sorry to stand between the House and the Appropriation Bill, the more so as he agreed with the First Lord of the Treasury that such a course should be reserved for occasions of importance. He conceived, however, that he had ample justification both by reports of recent Committees and by observations which had fallen from hon. Members in debate during the last few weeks, in drawing attention to the unsatisfactory relations at present existing between the Treasury and the other Departments of the State. If he required further justification it might be found in the fact that when the present Board of Treasury was first constituted it assumed a new and unprecedented shape, because a third Lord was added in the person of the right hon. Member for Halifax (Mr. Stansfeld), and a fourth in the person of a noble Marquess from "another place" (the Marquess of Lansdowne), who was kind enough to serve his apprenticeship in public business without salary. At the commencement of the Session of 1869, he drew the attention of the Chancellor of the Exchequer to these changes, and asked for an explanation, which was then given; but he still thought those changes were made in the wrong direction. What was required, in his opinion, was to strengthen not the political representation, but the permanent element of the Treasury. It would seem that the Government on reflection agreed in the justice of those criticisms, for when the then Secretary of the Treasury (Mr. Ayrton) was removed to the Office of Works, the Third Lord took his place, and the vacancy thus created was not filled up. In process of time the right hon. Gentleman opposite (Mr. Baxter) succeeded to the Secretaryship of the Treasury, who, although he had left his mark at the Admiralty, had not, if he might be permitted to say so, taken that part in his present office to which by his talents and previous exertions he was entitled. With regard to matters arising out of the Committee of Public Accounts, that Committee made a Report in March suggesting that an inquiry should be made by the Treasury into the irregularities then existing in certain Departments. An inquiry was instituted, and the result had since been laid before the House; but it appeared that the inquiry took three months to report. He should have thought three weeks instead of three months would have sufficed for such a work. What had been the consequence? The debate on the subject was hurried over in four hours, while if it had taken place at an earlier period of the Session, it might advantageously have occupied two nights. It seemed that the regulations for the due disposal of the Savings Banks money had been set aside so long ago as 1868, and that fact must have been well known to the Treasury officials; and yet up to the present hour those regulations had never been insisted upon. When the Treasury Minute was produced, in consequence of the Commissioners' Report, he observed that this flagrant omission to comply with the terms of the Act of Parliament was not even alluded to. The Treasury Minute did indeed contain a clause to the effect that the Treasury would determine, after communication with the Post Office authorities, the form in which the different statements of accounts were to be rendered, and that it might be necessary to appoint a Committee on the subject; but this seemed to him a perfunctory way of dealing with what might easily have been dealt with on the spot. The other day the Chancellor of the Exchequer and his private Secretary, in their dealings with Mr. Scudamore, and in relation to the national business of the Post Office, really assumed functions which the Treasury Department ought, in his opinion, to undertake; and the Report of the Select Committee on the Cape of Good Hope and Zanzibar Contract confirmed the same view. In that case the transactions were sometimes conducted by the proper officers of the Treasury and the Postmaster General; but very frequently by the Chancellor of the Exchequer and his private Secretary behind the back of the Postmaster General. It was probable that if the Zanzibar Contract had gone through the usual process the case would have presented itself more clearly to the mind of the right hon. Gentleman. During the whole of the Summer of 1872 the Secretary to the Treasury took no part in the arrangement of the contracts, although he was an official who ought to have been consulted, because he had been the exponent of the policy of the present Government in those matters. Over and over again in the last Parliament that right hon. Gentleman brought forward the cases of the Cunard, the Peninsular and Oriental, and this very African contract, and he was supported in his views by the present President of the Poor Law Board and other Members now on the ministerial benches. The first thing the present Government did was to instruct the noble Marquess then at the head of the Post Office (the Marquess of Hartington) to lay on the Table a Motion altering the Standing Orders, and laying down the rule that no contract should be valid until it was approved by the vote of that House. The Chancellor of the Exchequer appeared the other day to complain of this rule; but as he was a Member of the Government who proposed it, he must be taken to have approved of it. He agreed with the right hon. Gentleman that the rule was sometimes inconvenient, although from what had occurred it was probable that postal contracts would not be so numerous in future as they had been in past times. This was, however, only another instance of the want of accord between the right hon. Gentleman and the other Members of the Government. It appeared that the Secretary to the Treasury signed some of these papers without having read them and without knowing what they contained. Being asked a question on this point by the Committee, he said that he had initialled these papers ministerially; whereas the Chancellor of the Exchequer said there was no such thing as initialling papers ministerially. The Chancellor of the Exchequer flatly contradicted the Secretary to the Treasury, and said that the latter was responsible, and that he (the Chancellor of the Exchequer) was not. He thought the House had cause to complain that the Treasury, as a Department, was not allowed to have its full share in making arrangements, before the Chancellor of the Exchequer came in to approve of or to alter them, and that they had no record in the Treasury of the detailed operations in connection with the subject, which he thought ought to have preceded the action of the right hon. Gentleman. The inquiries before the Civil Service Expenditure Committee disclosed a like unsatisfactory state of things. Their Report dealt mainly with the clerical establishment of the Departments, and with the question whether the Treasury exercised proper control in fixing these establishments and regulating the public expenditure. This Committee also regretted to find that more harmonious action did not prevail between the Treasury and the Departments. They especially referred to the controversy which had prevailed for a long time between the Treasury and the Board of Trade as to the establishment of the latter Department, and pointed out the absurd result of that controversy, which ended in the fixing of an establishment which was disapproved as excessive both by the Treasury and by the permanent head of the Board of Trade itself. With regard to the mode in which compensation was granted on the abolition of certain offices, the Act of Parliament required that under special circumstances a full salary should be granted; but it did not appear that the proper officers of the Treasury had ever made the necessary inquiry into special circumstances. He thought that the natural authority and responsibility of the officers of the Treasury should have been allowed to have full sway. It was the absence of that method of proceeding which seemed to him to demoralize the action of the Treasury, and to render its relations with the other public Departments far from satisfactory. With regard to the examination of clerks for the different Departments, the Orders in Council provided that the head of each Department should regulate the mode of examination for his Department in consultation with the Civil Service Commissioners; but the new system which had been introduced by the Chancellor of the Exchequer superseded the Orders in Council, and if it was intended to pervade the whole service, the public ought to be informed of the change. Another Report from a Select Committee, laid on the Table to-day, related to writers in the Civil Service. After repeated efforts by the hon. Member for Chatham (Mr. Otway), this Committee was appointed in order to "let down" the Government easily from the position they had taken up, and he believed the decision of the Committee upset the policy of the Government on this subject. It was a most extraordinary and unprecedented thing to see the House of Commons night after night and week after week taking up the cause of the servants of the Crown against the Treasury; but he feared the Government were in the habit of resisting the claims of public servants too long, and then they were obliged to yield to pressure in the House of Commons, perhaps twitting the House in the next Session for forcing expenditure upon the Government. Many instances of this kind must be in the recollection of the House of Commons, and he need not dwell upon them. The Supplementary Estimates also exhibited, in his opinion, an unsatisfactory state of things, showing that the Treasury did not make up its mind in due time upon the proposals which it desired to submit to Parliament. The greater part of these Supplementary Estimates might have been decided upon before the meeting of Parliament, or, if not, they might well have been left over till Parliament met again. He would not allude to the controversy respecting the embankment of land adjoining the Houses of Parliament; but everyone must see here a want of harmonious action between the Treasury and the Department of Works as between the Treasury and the Board of Trade, which was much to be regretted, and which would, he hoped, be remedied before the next meeting of Parliament. The position of the Treasury, as the great controlling Department, quite irrespective of the Chancellor of the Exchequer for the time being, should be maintained and strengthened by every means this House could command. There was no security for public economy so great as the security afforded by the traditional habits and policy of the Treasury. The great abilities of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, however, should be reserved for great occasions, instead of being spent in doing the work of subordinate officers in his own Department. He thought it would be well if notice were given to the other Departments that the authority of the Treasury would be more strictly maintained than it formerly was. The subject was worth attention, for the public must feel that the existing state of things was unsatisfactory.

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER expressed his acknowledgments to the hon. Gentleman opposite for the very fair and temperate manner in which he had touched on topics which, no doubt, in other hands might have admitted of very different treatment. He also thanked the hon. Gentleman for the opportunity thus afforded him of giving explanations which it was desirable the House should receive and which he was very anxious to make. With his permission he would first touch on the last point noticed by the hon. Gentleman—namely, that relative to the embanking a portion of the Thames to the South of the House. He was not going into the controversy on this question, but wished to offer a personal explanation. He read this morning that there was one thing he could not deny—namely, that the Treasury had altered an Estimate of another Department, not only in its amount, but in its destination — by which, no doubt, was meant the purpose for which it was intended—without consulting the other Department. This statement was an entire mistake. He held in his hand a letter from the Board of Works, enclosing an Estimate which was divided into three parts—A, B, and

C. A was for £1,000 to be employed in completing the purchase of land; B was for £7,500 for embanking; and C for erecting public buildings, no amount being stated for that object. Then there was a memorandum entering into details, setting forth that the £7,500 was part of £35,000 which would be ultimately required for the purpose of the Embankment, and as to C, the memorandum added—"The nature and extent of the public buildings not having been determined upon, no Estimate has yet been presented." The Treasury drew its pen through the part of the Estimate relating to the public buildings, with reference to which no amount was mentioned. That was all that was done, and no difference whatever was made in the amount or the purpose of the Estimate. In taking the course they had adopted the Treasury were not interfering in the business of another Department. They did no more than, as the Department responsible for submitting the Estimate to the House, they had a perfect right to do. The hon. Gentleman had spoken in terms not at all higher than they deserved of the gentlemen who joined the permanent department of the Treasury, and expressed an opinion that they were overworked and overtaxed. He (the Chancellor of the Exchequer) could not, certainly, say that they were underworked; but, while he should be most ready to recommend to Parliament an increase in their emoluments, should the occasion arise, he could not say that at present there was any case for such an increase. If new duties were imposed upon them a considerable increase should be given; but so long as matters remained as they now were, there was, as he had said, no case for such a proceeding. He was bound to say, too, that an honourable feeling prevailed among the gentlemen in question, that, as it was their duty to interfere with the expenditure of other Departments, they were bound to set an example of economy in their own. The hon. Gentleman spoke of the delay that existed in the furnishing of the Treasury Minute; but it was a matter in which, from its nature, greater promptitude could hardly be expected. There was not merely the ordinary writing of the Report, but it was a subject which involved much technical detail. The duty was a delicate and difficult one. The Treasury was a party implicated more or less, and therefore it required the utmost care to avoid appearing, in exculpating themselves, to inculpate any other Department. One cause of the delay was repeated requisitions from the Post Office—particularly from Mr. Scudamore—for more time to offer explanations. It would have been matter of grave animadversion if the Treasury had declined to give him ample time for that purpose. The transactions were exceedingly complicated, Mr. Scudamore had enormous difficulty in getting the facts together, and it would have been intolerable if the Treasury had not given him the full time he required for his defence. He could not therefore think —when it was remembered that the ordinary business of the Department had to be attended to as well—that the delay was greater than was justified by the circumstances of the case. Then with respect to the question of the regulations that were set aside by the Post Office, the hon. Gentleman assumed that the Treasury were aware of that fact; but they were not, and, indeed, did not know it until the investigation was made. They acted, he thought, discreetly, in not making any change until the entire matter was brought to a close. The Treasury were acting partly judicially, but they were also called upon to stand in the dock with the other persons accused. The Post Office was in fault; but if the Treasury had said so, they would have left themselves open to the observation that they were throwing dirt upon another Department in order to screen themselves. The thing had gone on so long that it was thought better to wait until the final decision of the matter had been arrived at, and then to adopt remedial measures. It was true that the Report was accompanied by recommendations; but it was thought better to keep back those recommendations until the tribunal which was ultimately to judge of the entire matter—the Committee of Public Accounts—had made its investigation. The Treasury were of opinion that when the Committee had come to a conclusion as to the relative amount of blame to be ascribed to the different parties it would be time enough to come forward with their recommendations. Had they done otherwise they would, probably, have left themselves open to the suggestion that they were endeavouring to shift blame from their own shoulders. It was quite true, as the hon. Gentleman said, that it was most desirable that order and regularity in the conduct of the business of the Treasury should be observed. No one was more sensible of that than he was. No one would more regret to see order or regularity put aside. The Treasury was a Department which could not always be managed in the same way. Sometimes business went solely through the hands of the Secretary to the Treasury. Sometimes a great portion of it went through the hands of the Chancellor of the Exchequer. Sometimes it was equally divided between them. No rule could be laid down which would apply to all cases. He quite admitted it was desirable that at the Treasury all matters should go regularly through that Department, passing from the hands of the clerks up to the hands of the Financial Secretary, and from him, if it were of sufficient importance, to the Chancellor of the Exchequer. He could only give this assurance to the hon. Gentleman and the House—that both as regarded the internal administration of the Treasury and its relation to the other Departments of the State, the utmost care should be taken to maintain the relative position and rights of individual functionaries and public Departments. With respect to the Zanzibar Contract, the hon. Gentleman commented on the fact that a large portion of that business had been transacted by the Chancellor of the Exchequer. The House would form their own opinion; but he did not think the course he had taken was wrong. It was unfortunate that the Report of a Committee was necessarily laid upon the Table a long time before the evidence taken before them. People were apt to make up their minds upon the Report and the subject had lost its interest before the evidence was before them. That was unfortunate for the defeated side. As a question of character and motives was involved in the case he hoped that hon. Members would do him the honour of reading the evidence he had given before the Committee before they formed a final judgment on the matter. The Government had been a party to the appointment of that Committee—the Committee had decided against the Government, and they had undertaken and would, with the utmost good faith, give effect to its recommendations. If they did not come to the conclusion that he was right, they would at least see that what had been done was done honestly with a view to the good of the public service and without the least wish to conceal anything from the House. He would explain how he thought that he was justified in keeping the matter in his own hands. From November, 1871, until August 1872, they did not seriously entertain the question of a contract. They were engaged in inquiries and in obtaining information in a variety of ways. No doubt mistakes were made, and there ought to have been a regular letter written from the Treasury to the Colonial Office, on which to found their letter to the Cape. But at that time he had the misfortune to lose the services of the gentleman who had for several years been his private Secretary, who was succeeded by a gentleman who, though well qualified for his duties, had not the same amount of knowledge and experience, and some matters were omitted which ought not to have been omitted. Up to the 13th of August, 1872, they were not in a position to take any decision; but at that time the Government did come to a decision to go on with the contract, and from that moment everything had gone on with the most perfect regularity. It was only during the preliminary investigation that any mistake or omission had occurred. He certainly did not want to establish any new principle of action in the Treasury, or alter any general working of the Department. He repeated from the moment they did make up their minds to act they acted with the most perfect regularity. On the 13th of August, when this piece of business was taken up, they wrote to all the Departments concerned with the business, and regular action was taken till the whole matter was carried through in December, when the contract was signed. The hon. Gentleman referred to the case of the Secretary of the Treasury. As soon as the matter had assumed the form of action by the direction of the Cabinet the Secretary to the Treasury was a person to take part in it; but he happened to be out of town, and for some reason he had not discovered, the papers did not reach him. That certainly was owing to no direction on his part—nothing could be further from his intention than to give such a direction. It was said, Why did he not consult the Secretary to the Treasury? As regarded the Western contract—the proposal of the 29th of January—the Secretary to the Treasury had made a Minute on the Papers to the effect that he disapproved these proceedings altogether. After he had given so decided an opinion on the matter, he did not see any propriety in worrying him. So long as the matter was under deliberation in the Cabinet, he was not therefore consulted. He was not aware that there was anything further to notice with regard to the Zanzibar Contract. Then, with regard to the Report of the Committee on the question of the Civil Service expenses, the hon. Gentleman alluded to the dispute between the Treasury and the Board of Trade, and he seemed to be of opinion that there was some miscarriage in the matter on the part of the Treasury. The evidence before that Committee was not before the House; but those who would do him the favour to read his evidence would see what his opinion was. The Treasury was charged with the duty of bringing into effect the system of competition for clerkships. In order to do that it was necessary to regulate the system on which the office was to be organized. There was a long controversy with the Board of Trade, which insisted that the clerks ought to be paid according to the higher class, while the Treasury thought they should be on the second class. The Board of Trade also made demands for an increase of salaries to higher officers which the Treasury did not feel themselves at liberty to grant. The Board of Trade was an independent Department, and he had no power to coerce them. The Treasury were therefore driven to this dilemma—either the Board of Trade must be left without the proper complement of officers, or else a concession must be made which did not appear to be economical. Having exhausted all the means at their disposal, they had therefore thought it right to concede the wishes of the Board of Trade, instead of bringing the office to a dead lock. The Committee had reported that they were not satisfied with the grounds of action taken by the Treasury, and he was not prepared to say that the Committee were wrong. It was a very difficult matter to decide. He only hoped their Report would strengthen the hands of the Treasury, and that in any future organization they should not concede to the head of the Department more than was consistent with their own opinion of what was right. With regard to the case of the Bankruptcy pensions commented on by the Committee, the answer he had to give was very simple. The Treasury were not to blame. They deferred entirely to the views of the Lord Chancellor. He had the power of fixing the pensions by the Act, and the Treasury were required to assent to them. The matter came before the Government in a collective capacity. The Lord Chancellor stated that he was very much hampered by a promise which he had made in the House, and the Government came to their decision with regret, but felt that they had no alternative, having no power to coerce the Lord Chancellor. Though he (the Chancellor of the Exchequer) was no doubt responsible for what was done in that matter, he was responsible only in the same way as the other Members of the Government. He had now, as fairly and frankly as he could, answered the questions put to him by the hon. Gentleman. It was far from his intention to interfere beyond the strict letter of duty with any other Department, or to alter or diminish the position of any person within his own Department. All the Government Departments presided over by a Cabinet Minister were equal. As far as regarded salaries, the Treasury had power to object to their increase; they could not proprio vigore without the consent of the Government force Departments to reduce offices or salaries. The effect of that was this—they could not expect from the Treasury more than they could do. The danger was they might demand more from the Department than they were able to accomplish. All the Members of the Government being equal, if they attempted by an arbitrary regulation to raise one as a sort of ruler or judge over the other, re-action would probably leave the Department shorn of its legitimate powers. With these observations he had only to say that he should be exceedingly happy to find that they were received by the House in the same spirit in which they were submitted to them.

Mr. HUNT said, he thought his hon. Friend (Mr. Slater-Booth) had done quite right in bringing the matter forward at this stage. Until two Sessions ago private Members had opportunities of raising discussions on the Motion for going into Committee of Supply; but the rule as to Mondays now left them little opportunity unless the Government chose to give them a day. This ought not to be the case when the conduct of the Government was in question, and it would have been well had questions which had recently excited attention been brought forward under the old plan. He himself wished to speak on the Post Office question; but the limited time available for the discussion disabled him from doing so, except by postponing the Division till the evening sitting, which would have been inconvenient to many Members. He rejoiced at the spirit in which the Chancellor of the Exchequer had met his hon. Friend, and especially at his assurance that the administration of the Treasury would be conducted on the old lines. He believed that the whole of the mistakes, misapprehensions, and bad feeling which had occurred, had arisen from the departure from the old practices. Almost all matters of importance came before the Treasury, and the wisdom of former generations had divided Treasury business between different Departments, each having an experienced permanent officer. Communications were distributed after registration among the Departments, and then brought before the Permanent Secretary and the Financial Secretary, being passed on, if necessary, to the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and occasionally to the First Lord of the Treasury. He regretted that the highly competent Secretary to the Treasury had not shown himself more conversant with the financial business of the Government, and was surprised that in discussion on the Budget the Chancellor of the Exchequer had not invited him to take part. The Chancellor of the Exchequer, as he (Mr. Hunt) remarked two years ago, seemed to be Chancellor of the Exchequer and Secretary to the Treasury rolled into one. He feared that the Chancellor of the Exchequer's zeal and passion for work had led him to take things out of the hands of the permanent officers of the Treasury. The late Sir George Lewis, when asked whether he found time to work his Department, said, his duty was not to work his Department, but to see that his Department was worked. There was much sense in this, for heads of Departments should not do all the work, but should control their Departments, deciding all the more important matters themselves, but not taking everything out of the hands of the permanent officers. The right hon. Gentleman's great ability and quickness of apprehension and temperament had, perhaps, made him impatient of the delays involved in matters going through the Treasury mill. The Zanzibar Contract was evidently arranged in the right hon. Gentleman's room in Downing Street; for had it gone through the proper Department the offer of Mr. Monteith's company would have been duly registered and would not have been lost sight of. In the Post Office case, also, letters of the greatest consequence were mislaid. Delay might be caused by the regular routine of matters going through the Department; but the shortest cut was not always the best road, and he welcomed the Chancellor of the Exchequer's assurance that in future he would give all the functionaries of the Treasury their proper duties, and would make no short cuts to decisions on important matters. As to the Board of Trade, when at the Treasury he and his right hon. Friend (Mr. Cave), then Vice President, were appointed a committee to inquire into the question of the staff and salaries, and they made a representation which was accepted by the heads of the Treasury and carried out. Had the same course been taken in the matter mentioned by the right hon. Gentleman there would have been harmonious action between the two Departments, and strife would have been avoided. [The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER said, substantially the same course had been taken.] Then he could not understand how the question had been pending for three years. He also made a Report on the Poor Law Board, after personally obtaining sufficient information, and the President of that Board having also the opportunity of making a representation a decision was then arrived at. He regretted that the Chancellor of the Exchequer did not take a sufficiently high view of the power of the Treasury as to other Departments. The Office of Works and the Post Office were expressly subordinate to the Treasury, and as to other Departments, the Treasury, through the First Lord and the Chancellor of the Exchequer, could urge on the Cabinet an opinion that the staff was too numerous or the expense too large, in which case the Government would order an inquiry through the agency of the Treasury. He could not conceive any inability on the part of the Treasury to carry out their views, if they were sound and recommended themselves to the Government of the day. The observations and assurances of the right hon. Gentleman must give the House great satisfaction, and it was to be hoped that we should not in any future Sessions have Report after Report of Committees commenting on the action of the Treasury in these matters.

MR. GLADSTONE said, that nothing could be more fair than the manner in which this subject had been introduced by the hon. Gentleman (Mr. Slater-Booth), or than the remarks which had been made by the right hon. Gentleman who had just spoken. He quite understood the observations with which the right hon. Gentleman commenced with respect to the new Rules of Supply; but he did not understand the connection which the right hon. Gentleman supposed to exist between those Rules and the somewhat rapid course of the debate of yesterday. He suspected that the evil lay deep in the overwork of the House of Commons, and not either in the Rules of the House or the disposition of the Government to make suitable arrangements for the Prorogation. The House felt, and must necessarily feel, fatigued at the termination of such a Session; but certainly the remarks of the right hon. Gentleman would have been most just if the Government had not given facilities for debate on serious matters connected with their own policy where the subject was supposed to awaken a certain degree of public interest. In his opinion the regulations of Supply, although they were not free from inconvenience, were yet almost the only means by which the legislative business of the House could be prosecuted under the circumstances in which they now stood with anything like effect. He was very desirous of questioning in a certain degree what had been said by the right hon. Gentleman as to the power of the Treasury over other Departments. The matter, in his opinion, was stated with perfect precision by his right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer. In the first place, it was not accurate to say that the Office of Works and the Post Office were two Departments entirely subordinate to the Treasury. They were undoubtedly subordinate to the Treasury in their expenditure, and expenditure formed so large a portion of the business of those offices that they were brought into a position in which control could in most matters be largely exercised over them by the Treasury. But it would not be correct to state that in other respects the Treasury had a general power of interference with those particular Departments. With regard to the Revenue Departments, strictly so-called—namely, the Inland Revenue and the Customs—over these the Treasury was superior, and they must follow its directions. Of course, it was perfectly true that the Chancellor of the Exchequer could, in a case of necessity, call in the assistance of the First Lord of the Treasury. He recollects very well a case when first he was Chancellor of the Exchequer, in which a very serious difference arose between the Foreign Secretary of the day and himself as to the establishment of the Foreign Office, and the Foreign Secretary having, as he had himself, great confidence in the First Lord of the Treasury, Lord Aberdeen, they agreed to refer the matter to him, and Lord Aberdeen decided it in his (Mr. Gladstone's) favour. He remembered, too, feeling exceedingly grateful to the Foreign Secretary for acceding to the request that the matter should be referred to the First Lord of the Treasury. It was undoubtedly true that the Chancellor of the Exchequer could carry—as other Ministers could—any difference between himself and his Colleagues to the Cabinet for decision. He himself as Chancellor of the Exchequer had very frequently been defeated in the Cabinet, and he had seen other Chancellors of the Exchequer defeated too with regard to questions of expenditure. He heartily wished the right hon. Gentleman opposite good fortune in such cases, and that he might be able in every instance when on the part of the Treasury he raised the question of expenditure and carried it to the Cabinet to have his own way. He had no doubt it would be much better for the public that it should be so; but, nevertheless, the Treasury had to fight its battles in the Cabinet, and like other Departments take its chance, and though occasionally it might achieve victory it must sometimes resign itself to defeat. He wished to confirm in the strongest manner what had been said by the Chancellor of the Exchequer on the Bankruptcy Compensations. Much censure had for some time past been bestowed on him on account of those compensations, and it was only lately he had been able to refresh his memory as to the cause of the actual transactions, so as to be able to say that of special responsibility in that matter his right hon. Friend had none. He admitted that he did not think those compensations reasonable; and if asked why, then, was he a party to them, he could only justify himself by a reference to what occurred in the matter. They knew very well that on former occasions the compensation awarded to the profession in measures relating to what was called "Law Reform" had been perhaps almost scandalous, but certainly excessive and highly burdensome to the public. They also knew—and everyone who heard him knew—that the weight of the legal profession in the House upon questions of that kind was ordinarily irresistible. He did not mean to say that was the case when the public matters involved were of such interest and of so high an elevation that the entire House attended, and its deliberate judgment could be obtained. Then there was something like fair play for the public. But one of the difficulties inseparable from the constitution of the House was this—that the House consisted, as to its personal composition, not so much of one House as of a succession of Houses. For instance, when they were discussing questions of philanthropy affecting some distant island in the Pacific the benches were filled with philanthropists. On questions relating to Ireland, when that country was supposed to be injuriously affected, the benches were filled by Irish Members. And so it was all round. Well, when the House was discussing an Act like the Bankruptcy Act it was vain for the Government to try to assert itself against the authority of the legal profession in matters connected with the structure of the Courts. Under these circumstances, his right hon. Friend and himself—for he was quite as much concerned in it—were thankful to get what they could into the Act in the way of control for the purpose of mitigating the burden of those compensations. But they were not able to place the compensations in Bankruptcy under the Treasury in the same way as other compensations, and that the best arrangement they could come to was that they should be placed in the hands of the Lord Chancellor under the Treasury. Every Lord Chancellor was a faithful and loyal Member of the Government to which he belonged; but the associations of his profession were strong upon him. He was head of the Law first, and a Cabinet Minister afterwards. But whether that was so or not, when any question arose, the Lord Chancellor always alleged—and alleged truly—that the Government could never have got those provisions at all with regard to compensations if the Gentlemen of the legal profession had not agreed to the provisions of the Act, because of the power given to the Lord Chancellor by the terms of the Act. Therefore, though the Government could not justify the amount of the compensations, they had no other course than to accept them. He entirely agreed with his right hon. Friend near him as to the conduct of business; and he admitted that both the hon. Gentleman and the right hon. Gentleman opposite were quite justified in the very temperate remarks they had made on the subject.

MR. LIDDELL said, he wished to render his tribute of thanks to his hon. Friend near him (Mr. Slater-Booth), and also to the Prime Minister, for the admirable tone and temper which had marked the conduct of the discussion. His only desire was to make a few remarks upon the general topics which had been discussed. He had no intention to say more in reference to the irregularities in the Post Office, than that he regretted the House had not expressed itself much more strongly with regard to the question than it had seen fit to do. The House was mainly concerned in taking precautions in order to prevent the recurrence of similar irregularities. A great portion of the mischief had arisen from what the Postmaster General had described as the vortex of his own balances; but which, to use a more homely phrase, might be described as hodge-podge. He did not mean to say that a rigid adherence to the Treasury Minute of June 28th last, which provided for the more rapid handing over the balances to the National Debt Commissioners, would not succeed to a large extent in effecting the necessary reform, but he had a still more important recommendation to make. For instance, with regard to the Post Office, which was a large Revenue Department, at the present time the balances were paid into the Bank of England in such a way that it was utterly impossible to fix the Department to which they belonged, and he was convinced that no system of check could be perfect until means had been taken to ascertain the heads of service to which the balances belonged. While it was important that new regulations should be framed, it was of equal importance that they should be framed in the best possible manner; and this end would not be attained as long as the framing was left to each of the Departments affected. There was abundance of evidence now at the disposal of the Treasury to enable them to form, proprio motu, their own regulations, and he thought they should not be left to a departmental Committee, but that the head of the Department should be responsible for them. There was another point on which he wished to make a few remarks, in his individual character as a Member of the Committee which had inquired into the matter. No other Member of the Committee had alluded to the question, and therefore what he was about to say must be taken quantum velut, as the expression of his own view. He alluded to the separation of the office of Receiver in the Post Office from that of Accountant General. In any case, the receiving and accounting department of a Government office ought, in his opinion, to be separated; but in the peculiar case of the Post Office, seen by the light of the Treasury Minute of last year, he thought this was of even greater importance. The constitution of the Parliamentary officer at the head of the Department—the accounting officer of the Department—was an official fiction and a sham which ought at once to be put an end to. With regard to the office of Auditor General, too, he thought an alteration might be made with advantage. The Auditor General was not a Treasury officer, but an official responsible solely to Parliament; and therefore he ought to be allowed to select his own subordinate officers, instead of being dependent upon the Treasury for them. An enormous amount and variety of extra work had of late years been thrown upon this Department, and no one could possibly be more competent than the Auditor General to select the persons best qualified, by special aptitude, to discharge the duties devolving upon the office. He wished to urge, in concluding, the importance of adopting the suggestion of the hon. Member (Mr. Sclater-Booth), that in future all loans contracted for departmental purposes should pass through the Exchequer, in accordance with the Controller and Auditor General's able memorandum upon the subject, appended to the Report of the Committee, and that they should be surrounded with all those constitutional safe-guards of which previous loans had been divested by a laxity of practice on the part of the House which it was not too late even now to amend.

Mr. Gladstone

MR. WHITE said, he thought some expression of gratitude was due to the hon. Member for South Hants (Mr. Sclater-Booth) for having brought forward this question, and thus afforded an opportunity to the House for pronouncing an opinion upon what he must call a grave public scandal. He never recollect— and he doubted if even the oldest Member of that House recollect—such an event as four Select Committees, simultaneously sitting, having reported condemning the management of the Treasury by its ostensibly effective head, the Chancellor of the Exchequer. He had no desire to be unduly critical respecting the manner in which the subject had been treated by the hon. Member for South Hants—an ex-Secretary of the Treasury—although he could not help feeling that between those who were in office and those who had been in office there always existed that feeling which was said to make men wondrous kind. What was of more importance was that the independent Members should declare their opinion, and he hoped that they would now do so unreservedly. True, the Chancellor of the Exchequer had just read from the Table a profession of repentance for what was passed, and had promised good behaviour for the future, and had he done no more than made his recantation he (Mr. White) would have been satisfied.

But when he proceeded to justify the course he had adopted with respect to the Cape and Zanzibar Mail Contracts, that was more than the most kindly intentioned man could put up with. He (Mr. White) had read the evidence given by the Chancellor of the Exchequer before that Committee, and his opinion was that, judged by that evidence, the Report of the Committee was altogether too mild in its character and was not sufficiently strong in its condemnation. The right hon. Gentleman still contended that he was right and the Select Committee, the House of Commons—indeed, everybody else—were wrong, because he had such absolute confidence in his own superior wisdom, and such a cynical contempt for the crass ignorance of any person who did not see things exactly in his own light. He (Mr. White) believed that if the matter had been put to the test it would have been found that not only a majority of the House, but a large majority of his own Colleagues condemned the course taken by the right hon. Gentleman. The right hon. Gentleman had been a Member of the House even longer than he (Mr. White) had been, and he could not forget that there had been animated discussions, and many divisions in it, with reference to mail contracts, and he also knew that in times past Postal subsidies and contracts were used as the means of Parliamentary corruption, and that, in consequence thereof, the House very wisely determined that no contract for a mail service and no subsidy should be given without first being submitted to the House. That policy was recommended and further strengthened by the existing Liberal Government, and wholly accorded with the avowed principles of the present Prime Minister. By the old Standing Order, all mail contracts were submitted to the House, and if not approved of within one month became binding. The present Government, soon after its accession to office, on the Motion of the late Postmaster General (the Marquess of Hartington) passed without opposition the new Standing Order which enforced the absolute approval of the House before any such contract could take legal effect. The right hon. Gentleman (the Chancellor of the Exchequer) then, as now, held his important office in the Government which passed that Standing Order. And yet he still obstinately persisted in condemning such a wholesome proviso. The Chancellor of the Exchequer could not but know what a fertile source of Parliamentary corruption several subsidized mail contracts had often proved. It was notorious that by such corrupt influences the representation of some of our out-ports had been perniciously affected. Indeed, it was alleged, and he (Mr. White) believed truly, that at the last General Election the opportune grant—by the then Conservative Government—of the Cunard and Inman Mail Contracts secured a seat at Liverpool for one of its friends. He (Mr. White) could not refrain from expressing his deep regret that the Chancellor of the Exchequer had not that evening admitted that he had acted wrongly with regard to the Cape and Zanzibar Mail Contract; and if a Vote of Censure were moved on the right hon. Gentleman with reference to that transaction, he certainly would vote for it. At the same time, he believed that the right hon. Gentleman was thoroughly honest in conducting that arrangement. As long as the right hon. Gentleman acted the part of an obstinate impenitent heretic with reference to sound orthodox Parliamentary principles, one could not be surprised that, notwithstanding his distinguished talents and ability, he was so deservedly unpopular. Mr. Burke, when addressing the Speaker of the House of Commons on one occasion, said—

"The House, like other collections of men, had a marked love of virtue and an abhorrence of vice, but that among vices there is none which the House of Commons abhors in the same degree as obstinacy." "Obstinacy," continued Burke, "is certainly a great vice and, in the changeable state of political affairs, is frequently the cause of great mischief."

He (Mr. White) would strongly commend those remarks of that illustrious statesman—Burke—to the serious consideration of the Chancellor of the Exchequer. Special reference had been made to the Select Committee, on which he (Mr. White) had the honour to serve, with regard to the Expenditure of the Civil Service which had just reported. He would have been better pleased if his hon. Colleague on that Committee (Mr. Sclater-Booth), instead of bringing forward this Motion, had voted for the Amendment which he (Mr. White) moved to the Report of that Committee, because that would have brought the question of the present mal-administration of the Treasury Department formally before the House. That Amendment was to the effect that the Committee regretted that, owing to the limited powers exercised by the Treasury, its ostensibly effective head, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, should confess his inability to adequately control the Expenditure of the different branches of the public service, the details of which were annually submitted for his revision when the Estimates for the respective Departments were framed. For when examined before the Civil Services Expenditure Committee, the Chancellor of the Exchequer told them that it was a "delusion" to believe that the Treasury did now exercise a direct and effectual control over the expenditure of the country. He, moreover, added that as to Law Reform "no improvement could be effected without paying smart money for it." And that no re-organization of any Civil Department could be attempted without the heads of those departments "sticking in" a great many demands to which the Treasury had to accede rather than let the public service stand still. The right hon. Gentleman cited the preliminary demand of Mr. Farrer (the permanent Secretary) of the Board of Trade, for an increase of £500 per annum, and also adduced the fact that both the Home and Foreign Departments had persistently refused compliance with the Orders in Council and Treasury Regulations for introducing open competition into the public service. Had his (Mr. White's) Amendment been agreed to, the Committee would have recommended that Parliament should devise an early and efficacious remedy for this glaring defect in the Executive Department of the State. That Amendment was negatived, although it had the support of hon. Gentlemen who did not agree with him in politics. He also moved another Amendment which was lost by the casting vote of the Chairman (Mr. Childers) to the effect that, having regard to the unanticipated magnitude of payments on the abolition of offices, and notably to the excessive compensations granted under the Bankruptcy Act of 1869, full salaries for life—namely, from £1,800 to £2,000 a-year having been awarded to everyone—young or old—of the ten Commissioners whose offices were then abolished, the Committee recommended that no Bill involving any public charge should be introduced into Parliament unless accompanied with an estimate or statement, signed by the Chancellor of the Exchequer or the Secretary to the Treasury, of the probable expense thereby entailed upon the country, and with the proviso that no disbursement in excess of such estimate or statement should be legal without the previous approval of Parliament. It was the duty of that House to strengthen and uphold the continuous supervision of the Comptroller of the Exchequer and of the Audit Department; besides it was owing to their sagacity and scrutiny that the misappropriations by the Post Office were originally brought to light.

Mr. White

MR. PERCY WYNDHAM said, he was unable to say whether unanimity existed among the heads of the various Departments; but it was, at all events, agreeable to witness the amiable feeling that existed between those who sat on the two front benches. It was doubtful whether much good would result to the country from this most unsatisfactory debate on a serious and great question. The Chancellor of the Exchequer had been a little hard on Committees and their Reports, seeing that it was only through the painful interest which had been taken by the House in some of the transactions in his Department that formal Votes of Censure had been voted on two or three occasions this Session in the mild and indulgent form of referring the subjects brought under the notice of the House to Select Committees, whose labours should therefore have been alluded to by the right hon. Gentleman with gratitude if not with admiration. There was not much use in his going through all the points which had been raised in the course of this discussion; but he had risen with the object of obtaining from the Government an expression of opinion upon the question whether the conduct of the business in these great Departments should not be more in accordance with the ancient usage which prevailed before the present Government came into power, especially with respect to the manner in which communications were made between the different Departments. It was of the first importance that such communications should be made through the proper channels, and not by means of private secretaries behind the backs of the chiefs of Departments mostly interested. The other night when the Post Office scandal was under discussion, the Postmaster General, in the course of his defence, informed the House that the Correspondence on the subject, which was of such great importance, and which had led to such disastrous results, was carried on for months, not between the head of the Treasury and himself, but behind his back, and that it was altogether unknown to him that the letters were passing. To-night the Chancellor of the Exchequer had informed the House that, with regard to the very important subject of the Thames Embankment, the alteration made by the Treasury in the Estimate was a very nominal one. If that were so, how did he account for the manner in which it had been resented by the First Commissioner of Works? He should like to know if the alteration was made in a proper manner; and also he should like to receive some assurance from the Government that in future communications between Departments would be made in a proper manner. After reading this debate, the public would be of opinion that the time had arrived when not only the present Session, but the present Parliament should come to an end.

MR. M'LAREN said, that as a Member of the Select Committee upon Exchequer Expenditure, he wished to say a few words upon a point which had not been brought very clearly before the House. He had carefully attended to the evidence given before the Committee, and believed he fully understood the questions which had been raised; and he had listened to the explanation given by the Prime Minister respecting the allowance of full salaries for life to the Judges of the Court of Bankruptcy; and he thought that the right hon. Gentleman's explanation was not at all satisfactory. The charge which was made implied a censure upon the Government. The 131st clause of the Bankruptcy Bill provided that there should be two co-ordinate powers to deal with the question of the retiring allowances of the Judges; one being the Lord Chancellor and the other the Treasury. The Act provided that the Lord Chancellor, under special circumstances, might recommend the full pay to be given to the Judges, but that he should do it with the consent of the Treasury. The Prime Minister, however, seemed to consider this to be a judicial discretion of the Lord Chancellor, controlled the Treasury, and deprived it of any independent judgment. He apprehended that that was quite a misconception of the intention of the Act of Parliament. The Treasury had a right to negative the proposition of the Lord Chancellor if they thought his proposition an unfit one. There was another point upon which he wished to say a word. The right hon. Gentleman the Chancellor of the Exchequer had defended the delay in the appointment of the Commission to inquire into the Post Office accounts, by alleging the necessity of giving time to prepare the balances. He believed that no such time could be possibly required by any honest system of making out accounts, either for the Post Office or any other business in the world. If the Post Office accounts had been kept clearly and without intentional mystification, it was impossible that three months could be required for making things plain. In the largest businesses in the world, whether mercantile or banking, the books were kept in such a state, that instead of three months being required to ascertain how the balances stood, three days would not be necessary for making out a complete and exhaustive statement. The defence was really no defence at all, and it was impossible to condemn the Post Office officials in language too strong.

GENERAL SIR GEORGE BALFOUR, referring to the alterations which had been introduced into the Estimate which had been submitted to the Treasury by the First Commissioner of Works with respect to the proposed embankment near the Victoria Tower, commented somewhat severely on the fact that those alterations had been made without consulting the right hon. Gentleman on the subject. He also dwelt on the want of united action between the Chancellor of the Exchequer and the Secretary to the Treasury in the case of the Zanzibar Contract, observing that the opinions of the latter had been passed over because the former choose to think that he was prejudiced in the matter, and contending that, if there were any good grounds for such an insinuation, the proper course would have been to get rid of an officer who could not be trusted.

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER: What I said before the Committee was that my right hon. Friend had given a decided opinion on the matter, and that there was no use in troubling him.

GENERAL SIR GEORGE BALFOUR thought it was most undesirable that any officer in the Treasury, particularly one occupying the high position of the Parliamentary Secretary, should be considered incapable of carrying out the views of his superior, and he thought such a statement as that of the Chancellor of the Exchequer ought to be repudiated in the strongest terms. The right hon. Gentleman had no right to employ his private secretary in the business in the manner which he had done. The permanent secretaries, whether in Parliament or not, were those whose services should have been called into requisition. He did not mean, in making these observations, to impute the slightest shadow of wrong intention to the Chancellor of the Exchequer; but he must maintain, at the same time, that it was dangerous to any public office, to allow business to be transacted as he appeared to have done. Again, as to the case of the Postmaster General, he doubted very much whether the Secretary for War or the First Lord of the Admiralty would allow any such interference as had been shown to have existed in this Department. It was distinctly proved that the Chancellor of the Exchequer had been in close and frequent communication with officers subordinate to the Postmaster General, and any practice better calculated to destroy responsibility, could not have been taken. Perhaps the worst part of the case was that the Chancellor of the Exchequer had given no assurance that he would abstain from pursuing such a course in future. He made those remarks because he loved good administration, and because he thought such a line of conduct as that adopted by the right hon. Gentleman ought to be condemned by the House. The accounting officer and the receiving officer of the money receipts and expenses of the Post Office and Telegraph Departments ought to be distinct, and he would only strongly advise that the old practice of the War Office of "even and quits," should be introduced, and the balances ought to be delivered up at certain times. By that means the country would be freed from those scandals which resulted from the system on which the Chancellor of the Exchequer had acted. He (Sir George Balfour) added that he would now call attention to the sound suggestions of the hon. Member for Northumberland.

SIR EDWARD COLEBROOKE thought the expressions used by the last speaker more severe than was warranted by anything which the Chancellor of the Exchequer had done in reference to more than one of the matters to which he had adverted. He (Sir Edward Colebrooke) was old enough to remember much more serious charges being brought against Government than unwillingness on the part of the Heads of Departments to take responsibility upon themselves. This charge was one which ought not to have the serious attention of the House.

On Question, "That the Bill be read a second time,"

EAST INDIA REVENUE ACCOUNTS—THE FINANCIAL STATEMENT.

QUESTION.

MR. FAWCETT said, that before the Bill was read a second time, he wished to put a question to the Government with reference to the Indian Budget. In the early part of the evening he had found it impossible to extract a satisfactory answer from the Prime Minister as to the arrangement of Indian business. He understood that the present evening was, if possible, to be reserved for the discussion of the Indian Budget; but the Prime Minister stated that circumstances over which he had no control prevented him from giving up the whole of the evening for that purpose. Now, he admitted that the Public Business had been dislocated, owing to the unfortunate absence of the Prime Minister on Tuesday night. No one could, however, complain of his absence, for, as everyone knew, no Minister had ever worked more assiduously or zealously than he did. In consequence, however, of his absence, and owing to the circumstance that one of his Colleagues refused to say five courteous words, which would have been perfectly satisfactory to the House, the unusual course was adopted of moving the Adjournment of the House, and the Report of Supply was not, in consequence, agreed to. Had the Prime Minister been in the House he would have said those few conciliatory words which he spoke the next morning, and the Business of the House would have been in a different position at the present moment. So far as that evening was concerned, he did not, therefore, blame the Prime Minister; but he could not understand whether to-morrow was or was not to be set apart for the discussion of the Indian Budget. That, it seemed, depended on whether a private Member was prepared to give it precedence or not. Unless, then, the Government gave him some assurance that time would be given for the due consideration of a subject which vitally affected our Indian Empire, he should deem it to be his duty to move a distinct Motion impugning their conduct as to the management of Indian affairs in that House before the Session should close.

MR. GOSCHEN said, that the hon. Gentleman (Mr. Mundella) would not bring on his Bill to-morrow, and the debate on the Indian Budget, if adjourned from to-night, would follow the Appropriation Bill and the Duke of Edinburgh's Annuity Bill to-morrow.

ARMY—ARTILLERY—THE 35-TON GUN.
OBSERVATIONS.

LORD ELCHO said, that as it appeared that the discussion on the Bill of the hon. Member for Sheffield (Mr. Mundella)—which under the circumstances of the Session was only worthy of a debating society—was to be postponed to another day, if the debate on the Indian Budget were not concluded to-night, he would ask the indulgence of the House while he called attention to a Vote in the Schedule of the Appropriation Bill affecting the Naval and Military Services—especially if it should turn out that the money had not been well expended. He understood that in the trials that had taken place on board the Devastation, the 35-ton gun, had not given satisfaction. He had been informed by an eyewitness that the brass studs of the bolts were shorn off before leaving the muzzle of the gun—the proof being that on the deck of the vessel in front of the turret there were several deep jagged cuts which could not have been the result of unexploded pebble powder as some supposed. The consequence of a stud being shorn off would be that the grooves of the gun would be injured and the gun become unserviceable. As a proof that something of this kind had happened to the guns of the Devastation, he was informed that a shot, which at the beginning of the trials, was easily rammed home by two men, required eight men after several rounds had been fired. If this was the case with respect to the grooving and studs, what was the effect on the flight of the projectiles? He was told that the missile, after going steadily through the air for 200 or 300 yards, was seen gradually to turn until its side was presented in the direction of the object at which it was aimed, and only after a considerable further flight recover itself and point straight to the object it was to strike. Now, if it should happen that the projectile should strike an enemy's iron-clad while in its sidelong flight, instead of penetrating, it would rebound, doing little injury. That, he believed, was not denied. [Mr. CARDWELL: It is denied altogether.] He had heard the same thing at Shoeburyness. It had certainly been admitted in the House that these guns were too short, and that in future they would be made longer. The general conviction was, that the system of rifling with studded shot—which was borrowed from the French—was not sound. His belief was that the smooth-bore Lancaster system had not had a fair trial, and he recommended that the question as between it and the Woolwich system should be settled at once by full tests, both as to range, accuracy of flight, and endurance. He believed the result would be greatly in favour of the Lancaster smooth-bore system. The cost would be small, and at any rate they would have an opportunity of judging which was the sounder system. He would suggest also, in order that the authorities might judge of the effect of firing on the 35-ton gun, that two "squeezes" should be taken—one from the gun as it was turned out perfect, and the other of the gun after it had been discharged—they would then be able to judge whether the present system was attended with the defects which were charged against it. The matter was of consequence. Enormous sums had been already spent, and much more was to be spent; for the War Office were now making a 35-ton gun which was to throw a projectile of 700 lbs.—and he believed they were about to undertake a 70-ton gun which was to throw a projectile of 1,600 lbs. It was, therefore, of great importance to ascertain that we had got the best system of rifling.

SIR HENRY STORKS said, he did not know that the noble Lord was about to raise this question or he would have been prepared with diagrams and the reports of the officers who were present to show how completely the noble Lord had been misinformed as to the result of the firing on board the Devastation. The deck in front of the turret was not ploughed up by studs shorn from the shots, but was scored to some extent by the pebble powder—some grains of which would always be blown from heavy guns in an unconsumed state. With regard to the unsteadiness of the flight of the projectile, and the statement that it had been seen to turn broadside in its flight towards the object aimed at, he defied anyone to see anything of the kind while the projectile was in its flight, and he had the authority of Captain Hood, the Director of Naval Ordnance, for stating that he had observed no unsteadiness in the flight of the shot; and that in firing two guns simultaneously at an elevation of 14 degrees, both projectiles struck the water at the full range of 6,900 yards, close together, and at the same instant—a pretty good proof of the accuracy of the guns. Five rounds were also fired at 1,000 yards, with 110 lbs of powder and a 700 lbs projectile, and at this range the guns would hit a man. The noble Lord said that, after a few rounds had been fired eight men were necessary for working one of these guns; but Captain Hood said that four were sufficient; and both he and Captain Boys of the Excellent agreed that the trials on board the Devastation were highly satisfactory. If the noble Lord would communicate to him privately the names of his informants he would communicate with them, and any representations they might make would receive every attention.

MR. CRAWFORD said, that the noble Lord had remarked that the Bill of the hon. Member for Sheffield (Mr. Mundella) was better suited to a debating society than to that House; but he put it to the House whether the subject introduced by the noble Lord was not better suited to the United Service Institution. He should not now further discuss the question of little bores or great bores, among whom he did not include his right hon. Friends below him. He hoped the Indian Financial Statement would not be further delayed.

MR. R. N. FOWLER strongly condemned the practice of deferring to the extreme end of the Session the discussion of the affairs of India, when there was barely time for the Under Secretary of State to make his statement to the House. He hoped the Government would take into consideration the Report of the East Indian Finance Committee, and that they should have a better opportunity of discussing the subject next Session.

Bill read a second time, and committed for To-morrow, at Two of the clock.

EAST INDIA REVENUE ACCOUNTS. COMMITTEE.

Order for Committee read.

MR. GRANT DUFF: I rise, Sir, for the fifth time, to make the Indian Financial Statement, and am happy to state that that Statement will show a more prosperous condition of affairs in India than it has ever been my lot to describe in this House.

I must, perforce, according to custom and the necessities of the case, divide my subject into three parts, and speak first of the year of Actuals—that is, the year which ended on the 31st of March, 1872; secondly, of the year of the Regular Estimate—that is, the year which ended on the 31st of March, 1873; and thirdly, of the year of the Budget Estimate—that is, the year which will end on the 31st of March, 1874; but I shall endeavour to give those who have hitherto censured me for being too long in my exposition, the contrasted, but doubtless equally keen, satisfaction of censuring me for being too short.

In the year of Actuals—the year ending 31st of March, 1872—we received as income, £50,110,215, and we paid, on account of our Ordinary Expenditure, £46,986,038. Thus our surplus was no less than £3,124,177, the largest ever known in Indian annals since the abolition of the East India Company's monopoly of the China trade in 1834. For this great surplus we have to thank chiefly two things, one within, and one not within our own control—economy and opium.

I come now to the year ending 31st of March, 1873—that is, the year of the Regular Estimate, in which we expect to receive as income, £49,914,000, and to have to pay, on account of our Ordinary Expenditure, £48,422,000, which will leave a surplus of £1,492,000, thanks, again, partly to economy, partly, to a season favourable to the agriculturalist, partly to that mysterious but for the present, friendly opium. [An hon. MEMBER: And providence.] Under providence, no doubt. These expectations are founded, of course, on the approximate accounts for periods of the year ranging from nine to eleven months, on which the Regular Estimate which we submitted to Parliament in May is based; but our latest advices from India do not lead us to believe that they are too sanguine.

I come now to the year passing over our heads, the year of the Budget Estimate. Sir Richard Temple expected, on the 27th of March last, to receive this year £48,286,000, and to have to pay £48,066,000. That is, he expected an equilibrium, supported, as he puts it, by a small surplus of £220,000. A smaller surplus, it must be admitted, than the Secretary of State has, on various occasions, pointed out as desirable, and even that surplus must be reduced by the sum of £80,000, omitted in India from the Transport Charges, and the estimated surplus is then £140,000 only. The cause of the smallness of the surplus is the abolition of the Income Tax, which, re-imposed by Lord Mayo in 1869, has, after various vicissitudes familiar to those who watch Indian affairs, been surrendered, at least for the present, by Lord Northbrook. The Income Tax of 1 per cent was expected to bring in £561,000 net in the year of the Regular Estimate, and, taking the same sum as its produce in 1873-4, would have given us a surplus of £692,000 for the year now in progress; just the sort of surplus for which successive Secretaries of State have wished the Government of India to budget. Nevertheless, it has been given up, and the Secretary of State in Council has sanctioned the policy of the Viceroy. The hon. Member for Brighton (Mr. Fawcett), in replying to me last year, quoted a long chain of authorities against the Income Tax. Some hon.

Gentlemen will remember that I carefully guarded myself from saying one word in favour of the maintenance of the Income Tax, having, indeed, a shrewd suspicion that Lord Northbrook would not maintain it; but I disputed most strongly the statement contained in the hon. Member's Motion, that its unsuitability was admitted, and I said, that for every opinion he could cite against it, I could cite another just as good in favour of it. Let us see if that is so. Lord Mayo was sometimes in favour of, sometimes doubtful about, the Income Tax, so we will not count him as on either side; but against Lord Northbrook you may put Lord Lawrence; against Sir Charles Trevelyan you may put Sir Richard Temple; against the hon. Member for Orkney (Mr. Laing) you may put Sir Bartle Frere; against the right hon. Member for Tiverton (Mr. Massey) you may put Mr. Ellis; against Lord Hobart you may put Sir Philip Wodehouse; against Mr. Bayley you may put Lord Napier of Magdala or Sir John Strachey, and so I might go on almost ad infinitum. There is a habit of mind which is a most convenient one in considering financial, and, indeed, all other matters. The habit, I mean, of seeing facts exactly as one would like to see them. That habit is possessed to perfection by those who talk of the extraordinary consensus of opinion against the Income Tax. I can see no such consensus, and have rarely had to consider a question on which there was so much to be said on both sides. Not that I wish to doubt or dispute the wisdom of the course which has been pursued by Lord Northbrook. The line taken by a portion of the Anglo-Indian press, the dislike of many of our own officers to a tax which fell largely on themselves; the anger of the wealthy natives, who desired that the miseris contribuens plures, to use the famous old Hungarian phrase, should continue to be contribuens and miseris; lastly, the course taken in this House on more than one occasion by the hon. Member for Brighton, have thrown a heavy weight into the scale against the Income Tax. In a country like India, political considerations—and these the political considerations not of the distant future, but of the passing hour—must often overpower the lessons of merely financial wisdom. Destiny may have in store for us in India a far more brilliant financial future than I dare venture to anticipate; but unless she has, indeed, great surprises for us, I should be extremely sorry to guarantee that the Income Tax will not be re-imposed by some Viceroy or other within the next 10 years. For the moment, however, it has vanished from the number of controverted Indian questions—I wish I could say, abit ad plures—and so I pass to the last item of information which it is necessary to set forth before the broad outlines of our actual pecuniary position are made apparent to hon. Members—the statement—namely, of the balances which India had at her bankers in England and in India on the 31st of March, 1873.

India had at her bankers in England £2,998,444, or about her normal balance. In India she had 18 crores and 91 lacs of rupees, a sum which, if the rupee were worth 2s., as it used to be, would represent £18,910,000; but as the rupee is only worth 1s. 10½d. or thereabouts at present, does not, of course, represent nearly so much money. Still, it is a larger cash balance than we want, thanks chiefly to our great surpluses, and to our small expenditure on Public Works Extraordinary in the last two years of Actuals; so we propose to bring it down to normal proportions by paying out of it all the remunerative works of the current year, to the amount of nearly £4,000,000. It results from what I have said that our pecuniary position for the moment is as follows:—We have a large surplus in the last year of Actuals; a good surplus in the year of the Regular Estimate; an equilibrium supported by a nominal surplus in the year now passing over us; and a large balance at our bankers. The fact of the matter is, that so far as money is concerned, the lines have fallen to us in pleasant places; and it is particularly amusing to observe, that the quasi-panic about the perilous state of Indian finance, of which the hon. Member for Brighton has made himself the mouthpiece, did not begin until after the measures were taken which have ended in sweeping away the deficit that had accumulated in the unlucky three years which ended with the spring of 1869, and originated that quasi-panic. In these three years the deficit on the actual accounts was no less than £6,299,216, while in the three years that followed them—namely, 1869-70, 1870-71, 1871-2, the surpluses on the actual accounts were no less than £4,725,836; so that the year ending 31st March, 1873, the year of the Regular Estimate, in which we expect a surplus of £1,492,038, will very nearly redress the balance, and sweep off the traces of the three years of deficit altogether. That is satisfactory, but there is better behind. If we take the whole series of Indian accounts from the time when Mr. Wilson first took the finances in hand—that is, from 1860 down to the end of the year of the Regular Estimate—we find a surplus of Income over Expenditure during the 13 years of £324,885.

I showed last year, in some detail, that we have, out of income, since 1st May, 1861, expended something like £30,000,000 in roads, canals, harbours, civil buildings, military buildings, State railways, and other works of a permanent character absolutely necessary to India, if she is to rank as a civilized country; so that India's position is that of a landed proprietor who, looking back on the management of his estates for 13 years, finds that he has enormously improved those estates out of his ordinary income, and has also laid by a few thousand pounds in hard cash, a position which cannot be described as an unendurable one. Of course, the enemies of the Indian Government will immediately say—Oh, you are quite forgetting that you have appropriated and used as ordinary income a number of sums which you call windfalls, but which a mercantile concern, if managed according to proper mercantile principles, would have treated as capital, and not have used as income at all. To that I reply—Well, suppose I admit for the sake of argument that what you say is true, as to all these items to which you object, it is indisputable that we have charged against income sums to a very much greater amount than the amount of these disputed items, all of which sums a mercantile concern would have charged against capital and not against income; so that when I only claim to have a surplus of £324,000 on the finances of India, since Mr. Wilson took them in hand, I confess I wonder at my own moderation.

Now, then, that we have a surplus, let us look around and see what there is to make us uneasy for the future, and what there is to re-assure us in the present state of Indian finance. And, first, I will take the dark side of our affairs, and begin with the Guaranteed Railways. The return from these has of late shown hardly any tendency to increase. The passenger traffic improves somewhat, but the goods traffic is nearly stationary, and the worst feature of the case is, that no one seems quite clear about the reason. The most plausible explanation that has come before me is this—that Indian exports consisting chiefly of heavy goods, the railways are not used except when time is an object, and time is only an object when the demand for Indian merchandize is unusually great. It is obvious, however, that this explanation will only apply to railways which have to compete with water carriage. I shall be glad if, in the discussion of to-night, the hon. Member for London (Mr. Crawford), or any other hon. Member, can throw some light on this matter. The heavy charge for Guaranteed Railway interest, estimated at nearly £1,800,000 for the year passing over our heads, is, to my mind, the least satisfactory element in our financial affairs. But, after all, £1,800,000 is not an intolerable price to pay for the enormous advantages which both Natives and Europeans derive from the Indian railway system, even if the charge were certain to be permanent. Considering that till the other day the average return from the capital invested in English railways was only 4 per cent, a return of 3 per cent from Indian railways can hardly be called disastrous. It is easy to be wise after the event, and to wish that we had laid down all our Indian railways on a narrow gauge. But it is not fair to charge our predecessors with improvidence; because they made the arrangements which it was natural they should make in what may be called the infancy, or at least the youth, of railway enterprise.

Next comes Opium, with regard to the return from which, although, as I have already said, the sales have been in recent years very favourable to us, I cannot rid myself of a certain vague feeling of apprehension. No doubt the analogy of the claret and champagne vineyards may hold good, but that remains to be proved, though certainly up to the present time the most sanguine anticipations have been those most justified by events. On this subject, also, I trust any hon. Member who has special knowledge of the question from the Chinese side may say a word.

Then there are the growing charges of Furloughs and of the Pension List, more especially in relation to uncovenanted civilians—necessary, no doubt, but not the less financially disagreeable. I do not add the prospective demands for military allowances, about which so much has been said; because, as I explained last week, I believe many of the assertions which pass current on this subject are founded on misapprehension, and if peace continues, I feel convinced that considerable though cautious reductions in our military expenditure will be not the least characteristic feature in the rule of Lord Northbrook. Sure I am that nothing can be stronger than the desire of my noble Friend the Secretary of State and of his Council to strengthen the Viceroy's hands on this vital matter. Reckless statements, not to use a stronger term, have been made to the contrary in India, under the veil of the anonymous; but nothing would be easier than to prove by a long catena of Despatches, that military reduction was one of the very first things to which the present Secretary of State called the attention of the Government of India, and that he has gone on pressing it on its attention.

Then it is said that many of the irrigation works will not pay immediately. Of course they will not. No one ever dreamt that some of them could pay immediately, unless the people who owned irrigable lands were forced to take the water. Lord Mayo and his Council thought that they should be forced to take the water. The Secretary of State in Council objected to this, thinking it a too despotic measure, and being convinced that it would be better to wait till experience and education had taught the people the value of an insurance against scarcity or famine. But in a country where the Governors are some hundred years at least in advance of the governed in intelligence, must we make no public works till the people can see their advantages and pay for them? That may be right policy; but if it is, nearly everything we have been doing for the last 30 years, with reference to public works, has been wrong. The talk about developing the resources of India has been moonshine. This House has been hopelessly mistaken, and the most obstructive members of the most obstructive days of the old Court of Directors were utterly right. There is every reason to believe that our irrigation works, taken as a whole, will sooner or later, directly or indirectly, pay a handsome percentage on the money they have cost; but, whether they will or not, they must be made, for the very people who now shake their heads over the unprofitable expenditure would be the first to shriek and rage if a new famine caught us napping. Our position in India is an anomaly, and must have many anomalous results.

I turn now to the brighter side of our affairs, and first I will take the elasticity of our Revenue. The hon. Member for Brighton does not agree with me in thinking that our Revenue is elastic; but what are the facts?

The Land Revenue has increased since 1868-9 by £594,166; the Salt Revenue has increased by £378,355; the Opium Revenue has increased by £800,494; the Excise Revenue has increased by £85,373; and all this increase has been natural, not the result of new taxes, except in so far as the total is swelled by an increase under salt, the duty on which was, during the Viceroyalty of Lord Mayo, increased at Madras and Bombay by 5 annas a maund, say 7½d. on 82 lbs. That increase accounts for about £200,000. There is no important decrease of Revenue to be set against this increase of about £1,800,000 per annum, or £1,600,000, if we put out of sight that part of the increase under salt to which I have just alluded.

So much for improved probabilities of receipt. Turning to the other side of the account, I am again so unfortunate as to take precisely the opposite view to that taken by the hon. Member for Brighton. That hon. Member informed the House last year that our expenditure is very elastic. I am happy to say that some of it is very elastic; because if we are not in India to civilize and raise India—things which cannot be done without spending a great deal of money—we had better leave it as soon as we can wind up our affairs. But is all our expenditure so very elastic in the sense of rising? If so, how comes it that we spent £52,036,721 in 1868-9, and only £46,986,038 in the last year of Actuals. Partly, of course, because £700,000 of expenditure, which used to be paid out of the Imperial Exchequer, are now paid out of provincial Exchequers, which receive corresponding receipts. Still, when we have allowed for that fact, our expenditure in the last year of Actuals is less than the expenditure of 1868-9 by more than £4,250,000.

Here are the figures for the last four years. In the year ending 31st March, 1869, there was spent £52,036,721; in the year ending 31st March, 1870, we spent £50,782,412; in the year ending 31st March, 1871, we spent £49,980,696; and in the year ending 31st March, 1872, we spent £46,986,038. So that the expenditure of India was less in the year ending 31st March, 1872, than it was in the year ending 31st March, 1869, by £5,050,683. Deduct from this the £700,000 for Provincial Services, and the result is a net decrease of £4,350,683. Look even at our Military expenditure—the most troublesome part of our expenditure. In the financial year ending 31st March, 1869, £16,269,581 were spent, but in the last year of Actuals only £15,678,112 were spent—that is to say, the expenditure was less by £591,469, or say £600,000, and the estimated decrease in the year of the Regular and Budget Estimate is even greater.

Look now at our transactions with the Railways, as affected by the exchanges. I mentioned on the 3rd of August, 1869, that, whereas we had for many years been losing heavily in our transactions with the Guaranteed Railway Companies, by loss on exchange, our annually recurring drain on that account would ere long be replaced by an annual influx. And so it has turned out, for the very next year showed £40,000 to the good under this head. The next year showed £131,000, and the last year of Actuals £209,000, while the estimated gain in the year of the Regular Estimate is still higher.

Take, then, the interest on the Debt. In 1871-2 it amounted to nearly £6,000,000, that is to say, to £5,966,299. In 1873-4 it is estimated at £5,770,000; and in 1874-5 an additional £450,000 will come off; so that it will be something like £5,320,000 for that year, or less than it was in 1867-8 by a good deal over £400,000.

I have now put before the Committee our actual position at this moment, and have selected, in rapid outline, what appear to me to be the least hopeful and what appear to me to be the most hopeful features in our Indian financial situation. I think that most persons will agree with me that the more hopeful features predominate. I know that I have been accused of being unduly sanguine, and of taking a couleur de rose view of Indian finance. Nothing would be easier, if it were worth while, than to show, by reference to Hanard, that there is not a shadow of truth in such an accusation; but that, on the contrary, I have, on more than one occasion, protested in so many words against taking a couleur de rose view of Indian finance, and have dwelt upon the dangers likely to arise from doing so. In truth, one who holds the office that I hold has no temptation to do otherwise. The fact that Indian subjects are to most people so ghastly dull has its advantages, in that the person who deals with them in this House on behalf of the Government is forced, by the very nature of things to pique himself upon being right, not upon being in accordance with those who imagine that they reflect public opinion in relation to Indian affairs. Imagine, I say, that they reflect it; for those do public opinion much wrong who confound it with the capricious ebb and flow of speculative exaggeration about India, with which we are familiar on platforms and in the Press. The truest gauge of public opinion about India is to be found, after all, in the state of the market for our securities, and that, I am happy to say, is all we could desire. We have the second best credit in the world—and that, considering what was the state of India before we went there, and at what rate the Company, in the old days, sometimes had to borrow, is surely something to be proud of.

And, now, I will beg hon. Members to look at the clock, and to bear me witness that I have not spoken three hours and a-half in making my Indian Financial Statement in 1873, as I was said, with equal correctness, to have done in 1872. For I have now finished the Indian Financial Statement properly so called, and what I shall add will refer to the Motion which the hon. Member for Brighton has put upon the Paper.

Hon. Gentlemen will observe that the course which the hon. Member has taken this year, and took last, puts me in a dilemma; for either I must allow our discussion to be taken without laying before the House the actual facts of the Indian financial situation, or I must combine my Financial Statement with observations upon the hon. Member's Motion. Again, if I follow the hon. Member, the necessities of debate would oblige me to put what I have to say about the existing financial situation in a different form from that which I deliberately believe to be the most proper form for submitting it the House, while if I precede the hon. Member I can only give a general answer to his speech. So true it is that the forms of this House, strange as they often appear to be, are usually the result of much thought and experience, and that any departure from our Parliamentary conveniences, however convenient it may be to an individual, is hurtful to that transaction of Public Business which is the object of our coming together. Without further preface, then, I turn to the hon. Member's Motion, the words of which are as follows:—

"That, in the opinion of this House, the present constitution of the Government of India fails to secure an efficient or economical management of its finances, and that this House views with apprehension the state of local taxation in that Country, and is of opinion that its financial condition must be regarded as unsatisfactory so long as the Income Tax forms its only financial reserve."

First, then, as to the present constitution of the Government of India failing to secure an efficient or economical management of its finances. Now, that sweeping proposition must refer either to the Government of India in India, or to the Government of India at home, or to both of these bodies. I admit that with regard to the Government of India in India, the control of the Financial Member of Council over the other Departments is not so great as that of the Treasury in England; but the House must recollect that the Government of India, unlike the Government of England, is a personal Government, and that it pre-supposes that the power in the last resort to control all Departments must be in the hands of the Governor General. I do not say that that is an ideal Government for India or for any other country; but it is clearly the only possible Government for India at this moment. In the old days of the Company, finance was much the weakest part of our Indian affairs; but it has been steadily getting into better and better order, and I defy anyone to point to any moment in our history when it has been so well organized as it is now. The whole tendency of things in India is towards increased watchfulness over the finances and increased economy. The figures which I have laid before the House prove it to demonstration, and greater care is being constantly given not only to the larger questions of finance, but to the form of the accounts. I do not say that they have arrived at perfection even now. I think it is more than probable that some good suggestions will be made by, and some improved practices date from, the Committee which is now sitting; but I do say, that the progress from better to better has been steady, and during the last 13 years has been without a check. I confess that, looking at the working of the Indian Government in its relation to finance, I do not see any improvement that can be introduced which is not in the way of being introduced. I am not talking of the distant future, and in a country which is changing so rapidly as India, 10 years hence is the distant future; but for the present, for the next few years, I see nothing that is not in the way of being done with regard to our finance which it would be at once wise and possible to do. If the Committee now sitting, when it has taken all its evidence, has any suggestions to make, of course whatever Government is in power will give them most careful and respectful attention; but no new suggestions of any value have to the best of my knowledge and belief been made by witnesses who have come before the Committee; for those hon. Members who sit upon that Committee are aware that the improved form of the accounts laid before Parliament is due to the Committee itself, and, above all, to my right hon. Friend the Chairman (Mr. Dodson), who has, if I may venture to express an opinion, so admirably presided over our deliberations.

Turning next to the allegation that the Government of India in England fails to secure an efficient or economical management of its finances—if that allegation is intended to be made, I entirely deny the truth of the proposition. I think the form of Government which was settled by Parliament in 1858 was in most respects a wise Government. In the constitution of that Government there was one very serious mistake, and that was that members of Council were appointed for life. Against that unfortunate provision of the Act of 1858, I divided, as a private Member at the time, and it was my agreeable duty eleven years afterwards to pass a Bill through this House which put it and some other matters on a better footing. Making allowance, however, for this one serious error, I should say that the Council had worked extremely well, and that it had exercised a very efficient supervision over the finances of India, except in the very few cases in which Parliament has stepped in and overruled it. Hon. Members should refer to the statements that were made upon this subject to the East India Finance Committee by Lord Lawrence, than whom no man had so good a right to express an opinion, because he spent five years as a Member of Council, and then spent five years as Governor General, so that he saw the working of the Council both from the inside and from the out. I will not, however, say anything more on this head. If anyone, after reading what Lord Lawrence told us on the subject, can attach any importance to the statements against which Lord Lawrence's remarks upon this head are principally directed, he will naturally not attach much importance to anything that I can advance. But the hon. Member goes on to say, that the House views with apprehension our local taxation. Well, all I can reply is, that if the House views with apprehension our Indian local taxation, it must be very easily frightened. Why, what does our local taxation in India amount to? What is the local taxation raised in that vast continent from a population which we are learning to believe, as the results of the recent Census come out, numbers something like 200,000,000 in British territory alone. Our local taxation amounts to only £2,500,000 per annum, including all our municipalities and all our Presidency towns, and our provincial taxation—that is, the taxation which was transferred by Lord Mayo from the Imperial to the Provincial Budgets—amounts to about £700,000. Can that seriously be said to be a heavy local and provincial taxation to be raised upon a country as large as Europe without Russia? Last year, to be quite safe, not having the exact figures, I said it was on an outside estimate, under £5,000,000; but it is really very much under £4,000,000.

Have hon. Members ever read the Revenue Law of Menu, as quoted by Mr. Wilson in his great speech of the 18th of February, 1860?—

"The revenue consists of a share of grain and of all other agricultural produce; taxes on commerce; a very small annual imposition on petty traders and shopkeepers; and a forced service of a day in each month by handicraftsmen. The merchants are to be taxed on a consideration of the prime cost of their commodities, the expense of travelling, and their net profits. On cattle, gems, gold, and silver, added each year to the capital, one fiftieth, which, in time of war or invasion, may be increased to one-twentieth. On grain, one-twelfth, one-eighth, one-sixth, according to the soil, and the labour necessary to cultivate it. This also may be raised in cases of emergency, even as far as one-fourth, and must always have been the most important item in public revenue. On the clear annual increase of trees, flesh meat, honey, perfumes, and several other natural productions and manufactures, one-sixth. The King is also entitled to 20 per cent on the profit of all sales. Escheats, for want of heirs, have been mentioned as being his, and so also is all property to which no owner appears within three years proclamation. Besides possessing mines of his own, he is entitled to half of the precious metals in the earth."

After this, is it surprising that Mr. Wilson should add—

"I should imagine the revenue laws of the ancient Hindoos must have been contributed to the sacred compiler by some very needy finance minister of the day."

And yet we are accused of being unduly severe in our taxation, when from a country where a taxation like this is permitted in the books of the golden age, in a country where every financial device was adopted before our coming even by the most virtuous minister, we raise a taxation spent exclusively in increasing the prosperity of the country, of about 3s. 10½d. per head, even if you consider the rupee to be worth 2s., but at present, remember, it is only worth 1s. 10½d. That makes a difference of about 3d. Three shillings and seven-pence-halfpenny per head is the whole amount of the taxation raised in India by the British, inclusive of the land revenue. That is a fact which seems to me one of the most creditable that has ever been told of any nation. What we do in return for that taxation, the annual "Statement of Moral and Material Progress" is there to show. Then the hon. Member proceeds to say that the financial condition of India must be regarded as unsatisfactory, so long as the Income Tax remains our only financial reserve. But in the first place, the Income Tax is not our only financial reserve; and in the next place, if it were, I do not for a moment admit that the Income Tax is a bad financial reserve. I have already said all I care on this occasion to say about the Income Tax; because the controversy having been settled for the time, I do not want to stir its embers. It is an open secret that the Governor General's Council was very much divided indeed upon the subject. But it will be time enough to defend the Income Tax when it is again introduced. For the present, I am quite willing to allow those who are opposed to it to seem to have the best of the argument. It must, however, be within the knowledge of the hon. Member, that some of the people who were most hostile to the Income Tax were strong partisans of other taxes by which they hoped to fill the deficit caused by the abolition of the Income Tax. Mr. Hunter, for example, a violent opponent of the Income Tax, has advocated a tax upon pān, the leaf which is chewed along with the betel nut. Others are in favour of a tobacco tax, and we have seen licence taxes and certificate taxes actually in force. Others, again, would raise the salt tax in Madras and Bombay, while succession duties, and a capitation tax, like that in Burmah, have all had their advocates. I have no hesitation in saying that I prefer the Income Tax to any of these; but then I am distinctly a friend to the Income Tax, and if the Governor General could have been guided by mere financial as distinguished from political considerations, I should like to have seen him abolish the inland duties on sugar, deal with the Salt Tax, thereby greatly curtailing the salt line, and perhaps even abolish the export duty on rice, before he had reduced the Income Tax below 2 per cent. Our information from India leads us to believe that it is the intention of Lord Northbrook to grapple with several of these questions during his term of office. For obvious reasons I will not say which; but I mention the fact, in order to show that neither he nor we share the hon. Member's alarm about the state of our finances. Now, as ever since I have been at the India Office, I have looked with great hope towards the possibility of further military reduction, and the latest news which we have about Opium gives us every reason to hope that that important resource will not fail us just at the moment when the sudden loss of the Income Tax makes us feel grave, though not uneasy.

These are the general considerations which I have to offer to the House in reply to the hon. Member who is about to intervene in order to prevent us going into Committee. I have no doubt he will ransack the evidence that has been produced before the Finance Committee, to find what he supposes to be mistakes on the part of the Indian Government here and in India during the last 15 years, and doubtless he will hit some blots. No one pretends that the Indian Government does not make mistakes; but I shall be surprised indeed if he can bring forward anything of sufficient importance to support the huge superstructure of the Resolution which he proposes to build up, and to build up while the Committee of which he is a Member is painfully engaged in collecting evidence through which it may arrive at some conclusion. For what possible object that Committee exists at all, if the hon. Member is to ask the House to take out of its hands the question which the House directed the said Committee to investigate is more than I can understand. That, however, the hon. Member should propose so strange a course to the House is a matter which the House and the Committee and the hon. Member must settle between them. It is no affair of mine, except in so far as I form a fractional part both of the House and of its much-enduring Committee. I move, Sir, that you do now leave the Chair.

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair."—(Mr. Grant Duff.)

MR. FAWCETT moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That the Debate be now adjourned."—(Mr. Fawcett.)

MR. AYRTON urged that the discussion upon this most important subject ought not to be stopped at a quarter-past 11. He thought his hon. Friend might very well proceed to address the House at that period.

Mr. Grant Duff

MR. FAWCETT appealed to the Speaker whether he should lose his right of speaking on the main subject if he made one or two observations to explain why he moved the adjournment of the debate. He made that Motion simply to consult the convenience of the House.

MR. SPEAKER said, the hon. Gentleman would be entitled to speak on the Motion he had made for the adjournment of the debate, but he could not speak again on that question. If the House allowed the hon. Gentleman to withdraw his Motion he might then speak on the Main Question.

Motion, by leave, withdrawn.

Question again proposed.

MR. FAWCETT said, the reason why he wished for the adjournment of the debate was because he felt it impossible to confine his remarks within such a time as would suit the convenience of the House. He had a great deal to say upon India, and he felt it his duty to say it. Some 13 years ago the Queen, in the name of the English nation, laid down the principle that they were bound by the most sacred of all obligations to attend to the interests of her Indian subjects. The announcement of that principle was accepted with the greatest satisfaction from one end of India to the other. Had they acted on that principle? On the contrary, Indian affairs were treated with a contemptuous neglect which he ventured to say would not be shown towards the most insignificant question in that House. From a quarter past 10 o'clock in the fag-end of the Session, that being the only evening which was allotted to Indian affairs, was all that was vouchsafed by the Government of the time of the House for the consideration of this subject. The news would spread throughout the length and breadth of India, and the House might depend upon it that they had better postpone any subject of legislation than give the people of India the impression, which it would be very difficult to remove, that they did not give adequate consideration to their affairs. The Under Secretary had been kind enough to describe him as the spokesman of financial panics. He was not the spokesman of financial panics; but he would tell the Under Secretary what he meant to do in future as long as he was a Member of the House—he would do everything that an independent Member could do to arouse an adequate amount of interest in Indian affairs. They might depend upon it that if they went on in the future as they had done in the past, they would not be able to maintain their Empire in India, but would alienate the Indian people. Last year he promised that he would devote all the time at his disposal to Indian affairs, and the result had been that he could not now remain silent, although he was unwilling to trespass on the indulgence of the House. He would proceed in the course of these remarks to prove, in spite of what had been said by the Under Secretary, that the situation of the Government of India at the present time was such as to offer no adequate guarantee for efficiency and economy, and that extravagance ensued. He would also bring forward facts to show that the state of Local Taxation in India should excite their grave apprehension, and if he wanted a witness to that he could confidently appeal to the right hon. Gentleman who had presided over the East India (Finance) Committee (Mr. Ayrton) with so much courtesy, urbanity, and impartiality. Although that right hon. Gentleman had been the Chairman of another Committee, he, unlike the Under Secretary, had never been absent from the Finance Committee. Again, this other conclusion had been impressed upon his mind—that the financial position of India could not be regarded as satisfactory, the Income Tax being the only financial reserve. He (Mr. Fawcett) was not going to dispute the accuracy of the Under Secretary's figures; he would only say this much—that many different conclusions could be deduced from the same figures. He would begin with the subject of the Income Tax. If there was any truth in the doctrines which the Under Secretary laid down last year with reference to the Income Tax, then the Government had been guilty of one of the grossest of financial blunders. Last year the Under Secretary said that the Income Tax was the only means of taxing the rich, and now he said that he had given it up, not for financial, but for political reasons, in consequence of the abuses attending its collection, and in consequence of the discontent it produced. There could not be a grosser blunder than to assume that because a certain tax was suited to one country that therefore it was suited to another, and there was overwhelming evidence to prove that the Income Tax was entirely unsuited to India. If that tax were suitable to the country then the Government had been guilty of a gross blunder in repealing it. The Under Secretary had cited authorities of Indian Financiers in favour of the tax, and in reply he would cite the authority of three men who were successively Finance Ministers in India. The first abandoned an office, second only to that of the Governor General, rather than be a party to levying the Income Tax on the people of India; the next had stated that it was impossible to conceive a more obnoxious and objectionable tax; and his successor had declared that no power on earth would induce him to remain in office if he were compelled to impose the Income Tax as a permanent source of revenue. The Under Secretary had quoted the authority of Lord Lawrence in favour of the tax; but he had omitted to mention that Lord Lawrence had added, no other tax had produced more discontent in India. The Income Tax in the past had been constantly varying in India, and that accounted for the discontent of which Lord Lawrence spoke. The Indian people never knew from one year to another what Income Tax they would have to pay. The Under Secretary had said that in a few years it might be necessary to re-impose the tax; but he was prepared to show that if the present extravagance of financial administration continued, the re-imposition of that tax would be not merely possible but absolutely certain. The Under Secretary had taunted him that evening with being the spokesman of financial panic; and although he last year announced that what he should have to say upon the subject would not be of the slightest importance, this year he appeared to entertain a contrary opinion. About four years since he (Mr. Fawcett) attempted to arouse more interest in Indian affairs in that House than had previously existed, by the proposal to appoint a Select Committee, and from that time there had been a reduction of expenditure to the amount of £6,000,000 per annum, which was an inducement to him to persevere in the course he had marked out for himself. The Under Secretary had greatly overstated his case in stating that the watchfulness of Parliament had led to the reduction, for he ventured to assert that the ablest financier in the country—not even the Prime Minister himself—could tell, if he devoted six months attention to Indian accounts, to what extent the expenditure of India had been reduced during the last three or four years. Indian finance had a confusion cast over it, owing to the unintelligible distinction that was made between Public Works Ordinary and Public Works Extraordinary, and to the appropriation of capital to income. Then, again, the fluctuations of cash balances to the extent of £16,000,000 within the same period of time, gave an unbounded field for exploits in financial ingenuity, and until they knew the nature of the cash balances it was impossible to place any confidence in the statements of expenditure and revenue. Nobody had been able to give an intelligible explanation of what the cash balances were—they were, in fact, a hodge-podge into which everything was thrown. Then the proceeds of the sale of Government land in India had been improperly transferred to the revenue account in defiance of the special Act which declared that under no circumstances should the proceeds of land be appropriated to income. That Act was disregarded, and it seemed to him that the appropriation of capital to income which, according to the evidence given before the Committee, was practised in India was not characteristic of the conduct of a prudent Government, but rather of the conduct of a spendthrift who grasped every farthing on which he could lay hand to meet his current expenditure. A great sensation had been created lately in this country by what was known as the Post Office scandal, which simply consisted of the transference of capital in one form to capital in another. Yet so serious was the appropriation considered to be that the Government expected a Vote of Censure upon it. Now, Governments had before to-day resigned on a less Vote of Censure, and if the present Government thought the proceeding to which he was referring so wrong that they submitted to be censured like lambs, what language, he should like to know, could properly characterize the far more grave proceedings which happened every year in India of appropriating capital to income? The Committee would now, he thought, understand why the subject had been passed by so lightly by the Under Secretary of State. But there was another reason why no confidence could be placed in the existence of a surplus in any particular year in India. Nobody, he believed, could tell to what an extent a comparatively favourable balance between expenditure and revenue was created by the suspension for a time of public works. No Department in India had been characterized by so much waste, mismanagement and extravagance as the Public Works Department, and nothing had contributed so much to that result as the impulsiveness with which public works had been undertaken, and the suddenness with which they had been abandoned in order to obtain a favourable balance of expenditure and revenue. The Under Secretary had stated that during the present year £4,500,000 out of the cash balances had been expended on Public Works Extraordinary. But the Government would not have that resource next year, and where then, he should like to know, was the money to be procured to continue those works unless it was by borrowing? The resource, in short, was simply temporary, and there would be a deficiency of £4,500,000 next year unless the system of borrowing were to be resorted to. The Under Secretary had, he might add, recommended to hon. Members a certain course of reading during the Recess. He had advised them to read the evidence of Lord Lawrence. That reading would, he hoped, be supplemented by an examination of the evidence of General Strachey. He could multiply instances out of number of the waste and mismanagement of the Department of Public Works, and he would give one short narrative, every fact of which was proved by official testimony. The Saugor Barracks were constructed by the Department. They cost £150,000, and it took four years and a half to complete them. When they were finished it was found out that they were so badly constructed that the Government found the best thing they could do was to pull them down. And what led to that inevitable result? Those works were watched over by an European Engineer officer with two European subordinates. Now, it appeared that not one of those persons had the slightest experience in masonry work, and it was for that reason, apparently, that they had been selected. The works were found to be so rotten that one could stick a walking-stick into them up to the arm, and the mortar dropped away like corn from a hopper. Indeed, the Committee could have no idea of the amount of officialism connected with the subject. Above the European Engineer there was a Superintendent Engineer, who visited the works only three times while they were being constructed, and who wrote only one report. He, again, was presided over by the local Engineer of the district, who never visited the works once, and who had not thought it worth while to write a report at all. Not a bit of the work, he might add, was undertaken by contract. It was all committed to the hands of the Public Works Department, to which it was now proposed to intrust the expenditure of £70,000,000 of the money of the people of India. But, leaving that point, he would direct his observations to some more general principles bearing upon the financial position of India. There was a broad distinction between the financial position of that country and that of England. In England the revenue went on increasing so rapidly that the income derived from the Income Tax was 100 per cent more than when the tax was originally imposed, while the tea, spirit, sugar, and tobacco duties brought in a greatly larger amount. The result was that the great expenditure of this country, as had frequently been pointed out by the Prime Minister—and no one could deal with the figures in a more masterly way—had been accompanied by a reduction of taxation. So that while we were spending £70,000,000 the country was, he believed, less heavily taxed to the extent of £40,000,000 than when we were spending only £50,000,000. That, however, was not the case in India, although, no doubt, there was an increase in the land revenue. He would quote the words of one the loss of whom they all regretted, and who many of them knew intimately—Lord Mayo was no alarmist; he was a man of courage, and not the spokesman of a financial panic; but he declared that the increase of expenditure in India, unlike that of England, was producing a wide feeling of discontent from one end of the Empire to the other. That testimony had been supplemented by Lord Napier, who declared that in consequence of the increase of expenditure there was probably no time in the history of our dominion when we had so small a hold on the affections of the people.. The military expenditure of India was to a great extent under the control of the War Office and the Horse Guards, and what might be an excusable piece of expenditure in a rich country like this would be a monstrous act of extravagance in the case of a poor country like India. Any day, from some emergency arising from war or unpropitious seasons, we might have to raise £5,000,000 of additional revenue in India. But suppose we had to raise such a sum in England, there were 20 different ways in which it might be done. A Minister who had the confidence of this country might, in case of a great emergency, raise £10,000,000, £15,000,000, or £20,000,000 additional revenue without for one moment affecting the stability of the Government. But how could they raise £5,000,000 of additional revenue in India? He had examined Lord Lawrence at length on this point, and what did he say? The land revenue was only susceptible of a very small increase. He next referred to the tax on opium; but Lord Lawrence said the opium revenue was much more likely to decrease than to increase. The Under Secretary had stated that in regard to opium we had Providence on our side; he (Mr. Fawcett) thought it was exactly the reverse. The Government of China, finding that their efforts to discourage the growth of opium were defeated by our persistent determination to force it on the people of that country, would sanction the growth of it in China itself. Then as to salt, could they get more revenue out of it? The Lieutenant Governor of Bengal said the other day that he would rather have his right hand cut off than be a party to increase the salt duty. Lord Hobart expressed a similar opinion. An increase of 18 per cent on salt only produced an increase of 12 per cent. The heavy duty on salt was checking consumption, and there was an extraordinary unanimity of opinion in India that owing to the heavy duty on salt there was great disease among the cattle of that country. The next item of revenue was the Customs, which only yielded £2,750,000, which to a great extent was paid by the European, not the native population. Lord

Mr. Fawcett

Lawrence did not know a single Customs duty that could be increased. He asked Lord Lawrence whether he could suggest an existing tax in India that could be increased, and he could not; could he suggest the imposition of any new tax to raise additional revenue, and the reply was "No." Under those circumstances, he thought that he had proved his position—that if any additional income was required in India the only reserve from which it could be supplied was the Income Tax. Unanswerable arguments had been given against a tobacco tax, and lately the corn tax had been abandoned. He now came to the subject of Local Taxation—one which the Under Secretary had passed over very glibly. In England, if it were proposed to increase local taxation, it could only be levied on land and houses. A man's income or his furniture could not be rated. That was not so in India. There local taxation was not only levied on land and houses, but upon everything a man possessed—the clothes he wore, his food, his furniture, his income, were all liable. Would such a state of things be tolerated for a moment in England? But, said the Under Secretary, local taxation in India only produced £3,200,000. He forgot to remind the House of the extraordinary difference between the wealth of India and of England. Here an income tax of 2d. in the pound produced nearly £4,000,000; there it would produce only £500,000. The population of India was therefore eight times poorer than that of England. In other words, in a country seven times as great as England, a source of taxation only produced one-eighth what it would in England. Nothing could be more delusive than to make comparisons between the taxation of two countries unless the relative wealth of the two were taken into account. The highest authority on such a subject, Lord Lawrence, said that the mass of the people were so poor that they could barely obtain the means of a miserable existence. Not only did the Indian system of local taxation press with great cruelty upon the people, but it seemed to have been devised with a view to producing the maximum amount of torment and terror. Was the Under Secretary aware that in Bombay an Act existed—the Act was suspended merely, not repealed; it was held over the people's heads, and might be enforced any day—authorizing the imposition of an income tax on incomes of £5. In the history of the world was so monstrous a tax ever before devised by human perversity? While the extravagance to which he referred was being practised, the people of India, who found the money that was being squandered, were suffering under a taxation as grievous as any that human ingenuity had ever conceived. It might be asked how it was that local taxation had of late years occupied so permanent a position, and his answer was that the decentralization scheme of Lord Mayo was responsible for it all. The scheme involved the local authorities in an expenditure so vast they had been compelled to very considerably increase the local imposts in order to meet it. Decentralization was all very well in England, where to a great extent the prosperity and power of the country depended upon its local institutions; but it was altogether out of place in India, where the circumstances were altogether different. He might be asked to point out remedies for the state of things of which he complained, and he would endeavour to do so, but not until after he had pointed out the objectionable features of the case as they appeared to him. The most striking fact, as it appeared to him, was to be found in the mode in which the country was governed. The Secretary of State in England and his Under Secretary were at the head of affairs, although nominally the supreme control was in the hands of the Governor General; and therefore it would be seen that the destinies of India were in the hands of high officials who had not been nominated or appointed in any way by the population they ruled, but were Members of the Home Government, and might be removed, as they had been elected, by the will of the English people. There was nothing in the present administration of India to supply the place of that protection and watchfulness which India enjoyed under the East India Company. It might be said that no proofs could be adduced to show that the interests of India were sacrificed to those of England. One of the oldest Indian officials had, however, declared that under the present system he scarcely knew an instance in which the interests of India did not go to the wall when they conflicted with those of England. Sir Charles Trevelyan went out to India at the age of 17. When he returned to this country he became Permanent Secretary to the Treasury. He afterwards returned to India, and when he saw the system of government which had replaced that of the East India Company he averred that things were done now that could never have been done in the days of that Company, and that India was made to pay charges that would formerly have been out of the question. Formerly, under the Company, her finances were managed with remarkable frugality; now they were administered with reckless extravagance. Take the payments made by India for the Malta and Alexandria Telegraph, the payment by India of a portion of the expenses of the Abyssinian War, with which she had nothing to do, and other smaller charges of a like character. Why was India made to pay those charges? Because she was unrepresented. The Duke of Edinburgh not long since visited India, and India was made to pay the travelling expenses of his companions from England. It was no defence to say that the sum was small, for sometimes small impositions of this kind produced more discontent than larger grievances. India had suffered to the extent of millions of money because she had not been protected against certain commercial interests in this country. Scheme after scheme had been guaranteed and 5 per cent had been assured upon million after million upon contracts carelessly drawn. The Orissa Company had been bought at £450,000 more than its market value. The Madras Irrigation Company had a guarantee of 5 per cent upon £1,600,000, but had never returned 1s. of interest. About £8,000,000 had been expended upon the Scinde, Punjab, and Delhi Railway, which returned 12s. 6d. per cent upon the outlay. India bore the loss of these guarantees, and the £100 shares of these companies so disastrous to India figured in our Stock Exchange lists at from £4 to £7 premium. The Under Secretary stated that the Secretary of State for India was solicitous to reduce the military expenditure in India; but whenever he received from India a suggestion for its reduction he had to forward it to the War Office and the Horse Guards, and they invariably considered the question with reference to English and not to Indian interests. As a proof of the waste and extravagance of the military expenditure it was only necessary to state that during the last ten years, although the European forces had been decreased by 12,000 men and the Native troops by 16,000 men, yet the military expenditure was positively £1,500,000 more than before that reduction was made. To one enormity of Indian military expenditure he would call the attention of the House. In the Staff Corps an officer might enter after three years' active service, and he might rise to the rank of Major General and retire on a pension of £1,200 a year, without having ever done a day's work other than civilian. There was another point connected with military expenditure, which showed the unhappy position of India at the present time. India was charged by the War Office an extravagant price for recruits. She was made to pay at least one-third more than if she obtained them for herself. This had been protested against; but for six months no notice had been taken of the protest by the War Office. The Indian Council had disappointed the expectations of many of its friends. How was that to be remedied? Not by abolishing it, but by strengthening its hands. The proceedings of the Council should be published. If that were done it would form an intelligible basis on which to found our interference in Indian affairs. The whole future of our dominion in India simply depended on the extent to which the House in future was prepared to a greater extent to recognize its responsibility to India. There was no excuse, in his opinion, for continuing the Governorship of either Madras or Bombay. They should be governed as the Punjab was, by Lieutenant Governors, with regard to whom he might observe that they were almost invariably appointed by the Governor General, and consequently were subordinate to the Viceroy; but the Governors of Madras and Bombay were appointed by the Secretary of State, and were therefore House of Commons' appointments, such Governors being appointed to serve party or political considerations. If it had not been for the extravagance of Bombay, many of the financial difficulties of India would have been avoided. He might mention, as an instance, that the Governor of Bombay pulled down his house, which was valued at £35,000, and when reproved by Lord Lawrence, the then Governor-General, he said his intention was to build another house of equal value. The matter was then passed over by Lord Lawrence; but the Governor of Bombay incurred enormous expense at the cost of India in erecting another house. He had incurred a cost of £90,000 on the house. [An hon. MEMBER: Name, name!] Sir Bartle Frere. What sum did the House think was drawn from the people of India for the house? Not less than £160,000; and while that enormous sum was drawn from the finances of India to build a country house for the Governor, yet the Government of India could not or did not furnish the means to found 16 scholarships for deserving youths of the Presidency. Lord Lawrence again remonstrated with Sir Bartle Frere on the enormously extravagant sum drawn for the house, and Sir Bartle Frere thereupon wrote to the Home Government, and what did the House think was the result of his representation? Why, the Home Government actually gave him £20,000 to furnish his country House. Another reform which was absolutely required was to give the people of India a greater voice in the Government of the country. No native could even obtain employment in the Civil Service except he came to England to compete; neither could he become an engineer in his own country unless he appeared at the College at Cooper's Hill. India required what The Times recently called good State housewifery, because hitherto her affairs had been muddled, not managed. With those remarks of the leading journal, which well summarized his views on India, he would draw his remarks to a close. What was required for India was wise frugality, watchfulness of small details, and that careful attention, in short, which distinguished a well-managed household. They required above all to create greater bonds of sympathy between the rulers and the ruled. Scientific systems of jurisprudence, reforms in the law would do nothing unless the people were made to feel that they were to become greater sharers in the Government of their country. Unless England did that, she could not discharge the responsibility she had assumed in obtaining dominion unasked over 200,000,000 of people. The hon. Gentleman concluded by moving the Amendment of which he had given Notice.

Mr. Fawcett

Amendment proposed,

To leave out from the word "That" to the end of the Question, in order to add the words "in the opinion of this House, the present constitution of the Government of India fails to secure an efficient or economical management of its finances, and that this House views with apprehension the state of local taxation in that Country, and is of opinion that its financial condition must be regarded as unsatisfactory so long as the Income Tax forms its only financial reserve,"—(Mr. Fawcett,) —instead thereof.

Question proposed, "That the words proposed to be left out stand part of the Question."

Debate adjourned till To-morrow, at Two of the clock.

LAW OF EVIDENCE BILL.

On Motion of Mr. ATTORNEY GENERAL, Bill to amend and consolidate the Law of Evidence, ordered to be brought in by Mr. ATTORNEY GENERAL and Mr. SOLICITOR GENERAL.

Bill presented, and read the first time. [Bill 274.]

House adjourned at a quarter before Two o'clock.

H O U S E O F L O R D S,

Friday, 1st August, 1873.

MINUTES.]—PUBLIC BILLS—First Reading—Telegraphs* (266); Militia Pay Acts Amendment* (271).

Second Reading—Public Health Act (1872) Amendment* (257).

Second Reading—Committee negatived—Constabulary Force (Ireland)* (261); Expiring Laws Continuance (258); Railway Regulations* (259); Royal Naval Artillery Volunteer Force* (260); Sanitary Act (1866) Amendment (Ireland)* (262).

Committee—Endowed Schools Act (1869) Amendment (263); Merchant Shipping Acts Amendment* (254-269); Conspiracy Law Amendment (266-270).

Committee—Report—Defence Acts Amendment* (266).

Report—Penalties (Ireland)* (242); Langbaugh Coroners* (248).

Report—Third Reading—Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment, &c.* (265), and passed.

Consideration of Commons Amendments—Conveyancing (Scotland), negatived.

ENDOWED SCHOOLS ACT (1869) AMENDMENT BILL—(No. 253.)
(The Lord President.) COMMITTEE.

House in Committee (according to Order).

Clauses 1 to 14, inclusive, agreed to.

Clause 15 (Continuance of powers of making schemes).

EARL BEAUCHAMP (on behalf of the Marquess of SALISBURY) moved to strike out the clause and insert the following in lieu thereof:—

"The power of making and suppressing a scheme under the principal Act as amended by this Act shall continue as respects unopposed schemes until thirty-first December one thousand eight hundred and seventy-four, and as respects schemes against which a petition shall have been presented to the Committee of Council on Education, as in this Act provided, until the fifteenth August one thousand eight hundred and seventy-four, and no longer."

THE MARQUESS OF RIPON, while disliking the limitation, would not press his objection to a division.

Amendment agreed to.

Then, on the Motion of the Marquess of RIPON the following new Clauses inserted:—

After Clause 8, insert—

(Scheme as to endowments in which schools under 31 & 32 Vict. c. 118. are interested.)

"Where two or more schools are jointly interested in an educational endowment, and one of such schools is a school mentioned in section three of "The Public Schools Act, 1868," the Commissioners shall not, without the consent of the special Commissioners for the time being under "The Public Schools Act, 1868," deal by any scheme with the interest of such last-mentioned school in the endowment, but, with the consent of those Commissioners to the dealing with such interest, may, by a scheme under the principal Act, deal with such interest as well as with all other interests in such endowment."

Clause 12, page 5, line 30, leave out ("of appeal")

After Clause 16 insert the following clause:—

(Application of Act to schemes laid before Parliament during present session.)

"Where a scheme has been laid before Parliament during the present session, but has not at the expiration of such session lain for forty days before Parliament, and no address has been presented by either House of Parliament praying Her Majesty to withhold her consent from such scheme or any part thereof, the Committee of Council on Education may, if they think fit, cause to be published and circulated, in such manner as they think sufficient for giving information to all persons interested, a notice stating that unless within two months after the first publication of the notice such petition as is in this section mentioned is presented to the Committee of Council on Education such scheme may be forthwith approved by Her Majesty.

"During the said two months a petition praying that the scheme may lie before Parliament during two months as directed by this Act may be presented to the Committee of Council on Education by any governing body, council, or ratepayers, who would if such scheme were approved by such Committee after the commencement of this Act, be authorised by this Act to present a petition praying that such scheme may be laid before Parliament.

"If no such petition is presented within the said two months it shall be lawful for Her Majesty by Order in Council to declare her approbation of such scheme in like manner as if it had lain for forty days before Parliament in accordance with the principal Act.

"Any scheme to which this section applies and which is not approved by Her Majesty under this section shall continue to lie before Parliament, and the provisions of this Act shall apply in like manner as if such scheme had been laid before Parliament in pursuance of this Act."

Amendments made : The Report thereof to be received To-morrow, and Standing Orders Nos. 37 and 38 to be considered in order to their being dispensed with.

CONSPIRACY LAW AMENDMENT BILL.

(The Earl of Kimberley.)

(NO. 256.) COMMITTEE.

Order of the Day for the House to be put into Committee read.

Moved, "That the House do now resolve itself into Committee."—(The Earl of Kimberley.)

LORD CAIRNS said, he desired to call attention to the peculiar character of this Bill. It was, as the noble Earl opposite (the Earl of Kimberley) stated in moving the second reading, introduced in consequence of the conviction and sentence of certain gas-stokers, who had, as their Lordships would remember, "struck" against their employers some time ago. The sentences passed upon these persons were, undoubtedly, severe; but there was no reason for saying that they were not in accordance with the existing law. These sentences, however, had been made the subject of much comment, and of some discontent. The gas-stokers were indicted under two counts: the first charging them with an unlawful combination under the Criminal Law Amendment Act, which subjected the accused, on conviction, to three months' imprisonment; and the second count, under the Master and Servant Act, charging them with a conspiracy to break their contract, for which that statute provided the punishment of 12 months' imprisonment. The accused were convicted on the second count—for the conspiracy—and the Judge, Mr. Justice Brett, passed the full sentence. Now, if these persons had been convicted not for the conspiracy to commit the offence, but for the offence itself, under the 30 & 31 Vict. c. 141 (the Master and Servant Act, 1867), the punishment which could have been inflicted would have been much less severe. It seemed very anomalous that the conspiracy to commit an offence should be dealt with with greater severity than the commission of the offence, and this Bill was in consequence introduced into the other House by a private Member, the hon. and learned Member for Oxford City (Mr. Vernon Harcourt). The measure, when so introduced, was limited to a provision that persons indicted for conspiracy under the Master and Servant Act, should not be liable to a heavier punishment than that allotted to the offence when committed by an individual. While the Bill was in the Commons it was, as stated by the noble Earl (the Earl of Kimberley), enlarged and extended, so as to embrace not only the individual case, but to re-model the whole Law of Conspiracy. Such being the real character of the Bill, he (Lord Cairns) held that a measure of so important a nature should have been introduced on the authority of the Government, and not by a private Member, than whom the Government had better opportunities of taking the opinions of the Judges, who might be termed the guardians of the criminal law of this country, and who were really the only authorities on whom the Government could confidently rely. Nor had their Lordships' House any opportunity at this period of the Session, and the absence of the Judges on circuit, of requiring, as they had a right to require, their assistance in considering so considerable a change in the law. The Bill drew a distinction between offences indictable by statute and offences indictable at Common Law. Offences against the statute law were left untouched; but of those now indictable at Common Law it selected seven, which were set forth in a Schedule. The legal consequence was that the Law of Conspiracy was repealed and done away, except as regarded these seven specified offences. The gravity of the delicta majora thus selected could be judged by their Lordships by reading the list; but he thought it would be highly dangerous to exclude all other Common Law offences from the operation of the Law of Conspiracy. For instance, one of the Law Officers of the Crown had been asked, whether sending forged telegrams was an indictable offence? He (Lord Cairns) did not know how this might be now—a conspiracy to do such an act for the purpose of influencing the funds was an indictable offence. This was clear—that if this Bill passed persons who attempted this very serious offence would no longer be indictable for conspiracy. By Common Law, conspiracy was not restricted to combination to effect an illegal thing—it included also a combination to effect a lawful purpose by illegal means. It was doubtful whether, under this Bill, that would continue to be so. He demurred to the general proposition laid down by the Bill, that a person convicted of conspiracy should not be liable to any punishment greater than that provided by statute for an act done by a single person; because in many cases where a number of persons combined to do a particular illegal thing, the offence was much greater on the part of every one of those persons than if only one person attempted to do the same thing. But the Bill, after laying down that unsafe general rule, itself departed from it. An offence indictable by Common Law for conspiracy was not to be punished by more than six months' imprisonment without hard labour; whereas an individual might be imprisoned for one, and even for two years. Breach of contract was not punishable criminally, except under the Master and Servant Act—an exception, he presumed, adopted after full consideration. He had a strong feeling against such legislation being carried further. He thought the punishment provided by the Act for an offence committed by an individual was sufficient; and the punishment for conspiracy to commit the same act ought not to be heavier than that on the individual who actually committed it. If the Government were willing to limit the Bill to such a provision he should have no objection to it; but if the whole Law of Conspiracy were to be dealt with, it had better stand over till next Session.

THE EARL OF KIMBERLEY explained that the object of the Government in enlarging Mr. Vernon Harcourt's Bill was to place the Law of Conspiracy on an intelligible footing, by providing that, except as to seven serious offences, the punishment for conspiracy should not be heavier than that for individual offences. At present the Judges had an indefinite power of awarding a much heavier punishment; and when a man, cognizant of the punishment for an individual act, found himself liable to a much severer sentence for conspiring to commit the act, much discontent was aroused. He gladly accepted the noble and learned Lord's admission that the exceptional punishment criminally of breach of contract under the Master and Servant Act ought not to be greater in cases of combination than that assigned to individual acts. He thought the Bill dealt with a large subject in a satisfactory manner; but the noble and learned Lord's opposition had reduced him to the one question, whether he would confine the Bill to that single point rather than lose the measure altogether; and he thought it more advisable to accept the former alternative, considering that, as far as it went, it was a decided amendment of the law.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR said, the Bill had been extended by the Government after careful consideration, and the limitation suggested by his noble and learned Friend (Lord Cairns) would not meet the dictum of Mr. Justice Brett in the gas-stokers case—that any combination to force the will of another by unjustifiable means was punishable for conspiracy by Common Law. Differences of opinion had been expressed as to this; but their Lordships would not assume that so eminent a Judge had taken a mistaken view. The doubt and uncertainty attending the Law of Conspiracy tended to an arbitrary administration of it, and the Government, especially its Law Advisers, had desired to remove that uncertainty. The Bill as it stood would not affect conspiracy to effect lawful ends by unlawful means, but in cases where neither means nor ends were punishable by law it was desirable that the limits of the Law of Conspiracy should be more clearly laid down. The conspiracies left untouched were those to cheat or defraud, to extort money, to accuse of crime falsely, to impede the course of justice, and conspiracies contrary to public morals and decency or against the Government. The Home Office and the Law Officers of the Crown, with some assistance from Mr. Wright, the author of a recent work of considerable merit on the Law of Conspiracy, had gone carefully into the matter, in order to satisfy themselves that no kind of conspiracy had been overlooked. If it were consistent with their Lordships' convenience at this time of the Session to go into all the details he should have been prepared to defend them; but, looking to all the circumstances of the case, he considered it might be better to accept the suggestions of his noble and learned Friend than to leave matters in their present state.

Motion agreed to; House in Committee accordingly. Amendments made; the Report thereof to be received Tomorrow; and Standing Orders, Nos. 37 and 38, to be considered, in order to their being dispensed with.

CONVEYANCING (SCOTLAND) BILL.
(no. 264.)

Commons' Amendments considered.

Moved that the Commons amendments to Lords amendments and Commons reasons for disagreeing to certain of the amendments made by the Lords be now considered.—(The Lord Chancellor.)

LORD COLONSAY rose to move as an Amendment that the said Amendments and Reasons be taken into consideration that day three months. The noble and learned Lord stated his objection to the Bill, notwithstanding, or in consequence of, the numerous Amendments that had been made by both Houses. After a highly technical examination of the provisions of the Bill as it stood, the noble and learned Lord said, that in a Bill of this description it was essential that everything should be clear and intelligible, but that the alterations made in the measure at the last moment only confused and complicated the subject. The Bill which had been originally sent into their Lordships' House from the House of Commons was a very different measure from that which had been sent down to the other House by their Lordships, and this had again been materially changed by the Amendments recently made by the Commons. Those persons in Scotland who had taken a warm interest in this subject had not had time to consider the Amendments, and seeing that the Bill was not to come into operation before the 1st January, 1874, he thought that if Government introduced a Bill in February, it might be passed and come into operation in June, that the mere question of a six months' delay ought not to prevent the measure from being carefully and properly considered.

Amendment moved, to leave out ("now") and insert ("this day three months.")—(The Lord Colonsay.)

THE LORD CHANCELLOR said, the course taken by his noble and learned Friend was neither a usual nor a convenient one. Their Lordships had already affirmed the principle of this Bill, and the desirableness of legislating on the subject to which it had reference, by giving it a second reading. When the House went into Committee, their Lordships had bestowed a considerable amount of attention and care upon the consideration of the details, and many Amendments moved by his noble and learned Friend (Lord Colonsay) were adopted. Some of those Amendments, bearing upon the general scope and object of the Bill, the House of Commons, differing from their Lordships, rejected; but others—and among them some Amendments of great importance—were accepted by the House of Commons, who had therein shown a disposition to approximate towards their Lordships' views. Their Lordships could hardly alter the opinion they had expressed as to its being desirable to legislate upon this subject, but they might disagree with the Amendments sent up from the House of Commons, and insist upon their own—thereby throwing upon the other House the responsibility of the failure of the Bill if they persisted. He certainly could not think that in the case of a Bill relating to an important subject, on which all parties had agreed that it was desirable to legislate—and especially when the general nature of the legislation was also agreed upon—his noble and learned Friend or the House would be pursuing a very consistent course in declining to take into consideration the Amendments sent up by the Commons.

The Lord Chancellor

LORD CAIRNS said, there was no doubt that the Bill was one of great importance, and that a great deal of the time of both Houses had been expended in putting it into shape. No doubt some of their Lordships must have a painful recollection of the time they had spent on the Bill in Committee, and it would be in their remembrance that considerable Amendments were made by their Lordships, and made with a great deal of care. They all understood and appreciated the firmness and the candour with which the noble and learned Lord on the Woolsack had met the opposition urged against portions of the Bill, and they could remember the form in which it was sent back to the other House, where he had no doubt, from the Amendments there made—although the discussions appeared to have been conducted with closed doors, as they were not recorded in the ordinary channels of information—the most earnest attention was bestowed on the details of the Bill as altered by their Lordships. When the Commons had made the changes they thought requisite, the Bill was sent back to their Lordships, and it was for them to say whether they should turn it out at the last moment, or send it to the House of Commons once more in order that they might again consider the Amendments they proposed to make. The latter appeared at first sight the most promising and plausible course, and there was only one ground on which he regarded it as insecure. The Prorogation of Parliament they were told was to take place next Tuesday; and if their Lordships chose to-night to go through the Amendments and Reasons which occupied 25 pages of print, it was probable the House of Commons might require some days to consider the result of their Lordships' work, and it would be utterly impossible that they could have this time if Parliament were to be prorogued on Tuesday. On the whole, he thought it would be better that the measure should be re-introduced next Session.

On Question, that ("now") stand part of the Motion? Their Lordships divided:—Contents 25; Not-Contents 43: Majority 18.

CONTENTS.

|                                |                                |
|--------------------------------|--------------------------------|
| Selborne, L. ( L. Chan- | Boyle, L. ( E. Cork and |
| cellor.)                | Orrery.) [Teller.]      |
| Saint Albans, D.               | Camoys, L.                     |
| [Teller.]                      | Gwydir, L.                     |
| Lansdowne, M.                  | Hatherley, L.                  |
| Ripon, M.                      | Houghton, L.                   |
|                                | Kenmare, L. ( E. Ken-   |
|                                | mare.)                  |
| Camperdown, E.                 | Methuen, L.                    |
| Cowper, E.                     | Monson, L.                     |
| Granville, E.                  | Mostyn, L.                     |
| Kimberley, E.                  | Ponsonby, L. ( E. Bes-  |
| Morley, E.                     | borough.)               |
|                                | Seaton, L.                     |
| Halifax, V.                    | Stanley of Alderley, L.        |
| Sydney, V.                     | Waveney, L.                    |
|                                | Wrottealey, L.                 |

NOT-CONTENTS.

|                                 |                                 |
|---------------------------------|---------------------------------|
| Buckingham and Chan-            | Bagot, L.                       |
| dos, D.                  | Boston, L.                      |
| Northumberland, D.              | Cairns, L.                      |
| Rutland, D.                     | Chelmsford, L.                  |
| Wellington, D.                  | Colonsay, L.                    |
| Salisbury, M.                   | Congleton, L.                   |
| Amherst, E.                     | Denman, L.                      |
| Bantry, E.                      | De Saumarez, L.                 |
| Beauchamp, E.                   | Ellenborough, L.                |
| Carnarvon, E.                   | Hartismere, L. ( L. Hen- |
| Dartmouth, E.                   | niker.)                  |
| Denbigh, E.                     | Hylton, L.                      |
| Derby, E.                       | Ker, L. ( M. Lothian.)   |
| Doncaster, E. ( D. Buc-  | Manners, L.                     |
| cleuch and Queen-        | Oranmore and Browne,            |
| berry.)                  | L.                              |
| Leven and Melville, E.          | Peurhyn, L.                     |
| Malmesbury, E.                  | Ranfurly, L. ( E. Ran-   |
| Mansfield, E.                   | fury.)                   |
| Powis, E.                       | Redesdale, L.                   |
| Verulam, E.                     | Saltoun, L.                     |
| Clancarty, V. ( E. Clan- | Skelmersdale, L.                |
| arty.)                   | [Teller.]                       |
| De Vesci, V.                    | Templemore, L.                  |
| Hawarden, V. [Teller.]          | Thurlow, L.                     |
|                                 | Wynford, L.                     |

Resolved, in the negative; Commons' amendments to Lords' amendments, and Commons' reasons for disagreeing to certain of the amendments made by the Lords, to be considered on this day three months.

EXPIRING LAWS CONTINUANCE

BILL—(No. 258.)

(The Earl of Morley.)

SECOND READING.

Order of the Day for the Second Reading, read.

Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2d."—(The Earl of Morley.)

THE EARL OF CARNARVON complained of the practice which had grown up of passing this Bill hurriedly through Parliament at the very close of the Session, when there was no opportunity of giving it adequate consideration. Many of the Acts named in it were of the very gravest importance. Many of the Acts, when first introduced, were designed to be merely temporary, but they actually became permanent by being annually renewed through the medium of this Bill. This mode of proceeding was very objectionable; because if these measures required consideration, it was impossible to give them that consideration when they came before the Legislature merely as names in a General Continuance Bill.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR was surprised to hear a noble Lord of such great Parliamentary experience raise such an objection. For many years past it had been the practice in the House of Commons to appoint a Select Committee in every Session to consider these expiring laws, and decide whether they should be continued or dropped altogether. He might assure the noble Earl that the great majority of the Acts contained in the Bill were of such a nature that they could not be dropped without the greatest inconvenience. All that Parliament wished to declare in passing this Bill year by year was, that there were a number of Acts of a temporary character, the wisdom of whose continuance it was advisable from time to time to consider.

THE MARQUESS OF SALISBURY thought the complaint of the noble Earl (the Earl of Carnarvon) was a salutary protest against a very pernicious practice. The Bill under discussion was merely a means to enable Parliament and Ministers to cheat themselves by smuggling Acts through quietly against which there was very considerable objection. Thus, Acts which were merely allowed to pass on condition that they were only to be in operation for a year, were continued and re-continued without discussion until they became part of the permanent statutes of the land.

THE EARL OF KIMBERLEY said, that in illustration of the necessity of such a Bill, he would point out that the Schedule embraced a measure of such importance as the Preservation of the Peace in Ireland. Parliament could not pursue any other course with respect to such a measure than to make it temporary; because otherwise it would be a practical declaration that the ordinary privileges of the Irish people were to be taken away permanently. By continuing that Act as long as it was found to be necessary by means of this Bill, not only a great deal of time was saved, but much needless and unprofitable irritation was avoided.

After some remarks from Lord DENMAN and Lord CAIRNS, Motion agreed to: Bill read 2<sup>d</sup> accordingly; Committee negative, and Bill to be read 3<sup>a</sup> To-morrow.

METROPOLIS—PARLIAMENT STREET.

QUESTION.

LOD REEDESDALE asked Her Majesty's Government, Whether the buildings in Parliament Street, opposite the new Public Offices, would be taken down before the meeting of Parliament next year, and whether there was any intention of applying to Parliament next Session for power to purchase property in or adjoining Parliament Street, King Street, or Whitehall, for the erection of Public Offices?

THE DUKE OF ST. ALBANS stated, in reply to the first Question of the noble Lord, that the buildings in Parliament Street, opposite to the new Public Offices, would have to be taken down to enable the drainage and the front of the new Offices to be completed, and that they would be removed with that object before Parliament re-assembled. In reply to the second Question, he had been informed that there was no intention to apply to Parliament for power to acquire property south of the new Home and Colonial Offices, for the purpose of erecting Public Offices thereon. The Crown already possessed a large extent of land in the vicinity of the existing public buildings for the erection of Public Offices. The cost of acquiring property was very great, because compensation had to be paid to the occupiers as well as to the owners of the property, and the Crown ought not to incur such an expense as long as it had property of its own suitable for the purpose.

In reply to a further Question by Lord REEDESDALE,

THE EARL OF KIMBERLEY said, that the Government had no intention of applying to Parliament next Session for power to purchase property adjoining the new offices in Parliament Street, King Street, or Whitehall. It was a question whether any further improvements should be effected at the cost of the Imperial Exchequer or of the Metropolitan Board of Works.

LORD REDESDALE expressed his regret that the improvement of Parliament Street would be only half effected.

House adjourned at half-past Seven o'clock, 'till To-morrow,
Twelve o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

Friday, 1st August, 1873.

MINUTES.]—PUBLIC BILLS—Committee—Report—Duke of Edinburgh's Annuity [272]; Consolidated Fund (Appropriation) *. Committees — Report — Considered as amended — Third Reading—Militia Pay Acts Amendment * [273], and passed. Considered as amended—Third Reading—Gas and Water Works Facilities Act (1870) Amendment * [252], and passed. Withdrawn — Real Estate Intestacy * [20]; Threshing Machines * [270].

The House met at Two of the clock.

IRELAND—COUNTY OF LOUTH.

QUESTION.

MR. CALLAN asked the Chief Secretary for Ireland, Whether, considering the freedom from crime which in the words of Mr. Justice Lawson "places Louth in the first rank as a model county," the Government will any longer retain in that county an extra police force, and exact payment therefor from the payers of county cess, without at least giving them an opportunity of expressing, in some official or authoritative manner, their opinion as to the necessity under existing circumstances of burthening the rates with increased taxation for the maintenance of an extra police force?

MR. BRUCE: Sir, last year the free force of Louth was reduced from 184 to 159 men. The constabulary reported that 174 would be required if the present number of stations were to be maintained, and that 170 was the lowest minimum, after allowing for abolition of some of the stations. The Government communicated with the magistrates, through the Lord Lieutenant of the county, and pointed out to them that if they wanted to maintain the existing number of stations they should apply for an increase to the county force of 15 men—half the cost to be paid by the county; and that if they did not do so, the Government would be obliged to abolish three stations, it being far better to have a small number of strong police stations than a large number of feeble ones. Twenty magistrates met, and they unanimously decided to apply for 15 extra men, in order to maintain the existing stations. It is to be borne in mind that Louth, although paying for 16 extra men, is in an exceptionally favourable condition, as its present free quota is 43 over the number to which it is entitled, according to area and population. The magistrates are responsible for the peace of the county; and however anxious the Government may be to consult the convenience of the cesspayers, they must be mainly guided by the opinion of the magistrates. If the cesspayers of the county object to the extra police force tax, it is quite competent for them to make a representation to Government upon the subject, and such representation, if made, shall be duly considered.

DOMINION OF CANADA—CHARGES OF CORRUPTION IN REFERENCE TO PACIFIC RAILROAD.—QUESTIONS.

SIR CHARLES W. DILKE asked the First Lord of the Treasury, Whether any steps are being taken by Government to ascertain the truth or falsehood of the charges of corruption alleged against the leading Members of the Government of Canada in reference to the Pacific Railroad; and, whether the Treasury will refrain from guaranteeing any portion of the Pacific Railway Loan, under the Canada Loan Act of the present Session, until the charges have been disproved?

MR. GLADSTONE: Perhaps, Sir, the Question of my hon. Friend would be more regularly connected with the Colonial Department in this House, but having made myself acquainted with the particulars of the case—which would not regularly have come under my notice—I am prepared to answer it. These charges, affecting at least some of the Members of the Government of Canada, are very decidedly within the power of the Legislature of the Dominion. The Canadian Ministers are responsible to their Parliament, and are not in any way responsible to us for their conduct. In the first place, these charges were denied; and in the next instance were placed under investigation. A Committee of the Canadian House of Commons was appointed for the purpose of examining into the charges, and power was given them to examine witnesses on oath; but unfortunately that power, considered to be given by the Canadian Parliament, was given in such a form that it went considerably beyond the power which the Parliament had the right to confer. That being so, it was not within the competency of this Government or of the Crown to advise the Canadian Legislature to make that a competent act. The Committee was therefore, on the advice of the Law Officers, disallowed. It is now for the Canadian Parliament to consider what course they will take, and I imagine they will act upon the principles of public conduct by which I believe they are usually prompted, and will do everything that is right in the matter. In giving this explanation, I wish to say that I was unwilling to be silent when silence might have led to a suspicion of something wrong; but I do not think this is a matter in which it is competent or desirable for us to interfere. The hon. Gentleman may say we are responsible for the guarantee of the Canadian Loan, and that it is out of that, this arises; but that is not a grant to the Pacific Railway Company, or any company whatever. The Loan is granted to the Dominion of Canada, and the condition laid down in the Act of Parliament is not in any measure dependent upon the proceedings of any railway company in Canada, or upon any particular Ministers in the Canadian Legislature. The conditions are laid down in the Act, and in fulfilment of these conditions, on which the guarantee was granted, it will be our duty to go forward with, and give force to, our engagements, quite irrespective of any inquiry instituted in Canada, and which an untoward accident appears to have put a stop to.

SIR CHARLES W. DILKE asked, If the right hon. Gentleman had taken the opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown on the subject, and if he was clear on the point as to whether the word "may" did not give power to refuse the guarantee?

MR. GLADSTONE: I am not aware whether the opinion of the Law Officers has been taken; but if the hon. Gentleman likes to give Notice of a Question I will answer it.

ARMY—ISSUE OF FREE RATIONS. QUESTION.

MAJOR ARBUTHNOT asked the Secretary of State for War, Whether the scheme for the issue of free rations to soldiers has now been matured; and, if he will be so good as to state any changes or modifications of his first proposal which have been decided on, especially as regards the re-engagement penny and stoppages levied on men while on furlough?

MR. CARDWELL: Sir, the scheme has been matured, and has now gone to the Treasury, and will shortly be submitted for the sanction of the Queen. I am, however, able to say that as regards the re-engagement penny, the intention is that it shall continue to be drawn, in addition to the ordinary pay, by all who are in receipt of it under the Warrant of 1867, so long as they continue in the Service. With respect to furlough men, they will receive an allowance of 2*d.* a-day, by which arrangement it is evident that no man in any rank can be a loser, but on the contrary everyone must be a gainer on the year. The charge for the re-engagement penny is at present £53,000 a-year, and is a declining charge. The amount of the Estimate for the present year is therefore half that sum, but being partly balanced by other considerations, the total calculation which I now make for the year exceeds my original calculation by only £11,000, and so far as I can foresee, will not cause any excess on the sum already voted.

OFFICERS OF HER MAJESTY'S ARMY— ABOLITION OF PURCHASE. QUESTION.

MAJOR ARBUTHNOT asked the Secretary of State for War, Whether he will be in a position to state, before the close of the Session, the names of the Royal Commissioners appointed to investigate the allegations of Officers of the Army, relative to injury sustained by them consequent on the abolition of purchase; and, when the said Commissioners will commence their inquiry, and whether any special directions will be given them as to the manner in which such inquiry is to be conducted; or whether it will be open to them to adopt any course which they may think best calculated to enable them to arrive at a proper decision?

MR. CARDWELL: As I believe, Sir, we hope to be prorogued on Tuesday, I cannot expect that the Royal Commission can be formed in time for the names to be announced in the House. The Commission will be framed in conformity with the terms of Her Majesty's gracious answer to the Address of the House of Lords, and the Commissioners will, I hope, commence and prosecute their labours without any unnecessary delay.

ARMY—MAJORS OF THE SCIENTIFIC CORPS (INDIA).—QUESTION.

MAJOR ARBUTHNOT asked the Under Secretary of State for India, Whether the question of the pay of Majors of the Scientific Corps (R.A. and R.E.) in India has been definitely settled; if so, on what basis; and, if not yet decided, what is the position of the question at the present moment?

MR. GRANT DUFF: In reply, Sir, to the hon. and gallant Gentleman, I have to say that a despatch on that subject from the Government of India is at present under the consideration of the Secretary of State in Council.

IRELAND—DRAINAGE OF LAND (IRELAND) ACT, 1863.—DRAINAGE OF THE RIVERS SUCK AND SHANNON. QUESTIONS.

MAJOR TRENCH asked the First Lord of the Treasury, Whether he has received a representation from the Grand Jury of the county of Galway relative to the obstructions which have been placed by the Government in the way of the drainage of the Suck Valley with its 72,000 acres of saturated lands; whether, as First Lord of the Treasury, he endorses the instructions given by their Lordships last month to the Board of Works to prevent the occupiers of the inundated lands in the Valley of the Suck from availing themselves of the Drainage Act of 1863, an Act specially passed to enable sufferers from inundation and bad drainage to combine for the purpose of protecting and improving their lands; and, whether, having regard to the fact that the Chancellor of the Exchequer will hold out no hope of anything being done to prevent the continuance of the dead lock on the Suck and Shannon, he, as First Minister, will take the matter into his consideration, and suggest what course should be pursued by the sufferers to prevent the Act of 1863 from remaining, as regards their district, a dead letter?

MR. GLADSTONE, in reply, said, he had that morning received a representation from the Grand Jury of the County of Galway respecting the drainage of the Suck Valley; but although he had not had time to inform himself of what had been done by the Board of Works, so as to enable himself to offer an opinion on the merits of the case, he might mention that the power of the First Lord of the Treasury to intervene for the purpose of influencing the opinion of the Chancellor of the Exchequer in a purely financial matter was a reserved power, which it was not desirable to call into existence, except on very special occasions; and that it was unnecessary to exercise it in reference to this subject appeared from the fact that his right hon. Friend far from saying he could hold out no hope to the hon. and gallant Member on the subject, having had under consideration the antecedent merits of the question, thought there was a fair case to present to the House on a proper opportunity for some further action on the part of the Government with reference to the drainage of the Valley of the Suck. His right hon. Friend, however, felt the necessity of reserving his own discretion as to the time when such an opportunity might arise.

MAJOR TRENCH further asked, whether the right hon. Gentleman was aware that in the meantime the people in the inundated districts were deprived of the fruits of their toil?

MR. GLADSTONE said, he was aware great inconvenience must arise from the undrained state of the district, but thought that the rules under which the intervention of the Government was invoked, in regard to local enterprise in this country, were of still greater importance than the consulting of the interests of a particular district, and prevented anything being done precipitately.

MAJOR TRENCH said, the people of this district required no public aid. All they wanted was permission to drain their lands.

MR. GLADSTONE admitted that to be the case, but said, the question was bound up with the drainage of another district which did require public aid.

NAVY—OFFICERS OF THE NAVY—RELATIVE RANK.

QUESTION.

MR. H. SAMUELSON asked the First Lord of the Admiralty, Whether, after holding Her Majesty's Commission for five years only, provided that their conduct has been satisfactory, Sub-Lieutenants in the Royal Navy are promoted to a rank corresponding with that of Captain in the Army; whether, after a further service of eight years as Lieutenants, naval officers are granted a rank corresponding with that of Major in the Army, thus obtaining a rank corresponding with that of Field Officer in the Army after thirteen years' service as commissioned officers; whether officers of the Royal Marine Artillery do not pass a more difficult examination than their brother-officers in the Navy, with whom they are constantly serving; and whether the former can at present only obtain the same relative rank as is obtainable by the latter after twice as long a time passed in the service; and, whether, if he answers the above questions in the affirmative, he will not place the officers of the Royal Marine Artillery on the same footing as the officers of the Royal Navy with regard to promotion?

MR. SHAW-LEFEVRE: Sir, the relative rank of Naval Officers and Officers of Marines has been so long established that it is known to every Officer in the service. The two services cannot be compared, and I must, therefore, refrain from contrasting the respective advantages of each. It will be impossible to place Officers in the Royal Marines and Officers of the Navy on the same footing as regards promotion; nor is it believed at the Admiralty that Marine Officers are anxious to see the system of promotion by selection, in force for Naval Officers, applied to them in place of promotion by seniority.

Mr. Gladstone

METROPOLIS—SOUTH KENSINGTON MUSEUM.—QUESTION.

LORD ELCHO asked the Vice President of the Council, Whether any, and, if so, what new arrangements have been made as regards Parliamentary responsibility for the South Kensington Museum, and who is the Minister to whom questions should be addressed upon matters connected with it?

MR. W. E. FORSTER: Sir, the Government are in communication with the Trustees of the British Museum in reference to a proposal for the transfer of the South Kensington Museum to their control; but no final settlement has yet been made, and therefore no change has been made in the Parliamentary responsibilities with regard to the South Kensington Museum.

THE MILITARY SYSTEM OF BELGIUM.
QUESTION.

MR. DIMSDALE asked the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, Whether any information has been received from Her Majesty's Legation at Brussels relative to the proposed changes or alterations in the military system of Belgium, which have for some time formed a topic of public discussion in that country; and, if so, whether such information can be communicated to the House?

VISCOUNT ENFIELD: Sir, we have received at different times information from Her Majesty's Legation at Brussels relative to the contemplated changes in the organization of the Belgian Army, but not in such a form as could be communicated to Parliament.

ARMY ORGANIZATION—EXCHANGES—
HON. CAPTAIN DRUMMOND.
QUESTION.

LORD ELCHO asked the Secretary of State for War, Why Captain the honourable James Drummond was transferred from the 14th Foot to a vacant troop in the 6th Dragoon Guards in the Gazette of the 25th of June last; whether he is aware that this Officer exchanged of his own accord as a Captain from Cavalry to Infantry some years ago, receiving, as was then the custom, a large sum of money for so doing; and, whether he approves of officers who have exchanged to Infantry, and received money for so doing, being brought back to fill vacancies in the Cavalry?

MR. CARDWELL: Sir, Captain the Hon. James Drummond was transferred from the 14th Foot to a vacant troop in the 6th Dragoon Guards, upon the selection of His Royal Highness the Field Marshal Commanding-in-Chief, with the approval of the Secretary of State, in the manner prescribed by the Royal Warrant. I am aware that this officer exchanged from cavalry to infantry some years ago, when the practice enabled him to obtain money by doing so; and I have no reason to suppose that he omitted to avail himself of his opportunity. The present transfer gives him no pecuniary advantage, inasmuch as if he were to retire from the Army from either commission the Purchase Commissioners would give him exactly the same sum.

ELEMENTARY EDUCATION ACT—BOARD SCHOOLS — THE NATIONAL ANTHEM.—QUESTION.

LORD CLAUD JOHN HAMILTON asked the Vice President of the Council, Whether any instructions have been issued to the Inspectors of Schools in England and Wales directing them to exclude the National Anthem from the list of songs allowed to be sung in Public Elementary Schools on the ground that it contained an appeal to the Almighty?

MR. W. E. FORSTER, in reply, said, a similar Question was addressed to him some time ago, in regard to an Inspector who thought the terms of the Act of Parliament might exclude the National Anthem from the songs permitted to be sung during the time of secular instruction. He stated at the time that he was much surprised at the Inspector having given such an opinion, which he deemed a mistaken one. That statement received public circulation, and the Department thought it unnecessary to do more than communicate it to the particular Inspector who had given the opinion. The noble Lord now said, another Inspector had pronounced a similar opinion, and if that turned out to be actually the case, he also would be informed by the Department that he had made a mistake. He should be loath to issue a general instruction to the Inspectors, because the matter was so very clear; but, nevertheless, if a general instruction were found to be necessary it should be issued. Perhaps he might prevent the necessity for any further action, if he stated now that it was decidedly the opinion of the Department that the National Anthem was not a song or hymn of such a kind that there could be any objection whatever to its being sung during the secular hour in which the children and the managers ought to be allowed to obey their own loyal instincts. The Committee of Privy Council would not feel it to be their duty to recommend any hymn or song, however excellent; but they could prevent them from being excluded.

LORD CLAUD JOHN HAMILTON said, he received his information from a clergyman who was sitting next the Inspector, and saw him strike out "God save the Queen" from the programme.

MR. W. E. FORSTER: Will the noble Lord give me names and particulars?

LORD CLAUD JOHN HAMILTON replied in the affirmative.

PARLIAMENT — ORDER OF BUSINESS.
QUESTION.

In reply to MR. FAWCETT,

MR. GLADSTONE said, he proposed that the House should meet to-morrow at 12 o'clock, and he hoped the Business would be finished at an early hour. He understood that his hon. Friend the Member for Sheffield (Mr. Mundella) intended on Monday to withdraw his Factories Act Amendment Bill. His hon. Friend had moved the second reading, to which an Amendment had been moved by the hon. Member for Brighton (Mr. Fawcett), who was entitled to speak on the Amendment. The discharge of the Order would be an entirely separate matter. It was the intention of the Government to give his hon. Friend the Member for Sheffield the means of having his Order moved, and then to allow him to move that it be discharged.

MR. FAWCETT said, he did not object that his hon. Friend (Mr. Mundella) should have an opportunity of speaking on his Bill; but he wished to know whether, being an Order of the Day, it would come on before the Motion of the right hon. Gentleman (Sir Charles Adderley) on the Gold Coast?

MR. GLADSTONE said, that at that period of the Session all the arrangements were made at the shortest possible notice, and no one could tell beforehand the exact rate at which the business would be cleared off. What he hoped was that the right hon. Gentleman (Sir Charles Adderley) would not have to wait until Monday. He might, perhaps, find an opportunity that evening, or, if not, to-morrow.

MR. J. LOWTHER said, that a Motion having been made for the second reading of the Factories Act Amendment Bill, and an Amendment having been moved to that Motion, the matter was in the hands of the House. Until that Motion and Amendment were disposed of, the Order could not be discharged without debate.

MR. GLADSTONE then moved—

"That the Orders of the Day appointed for the Evening Sitting this day be postponed until after the Notice of Motion relating to the Widows and Families of Civil Servants of the Crown and the three Notices of Motions next following."

MR. BUTT complained that he would be prevented from bringing on his Motion on the "treatment of prisoners removed" on the Four Courts Marshalsea (Dublin) Bill, by the arrangement now made.

MR. GLADSTONE replied that the right hon. Gentleman (Sir Charles Adderley) would have all the assistance which the Government could give him in bringing on his Motion on the Gold Coast. The hon. and learned Gentleman (Mr. Butt) would suffer no detriment from the arrangement now made. The business of that night might be divided into three categories—first, the Motions which would have been moved in case the Motion for the Adjournment of the House could have been put; then the Orders of the Day; and lastly, the ordinary Motions, in which category the hon. and learned Member's Motion came.

MR. BUTT repeated that by the arrangement now proposed, he should be placed in a worse position than before.

In reply to MR. WHITWELL,

MR. BRUCE said, that many accidents having happened, he had desired the Factory Inspectors to put themselves in communication with the manufacturers of these threshing machines to see whether they could not be fenced off so as to prevent accidents. A Bill—the Threshing Machines Bill—had passed through the House of Lords, and now stood for a second reading; but unless it met with general acceptance, it could not become law at that period of the Session.

Motion agreed to.

DUKE OF EDINBURGH'S ANNUITY BILL
(Mr. Bonham-Carter, Mr. Gladstone, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer.)

[BILL 272.] COMMITTEE.

Bill considered in Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Clause 1 (Power to Her Majesty to grant an additional annuity of £10,000 to Prince Alfred Ernest Albert for life).

SIR CHARLES W. DILKE said, the point to which he wished to call the attention of the House was that the hon. Member for Leicester had dealt with the so-called precedent in 1818, in which three of the Royal Dukes were tied together in the Message from the Crown.

In reply, the right hon. Gentleman denied the statement that there was no precedent for a grant on a Royal Marriage except with reference to the Succession to the Crown, and after alluding to the case of the Duke of Clarence, he proceeded thus—

"But there is another case—namely, that of the Duke of Cambridge, who was the youngest son of George III., and in respect to that Prince, who had £21,000 a-year, an additional £6,000 was voted in 1820 on his marriage."

Now, the fact was the Duke of Cambridge was married in 1818, but that was a mere mistake as to a date, a mistake which he (Sir Charles Dilke) did not wish to make much of. The more material point was, whether the grant made to the Duke of Cambridge had reference to the Succession, and on that point the Message which then came down to the House was clear. It said that—

"After the afflicting calamity which the Prince Regent and the nation have sustained in the loss of his Royal Highness's beloved and only child the Princess Charlotte, his Royal Highness is persuaded that the House of Commons will feel how essential it is to the best interests of the country that his Royal Highness should be enabled to make a suitable provision for such of his Royal brothers as shall have contracted marriage with the consent of the Crown." —[Hansard, xxxviii. 1.]

That, then, was a general provision, having regard not to the establishment of a single Royal Duke, but to the Succession to the Crown, and the cases of the three Royal Dukes were tied together. When the debate came on, Lord Castlereagh, speaking on behalf of the Government, said—

Mr. Gladstone

"A single marriage would not satisfy the anxiety of the people on the subject of the succession—though, if those illustrious individuals were less advanced in life, the case would be different. The Prince Regent, sensible of this, had made offers to such of his royal brothers as could reconcile marriage to their feelings. He had done this in the greatest spirit of affection; he had shown no preference to any one of those illustrious individuals beyond the other. He had considered that the people and the Crown had a common interest in the succession, and he had offered for such as should enter upon marriages, with the consent of the Crown, to propose to Parliament to make such a provision for them as would be consistent with public economy."—[1 Hansard, xxxviii. 80.]

The whole cases of the Royal Dukes were tied together, and were looked upon as one single case, and he (Sir Charles Dilke) thought he was justified in saying the precedent which the right hon. Gentleman adduced had no existence whatever, and was not a precedent which should have been adduced to the House. He would only add a few words spoken by a Member of that House on a previous occasion—that where a sum of money was to be voted which ought not to be granted, it was almost always proposed at a season like the present, when the House was not well attended. That particular case was on the 28th of June, and this Bill was brought forward on the very same day in July. He begged to ask the Prime Minister, whether, in fact, there was any case which was not part of the single case brought before the House by the single Message in 1818?

MR. GLADSTONE: Sir, I cannot answer the question without expressing my very deep regret that it should have been brought forward. I think it is a thing very much to be lamented that a very limited number indeed of this House find it necessary to place themselves in opposition in so strong and marked a manner to the overwhelming majority of the House—and in this case an overwhelming majority without distinction of party—and that they should feel themselves bound to continue their opposition. There is something like indecency in the pursuance of such a course. Now, Sir, I come to the question itself, and say that if the hon. Gentleman had any complaint to make, his complaint ought to be against the hon. Member for Leicester. If there was any defective statement it was in the speech of the hon. Member for Leicester. It was the hon. Member for Leicester who referred to the Duke of Clarence, and he said the case of the Duke of Clarence was a case of Succession. My answer was, that when you got down to the Duke of Cambridge, who was the youngest son of George III., if that was a case of Succession, the case of the Duke of Edinburgh, who is the second son of Her present Majesty the Queen, is quite as good a case of Succession. I am very sorry to detain the House, but I must remark that the hon. Gentleman entirely forgets that my contention was, that while the reference was inaccurate—and I made use of the expression untrue, through being inaccurate, because it put forward the case of the Duke of Clarence—I ventured to point out that the whole of the sons of George III. were included, which destroyed the force of the argument, because if the case of the Duke of Cambridge was a case of Succession, the case of the Duke of Edinburgh is also a case of Succession. But I contend that it was wholly irrelevant. We have improved upon the practice of those times. The practice of this country then was to give the full allowance, or nearly the full allowance, to the Royal Princes, whether they were bachelors or married. What has been the case of allowances to unmarried Princes in recent times? Notwithstanding the great wealth and prosperity of the country, they have been kept considerably below the allowances made to the unmarried Princes of that period, and with the view which has been distinctly explained by myself, that a grant upon their marriage should be made. And, therefore, Princes upon marriage now stand in a perfectly different position from that in which they stood in the reign of George III. If we had not shown precedents from the reign of George III. the arguments would remain perfectly good, because the grants made to unmarried Princes had been below the rates which were formerly given, and below the rates which we maintain ought to be given, when they are married, in order to sustain their position in society. So that every case of my hon. Friend entirely breaks down. I contend that precedents do exist; and I contend that if they did not exist the matter would not be in the slightest degree affected, because we have got into a better system, and instead of that ridiculous method of giving the full income before marriage, we have the principle that the incomes of these Royal Princes ought to be regulated according as they are married or unmarried, and have acted in our proposals to Parliament upon that principle. Then my hon. Friend has descended to pick up an argument in the dearth in which he finds himself, because the proposal was made on the 28th July. Does my hon. Friend think that the sentiment of love is to be controlled in its origin and growth by a regard to the convenience of Parliament. Love is not limited by any season, and I would remind my hon. Friend of the lines—

"Love, free as air, at sight of human ties, Spreads his light wings, and in a moment flies."

These things are beyond my control. I have no power to control Princes or anybody else as to the time of year at which they shall allow the invader to occupy their hearts, and to bring to an issue that great question. Beyond that, we have a precedent contrary to the argument of my hon. Friend. The Act passed for the marriage of the Prince of Wales was the first chapter of the Session of 1863. A more unjust charge was never made, or, if not made, insinuated, than that we have been parties to some arrangement for postponing the contract of these illustrious persons in order that we might have the advantage of making our proposals later in the Session. I believe I am not called upon to exculpate myself from a charge which is quite refuted by being stated.

SIR CHARLES W. DILKE merely wished to remind the House, that on the only occasion on which a younger son of the English Royal Family had married the daughter of one of the great Rulers of Europe, the proposal for a grant was made to Parliament after the marriage, and on that occasion, it was stated in the House of Lords by Lord Liverpool, that he hoped no such provision in such a case would ever be made until after the marriage had taken place and the Treaty had been laid upon the Table of the House. That course had not been taken in the present instance.

MR. MUNTZ said, he must enter his strong protest against the language made use of by the Prime Minister. The right hon. Gentleman had stated that it was indecent on the part of the minority to oppose the grant. But what was the fact? Not only had their forefathers, but the present generation had considered proposals of the sort in the House, and had done so without incurring any imputation of indecency. For his part he thought it indecent to suppose that the Crown did not wish the question to be fully discussed, so that the nation might know what Parliament was doing. What was the case in the year 1840? The right hon. Gentleman knew better than he did that in the month of January, 1840, a discussion took place in that House as to the grant to be allowed to that most estimable man the Prince Consort, whom they had unfortunately lost. The grant proposed by the First Minister of the Crown was £50,000 a-year, and it was opposed, the Opposition being led by Mr. Hume. The Opposition was unsuccessful; but there was no imputation of indecency, or of want of courtesy or loyalty to the Crown, on the part of those who joined in it, and Mr. Hume was followed into the Lobby by 39 hon. Members. What happened then? Why, a hon. and gallant Officer (the late Colonel Sibthorp), sitting on the Opposition Benches, moved the reduction of the grant to £30,000. The Motion was adopted by a large majority, and in that majority he found the name of the present Prime Minister, and also of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Buckinghamshire (Mr. Disraeli), as well as the names of right hon. Gentlemen who sat with the Premier on the Treasury bench. But did the right hon. Gentleman think he was guilty of disloyalty in so voting, or of indecency in so acting? Knowing and appreciating the high qualities of the right hon. Gentleman, he was convinced that he considered he was doing his duty in the course he adopted. Well, hon. Members on either side of the House might differ conscientiously upon these questions in the belief that they were discharging a solemn duty, and it was their right as well as their duty to vote according to that belief. He did not wish to prolong the discussion; he was sorry it had arisen; but he could not help saying that it was the right of hon. Members to discuss any subject which was brought before the House. Speaking simply for himself he claimed for himself a loyalty not inferior to that of the right hon. Gentleman, and yet last evening he had voted in the minority upon that Bill, because he considered it his duty to do so. He also spoke and voted against another measure, the Crown Estates Bill, which he was sorry the right hon. Gentleman had introduced, not because it extended, but because it tended to injure, the power of the Crown, by interfering with an arrangement which had worked so beneficially. He had risen, not to enter into the general subject, but to vindicate the right of the House to discuss whatever subject was brought before it without incurring a charge of disloyalty.

Mr. GLADSTONE said, he had no fault to find with anything that had fallen from his hon. Friend, with the exception of one word which his hon. Friend had attributed to him. [Mr. MUNRZ : Indecency.] What was the indecency? His hon. Friend founded his speech on the supposition that he had stated it was indecent to express an opinion in reference to this Bill. Why, hon. Members of the House had a perfect right and entire authority to refuse the grant altogether. That right he had never questioned. The allusion complained of had reference to an entirely different matter. His hon. Friend was vindicating the powers of the House of Commons. He, on the other hand, was vindicating the House of Commons against its own minority in certain cases. What he said was to this effect—that for a small minority to place themselves in persistent opposition to an overwhelming majority of the House, and of all sides of it, was to put themselves in a position which was scarcely consistent with decency. His hon. Friend had a perfect right to take a free and unrestricted course with respect to the Bill, and he did not intend to say—and did not say—that that course was indecent. There was a point, he said, at which opposition became indecent; but, as that expression had been objected to, he willingly withdrew it. All he would say was that there came a time when—what should he say?—propriety counselled that there should be a limit to discussions of that kind; and that was when the judgment of the House had been expressed by an overwhelming majority. It should be remembered that these Royal personages had feelings as well as others, and that there was a point at which those repeated discussions should be brought to a close.

Mr. MACFIE said, he was certain that only one feeling animated alike the bosoms of the minority and the majority of that House—that of loving and intense loyalty to the Crown. He must, however, be allowed to express his regret that the Colonies and other dependencies of the Crown were not represented in that House, in order that, through their Representatives, they might give expression to the loyal feelings which animated them, and the satisfaction with which they would receive intelligence of the auspicious alliance about to be entered into.

Mr. NEWDEGATE: Sir, though I have supported this Bill, I would do nothing to derogate from the rights of a minority. A majority can generally take care of itself, but the rights of the minority ought to be carefully protected. I think that the right hon. Gentleman at the head of the Government the other day spoke with considerable severity of what fell from my hon. Friend the Member for North-east Lancashire (Mr. Holt). My hon. Friend asked the right hon. Gentleman to give him some information with regard to the conditions of the contract. I wish to put a question to the right hon. Gentleman, and it is this—whether this marriage is to be solemnized according to the rites of any other Church than the Church of England? I think there is no undue inquisitiveness in that question.

Mr. GLADSTONE said, he thought he should not be acting consistently with his duty, if he went beyond the point at which he had already taken his stand. He must therefore decline to make any other answer with respect to the details of the proposals than that he had already given. It was no part of the duty of the Sovereign to inform him with respect to them, except within certain limits. He had already made a statement, in reply to an hon. Member opposite, which the House, he thought, considered more particular than it need have been. All he would now say was this—that he was confident the whole arrangements connected with the approaching marriage would give satisfaction to, and receive the warm approval of, the country. Beyond that he must decline to go.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 2 (Payment of proportionate part of annuity).

MR. ANDERSON, who disclaimed any idea of offering a factious opposition to the Bill, said, he would move, as an Amendment, to omit the words of the Proviso at the end of the clause, which enabled Her Majesty or her successors, with the consent of Parliament, to revoke or reduce the annuity in the event of His Royal Highness succeeding to any Sovereignty or Principality abroad; and substitute words that in that event the annuity should absolutely cease and determine. It would, he thought, be an invidious task to impose on Her Majesty the determination of the question whether the annuity should be continued in the event contemplated by the clause. By doing so, she would have to decide on the one hand against her own son, and on the other against the wish of Parliament. He thought that it would be a better arrangement if the annuity were absolutely to cease. Still, he would like to have an explanation from the Prime Minister on the subject.

Amendment moved, in page 2, line 8, to leave out all after "abroad," and insert "the said annuity, as well as the annuity heretofore granted by Parliament shall cease and determine."—(Mr. Anderson.)

MR. GREGORY ventured to differ entirely from the hon. Member for Glasgow. He doubted the propriety of inserting such a Proviso as that. A Proviso of that kind might have been inserted in the original dotation to His Royal Highness the Prince Consort; but in a treaty for the marriage of the Prince, where a provision was made not only for the Prince himself, but for the family they might hope would come after him—the country being placed in locus parentis—such a Proviso would be wholly out of place. What the House did, it should do freely, voluntarily, ungrudgingly, and with the conviction that what was freely granted would be spent judiciously. Considering the great hopes which the marriage in question were likely to realize, he thought it would not be well to couple the grant with any reservation, and he thought therefore that the existing limitation in the clause might be omitted entirely.

MR. GLADSTONE said, he could assure his hon. Friend the Member for Glasgow (Mr. Anderson) that he would hear no reproach from him for making such a Motion, for his hon. Friend was acting not only within his right, but according to the propriety of Parliament, in moving such Amendments in the details of the Bill as he thought were called for. He could not agree with the hon. Gentleman who had just sat down that there was no room for such a Proviso. What was it that the Proviso really did? In case the Duke of Edinburgh in the course of nature should succeed to a Principality abroad, which would have its own revenues and general condition of existence, his position would be so materially altered from the simple position of a junior Member of the British Royal Family, that it would not be wise to prescribe beforehand what might or might not be done. It would be more wise to reserve power to do what circumstances might seem to call for. They had felt it their duty to Parliament and the people of this country to keep the matter open, subject to the usual working of the constitution in questions of this kind. In the illustrious case of the King of the Belgians, who received an absolute annuity for life of £50,000 a-year when he ceased to be connected with this country, no such provision was made, and it was felt that there was an incongruity in his continuing to draw so very large an annuity from the taxes of the people of England, especially when a new marriage was contracted which gave him a distinct place in a foreign country. His conduct was in conformity with all that had made him illustrious in Europe during his own time; by his own act he voluntarily relinquished the grant, and paid back the whole amount into the Exchequer, less the sum required to keep the house and grounds at Claremont in good order. But though that might be a generous act on the part of the King of the Belgians, it was, in truth, a testimony that the power should have been reserved to provide for such an event. It was not, therefore, unreasonable to insert this Proviso—a power, no doubt, to be used with moderation, with reason, and with liberality. His hon. Friend the Member for Glasgow said that annuity ought to cease and determine altogether on the succession of His Royal Highness to a foreign Principality. Now, he ventured to dispute that with his hon. Friend, and he would observe that though in the course of time the Duke of Edinburgh might become a foreign Sovereign, he would not therefore cease to be an English Prince. He would still continue to have family relationship and household connections to maintain. His visits would be frequent, if his stay was not long, and it would not be possible to treat him as entirely cut off from his own country. The grant might in that case, therefore, be modified; but it could not be extinguished. There was, however, a fair amount of reason for the proposal which had been made by his hon. Friend, and he would say that discussion on such subjects within fair limits was desirable. The second Amendment of his hon. Friend was, that the jointure provided for the Grand Duchess should only accrue in case the Duke of Edinburgh died before his accession to a foreign Principality. In the case of the Prince of Wales, where the grant was £50,000 a-year, the jointure was fixed at £30,000. But in this case, where the grant was fixed at £25,000, the jointure of the Princess, in the event of her becoming a widow, was only £6,000. Now, looking to the small proportion which this jointure bore to the Parliamentary income to be given to the Prince, he thought it was so moderate and reasonable that probably his hon. Friend would not think it necessary to take the sense of the Committee on the subject.

MR. ANDERSON said, he understood that the grant would be reduced, but would not terminate on the accession of the Duke to a foreign Principality. ["No, no!"] Was not that so?

MR. GLADSTONE said, he did not venture to point out what would occur. What he said was, that it might be reasonable to reserve the power given in the Proviso; but, on the other hand, it would not be reasonable to provide for the extinction of the annuity. He did not prejudge the case. There should be a full and ample reservation of the course which Parliament might pursue.

MR. BECKETT-DENISON thought it would be a most unreasonable condition to attach to this annuity, that if His Royal Highness succeeded to a foreign Principality it should cease and determine without reference to the circumstances of the case. He would venture to remind the House that the Royal Duke in question was not allotted a larger sum than would be received by the son of anyone not the reigning Sovereign. He hoped, therefore, after the ample discussion which the question had undergone, the Amendment would be withdrawn.

MR. ANDERSON said, he was content to leave the matter on the footing on which it had been placed by the right hon. Gentleman, and he should therefore withdraw the Amendment.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Clause agreed to.

Remaining clauses agreed to.

House resumed.

Bill reported, without Amendment; to be read the third time To-morrow.

CONSOLIDATED FUND (APPROPRIATION) BILL.

(Mr. Bonham-Carter, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Baxter.)

C O M M I T T E E .

Order for Committee read.

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair."

MR. BUTT asked the First Lord of the Treasury, upon what grounds the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury had declined to comply with the recommendations of the Trustees of the British Museum, for an addition to the salaries of the officers and assistants in that Establishment; and, whether it was the intention of the Lords' Commissioners to re-consider the request of those officers and assistants for a re-adjustment of their salaries? There had been no rise in wages since 1837, although not only had the price of provisions been much augmented, but the duties of the several officers had been largely increased. Various meetings, attended by the Archbishop of Canterbury, Lord Sydney, Lord Derby, Mr. Walpole, Lord Eversley, and others, had recommended an increase of the wages; but the increase had been refused, and he would urge that a recommendation to which they had pledged their character was not one that ought to be lightly disregarded. The Treasury had, however, expressed their regret that they were unable to accede to the application. What the officers asked for was an increase proportionate to that of other Departments, and he hoped that in that, as in the other cases recently brought forward, a satisfactory assurance would be given by the Government.

SIR JOHN LUBBOCK wished to say a few words in support of the hon. and learned Member. Looking at the salaries paid in other Departments, there was very great force in the recommendation of the Trustees. Considering the great value of the British Museum Collection, it was of the utmost importance to the country that it should be superintended by gentlemen of the highest attainments in Science and Art. The collections, moreover, had been greatly enlarged during the last few years, without any corresponding increase in the staff.

MR. LOCKE complained of the abruptness of the answer given by the Treasury to the Trustees. No reason was assigned why the salaries should not be increased; and, if there were any reason, he hoped it would now be given.

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER said, the terms of the answer of the Treasury to the Trustees of the British Museum had been misunderstood, as it was certainly not intended to show any want of respect or consideration towards them. He himself had the honour of being one of the Trustees of the British Museum, and nothing was farther from his thoughts than to treat that body of gentlemen with anything like disrespect. There was, however, no use in arguing upon the terms of the letter, and he would come to the merits of the question. It was quite a mistake to suppose there was nothing to say because so little was said. The matter underwent very careful and elaborate consideration at the Treasury before the answer was returned. The Trustees, however, asked the Treasury to do for the Museum what they had not done for any other office under the Crown—namely, to raise the salaries of all persons employed in the establishment, from the principal librarian down to the messengers with one exception. That was a course which the Treasury had never yet followed in any case. They had always professed themselves perfectly ready to listen to any complaints of inadequacy of salaries, taking each class of cases by themselves, and investigating them carefully; but they had always set their face against acceding to a proposal for raising the salaries of a whole department en bloc, and for one very sufficient reason—namely, that there was no public Department so constituted that all persons employed therein were equally ill-paid. He thought the Trustees had given themselves an unnecessary amount of trouble, and that they had been led into an error in the manner in which they conducted this case; and that if they had considered the matter more they would have seen that the course they recommended was extremely undesirable, because they avowed their opinion not only that everybody almost was entitled to an increase of salary, but they stated the exact amount of salary to which they thought everybody was entitled. This they did with the great authority which naturally attached to their name, without consulting in any way previously that Department of the Government which was answerable for this expenditure. He was quite sure there was no such intention on the part of the Trustees; but by thus acting they placed the Government in this position—that if they refused or altered any of these things, every single person who found the Trustees had recommended him to a particular salary, or increment that he did not get, would consider he had a grievance. Such a mode of proceeding placed an undue difficulty in the way of the Treasury discharging their duty. Again, the arguments adduced by the Trustees did not altogether produce conviction in his mind. For instance, they said some of their best men were from time to time enticed away into other employments. Well, he believed that would always be the case in the British Museum even if the salaries were considerably raised. People employed there not only conducted the business of the establishment, but had extraordinary opportunities for acquiring knowledge which was extremely valuable to themselves and to other persons. The feeling of the country was running very strongly in favour of physical science, especially of those sciences that depended upon observation—such, for instance, as Natural History and Geology. There were institutions of all kinds growing up where men who were capable of giving instruction in those subjects were very much wanted. The result was a competition for persons possessed of such acquirements, and the men were naturally sought for at the British Museum. Indeed, one of the inducements to persons to enter the Museum was that they were placed in a position where their talents and industry were sure to be known and appreciated. Therefore, the notion that they were to raise salaries with the object of competing with the public outside was a delusion. It was impossible for the Treasury in these things to compete with the wants of the public generally. Then it must be considered that the salaries at the British Museum were confessedly lower than in the Civil Service, and for obvious reasons. In the first place, instead of the drudgery of a clerk in an ordinary office, of the driest and most repulsive nature, very often spending whole days poring over figures, or transcribing, or indexing, these public servants were employed in a manner most delightful—that was, they were generally men of decided tastes for particular branches of science and learning, and they spent their time in a treasure house in which objects of art and antiquarian interest and books on every subject were collected together. They had the further advantage of a social position somewhat higher than that of officials holding corresponding places in the Civil Service. It had always been assumed, therefore, that it was not necessary to give salaries quite on the scale of the other offices. Moreover, the proposal of the Trustees was of the most sweeping description, inasmuch as it would give an increase of salaries all through the establishment from the top to the bottom, the superintendent of the Natural History Collection being the only officer who was not recommended for a rise of salary. A few years ago, it should be borne in mind, the Blacas Collection was purchased for £48,000, and since he had been Chancellor of the Exchequer the Castellani Collections had been secured, one of them at a cost of no less than £27,000. Now, the British Museum must not altogether expect to light the candle at both ends, and when the Government were spending large sums in enriching the collections, it was not a proper time for pressing for a general and sweeping rise of salaries. Such were the considerations he begged to submit to the House in order to justify the Treasury in declining to accede to the proposal of the Trustees of the British Museum for a general rise of salaries in the direction marked out by them. He did not think a case had been made out for raising the salary of the secretary and principal librarian, Mr. Winter Jones, who could hardly consider himself ill-paid if he received the same salary as his excellent and deserving predecessor, Sir Antonio Panizzi. He must repeat that the Treasury were always ready to consider recommendations made to them as regarded individual cases or classes of officers. If the Trustees would give up the notion of a general and sweeping rise, and, above all, if they would make a communication to the Treasury in such a way that it would not be known to everybody in the Museum, so as to raise hopes and expectations which might not be gratified, the Treasury would carefully consider their proposals. In conclusion, he might remark that there was one other consideration which ought not to be left out of sight by the Trustees—that was, that the British Museum formed an exception to the general rule laid down by Parliament for the public service. The Trustees had declined to accede to the suggestion of the Government, to allow such places as the principle could be properly applied to, to be open to public competition. It was not unreasonable to ask those who wanted them to increase the salaries not only of the present officials, but of those coming after them, to show a willingness to adopt competition as being, in the opinion of Parliament, the best means of securing the services of the most efficient persons.

SIR FRANCIS GOLDSMID said, it followed that if some valuable collections had been added to the Museum, additional trouble was imposed upon the employés, and formed an argument for and not against raising their salaries. He was therefore glad to find that the Chancellor of the Exchequer did not discourage the Trustees from making to him some modified proposal for the better remuneration of the officials employed in that institution.

Bill considered in Committee, and reported, without Amendment; to be read the third time To-morrow.

EAST INDIA REVENUE ACCOUNTS. COMMITTEE. ADJOURNED DEBATE.

Order read, for resuming Adjourned Debate on Amendment proposed to Question [31st July], "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair;" and which Amendment was,

To leave out from the word "That" to the end of the Question, in order to add the words "in the opinion of this House, the present constitution of the Government of India fails to secure an efficient or economical management of its finances, and that this House views with apprehension the state of local taxation in that Country, and is of opinion that its financial condition must be regarded as unsatisfactory so long as the Income Tax forms its only financial reserve,"—(Mr. Fawcett.)

—instead thereof.

Question again proposed, "That the words proposed to be left out stand part of the Question."

Debate resumed.

MR. W. M. TORRENS said, that taking the statement that had been made by the hon. Gentleman the Under Secretary of State for India for granted, the financial prospect was not re-assuring:—in an Empire so vast we were subject to many unforeseen contingencies, and no margin had been left for emergencies that might any day arise. Our Indian Empire was just able to carry on without getting into debt, and without any provision or resource in case of trouble or calamity except the obvious plan of borrowing or the re-imposition of the Income Tax, which was ill suited to India, and had caused the greatest dissatisfaction, and he must express his satisfaction that the new Governor General had seen his way to relieving the Natives from this tax. He had more than once called attention to the grievances which existed between the Native Princes and the Supreme Government; it was therefore satisfactory to observe that these relations appeared to be improving, and he felt convinced that a more generous, considerate, and conciliatory treatment of the Native Rulers would pay in the end. He wished to acknowledge the improvement that had been made in the financial accounts with the Native States, which were much more clear than heretofore; and he was glad to find an admission that £52,000 was to be credited as a balance to the Nawab Nazim of Bengal, and that last year there was a similar balance of £55,000. There remained a balance of £50,000 or £55,000 to be carried to the fund for the use and benefit of the Principality. Sir John Kaye put these accumulations at £150,000; but it was desirable that whatever was really due as accumulations should be carried to the benefit of the Principality. He passed now to general and more important considerations. The hon. Member for Brighton (Mr. Fawcett), in his able statement yesterday, approached this subject from an Indian point of view, pleading eloquently and earnestly on behalf of those who were not represented in this House. He (Mr. Torrens) wished to deal with it from the Home point of view, and consider it in the interest of the British taxpayer, whose interests were deeply involved in the financial prosperity of our Indian Empire. In taking over from the Company this magnificent estate, to hold with the rest of the Empire, we were bound to watch the growth of expenditure; because we could not but feel that, if ever there came a time when India could not pay her way, England could never shelter herself under a plea of limited liability, but would have to make up the deficiency. We could not fall back upon over-taxed India. It was said that the value of Indian securities was greater now than had been the case under the Company. The reason was clear—India remained the same, but there was added the additional security afforded by the Queen's Government. If, however, during a period of political fine weather, the Secretary of State for India could only show a bare financial equilibrium, with nothing to spare, what would happen at a time of disturbance in India or troubles in Europe which might affect the peace of the East? There was good reason for falling back under such circumstances upon the warnings of the late Governor General and Commander-in-Chief, which hitherto had not had the effect of producing any material reduction of expenditure. No material retrenchment was made or promised in military expenditure, and we were dependent upon poppyheads for one main branch of revenue. It was the duty of the House to provide, as far as possible, for a better state of things. Enormous sums had been spent upon military and commercial railways; but the military railways were not completed and the commercial did not pay. The interest upon these unprofitable works went into the pockets of British stockholders, and the House of Commons was bound to see that the construction of railways in India did not become a burden upon the Indian people. In the same way the Indian debt was held mainly by Europeans. These questions were generally discussed at a time when Parliament was out of town. The Members now present were a poor remnant of the House, and he hoped no hon. Gentleman would be unkind enough to take steps to ascertain how many were present. The fact was that England was adding to its wealth by a percentage upon expenditure in India which the work executed did not return. Turning now to the question of local taxation, he understood the Under Secretary of State to say last night that the incidence of local taxation in our Indian Empire was a question of insignificant item, because it was levied on such an enormous population. But Parliament was bound to see that taxes were not levied oppressively upon the poorer part of the people of India; and he could not help reminding the Under Secretary that the number of the people and the average of the tax per head had no more to do in showing the incidence of taxation than the average length of the spinal column or the average length of the noses of the people. Remembering the value of property in India compared with the value of property in this country, and bearing in mind also that the whole earnings of India only amounted to from £250,000,000 to £300,000,000, while those of England amounted to £900,000,000, it was absurd to compare the amount of taxation paid per head by the people of the two countries. If the true measure of taxation were the capacity of the thing taxed then the people of India, in their poverty, paid twice as much as did the people of England. A very suggestive piece of evidence was given before the Committee upstairs by Lord Lawrence, who was so justly regarded, not only by the Under Secretary, but by hon. Gentlemen on both sides of the House, as the very highest authority on the subject. He was asked by a member of the Committee—"In case the revenue should fall short, is there any existing tax you know of which can be increased with safety to the State?" His reply was—"I know of none." Then he was asked—"Is there any new tax that could, in your opinion, be levied?" and he replied—"I am not aware of any." We were therefore in this position—that the richest country in the world, having taken over a great Empire from an independent Company which had managed its affairs satisfactorily, saw it now burdened as heavily as it was possible to bear. Was that, he asked, a creditable state of things? In this state of things it was most desirable and expedient—it had become the bounden and indispensable duty of the Government of India—to cut down the gigantic expenditure which now existed, and to free the taxpayers from the oppressive burdens which were now laid on them. No great political question now agitated the Indian Empire; but how long might that state of things continue? It would be mere affectation to pretend that there existed no smothered griefs and grievances capable at any moment of becoming pestilent sources of embarrassment. It was the duty of the House of Commons not to wait until serious difficulties arose, but to warn the Government in time, so that they might take preventive and remedial measures. The present discussion was therefore likely to be beneficial. The Treasury did not like to be overhauled, but investigation had led to good results. The Colonial Office had been brought to book with a like effect. It could not but be attended with satisfactory results that the authorities at the India Office should hear the opinions of the House of Commons freely expressed. This Session that House had been surprised by receiving a Bill from the House of Lords, by which the Lords declared themselves weary of their jurisdiction in the matter of appeals, and they accordingly divested themselves of their ancient powers which were to be committed henceforth to a new Court of Appeal. Coerced by that expression of opinion on the part of the other House, he had voted for the second reading of the Bill; but he was very sorry the other House should have thought it necessary to deprive themselves of their ancient powers; but that being so, they were, in his opinion, more bound than ever to do all they could in other ways to exercise their combined efforts for the benefit of the people of India. In the House of Lords there sat ex-Governor Generals of India, ex-Commanders-in-Chief, and others long intimately connected with that country. Here, then, were the materials of a tribunal of which they should avail them.

selves for the benefit of India. Why should they not act together, as by a Joint Committee between the two Houses coming together from time to time, in the consideration of difficult questions affecting the welfare of India? He merely threw this out as a suggestion. Parliament was responsible to the Sovereign, to the people of India, and to the people of this country for knowing how India was governed, and no mere neglect or evasion of that duty would exonerate them from it; and they should provide some means by which their best men could be brought together to consider questions of great and perhaps perilous importance which might arise in India. He thanked the House for the attention with which they had listened to the few observations he had felt it his duty to make, and he would conclude by repeating that in discussing Indian matters they should keep steadily in view their primary duty—while sustaining the executive Government to take care that they were not left uninformed of the financial conditions and prospects of that country.

MR. BOURKE said, that he should not have addressed the House but for some observations that fell from the hon. Member for Brighton (Mr. Fawcett) in his speech last night; he hoped, therefore, the House would extend its indulgence to him in his endeavour to answer them. Although he dissented in great measure from many of the hon. Member's opinions, still he could not but think that in his vigorous denunciations of extravagance in the Government of India, he was doing good service to the State; and every one connected with the Government of India should hail him as a most valuable ally. He believed that the Government of India must look upon these denunciations as most valuable to them; because the Government of India was such a vast machine that it was impossible that the Executive could know everything that was going on in different parts of the Empire; and the more extravagance and abuse were brought to light, the more chance the Government of India would have of governing in a manner that would be satisfactory to themselves and to the country. He also thought, however, that when the hon. Gentleman took such interest in the Government of India, and made such long speeches upon the matter, he should be very careful to sift what was sound from what was unsound. He did not wish in any way to detract from the merit of the hon. Member; but still he must say that he thought he was a little hard last night on the Government of India to represent the remission of taxation which had taken place to the extent of £6,000,000 as entirely owing to the agitation which he had inaugurated three or four years ago. No doubt it was a great advantage to have public opinion directed to Indian matters; but he could not help thinking that those who were engaged in the Government of India were influenced by much higher motives. They felt it to be their duty to leave no stone unturned and no effort unexerted to bring the expenditure of India within the revenue. He would leave many of the observations of the hon. Member upon the general policy pursued in India to be replied to by some Member of the Government. He believed that most of those observations could be satisfactorily answered, certainly those with regard to cash balances and public lands. He agreed with him that India was a very poor country, and that it was almost impossible to institute any analogy between the incidence of taxation there and in this country. He thought that the Under Secretary of State for India had put the matter much higher than he might have done when he said that the taxation in India amounted to 3s. 7*½*d. per head; because in making that estimate, he took into consideration the whole of the taxation of the country, whilst £30,000,000 of it was really not taxation at all, but was derived from land revenue, opium, and two or three other items. [MR. GRANT DUKE observed that he had included the land revenue, but not the opium revenue.] He thought that the hon. Gentleman had understated the case. On the other hand, he could not agree with the hon. Member for Brighton when he said that the income tax was the only reserve which India possessed. He would be sorry to imagine a change of circumstances in India which would make the income tax its only reserve. Many taxes had been mentioned as likely to suit the wants of the people of India, and to fall upon them with less severity than the income tax; but he believed it would be unnecessary, unless some great disaster should happen, that any increase should be made in the taxation of the country. The real reform we must look for was in a reduction of expenditure, and he had himself on two or three occasions that Session brought the subject before the House. The hon. Member for the City of London (Mr. Crawford) was directly interested in the railways of India; the railway over which he presided had reduced its rates to the very lowest point; others were in the same position; and he looked forward with considerable hopefulness to a large reduction in the enormous amount the taxpayers were obliged to pay on account of railways, which was nearly £2,000,000 altogether. It was said that we had made them too expensively; but, having made them, we must do the best we could with them. Although the passenger traffic was increasing, the goods traffic was not increasing appreciably, and that was a point well worth consideration. He came now to what was the real cause of his addressing the House, and that was the attack which had been made on what the hon. Member called the "scheme of decentralization," though its proper name would have been the "provincial service scheme." He thanked the hon. Member sincerely for the way in which he had spoken of the late Viceroy, whose public acts were of course open to the severest criticism; but he complained of the hon. Member saying that the decentralization scheme of Lord Mayo was answerable for the prominence of late years of the question of local taxation, because that scheme involved an expenditure so large that they had to resort to expedients to meet it. Now, what was the system which had been so denounced? Though there were under it large powers given to local bodies over local taxation, it was not the fact, as the hon. Member seemed to suppose, that local taxation had its foundation and origin in 1870; and, indeed, nothing could be farther from the real state of the case. Money had been levied for years by local bodies, and there was hardly anything over which local governments could not exercise powers of taxation; whilst at the same time they could not control the expenditure in any way whatever. That was the evil aimed at by the policy of 1870, and it was a policy that was by no means new. The hon. Member for Orkney (Mr. Laing) was almost the first to speak in high terms of operations of the kind; and the right hon. Member for Tiverton (Mr. Massey) bore similar testimony. Until 1870, however, such a scheme was never put into practice, though it had been advised. Now how was that scheme put into practice? In 1870, the income tax was very high, and it was thought very desirable by the Governor General to take steps to remedy a financial policy which was so unsatisfactory. The plan he proposed was that, in order to remove a large amount of income tax he should carry the matter out through local governments, by adopting such methods of taxation as would be most suitable for each province and least embarrassing to the people. Then certain sources of taxation were delivered over to local bodies to provide for certain services, and local taxation was to be raised to supply the deficiency. When this was called "decentralization" it should be borne in mind that no control was given up, and there were the greatest safeguards that local bodies should not exceed their powers. What the Government said was—

"In sharing with the local Governments a portion of the control which it now exercises, the Supreme Government gives nothing that can be retained with advantage to Imperial interests. On the contrary, it will associate with itself an authority by whose assistance the administration can be made more efficient."

The difficulties were not ignored, for it was said—

The Governor General in Council is aware of the difficulties which surround the practical adoption of these principles in India. But they are not insurmountable. Serious obstacles will have to be overcome, and much prejudice, ignorance, and suspicion encountered. Disappointments and partial failures are certain to occur; but when the object in view is the instruction of many peoples and races in a good system of administration, his Excellency in Council is fully convinced that the local Governors and all their subordinates will not be slow to take every opportunity of enlisting in the great work of general improvement the active assistance, and, at all events, the sympathy, of many classes who have hitherto taken little or no part in the work of social and material advancement."

That was the principle upon which the scheme of provincial service was established, and, so far from its operation having increased the burden of taxation, it had effected economy by giving the local Governments inducement to promote it. Notwithstanding the denunciations of the hon. Member for Brighton, he should be able to show that the scheme had been eminently successful, Sir Richard Temple, in his financial statement for this year, said—

"During the current year a circular was addressed to the local Governments, asking opinions as to the working of the system of provincial services; and the replies are unanimously and strongly in favour of the system. Improvements, both in efficiency and economy, and abridgment of labour, are attributed to it by all the authorities consulted."

Further, he showed that the burdens of the people had been lessened and not increased, because the whole amount levied under the new system was £212,000, and the allotments of the Supreme Government to the local governments were £320,000 less than in the preceding year. While Sir Richard Temple said the answers of the local governments to the inquiries addressed to them were satisfactory, Sir George Campbell, Lieutenant Governor of Bengal, in one of the most interesting documents connected with the administration of India ever produced, after discussing the two courses that were open—the increase of taxation, or the reduction of expenditure—said—

"Before leaving this subject the Lieutenant Governor would ask to be allowed to submit his humble testimony to the wisdom and the practical efficiency of the system of provincial finance inaugurated by the Government of the late Earl of Mayo. It seems to him that for a beginning it went quite far enough and not too far; that it has most successfully supplied a motive to economy and method which has taken full effect; that it has immensely diminished the friction between the Supreme and subordinate Governments to which the finance of the civil departments continually gave rise; and that has enabled the local Governments to mould and shape the departmental establishments and expenses with a view to their efficiency and their adaptation to local requirements in a way which was impossible under the old system. The experiment has been, the Lieutenant Governor ventures to say, a complete and unalloyed success."

The result was that, instead of producing greater taxation, economy resulted from their being able to make both ends meet. It would be a great misfortune, therefore, for the people of India if, in consequence of the remarks of the hon. Member for Brighton, anything should occur to prevent that experiment from being carried out still further. The first step was not intended to be a final one, and many improvements were necessary in order to carry out the scheme to its ultimate end. No doubt the present Viceroy of India was impressed with that feeling, and that he would introduce modifications such as the late Lord Mayo had intended to introduce; and in that case, he might look to that House to uphold him in that policy. In conclusion, he expressed a hope that the House would not concur in the views of the hon. Member for Brighton.

SIR WILFRID LAWSON said, he had had the good fortune to be present at the annual duel which took place between the Under Secretary of State for India and the hon. Member for Brighton; but he could hardly make up his mind to decide between the gloomy statement of the hon. Member for Brighton and the bright description of the Under Secretary for India, who would wish them to believe that India was an earthly paradise. The latter hon. Gentleman appeared to attribute that glowing state of affairs to economy, opium, and Providence. [MR. GRANT DUFF said, he only mentioned economy, and opium.] As the hon. Gentleman excluded Providence, it was satisfactory to hear that the other agencies were at work for good, and that they were approaching the happy state that had been described. It should not be forgotten, however, that there were other great nations in the world besides England and India, and that we ought to have some regard for the happiness and welfare of neighbouring countries. Instead of that, we poisoned them with opium. He complained that it was disgraceful to this country to force opium upon China—a traffic which in its effects had been described as worse than the Slave Trade. How, he asked, should we like it, if the Chinese were able, by maintaining larger armies, to insist on carrying on a trade with us in some injurious drug, which our Government strongly objected to being introduced into the country. Our influence abroad was damaged in consequence of the extraordinary course which we had pursued with reference to this matter, and yet when we had succeeded in pauperizing large numbers of the Chinese the Under Secretary of State rose in his place, and thanked Providence because the people of that country were becoming even more demoralized than hitherto. His right hon. Friend the Member for Oxfordshire (Mr. Henley) might, perhaps, say the opium revenue in India was not worse than the spirit revenue in England. Well, for his part, he did not think it was so bad ; for, as the late Sir Benjamin Brodie remarked, an opium eater was useless but not mischievous, whereas a spirit-drinker was both useless and mischievous. He very often admired the masterly statements made by his hon. Friend the Member for Brighton with respect to the affairs and Government of India, and he thought the hon. Member ought to speak out boldly, and say whether he thought it was right to raise a revenue from opium. Not many Sessions ago he (Sir Wilfrid Lawson) moved a Resolution condemnatory of the system of raising a great part of the Revenue of India by a tax on opium. The Government thereupon moved the Previous Question, which was always a slippery way of getting out of a question. The Prime Minister on that occasion said, that the Government would inquire into the subject. He would shortly give the House another opportunity of deciding whether it was right to raise our Indian Revenue by that means, when he trusted the House would agree with him in condemning that cruel and inhuman method of raising revenue, which was unworthy of being supported by the Parliament of a great, humane, and generous people.

MR. R. N. FOWLER said, he had supported the hon. Baronet's Motion for three years, and if he had the opportunity, he should do so when it was again brought under the notice of the House. One of the reasons why India had been transferred from the old Company to the Government was, because of the scandal of the opium trade, and yet nothing had been done in that respect, and whatever had been the sins of the old Company in encouraging the opium trade, the sins of the House of Commons had been three times greater. The subject was one that greatly interested the English people ; for if they decided on stopping it, they must consider how far they would be prepared to assist the Revenues of India. He could not agree with the hon. Member for Brighton, and deal with opium revenue as a financial question on account of its doubtful source. If China were to cultivate opium, there would be the risk of losing it, in which case India would have a deficit instead of a surplus.

They should bear in mind how precarious that source of revenue was, and consider how unwise it was to build all our financial arrangements in India upon such a basis. The salt tax of India was one also that pressed very heavily upon the poor of that country, and it was an unsound principle to tax the ordinary and common necessities of life. The income tax was not suited to India, and he rejoiced that Lord Northbrook appeared disposed to put an end to it. It was not advisable to persevere in the imposition of a tax against public feeling, but when they yielded to the feelings of the higher classes of India with reference to a particular tax, it would be unfortunate to be compelled to retain one like that on salt, which materially affected the poor. As the sources of taxation were very limited in that country, he thought that the only thing they could do was to see whether they could not make some reduction in the expenditure, and he was of opinion that it would be well for them to consider whether they might not with safety diminish the Native Army. The Native Army consisted of 120,000 men ; and the question which he wished to submit to the Government was, whether such a large force was necessary. He thought a considerable reduction might be made with perfect safety, especially in the case of Madras, where there were 27,000 men. He thanked the hon. Member for Brighton for having so forcibly brought his views under the notice of the House, and he believed that the devotion which he had shown to their interests would prove to be most advantageous to the vast population of India.

SIR CHARLES WINGFIELD said, that although agreeing with much of the powerful speech of the hon. Member for Brighton, he yet regretted that that hon. Gentleman had placed his Amendment on the Paper. After the House had appointed a Committee to consider the whole subject of Indian Finance the hon. Member could hardly expect that before the Report of the Committee was complete, the House would pronounce an opinion on controverted questions, and affirm the Resolutions which he had put on the Paper. Nobody who had any hand in framing the scheme of local taxation to which reference had been made, had yet been examined before the Committee in its defence ; and it would therefore be more judicious not to pronounce a judgment upon it until the other side of the case had been heard. He thought the hon. Member for Brighton had drawn too dark a picture of the state of India and the conduct of the Government. If our government of that country had been so bad as the hon. Member had described, it was doubtful whether even so patient a people as the inhabitants of India would have sat quiet so long under such a rule. He could not be accused of flattering the Government of India, various of whose measures of late years he had condemned; but it was impossible for any one who had long been concerned in the civil administration of India, and who had studied its history and condition in times before it came under British sway, not to be convinced of the great benefits which our rule had conferred on that country and its people. The native Press of India was not slow to recognize the advantages of English rule; for while frankly owning that foreign rule was not in itself a desirable thing, and while charging our Government with many shortcomings, yet it admitted the great benefits it conferred, and declared that if a struggle should arise between England and Russia, it would be the duty of the Natives heartily to support England. He did not regard with unalloyed satisfaction the discontinuance of the income tax. That tax, if it applied to very low incomes was objectionable, but it afforded a means of bringing under contribution the moneyed and trading classes, who would not otherwise bear their fair share of the burdens of the State, and he thought that if it had been restricted to incomes of £150 a-year and upwards, the tax would have been paid cheerfully. If they should require in any emergency to increase the revenue of India to any considerable extent, it could only be done by taxing the rich, and the rich could only be reached by an income tax. In his opinion, however, the question of the income tax shrunk into insignificance when compared with the greater question of local taxation. The hon. Member for Brighton had correctly represented his (Sir Charles Wingfield's) evidence before the Committee. In his instructions for the settlement of the land revenue of Oude 12 years ago, under the authority of Lord Canning, he distinctly said that the cesses in addition to the land revenue proper should be  $2\frac{1}{2}$  per cent, and he gave the people an assurance that those cesses should not be increased during the period of the settlement. Notwithstanding that fact, an Act was, two or three years ago, passed by the Legislative Council doubling those cesses. In that manner faith had been broken with the landholders not only in Oude, but in the Punjab also. He deprecated the attempt to push on public improvements too far. Rapid progress meant increased taxation, and increased taxation meant discontent. The Under Secretary, in alluding to the recent decrease in expenditure, forgot to state that it was accounted for to a great extent by a decreased expenditure on public works. He entirely concurred with the hon. Member (Mr. Fawcett) that Madras and Bombay should be administered by Lieutenant Governors instead of by Governors, and one advantage of the arrangement would be that you would then get rid of the expense of Councils and of Commands in Chief at these Presidencies. He opposed any legislation which was at variance with the traditions and habits of the people. But it sometimes happened that upon the Council there were two or three doctrinaires who favoured such legislation, and that showed the necessity of a Secretary of State with a controlling power in England. No real disposition had been shown to admit the Natives of India to the Civil Service; and the Natives could not but contrast the hot haste of the Government in imposing taxes with the delay in carrying out an Act of Parliament. One of the most important questions in India, therefore, was how to give effect to the Act of Parliament, and Her Majesty's Proclamation, in which it was stated that the subjects of all races were to be admitted to all employments for which they were suited. No doubt, Natives were employed now, but in small and underpaid posts. They were, however, well qualified for the higher judicial offices, and their appointment to such offices would not only satisfy them, but conduce to economy; because it was not necessary to give as much money to Natives who were serving in their own country, as to Europeans who must be tempted by high salaries to leave theirs.

Sir Charles Wingfield

MR. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN said, his hon. Friend the Member for Brighton had expressed an opinion that the proposals of the Government of India, in reference to military expenditure, were frequently overborne by the War Department at home, and that in that way the interests of India were in many cases disregarded. His hon. Friend, by his frequent allusions to the evidence taken by the Committee upstairs, rather conveyed the impression that the conclusion he arrived at was founded on that evidence. As a Member of the Committee, he (Mr. Campbell-Bannerman) was bound to say that no evidence was given on the subject, except of a very general character, and to a very slight extent, and no opportunity had been afforded to the War Department to refute it. When the Committee met next Session, however, that opportunity would be given, and he merely rose to ask the House to suspend its judgment on that subject until both sides had been heard. He was much mistaken if it would not be shown that if proposals had been set aside and a new system adopted, the result had not been beneficial to India in an economical point of view. The fact was that the Secretary of State for War had not the slightest desire to impose upon the Indian Government any charge which was not justly due from them.

SIR JOHN LUBBOCK thanked the Under Secretary of State for India for his able and interesting statement. He, for one, was not satisfied that there was any sufficient reason for adopting the Resolution which the hon. Member for Brighton had brought forward. In one expression of regret on the part of his hon. Friend they would all concur—namely, that the Indian Budget had been presented at so late a period of the Session. His hon. Friend and the Under Secretary for India were doubtless at one upon that subject; although the mere fact that the Budget was brought forward at a late period of the Session was no proof of indifference on the part of the Government. With respect to the subject of taxation, he could not help thinking that his hon. Friend had painted the condition of India in too dark colours when he said it would be impossible to raise an extra £5,000,000 of revenue on account of the poverty of the country. In one sense India was a poor, in another sense it was a rich, country. If Englishmen could wear little clothing, sleep in the open air, and be induced to give up the use of intoxicating drinks, it would be difficult to raise the revenue which the Chancellor of the Exchequer now received. And with respect to local taxation, it should be borne in mind that one beneficial result of local burdens was to educate the people in self-government. His hon. Friend complained that the management of the affairs of India was placed in the hands of officials who were not elected by those whom they governed. But representative government was a thing unknown in India. The former Governors of India governed the country for their own benefit. We endeavoured to govern India for the benefit of the people of India. Of course, we had made mistakes; but, on the whole, he maintained that we had no cause to be ashamed of our conduct as regarded India. He could not, therefore, help regretting that his hon. Friend had used such phrases as "squandering the revenues of India" and "contemptuous indifference of the House of Commons," because they were unfair to the Government and unjust to the House and to the people of this country.

SIR PATRICK O'BRIEN inquired the reason of the delay in furnishing a Return for which he had moved last year, as to the relative number of Hindoos and Mussulmans officially employed in India; also why it was that the system of Staff appointments which prevailed in England was not adopted in India?

MR. BECKETT-DENISON moved the adjournment of the debate.

MR. FAWCETT asked when the debate would be resumed?

MR. BRUCE said, it would be taken to-morrow, at 12 o'clock.

Motion agreed to.

Debate further adjourned till To-morrow.

And it being now five minutes to Seven of the clock, the House suspended its Sitting.

The House resumed its Sitting at Nine of the clock.

CIVIL SERVANTS (PENSIONS TO WIDOWS AND FAMILIES).

OBSERVATIONS.

MR. BAILLIE COCHRANE, in rising to call the attention of the House to the circumstance that there is no power to grant any Pensions to the widows and families of those Civil Servants of the Crown who die while in the performance of their duties, whatever the duration of their public service, and more especially with reference to the Foreign and Colonial Services, and to move a Resolution upon the subject, said, that the Civil Servants had very great cause to complain. Since the salaries were fixed many years ago there had been a great change in prices, which during the last 20 years had nearly doubled. The case that he had to submit was a grievous one, and he trusted the Government would see that justice was done to the widows and families of those deserving men, who, after from 20 to 50 years' service, had died, leaving their widows and families entirely unprovided for. The first case to which he would refer was that of Mr. Keith E. Abbott, who had been 35 years in the service of the Crown—for 27 years in Persia, and afterwards for five years as Consul General at Odessa. He died last year, leaving a widow and eight children, and no provision had been made for them by the Government. The next case was that of Mr. Erskine, senior clerk of the Accountant General's department of the Admiralty, who served for 35 years. He died in 1872, after a brief illness caused by extreme application to public duties. The application of the Admiralty to the Treasury for an allowance to the widow and children was immediately rejected. He had for 17 years paid his contribution to the Superannuation Fund; but, notwithstanding that, nothing was done for the widow and children. In the case of Governor Keate, who, after having been 30 years in the employment of the Government, was sent out to the coast of Africa and died within seven days, no provision had been made for his family. Then there was the case of Mr. Tomline, who was a clerk at Devonport Dockyard for 25 years. He died after six weeks' illness, caused by overwork, and not a single sixpence was given to his wife or family. In justice to the Departments it should be said that the resistance in all these cases came from the Treasury, in spite of the recommendations of the Departments. The hon. Member was proceeding to refer to other instances of alleged hardship in support of his Motion, when—

Notice taken, that 40 Members were not present; House counted, and 40 Members not being present, House adjourned at a quarter after Nine o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS,
Saturday, 2nd August, 1873.

MINUTES.]—PUBLIC BILLS.—First Reading—Duke of Edinburgh's Annuity * (273); Consolidated Fund (Appropriation).
Second Reading—Committee negatived—Telegraphs* (266); Militia Pay Acts Amendment* (271).

Committee—Report—Third Reading—Public Health Act (1872) Amendment* (257), and passed.

Report—Third Reading—Endowed Schools Act (1869) Amendment (253); Merchant Shipping Acts Amendment* (269); Conspiracy Law Amendment* (270), and passed.

Third Reading—Penalties (Ireland) * (242); Langburgh Coroners* (248); Defence Acts Amendment* (265); Constabulary Force (Ireland) * (261); Expiring Laws Continuance* (258); Railway Regulations* (259); Royal Naval Artillery Volunteer Force* (260), and passed.

The House met at Twelve of the clock.

ENDOWED SCHOOLS ACT (1869) AMENDMENT BILL—(No. 263.)
(The Lord President.)
REPORT OF AMENDMENTS.

Amendments reported (according to Order).

THE MARQUESS OF RIPON moved, after Clause 3, to insert the following:—

"Where any endowment or any right of holding, or any power of government of or management over any endowment, or any power of appointing officers, teachers, exhibitors, or others, either in any endowed school, or with emoluments out of any endowment, is vested in Her Majesty in right of her Crown or of the Duchy of Lancaster, the Endowed Schools Acts, 1869 and 1873, shall extend to such endowment right or power; and the term "governing body" in those Acts shall be deemed to include Her Majesty:

"Provided that—

"(1.) Any scheme with respect to such endowment, right, or power shall not be approved by the Committee of Council on Education unless Her Majesty assent to such scheme:

"(2.) All notices and documents required to be served on or sent to a governing body for the purposes of the Endowed Schools Acts, 1869 and 1873, may be served on or sent to the Lord Chancellor, or by the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, as the case may require:

"(3.) With the consent of Her Majesty, a scheme may deal with any such right or power without saving or making due compensation therefor:

"(4.) Any assent or consent of Her Majesty required for the purpose of the Endowed Schools Acts, 1869 and 1873, may be signified by Her Majesty's Sign Manual, countersigned by the Lord Chancellor, or by the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, as the case may require."

Motion agreed to.

Further Amendments made: The Queen's Consent signified; the Standing Orders Nos. 37 and 38 considered (according to Order) and dispensed with; Bill read 3rd, with the Amendments, and passed, and sent to the Commons.

House adjourned at a quarter before
One o'clock to Monday next,
Eleven o'clock.

~~~~~
HOUSE OF COMMONS,
Saturday, 2nd August, 1873.

MINUTES.]—PUBLIC BILLS—Committee—Four Courts Marshalsea (Dublin) [265]. [No Report.]

Third Reading—Duke of Edinburgh's Annuity* [272]; Consolidated Fund (Appropriation)*, and passed.

The House met at Twelve of the clock.

NATIONAL EDUCATION COMMISSIONERS—THE CALLAN SCHOOLS—DISMISSAL OF REV. MR. O'KEEFFE.
QUESTION.

MR. AGAR-ELLIS asked the First Lord of the Treasury, Whether he is aware that the Commissioners of National Education in Ireland have deferred the consideration of the Rev. Mr. O'Keeffe's application for re-instatement in the management of Callan Schools till the 4th of next November; and, whether, considering the loss such delay must cause in many ways to the Rev. Mr. O'Keeffe, it is the intention of Government to take action in the matter; and, if so, in what manner?

MR. GLADSTONE, in reply, said, his hon. Friend had just mentioned to him that he had the subject of the re-instatement of Father O'Keeffe and the Callan Schools in his mind, and that if necessary he would postpone the Question he wished to put upon the subject until Monday. He (Mr. Gladstone), however, had declined to avail himself of the offer of his hon. Friend to postpone putting the Question until Monday, because he could not obtain any authentic information by that time, as the next day was Sunday, and he would not be in any better position to answer the Question than he was now. Half an hour ago he received a letter from the Rev. Mr. O'Keeffe, conveying his belief that the Commissioners would not be able to consider his application before November. He was not minutely aware of the arrangements of the Commissioners, and he had not been able to communicate with the noble Lord the Chief Secretary for Ireland. He certainly would do so, and if it were possible, consistently with the arrangements of the Commissioners, there should be an early consideration of this question. It was very desirable, if it were possible, to bring it to some final issue; and he certainly would take care that representations were made to them of the importance of their taking that course.

PARLIAMENT—THE COUNT OUT.

MOTION FOR AN ADJOURNMENT.

MR. CAVENDISH BENTINCK said, that before proceeding to the Business on the Paper, he wished to say a few words with reference to the count-out on Friday night. On Thursday the Prime Minister announced the understanding that had been come to, by which hon. Members should have an opportunity of bringing on Motions last night; but he (Mr. Bentinck) confessed he was rather suspicious at the time whether a House would be kept, from the right hon. Gentleman advising the hon. Member for the Isle of Wight (Mr. B. Cochrane) to ask his Friends to come down and support him. He considered counting out a vicious practice, as it prevented private Members bringing forward matters of great importance, and he considered that the Prime Minister, as trustee of the time of the House, was bound to take care that when private Members had matter of importance to submit to the House they should have an opportunity of doing so. Instead, however, of doing so, the right hon. Gentleman, during his term of office, had encroached upon them to the utmost extent. He had availed himself freely of morning sittings, and he had unfortunately induced hon. Members to yield to him the privilege of going into Committee of Supply on Mondays without Motions, and therefore the Prime Minister had more time at his disposal than any Prime Minister ever had before. It seemed to follow that it was more than ever his duty to be careful of the rights of private Members during the residue of Tuesdays and Fridays. The Government alone could keep a House on those days after the morning sittings, because the physical power of human nature would not enable men to sit from 2 to 7 o'clock and then to return at 9. How had the Prime Minister fulfilled his obligation? The House had been counted on Tuesdays and Fridays so often that the evening sittings had been reduced almost to a farce; and it was almost impossible for any private Member to bring a question on now. He had just now given Notice to postpone until next Session a Motion, the Notice of which had been on the Paper ever since March. He had never been able on the Ballot to get a chance of bringing it on. These repeated counts-out rendered it impossible for many questions to be disposed of. Last night he was not present himself—he never intended to be present—it was the business of the Government to make a House; and he was told there were 15 or 16 Members of the Government present. The other Members of the Government had no right to be more agreeably engaged elsewhere. If the right hon. Gentleman could not get the other Members of the Government to attend to their duties in that House, all he had got to do was to discharge them, and there were plenty of hon. Gentlemen below the gangway who would undertake to fulfil their duties. If these counts-out were to continue, it would be utterly impossible that the business of the country could be transacted. He therefore gave Notice that, next Session, unless an arrangement was come to for preserving the rights of private Members, he should oppose the Sessional Order relating to morning sittings, so unfortunately commenced by the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Buckinghamshire. To put himself in Order, he moved the adjournment of the House.

MR. R. N. FOWLER seconded the Motion without agreeing with the hon. Member for Whitehaven. What appeared to him to be at the root of the counts-out was the taking of Supply on Monday without Motions. He demurred to the statement that it was physically impossible for a Gentleman to be in his place at 7 and again at 9. He had no difficulty in doing it, and the hon. Member for Whitehaven could have been present at 9 on Monday night if he had liked. It was not the fault of the Government that the House was counted out, for it was entirely owing to the absence of private Members. The Prime Minister, notwithstanding his recent indisposition, was in his place, which showed that he was anxious to keep a House for those who had Questions on the Paper; and the Treasury bench was full.

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That this House do now adjourn."—(Mr. Cavendish Bentinck.)

MR. GLADSTONE said, he was obliged to the hon. Member for Falmouth for the manner in which he had done justice to the Ministry. Listening to the hon. Member for Whitehaven he began to doubt whether the hon. Member's speech was not from beginning to end a piece of refined irony. He said it was physically impossible for hon. Members to sit from 2 to 7, and then to return by 9, and then he complained that the Members of the Government did not do it. How were the Members of the Government to do that which was physically impossible for hon. Members? Were not the Members of Government subject to the infirmities of human nature? If the hon. Gentleman thought not, he (Mr. Gladstone) would cheerfully make over all his to the hon. Gentleman. When the Government, out of its 31 Members, furnished a contribution of 18, while the other 620 hon. Members furnished a contribution of 13, he must say he thought it a waste of time to discuss the complaint the hon. Member had made.

MR. J. LOWTHER endorsed the remark of the right hon. Gentleman that the Members of Her Majesty's Government, like other mortals, were subject to the infirmities of human nature. The House had seen abundant proofs of that during the last few days. He was unable to agree with the hon. Member for Whitehaven that the practice of counting out the House was a vicious one. On the contrary, he thought that any hon. Member who called attention to the fact that the business of the country was being transacted by fewer than 40 Members was performing an act of patriotism, and that the practice was no disadvantage when compared with the hole-and-corner way of doing business which sometimes occurred on questions of great importance, when less than 40 Members were present. He regretted, however, the pernicious alteration of the forms of the House which prevented grievances from being discussed before Supply was granted, and hoped that next year there would be a return to the ancient practice.

Mr. Cavendish Bentinck

Motion, by leave, withdrawn.

CONSOLIDATED FUND (APPROPRIATION) BILL.

(Mr. Bonham-Carter, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Baxter.)

THIRD READING.

Order for Third Reading read.

MR. BECKETT-DENISON said, before the Bill was read the third time, he wished to make one remark by way of protest on a growing evil—namely, the way in which important Bills were hurried through every stage of their progress at the end of the Session, without hon. Members being made aware of what was to come under discussion. This was a matter which deserved the serious attention of those who had the conduct of legislation.

Bill read the third time and passed.

EAST INDIA REVENUE ACCOUNTS.

COMMITTEE. ADJOURNED DEBATE.

Order read, for resuming Adjourned Debate on Amendment proposed to Question [31st July], "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair;" and which Amendment was,

To leave out from the word "That" to the end of the Question, in order to add the words "in the opinion of this House, the present constitution of the Government of India fails to secure an efficient or economical management of its finances, and that this House views with apprehension the state of local taxation in that Country, and is of opinion that its financial condition must be regarded as unsatisfactory so long as the Income Tax forms its only financial resource,"—(Mr. Fawcett,)—instead thereof.

Question again proposed, "That the words proposed to be left out stand part of the Question."

Debate resumed.

MR. BECKETT-DENISON said, he could not concur with the views taken by the hon. Member for Brighton (Mr. Fawcett) with respect to the administration of the affairs of India, which he said were not economical. What good could result from an Imperial point of view, if the House should affirm the three points which the hon. Member had propounded in his Resolution? All who had paid attention to the subject must admit that, speaking generally, the past administration of the finances of India had not been economical, and that there were grave errors in it; but the question was, what object was to be gained by asserting that in a Resolution of that House, and what could the hon. Gentleman set up which would be admitted on all hands to be a more efficient administration? He was not a thick-and-thin apologist of the Government of India, and he should be the last to find fault with criticism upon it; but from a long residence in that country he knew something of the inherent difficulties of the administration of India, both as regarded its revenues and the expenditure of them; and he thought that it was greatly to be regretted that the hon. Member for Brighton had not himself had a share in Indian administration and experienced its difficulties, as in that case his criticisms would have been tempered with greater moderation, and he would not have indulged so unrestrainedly in the luxury of denunciation. The hon. Gentleman fairly objected to be looked upon as the spokesman of financial panic; but he should remember that whatever he said in that House was published separately as a noteworthy speech, and was propagated throughout the length and breadth of India, as a unique exposition of the financial position of India and its administration. The hon. Member could not conceive the mischievous effect of a long, able, and denunciatory speech being sown broadcast throughout the Indian Presidencies. The words were magnified by distance, by imagination, and by designing men, whose mission it was to stir up hatred and discontent against the Government of India. The hon. Gentleman had denounced the Income Tax, but that was now a thing of the past; and if it were judged by the small amount of revenue it brought in, as compared with the amount of irritation and abuse which it occasioned, no one would regret that it had been abolished. He (Mr. Denison) agreed, however, in the reserve with which the Under Secretary of State for India had spoken of the matter, and thought that without surrendering it for ever they should retain it as a source of revenue, to be resorted to in the event of an invasion, a war, or a great internecine conflict, when it might be required to meet the expenses of such extraordinary times; but to impose an Income Tax, in order to find interest for the loans raised and expended on public works the propriety of which was doubtful, was a policy against which he should always set his face, and he hoped the day was very distant when Government would again propose it. In respect to the public works, he agreed with the hon. Gentleman in thinking that a great deal had been done in the past which had been unremunerative, and he could from the experience of a quarter-of-a-century say that there was no Department of the Indian Government which required a more close or a more persistent watchfulness to be exercised over it; and he blushed to think of the millions it had expended with very little judgment indeed. Looking at the Revenues of India as a whole, and the sources from which they were derived, the hon. Member asked, supposing it were necessary to raise £4,000,000 or £5,000,000 on an emergency from taxation, what would they do? He (Mr. Denison) believed that there was no way in which they could safely raise anything like such a sum from direct taxation; but he did not think the emergency could arise in India which would require that amount. If it did, a loan could be raised to meet the necessity of the moment, and the burden of the loan could be spread over a term of years. Whether they looked to the revenue or to the expenditure they would see that there was no heroic mode of dealing with the administration of India; everything must be done by small means. They could not make large and sweeping deductions from their taxation, neither could they make large and sweeping additions to their expenditure. The progress of economy, therefore, must be naturally slow, but at the same time progressive; but that did not save the Government from taking every means in their power to reduce the expenditure, and the only two departments in which a reduction of expenditure was possible were in unremunerative public works and in the Army. The Government were pledged to carry out any possible reduction in the Army; for it was admitted, that in spite of a great reduction in the Force, the cost was much more than when there was a larger number of men. With regard to public works, he fully endorsed all that had been said about the waste upon barracks which had been condemned; but he was afraid that they had not yet arrived at a business-like and satisfactory arrangement with regard to the public works expenditure. The hon. Member referred in terms of severe animadversion to the two new questions of decentralization and local taxation; but the hon. and learned Member for Lynn (Mr. Bourke) had begged the House not to pass any present judgment upon the system of decentralization, until it had had a fair trial. Then, the question of local taxation required the serious consideration of the Government. If the present system went on, it would be found they could not tax the people in the different localities without giving them a direct and powerful voice as to the manner in which that taxation should be raised, and the objects for which it was imposed. It was also to be borne in mind that the more zealous the Government officer, the more was he imbued with a despotic temperament, so that he could not bear with opposition, and made enemies where he ought to make friends. In the municipal and local councils a man of his character was sure to over-ride all opposition; and if the other members disagreed with him, he was sure to have them removed at the next election in favour of others who might prove more compliant with his dictation. These were all matters which would require the interposition of the Indian Government and of the House; but, at the same time, he did not think the matter had got to that extent as to justify the Amendment of the hon. Gentleman the Member for Brighton. He hoped the evidence which had been given in the Committee upstairs would induce the Government in the different Presidencies to give a patient hearing to everything calculated to allay discontent. The Manchester school was responsible for the Government of India being forced into expenditure against its will during the last 13 or 14 years; it was only now that the unremunerative nature of the expenditure was beginning to be perceived, and that public opinion was turning round and enabling the Government to resist the pressure that was put upon it by the Government of this country. The hon. Member, on the principle of laudator temporis acti, attributed all the virtues to the old East India Company and all the evils to the present Government of India; but if he had known India in the time of the Company, he would modify his judgment. The old Company had many excellent qualities, not the least of which was their successful resistance of unfair burdens on the people for Imperial taxation. He (Mr. Denison) was, however, not prepared to say that, on the whole, the East India Company was a better Government than the present Government. His opinion inclined the other way. Although the publication of the proceedings of the India Council in London might gratify the curiosity of many, and occasionally prevent an abuse, in the long run it would be disastrous. It would be advisable to reduce the Governors of Madras and Bombay to Lieutenant Governors, with Councils upon which the various local opinions in the Presidency towns should be represented—an arrangement which had been found to work quite satisfactorily for Bengal. Sir John Lawrence told the Committee upstairs that he had again and again called upon the Government of Bombay to stop its expenditure, to send in estimates, and to wait until the Supreme Government had pronounced an opinion, but no attention was paid to him; and when asked why he did not insist on his wishes being carried out, he said the status of the Governor of Bombay was too high to warrant the Governor General in resorting to extreme measures, and however much he disapproved what was being done, he felt that he was helpless in the matter. That was not such a state of things as ought to exist. The control of the Governor General ought to be real and potential if it existed at all. A Lieutenant Governor, to know anything of the wants and feelings of the people, must have had some previous practical acquaintance with them. No man could go from another part of the world into an Indian Presidency and avoid mistakes unless he had a Council to guide him. There was only one other subject he wished to draw attention to—the employment of Natives. On that subject he thought the Government of India had been guilty of something like a breach of faith. That was a serious question as regarded our future hold on the people of India, and as the natives advanced in education, it was not fair or politic to close up all the avenues of employment for them except in a position of complete inferiority to their European colleagues? He knew the difficulties of the subject, but we must be content to forego some of our prejudices and fears. We must in deed, as well as in word and promise, throw open the services of India to Natives, and give them the chance of qualifying themselves, without imposing upon them the intolerable burden of coming to Europe in order to pass through the colleges of this country. To say that we would not have any who had not passed through Cooper's Hill College, was to say that we would not have any at all. Although he was no pessimist like the hon. Member for Brighton, not an optimist like the Under Secretary for India, yet he did not think they needed to look with alarm on the future, nor did he agree in the necessity of affirming that the present Government of India failed in efficiency. In conclusion, he would urge the hon. Member for Brighton not to press his Amendment.

GENERAL SIR GEORGE BALFOUR said, he must congratulate the hon. Member for the West Riding of Yorkshire (Mr. Denison) on the excellent practical speech which had just been delivered. The remarks on the Indian administration could only have been made by one who had had experience in India. He agreed with all that had been said, except as to the objections made to the course taken by the hon. Member for Brighton (Mr. Fawcett). That hon. Member had been a good friend to India, and deserved well of the people; but he joined with the hon. Member for the West Riding of Yorkshire, in expressing a hope that the Amendment would not be pressed to a division in so thin a House; because all the objects the hon. Member for Brighton sought had already been, or were about to be, attained; and he would suggest that the hon. Member should assist the Under Secretary and the Committee upstairs in coming to some practical conclusions upon the evidence that had been taken before them. He would only add that if it were divided on, he should vote for it, in order to mark his sense of the good service the hon. Member for Brighton had done to India. He rejoiced to learn that the finances of India were in a flourishing condition, and congratulated the hon. Gentleman the Under Secretary of State on the balance being at length on the right side of the account, though the balance at their credit was not so large as to afford much satisfaction. Still, with the five allies which the hon. Gentleman had, of Providence, good seasons, opium, land revenue, and economy, he had no doubt by the aid of the last three allies, we should soon have an increased balance in our favour. With regard to the opium revenue, he must refer to the opinion of the hon. Member for Orkney (Mr. Laing), who had shown that no branch of the income of India had been so uniformly sound as this. He had no wish to go into the high moral question raised by the hon. Baronet the Member for Carlisle (Sir Wilfrid Lawson). It was purely a financial question that was now under discussion; and, though he admitted that it was unwise of the Government of India to rely on that large part of their revenue continuing without fluctuation, still, as regarded China not buying this drug, he had no doubts. He had himself, 30 years ago, investigated the question of opium cultivation in China, and he was satisfied from that investigation, and from all that had since occurred, that the Indian opium revenue had nothing to fear for some time on account of Chinese cultivation of opium. He was glad to learn from the Under Secretary that there had been an increase in the land revenue between 1868-9 and 1871-2 to the extent of £594,166, and he hoped that that important item would increase year by year; but he must add that he wished the hon. Gentleman had brought to notice the important fact that the largest part of that increase was due to the much abused Presidency of Madras. There they had found a continuous rise in the revenue in all branches year by year for many years past, and between 1868-9 and 1871-2 the increase in the land revenue had been £371,524, thereby leaving but a small part of the total increase from land to the other Provinces. Indeed, in three of the Provinces there had been an actual decrease of land revenue, so that without the aid of Madras, the finances, as respected land revenue, would have appeared to a disadvantage. He trusted that the well-ordered Administration of the Madras Presidency, as well as its Army, might in future be better appreciated. Now, seeing the difficulty of increased balances on the favourable side of the balance-sheet of India, through the aid of increased revenue, there was one ally of the Under Secretary which could be relied on to effect this result, and that was economy. No doubt, the military expenditure afforded an opening for economy; but he would suggest that there was ample room for economical reforms in the Public Works Department and other branches of the Civil Service. The Public Works Department in India was an overgrown establishment; it had passed beyond the control of any one head; and he was, therefore, glad that in that Department the Government were reducing the expenditure. The outlay on military works alone had fallen off from £2,125,554 in 1868-9, to £747,094 in 1871-2; so that there had been a saving of more than £1,250,000; still there was ample room for large economies in the excessive expenditure of that Department, and in other branches; and not only in the expenditure in India, but in the yearly increasing outlay in England for public works, for establishments, stores, and the engineering college of Cooper's Hill. There were also other great openings for economy in all branches of the Civil Service. The numbers of Europeans now employed were large as compared with the former numbers.

In their large salaries, and in the unnecessarily high salaries given within the last few years to all the establishments in India, there were great openings for economy. Whilst he advocated the employment of Natives, and a great decrease in the number of Europeans, he must add his protest against the practice of giving to Natives the same rates of salaries as allowed to Europeans. These latter should be few in number and paid exceptionally. Considering the yearly increasing number of European engineers, civil and military, and the additions of Europeans to the Forest Department and to the Telegraph, there was ample scope for great economy. Instead, therefore, of making all the economies out of the Army expenditure, he trusted that not only the Army, but the Public Works, and all the civil establishments of the country, in India and at home, should be equally submitted to the economical shears which they could so well bear. By that economy they could obtain means for removing some of the obnoxious burdens which created the serious discontent which had been adverted to. The present Commander-in-Chief in India had represented that at no previous time had our Government had such little hold on the affections of the people of India as at present. That meant that without a large Army, and, consequently, an excessive expenditure, we could not maintain our rule in India in the face of unpopular taxes. As one of the small band who invaded China in 1840, he could speak to the difficulty of carrying on war in Asia with a hostile population; and, therefore, fearing the like evil in India, he most cordially endorsed Lord Canning's saying, that "rather than have discontent from unpopular taxes, he would risk holding India with a small Army." Now, the cost of the military force had largely increased within the last 15 years. The strength of the Army in 1857 was calculated out and reported by the Government of India in a despatch to the Secretary of State written in 1861 at 42,179 European non-commissioned rank and file, and 268,413 Native officers and men—total, 310,592 European and Native soldiers. But the cost of that Army had never been calculated out and made public. He (Sir George Balfour) endeavoured to estimate it for Lord Canning in 1860, and made out statements to show that if the European Force in 1856-7 had been maintained complete in effectives, instead of being largely below the established strength, and if the two European infantry regiments withdrawn from India for the war in the Crimea had been kept in India, then the total cost of the Indian Army, at home and India, could not have been less than £13,500,000. In order to be safe, it might be taken at £14,000,000, including the charge for military works. Since then the European Forces had been increased. In 1861, the Government of India fixed the strength at 73,577 European non-commissioned rank and file of Artillery, Cavalry, Engineers, and Infantry, and 136,369 Natives; total, 209,946. In 1862, the established strength of European soldiers was about the same, but the Native Force less, and the cost amounted to £15,500,195, including Home and Indian expenditure and military works. In 1863-4, the military expenditure, including military works, was £15,465,276; in 1868-9 it had sprung up to £18,395,125, Home and India and public military works included. In 1871-2, with an established force of about 60,000 European non-commissioned officers and men, and about 120,000 Natives, deducting boys, or a total of about 180,000 European and Native soldiers, the cost was £16,425,206, including military works. Thus we had an increased military charge of nearly £2,500,000 since 1857, with a much smaller total Force, especially in Native troops, and with only an increase in the European Force of about 16,000 men. Even since 1862-3 and 1863-4 we had an augmentation of £1,000,000, and with a decrease of 13,000 Europeans and about 16,000 Native troops. He must, however, explain that additions of various kinds had been made to the military charges of India, whilst reductions had been few, except in the number of the Forces. We had practically maintained more than all our former expenditure on all branches of the Army, whilst we had largely diminished the military strength. The military budget for 1873-4 continued to show a large increase over the expenditure of 1862-3. But the military charges in 1873-4, as shown in the Budget, could not, however, be contrasted with those of 1862-3, without taking into consideration the large transfers of outlay that had taken place from the military budget to other services, amounting to fully £520,000, so that the expenditure on the Army since 1862-3 might be said to have increased fully £1,500,000. Now, there was one part of the military charges on the Revenues of India to which particular attention had been called of late years, in that House and outside; it related to the high cost of maintaining the British troops detached to India from the Home or Imperial Army. It should, however, be remembered that that was the result of a policy pursued of late years. Until 1861, India had a special force of European soldiers as a component part of the Indian Army; and in the last century, when service in India was disliked, then that Force was larger than it had been in any part of this century, except at the date of its discontinuance in 1861. The European troops raised and maintained for India were in that year in number about 18,000, of whom about 17,400 transferred their services in 1861 to the Imperial Army, on a payment of a bounty of about £160,000. That discontinuance of a special Force of European troops for service in India had always been advocated by certain classes. It had been the policy of parties at home throughout all this century to decrease the numbers of the European troops kept up by the Government of India, and to increase the numbers detached to India from the Home or Imperial Army. Now, after the transfer of the Government of India to the Secretary of State for India the present Earl of Derby continued the system of keeping up a European Force specially for India; and one of the greatest and most far-seeing statesmen we have ever had on all affairs relating to India (the Earl of Ellenborough) strongly advocated the continuance of this Force. The Viceroy of India, at the date of the transfer of the Government of India to the Crown, the late Lord Canning, earnestly advocated the maintenance of a separate European Force for India, and others of great weight supported the measure. But on Sir Charles Wood taking the Seals of office of the Secretariat of India, he decided on abolishing the force of European troops maintained on the rolls of the Indian Army, and of depending entirely on the aid of European troops detached from the Imperial Army for service in India. That decision was entirely opposed to the opinion of every Member of the large Council with which Parliament in its wisdom had surrounded the Secretary of State as his advisers in all matters relating to India, but more especially in all questions involving finance. In order to enable that Council to record their adverse opinions, Sir Charles Wood laid before the Council the draft of a Bill, which subsequently became an Act, to discontinue recruiting for the European Force of India, which necessarily involved the abrogation of the Force. The Council of India, in a body, earnestly and urgently minuted against the measure; and all, except one Member of the Council, signed the dissent which was laid before Parliament in Parliamentary Paper 330 of 1860. That dissent was entirely disregarded; and in January 1861, Sir Charles Wood sent out a despatch to Lord Canning, directing measures to be taken to induce the European soldiers to volunteer for the Imperial service. So wisely were all the arrangements in India made, that on that occasion, as already stated, about 17,400 European soldiers accepted general service on receiving the usual bounty on change of conditions of service. That was effected at the cost of one-eighth of the outlay which was entailed on the country by the ill-advised and badly-arranged step which led to 10,000 European troops of the Indian Army taking their discharge, on the Government of India being transferred from the East India Company, in whose service they had enlisted. It was to that step of Sir Charles Wood that we could trace the heavy expenditure of the Indian Army as far as it related to the maintenance of the European troops. India, by giving up the local force of European soldiers, lost a standard by which to keep down charges for the Imperial troops detached to India, which were unavoidable so long as the organization of the Home Army was adapted for Imperial purposes, irrespective of Indian considerations. He (Sir George Balfour) felt called upon, from his recent connection with the War Office, to do justice to the Secretary of State for War, and to add that with regard to increase in the military expenditure of India by charges made from the War Office, his right hon. and gallant

General Sir George Balfour

Friend the Surveyor General of the Ordnance had tried to aid India by decreasing expenditure on stores. Some improvement was effected; but if all that was possible in that branch had not been done, it was not chargeable to his right hon. Friend. From the personal experience he had gained whilst in the War Office he was able to give the fullest credit to the Secretary of State for War, for affording facilities for effecting reduction of expenditure in the Indian Army. The right hon. Gentleman had done him the honour to consult him on proposed reductions, and he the more readily listened to his opinions, that these proposals were in strict accordance with those he (Sir George Balfour) had made in 1862. The Secretary of State being satisfied as to their propriety, at once decided in favour of economy. These reductions involved the decrease of two regiments of European infantry, without decreasing a single private; and a reduction of 120 companies, and 120 captains and other officers; also of two regiments of cavalry and of 23 troops, but with a decrease of men; subsequently, two brigades of Artillery, five batteries of horse-artillery, and 13 other batteries had been withdrawn from India; by these important changes the Secretary of State for War had aided the Government of India in effecting, he believed, a reduction of at least £250,000 per annum from the Indian military expenditure. And he was convinced that it was only necessary for the Secretary of State for India to lay before the War Office a well planned project for the organization of the European troops in India, and for the maintenance of dépôts at home, to ensure the prompt attention of the Secretary of State for War to the economies. But it must always be borne in mind that the Army of India, even with its present heavy expenditure for the large strength in European troops, was totally insufficient to maintain order, if a spirit of discontent prevailed amongst the people of India. If there was any convulsion in India, either from taxation or from external intrigues, or from both causes, it would be necessary largely to increase our military expenditure. It should be borne in mind that with our military expenditure in 1866-7 at about £18,500,000 or £14,000,000, it had sprung up from the mutiny of the Bengal sepoys, to nearly double; it was increased to £26,522,136 in 1858-9; and in 1860-61, it was still at £19,243,634, including military works. Hon. Members would therefore see how speedily a convulsion would swallow up the whole of the opium revenue and necessitate an extensive tax on incomes. In a mere money point of view he would, therefore, strongly urge the Indian Government to remove the causes of discontent. It was more desirable to have a small Army with the people of India contented, than to have a large Army with the people discontented. He (Sir George Balfour) expressed his satisfaction with the change in the constitution of the Indian Council that had been effected. Instead of appointing members for life, the appointments were now limited, under an Act brought in by the present Secretary of State for India, to a term of years, and he hoped that the present limit of 10 years would be still further restricted. He also hoped that further improvement would be effected in the home and India administration. He trusted that the Viceroy would be able to devote his whole time and thoughts to the general and impartial administration of all India, and to this end that he should at once be freed from the administration of the Bengal Army. This practice created some of the greatest evils in Indian administration. Moreover, instead of only one Army under the Commander-in-Chief and under the Viceroy, as so strongly and persistently advocated by Bengal officers, he trusted that there would be several Armies—probably five or seven—in India, as recommended by that distinguished statesman, Sir Bartle Frere. We ought to build up our house in several compartments, as that great man Mountstuart Elphinstone urged, so that in case of convulsion we might save some of the parts out of the conflagration. With regard to the advocated measure of having a Native Army composed of the same military classes as sepoys, he hoped that a delusion about the superiority of one class of Natives for military service over other classes would be dispelled from their minds. It was the European officer, the training, and drilling, and leading which made the Native a good soldier. The example of the Punjab men had often been quoted; but they enlisted in the Mutiny, as Sir William Mansfield pointed out, to get revenge on the Bengal men and to obtain plunder in India. The best opinion that he (Sir George Balfour) had ever obtained was from an intelligent and observing officer who was a prisoner of the Punjab troops when that country was independent of the Government of India. He stated that he then found that these troops were as much afraid of the Bengal troops when led by European officers, as the mutinied Bengal troops were frightened at the Punjab troops when led by European officers. It was the officer that made the men; and in the former excellent system of the Madras Army, they had a good lesson as to how Natives could bear a good regimental code. Now, with regard to the much-abused Madras sepoys, he had practical knowledge as to their bravery and discipline. In 1839, a band of Arabs and of men beyond the frontier of India was formed in the Nizam's dominions and took service with our feudatory the Nabob of Kurnool. He (Sir George Balfour) was the brigade major to the Force which attacked that band. It was led by the most distinguished of all the leaders then in the Nizam's territory. It consisted of fully 3,000 well-trained stalwart men, and active, brave, and small Arabs. The Chief of the Arabs was also a famous leader—and, yet, with a weak battalion of Madras sepoys, under 500 men, with about 120 European infantry, 60 European cavalry, and 100 native cavalry, with six guns, this band was attacked and nearly annihilated. The Madras sepoys were amongst the foremost in closing with the band and in using the bayonet. No doubt, that battalion was vieing with the small body of European infantry who fought side by side with the sepoys. It was thus useless to cry up Bengallees or Punjaubees or Sikhs. The men then attacked were from the frontiers of Punjab and from Afghanistan, as fine men as could be found; and yet they succumbed to the well-disciplined Native of Madras, because he was led and disciplined by good European officers. It was in that portion of the administration, relating to the Native Army of India, that Sir Charles Wood's unhappy changes had caused so much evil. He hoped that the evidence collected upstairs would lead to changes in the administration by which the proceedings in India might be better known and more effectually supervised.

General Sir George Balfour

by the Secretary of State in Council. He also hoped that changes would be introduced into the Home Establishment, by which a scrutiny might be established over all branches of expenditure both in India and in England. In that respect there was a great opening for improvement. And with regard to the remark of the Under Secretary of State, as to the insufficient control over the finances and expenditure of India which the Minister of Finance was stated to feel, that was most extraordinary; if the hon. Member for Orkney (Mr. Laing) had an opportunity of saying a few words, he would unhesitatingly state that when he was in India he had most effectual control over all expenditure, especially that of the military. Lord Canning's Government established a system of control, and a machinery for exercising control over all expenditure which was equal to any that existed in any country; but changes were made by Sir Charles Wood's special instructions, by which that machinery was destroyed, and the control so wisely and effectually created by the experience of Lord Canning, of Mr. Wilson, of Sir Bartle Frere, and of Mr. Laing was cast aside, and the result had been large augmentations in every branch of the civil and military expenditure. He would conclude by advising that every effort should be used to develop the resources of the country; not by means of gigantic and overgrown establishments of a large Public Works Department, but by moderate establishments in the several localities. The improvements most useful were irrigation works; not those of a large and expensive kind, as lately in favour, but of a kind that would speedily produce results. Instead of State railways to keep the large establishment of the Public Works employed, it would be far better to leave the construction of such works to companies, but under improved terms as to outlay, leaving to Government officers the duty of making canals and of forming reservoirs. It was in those irrigation works that Natives could be so usefully employed; they only required to be directed by the higher skill of a few European engineers to be able to finish works on an excellent model, certain to be useful to the people and profitable to the State. He would take leave of the subject with an earnest wish for the prosperity and happiness of the people of India.

SIR DAVID WEDDERBURN: Sir, it appears to have been assumed throughout this debate that the Financial Statement of the Under Secretary of State for India and the Amendment of the hon. Member for Brighton (Mr. Fawcett) are diametrically opposed to each other, and that while one has presented a picture all couleur de rose, the other has employed only the darkest and gloomiest colours. Now, it seems to me that making due allowance for the difference in style of the two artists, the pictures are substantially the same. The Under Secretary of State has told us that, thanks to a favourable season, a good opium crop, military reductions, the suspension of public works, and the transference of various charges from Imperial to local funds, he expects this year to make the two ends meet without the aid of the income tax. Now, I would ask if there is anything inconsistent with this in the Amendment of my hon. Friend—namely,

"That, in the opinion of this House, the present constitution of the Government of India fails to secure an efficient or economical management of its finances, and that this House views with apprehension the state of local taxation in that Country, and is of opinion that its financial condition must be regarded as unsatisfactory so long as the Income Tax forms its only financial reserve."

Upon a careful consideration of all the evidence, it seems to me that the case is made out, not against the Indian Government in particular, but against all Governments since the transfer of India to the British Crown, that they have been too costly for so poor a country as India. The most minute and careful watchfulness over every item of expenditure and the incidence of every tax is necessary, where the power of bearing taxation is so small, and this can only be secured by direct representation of the taxpayers. It is to this point that I wish specially to direct the attention of the House. The extent and the population of India are so great that persons in this country are easily misled as to her capacity for bearing financial burdens. To state her vast population as a proof of such a capacity, is like asserting that the number of paupers in this country lightens the average burden of taxation per head. The great bulk of the people in India are in fact living on the verge of pauperism, which in their case does not imply the poor-house or out-door relief, but simply wholesale famine and starvation, when an unfavourable season occurs. Compare British India with France by means of their respective Budgets of ordinary Revenue for 1872. That of France was, in round numbers, £93,700,000 for 36,000,000 of inhabitants. That of India for 190,000,000 was £47,400,000, from which ought to be deducted for land revenue £20,700,000, and for opium £8,000,000, leaving only £18,700,000 as the amount raised from similar sources to those from which the French Revenue is raised. A very simple calculation shows that France pays 25 times as much per head as British India. No doubt the French are burdened; but if £5,000,000 additional were required in France no financial difficulty would be experienced in raising it, whatever political obstacles there might be. In India a similar deficit, arising from a failure of the opium revenue or any other cause, could be supplied only by re-imposing the income tax, which, at 1 per cent or 2½d. in the pound, yielded a little more than £500,000. The most competent witnesses before the Indian Finance Committee are nearly unanimous in their opinion that all other methods of taxation are practically exhausted. Retrenchment is therefore essential, and the natural tendency to administrative extravagance must be controlled by the taxpayers, speaking through accredited representatives. Such control may be exercised in three different cases: over local taxation and expenditure, over Imperial taxation and expenditure in India, and over the Home charges. If the scheme of decentralization and of local taxation proves to be a disastrous failure, this will be due mainly to the utter absence of anything like representation of the taxpayers. As regards the municipal councils, we have just heard from the hon. Member opposite (Mr. Denison) that they are absolutely under the power of the Government officer, who presides over their deliberations, and at whose discretion the members are appointed and removed. There is also reason to believe that the funds raised for municipal purposes are sometimes grossly misappropriated. To introduce local representation would be a simple matter, by no means foreign to native traditions, and the village assemblies, known as puncheets, might furnish a model for the introduction of popular control over local business. It is of greater importance that the representative element should be introduced into the Supreme and Provincial Legislative Councils, and that those Councils should be invested with some power of control in matters of finance. At present the Supreme Legislative Council is composed of seven Members of the Executive Council, along with two official Members from Madras and Bombay. Besides these there are two non-official Europeans and three Natives, two of whom are feudatory Princes, not British subjects, and not acquainted with the English language, in which the debates of the Council are conducted. Hitherto the form has been gone through of submitting the Budget to the Legislative Council, who have, however, no power to alter its details. In 1873, even this form was omitted; and as no real control was exercised, it is, perhaps, better that such a pretence should no longer be kept up. In order to see an example upon which the Legislative Council of India and its proceedings might be modelled, we have only to cross over to Ceylon, a Crown Colony, where far more liberal institutions prevail. The Ceylon Legislative Council consists of nine official and six non-official Members, some of whom are Natives. The Bill of Supply is brought in annually, and after being read a first and second time, is referred to a Committee, composed of three official and three non-official Members, who examine the Estimates in detail, and report to the Council. The Bill is then fully discussed in the Council, the Members of which have power to move Amendments, or refuse Votes, and finally it is read a third time and passed, the whole procedure being very similar to what takes place in this House. Successive Governors of Ceylon have approved this constitution, under which taxation has been reduced, and a surplus has frequently been obtained. If a similar procedure were adopted, as regards the Budgets, in the Indian Legislative Councils, and if those Councils were reconstituted with a strong non-official and representative element, an efficient check might be exercised over expenditure and taxation. At some future time I may have an opportunity of bringing this before the House in a substantive form, as it is one of the highest importance to India. There remains the case of the Home charges, for which the House of Commons is especially responsible, although as controlling the Executive Government, our responsibility may be held to extend over all Indian expenditure. It is, of course, out of the question that India should have representation in this House in any proportion to her population; but many who know India well believe that the experiment of conceding representatives to the Presidency cities would be attended with complete success. At first, it is probable that Europeans rather than Natives would be elected, and my hon. Friend the Member for Brighton, if unfortunately he should ever lose the confidence of his present constituency, might find a secure and permanent seat for Calcutta, Bombay, or Madras. There can be no doubt as to the favourable political effect in India, if when a re-distribution of Parliamentary seats takes place, half-a-dozen were to be reserved for the three Presidencies. We have not been able as yet to examine many Native witnesses before the Finance Committee; but those who have given evidence, while complaining of fiscal oppression, are strongly in favour of maintaining the connection between Great Britain and India. I believe that it is most desirable to maintain this connection, and that our Government, with all its faults, is by far the best Government that India or any Asiatic country has ever seen. Believing that administrative extravagance produces our only serious danger, and that in no other way can it be effectually checked; I would urge strongly upon Parliament that the time has now come for conceding, in some modified form at least, representative institutions to India.

Mr. LEITH wished to address himself to one or two salient points which he thought it was important to bring before the House. He would first thank his hon. Friend the Under Secretary of State for India for the candid and fair, and, he must add, so far satisfactory statement he had made of the affairs of India, and he was glad to learn that they could look forward to better times. For the first time they had established an equilibrium, and he hoped there would soon be a balance on the credit side. With respect to the Resolution of the hon. Member for Brighton (Mr. Fawcett), no one could deny that there were blots and defects in the administration of India; but he thought, on the other hand, the hon. Member for Brighton had been scarcely fair, for he ought to take into consideration the difficulties which the Government of India had to deal with in administering the affairs of that great country. He took the liberty of saying that as having been a resident in India for many years, and having been, and still being intimately connected with its affairs, it would be better both for the interests of this country and of India if the hon. Member for Brighton had pointed out those difficulties, and, while pointing out the defects of administration, had shown to the people of India what England had done and was still doing for them, and what efforts the Government of India were making for the good and well-being of their country. He said this because for one person in India that read the statement of the Under Secretary for India, hundreds would read the speech of the hon. Gentleman the Member for Brighton, and he therefore regretted that the hon. Gentleman had not shown more of the statesman and less of the advocate in his speech. He should have liked to have seen something in his speech more like a quasi-judicial spirit in the balancing of those difficulties. With respect to the Motion before the House, he could not agree to ascribe the present state of the finances of India to the "constitution of the present Government of India," which was the first proposition contained in the Motion. But the House had heard nothing to satisfy them that the present constitution of the Government of India was not a wise and a good one; although there was no doubt it admitted of improvement, which he would be glad to see carried out. He hoped his hon. Friend would take what he had said in good part, for he well knew that he believed what he was doing was for the good and benefit of India. But he thought his hon. Friend would have done much better if he had pointed out the difficulties under which the Government of India laboured, and shown the people of India how much better they were under the English Government than they could be under any Native Government, and than they had been under any Government in time past. With those observations, he should like to say a word or two on some other points. First, with regard to the opium revenue, he quite agreed with the hon. Baronet the Member for Carlisle (Sir Wilfrid Lawson) that it involved great immorality in principle. But the House ought to recollect, at the same time, that the present Government were not responsible for this. That revenue had been bequeathed to them by the late East India Company. It was a damno hereditas, and he thought they, as practical men, ought to consider how they were to get rid of it, for he agreed with the hon. Member for Carlisle that the traffic was both immoral and impolitic; and, on that head, not a single suggestion was made by the hon. Member. A high authority—Lord Lawrence—had been quoted to show that the Revenue of India could not be increased. That was a great point, and the hon. Member for Brighton had shown the House that they had only the income tax to fall back upon. Now, the income tax had failed in raising more than £500,000; but the opium revenue brought in last year £9,000,000, and where were they to find a substitute for it? The people of India were truly said to be very poor. They would not use articles of European production and consumption so as to allow indirect taxes to be raised. Direct taxation, as shown in the case of the income tax, had failed. The hon. Member for Gravesend (Sir Charles Wingfield) approved of the income tax because, as he said, it enabled them to tax the richer classes in India who would otherwise escape taxation altogether. The question, however, was how could it be made to reach these classes? It had been tried and failed to do so. He (Mr. Leith) would like to see the rich native bankers and merchants of India, who were rolling in wealth, made to contribute to the Revenue. Now, why had the income tax failed in India? An income tax could only be raised when you could trust the morality and truthfulness of those who were to be assessed to it. But in India there was very little truth or morality among the Natives as regarded this subject, and no public opinion which could be brought to bear on these classes, and so compel them to contribute to an income tax. The result was that in India the rich native bankers and merchants escaped the tax, and as it was used as a means of extortion amongst the poorer classes, and as the Europeans, who made correct returns, felt the hardship and complained, there was no other course but to get rid of it. He wished to call attention to another tax, which he considered most unconstitutional, most mischievous, and most iniquitous in its operation. That was the tax charged upon the administration of justice. He found by the Returns in the Budget that the stamps yielded a revenue of £1,639,779. They were required to be paid by the suitors under "The Courts Fees Act"—namely, Act vii. of 1870. This was entirely a poor man's question, and they had heard a great deal about the poverty of India. No man could enter a Court of Justice without having first paid an institution fee for an ad valorem stamp upon the value of the subject-matter of the suit, which ranged from 10 to 1,200 rupees. Fees or stamps had also to be paid at every step. The result was that it afforded an encouragement to the rich and fraudulent, in a country where injustice and corruption were rampant, and in the case of the poor man, became almost a refusal of justice. If the suitor had to appeal to a higher Court, the institution fee had again to be paid; and in Oude there were two Courts of Original Appeal! It appeared that the amount so obtained nearly covered the whole charges of the administration of justice in India—so that the suitors paid for what the whole community had the benefit of! He wished to call attention for a few moments to the excise system and "the Akbarree tax," from which a revenue of nearly £1,390,851 was raised. This large amount was not raised in accordance with the views of the hon. Baronet the Member for Carlisle (Sir Wilfrid Lawson) for the purpose of repressing the consumption of intoxicating liquors; but the whole principle and object of the system was to stimulate the production and extend the sale and consumption of intoxicating liquors. It became a question of such importance as to deserve the serious consideration of the House, and of every man of right feeling. It was in its character immoral, and prejudicial to the best interests of the people. He then referred to a correspondence published in The Friend of India, which could be relied upon. A Commissioner, who was an officer of the Revenue in the Central Provinces, wrote to the Chief Commissioner, and pointed out that there was a difficulty in increasing the Revenue, and that it could only be done by multiplying the distilleries and shops for the sale of intoxicating liquors, as had been successfully done elsewhere; and that, unless this was done, there would be little revenue raised in the rural districts in comparison with the towns. In reply, the Chief Commissioner acknowledged the zeal and energy of his correspondent, and agreed with him that his suggestion would be productive of much good to the Revenue; but as he (Mr. Leith) thought every friend of India would agree, in much evil to the country. For the reasons which he had pointed out, he could not vote for the Amendment.

MR. AYRTON observed that, having discharged the responsible task of presiding over the Committee which had been appointed by the House to inquire into the state of the finances of India during a period of three consecutive Sessions, he wished to offer a few observations on the Motion of the hon. Member for Brighton (Mr. Fawcett). It appeared to him that before asking the House to pronounce a judgment on the Resolution, when they appointed a Committee to embark in an investigation of great magnitude and complexity, which had produced three folio volumes of immense dimensions—larger than any history of the United Kingdom—unless they were appointed merely to record thousands of questions and answers, surely it was desirable that the House should suspend their judgment on any matter under their consideration till the Committee should have the opportunity of deliberating on the evidence received, and submitting the conclusions to which they had come on that evidence. To anticipate those conclusions by a Resolution would appear to bring the proceedings of the House itself into contempt, and, instead of accomplishing that object which the hon. Member for Brighton had often expressed his wish to attain in the matter, he would in the most signal manner produce the very opposite result, for he would be proclaiming to the people of India that when the House had given them an opportunity of having their affairs investigated, Parliament would not even suspend its judgment till the result of their labours was announced, but must, in an off-hand manner, after a single debate, pronounce an opinion on the finance of the country. He did not complain, however, of the course taken by the hon. Member for Brighton. He (Mr. Ayrton) was afraid that he himself, to some extent, had set the example which the hon. Member was now following—of proposing Resolutions on the Motion that the House should go into Committee on the accounts of the Government of India; but there was a great distinction between the course he (Mr. Ayrton) had taken, and that pursued by his hon. Friend, for the Resolutions he proposed when the late Government was in office, pointed to certain distinct propositions connected with the constitution of the Government which could not be discussed properly and adequately in a general investigation of the state of the finances of India. One of his propositions was that there ought to be a Member of Council acting for agriculture, commerce, and trade. That proposition was entirely separate from any discussion on the accounts. Another of his propositions, which had since been accepted, was that the Members of Council in this country ought not to hold their office for life, but for a limited period. Unfortunately, the comprehensive Amendment of the hon. Member for Brighton embraced every proposition to which the Committee upstairs had to direct its inquiries, and, if it were desired that that Committee should arrive at any practicable solution of the problems before it, surely the hon. Member could never intend to invite the deliberate judgment of the House upon the Amendment at the present time. That would be very disrespectful to the Committee appointed at his own instance; it would amount to an assertion that the Committee was useless; and the hon. Member could not wish to say that, because, in accordance with his wish, the Committee was continuing to take evidence, and had abstained from expressing its views. The Amendment had been understood to be an intimation of certain views which the hon. Member intended to advance; but it had not been supposed that he intended to invite the deliberate judgment of the House upon them, or else the discussion would have taken place at an earlier period, when a larger House might have pronounced an opinion more worthy of the magnitude of the question. He wished to offer one or two observations on the points which had been raised in the debate. The general subject was one of so much complexity that the more you examined it the more difficult did it seem to be to come to a satisfactory conclusion. If he had been asked 15 years ago whether he would have supported the establishing a Secretary of State for India, with 15 Councillors, he should have opposed any such proposition; but then he would have been viewing the Indian Council as a speculative institution, while now it had to be considered as tested by practical experience. It was obvious that that House was the proper guardian of the people of India, in the last resort, in matters of finance; but by statute it had delegated its authority to the Secretary of State for India in Council. It was therefore of the first importance to see the Council of India was worthy of the confidence of the House and entitled to be maintained, and he hoped the Committee would come to some conclusion upon it. If they were not satisfied with it, he hoped they would not indulge in a mere general statement, but point out how the Council should be re-constituted, or what should be established in its place. As to the course he had taken when out of office, he did not indulge in general utterances; he addressed himself to particular evils, and pointed out specifically what ought to be done. If they passed from the Council to the Viceroy, and his relations to the Governors and their Councils, very difficult questions were raised. In India there were various parties, or rather schools, with different views as to the government of India; and such was the difficulty on the subject that it was idle for any man to assume dogmatic authority in regard to it. He therefore counselled the House not to be hasty in coming to a judgment on the subject. He wished to take that opportunity of doing justice to one of the late Governors, a man of eminent personal merit, Sir Bartle Frere. There was no doubt whatever, from the evidence which had been received up to this time, that there had been a laxity of financial administration in the Presidency of Bombay which had produced most deplorable results. The Committee had not, however, yet examined Sir Bartle Frere or his successor, but in all probability they would be examined before the Committee, and then an opportunity would be given of answering the charges which had been brought against them. Until then the judgment of the House should be suspended. One of the schools in India was of a very dangerous character; it held that the power of England depended chiefly upon the efforts of men occupying high positions in India. The power of England there depended neither upon the Viceroy nor upon the Governors. It depended, in the first place, upon the British Navy, which kept open the communication with India, and which could throw upon the shores of India a military force which no one in India could withstand; and next, it depended on the power of the British Army, and its ability and disposition to render service in India. But still, within the limits of that power, no doubt every Viceroy, every Governor, every Sub-Governor, and every person in authority in India had enormous opportunities of doing great good to the people of that country. They all had great and important duties to discharge, but they must not be led away by theoretical speculations of their own in regard to the Government of India. His conviction at the same time was that the Government of India was animated by an earnest desire to do what was best for the welfare of the people. He wished to distinguish between the Government of India for the benefit of 200,000,000 and the Government of India for the benefit of the small number of people aggregated together in the towns, who were always expressing their views, no doubt earnestly—it might be conscientiously, sometimes noisily, and not unfrequently offensively—on questions which they said were entirely for the benefit of the 200,000,000, but which other people thought were entirely for the benefit of themselves. Expressions of public opinion from India must be looked at with great discrimination. It was the duty of everyone in this country to take care that he did not mistake the opinions which emanated from small but influential coteries in India for opinions which came from the people in a large sense. Turning now to the question of Indian taxation, hon. Gentlemen were aware that the total income of the Government of India was £48,200,000. Some people were in the habit of saying—"What a tremendous sum to wring from the poor people of that Empire;" but it was not by political arithmetic of that kind that an intelligent judgment could be formed on the subject. How was the money raised? A sum of £21,180,000 was derived as revenue from the land, and was essentially in its character a land rent, which had existed for a great length of time in India. Everyone held his land in India on condition of paying a land rent, as it was accounted in former times; but the British Government had performed an act of magnificent justice by enfranchising every occupant of the soil in India, and declaring him to be a freeholder, with a saleable title, but stipulating that he should continue to pay a land tax. That arrangement had given every man what he claimed, but could never before obtain—an independent proprietary right. Neither was the opium tax a tax upon the people, because it was paid by the Chinese, who much preferred to smoke opium grown in India to any other; and inasmuch as the opium growers obtained the very best price from the best paymaster—namely, the Treasury—they at least should be content. The expenses of the Mint, the Post Office, Telegraphs, and Law and Justice, were not taxes, but payments for services rendered, and for which value was given. There were many other items of a like character, and the result was that out of £48,286,000 they amounted to £33,594,000, leaving a sum of £14,692,000 of taxation, or 1s. 6d. per head, which it was represented was crushing the people of India. With regard to expenditure, the Committee had examined the matter with the utmost detail, in order to satisfy themselves wherever there was anything wasteful and wherever economies could be recommended. He would not anticipate the conclusions which might be arrived at. He hoped the Committee would apply their minds to the evidence taken, and not shrink from expressing their opinion where economy could be introduced, and make such recommendations as they thought proper. He must at once say that he did not at all agree with the sweeping charges which had been made against the Commander-in-Chief or the Secretary of State for India, and although great exception had been taken to the mode in which the accounts of India were kept, as if they were intended to mystify, yet that was an entire mistake; the principle on which these accounts were kept was the same that had been adopted in this country. They could not possibly adopt the system of a joint-stock company, which really mystified the shareholders; and the illustration of the recent mistakes in the Post Office was a most unhappy one, because the mistakes which had arisen had been the consequence of a departure from the system. His hope was that they would not be led too hastily into the adoption of any new system connected with Indian finances, agreeing as he did entirely in the opinion expressed by Lord Lawrence that whatever good was to be done would be accomplished by good administration. It was through good administration alone—by fixing on individuals definite responsibility and holding them to their administrative duties, that they could hope to obtain the best Government in India and the most economical results. Each man, in his own sphere, should be definitely responsible, and it should not be like the game of hunt-the-slipper, in which the responsibility was shifted about so that no one could find it. That principle ought to be applied to the conduct of all connected with the Government of India, and the more competent and successful each man was in his own sphere, the more would our Government be likely to conduce to the happiness of the people. After the assurances he had given, he hoped the hon. Member for Brighton would be satisfied with the discussion, and would not ask the House to pronounce an opinion on the Resolution.

MR. FAWCETT asked leave to withdraw his Amendment.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Main Question, "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair," put, and agreed to.

Accounts considered in Committee.

(In the Committee.)

MR. FAWCETT said, nothing had been advanced in the debate with which he concurred more cordially than he did in the concluding remarks of the right hon. Gentleman the First Commissioner of Works (Mr. Ayrton). As he had said, the principle which ought to guide us in all attempts to reform Indian administration was this—that we should, if possible, endeavour to concentrate responsibility more than we had done hitherto. The right hon. Gentleman was evidently alluding to some of the facts which had come out before the Committee. Something was done which everyone thought ought not to have been done, and the recurrence of which everyone thought ought to be prevented, and it was impossible to say who was to blame for what had been done. Sir Bartle Frere had written to him (Mr. Fawcett) complaining of the only inaccuracy which, so far, had been pointed out in the long speech he made the other night. The House would remember he was particularly anxious to avoid mention of names, and in that instance he only mentioned the name on being challenged. On referring to the evidence of Lord Lawrence, he found that every statement he had made as to the building of this country house was correct. First, a house was sold without the order of the Governor General, which was an act of insubordination; and the excuse made was that the cost of the new building would not exceed the £35,000 for which the old one had been sold. Lord Lawrence discovered, while it was still incomplete, that it had cost £95,000; he then became angry, and demanded an estimate, but before it was forthcoming an additional £60,000 had been spent; so that this act of insubordination cost £155,000, to which was to be added £20,000 for furniture, making a total of £175,000 for the country house of a local Governor. These facts were corroborated by Lord Lawrence, who was Governor General at the time. On being appealed to as to who was Governor of Bombay at the time, in the course of his speech, he stated that it was Sir Bartle Frere. He now found, on referring to the evidence of Lord Lawrence, that he had done some injustice to Sir Bartle Frere. Part of the transaction was effected during the time he was Governor, and part during the Governorship of Sir Seymour Fitzgerald. Therefore, he ought to have associated with Sir Bartle Frere, Sir Seymour Fitzgerald, and if he had done any injustice he apologized. While saying many things with which he agreed, the right hon. Gentleman (Mr. Ayrton) was entirely silent with respect to local taxation, which the Under Secretary of State for India also passed over very lightly. He believed, if the right hon. Gentleman had spoken about it, he would not have been able to restrain his feelings, but would have used language quite as strong as he (Mr. Fawcett) had himself employed. None who had spoken had differed from him except the hon. and learned Member for King's Lynn (Mr. Bourke). It was a great pity that the speech of the hon. Member for the West Riding of Yorkshire (Mr. Denison) was addressed to a House which might have been counted out at any time, for that fact, in his opinion, evinced the listlessness and carelessness of the House on Indian affairs. The hon. Member unintentionally misrepresented him, by assuming he was anxious to prove that the rule of the East India Company was better than that of the present Government. What he said was that the Company rendered this service to India—it enabled an independent Power to give protection to India when unjust demands were made upon her Revenues by the British Government; and one of the problems we had now to solve was to attempt to supply to India that advantage which was associated with the rule of the Company. The hon. Member seemed to agree with him in every respect—and more particularly as regarded local taxation, the millions which had been wasted in irrigation, and the military expenditure—except in what he said as to the propriety of making public the proceedings of the India Council; and, considering the practical acquaintance of the hon. Member with India, the speech of the hon. Member would command quite as much attention in India as anything he (Mr. Fawcett) had himself said. It had been assumed that the income tax afforded a basis for comparing the wealth of India and of England, but England, in proportion to her population, was 56 times as rich as India. It might, perhaps, be considered that that comparison was a delusive test, and therefore he would take another, which had been supplied by the Under Secretary of State for India himself, who stated two or three years ago that the aggregate product of wealth in India was £350,000,000, whereas the aggregate product of wealth in England was £850,000,000 per annum. Thus it appeared that England produced two-and-a-half times as much wealth as India, and he might mention that the calculation of the Under Secretary was corrobororated by the Viceroy of that time. Considering, therefore, that India was seven times as populous as England, the latter country was, in proportion to her population, 18 times more, wealthy than India. These figures showed that, although the taxation in India might be small per head, yet it was a more onerous taxation than was even imposed in this country. Moreover, nine-tenths of the people of India were so miserably poor that the smallest taxation in pecuniary amount represented something taken from what to them was an absolute necessary of life. In conclusion, he wished in justice to himself to state that nothing could be further from his mind than a desire to weaken the legitimate influence of England in India. On the contrary, his object was to make it more fruitful of advantage in the future. He felt certain that India required, above all things, the watchfulness of the House of Commons in order to render our Government beneficial, and to make the people feel that the English Parliament was ready to redress any grievance which might be proved to exist. He was well pleased with the debate that had taken place on the subject, and believed it would satisfy the people of India.

MR. GILPIN said, he had authority to state that Sir Bartle Frere was not responsible for the enormous expenditure referred to by his hon. Friend. The fact was that four years before the completion of the House in question, Sir Bartle Frere had ceased to be Governor of Bombay.

MR. FAWCETT said, he should regret to do any injustice to Sir Bartle Frere, and explained that he merely repeated what Lord Lawrence had stated to the Committee.

GENERAL SIR GEORGE BALFOUR remarked that the evidence was given in the absence of Sir Bartle Frere, who would be able to show that the expenditure was made quite independently of him, and it was unjust to saddle that distinguished statesman with responsibilities which others should bear.

Resolved, That it appears by the Accounts laid before this House that the total Revenue of India for the year ending the 31st day of March 1872 was £50,110,215; the charges in India, including the collection of the Revenue, Interest on Debt, and Public Works ordinary, were £37,282,803; the charges in England (including £1,249,040, the value of Stores supplied to India) were £7,980,017; the Guaranteed Interest on the Capital of Railway and other Companies, in India and in England, deducting net Traffic Receipts, was £1,723,218, making a total charge for the same year of £46,986,038; and there was an excess of Income over Expenditure in that year amounting to £3,124,177; that the charge for Public Works extraordinary was £1,628,474, and that including that charge the excess of Income over Expenditure was £1,495,703.

Resolution to be reported upon Monday.

FOUR COURTS MARSHALSEA (DUBLIN)

BILL.—[BILL 265.]

(The Marquess of Hartington, Mr. Secretary Bruce.)

COMMITTEE.

Bill considered in Committee (according to Order).

THE MARQUESS OF HARTINGTON said, that as the hon. and learned Member for Limerick (Mr. Butt) insisted on his Amendment respecting the insertion of a new clause—(Treatment of prisoners removed)—enacting that no prisoner removed from the Four Courts Marshalsea Prison under the Bill should be subject to other rules and regulations than those to which he would have been subject if he had remained in the Marshalsea Prison, it would be necessary for him to abandon the Bill. He would therefore move that the Chairman do now leave the Chair.

Motion agreed to. [No Report.]

MR. ADAM stated that it was proposed that the House should sit at three o'clock on Monday.

'House adjourned at Four o'clock till Monday.

~~~~~

HOUSE OF LORDS,

Monday, 4th August, 1873.

MINUTES.]—PUBLIC BILLS—Second Reading—Committee negatived—Third Reading—Duke of Edinburgh's Annuity (273); Consolidated Fund (Appropriation), and passed.
Third Reading—Sanitary Act (1866) Amendment (Ireland)* (262); Telegraphs* (266); Militia Pay Acts Amendment* (269), and passed.

DUKE OF EDINBURGH'S ANNUITY

BILL—(No. 273.)

(The Earl Granville.)

SECOND READING. THIRD READING.

Order of the Day for the Second Reading, read.

EARL GRANVILLE, in moving that the Bill be now read the second time, said, its purpose was to make a provision for the establishment of His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh and Her Imperial Highness the Grand Duchess Marie Alexandrovna. The proposal was to give the Duke an annuity of £10,000 a-year from the Consolidated Fund for his life, subject to a condition founded on a previous Act with regard to the contingency of his succeeding to the Sovereignty of a foreign State. It also gave a jointure of £6,000 a-year to the Grand Duchess in case she survived the Duke. Only last week he had the honour of moving an Address to the Crown expressing the readiness of their Lordships to concur in any reasonable provision which the other House might make, and it was cordially adopted. There had since occurred in "another place" just that very small amount of opposition which was sufficient to mark the general feeling of that House on the subject, and he had not the slightest doubt that their Lordships would manifest the same views.

Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2<sup>a</sup>."
 —(The Earl Granville.)

THE MARQUESS OF SALISBURY said, he was glad to have the opportunity of bearing his testimony to the excellence of the proposal. He feared that in this House they must forego the luxury of a division and submit to a unanimous vote.

Motion agreed to; Bill read 2<sup>a</sup> accordingly; Committee negatived: Then Standing Orders Nos. 37. and 38. considered (according to Order) and dispensed with: Bill read 3<sup>a</sup>, and passed.

CONSOLIDATED FUND (APPROPRIATION) BILL.

(The Earl Granville.)

SECOND READING.

Order of the Day for the Second Reading, read.

Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2<sup>a</sup>."
 —(The Earl Granville.)

LORD REDESDALE said, this was the only opportunity afforded to him of referring to the payment of £3,200,000 the amount of the Indemnity awarded to the United States by the Geneva Arbitration for what were called the Alabama Claims, and expressed his regret that the argument brought forward by himself on previous occasions—namely, that the re-united States could not be entitled to damages for acts committed by a section of those States—was not urged by the Government. High legal authorities had approved the argument, and had it been urged at the proper time the Indemnity would have been set aside.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR remarked that the objection, had it been urged at all, must have been preferred before the reference of the Claims to Arbitration. The United States would clearly not have consented to a reference to be met by the preliminary objection that there ought to be no reference, and when the two Powers agreed to the Arbitration the argument was ipso facto excluded. It was a question of policy whether England should agree to refer the Claims or not, and the country was very urgent with the Government that the matter should be settled, while this was the only mode of settling it.

LORD REDESDALE said, if the argument was excluded when Arbitration was agreed to, why was it urged in our Counter Case and repeated in our Summary? Objection founded on International Law to each separate claim was expressly reserved in the Treaty, and this was a question of International Law.

LORD DENMAN said, that it would be very unfortunate if it were supposed that this country had submitted to an unjust claim. He believed that, after our authorities had too late endeavoured to stop the Alabama, that they had confessed they were in the fault, and it was only a question of amount of damages. He considered that if a bystander were to see two persons fairly fighting, and were to hand a knife to one of them, by which he wounded the other, that both the assailant and the sufferer would be entitled to compensation from the abettor—he considered also that it would be contrary to law to re-open the arbitration.

Bill read 2<sup>d</sup> accordingly; Committee negatived: Then Standing Orders Nos. 37. and 38. considered (according to Order) and dispensed with: Bill read 3<sup>d</sup>, and passed.

UNITED STATES—CONSULAR CONVENTION—OFFENCES ON THE HIGH SEAS.
QUESTION.

LORD MONSON, on behalf of Lord Houghton, asked the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, Whether any steps had been taken towards concluding a Consular Convention with the United States of America; and, whether he was prepared to include in such Convention the means of effectively punishing acts of violence committed by the subjects of either nation on the high seas?

EARL GRANVILLE said, the matter had occupied the attention of the Government for a very long time, and the difficulty that had arisen in concluding a Convention had been the necessity of some preliminary legislation on our part. Correspondence had gone on with several foreign Powers, especially with the United States, for 20 years. A Memorandum embodying the views of Her Majesty's Government led some years ago to a proposal by the United States for a Convention, but difficulties arose, principally respecting the question of jurisdiction. The negotiations dropped, and had not been formally renewed with the United States; but there had been some informal communications between Sir Edward Thornton and Mr. Fish, and between General Schenck and himself. They had made some progress in the matter, and a Paper had been prepared embodying the whole question. The Foreign Office was in communication with other Departments of the Government, and he had hopes that some agreement would be arrived at during the Recess which would form the basis of legislation next Session—though he could give no absolute pledge. Of course, in any such scheme, acts of violence at sea would form an important element. Progress had also been made in another way, for by the 11th section of the Merchant Shipping Acts Amendment Act of this Session the Government were empowered by Order in Council to extend to those countries which desired it the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Acts with regard to the enlistment and discharge of seamen. He was not, therefore, without hopes that some progress would be made in a question of considerable importance both to foreign countries and to ourselves. He might add that it was absolutely necessary that something should be done, for an Article in the Treaty of Commerce with France, concluded last month, provided that this was one of the subjects which would form part of a Supplemental Convention.

PUBLIC OFFICES—NEW ADMIRALTY AND WAR OFFICES.

QUESTION.

LORD REDESDALE asked Her Majesty's Government, Whether, in the plans deposited for "the Admiralty and War Offices Rebuilding Bill," all the land proposed to be taken belonged to the Crown; whether it was intended to apply to Parliament next Session for a similar Bill; whether the lessees and occupiers of any property belonging to the Crown would not have to be compensated in like manner as other lessees and occupiers if their holdings were taken compulsorily; whether, if public offices were built on the Crown lands in the plan referred to, the income from the rents now paid on those lands would not be lost; and, whether the loss of such income ought not to be calculated in estimating the expense in like manner as if such lands had to be purchased from others; whether plans had been prepared, and whether it was intended to pull down the Admiralty.

THE DUKE OF ST. ALBANS replied that the land proposed to be taken was not all Crown property, but the greater part of it belonged to the Crown. No determination had been arrived at respecting any application to Parliament next Session for a similar or any other Bill. There were but four lessees or occupiers of Crown land who would have to be compensated, the remainder of the houses on the Crown land being occupied by the Lords of the Admiralty, the Secretary of State for War, and the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Works. The value of the Crown lands had been considered in the Estimate for the acquisition of the site for the proposed Admiralty and War Office. He need not say that when the houses were in the occupation of public Departments they would get no compensation for being removed. The sketch plans which were prepared would have required the existing Admiralty to be pulled down.

LORD REDESDALE urged the advantage of concentrating the Public Offices, which were now scattered over Pall Mall, St. James's Square, Whitehall Gardens, and other localities. He objected to the demolition of the Admiralty, and other buildings, which would afford accommodation for many Government purposes, and if the line of public buildings was not continued on the west side of Parliament Street a very unsightly effect would be produced.

LORD DENMAN said, that the noble Lord the Chairman of Committees had, year after year, advised the purchase of the property in the neighbourhood of King Street, and at the present time the state of the space between the India Office and Westminster Abbey was most disgraceful. If Government did not at once purchase the property, and should they hereafter be obliged to buy it, he believed they would have to pay very heavily; because he had been credibly informed that a building lease had been granted by Eton College to an eminent firm on condition of laying out £80,000 upon the land, and most unsightly warehouses might be raised, and Government might have to pay merely for pulling them down. He earnestly hoped that the warnings of the noble Lord the Chairman of Committees might be attended to in time.

THE BALLOT ACT—DECLARATIONS OF THE STATE OF THE POLLS.

NOTICE.

LORD DENMAN gave Notice that he would early next Session call the attention of their Lordships to the delays which necessarily occurred in making the declaration of the numbers of voters at elections under the Ballot Act. When the Act was passing through Parliament, it was proposed to keep the polls open until 8 o'clock; but that would have made matters worse, for it would have been impossible to observe one of the best provisions of the great Reform Act of 1832—that the elections should be concluded in one day. The recent election at Greenwich—through the intervention of Sunday between the unfinished counting of the votes and the declaration of the poll—showed the inconvenience that might arise from suspense, and it was to prevent the aggravation of this evil at a General Election that he would call the attention of their Lordships to the subject.

COUNTY COURTS (ENGLAND).
MOTION FOR A RETURN.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR moved for a Return of the Sittings held by County Court Judges during the six months ending June 30th.

LORD DENMAN said, that, under the Judicature Bill, there seemed a great probability of the business of the County Courts being so extended that the new Palace of Justice would have a great many Courts quite empty. He believed that the Judicature Bill did not carry out the recommendation either of the first or second Report of the Judicature Commission, and that it was contrary to the Report of the Select Committee of the House of Lords, 1872, and, in many points, to the Report of the Select Committee of this year; and he believed that, like the Jew Bill of last century, which was brought in by a Ministry, and in the same year repealed by the same Ministry, that this Bill would undergo the same fate.

Motion agreed to.

Return from every County Court in England of the specific days on which the Judge sat in the six months ended the 30th June 1873, together with the following particulars, viz.:

The County Court of holden at [Tabular form.]
—(The Lord Chancellor.)

PRIVATE BILLS.

Standing Orders 159, 176, 178, 179, 182, 184, 185 186A, 189 and Schedule referred to in Standing Order 181 (sect. 1.), considered, and amended; and to be printed as amended.—(The Chairman of Committee.) (No. 274.)

House adjourned at half past Five o'clock, till To-morrow, a quarter before
Two o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

Monday, 4th August, 1873.

MINUTES.]—NEW MEMBER SWORN—Thomas William Board, esquire, for Greenwich.
PUBLIC BILLS—Withdrawn—Factory Acts Amendment [47]; Municipal Elections (Cumulative Vote)* [206].

The House met at Three of the clock.

LUNACY COMMISSION—DEATH OF MR. COMMISSIONER LUTWIDGE.

QUESTION.

LORD ERNEST BRUCE asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, Whether his attention has been drawn to the late fatal catastrophe in the private lunatic asylum of Doctors Finch and Lush, near Salisbury, whereby the life of Mr. Robert Skeffington Lutwidge, Her Majesty's Commissioner of Lunacy, an old and valuable public servant, has been sacrificed; whether he has read the recent charge of the learned Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer to the grand jury of the county of Wilts, in which his Lordship is reported to have said as follows:—

"He meant to throw no imputation upon anybody, but that a great misfortune appeared to have arisen in consequence of a lunatic in an asylum not being sufficiently watched and guarded, and of sufficient means not having been taken to prevent him obtaining possession of anything by which bodily injury could be inflicted. The case was too familiar to all of them. It was matter of notoriety not only in the county, but throughout the Kingdom, that a lunatic possessed himself of a nail of sufficient length and strength, by which he was enabled to inflict a wound, which resulted in the death a few days afterwards of a Commissioner in Lunacy, a gentleman who was respected and esteemed by all who knew him."

and, whether the Secretary of State has taken means to prevent such an occurrence happening again in a private lunatic asylum; and, also, if he can explain to the House how it was that a criminal lunatic, for whom ample provision is now made in the Government Criminal Lunatic Asylum at Broadmoor, where additional precautions are supposed to be taken, was allowed to be an inmate of a private lunatic asylum for a period of upwards of twenty years, the owners of which failed to discover that he was a dangerous lunatic, though it is admitted in evidence that he constantly threatened everybody?

Lord Denman

MR. WINTERBOTHAM, in reply, said, the attention of the Home Secretary had been drawn to the subject contained in the Question of the noble Lord, and the right hon. Gentleman had been in communication with the Commissioners of Lunacy on the subject. The asylum in question was, it appeared, one of the best conducted lunatic asylums in England, and the lunatic who killed Mr. Lutwidge was not a criminal lunatic, his sentence having expired. After the termination of his sentence he could be no longer kept in confinement in the Government Criminal Lunatic Asylum at Broadmoor, and he was therefore transferred to the private asylum near Salisbury. The Commissioners had visited the latter asylum annually, and on each occasion they had seen that particular lunatic; but they had not found this man to be a dangerous lunatic, nor recommended special precautions to be taken with regard to him. It was, doubtless, to be regretted that his real character was not previously ascertained; but, of course, accidents of this kind must sometimes occur in lunatic asylums.

POST OFFICE—DELIVERY OF LETTERS.
QUESTION.

MR. ANDERSON asked the Postmaster General, If the following extract is not a correct statement of a Post Office Rule:—

"Every person whose employment in the service is recognized by the Postmaster General is an officer of the Department. No person under sixteen years of age can be permitted to hold any situation in the Post Office, or to have access to the letters."

if he has made further inquiry as to the Glasgow Post Office, and if the result of that inquiry has been to show that the above Rule had been violated by the employment of boys from fourteen to sixteen years old in the delivery of letters; if it be the fact that last Tuesday a boy who has not completed his thirteenth year was sent out to deliver an important section of the London Mail; and, if he will give the new Postmaster positive instructions and fuller power to make his staff efficient?

MR. MONSELL, in reply, said, the Rule referred to was not invariably acted upon. In London and other places, where there were boy sorters and telegraph boys under 16 years of age, when pressure came upon the Department they were used for the purpose of distributing letters; and he was informed that when they were so used there were fewer complaints against them than there were on the average against the regular men. He had made inquiries with regard to the Glasgow post office, and found that the Regulation referred to had not been acted upon, because a large number of additional letter carriers, whose appointment had been authorized, had not all been appointed, and therefore boy sorters and telegraph boys had been employed in distributing letters. With regard to the third Question, he was informed that it had no foundation in fact; and, with reference to the last one, the fullest power had been given to the postmaster to make his staff efficient. If the hon. Gentleman represented the feeling of Glasgow, that city must be very ungrateful, for there was no town in the United Kingdom for whose postal arrangements more had been done than Glasgow.

ARMY—CONTROL DEPARTMENT.

QUESTION.

MR. HOLT (for Mr. W. H. SMITH) asked the Surveyor General of the Ordnance, Whether, looking at the large economy as regards establishments effected by the amalgamation in 1870 under the Control Department of the various Supply Departments of the Army, and to the fact that the duties formerly performed by each Department separately are now interchanged between the several cadres forming the Sub-supply and Transport Branch of the Control Department, he will place all the Officers employed in that branch of the Service on the same footing as regards relative rank, pay, and numbers in each grade as that enjoyed by the Officers of the Commissariat cadre?

SIR HENRY STORKS: I have, Sir, to state that the Regulation as regards relative rank and pay of the several cadres of the Supply and Transport sub-departments are already identical. The only difference occurs as regards the numbers in the different grades—a difference which has arisen in consequence of there having been in the Commissariat department, as formerly organized, no officers of the relative rank of lieutenant, while officers of that grade were the most numerous in the other large departments. After all reductions and retirements had been effected, there remained in the Commissariat cadre a considerable number of officers surplus to the normal establishment of the new department, and it was settled in order to avoid the hardship and expense of placing them all on half-pay, that they should remain on the Active List and be reduced gradually, a process which is being carried out. The same reasoning did not apply to the other large departments. So far from there being in them supernumerary officers, it became necessary to make numerous promotions to bring them up to the normal establishment, and there appears consequently no reason to comply with the proposal made by my hon. Friend.

METROPOLIS — SOUTH KENSINGTON AND BETHNAL GREEN MUSEUMS.

QUESTION.

MR. MUNDELLA asked the First Lord of the Treasury, Whether he is yet prepared to inform the House if the Trustees of the British Museum have been consulted as to taking charge of the South Kensington Museum and its affiliated institutions at Bethnal Green, at Dublin, and at Edinburgh; whether it is arranged that such transfer of the direction and control shall take place; if so, whether the Sheepshanks, the Dyce, and other valuable bequests will thereby cease to form part of the National Collections; and, whether he will give Parliament an opportunity of expressing an opinion of the policy of this change before it is carried out?

MR. GLADSTONE: The subject, Sir, is not so susceptible of an easy and speedy determination as my hon. Friend seems to imagine. The Trustees of the British Museum have been consulted on subject of a proposal for the transfer to their control of the South Kensington and Bethnal Green Museums; but the Museums at Dublin and Edinburgh are not included in the proposal. Such consultation was a necessary preliminary to any such proceedings, and my hon. Friend may depend upon it that nothing will be done which is calculated to endanger the Sheepshanks' and other bequests. Moreover, considering the amount of popular interest in the subject, we shall endeavour so to arrange that before any final and definitive step is taken, there shall be an opportunity for Parliament to express an opinion upon it.

CONTAGIOUS DISEASES (ANIMALS) — REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE. QUESTION.

COLONEL NORTH (for MR. CLARE READ) asked the Vice President of the Council, Whether he contemplates issuing any order to facilitate stamping out pleuro-pneumonia in cattle, or for carrying out any of the other recommendations of the Report of the Contagious Diseases (Animals) Committee?

MR. W. E. FORSTER, in reply, said, that the Report of the Committee on the Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act had just been delivered to hon. Members. That Committee sat nearly through the Session; they had taken much evidence, and had carefully considered the subject. Several suggestions had been offered by the Committee which required the careful consideration of the Government generally; but there were two suggestions which his noble Friend (Lord Ripon) and himself were of opinion ought to be acted upon at once. One was, the recommendation of the Committee, that animals affected with pleuro-pneumonia should be slaughtered. The Committee, on the other hand, did not recommend that animals which came in contact with those which had been affected should be slaughtered. The Privy Council had, consequently, replaced the permissive Order to local authorities, by a General Order, that animals affected by pleuro-pneumonia should be slaughtered, and that compensation for such slaughter should be given to the owners. It was thought that a General Order should be substituted for permissive regulations, in order that the rules as to the diseases of animals should be the same throughout the country. The Privy Council, however, came to the conclusion after close consideration of the question, that it was unadvisable to do anything towards stopping the foot-and-mouth disease, except by the regulations existing in the Act, and that no Order should be issued by the Privy Council, either permissive or general, beyond the regulations of the Act. Lord Ripon and himself had consequently issued an Order to that effect, and both these Orders would appear in The Gazette. Another recommendation was, that a different principle of compensation should be adopted, and that compensation should be given for the amount of loss to the owner of the animals, instead of a fixed sum. The Government would carefully consider that suggestion; but they felt that they could not make the regulation with regard to pleuro-pneumonia without taking the opinion of Parliament, as compensation in cases of cattle plague was fixed by the Act.

WAYS AND MEANS—ESTIMATES AND REVENUE.—QUESTION.

MR. WHITE (for Mr. SAWY) asked Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, Whether the sum of £430,000, taken from Post Office Revenue to repay moneys taken from Savings' Bank balances would not form part of the general balances and increase the Revenue by that amount; whether, if he still considered himself justified in anticipating that the Post Office Revenue would be nearly equal to that of last year, the Post Office Revenue would not be £480,000 in excess of his Estimate; whether the effect would not be that next April the right honourable gentleman would have the sum of £860,000 to deal with, in addition to his estimated working surplus of £291,000; and, whether the probability of any increase in the Unfunded Debt being necessary at the end of the year was not thereby greatly diminished?

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER: Sir, the first Question of the hon. Gentleman I answer in the affirmative. The sum of £430,000 taken from Post Office revenue to repay moneys taken from Savings' Bank balances would form part of the general balances, and increase the Revenue by that amount. The hon. Gentleman's second Question I answer in the negative. The Post Office Estimate for the year 1873-4 was £5,012,000. Had this Estimate been made by the Treasury, ignorant as they were of the fact that a large part of the Post Office revenue had been directed to another purpose, no doubt the observation of the hon. Gentleman would be correct, and we might reasonably expect an increase in the Revenue of the year in proportion to the sum named. Inasmuch, however, as the Estimate was made by persons in the Post Office who were aware of what had been done with the money, I am afraid that it was allowed for, and that no such increase can be expected. But that is only a small part of the Question. Putting aside this matter of Post Office revenue, diverted for the purpose of repaying money taken from Savings' Bank balances, a large sum belonging to the year 1872-3 has been withheld from the Exchequer. That sum in a Bill just passed is estimated at £812,000. The larger part of this is due to Post Office revenue, and the remainder to Miscellaneous Estimates. That sum will, under the Bill, be paid into the Exchequer, and come into the excess of Revenue as estimated by the Budget, and will therefore tend to swell the estimated surplus of £291,000. On the other hand, that estimated surplus is diminished by Supplementary Estimates—among which heavy expenses for the Metropolitan Police and the Irish Constabulary figure largely—to the extent of from £400,000 to £500,000. The House is aware also that advances for Public Works are made out of balances in the Public Exchequer, and the Estimates which are given us of the loans required for schools and for sanitary purposes under the respective Acts of Parliament are so large that we shall be obliged to ask Parliament for borrowing powers; but, of course, we shall not use them until our balances are exhausted, and this large sum of money to be paid in will interpose an obstacle between us and the necessity for borrowing.

SPAIN— CAPTURE OF THE "VIGILANTE." QUESTIONS.

DR. BREWER asked the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, Whether he is aware of the nature of the interview between the Captains of the "Pigeon" and the war ship of the German Government "Friedrich Karl;" and, what instructions have been issued to the commanders of British vessels in relation to insurgent vessels? ["Oh, oh!" and "Order!"] The hon. Member, to put himself in order, said he would move the Adjournment of the House, and thereupon proceeded to detail the circumstances of the arrest of the Spanish vessel as reported in the newspapers. He thought the part taken by the officer of the British ship in assisting the officer of the German ship in the arrest of the Spanish vessel, if the accounts which had been published are true, were of a nature to endanger the relations between this Country and Spain.

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That this House do now adjourn."—
(Dr. Brewer.)

MR. OTWAY said, that before the noble Lord the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs replied, he would take advantage of the Motion for Adjournment, and put the Question which he had placed on the Paper with reference to the same subject, though in a somewhat different form. He was extremely surprised at the impatience shown by the House to the hon. Member for Colchester while asking the Question, for it referred to a matter of the greatest importance, and it was due to the House and to the country that before Parliament separated it should be known what policy the Government had resolved upon with reference to a very complicated state of affairs, and what instructions had been given to the commanders of Her Majesty's ships of war in Spanish waters. He desired as much as possible to avoid anything which might tend to reflect upon any party in Spain, for in its present circumstances the insurgents of to-day might be the Government tomorrow. From a statement in The Times, which he read with great surprise, it appeared that an officer of the British Navy had joined with an officer commanding a Prussian ship of war cruising off the Spanish coast in imposing a Convention on the Government alleging itself to be the Government of Cartagena, in insurrection against the Government of Madrid, which Government itself was in insurrection against the Government preceding it. That Convention contained the conditions that until a certain date no vessel should sail from Cartagena, and that the steamer Vigilante was to be deemed a lawful prize, in consequence of having borne an unknown flag. He wished to know, whether that British officer had acted in conformity with instructions from the Government, or from our Representative at Madrid; and, if not, whether his conduct was approved by Her Majesty's Government, and what instructions would be sent to him consequence? He believed that no Minister was more determined than Lord Granville to carry out as far as he could do so the policy of non-intervention; and, having made the sacrifice which we made in a recent case, it was most unlikely we should depart from it now. One word of warning, however, might be given with regard to Spanish affairs. No Power had ever interfered in them without experiencing misfortune. Louis Philippe interfered in Spain and lost his Crown. The same fate befell the Emperor Napoleon and King Amadeus; and, following Spanish affairs into another hemisphere, the Emperor Maximilian had lost both his Crown and his life. He would now ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, Whether any instructions have been sent to Her Majesty's Representative in Spain in consequence of a reported declaration of the Government now in power at Madrid, that ships of the Spanish Navy might be treated as piratical vessels; and, whether any information has been received at the Foreign Office of the seizure of a ship of the Spanish Navy by a Prussian frigate, and of any concerted action between the officer commanding Her Majesty's ship on the station and the Prussian Captain in consequence of that seizure?

MR. MUNTZ said, before these Questions of the hon. Members were answered, he would like to know whether they were based upon well-ascertained facts, or whether they merely went upon what they had seen in the newspapers? Anything which tied the hands of our Representatives might have very serious consequences to British subjects. Notice had been given of the intention to bombard the important City of Malaga, and if there had been no British vessel to prevent that bombardment the result would have been serious loss of British life and property. It was not a question of intervention in Spanish affairs, but of the protection of British subjects settled and engaged in lawful occupations in Spain.

VISCOUNT ENFIELD: I think, Sir, it would have been quite possible for my hon. Friends to have obtained the information they desire without moving the Adjournment of the House, a practice which it is not desirable to encourage in asking Questions. My explanation will be very brief; but I hope it will be satisfactory both to my hon. Friends and the House generally. It is quite true that the German war ship Friedrich Karl arrested a Spanish vessel named the Vigilante, which has been subsequently released. We have no particulars as to the nature of the interview between the captains of the Pigeon and the Friedrich Karl, but, from information received yesterday, we believe that the commander of the Pigeon only witnessed the agreement come to between the German and Spanish officers on that occasion. With regard to the instructions sent to our officers, I may state that on the 24th ultimo Her Majesty's Government informed the Admiralty that, with respect to the Spanish ships of war denounced as pirates by a decree of the Government of Madrid, Her Majesty's Government consider that if such vessels commit any acts of piracy affecting British subjects or British interests they should be treated as pirates, the decree of the Spanish Government having deprived them of the protection of their flag; but if they do no such act, they should not be interfered with. Her Majesty's Government have further informed our Naval authorities that they consider that the captains of our vessels are not to surrender or permit the participation of any British officer in any surrender to the Spanish Government of any prisoners detained in revolted ships. Her Majesty's ships are further directed, in the event of any threatened bombardment of any place by the revolted ships, to require its suspension till time has been allowed for placing British lives and property in safety, and to enforce this demand if it be refused. Admiral Yelverton has, I am informed, arrived at Gibraltar with the Mediterranean Fleet.

MR. OTWAY inquired whether the seizure of the Spanish vessel, to which the English captain had given his assent, had occurred in Spanish waters?

MR. GOSCHEN said, he had seen the Report—a telegraphic one—which had reached the Admiralty from Gibraltar; but it gave no particulars as to the place where the seizure occurred.

AFRICA—THE WEST COAST SETTLEMENTS—THE ASHANTEE INVASION. QUESTION.

SIR PATRICK O'BRIEN supposed that the Motion for Adjournment might be treated as an omnibus Motion, and begged to inquire, What course would be taken with regard to the Notice given by the right hon. Gentleman (Sir Charles Adderley) respecting the Ashantee War? It was not right that Parliament should close its sittings without considering the question, and without a statement from the Under Secretary of State for the Colonies as to the policy to be pursued upon the question. He begged to ask the right hon. Gentleman at the head of the Government, Whether he would use his influence to have the discussion of the question brought on that evening?

MR. GLADSTONE, in reply, said, his right hon. Friend was not dependent upon influence of his to bring on the Motion of which he had given Notice. It was a matter which depended altogether upon the will of the House.

Motion, by leave, withdrawn.

PALACE OF WESTMINSTER—FACILITIES FOR VISITING THE HOUSES OF PARLIAMENT.—QUESTION.

MR. HOLT (for Mr. HERMON) asked the First Commissioner of Works, Whether he can arrange that 200 or 300 visitors from Lancashire may pass through both Houses of Parliament some day in the week (other than a Saturday) towards the end of the present month, the Lord Great Chamberlain having stated that they can only have that facility on a Saturday, a day on which it is impossible, in consequence of the Railway excursion arrangements, for the persons concerned to be in London?

MR. AYTON, in reply, said, that in consequence of the absence in Scotland of the Hereditary Lord Great Chamberlain, he had not had such communication with him as would enable him to give a precise answer to the Question. He had no doubt the Hereditary Lord Great Chamberlain would be ready to give the necessary facilities to the persons referred to who were desirous of visiting the Houses of Parliament; but as there were a great many applications of a similar sort, the arrangements should be so made as to enable the public at large to take advantage of it. To do that, however, would require more consideration than, from the circumstance to which he had alluded, the matter had yet received.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR SERVICE
—H.M. CONSUL AT CONSTANTINOPLE —CASE OF MR. PAUL TOMAGIAN.
QUESTION.

MR. LOCKE asked the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, to state If there is any, and if any, what objection to explain the grounds on which the Foreign Office has refused to interfere in the matter of the complaint made by Mr. Paul Tomagian, a British subject resident at Constantinople, against Sir Philip Francis, Her Majesty's Consul General and Judge at that place, as set forth in a letter from the said Mr. Tomagian to Lord Granville, dated the 28th of November 1872, in which Mr. Tomagian charges Sir Philip Francis with arbitrary and oppressive conduct towards him, and with denial of justice and abuse of his office?

VISCOUNT ENFIELD: Sir, in declining to interfere on behalf of Mr. Paul Tomagian, the Foreign Office acted under the advice of the Law Officers of the Crown, to whom the Papers relating to Mr. Tomagian's complaints against Messrs. Hanson, the bankers, at Constantinople, were referred. He is not a British subject, but a native of Turkey, who procured British protection some years ago.

DOMINION OF CANADA—THE GUARANTEED LOAN.—QUESTION.

SIR CHARLES W. DILKE asked Mr. Solicitor General, Whether the insertion of the word "may" throughout the Canada Loan Guarantee Act of the present Session does not give the Treasury the power of postponing the issue of the guarantee for any period that may seem desirable?

THE SOLICITOR GENERAL, in reply, said, it would not be fair to answer the Question of the hon. Baronet simply in the affirmative, because it was limited merely to the power of postponing the guarantee. The Act was, in point of fact permissible, and enabled the Treasury to withhold the guarantee altogether, if they thought fit to do so. That was the form usual in such cases, and it gave to the Executive Government authority to grant the guarantee, they being responsible for the exercise of that authority in a proper manner.

POST OFFICE (IRELAND)—DUBLIN LETTER CARRIERS.—QUESTION.

MAJOR TRENCH asked the Postmaster General, Whether it is in contemplation to extend to the letter carriers in Dublin and in the provincial towns in Ireland the benefits recently conferred upon the letter carriers in London, under the regulations giving them increased pay as a reward for length of service and good conduct; and, if not, whether he will take their claims into his consideration?

MR. MONSELL, in reply, said, if the benefits referred to in the hon. and gallant Member's Question meant increase of pay, the pay of the Dublin letter carriers had been already increased. If badges of distinction for good conduct were referred to, it was not intended to extend that regulation beyond the Metropolis.

DRAINAGE (IRELAND) ACTS, 1835 & 1839
—THE RIVER SHANNON.

QUESTIONS.

MAJOR TRENCH asked the First Lord of the Treasury, Whether the Government is aware that those charged with the carrying into execution of the works designed for the improvement of the Shannon in 1839, when they found that the tenders for their execution far exceeded the amounts at which they were estimated, deliberately substituted other plans for those designed by the Commissioners of 1835, and approved and embodied in the Act passed in 1839; and, whether the Government is aware that this was done with as it were closed doors, that is without those who were to pay for the works, and who were to have been benefited by their full and complete execution, being either consulted or informed upon the subject?

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER, in reply, said, if the hon. and gallant Member would read his own Question, he would readily excuse him (the Chancellor of the Exchequer) for not having information with reference to the subject of it. The matter alluded to, occurred 34 years ago, and with closed doors, and even the hon. and gallant Member who knew the county so well had only become acquainted with the facts during the last fortnight. He did not see what bearing they had upon the question of the drainage of the Shannon one way or the other.

MAJOR TRENCH said, that as the right hon. Gentleman the Chancellor of the Exchequer had failed to see that the Question had any bearing on the main question of the drainage of the Shannon, he had to ask, Whether, inasmuch as the carrying out of only one half of the works authorized for the improvement of the Shannon would of necessity leave the lands adjoining that river still subject to inundations, it did not necessarily follow that the action of the Government officials—if correctly described—must be taken to have a very considerable bearing on the present deplorable state of the Shannon?

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER said, he could not answer such a Question at a moment's notice, as he could not say whether the statement was correct.

MAJOR TRENCH: Assume it to be correct, and I am prepared to substantiate it.

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER: It is not yet proved.

POST OFFICE SAVINGS BANKS DEPARTMENT—INCREASE OF STAFF.
QUESTION.

MR. J. G. TALBOT asked Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, How soon the partial increase of the staff of the Post Office Savings Bank Department which has been sanctioned by the Treasury, is likely to take effect; and, whether there is any objection on the part of the Treasury to complete the re-construction of that Department?

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER, in reply, said, the first Question should have been put to the Postmaster General. In reply to the second he had to say that the re-construction of the department was being proceeded with, and would, he hoped, soon be completed.

MR. MONSELL, in reference to the first Question, said, that the staff of the Savings Bank department would be increased almost immediately.

CRIMINAL LAW (IRELAND)—THE CONVICT MONTGOMERY.

QUESTION.

COLONEL NORTH asked, If the attention of the Government has been called to a statement in "The Times" of the 30th of July, that Sub-Inspector Montgomery, who had been sentenced to death for murder, had been interviewed by some reporters; and, whether the regulations of the Gaol admitted of such a proceeding; and, if so, whether he would take steps to prevent its recurrence?

MR. WINTERBOTHAM: Sir, immediately upon the report of the interview with Mr. Montgomery appearing in the Dublin newspapers, inquiry was made through the Inspectors-General of Prisons as to the circumstances under which the interview was permitted. The local Inspector of the Omagh Gaol stated that the reporters for the Press were admitted on a written order from the Sheriff to the Governor, acting, as was supposed, under the provisions of an Act of Parliament. The Sheriff has been called upon for further explanations, and steps will be taken to prevent the recurrence of a similar proceeding.

CIVIL SERVICE PENSIONS.—QUESTION.

MR. WATNEY asked the Secretary of the Treasury, Whether, in the case of the retirement of a civil servant, from the abolition of his appointment, it was not usual in calculating the amount of his pension to add ten years to his actual period of service; and, whether, in the case of Mr. John Maclean (now Sir John Maclean), whose retirement allowance was agreed to in January, 1871, this ten years was not added to his period of service; and, whether, in the case of Mr. Walter Freeth, whose appointment as Chief Clerk (Military Department) in the War Office had lately been abolished, due attention had been given by the Treasury to the special recommendations of His Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief for Mr. Freeth to receive "full pay, or the highest rate of retirement to which his special services seemed to justly entitle him;" and, if not, why not?

MR. W. H. GLADSTONE: Sir, my hon. Friend the Secretary to the Treasury did not receive Notice of the hon. Member's Question in time to be in his place to answer it. In the absence of my hon. Friend I beg to say that it is the practice, at the Treasury, in calculating the amount of pension to be granted to a retiring Civil servant to add 10 years to his actual time of service, wherever that service has exceeded 20 years. In the case of Sir John Maclean those 10 years were added. In the case of Mr. Walter Freeth, the recommendation of His Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief was fully considered by the Treasury, and the only reason he did not receive the addition of the full 10 years was, that if that had been done the effect would have been to raise the pension beyond the limits of two-thirds of the salary, the limit contemplated by the Civil Service Superannuation Act. He therefore only received as much as was sufficient to make the pension two-thirds of the salary.

MR. WATNEY said, that the cases were parallel, as in the one case the amount of service was, he believed, 33 and in the other 34 years.

MR. W. H. GLADSTONE: I do not understand the hon. Member to say that there is a case for the reduction of the pension of Sir John Maclean. If he does, that is a different matter, and should be the subject of another Question.

CRIMINAL LAW — THE WEAVERHAM COCK-FIGHTING CASE.

QUESTION.

MR. JACOB BRIGHT asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, Whether the magistrate who on Monday last, at Oldham, is reported to have fined two boys five shillings each for the crime of tossing, is the same person who on the same day was sentenced by the justices at Eddisbury to pay a fine of five pounds for aiding and abetting in cruelty to animals at the recent cock-fight in Cheshire; and, if so, whether he is a fit person to hold the office of magistrate?

MR. BRUCE, in reply, said, he believed the gentleman in question was one of the borough magistrates of Oldham. The case had been referred to the Chancellor of the Duchy, who was the proper person to deal with it.

NAVY — CHATHAM DOCKYARD — THE RIVER WALL.—QUESTIONS.

MR. CAWLEY, with reference to a statement that appeared in "The Times" of Thursday as to a part of the river wall at the Gun Wharf, Chatham Dockyard, which recently gave way, asked the First Lord of the Admiralty, Whether the statement is true; and, if so, what portion of the river wall was alluded to, and to what extent it has given way?

Mr. W. H. Gladstone

MR. GOSCHEN, in reply, said, he guessed from the Question that the hon. Gentleman thought the Gun Wharf was within the area of the Dockyard with which the Admiralty was connected. That was an error. It was not within the Dockyard. He had no knowledge of what occurred in the Gun Wharf, which was not in his Department.

MR. CAWLEY asked, Whether he was to understand that the Gun Wharf was no part of the property under the Admiralty, and that the right hon. Gentleman was last week unaware of those facts?

MR. GOSCHEN said, he had already stated that the Gun Wharf was not within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty, and that they had absolutely nothing to do with it.

SIR HENRY STORKS said, the Gun Wharf belonged rather to the War Department than to the Admiralty. He was unable, however, to answer the hon. Gentleman's Question now, having had no Notice of it, but he would endeavour to do so to-morrow.

PARLIAMENT—HOUR OF MEETING OF THIS HOUSE.—OBSERVATIONS.

MR. J. LOWTHER said, he was in the House on Saturday, at the time when Notices were usually given; but he failed to gather any intimation that the ordinary practice of the House as to meeting at 4 o'clock was to be departed from that day (Monday). If their Standing Orders and Sessional Orders were so loosely worded that it was in the power of the Government to fix whatever time they chose for the meeting of the House, they might fix on 3 in the morning. There was nothing to prevent the same practice being adopted in the middle of the Session. He would draw attention to that matter next Session with a view to an alteration of the Standing Orders.

MR. GLADSTONE said, he believed it was almost the uniform practice at the close of the Session for such changes in the hour of meeting to be made.

MR. NEWDEGATE said, he had himself called attention to irregularities of that kind. The complaint of the hon.

Member for York was, he thought, well founded. It was impossible for hon. Members to discharge their duty properly if they had not due Notice when to be present.

SIR DAVID WEDDERBURN asked at what hour it was intended that the House should meet to-morrow?

MR. GLADSTONE replied that that did not rest with him. He, however, understood the usual hour was half-past 1.

MR. SPEAKER said, that as to the point raised by the hon. Member for York (Mr. J. Lowther), he might state that the hon. Member for Clackmannan (Mr. Adam) had publicly announced on Saturday afternoon that the House would meet at 3 o'clock on Monday; and Notice to that effect appeared on the Votes.

CONSPIRACY LAW AMENDMENT BILL LORDS' AMENDMENTS.

Order for Consideration of Lords' Amendments read.

MR. VERNON HARCOURT, in rising to move that the Lords' Amendments be taken into consideration that day three months, said, as he was about to ask the House to take a course with reference to a Bill in which much interest had been felt out-of-doors, which would put an end to its existence, he must ask indulgence while he stated the grounds of a proceeding of which he felt all the responsibility. So far as the Lords' Amendments tended to restore the Bill to the limited objects with which it was first introduced—namely, a Bill confined to the Law of Conspiracy as affecting trade combinations—he could not and did not demur to those Amendments. The changes, however, effected by the Amendments introduced by the Government in Committee of that House, by which the Bill was transformed into a general Bill dealing with the whole Law of Conspiracy, was a change not only not made at his instance, but against his earnest and repeated protest. He entreated his right hon. Friend the Home Secretary not to persist in such a course, because he foresaw the result which had actually occurred—namely, that the Bill would be wrecked; and he told the right hon. Gentleman that the responsibility of its failure must rest upon those who counselled and insisted upon such a proceeding. He knew the plausible ground on which that course was adopted. It was said that exceptional legislation in favour of a particular class could not be defended, and that if any alteration was to be made in the law it must be applied to all alike. But it was too late to adopt such a position. Those who resisted the repeal of the Criminal Law Amendment Act and the Master and Servant Act—and Her Majesty's Government were to be reckoned among them—were not in a situation to denounce exceptional legislation. Those Acts were essentially exceptional, creating special penalties against a particular class; and to affirm that penalties ought to be exceptional, but that exemptions must be universal, was a proposition which, in his judgment, was neither logical nor just. It was because the wage-earning classes had been made the subject of legislation which was applied to no other class of the community, and still more to the operation of a Common Law jurisprudence which had affected them with exceptional severity, that that Bill was introduced to apply exceptional remedies to exceptional mischiefs. It was launched as a trade Bill; it was read a second time as a trade Bill. The first set of Amendments put on the Paper by the Government accepted the Bill in its limited character, and if it had been sent up to the House of Lords in that shape, in his opinion it would have been more satisfactorily discussed, and returned in a far less unsatisfactory state. At all events, the House of Lords would not have been able to allege the plausible pretext that they were not prepared, in the last week in July, to review the whole state of the Law of Conspiracy. The delay, probably inevitable, which was caused by that imprudent transformation, wasted just that fortnight which might have secured for the Bill in the other House a more full, and perhaps a more satisfactory, investigation. He did not say that in order to complain of his right hon. Friend; on the contrary, he desired to acknowledge, as he was bound in candour to acknowledge, the sincere desire, both on the part of the Home Secretary and the Law Officers, and also on the part of those who had charge of the Bill in the other House, to pass into law that Session a remedial and adequate measure. That House had to consider the Bill as it had come back to them. He had seen it stated in the public journals that it had been restored to the state in which it was originally introduced. If it were so, certainly the authors of the Bill would not be the persons who could have a right to complain. It was the same Bill, it was true, in title and in form; in substance it was not the same, but wholly different. The corpse remained; but under those successive transmigrations, the soul had fled, the spirit had evaporated. Let him remind the House what were the evils that the Bill proposed to remedy, and what was the mode of remedy applied. In the case of the gas-stokers, there were two sets of counts in the indictment. The second, upon which the conviction was obtained, was for conspiring to break contracts under the provisions of the Master and Servant Act; and upon that conviction the sentence of 12 months' imprisonment—for an offence which under the Act was only punishable with three months' imprisonment—was passed. Under the first counts, the Judge laid down the law to the effect that it was an offence at Common Law to combine to induce a man to alter his mode of conducting his business, and thereby to coerce his free will. It was plain that such a doctrine, as the right hon. Gentleman the Home Secretary well stated, "turned the whole flank of the legislation of 1871," which declared the legality of trade combinations. If that law was upheld, every strike was in itself, ipso facto, a crime punishable with two years' imprisonment. If Parliament was to keep faith with the working classes in respect of the pledges it had given to secure the freedom of labour, it was bound to protect it against the practical supersession of its will by this sort of Judge-made law. No one had a more sincere respect than he had for the sages of the law; but that respect was limited to their legal province—Cui libet credendum est in arte sua. Even men so just as Mansfield and Eldon and Ellembrough and Kenyon had laid down doctrines on political and economical subjects which it had been the duty of Parliament to correct, and upon no head of the Common Law had decisions gone more astray than upon trade questions. Indeed, the main object of the Acts of 1871 was to abrogate the whole body of Judge-made law on the doctrine of restraint of trade, and by it Parliament in 1871 intended to overthrow that mischievous theory. It declared against the old doctrine and repealed it in words; but no sooner was the ancient cobweb swept away than a new mesh was devised, and thence hitherto unknown were spread with the same objects, and as soon as Parliament had declared against one doctrine a new one was invented which escaped the terms of the prohibition; and so it would always be as long as we thought fit to leave the conflict of labour and capital to be adjudicated upon by the unrestricted will of Judges, who, however learned in the law, had not always been remarkable for the largeness of their political or economical views. It was an old and a true saying—Misera est servitus ubi jus incertum; and it was to that miserable servitude that the industrial classes of this country had been and still were condemned. Men could not obey the law because they knew not what the law was. What was the present situation? A Judge—nay, two Judges had laid down the law in a manner disapproved by the Government, and condemned by the Law Officers of the Crown; and yet, for all that, until it was reversed it was the law. The Home Secretary had said one thing, and a Judge had laid down exactly the opposite doctrine; but that did not make the thing better—indeed, it made it ten times worse. In that state of things the law and the liberties of men depended on the Judge before whom they were tried. Was that just, was it safe, was it tolerable? Yet we did nothing to remove this uncertainty, and to declare the law. The working classes of this country had demanded—in his judgment they had a right to demand—that the Parliament of England should tell them what was the law by which their right—almost the only right they had, the right of labour—was regulated. The Bill, as introduced, would have met that demand. It declared that the law affecting trade combinations should be found in the will of Parliament as declared in the Statute Book, and that alone. He should be told that that was to supersede the Common Law altogether. Yes, he owned frankly it was his intention, in respect of trade combinations, to exclude the action of the Common Law, which in that matter meant nothing else but the politico-economic sentiments, it might be the unconscious prejudices, of the Judges. Wise and beneficial as the operation of the Common Law might be, and as he believed it was, in other matters, in respect of its action upon the contests of capital and labour it had never been either wise or beneficial. In that matter Parliament, and Parliament alone, could be trusted. They condemned its old developments by their Acts in 1871; they repudiated its new developments in the debates of 1873; but they had not effectually repealed their operation. The House of Lords had struck out of the Bill the provision which would have confined the indictments for conspiracy in the case of trade combinations to acts made punishable by statute. What was the consequence? The autumn and the winter were coming. You might have new prosecutions and many fresh convictions founded upon principles which the Government condemned, which the Law Officers denounced, which the House of Commons had repudiated, but which Parliament had not legally abrogated. That might be the case under the new doctrine of Common Law conspiracy, or under yet newer doctrines which might be any day extemporized, for the sources from which they flowed were inexhaustible. Men might be condemned and sent to prison for two years under doctrines which no one was prepared to justify, and the Executive Government would be called upon to enforce sentences which they could not approve. Was that a state of things which we could contemplate with tranquillity? Was it a state of affairs which was compatible with the well-being of society? He would ask the noble Amenders of the Bill, was that a Conservative policy? To leave confessed injustice unredressed was to his mind of all things the most revolutionary. That was what the Bill did as now returned to that House. In failing to deal with the vague and indefinite dangers of the Common Law, it afforded no substantial remedy whatever for the substantial grievance which it was intended to redress. A Bill of that character, affording no essential redress, would only be an excuse for future and stronger agitation, for, in his opinion, there was nothing more dangerous or more unstatesmanlike than to deal inadequately with questions so serious in their consequences.

as this:—A sham remedy for a real evil was only a fresh provocation. A measure of that character might only furnish an excuse for abstaining from complete and adequate legislation. But then it would be said, though the Bill might not accomplish all that was desired, at least it did something; and they might be asked to accept it on the ground that half a loaf was better than no bread. If the bread were good and wholesome food, however limited the ration, he should recognize the force of that argument. But how did the case stand? The Bill substantially contained only one provision, for the parts of the old combination laws specified in the Schedule were only of secondary importance. That provision limited the punishment on indictments for conspiracy for breach of contract under the Master and Servants Act to the term of three months, which was the penalty for the principal offence. So far, no doubt, the Bill was valuable. It would be a solemn condemnation, enrolled on the record of Parliament, of the sentence passed in last December on the gas-stokers. In declaring that no such thing should in the future be lawful, it would be—nay, it was—a censure upon the rigour of that transaction, and he must point out to the Home Secretary that it condemned not only the sentence of twelve months, but also the commuted sentence of four months' imprisonment. So far it was a partial reparation for a great, unhappily an irremediable wrong to the men who had suffered, and the fact that both Houses of Parliament had agreed that in such a case, a sentence of three months ought to be the extreme limit of penalty was a fact which could not be got rid of. In the face of such a declaration by the Legislature, whether that Bill passed or whether it did not, it was impossible that in the future such a sentence as that in the case of the gas-stokers could be either passed or executed. But, unfortunately, the case did not rest there. He might have assented to the passing of the Bill in its altered form, had it not been for another consideration. Having consulted with those who made the matter their special study, and particularly with Mr. Wright, he was of opinion that the passing of this Bill, instead of doing good, would only do mischief to those in whose interest it had been introduced.

Under the pretence of limiting the penalty, the Bill did, in fact, affirm the offence, for if they passed the Bill it would give a statutory assent to the doctrine which Parliament had never yet sanctioned—that an agreement to break a contract within the provisions of the Master and Servant Act was a criminal offence properly indictable as a conspiracy. It could not be too often repeated, what, indeed, the hon. and learned Solicitor General had clearly pointed out, that the 14th section of the Master and Servant Act did not constitute an offence, but only supplied an exceptional remedy for the enforcement of a contract under certain circumstances. This Bill would, for the first time, recognize in an Act of Parliament an agreement to break a contract to be an indictable offence. And he would point out to the House that the generality of the language embraced not only the acts within the 14th section, but any act within the purview of the Master and Servant Act. To so dangerous and mischievous a proposition he for one could never assent. In the Bill, as originally introduced, and as finally amended by the Government and sent up to the House of Lords, no indictment for conspiracy could have been laid under the Master and Servant Act. The Government, no less than the promoters of the Bill, were distinctly pledged to this principle. The Master and Servant Act was deliberately excluded from the 1st Schedule, and if it had not been so, he should at once have discharged the Order for the Third Reading of the Bill in that House. How, then, could the promoters—how could the Government, who concurred with them in that view, now turn round and sanction a Bill which affirmed exactly the opposite view? He, for one, was deeply convinced that if he were to do so, he should be chargeable with having betrayed the interests which he had undertaken, however feebly, to defend. He felt painfully the responsibility of this decision. He had asked that the matter should be postponed till this day, in order that he might have an opportunity of conferring with those on whose judgment he relied, and they were distinctly of opinion that the Bill, as it came down to them, would aggravate rather than alleviate the grievances which it was their object to remedy. The Bill would recognize by statutory authority that to which they could not and must not assent—namely, that that was a crime as between master and servant which was treated as a crime in no other class of the community. He had, therefore, come to the conclusion—and he had come to it with regret—that rather than take such a course it was better to lose the Bill. He recognized all the mischief and all the dangers of the present unsettled state of the law; but this Bill would not settle it. It was a great misfortune, no doubt, that its consideration had been postponed so late; but the responsibility for that did not rest with the promoters of the Bill; and as regarded the limitation of the sentence, it was perfectly sure without the enactment of its provisions. He confessed he could not understand why the Government did not themselves take up the question as soon as Parliament met, especially as the hon. and learned Attorney General had himself told them that so long ago as last January the Law Officers reported to the Government their opinion of the unsatisfactory state of the law as declared in the case of the gas-stokers. But, however that might be, the question had reached a stage at which it could not and would not sleep, and the promoters of the Bill might be content with the reflection that they matured the question by the discussion it had undergone. The law was not amended, but it was condemned, for after the Amendments introduced by the Government, which practically overthrew the whole Law of Conspiracy, it would be their bounden duty—a duty from which he felt sure they would not shrink—to deal with this matter at the earliest moment. He had felt from the first what he felt still more deeply now, that this was a question which ought never to have been in the hands of a private Member; he, however, could not, from the mere vanity of the desire to pass a Bill, assent to a measure which he knew to be insufficient, and which he believed to be unsound. The Government, of course, would deal with the matter as one of the first measures next Session. He preferred, then, to leave it in their hands; but he felt it right to guard himself, when it reappeared, from a complete assent to the principle of the 1st Schedule which they introduced in Committee. He felt bound to say this because the Lord Chancellor was in error in supposing that the promoters of the Bill, or Mr. Wright, from whose able advice and assistance they had derived so much advantage, ever approved that Schedule, to which they gave a reluctant and involuntary assent. Under all the circumstances of the case, therefore, as they were at the last moment unable to amend the Lords' Amendments, he had no alternative but to abandon the Bill. In doing so, he earnestly trusted he should have the concurrence of the Government in resisting the enactment of a principle the exact opposite of that which pervaded the Bill which, with their assent and support, was sent up to the House of Lords. The Government could not—he was sure they did not desire to—withdraw from the principles laid down in the Bill as amended by themselves; and, therefore, amidst a choice of evils, he was convinced the best course would be to remit the decision of this important matter to the deliberation of another Session—perhaps to the decision of another Parliament—in which questions of social consequence would command a more careful consideration than they had hitherto received. With that conviction, he begged to move what would amount to be the practical rejection of the measure for that Session.

MR. BRUCE said, he was not at all surprised at the course taken by his hon. and learned Friend. On the contrary, he confessed that the Bill as returned to that House was a measure which it was not worth while to pass. In his judgment the subject ought to be postponed until the House could deal with it in a more comprehensive and satisfactory manner. His hon. and learned Friend had dealt with the Law of Conspiracy as far as it affected the relations between employers and employed. For his own part, he denied that workmen as a class were exceptionally treated; although it was, no doubt, true there were certain punishable offences which were rarely committed except by workmen. But in dealing with such cases the right rule seemed to be whether the offences were the proper subjects of punishment. If they were, the circumstance that they were only committed by one class of men in the State was no just or sufficient reason for exempting them from due punishment. The effect of his hon. and learned Friend's Bill, however, was to exempt workmen from the punishment which certain offences would entail if committed by a person belonging to any other class of the community, and therefore Her Majesty's Government were unable to accept the Bill in the form in which it was originally drawn. They had given the best attention they could to the subject; but the circumstances of the Session were such that it was impossible to send up the Bill at an earlier period. He deeply regretted the loss of the Bill. At the same time, considering the immense importance of the subject, he could not complain of the other branch of the Legislature for having treated the Bill pretty much as they treated others respecting which the course they took was much less excusable. His hon. and learned Friend had referred to two decisions of learned Judges which had "turned the flank" of the Act of 1871. Now, he was only aware of one dictum—not a decision, for a dictum was not, in any case, a decision—given by Mr. Justice Brett, who did lay down certain positions which, had they become the law of the land, would have effectually defeated the object of the Government, in one respect, in passing the Act of 1871. Had the jury found in accordance with the directions of the learned Judge, he had no doubt by this time there would have been an authoritative declaration whether the learned Judge had laid down the law correctly or not. But the jury did not convict on the ruling of the learned Judge in this respect; and when, shortly afterwards, the same point arose before another learned Judge, his ruling was entirely opposed to that of Mr. Justice Brett. We had, therefore, upon this subject the opinion of Mr. Justice Lush against the opinion of Mr. Justice Brett. It was almost to be regretted that the jury did not follow the ruling of Mr. Justice Brett, because an opportunity would then have been afforded for testing the opinions of the Judges, and Parliament would have been better able to consider whether a change in the law was or was not necessary. With regard to the appeal made by his hon. and learned Friend, he thought the Government, by the action they had taken, had shown that they considered the subject of great importance. While, however, most anxious to assist his hon. and learned Friend in his efforts to amend the law, he did feel there were objections in the way of dealing with so difficult a question at so late a period of the Session. As to the future, he fully admitted that the matter was one which deserved consideration at the hands of the Government, and if possible, it was advisable that Government action should take place on the question; but he was not prepared to pledge the Government to any definite course on the subject, though it should, of course, receive their careful attention with a view to some satisfactory conclusion being arrived at, and it would be for the Government, having regard to all that had taken place during the present Session, to consider during the Recess what might be proposed for the acceptance of Parliament, especially with regard to the Law of Conspiracy, which both Houses had, by their action, declared to require amendment.

DR. BALL said, that in what had happened in reference to the Bill in "another place," there had been no hostility shown to an improvement in the law. What was said was, that the Bill which proposed such an important alteration of the law had arrived in the other House at so late a period of the Session that it was not possible to obtain the opinion of the Common Law Judges, or of eminent members of the Bar upon it, and therefore it was desirable that there should be some delay in order that that opinion might be ascertained. He (Dr. Ball) entirely coincided in that view. He thought such a change in the law ought not to be made without due deliberation, and he did not regard it as at all a misfortune that the Bill should be postponed, so that it might be fully considered during the Recess, both by the legal profession and by that class of the public whom its provisions would affect.

MR. HINDE PALMER said, that considering the interest with which the working classes naturally regarded the progress of this Bill, he could not concur in the opinion just expressed by the right hon. Gentleman opposite. He thought, on the contrary, that it was very much to be regretted that the Bill should be dropped. Still he agreed that the mode in which the House of Lords had dealt with it was wrong and mischievous. The law, as it now stood, was impaired in public opinion by the criticism passed upon it in this House and by the progress made with this Bill. In his opinion, his hon. and learned Friend was warranted in moving that the Lords' Amendments to the Bill should be considered three months hence, and he regretted that the Government were unable to give a pledge that they would deal with the subject next Session. He regretted also that the hopes entertained by thousands of the working classes for the success of a measure on which their attention was fixed had been frustrated by the Amendments of the other House.

MR. LEITH urged the Government to bring in a Bill on the subject early next Session, seeing the anxious desire there was on the part of the working classes that the matter should be settled, and a fair and satisfactory law passed.

MR. J. LOWTHER said, that the House stood in a peculiar position, for, with the exception of the hon. and learned Member for Oxford, hardly anyone knew what the Lords' Amendments were. They had not been printed, and it was unnecessary to point out the extreme inconvenience of discussing Amendments of which the House absolutely knew nothing. He wished to give Notice that next Session he should move a Sessional Order to the effect that no Amendments of the other House be considered until they have been previously printed and distributed with the Votes.

Question put, and agreed to.

Lords' Amendments to be taken into consideration upon this day three months.

FACTORY ACTS AMENDMENT BILL.

[BILL 47.]

(Mr. Mundella, Mr. Morley, Mr. Shaw, Mr. Philips, Mr. Cobbett, Mr. Anderson.)

SECOND READING. ADJOURNED DEBATE.

Order read, for resuming Adjourned Debate on Amendment proposed to Question [30th July], "That the Bill be now read a second time;" and which Amendment was,

To leave out from the word "That" to the end of the Question, in order to add the words "in the opinion of this House, it is undesirable to sanction a measure which would discourage the employment of women, by subjecting their labour to a new legislative restriction to which it is not proposed to subject the labour of men,"

—(Mr. Fawcett,)

—instead thereof.

Question again proposed, "That the words proposed to be left out stand part of the Question."

Debate resumed.

MR. T. HUGHES, in supporting the Bill, said, he thought it was a very happy sign of the times when such questions as these were the only questions on which it was possible to raise any class antagonism either in that House, or out-of-doors. He was quite certain that the more such questions were approached, and the more they were treated in a judicial spirit, the better it would be for the country. The hon. Member for Brighton (Mr. Fawcett) had said that the supporters of this Bill were indifferent and hard-hearted towards the employers of labour in the textile fabrics of the country; but, as a matter of fact, many of those supporters were amongst the most eminent of the manufacturers themselves. In fact, they would never pass a measure satisfactory to both sides unless with the hearty concurrence of employers. The general principle of the Factory Acts had now been accepted by the House and the country, and they were all agreed that it was for the good of the nation that work in textile manufactories should be regulated both as to hours and conditions of labour. Therefore, when the present Bill was brought forward four years ago as a much-needed extension in that direction, the Government consented to grant an inquiry into the whole subject. The Report of the Inspectors who had been appointed to inquire into the subject was not only an able document, but eminently fair to both sides. The Report of the Commissioners had been adverse to the views of the hon. Member for Brighton; but the answer of the hon. Gentleman to that was that the facts disclosed by the Report did not justify the conclusions arrived at. The three processes in which persons who were dealt with in the Bill were employed were carefully considered by the Commissioners. Those processes were carding, spinning, and weaving. With respect to carding, the Commissioners reported that the exertion required on the whole was not very great; With regard to spinning, the Report of the Commissioners who were appointed in 1833 showed that the number of spindles to each hand was 112. Now, in 1873, the smallest number attended to by one hand was 439, and the largest 562; and as to speed, more stretches were done now in two hours and a-half than formerly in 12 hours. There were also no periods of rest now. As to weaving, the Masters' Association admitted that a girl of 17 in 1848 had only two looms to attend to, while she now had four to look after, without any assistance. The throws of the shuttle, too, which were then from 90 to 112 in an hour, were now 175 to 200. The Report of the Commissioners put the whole of these facts in a very plain and brief shape, and he thought the House should attach due weight to the Report of the Commissioners, who had paid such close attention to the subject. Their Report, in his opinion, fully met the objections of the hon. Member for Brighton. He (Mr. Hughes) would at once admit that some compensation was given by improvements which had been constantly accruing in the machinery; but the strain upon the workpeople had been considerably augmented by the fact of bonuses being given to overlookers for the amount of work done. The Commissioners had also reported on the deaths which took place amongst the operatives employed. The ordinary death-rate of women between 15 and 45 years of age, as stated by the Registrar-General's Returns, was 866 in 100,000; but what was the rate amongst those employed in textile manufactures? In Bradford it was 1,048, or 182 in excess; in Halifax it was 1,135, or 269 in excess; and in Keighley it was 1,197, or 331 in excess. Bad as that state of things was, the death-rate of children was still worse. In Manchester, of children under five, it was 48 per cent; and while in the North of England towns the average death-rate of children under one year was 7 per cent, in Manchester alone it was 25 in every 100 of the same age. He contended such a state of things as that required an immediate remedy, notwithstanding anything that his hon. Friend the Member for Brighton might say to the contrary. It was true that individual doctors had given it as their opinion that there was no necessity for any alteration of the Factory Acts; but such was not the opinion of the Medical Chirurgical Society of Manchester, the members of which were strongly in favour of a lessening of the hours of labour and of increasing the limit of age at which children should be employed. The conclusions at which the Commissioners had arrived were in favour of the Bill of his hon. Friend the Member for Sheffield (Mr. Mundella), and they recommended that the demand for shorter hours should be acceded to. They also recommended that mothers of young children should be only allowed to work half-time, or be excluded from the factory altogether for a time, and that opinion was shared by the Factory Inspectors. He contended that the female hands in factories, who were 80 per cent of the whole, were deeply interested in this question, and were looking to see with considerable anxiety what action the House would take in the matter. He thought that the measure of his hon. Friend was especially necessary now that the Education Act had been passed, and that he would re-introduce it next Session. With respect to the observation of the hon. Baronet (Sir Thomas Bazley) as to the danger we should incur of losing our supremacy in trade if the Bill were passed, he confessed he was not anxious on that score; because as long as the employer maintained the quality of the article he sold so long should we maintain our supremacy. The great danger which we at present ran of being beaten by foreign nations was in consequence of the adulteration which the employers put into the article they sold, the principal of which was the large amount of size, which was to a great extent useless, and which was certainly injurious to the health of the operatives. It appeared, for instance, that in a 19lb piece of cotton no less than 6 lb of size was used, 43 per cent of which was composed of China clay, the remainder consisting of some greasy substance, such as lard or butter, and the whole being mixed up with flour. The great test, however, as to the value of the measure was a personal one, and he asked hon. Members whether they would like any young child of their own to work as these children had to work. He was sure they would not allow it for all the money in Manchester, and he hoped they would therefore bear that fact in mind when considering the question. As far as he was concerned, he hoped and believed that the time was not far distant when working men would be ashamed to allow their wives to work in factories at all. The sooner that time arrived the better it would be for England; but until then he thought we ought to legislate in such a way as to render the evil of the present system as small as possible, and that he thought the measure of his hon. Friend would, in some degree, effect, and he would therefore urge the House to accept it.

MR. LEITH, in supporting the Bill, wished to corroborate the statement of the hon. and learned Member who had just sat down—that the women engaged in these factories were favourable to the measure. He had presented to the House two Petitions on the subject, one of them being presented from a very large meeting of operatives at Aberdeen, among whom were many women. The argument of the speech of the hon. Member for Brighton was an anachronism. If it had been delivered with reference to the Act of 1844 it would have some force, but the principle of the Bill having then been adopted, it was no use to argue against it now. He believed the Bill to be a politic and philanthropic measure, and he would, therefore, give it his support.

MR. MUNDELLA said, that he rose to put an end to the discussion, which he regretted to see carried on in so thinly-attended a House. He also wished to offer some explanation to the House with regard to his conduct of the Bill. He was unable to obtain an earlier day for the second reading of the Bill than the 11th of June, and on that occasion only one hour and forty minutes were available for the debate. Both the hon. Member for Brighton (Mr. Fawcett) and the right hon. Member for Buckinghamshire (Mr. Disraeli)—whom he thanked for the interest he took in this matter—asked the Prime Minister to give a day for the resumption of the debate, and last Wednesday was fixed for the continuation of the debate. Through some unfortunate circumstances, however, the Report of Supply was not agreed to on Tuesday, and the discussion on it occupied the whole of Wednesday until ten minutes past four o'clock. Feeling, however, that it would then be impossible to secure an adequate discussion of the subject, he went to his hon. Friend the Member for Brighton (Mr. Fawcett), whose speech was stopped by the adjournment on the previous occasion, and who was therefore in possession of the House, and asked his consent to get the Notice read and discharged. His hon. Friend would not agree to that course. He had prepared a speech some months before for the Shop Hours Regulation Bill of the hon. Member for Maidstone (Sir John Lubbock), which was withdrawn, and he could not resist the temptation of launching that philippic against his (Mr. Mundella's) Bill, although it was not appropriate to some parts of the measure. The hon. Member and his Seconder consequently spoke on that occasion until within three minutes of a quarter to six. Though the right hon. Gentleman at the head of the Government offered him (Mr. Mundella) Friday for the resumption of the debate, he did not think it would have been proper under the circumstances to take advantage of that offer; and seeing that nothing further could be gained that Session, he wished, in now proposing that the Order might be read and discharged, to say a few words in reply to the hon. Member for Brighton. In his speech, which was characterized by more than his usual force and eloquence, but with much less than his usual fairness and generosity, the hon. Member showed so many misconceptions and prejudices that it was impossible to allow them to pass unnoticed. The hon. Gentleman had charged him (Mr. Mundella) with casting unjust aspersions on the employers. He did not say what those aspersions were, and all that he (Mr. Mundella) could say was, when he introduced the Bill he had eulogized the employers, and stated that no Acts had ever been more fairly carried out both by employers and operatives than the Factory Acts. The hon. Member took exception to his (Mr. Mundella's) statement that the women were the slaves of their masters. What he stated was, that girls up to a certain age were the servants of their parents, and that when they married, unless they had good and affectionate husbands, they became the slaves of their masters. That statement was a mere re-echo of what had been said by the Manchester Chamber of Commerce. Great pressure was put upon husbands by employers, and working-men husbands who did not wish their wives to go into the mills were told that if they did not bring them they need not come back themselves.

He denied the charge of the hon. Member that he had dealt unfairly with the House in the remarks he had made with respect to the health of the factory children. When making those remarks he had taken care to distinguish between those diseases which the children inherited from their parents and those which were inflicted upon them by the peculiar character of their labour. He had nothing to retract from what he had said on that point, and it would be found by any who took the pains to refer to what he had then advanced that the accusation of the hon. Member could not be substantiated. With regard to overlookers, they were paid according to the amount of work done, and they were thus stimulated to drive the operatives to the utmost possible extent. Thus, a day of ten and a-half hours had come to be a more severe day than it was formerly, and, as a matter of fact, the pressure put upon the workers in factories, not only upon the women but upon men also, by the superintendents was such that both sexes dreaded the approach of what was called making-up day, and frequently endeavoured to make excuses to avoid the chastisement of the superintendents on those days. The hon. Member said that his Bill contained no provisions with regard to accidents and ventilation; but his reply was, that these provisions were in the existing Acts, and that all that was required was that they should be carried out properly. He had been charged with misleading the House with regard to factory legislation abroad. Now, he admitted that so far as adults were concerned, this country was in advance of other countries; but with regard to the employment of children, and educational requirements, the laws in Germany and Switzerland were much more stringent than he proposed to adopt by this Bill. As far as he was concerned, there had been no mis-statement whatever. Passing to the Resolution of the hon. Member, which, in his opinion, was an extraordinary one, he denied that the Bill would have the tendency, as stated in that Resolution, of imposing any novel restrictions on the labour of women. On the contrary, the real effect of the Bill would be to place the labour of women more and more on a parity with that of men. Properly speaking, the Bill might be called one rather to promote than to restrict the labour of women, by throwing into their hands a great deal of the work now performed by children. The manufacturers, whose views the hon. Member advocated, laughed at his theories, and despised his judgment; and there was not a manufacturer in the country who thought that the measure would have the effect of discouraging the employment of women. Moreover, from 1865 to 1870, the hon. Gentleman had himself been a warm advocate of the Extension of Factory Acts, and was a Member of the Select Committee which had made the largest extensions of the Factory Acts ever yet made, and, therefore, the change which had come over the spirit of his dream ought to be a warning to the House in regard to "new departures" and "new developments." It was assumed that the Bill was promoted by trades unions in order to injure female labour; but it would be remembered that, in some unions, one-half were women, and that there was not the slightest ground for supposing that there was any jealousy between male and female operatives in factories and mills. Then the hon. Member referred to the limitation of labour and increase of wages that had been obtained by the Newcastle engineers without any appeal to Parliament; but what possibility was there of these women and children being able to exert the same power as the Newcastle engineers? The hon. Member had also talked about undermining the independence and character of the working classes. He (Mr. Mundella) asked where independence was to be found if not among the factory operatives? The Government Commissioner during the Cotton Famine stated that he never found men so self-reliant and so ready to adapt themselves to change of work. Although he was about to discharge the Bill, the House had not heard the last of it by any means, for it would be constantly before the nation. It had already been felt in Oldham; there were three candidates at Dundee, and they were all supporters of the Bill. The hon. Member for Manchester (Sir Thomas Bazley) drew a dolorous picture of what was likely to occur if the Bill was passed. The exports were to be £50,000,000 less than now. But did he not say just the same 30 years ago? Well, our exports were then £50,000,000, and they had now risen to £200,000,000. Hardware had increased in an incredible way; and the manufacturers rivalled the fortunes of princes, and shared the privileges of the aristocracy. He would now move that the Order for the Second Reading of the Bill be discharged.

MR. GOLDSMID said, he strongly objected to the remarks which had been directed against the hon. Member for Brighton (Mr. Fawcett), and the extraordinarily inaccurate review of modern history which had just been delivered. The hon. Member for Sheffield had made his remarks without giving Notice, but the hon. Member for Brighton would remember them another day.

MR. MUNDELLA said, he gave the hon. Member for Brighton Notice on Saturday of what he intended saying on Monday; and the hon. Member thereupon remarked that he would be entitled to a reply.

MR. BRUCE thought his hon. Friend was acting judiciously in withdrawing the Bill in the present stage. As his hon. Friend had given Notice of his intention to move the discharge of the Order for the Second Reading he (Mr. Bruce) was not prepared to enter fully into the subject, nor did he think the House would expect it from him. He would ask his hon. Friend carefully to consider the matter before he accepted the suggestion of his hon. and learned Friend the Member for Frome (Mr. T. Hughes), with reference to the employment of women before and after confinement. His hon. and learned Friend the Member for Frome thought it was an omission on the part of his hon. Friend the Member for Sheffield not to have dealt with that subject. He (Mr. Bruce) doubted that. However much humanity might prompt us to provide against the employment of women before and after confinement, there was one great danger which might be incurred by making such a provision—namely, the danger of promoting infanticide. As to the death-rates in Manchester, it should be recollected that Manchester was not an exclusively manufacturing town. The population of Manchester, like that of Liverpool, was crowded upon an exceptionally small space. The hon. Member for Sheffield, in introducing the Bill, referred to a great increase of the number of accidents in factories.—[MR. MUNDELLA: Not in factories, but in the Factory Inspectar's Returns; and I asked the right hon. Gentleman to account for that.] He was happy to say that there had been no increase, but a decrease in the number of accidents. The gross number of accidents had, no doubt, increased because the number of factories had more than doubled, and the number of persons employed in factories had also doubled. He hoped that next year the House would be called upon to deal with a portion of the subject. The Bill contained valuable provisions; but was open to considerable modifications, and he hoped that it would be well considered, before being re-introduced.

Question put, and agreed to.

Main Question, by leave, withdrawn.

Bill withdrawn.

POST OFFICE—MAIL CONTRACTS
(TABLE BAY AND ZANZIBAR), AND (ZANZIBAR AND ADEN).

MR. BRUCE moved, in the absence of the CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER, That the fresh Contract for the Conveyance of the Mails between Table Bay and Zanzibar with the Union Steam Ship Company be approved.

COUNCIL BARTTELOT thought that in view of what had previously occurred on this subject, some information should be given to the House with regard to the fresh contract, before they were asked to approve it.

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER, who was now present, expressed his regret that he had been absent when the matter was called on. The statement he had to make on this subject, which he trusted would be satisfactory to the House, would be a very short one, because the question involved in it had been narrowed to a single point. The House had appointed a Committee to consider and report on the question, and that Committee had decided that it was the duty of the Government to offer the contract to the Union Steam Ship Company on reasonable terms. They did not show exactly what these reasonable terms were to be; the nature of the case, in fact, did not admit of that being done. The Government had, however, undertaken to give effect to the recommendation of the Committee in the form which it assumed, and called upon the Company to state what terms they were willing to agree to. The result was that the Company had assented to the contract price being reduced from £26,000 to £20,000 per annum. It was, of course, impossible for him to know whether that reduction would appear satisfactory to the House; but, at any rate, it could not be denied that the sum he mentioned was a considerable reduction on the terms for the conveyance of the mails between the two places mentioned in the contract. It was exceedingly desirable that the matter should be settled at once, because otherwise considerable difficulties might arise in reference to it, leading to a stoppage of the Service, which would be a matter of great public inconvenience. He might mention, in illustration of the effect the contract was likely to have, that the Company had already entered into a contract for the conveyance of 500 negroes from Zanzibar to Natal, where they would be employed as free labourers. It would be a great pity were such a promising experiment to be interrupted in consequence of delay resulting from the House refusing to approve this contract. He freely admitted that at this late period of the Session, and taking into consideration the short Notice that had been given, it would not become the Government to press the matter, even were they sure of a majority against any decided objection; but, at the same time, it would be a great misfortune if the subject were merely delayed for any other reason than a real intention to alter the terms of the contract. The Government had endeavoured to meet the wishes expressed by the Committee, and he trusted that the House would think they had succeeded in doing so. He might also mention that there would be no change in the contract to carry the mails from Zanzibar to Aden.

Motion agreed to.

Then—

Resolved, That the fresh Contract for the Conveyance of the Mails between Table Bay and Zanzibar with the Union Steam Ship Company be approved.—(Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer.)

Resolved, That the Contract for the Conveyance of Mails between Zanzibar and Aden with the British Indie Steam Navigation Company be approved.—(Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer.)

House adjourned at Seven o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS,

Tuesday, 5th August, 1878.

MINUTES.—PUBLIC BILLS—Royal Assent—Duke of Edinburgh's Annuity [36 & 37 Vict. c. 80]; Consolidated Fund (Appropriation) [36 & 37 Vict. c. 79]; Slave Trade (Consolidation) [36 & 37 Vict. c. 88]; Slave Trade (East African Courts) [36 & 37 Vict. c. 59]; Law Agents (Scotland) [36 & 37 Vict. c. 63]; Crown Private Estates [36 & 37 Vict. c. 61]; Public Schools (Eton College Property) [36 & 37 Vict. c. 62]; Extradition Act (1870) Amendment [36 & 37 Vict. c. 60]; Ecclesiastical Commissioners [36 & 37 Vict. c. 64]; Court of Queen's Bench (Ireland) (Grand Juries) [36 & 37 Vict. c. 65]; Agricultural Children [36 & 37 Vict. c. 67]; Supreme Court of Judicature [36 & 37 Vict. c. 66]; Militia (Service, &c.) [36 & 37 Vict. c. 68]; Petitions of Right (Ireland) [36 & 37 Vict. c. 69]; Revising Barristers [36 & 37 Vict. c. 70]; Salmon Fishery [36 & 37 Vict. c. 71]; Statute Law Revision [36 & 37 Vict. c. 91]; Defence Acts Amendment [36 & 37 Vict. c. 72]; Public Health Act (1872) Amendment [36 & 37 Vict. c. 73]; Expiring Laws Continuance [36 & 37 Vict. c. 75]; Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment, &c. [36 & 37 Vict. c. 86]; Endowed Schools Act (1869) Amendment [36 & 37 Vict. c. 87]; Penalties (Ireland) [36 & 37 Vict. c. 82]; Merchant Shipping Acts Amendment [36 & 37 Vict. c. 85]; Railway Regulations [36 & 37 Vict. c. 78]; Constabulary Force (Ireland) [36 & 37 Vict. c. 74]; Royal Naval Artillery Volunteer Force [36 & 37 Vict. c. 77]; Langbaugh Coroners [36 & 37 Vict. c. 81]; Sanitary Act (1866) Amendment (Ireland) [36 & 37 Vict. c. 78]; Telegraphs [36 & 37 Vict. c. 83]; Militia Pay Acts Amendment [36 & 37 Vict. c. 84]; Turnpike Acts Continuance, &c. [36 & 37 Vict. c. 90]; Gas and Water Works Facilities Act, 1870, Amendment [36 & 37 Vict. c. 89]; Elementary Education Provisional Order Confirmation (No. 1) [36 & 37 Vict. c. ccxiv]; Local Government Provisional Orders (No. 6) [36 & 37 Vict. c. ccxvi]; Metropolitan Tramways Provisional Orders [36 & 37 Vict. c. ccxv].

PROROGATION OF THE PARLIAMENT.
HER MAJESTY'S SPEECH.

The PARLIAMENT was this day prorogued by Commission.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR acquainted the House that Her Majesty had been pleased to grant two several Commissions, one for declaring Her Royal Assent to several Acts agreed upon by both Houses of Parliament, and the other for proroguing the Parliament:—And the LORDS COMMISSIONERS—namely, The LORD CHANCELLOR; The EARL GRANVILLE (Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs); The EARL GOWER;

The LORD CHAMBERLAIN OF THE HOUSEHOLD (The Viscount Sydney); and The LORD STEWARD OF THE HOUSEHOLD (The Earl of Besseborough)—being in their Robes, and seated on a Form between the Throne and the Woolsack; and the COMMONS being come, with their Speaker, and the Commission to that purpose being read, the ROYAL ASSENT was given to several Bills.

Then THE LORD CHANCELLOR delivered HER MAJESTY'S SPEECH, as follows:—

"My Lords, and Gentlemen,

" I am now released from the necessity of calling upon you for the further prosecution of your arduous occupations.

" In bidding you farewell for the recess, I make it my first duty to thank you for the loyal promptitude with which you have made further provision for my son the Duke of Edinburgh on the occasion of his approaching marriage with the Grand Duchess Marie Alexandrovna of Russia.

" This marriage will, I trust, form a new tie of amity between two great Empires.

" The best relations continue to subsist between myself and all foreign Powers.

" I am able to announce the successful termination of the Mission to Zanzibar, made known to you at the beginning of the Session. Treaties have been concluded with the Sultan of Zanzibar, with the Imam of Muscat, and with other native Powers, which will provide means for the more effectual repression of the Slave Trade on the East Coast of Africa.

" I have been enabled to bring to a satisfactory issue the Commercial negotiations with France, in which my Government has been for some time engaged. Under the provisions of an instrument signed on the 23rd of July, and awaiting ratification, the Treaties of 1860 are again put in force, with a comprehensive engagement contracted between the two countries for mutual treatment on the footing of the most favoured nation ; and the differential tax on the British flag has been removed. Separate provisions are contained in the Treaty for the adjustment of the question of mineral oils, and otherwise for the relief and extension of trade.

" I have likewise concluded Treaties of Extradition with Italy, Denmark, Sweden, and Brazil. The ratifications of the two last-named Treaties have not yet been exchanged, but I anticipate no difficulty in this final step ; and I am engaged in negotiations for agreements of a similar character with other States both in Europe and beyond it.

" I am still occupied in giving effect to those provisions of the Treaty of Washington which relate to British claims against the Government of the United States and to the interests of my Possessions in North America.

"Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

" I am very sensible of the liberality with which you have provided for the various charges of the State, and have likewise enabled me promptly to meet the obligations imposed upon me by the award of the Arbitrators at Geneva during the past year.

" My Lords, and Gentlemen,

" I have observed with satisfaction the progress you have been enabled to make in the remission of public burdens by reducing both the Sugar Duties and the Income Tax to points lower than any at which they have previously stood.

" The Act for the establishment of the Supreme Court of Judicature forms a distinguished record of your persevering labour, and will be found, as I hope, to confer corresponding benefits on the country in the more cheap, certain, expeditious, and effectual administration of justice.

" The Acts for the Amendment of the Education Act, 1870, and of the Endowed Schools Act of 1869, will, as I trust, tend to accelerate the attainment of solid national advantages through the extension of education both in the middle and the most numerous classes of the community.

" The Act relating to the Regulation of Railways and Canals promises to conduce to the more harmonious working of the Railway system of the country.

" I have with pleasure assented to the Act relating to Merchant Shipping, from which, and from the labours of the Commission recently appointed, I hope for a diminution of the risks to which the seafaring population are exposed.

" The revenue has, up to this time, fully answered my expectations ; and although the activity of trade in some of its branches may have been somewhat restrained by a variety of causes, the general condition of the people continues to exhibit evidences of improvement.

" These and all mercies of Divine Providence will, I trust, find their suitable acknowledgment alike in our words and in our hearts."

Then a Commission for proroguing the Parliament was read.

After which,

THE LORD CHANCELLOR said—

My Lords, and Gentlemen,

By virtue of Her Majesty's Commission, under the Great Seal, to us and other Lords directed, and now read, we do, in Her Majesty's Name, and in obedience to Her Commands, prorogue this Parliament to Wednesday the Twenty-second day of October next, to be then here holden; and this Parliament is accordingly prorogued to Wednesday the Twenty-second day of October next.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

Tuesday, 5th August, 1873.

MINUTES.]—PUBLIC BILL.—Withdrawn—Law of Evidence [274].

The House met at half after One of the clock.

LAW OF EVIDENCE BILL.—[BILL 274.]
(Mr. Attorney General, Mr. Solicitor General.)

SECOND READING. BILL WITHDRAWN.

Order for Second Reading read.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL moved that the Order for the Second Reading of this Bill be read, for the purpose of being discharged. He desired in making his Motion to state that he had never proposed to do more with the Bill this Session than to introduce it, print it for the consideration of Members, and, if he should have the opportunity, endeavour to pass it into law in a future Session. The Bill was one as to which he could claim but little merit; it was the work of his friend Mr. Fitzjames Stephen, whom he had been able to employ in consequence of the kind liberality of the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Motion agreed to.

Order discharged; Bill withdrawn.

CRIMINAL LAW—MIDDLESEX GRAND JURIES—QUESTION.

MR. EYKYN asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, If his attention had been called to a statement made before the Assistant Judge at the Middlesex Sessions to the effect, that a person summoned to attend as a Grand Juryman had, on stating that it was inconvenient to attend, received a reply at the office of the summoning officer, "I suppose you are a gentleman;" also an intimation that two guineas was the fee to exonerate from serving on juries?

MR. BRUCE, in reply, said, he had communicated with the Assistant Judge on the subject of the hon. Gentleman's Question, and he had informed him that there was sufficient prima facie evidence of the correctness of that statement to warrant him in instituting inquiries. Accordingly, he had instructed the county solicitor to investigate the circumstances of the case, and to take such steps as might be desirable to punish the offender.

SOUTH KENSINGTON MUSEUM.

QUESTION.

MR. GOLDSMID asked the Vice President of the Council, Whether any, and if any, what arrangements have been made to prevent the recurrence of defalcations such as occurred at South Kensington Museum two years ago?

MR. W. E. FORSTER, in reply, said, that his noble Friend (the Marquess of Ripon) and himself, after hearing of the defalcations alluded to in the Question, lost no time in taking steps to render them impossible for the future. It would be difficult to describe those steps in detail; but the result of them was that all extra receipts were paid into the Bank of England every day, and no money was drawn out of the Bank of England for the payment of wages, except on the signature of two persons, and then it was paid at once.

CRIMINAL LAW—THE WEAVERHAM COCK-FIGHTING CASE.—QUESTION.

SIR WILFRID LAWSON asked the Secretary of State for War, Whether the statement is correct which appeared in the Times of 29th July, that Colonel Peel of Hove, Brighton, gave a false name and address to the police when arrested at the "International Cock-fight;" and, whether that officer is in any way at present under the control of the military authorities; and, if so, whether any steps have been, or are about to be taken by those authorities, touching his conduct in this affair?

SIR HENRY STORKS: Sir, the officer in question is on half-pay, and therefore not subject to the Mutiny Act. The only power which can be exercised over an officer so circumstanced is, that in a very extreme case Her Majesty can be advised to dispense with his services. In the present instance attention having been drawn to the statement in question, an inquiry has been made respecting it.

THE ROYAL COMMISSION ON OFFICERS OF HER MAJESTY'S ARMY—ABOLITION OF PURCHASE.—QUESTION.

COLONEL NOBTH asked the Secretary of State for War, Whether the Commissioners about to be appointed to inquire into the grievances of the Officers of the Army will have power to examine witnesses?

SIR HENRY STORKS: Certainly; if the Commissioners deem it necessary.

CIVIL SERVICE SUPERANNUATION ACT—CASE OF MR. FREETH.
QUESTION.

MR. WATNEY asked the Junior Lord of the Treasury, Whether the 9th section of the Civil Service Superannuation Act (22 Vic. c. 26) does not, for special services, empower the Treasury to grant pensions up to the full amount of salary; and, whether the case of Mr. Freeth, whose appointment as Chief Clerk (Military Department) in the War Office has lately been abolished, does not come within this section; especially as Mr. Freeth has been recommended by His Royal Highness the General Commanding in Chief for "full pay or the highest rate of retirement to which his special services seem to justly entitle him?"

MR. W. H. GLADSTONE, in reply, said, there could be no doubt that the officer in question had discharged his duties praiseworthy. At the same time, the Treasury considered the 9th clause of the Civil Service Superannuation Act could only be applied in cases where the services were of a peculiar and unusual degree of merit. Though it was quite true that the General Commanding-in-Chief, in forwarding the case for recommendation, did make use of the term "special services," yet neither His Royal Highness nor the War Office particularized any service of such a peculiar degree of merit as to justify the Treasury in applying the section in question.

MR. WATNEY: Do I understand the hon. Gentleman to say that it is necessary for the services to be specially mentioned in order to entitle him to this pension?

MR. W. H. GLADSTONE: There is no rule to that effect.

NAVY—CHATHAM DOCKYARD—THE RIVER WALL.—QUESTION.

MR. CAWLEY asked the Surveyor General of the Ordnance, Whether the statement contained in the "Times" of Thursday last, that "a party of workmen have commenced sinking for foundations at the Gun Wharf, Chatham, to repair the river wall which recently gave way, and which will cost several thousands of pounds to repair," is true; and, if so, to what extent such wall has given away, and what is the estimated cost of its repair?

SIR HENRY STORKS: Sir, on the 15th of July last about 40 yards in length of the old Gun Wharf wall at Chatham fell into the Medway, and carried with it a small part of the wharf, built about 25 years ago. About 50 yards altogether will have to be re-built. The cause of the wharf giving away is stated to have been due to the drainage, from a large drain which runs through the wall having been impeded by a stoppage at the mouth of the drain, and a consequent accumulation of water at the back of the wall. No estimate can yet be given of the cost of re-constructing the wall. The workmen referred to in the Question of the hon. Member have been employed in examining the site preliminary to a plan and an estimate of the work of re-construction being made.

PARLIAMENTARY ELECTIONS—DECLARATION OF THE POLL.
QUESTION.

MR. MACFIE asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, If he intends to take any steps with a view to accelerating ascertainment and declaration of the results of polling in Parliamentary Elections?

MR. BRUCE: Sir, soon after the passing of the Ballot Act, the Home Department, with the assistance of my right hon. Friend the Vice President of the Council, drew up directions for the application of its provisions in a most expeditious way. I am not aware that any improvement can be made in the regulations. I shall be glad to receive any suggestions on the subject; but I would remind my hon. Friend that the casting up of the votes is a laborious task, and that the Secretary of State cannot annihilate space and time.

ARMY—PENSIONERS FROM WOOLWICH ARSENAL.—QUESTION.

MR. BOORD asked, Why men at weekly wages, who are pensioned from the Arsenal at Woolwich, are not permitted to commute their pensions in the same manner as salaried officers?

SIR HENRY STORKS: Sir, when the measures for carrying out the Act of 1869 for permitting the commutation of pensions were under consideration, it was determined that the plan should not be extended to the lower ranks of the service—such as labourers in the Government manufactories. Exception was made in favour of cases in which men of those classes were about to emigrate, and for them arrangements have been made by which their pensions may be commuted, the proceeds of such commutation being paid, not to the men, but to the Emigration Commissioners on their behalf. The Government have seen no reason to alter their views on this matter, but continue to hold the opinion that it would not be beneficial to men of these classes to be allowed to commute their pensions, except for the purposes of emigrating.

MEXICO—DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS. QUESTION.

MR. H. B. SHERIDAN asked the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, Whether any communication has been received from the Government of Mexico, or through the Representative of any friendly Power accredited to that Government, on the subject of the renewal of Diplomatic communication with this country; and, if not, whether, considering that the Government of Earl Russell refused the offer of the United States of America to settle with the English bondholders, and thereby used the debt for purposes of State, the present Government is prepared to take steps to protect the property of the English creditors in Mexico—that is to say, the Land and Customs Dues, assigned to the English bondholders, but now being used by Mexico for other financial purposes, notwithstanding such assignments?

Mr. Macfie

VISCOUNT ENFIELD: Sir, no official communication of the nature alluded to in the hon. Member's Question has been received for some time past by the Foreign Office, and in the present state of relations with Mexico Her Majesty's Government are not prepared to take any steps with that country in reference to British claims of any kind.

PATENT RIGHTS—INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE, VIENNA.—QUESTION.

MR. MACFIE asked the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, Whether he has seen the following statement which appeared in the Continental telegrams to-day:—

"Vienna, Aug. 4.—The first International Patent Congress was opened to-day. The official representatives of the various Governments present were:—England—Mr. T. Webster."

Whether it is or is not correct that Mr. Webster represents the Government of this country; and, if not, whether the Under Secretary does not think it expedient to take means to prevent other misapprehensions that must ensue from that learned Gentleman being received, and his part in the proceedings seeming entitled to be recognized as more than the facts of the case warranted?

VISCOUNT ENFIELD, in reply, said, that he had no reason to believe that Mr. Webster was officially authorized to represent the Patent Law Commission at the International Patent Law Congress at Vienna. He had no doubt that misapprehension on the subject would be avoided by the hon. Member having called attention to the subject.

IRELAND—DUNDALK MAGISTRACY. MOTION FOR CORRESPONDENCE.

MR. CALLAN moved for a Copy of Correspondence, and all Documents connected therewith, between the Lord Chancellor of Ireland, his Lordship's Secretaries, and Mr. Callan, M.P., and E. H. MacArdle, esquire, between the 23rd day of December 1868 and the 31st day of July 1869, with respect to the filling up of a vacancy on the Dundalk Bench of Magistrates, by the appointment of the Chairman of the Town Commissioners thereto. The hon. Member said, that as he understood that his Motion would be opposed by the Government, he must very briefly explain the facts. In 1868 there was a vacancy in the Dundalk bench of magistrates for the county of Louth, and he (Mr. Callan) having been recently elected Member for that borough, was requested by a large number of residents to apply to the Lord Chancellor of Ireland for the appointment of Mr. Edward Henry MacArdle, of Cambrickille, to the magistracy. This he (Mr. Callan) did; but received a reply from the Lord Chancellor's secretary, informing him that according to usage the application should, in the first instance, be made to the Lord Lieutenant of the county. He accordingly applied to the Lord Lieutenant, Lord Rathdonnell; and received from that nobleman a curt refusal, no reason or cause being assigned. This ungracious refusal excited much surprise and indignation; and a Memorial was in a few days presented to the Lord Chancellor, stating—"That Mr. MacArdle had for ten successive years been unanimously elected Chairman of the Dundalk Town Commissioners, during which period he had acted as borough magistrate efficiently, and with satisfaction both to the public and the authorities, and that from his general knowledge and great experience the memorialists felt confident that he would discharge the duties incident to the commission of the peace with credit to himself and advantage to the public."

That Memorial was signed by the most rev. Dr. Kieran, the Archbishop of Armagh, Primate of Ireland, the Member for the borough, and the only two Catholic as well as Liberal magistrates on the Dundalk bench; and the appointment of Mr. MacArdle was advocated by other local authorities, and by the public Press, Liberal as well as Tory. A correspondence with the Lord Chancellor ensued; and in the result the Lord Chancellor, in the exercise of his discretion, sent to Mr. MacArdle the usual documents to be filled up, which were ordinarily trans-mited by the Lord Lieutenant of the county. Then came the delay and the hesitation of which he (Mr. Callan) complained. The Lord Chancellor plainly shewed that his hesitation arose from no scruple as to overruling the decision of the Lord Lieutenant of the county—other influences came into action, in which Lord Rathdonnell was not concerned—influences the nature of which he would much prefer should be explained in the words of the Lord Chancellor than by any words of his own.

Motion made, and Question proposed,

"That there be laid before this House, a Copy of Correspondence, and all Documents connected therewith, between the Lord Chancellor of Ireland, his Lordship's Secretaries, and Mr. Callan, M.P., and E. H. MacArdle, esquire, between the 23rd day of December 1868 and the 31st day of July 1869, with respect to the filling up of a vacancy on the Dundalk Bench of Magistrates, by the appointment of the Chairman of the Town Commissioners thereto."—(Mr. Callan.)

MR. BRUCE (for the Marquess of Hartington) said, that the communications referred to in the Motion were of a confidential nature, and such as it was not usual to produce, and he must therefore oppose the Motion.

Motion, by leave, withdrawn.

COUNTIES, IRELAND (LORD LIEUTENANTS AND MAGISTRATES).

MOTION FOR A RETURN.

MR. CALLAN moved—

"That there be laid before the House, a Return, as per annexed form, as to each county in Ireland stating the name of Lieutenant and date of his appointment as such; names of the local Magistracy with dates of appointment, distinguishing resident from non-resident, and amount of property for which each Magistrate appears rated for the relief of the poor as Occupier and as Immediate Lessor, and stating whether usually resident or non-resident in County, in a tabular form."

His object in moving for this Return was to obtain the information with respect to counties in Ulster, and more especially as affecting the county of Louth. More than three years since, the then Chief Secretary for Ireland stated, in answer to a Question which he (Mr. Callan) had considered it his duty to put—

"That every influence would be used by the Government to have advantage taken of all fair and proper opportunities to reduce the inequalities admitted to exist in the undue disproportion of Protestants to Catholics on the magisterial bench."

And within the last few days the noble Marquess the Chief Secretary for Ireland, whom he regretted not to see in his place, stated that the promised revision had been completed in 26 counties in Ireland, including the county of Louth; and the noble Marquess took the opportunity of making a statement, not on his own authority, but on that of the Lord Chancellor of Ireland—“That every opportunity had been taken to remove the inequality existing between the Catholics and Protestants, so far at least as the landed property of Catholics would permit, and that there was no dissatisfaction in Ireland with regard to magisterial appointments, save amongst those—including himself—who had not been appointed to the Commission of the Peace.” With regard to the dissatisfaction alleged to exist, he held in his hand a letter from one of the ablest, as he was one of the most retiring and unassuming, Bishops of his Church (the Bishop of Clogher). His Lordship wrote—

“May your efforts prove effectual in causing some improvement of our magisterial condition. I have long believed, and often said, that we, in this province especially, are but half emancipated as long as our magisterial courts are constituted as they are. We are ever made to feel that all the penalties of the law are for us, and all its loop-holes for others. One section of the community feels that it cannot exercise its lawful privileges with safety, whilst another section feels it may defy the law, and violate it with impunity.”

He would content himself with referring to one official document—the Report of the Commissioners of Enquiry held at Dungarvan in 1871, which recommended that where there was no Catholic qualified for the Commission of the Peace, a resident Catholic magistrate should be appointed; and the Lord Chancellor in transmitting this Report to the Lord Lieutenant pointed out that there were places, especially in the North of Ireland, where there was none or a very inadequate representation of Catholics on the bench, and recommended that wherever there was fit and competent persons their appointment should certainly take place. Now, in the county of Louth, where he (Mr. Callan) resided, out of a population of 70,000, 64,000 were Catholics; but out of a magistracy numbering 56 there were only 8 resident Catholics; and of 10 petty sessions benches, there were 5 on which there was not a single Catholic magistrate. Yet the House had Returns of the property qualification of the Catholic gentlemen of the county, which would well bear comparison with that of any other gentlemen on the Commission, and who were personally as well qualified in every respect. It might be, and indeed it had been said, that the present Chancellor had, in a great measure, reduced the inequalities existing in other places. He (Mr. Callan) held a Return, extracted from the records of the Hanover Office, Ireland, from which it appeared that since the appointment of the present Chancellor, there had been 17 appointments to the magisterial bench in the county of Antrim, of whom only 1 was a Catholic; in Armagh, 16, of whom only 2 were Catholics; in Cavan, 13, of whom but 4 were Catholics; in Donegal, 19, of whom only 2 were Catholics; in Down, 33, of whom but 4 were Catholics; in Fermanagh, 9, of whom not even 1 was Catholic; in Londonderry, 20 Protestants; and only 1 Catholic; in Monaghan, 10, of whom 2 only were Catholics; in Tyrone, 17 Protestants; and only 1 Catholic. It was clear, then, that since the present Lord Chancellor came into office, instead of reducing the inequalities complained of, he had in reality considerably increased them. He therefore considered himself justified in moving for the Return.

MR. BRUCE said, that the Return would be entirely useless. The hon. Member seemed to imagine that a magistrate must have his qualification in the county for which he was acting. But this was not so—a qualification would enable a magistrate to act in one county as well as in another. A magistrate might become non-resident in the county for which he was originally appointed; but his qualification would enable him to act in the county in which he became resident. Moreover, rateable property was not the only qualification for a justice of the peace. It was clear that the Return was one which ought not to be granted.

MR. NEWDEGATE objected to the Return on the ground that it raised a new qualification. The inference would be drawn that Roman Catholics were excluded from the magistracy on account of their religion, and that the Lord Chancellor ought to appoint a certain number of Roman Catholics, whether they were qualified or not.

Mr. VANCE said, that anyone acquainted with Ireland could vouch for the fact that there was no disposition on the part of the Irish Executive to make any distinction in the appointment of magistrates on account of creed. If Roman Catholic gentlemen were qualified by property and station for the commission of the peace, it was quite a mistake to suppose that there was the least desire to exclude them.

Mr. CALLAN said, that at this time last Session the hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Whalley) was adopting a similar line of argument to that now put forth by the hon. Member for North Warwickshire. That hon. Member was said to be at present on his way to America; but his mantle appeared to have fallen on the shoulders of his fides Achates, the hon. Member for North Warwickshire (Mr. Newdegate). But the hon. Member was entirely mistaken in supposing that the Return moved for "would give a new qualification." The Return did not ask for the slightest information on the question of religion—it was intended to meet the assertion of the Chief Secretary for Ireland—

"That all fair and proper opportunities had been taken to reduce the inequalities that had existed in the undue disproportion of Protestants to Catholics on the magisterial bench."

That assertion, he was certain, had never been tested by the noble Marquess, who in making it had been merely the mouth-piece of the Lord Chancellor of Ireland. He had already shown by the condition of the county of Louth how far that was from being the fact. He could now state that in Fermanagh, which had a Catholic population of 51,756, there was but one Catholic magistrate, and he was non-resident; while the Protestant population of 40,932 had no fewer than 86 Protestant magistrates. He had no doubt whatever that the failure of the Lord Chancellor of Ireland to purge the magisterial bench of prejudice and partizanship, and to confer the commission of the peace on men linked to the great body of the people by the sympathy of a common faith, had done much to create dissatisfaction, and had caused the Irish Executive to be as unpopular in Ireland as the conduct of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, during the Session, had tended to make the Government in England.

Mr. MONTAGU CHAMBERS said, the House would very shortly be summoned to "another place," and he deprecated a division which might occur at an awkward moment.

Motion negatived.

PROROGATION OF THE PARLIAMENT.

Message to attend The LORDS COMMIS-SIONERS:—

The House went:—and a Royal Commission to that purpose having been read, the Royal Assent was given to several Bills.

And afterwards Her Majesty's Most Gracious Speech was delivered to both Houses of Parliament by The Lord High Chancellor, in pursuance of Her Majesty's Command.

Then a Commission for proroguing the Parliament was read.

After which,

THE LORD CHANCELLOR said—

My Lords, and Gentlemen,

By virtue of Her Majesty's Commission, under the Great Seal, to us and other Lords directed, and now read, we do, in Her Majesty's Name, and in obedience to Her Commands, prorogue this Parliament to Wednesday the Twenty-second day of October next, to be then here holden; and this Parliament is accordingly prorogued to Wednesday the Twenty-second day of October next.

[TABLE OF STATUTES.

THE EFFECT OF THE LIGHT

ON THE GROWTH OF ZEIN

BY J. R. HARRIS, C. E. COOPER, AND D. M. HORNIG

DEPARTMENT OF ZEPHYRUS AND PLANT PHYSIOLOGY

UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO, TORONTO, CANADA

CONTENTS

INTRODUCTION
EXPERIMENTAL MATERIAL
METHODS RESULTS DISCUSSION

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS
REFERENCES

APPENDIX
TABLE I
TABLE II

APPENDIX
TABLE III
TABLE IV

APPENDIX
TABLE V
TABLE VI

APPENDIX
TABLE VII
TABLE VIII

A

TABLE OF ALL THE STATUTES
PASSED IN THE FIFTH SESSION OF
THE TWENTIETH PARLIAMENT OF THE UNITED KINGDOM
OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND.

36 & 37 VICTORIA.—A.D. 1873.

PUBLIC GENERAL ACTS.

- |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| 1. An Act for legalizing certain Marriages solemnized in Cove Chapel in Pitt Portion in the parish of Tiverton, Devon.                                                                                                                                                                                                                   | 11. An Act for the Regulation of Her Majesty's Royal Marine Forces while on shore.                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
| 2. An Act to make special provisions in relation to the Constitution of certain Polling Districts at Parliamentary Elections in Ireland.                                                                                                                                                                                                 | 12. An Act to amend the Law as to the Custody of Infants.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
| 3. An Act to apply certain sums out of the Consolidated Fund to the service of the years ending the thirty-first day of March one thousand eight hundred and seventy-two, one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, and one thousand eight hundred and seventy-four.                                                                 | 13. An Act to discontinue the Office of Special Commissioners of Salmon Fisheries in England.                                                                                                                                                                                            |
| 4. An Act to confirm an Agreement for a Lease by the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Works and Public Buildings to the Governors and Proprietors of King's College, London, of a piece of land on the Victoria Embankment annexed to Somerset House, and to give the said Commissioners further powers of leasing the said piece of land. | 14. An Act to repeal the Acts relating to the Harbour of Portpatrick in Scotland, and to vest the Lighthouse of Portpatrick in the Commissioners of Northern Lighthouses.                                                                                                                |
| 5. An Act to extend the time for the Epping Forest Commissioners to make their final report.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             | 15. An Act to amend the New Zealand Roads, &c. Loan Act, 1870.                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
| 6. An Act to enable Her Majesty by Order in Council to annex the Turks and Caicos Islands to the Colony of Jamaica.                                                                                                                                                                                                                      | 16. An Act to amend the Law relating to Marriages in Ireland in certain cases.                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
| 7. An Act to enlarge the time within which an Address by either House of Parliament against certain Schemes made under the Endowed Schools Act, 1869, may be presented to Her Majesty.                                                                                                                                                   | 17. An Act to provide for the Redemption or Commutation of the Dividend on the Capital Stock of the East India Company; and for the transfer of the Security Fund of the India Company to the Secretary of State in Council of India, and for the Dissolution of the East India Company. |
| 8. An Act to make provision for the Assessment of Income Tax, and as to Assessors in the Metropolis.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     | 18. An Act to grant certain Duties of Customs and Inland Revenue, and to alter other Duties.                                                                                                                                                                                             |
| 9. An Act to amend the Bastardy Laws.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    | 19. An Act for making better provision for the management in certain cases of Lands allotted under Local Acts of Inclosure for the benefit of the Poor.                                                                                                                                  |
| 10. An Act for punishing Mutiny and Desertion, and for the better payment of the Army and their Quarters.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                | 20. An Act for legalizing Marriages solemnized in Fulford Chapel, in the Parish of Stone, Staffordshire.                                                                                                                                                                                 |
|                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          | 21. An Act to abolish Tests in Trinity College and the University of Dublin.                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
|                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          | 22. An Act to amend the Law with respect to Customs Duties in the Australian Colonies.                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
|                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          | 23. An Act to amend the Law relating to the grant of Superannuation Allowances and Gratuities to certain persons who entered the                                                                                                                                                         |

[A.D. 1873.]

TABLE OF THE STATUTES.

[36 &amp; 37 VICT.]

- permanent Civil Service of the State between the passing of the Superannuation Act, 1859, and the fourth day of June one thousand eight hundred and seventy.
24. An Act to continue The Peace Preservation (Ireland) Act, 1870, and The Protection of Life and Property in certain Parts of Ireland Act, 1871.
25. An Act for legalizing Marriages solemnized in Gretton Chapel, in the Parish of Winchcombe, Gloucestershire.
26. An Act to apply the sum of Twelve million Pounds out of the Consolidated Fund to the service of the year ending the thirty-first day of March one thousand eight hundred and seventy-four.
27. An Act to amend the Law relating to Juries in Ireland.
28. An Act to render valid Marriages heretofore solemnized in the Chapel of Ease called "Saint John the Evangelist" Chapel, Eton, in the Parish of Eton, in the County of Buckingham.
29. An Act to alter the Duties of Customs upon Sugar in the Isle of Man.
30. An Act to amend the Law of Registration in Ireland so far as relates to the year one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, and for other purposes relating thereto.
31. An Act to extend to Suits for Nullity of Marriage the Law with respect to the Intervention of Her Majesty's Proctor and others in Suits in England for dissolving Marriages.
32. An Act to enable the Secretary of State in Council of India to raise Money in the United Company for the Service of the Government of India.
33. An Act to facilitate the Proof of Byelaws and Proceedings of Municipal Corporations in England and Wales.
34. An Act to amend an Act passed in a session held in the sixth and seventh years of the reign of King William the Fourth, chapter one hundred and sixteen, intituled An Act to consolidate and amend the Laws relating to the Presentation of Public Money by Grand Juries in Ireland.
35. An Act to amend the Law relating to Securities for Loans contracted by County Authorities.
36. An Act for making provision as to certain portions of Her Majesty's Woods, Forests, and Land Revenues, and for other purposes relating thereto.
37. An Act to amend the Law relating to Fairs in England and Wales.
38. An Act to amend an Act passed in the fifth year of the reign of His Majesty George the Fourth, chapter eighty-three, intituled "An Act for the punishment of idle and disorderly persons and rogues and vagabonds in that part of Great Britain called England," and to repeal "The Vagrant Act Amendment Act, 1868."
39. An Act to amend the Act of the third and fourth years of Victoria, chapter one hundred and thirteen, for the Regulation of Cathedrals, and to facilitate the Endowment of Canonries by private benefaction.
40. An Act to authorise the acquisition and appropriation by the Metropolitan Board of Works of certain land reclaimed from the River Thames in pursuance of the Thames Embankment Act, 1862.
41. An Act to amend the Public Schools Act, 1868, as to the Property of Shrewsbury and Harrow Schools.
42. An Act for amending the Tithe Commutation Acts with respect to Market Gardens.
43. An Act to enable Indian Railway Companies to issue and register Shares and Securities in India.
44. An Act to facilitate the payment of certain annuities for life or years payable by the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt.
45. An Act to authorise the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury to guarantee the payment of a loan to be raised by the Government of Canada for the construction of public works in that country, and to repeal the Canada Defences Loan Act, 1870.
46. An Act to afford facilities for the Transfer to the Grand Juries of the counties of Cork and Waterford of the Bridge across the River Blackwater, near the town of Youghal; and for other purposes relating thereto.
47. An Act to amend an Act passed in the session of Parliament held in the thirtieth and thirty-first years of the reign of Her present Majesty, intituled "An Act to authorise the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury to compound the public debt due by the Commissioners of the bridge across the River Blackwater, near the town of Youghal, in the County of Cork, and for the transfer of the said bridge to the Grand Juries of the counties of Cork and Waterford; and for other purposes relating thereto."
48. An Act to make better provision for carrying into effect the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1864, and for other purposes connected therewith.
49. An Act to authorise Advances to the Public Works Loan Commissioners for enabling them to make Loans to School Boards in pursuance of the Elementary Education Act, 1870, and to Sanitary Authorities in Pursuance of the Public Health Act, 1872.
50. An Act to afford further facilities for the Conveyance of Land for Sites for Places of Religious Worship and for Burial Places.
51. An Act to amend the Law relating to the Superannuation of Prison Officers in Ireland.
52. An Act for the Relief of Widows and Children of Intestates where the personal estate is of small value.
53. An Act to make better provision respecting certain sums payable to Schoolmasters of Highland Schools under the Act of the session of the first and second years of the reign of Her present Majesty, chapter eighty-seven, intituled "An Act to facilitate the foundation and endowment of additional Schools in Scotland."
54. An Act to raise the sum of one million six hundred thousand pounds sterling by Exchequer Bonds for the service of the year ending on the thirty-first day of March one thousand eight hundred and seventy-four.
55. An Act to amend the Medical Acts so far as relates to the University of London.
56. An Act to reduce the Limit of the available Balance of the Treasury Chest Fund.

[35 & 37 VICT.]

PUBLIC GENERAL ACTS.

[A.D. 1873.]

57. An Act to make provision for the Redemption of divers permanent Charges on the Consolidated Fund, and on the Votes of Parliament.
58. An Act for making provision for facilitating the Manoeuvres of Troops, to be assembled during the ensuing Autumn.
59. An Act for regulating and extending the Jurisdiction in matters connected with the Slave Trade of the Vice-Admiralty Court at Aden, and of Her Majesty's Consuls under Treaties with the Sovereigns of Zanzibar, Muscat, and Madagascar, and under future Treaties.
60. An Act to amend the Extradition Act, 1870.
61. An Act to explain and amend the Crown Private Estates Act, 1862.
62. An Act to amend section twenty-four of the Public Schools Act, 1868, with respect to the property of Eton College.
63. An Act to amend the Law relating to Law Agents practising in Scotland.
64. An Act for amending the Ecclesiastical Commissioners Acts, 1840 and 1850, and for other purposes.
65. An Act to regulate the summoning of Grand Juries in the Court of Queen's Bench in Ireland.
66. An Act for the constitution of a Supreme Court, and for other purposes relating to the better Administration of Justice in England; and to authorise the transfer to the Appellate Division of such Supreme Court of the Jurisdiction of the Judicial Committee of Her Majesty's Privy Council.
67. An Act to regulate the Employment of Children in Agriculture.
68. An Act for extending the Period of Service in the Militia; and for other purposes.
69. An Act to provide for proceeding on Petitions of Right in the Courts of Law and Equity in Ireland.
70. An Act to amend the Law relating to the appointment of Rovising Barristers and the holding of Revision Courts.
71. An Act to amend the Law relating to Salmon Fisheries in England and Wales.
72. An Act for the Amendment of the Defence Acts, 1842 and 1860.
73. An Act to amend so much of section four of the Public Health Act, 1872, as relates to the Cambridge Commissioners.
74. An Act to amend the Laws relating to the Pay of the Royal Irish Constabulary.
75. An Act to continue various expiring Laws.
76. An Act to make further Provision for the Regulation of Railways.
77. An Act to provide for the establishment of a Royal Naval Artillery Volunteer Force.
78. An Act to amend the Sanitary Act, 1866, so far as the same relates to the Nuisance Authorities of Ports in Ireland.
79. An Act to apply a sum out of the Consolidated Fund to the service of the year ending the thirty-first day of March one thousand eight hundred and seventy-four, and to appropriate the Supplies granted in this Session of Parliament.
80. An Act to enable Her Majesty to provide for the Establishment of His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh and Her Imperial Highness the Grand Duchess Marie Alexandrovna of Russia; and to settle an annuity on Her Imperial Highness.
81. An Act to authorise the division of the Wapentake of Langbaugh in the county of York into Districts for the purpose of Coroners jurisdiction, and the appointment of additional Coroners for the said Wapentake.
82. An Act to amend the Law relating to Small Penalties in Ireland.
83. An Act for explaining the Telegraph Acts, 1868 to 1871, and for enabling a further Sum to be raised for the purposes of the said Acts and of the Pensions Commutation Act, 1872.
84. An Act to explain the Militia Pay Acts, 1868 and 1869, and to facilitate the sale of property held for Militia purposes.
85. An Act to amend the Merchant Shipping Acts.
86. An Act to amend the Elementary Education Act (1870), and for other purposes connected therewith.
87. An Act to continue and amend the Endowed Schools Act, 1869.
88. An Act for consolidating with Amendments the Acts for carrying into effect Treaties for the more effectual Suppression of the Slave Trade, and for other purposes connected with the Slave Trade.
89. An Act to extend and amend the provisions of the Gas and Water Works Facilities Act, 1870.
90. An Act to continue certain Turnpike Acts in Great Britain, to repeal certain other Turnpike Acts, and for other purposes connected therewith.
91. An Act for further promoting the Revision of the Statute Law by repealing certain Enactments which have ceased to be in force or have become unnecessary.

The Acts contained in the following List, being PUBLIC ACTS of a Local Character, are placed amongst the LOCAL AND PERSONAL ACTS.

- i. An Act to confirm certain Provisional Orders of the Local Government Board relating to the Districts of Bishop Auckland, Bristol, Cardiff, Ealing, Idle, Lincoln, Newport in Monmouthshire, Warrington, Wigan, and Wrexham.
- ii. An Act to confirm Provisional Orders under "The Drainage and Improvement of Lands Act (Ireland), 1863," and the Acts amending the same, relating to Mulkear River and Kil-dare Drainage Districts.
- xv. An Act to confirm a Provisional Order under "The Drainage and Improvement of Lands (Ireland) Act, 1863," and the Acts amending the same, relating to Lough Oughter and River Erne Drainage District.
- xvii. An Act to confirm a Provisional Order made by the Education Department under "The Elementary Education Act, 1870," to enable the School Board for the parish of Caterham to put in force "The Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845," and the Acts amending the same.
- xviii. An Act to confirm a Provisional Order made by the Education Department under "The Elementary Education Act, 1870," to enable the School Board for London to put in force "The Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845," and the Acts amending the same.
- xxiv. An Act to confirm a Provisional Order under "The Land Drainage Act, 1861," relating to Deeping Fen.
- xlii. An Act for confirming certain Provisional Orders made by the Board of Trade under The Gas and Water Works Facilities Act, 1870, relating to Abersychan Gas, Ilford Gas, Leominster Gas, Oakengates and St. George's Gas, Redditch Gas, Canterbury Water, Caterham Water, Denbigh Water, Maidstone Water, and Weston-super-Mare Water.
- lx. An Act to confirm a Provisional Order made by the Local Government Board for Ireland relating to the town and borough of Wexford.
- lxii. An Act to confirm an Order made by the Board of Trade under The Sea Fisheries Act, 1868, relating to Bosham.
- lxiii. An Act for confirming certain Provisional Orders made by the Board of Trade under The General Pier and Harbour Act, 1861, relating to Bouldnor, Broadstairs, East Loch Tarbert, Felixstowe, Filey, Fishguard, Fraserburgh, Ilfracombe, Lochaline, Newlyn, and Sandhaven.
- lxxxi. An Act for confirming certain Provisional Orders made by the Board of Trade under The Gas and Water Works Facilities Act, 1870, relating to Fleetwood Gas, Mid-somer Norton Gas, Holywell Water, and Monmouth Gas and Water.
- lxxxii. An Act to confirm certain Provisional Orders of the Local Government Board relating to the Districts of Buxton, Clayton, Crewe, Hitchin, Idle, Leyton, Nottingham (two), Shanklin, Walthamstow, Wedlingborough, and Wimbledon.
- lxxxiii. An Act to confirm two Provisional Orders made by the Local Government Board under "The Poor Law Amendment Act, 1867," with reference to the city of Coventry in the county of Warwick and the parishes of Mid Leamant and East Leamant in the county of Sussex, respectively.
- lxxxiv. An Act to confirm a Provisional Certificate made by the Board of Trade under The Railways Construction Facilities Act, 1864, and The Railways (Powers and Construction) Acts 1864, Amendment Act, 1870, for the incorporation of the Widnes Railway Company, and for the construction of the Widnes Railway.
- lxxxv. An Act for confirming certain Provisional Orders made by the Board of Trade under The Tramways Act, 1870," for the construction of the Common Road Conveyance Tramway, Kew and Richmond Tramway, Southall, Ealing, and Shepherd's Bush Tramway, and Uxbridge and Southall and Ealing and Brentford Tramway.
- lxxxvi. An Act to confirm a Scheme under "The Metropolitan Commons Act, 1866," relating to Tooting Beck Common.
- lxxxvii. An Act to confirm a Provisional Order made by the Education Department under "The Elementary Education Act, 1870," to enable the School Board for the parish of Llanrwst to put in force "The Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845," and the Acts amending the same.
- lxxxviii. An Act to confirm a Provisional Order made by the Education Department under "The Elementary Education Act, 1870," to enable the School Board for the parish of Llanelli, Carmarthen, to put in force "The Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845," and the Acts amending the same.
- lxxxix. An Act to confirm a Provisional Order made by the Education Department under "The Elementary Education Act, 1870," to enable the School Board for the parish of Merthyr Tydfil to put in force "The Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845," and the Acts amending the same.
- cxi. An Act to confirm certain Provisional Orders of the Local Government Board relating to the Districts of Buxton, Carnarvon, Ealing, Pontypridd, Ravensthorpe, Reading (two), Shipley, Teignmouth, Wheathampstead, Wisbeach and Walsoken (two).
- cxi. An Act to confirm certain Provisional Orders of the Local Government Board relating to the Districts of Baldersby, Bristol, Buxton, Dawlish, Nelson, and Wellington in the county of Somerset.
- cxcvii. An Act for confirming certain Provisional Orders made by the Board of Trade under The Tramways Act, 1870, relating to Cardiff, Dewsbury, Batley, and Birstal, Felixstowe and Fagbrough Cliff, Ipswich and Felix-

[36 & 37 VICT.]

PUBLIC GENERAL ACTS.

[A.D. 1878]

- stowe, Leicester, Middlebrough and Stockton, Neath and District, and Newport (Monmouthshire).
cxcviii. An Act to confirm a Provisional Order under "The Drainage and Improvement of Lands (Ireland) Act, 1863," and the Acts amending the same, relating to Upper Gully River Drainage District, Queen's County.
cxix. An Act to confirm a Provisional Order made by the Local Government Board for Ireland concerning the Local Government of the Borough of Belfast.
cxxiv. An Act to confirm a Provisional Order made by the Education Department under "The Elementary Education Act, 1870," to enable the School Board for London to put in force "The Lands Clauses Consolidation Act 1845," and the Acts amending the same.
cav. An Act for confirming certain Provisional Orders made by the Board of Trade under the Tramways Act, 1870, for the construction of the London Street Tramways (Saint Pancras Lines), Metropolitan Street Tramways (Extensions), Pimlico, Peckham, and Greenwich Street Tramways (Extensions), and West London Tramways.
cxvi. An Act to confirm certain Provisional Orders of the Local Government Board relating to the districts of Ashbourne, Bury St. Edmunds, Epping, Fenton, Richmond (Surrey), Shipley, Stoke, Tong Street, and Ventnor.

LOCAL ACTS.

The Titles to which the Letter P. is prefixed are Public Acts of a Local Character.

- |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| P. i. An Act to confirm certain Provisional Orders of the Local Government Board relating to the Districts of Bishop Auckland, Bristol, Cardiff, Ealing, Idle, Lincoln, Newport in Monmouthshire, Warrington, Wigton, and Wrington. P. ii. An Act to confirm Provisional Orders under "The Drainage and Improvement of Lands Act (Ireland), 1863," and the Acts amending the same, relating to Mulkear River and Kildare Drainage Districts. iii. An Act for amending and extending Enactments relating to the Company of Proprietors of the Sheffield Waterworks; and for other purposes. iv. An Act for better supplying with Water Grantham and its neighbourhood, in the county of Lincoln. v. An Act to grant further powers to the King's Lynn Dock Company; and for other purposes. vi. An Act to enable the Vestry of Saint Mary-lebone to grant a Lease of, and otherwise deal with, Surplus Lands acquired by them in making Street Improvements. vii. An Act for amending and extending the Thames Embankment Acts, 1863 and 1864; and for other purposes. viii. An Act to enable the Manchester and Milford Railway Company to construct a Branch Railway to Devil's Bridge; and for other purposes. ix. An Act for making Provision for Administration of the Reserved Fund of the European Assurance Society; and for other purposes. x. An Act to authorise the Town Council of the Burgh of Montrose to sell, fow, or lease the South Links; and for other purposes. xi. An Act for granting further Powers to the Leicester Gas Company. xii. An Act for making and maintaining a Bridge across the River Severn at Shrewsbury, with Approaches thereto; and for other purposes. xiii. An Act to authorise the construction of a Dock at South Alloa, in the county of Stirling; and for other purposes. xiv. An Act to authorise the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Company to make Branch Railways to Chatham Dockyard; and for other purposes. P. xv. An Act to confirm a Provisional Order under "The Drainage and Improvement of Lands (Ireland) Act, 1863," and the Acts amending the same, relating to Lough Dugha and River Erne Drainage District. | xvi. An Act for transferring the Undertaking of the Company of Proprietors of the Tavistock Canal to the Duke of Bedford; and for other purposes. xvii. An Act for vesting the undertaking of the Chesterfield Market Company in the Corporation of Chesterfield; and for other purposes. xviii. An Act for incorporating and conferring Powers on the Pontefract, Tinsley, and Castleton Gas Company. xix. An Act to authorise the Wakefield Waterworks Company to make a new reservoir, and to raise more money; and for other purposes. xx. An Act for extending the Limits within which the Derby Waterworks Company may supply Water; and for empowering them to construct additional Works and to raise additional Capital; and for other purposes. xxi. An Act for dissolving the Chigwell and Woodford Bridge Gas Company [Limited], and for incorporating and conferring powers on the Chigwell, Loughton, and Woodford Gas Company; and for other purposes. P. xxii. An Act to confirm a Provisional Order made by the Education Department under "The Elementary Education Act, 1870," to enable the School Board for the parish of Caterham to put in force "The Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845," and the Acts amending the same. P. xxiii. An Act to confirm a Provisional Order made by the Education Department under "The Elementary Education Act, 1870," to enable the School Board for London to put in force "The Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845," and the Acts amending the same. P. xxiv. An Act to confirm a Provisional Order under "The Land Drainage Act, 1881," relating to Deeping Fen. xxv. An Act for making a railway from the Tiverton Junction Station of the Bristol and Exeter Railway to near Hemyock, all in the County of Devon, to be called the Culm Valley Light Railway; and for other purposes. xxvi. An Act to enable the Brighton Aquarium Company to raise additional Capital. xxvii. An Act for incorporating and conferring Powers on the Blackpool Sea Water Company. xxviii. An Act for incorporating and granting powers to the Aberystwyth Gas Company to enable them to supply with gas the borough of Aberystwyth and its neighbourhood; and for other purposes. |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|

- xxix. An Act to incorporate a Company for supplying with Water the City of Chichester and certain Parishes and Places adjacent thereto, in the County of Sussex.
- xxx. An Act for granting additional powers to the Australian Agricultural Company, and for amending the Acts relating to that Company; and for other purposes.
- xxxi. An Act relating to the leasing of part of the Glebe Lands of the Rectory of Penshurst in the County of Kent.
- xxxii. An Act to enable the Swansea Harbour Trustees to raise a further sum of money for the purposes of their Undertaking; and for other purposes.
- xxxiii. An Act to authorise the Neath New Gas Company to raise additional capital, and for other purposes.
- xxxiv. An Act for rendering valid certain Letters Patent granted to Benjamin Joseph Barnard Mills for Improvements in the Manufacture of Boots and Shoes and in Machinery employed therein.
- xxxv. An Act for conferring further powers upon the Sevenoaks, Maidstone, and Tunbridge Railway Company for the construction of Works, and otherwise in relation to their undertaking; and for other purposes.
- xxxvi. An Act to extend the time for the construction of Works authorised by "The Glasgow Corporation Waterworks Amendment Act, 1866," and to abandon part of the Works; and for other purposes.
- xxxvii. An Act for conferring additional powers on the Glasgow and South-western Railway Company for the construction of railways and works and the acquisition of lands; for defining their capital; and for other purposes connected with their undertaking.
- xxxviii. An Act to enable the Board of Police of Glasgow to make and maintain new streets and other improvements in the city of Glasgow.
- xxxix. An Act for making a new Road or Street in substitution for a portion of the Athkynshead Road, in the parish of Govan and county of Lanark; for discontinuing as a public thoroughfare the said portion of road; and for other purposes.
- x. An Act to amend and enlarge some of the Powers and Provisions of the Acts relating to the South Eastern Railway Company.
- xli. An Act to revive and extend some of the Powers of the Worcester, Bromyard, and Leominster Railway Company.
- P. xlii. An Act for confirming certain Provisional Orders made by the Board of Trade under The Gas and Water Works/Facilities Act, 1870, relating to Abercychan Gas, Ilford Gas, Leominster Gas, Oakengates and St. George's Gas, Redditch Gas, Canterbury Water, Caterham Water, Denbigh Water, Maldstone Water, and Weston-super-Mare Water.
- xliii. An Act to confirm an Agreement between the Cape Railway Company and the Local Government of the Cape of Good Hope for the sale and transfer of the Company's undertaking, and to provide for the winding-up of the affairs of the Company; and for other purposes.
- lv. An Act for authorising the Rhymney Railway Company to abandon their Caerphilly
- Rumney Branch Railway, and to raise further moneys; and for other purposes.
- lv. An Act to empower the Grand Junction Waterworks Company to acquire additional lands in the parish of Hampton.
- lvii. An Act for granting further powers to the Bristol and Portishead Pier and Railway Company.
- lviii. An Act to authorise the Local Board of Health for the District of Burley to construct Waterworks and supply Water within their District, and to purchase certain existing Waterworks; and for other purposes.
- lviii. An Act for making a Railway in the county of Cumberland, to be called the Ravenglass and Eskdale Railway; and for other purposes.
- lxix. An Act to enable the Dock Company at Kingston-upon-Hull to raise additional capital.
- l. An Act to vest the Tay Ferries in the Dundee Harbour Trustees, and to authorise them to work and manage the Ferries; and for other purposes.
- li. An Act for amending the Acts relating to the Harbour of Ayr; for altering the constitution of the Ayr Harbour Trust; for enabling the Ayr Harbour Trustees to borrow an additional sum of money; and for other purposes.
- lii. An Act to extend the powers of the Scarborough Gas Company, and for other purposes.
- liii. An Act to authorise the Scarborough and Whitby Railway Company to extend their line to join the North-eastern Railway at Scarborough, and the Whitby, Redcar, and Middlesborough Union Railway near Whitby; to alter the levels of their authorised lines near Whitby; to raise additional capital; and for other purposes.
- liv. An Act for conferring further powers upon the Sheffield and Midland Railway Companies Committed and upon the two Companies represented upon that Committee; and for other purposes.
- lv. An Act to extend the time for the completion of certain of the Works authorised by the Pimlico, Peckham, and Greenwich Street Tramways (Extensions) Act, 1870.
- lv. An Act to authorise the Local Board for the district of Buxton to construct Waterworks and supply Water; also to purchase Land for Gasworks; and for other purposes.
- lvii. An Act for incorporating and conferring powers on the Pontypool Gas and Water Company.
- lviii. An Act for conferring further powers on the Bristol United Gaslight Company.
- lix. An Act to enable the Crystal Palace District Gas Company to raise additional Capital; and for other purposes.
- lx. An Act for extending the time for the completion of the Cleethorpes Promenade Pier, and for amending the Cleethorpes Promenade Pier Order, 1867; and for other purposes.
- P. lxi. An Act to confirm a Provisional Order made by the Local Government Board for Ireland relating to the town and borough of Wexford.
- P. lxi. An Act to confirm an Order made by the Board of Trade under The Sea Fisheries Act, 1868, relating to Brixham.

- P. lxxii. An Act for confirming certain Provisional Orders made by the Board of Trade under The General Pier and Harbour Act, 1861, relating to Bouldnor, Broadstairs, East Loch Tarbert, Felinstowe, Filey, Fishguard, Fraserburgh, Ifracome, Leochaline, Newlyn, and Sandhaven.
- lxxiv. An Act for enabling the Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of the borough of Swansea, acting as and for the Urban Sanitary Authority for the district of Swansea under "The Public Health Act, 1872," to complete and improve certain works authorised by "The Swansea Local Board of Health Waterworks Act, 1866," and to raise a certain sum of money; and for other purposes.
- lxxv. An Act to amend and continue the "Lagan Navigation Act;" and for other purposes.
- lxxvi. An Act to authorise the Great Western and Bristol and Exeter Railway Companies to extend the Bristol Harbour Railway, and to make a new Wharf Depot; and for other purposes.
- lxxvii. An Act to authorise the Stockton Municipal Corporation to raise more money for the purposes of their gas supply, and to amend the Stockton Gas Acts, 1867 and 1868.
- lxxviii. An Act for authorising or making further provision as to the lease, sale, or transfer of the railways or the amalgamation of the undertakings of other companies to or with the undertaking of the London and South-western Railway Company.
- lxxix. An Act to empower the Local Board of Health for the district of Over Darwen, in the county of Lancaster, to acquire the undertakings of the Darwen Waterworks Company and of the Over Darwen Gaslight Company; and for other purposes.
- lxx. An Act for making a railway from Llanfyllin to Langynog, in the counties of Montgomery and Denbigh; and for other purposes.
- lxxi. An Act for authorising the London and South-western Railway Company to make additional railways; and for other purposes.
- lxxii. An Act to enable the North Wales Narrow Gauge Railways Company to lease their Moel Tryfan Undertaking to Hugh Beaver Roberts.
- lxxiii. An Act for re-incorporating and giving additional Powers to the Bournemouth Gas and Water Company; and for other purposes.
- lxxiv. An Act for incorporating and conferring powers on the Harrow Gaslight and Coke Company (Limited).
- lxxv. An Act to amend the Sutton, Southcoates, and Drypool Gas Act, 1867 (additional lands, power to manufacture and store gas thereon, repeal of provisions of former Act).
- lxxvi. An Act to authorise the construction of the Wrexham District Tramways, and for other purposes.
- lxxvii. An Act for authorising the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway Company to make new Branch Railways, for conferring upon them additional powers; and for other purposes.
- lxxviii. An Act to extend the time granted by "The North Metropolitan Tramways Act, 1870," for the construction of works within the city of London.
- lxxix. An Act to authorise the Kington and Eardisley Railway Company to make a Rail- way from the Leominster and Kington Railway at Kington to New Radnor, and for other purposes.
- lxxx. An Act for better supplying with Water certain parishes and districts in the counties of Hertford and Middlesex.
- P. lxxxi. An Act for confirming certain Provisional Orders made by the Board of Trade under The Gas and Water Works Facilities Act, 1870, relating to Fleetwood Gas, Mid-somer Norton Gas, Holywell Water, and Monmouth Gas and Water.
- P. lxxxii. An Act to confirm certain Provisional Orders of the Local Government Board relating to the Districts of Baxton, Clayton, Crewe, Hitchin, Idle, Leyton, Nottingham (two), Shanklin, Walthamstow, Wellingborough, and Wimbledon.
- P. lxxxiii. An Act to confirm two Provisional Orders made by the Local Government Board under "The Poor Law Amendment Act, 1867," with reference to the city of Coventry in the county of Warwick and the parishes of Mid Lavant and East Lavant in the county of Sussex, respectively.
- P. lxxxiv. An Act to confirm a Provisional Certificate made by the Board of Trade under The Railways Construction Facilities Act, 1864, and The Railways (Powers and Construction) Act, 1864, Amendment Act, 1870, for the incorporation of the Widnes Railway Company, and for the construction of the Widnes Railway.
- P. lxxxv. An Act for confirming certain Provisional Orders made by the Board of Trade under the Tramways Act, 1870, for the construction of the Common Road Conveyance Tramway, Kew and Richmond Tramway, Southall, Eding, and Shepherd's Bush Tramway, and Uxbridge and Southall and Ealing and Brentford Tramway.
- P. lxxxvi. An Act to confirm a Scheme under "The Metropolitan Commons Act, 1866," relating to Tooting Beck Common.
- lxxxvii. An Act to enable the Navan and Kingcourt Railway Company to make Deviations in their Railways; and for other purposes.
- lxxxviii. An Act for establishing the Railway Clearing System Superannuation Fund Association.
- lxxxix. An Act for granting further powers to the Belfast Gaslight Company.
- xt. An Act to grant further powers to the Great Northern Railway Company with relation to their undertaking; and for other purposes.
- xvi. An Act to empower the Dublin Tramways Company to construct new tramways; and for other purposes.
- xvii. An Act for declaring the boundary of the Borough of Bootle-cum-Linacre, in the County of Lancaster, and for other purposes.
- xviii. An Act to extend the time for completion of Tramways authorised by "The Birmingham Tramways Act, 1870," to be constructed; and for other purposes.
- xix. An Act for empowering the Local Board for the District of Atherton in the parish of Leigh in the county of Lancaster to make and supply Gas; and for confirming an Agreement between them and the Atherton Gas Company, Limited, for the purchase of that Company's undertaking; and for other purposes.

[36 & 37 VICT.]

LOCAL ACTS.

[A.D. 1873.]

- xcv. An Act for the Local Government of the parish of Hove in the county of Sussex; and for other purposes.
- xcvi. An Act for amending and extending the Birmingham West Suburban Railway Act, 1871; and for other purposes.
- xcvii. An Act to extend the time limited for the completion of the Bridge and other works authorised by "The Albert Bridge Act, 1864," "The Albert Bridge Act, 1869," and "The Albert Bridge Act, 1871," and to continue and enlarge the powers of such Acts; and for other purposes.
- xcviii. An Act for granting further powers to the Birmingham and Staffordshire Tramways Company.
- xcix. An Act to authorise the increase of the Capital Stock of the Bank of Scotland; and for other purposes.
- c. An Act for making a new Street from Charing Cross to the Victoria Embankment.
- ci. An Act to extend for a further period the time for the compulsory purchase of lands and for the completion of the Railway authorised by "The Girvan and Portpatrick Junction Railway Act, 1865;" and for other purposes.
- cii. An Act to provide for the more effectual Application of the Surplus Annual Income of the Sheffield Town Trustees, and the Investment of their Trust Funds; and for other purposes.
- ciii. An Act to authorise the Ennis and West Clare Railway Company to extend their Railway; to raise further Capital; and for other purposes.
- civ. An Act for extending the time for the completion of the Newport Railway; and for confirming an Agreement for the working and use of the same by the North British Railway Company; and for other purposes.
- cv. An Act for making a Marine Road or Drive round the Great Ormes Head in the parish of Llandudno in the county of Caernarvon; and for other purposes.
- cvi. An Act for amending the provisions of the Borough of Portsmouth Waterworks Act, 1857, relative to constant supply of Water under pressure; and for other purposes.
- cvi. An Act to enable the Great North of Scotland Railway Company to convert certain Arrears of Dividend into Capital; and for other purposes.
- cvi. An Act to enable the Thetford and Watton Railway Company to extend their Railway to join the Bury Saint Edmunds and Thetford Railway; and for other purposes.
- cix. An Act to enable the Wolverhampton, Walsall, and Midland Junction Railway Company to make an additional Junction with the Midland Railway near Water Orton; and for other purposes relating to that Company.
- cx. An Act for empowering the Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of the Borough of Barrow-in-Furness to make additional Waterworks and Gasworks and new Streets; and for conferring additional powers upon them with reference to the raising of Money and the Improvement of the Borough; and for other purposes.
- cxi. An Act for conferring further Powers upon the Devon and Cornwall Railway Company for the Construction of Works and the raising of Money, and otherwise in relation to their Undertaking and the Undertakings of other Companies; and for other purposes.
- cxi. An Act for authorising the Devon and Cornwall Railway Company to make Extensions of their Railway to Holsworthy, and to Camelford, and to the Launceston and South Devon Railway; and to raise further Money; and for authorising Arrangements between them and other Railway Companies; and for other purposes.
- cxi. An Act to enable the Great Western Railway Company, the Bristol and Exeter Railway Company, and the South Devon Railway Company to make a Branch Railway to Saint Ives; and for other purposes.
- cxiv. An Act to enable the South Devon Railway Company to acquire Lands and execute Works in connexion with their Undertaking; and for other purposes.
- cxy. An Act to authorise the Trustees of the Clyde Navigation to construct a Graving Dock, Quays or Wharfs, and other Works at and in connexion with the Harbour of Glasgow and the River Clyde; to abandon authorised Works; to borrow Money; and for other purposes.
- cxi. An Act to confer additional powers on the Gaslight and Coke Company, and to amend the Gaslight and Coke Company's Act, 1868, and the several Acts altering and amending the same; and for other purposes.
- cxi. An Act for granting further powers to the Newcastle-upon-Tyne and Gateshead Gas Company.
- cxi. An Act to authorise the London and South-western Railway Company and the London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway Company to extend their Joint Line at Portsmouth, and for other purposes connected with the said Extension.
- cxi. An Act to authorise deviations from the authorised Lines of the Central Ireland Railways, and to confer further powers with reference to those Lines and their respective Undertakings of the Waterford and Central Ireland Railway Company and the Kilkenny Junction Railway Company; and for other purposes.
- cxx. An Act to enable the Lincoln Gaslight and Coke Company to execute new Works; to extend their Limits of Supply; to enable them to raise more Money; and for other purposes.
- cxi. An Act to authorise the diversion and alteration of the Line and Levels of the Whitby, Redcar, and Middlesborough Union Railway; and for other purposes.
- cxi. An Act to enable the Briton Ferry Local Board to acquire the Undertaking of the Briton Ferry Gas and Coke Company.
- cxi. An Act to make better provision for the recovery by the Brighton and Hove General Gas Company of Gas Rents and Rates, to alter existing Rents and Rates; and for other purposes.
- cxi. An Act to consolidate the Irvine Harbour Orders, 1867 and 1870, and to authorise the construction of new Works at the Harbour; and for other purposes.
- cxi. An Act to extend the Borough of Brighton to part of the Parish of Preston; and for other purposes.

- cxxvi. An Act for incorporating and conferring powers on the City of Durham Gas Company.
- cxxvii. An Act for authorising the West Lancashire Railway Company to raise further Capital.
- cxxviii. An Act for making a Railway from the London and South-western Railway at Staines to the Great Western Railway at West Drayton; and for other purposes.
- cxxix. An Act for enabling the Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of the Borough of Doncaster to execute Works for the Improvement of the Water Supply of that borough and of the neighbourhood thereof; and for other purposes.
- cxxx. An Act for enabling the Dublin and Drogheda Railway Company to acquire additional Lands, and to widen Bridges; and for other purposes.
- cxxxi. An Act to authorise the construction of a Railway in extension of the Metropolitan District Railway to Hammersmith.
- cxxxii. An Act to amend "The Waterford, Dungarvan, and Lismore Railway Act, 1872," and to enable the Waterford, Dungarvan, and Lismore Railway Company to make deviations from their authorised Railway, and to abandon a portion of the authorised Railway; to extend the time for the execution of works; to afford facilities to the Company for raising the funds necessary to execute their Undertaking; and for other purposes.
- cxxxiii. An Act for confirming the Gift of Columbia Market by the Baroness Burdett Coutts to the Mayor and Commonalty and Citizens of the city of London, and for making further provision respecting the maintenance and use of the Market, and for the construction of Tramways in connexion therewith; and for other purposes.
- cxxxiv. An Act to dissolve the Trowbridge and District New Water Company, Limited, and to re-incorporate the Members thereof and others, for supplying with Water the town and parish of Trowbridge and other places in the county of Wilts; and for other purposes.
- cxxxv. An Act for making certain Railways in the North Riding of the county of York; and for other purposes.
- cxxxvi. An Act for the making of Railways from Freshwater to Yarmouth and Newport, in the Isle of Wight; and for other purposes.
- P. cxxxvii. An Act to confirm a Provisional Order made by the Education Department under "The Elementary Education Act, 1870," to enable the School Board for the parish of Llanrwst to put in force "The Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845," and the Acts amending the same.
- P. cxxxviii. An Act to confirm a Provisional Order made by the Education Department under "The Elementary Education Act, 1870," to enable the School Board for the parish of Llanelly, Carmarthen, to put in force "The Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845," and the Acts amending the same.
- P. cxxxix. An Act to confirm a Provisional Order made by the Education Department under "The Elementary Education Act, 1870," to enable the School Board for the parish of Merthyr Tydfil to put in force "The Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845," and the Acts amending the same.
- P. cxli. An Act to confirm certain Provisional Orders of the Local Government Board relating to the Districts of Buxton, Carnarvon, Ealing, Pontypridd, Ravensthorpe, Reading (two), Shipley, Teignmouth, Wheathamstead, Wisbeach and Walsoken (two).
- P. cxlii. An Act to confirm certain Provisional Orders of the Local Government Board relating to the Districts of Baldersby, Bristol, Buxton, Dowlash, Nelson, and Wellington in the county of Somerset.
- cxliii. An Act to extend the powers of the Uxbridge and Hillingdon Gas Consumers Company; and for other purposes.
- cxliii. An Act to authorise the Mersey Docks and Harbour Board to construct new Docks and other Works on the Liverpool side of the River Mersey, and to borrow further moneys for that purpose.
- cxliv. An Act to authorise the Mersey Docks and Harbour Board to construct a new Landing Stage opposite the South Reserve at Birkenhead, and confirm an Agreement with reference thereto between the said Board and the London and North-western and Great Western Railway Companies; and for other purposes.
- cxlv. An Act for enabling the Solway Junction Railway Company to dispose of the Purchase Money for part of their Undertaking; and for other purposes.
- cxlii. An Act for conferring further powers upon the London Central Railway Company for the purchase of Lands.
- cxliii. An Act for making a Railway from the Llynvi and Ogmore Railway near Blacknill to the Great Western Railway at Llanharan, to be called the Cardiff and Ogmore Valley Railway; and for other purposes.
- cxlviii. An Act for the Conversion into Consolidated Stock of Annuities issued under the Glasgow Corporation Gas Act, 1869; and for other purposes.
- cxlix. An Act for authorising the London and Aylesbury Railway Company to raise further Capital.
- ccli. An Act to facilitate the Drainage of Mines in parts of South Staffordshire and East Worcestershire.
- cli. An Act for amending the Acts relating to the Undertaking of the Alexandra (Newport) Dock Company; and for other purposes.
- clii. An Act to amend "The Gosport Gas Act, 1865," with respect to the price of Gas.
- cliii. An Act for conferring further powers on the Cheshire Lines Committee; and for other purposes.
- cliv. An Act for incorporating the Dudley and Oldbury Junction Railway Company, and authorising them to make and maintain Railways from Oldbury, in the county of Worcester, communicating with the South Staffordshire and Stour Valley Branches of the Railways of the London and North-western Railway Company; and for other purposes.
- civ. An Act to enable the Llantrisant and Taff Vale Junction Railway Company to effect a Junction between their Railway and the Ely Valley Railway; to extend the time for the completion of a portion of their authorised Railways; and for other purposes.
- for enabling the London and Railway Company to construct

[36 & 37 VICT.]

LOCAL ACTS.

[A.D. 1873.]

- new Railways, to widen portions of their existing Railways, to enlarge their Lime Street Station at Liverpool; and for other purposes.
- cixvi. An Act to amend the constitution of the Harbour Trust of Peterhead, to authorise the construction of new Works at the Harbour, and to provide for the further improvement and maintenance of the same; and for other purposes.
- cixvii. An Act to empower the Taff Vale Railway Company to make new Railways and acquire additional Lands in the county of Glamorgan, and to run over and use a portion of the Railway of the Great Western Railway Company; and for other purposes.
- cixviii. An Act to authorise the Corporations of Dewsbury and Batley in the West Riding of the county of York to construct Gasworks, and to purchase the Undertaking of the Dewsbury and Batley Gas Company; and for other purposes.
- cixx. An Act for making a Railway from Dunfermline to North Queensferry in the county of Fife, and Pier in connexion therewith; and for other purposes.
- cixxi. An Act for authorising the London and South-western Railway Company to make and maintain new Railways in the parish of St. Mary, Battersea, to execute other works; to purchase additional Lands; and to raise further moneys; and for other purposes.
- cixxii. An Act to authorise the construction of Railways in the county of Cornwall, to be called the Cornwall Mineral Railways, and the amalgamation therewith of the New Quay and Cornwall Junction Railway, and other undertakings connected therewith.
- cixxiii. An Act to enable the London and Blackwall Railway Company to enlarge their Stepney Station; to construct a Landing Pier in the Thames in connexion with their Millwall Extension Railway; to authorise arrangements with the Great Eastern Railway Company; and for other purposes.
- cixxiv. An Act to authorise the Provost, Magistrates, and Town Council of the Burgh of Dumbarton to supply the Burgh and adjacent district with Gas; to erect a Pier in the River Clyde, and road of approach thereto; and for other purposes.
- cixxv. An Act to authorise the Halesowen and Bromsgrove Branch Railways Company to construct deviations of their authorised Railways; and for other purposes.
- cixxvi. An Act to extend the time for the completion of the Wandsworth Bridge and approaches; and for other purposes.
- cixxvii. An Act to authorise the Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of the borough of Bradford, in the West Riding of the county of York, to construct additional Waterworks, to effect Street Improvements, to enlarge the borough for Municipal, Sanitary, and other like purposes, to extend the limits of Water Supply of the Corporation; and for other purposes.
- cixxviii. An Act to confer upon the Bristol and North Somerset Railway Company renewed powers for making a Branch Railway to Camerton, and power to divert the road leading from Pensford to Stanton Wick, and to confer certain powers on the Great Western Railway Company with respect to the said Branch Railway; and for other purposes.
- cixxix. An Act to extend the time for the purchase of Lands and for the completion of the Belgrave Market; and for other purposes.
- cixxx. An Act for the reclamation of open Salt Marshes in the parish of Moulton and elsewhere in Lincolnshire.
- cixxi. An Act to provide for the discontinuance of the appointment of a Minister to the second charge of the church and parish of South Leith, in the county of Edinburgh; and for other purposes relating to the said church and parish.
- cixxii. An Act to incorporate a Company for the construction of the Banbury and Cheltenham Direct Railway; and for other purposes.
- cixxiii. An Act to empower the Corporation of Carlisle to make and maintain a new street, to alter, divert, and stop up existing streets and roads, to alter, enlarge, improve, and regulate the markets, to borrow money; and for other purposes.
- cixxv. An Act to change the name of the Dundalk and Greenore Railway Company, and to enable them to make a railway from Newry to Greenore, and to acquire the undertaking of the Newry and Greenore Railway Company; and for other purposes.
- cixxvi. An Act for making a Railway from the Glasgow, Dumbarton, and Helensburgh Railway to Kilsyth, and a Railway therefrom to the Campsie Branch of the North British Railway Company; and for other purposes.
- cixxvii. An Act to incorporate a Company for making the Leeds, Castleford, and Pontefract Junction Railway; and for other purposes.
- cixxviii. An Act for authorising the Lynvi and Ogmore Railway Company to make new Railways; to deviate portions of existing Railways; to raise additional Capital; to authorise arrangements with the Great Western Railway Company; and for other purposes.
- cixxix. An Act to confer further powers on the Waterford and Limerick Railway Company in relation to their own Undertaking and the Undertakings of other Companies; and for other purposes.
- cixxx. An Act for conferring further powers on the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company; and for other purposes relating to that Company and to the Preston and Wyre Railway.
- cixxxi. An Act for conferring additional powers on the Metropolitan District Railway Company; and for other purposes relating to that Company.
- cixxxii. An Act to grant further powers to the Metropolitan Railway Company.
- cixxxiii. An Act to authorise the construction of Works and Reclamation of Lands in Pagham Harbour in the county of Sussex; and for other purposes.
- cixxxiv. An Act for conferring powers upon the Much Wenlock and Severn Junction Railway Company for the construction of Works and the raising of money, and otherwise in relation to their own Undertaking and the Undertakings of other Companies; and for other purposes.
- cixxxv. An Act for making a Railway from the town of Wisbech in the county of Cam-

[A.D. 1878.]

TABLE OF THE STATUTES.

{36 &amp; 37 VICT.]

- bridge to Upwell in the county of Norfolk; and for other purposes.
- cxxxv. An Act for enabling the Caledonian Railway Company to make certain Branch Railways and other Works, and to acquire certain Lands, in the counties of Lanark, Forfar, Renfrew, Stirling, and Perth; and for other purposes.
- cxxxvi. An Act for enabling the Caledonian Railway Company to make Branch Railways connecting their Wilsontown Branch with their Cleland and Midcalder Line; and for other purposes.
- cxxxvii. An Act for enlarging the extent and improving the accommodation of the Citadel Station at Carlisle, and making and maintaining new Connecting Lines between the various Railways converging there; and for other purposes.
- cxxxviii. An Act for enabling the Caledonian Railway Company to make a Station at Gordon Street, Glasgow, and Connecting Lines between the same and their Railways on the south side of that city; and for other purposes.
- cxxxix. An Act to confer further powers on the City of Glasgow Union Railway Company, the Glasgow and South-western Railway Company, and the North British Railway Company; and for other purposes.
- cxc. An Act for conferring further powers on the Great Western Railway Company in relation to their own Undertaking and the Undertakings of other Companies; and for other purposes.
- cxi. An Act to authorise the London and Blackwall Railway Company to provide and to use Steam Vessels between Millwall and Greenwich; to authorise arrangements with the owners and lessees of Potter's Ferry and the Great Eastern Railway Company; and for other purposes.
- cxcii. An Act for making a Railway in Gloucestershire, to be called the Severn Bridge and Forest of Dean Central Railway; and for other purposes.
- cxciii. An Act for the transfer of the Swansea Lines Undertaking of the Swansea and Carmarthen Railways Company to the London and North-western Railway Company; and for authorising that Company to raise Moneys; and for other purposes.
- cxciv. An Act for making a Railway from the Great Western Railway at Swindon to the London and South-western Railway at Andover; and for other purposes.
- cxcv. An Act for making better provision for the drainage of Lands on the North and South Sides of the River Don in the West Riding of the county of York; and for other purposes.
- cxcvi. An Act for embanking and reclaiming certain waste Land in the county of Clare.
- P. cxcvii. An Act for confirming certain Provisional Orders made by the Board of Trade under the Tramways Act, 1870, relating to Cardiff, Dewsbury, Batley, and Birstal, Felixstowe and Fagborough Cliff, Ipswich and Felixstowe, Leicester, Middlesbrough and Stockton, Neath and District, and Newport (Monmouthshire).
- P. cxcviii. An Act to confirm a Provisional Order under "The Drainage and Improvement of Lands (Ireland) Act, 1868," and the Acts amending the same, relating to Upper Gully River Drainage District, Queen's County.
- P. cxcix. An Act to confirm a Provisional Order made by the Local Government Board for Ireland concerning the Local Government of the Borough of Belfast.
- cc. An Act for extending the Municipal and Police Boundaries of the Burgh of Ayr; for dividing the extended Burgh for Municipal and Police Purposes into Wards; for regulating the Number and Election and defining the Powers of the Magistrates and Town Councillors of the extended Burgh; for regulating the Common Good of the Burgh; for abolishing the Petty Customs now levied therein; for empowering the Magistrates and Town Council to improve certain Streets, to extend the Market-places and Slaughterhouses, to purchase the Undertakings of the Companies which now supply the Burgh with Gas and Water, and to supply Gas and Water to the extended Burgh; and for other purposes.
- cc. An Act for conferring additional Powers on the London and North-western Railway Company in relation to their own Undertaking and the Undertakings of other Companies; and for other purposes.
- ccii. An Act for making a Railway from Ross to Ledbury, in the counties of Gloucester and Hereford; and for other purposes.
- cciii. An Act to abandon the Mumbles Extension of the Swansea and Carmarthen Railway Company, and to extend the time for the compulsory purchase of Land and completion of Railway of the Company at Carmarthen, to confer powers upon the Company with reference to the Undertakings of other Companies; and for other purposes.
- cciv. An Act for authorising the sale and transfer of the Undertakings of the Metropolitan Street Tramways Company, and the Finsbury, Peckham, and Greenwich Street Tramways Company, to the London Tramways Company, Limited; and for other purposes.
- ccv. An Act for granting further powers to the Nottingham Gaslight and Coke Company.
- ccvi. An Act for supplying with Water certain parishes and places in the county of Edinburgh.
- ccvii. An Act to authorise the construction of a Railway from Bala to Festiniog in the county of Merioneth; and for other purposes.
- ccviii. An Act to enable the Great Northern Railway Company to extend their Railway from Melton Mowbray to Leicester; and for other purposes.
- ccix. An Act to authorise the North British Railway Company to make several Railways, and to purchase additional Station Lands; to abandon certain Railways; to extend the time for sale of certain superfluous Lands; to authorise agreements with the North Monkland Railway Company and with the Corporation of Birnalland; purchase of the Broxburn Railway, and amalgamation with the Glasgow and Milngavie Railway Company; and for other purposes.
- ccx. An Act for conferring additional powers on the Midland Railway Company for the construction of Works and for the raising of - Capital; and for other purposes in relation to their own Undertaking and the Undertakings of other Companies.

- cxxi. An Act to constitute a new body of Trustees for administering the affairs of the Harbour of New Shoreham in the county of Sussex; and for other purposes.
- cxxii. An Act for vesting the undertaking of the Briton Ferry Floating Dock Company in the Great Western Railway Company; and for other purposes.
- cxxiii. An Act for embanking and for dividing, allotting, and enclosing Lands in the parish of Gedney in the county of Lincoln.
- P. cxxiv. An Act to confirm a Provisional Order made by the Education Department under "The Elementary Education Act, 1870," to enable the School Board for London to put in force "The Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845," and the Acts amending the same.
- P. cxxv. An Act for confirming certain Provisional Orders made by the Board of Trade under the Tramways Act, 1870, for the construction of the London Street Tramways (Saint Pancras Lines), Metropolitan Street Tramways (Extensions), Pimlico, Peckham, and Greenwich Street Tramways (Extensions), and West London Tramways.
- P. cxxvi. An Act to confirm certain Provisional Orders of the Local Government Board relating to the districts of Ashbourne, Bury St. Edmunds, Epping, Fenton, Richmond (Surrey), Shipley, Stoke, Tong Street, and Ventnor.
- cxxvii. An Act to extend the powers of the Royal Bank of Scotland, and to alter and enlarge the provisions of the Charters relating thereto.
- cxxviii. An Act to make better provision for the Sewerage of a part of the parish of Beckenham in the county of Kent; and for other purposes.
- cxxix. An Act for the cultivation and improvement of certain Waste Lands in Pegwell Bay and Sandwich Flats, and the improvement of Sandwich Haven, in the county of Kent.
- cxxxi. An Act to authorise the construction by the Great Northern Railway Company of Railways in the West Riding of Yorkshire for connecting Keighley with Bradford and Halifax.
- cxxx. An Act to vest in the London Street Tramways Company certain Tramways authorised by the "North Metropolitan Tramways Act, 1870," and to enable that Company to raise further moneys; and for other purposes.
- cxxxi. An Act for making a Railway between Manchester, in the county of Lancaster, and Alderley, in the county of Chester, with Branches therefrom; and for other purposes.
- cxxxii. An Act to authorise the Metropolitan Street Tramways Company to raise further moneys; and for other purposes.
- cxxxiii. An Act to incorporate a Company and authorise the construction of Tramways in the county of Kent; and for other purposes.
- cxxxv. An Act for enabling the London and North-western Railway Company to enlarge and improve the Old Harbour at Holyhead, and to construct works in connexion therewith; and for other purposes.
- cxxxvi. An Act for incorporating the Tunbridge Wells and Eastbourne Railways Company; and for other purposes.
- cxxxvii. An Act for authorising the construction of Railways from Over, near the River Severn, to Newent, and from Newent to Dymock, in the county of Gloucester; and for other purposes.
- cxxxviii. An Act for authorising and carrying into effect the purchase by the Caledonian Railway Company of the portion of the Solway Junction Railway lying between Annan and Kirtlebridge Junction; and for other purposes.
- cxxxix. An Act for making a Railway in Berkshire and Hampshire, to be called the Didcot, Newbury, and Southampton Junction Railway.
- cxxxx. An Act for making a Railway from the Ely Valley Railway into the Clydach Valley; and for other purposes.
- cxxxxi. An Act for making a Railway from Pontesbury to Smailbeach and Tankerville in the county of Salop.
- cxxxxii. An Act for leaving the Buckley Railway to the Wrexham, Mold, and Connah's Quay Railway Company; and to make certain arrangements with reference to the Capital of the Wrexham, Mold, and Connah's Quay Railway Company; and for other purposes.
- cxxxxiii. An Act to authorise the Belfast Street Tramways Company to construct additional Street Tramways in the counties of Antrim and Down; and for other purposes.
- cxxxxiv. An Act to authorise the construction of a Railway from near the Rye Station of the South-eastern Railway in Sussex to Dungeness in Kent, together with a Pier at the termination thereof.
- cxxxxv. An Act for conferring further Powers on the Dover Harbour Board; and for other purposes.
- cxxxxvi. An Act to extend the time for the completion of certain of the authorised Works of the Edinburgh Street Tramways Company; and for other purposes.
- cxxxxvii. An Act to authorise the Construction of the Forth Bridge Railway.
- cxxxxviii. An Act to incorporate a Company for the purpose of making and maintaining a Railway from the Birmingham and Oxford section of the Great Western Railway in the parish of Rowington and county of Warwick to Henley-in-Arden in the same county; and for other purposes.
- cxxxxix. An Act to authorise the Hoylake and Birkenhead Rail and Tramway Company to extend their Railways; and for other purposes.
- cxl. An Act to authorise the Construction of a Railway from the Port of Larne to the Town and Neighbourhood of Ballyclare in the county of Antrim; and for other purposes connected with the said Railway.
- cxi. An Act for making certain Railways in the counties of Chester, Flint, and Denbigh; and for other purposes.
- cxlii. An Act for the Improvement of the borough of Criccieth in the county of Carnarvon.
- cxlili. An Act for conferring Powers upon the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, and for making other provisions with respect to the money deposited in respect to the ap-

[A.D. 1873.]

TABLE OF THE STATUTES.

[36 & 37 VICT.]

- application to Parliament for "The Dublin, Rathmines, &c. Railway Act, 1865." ccliv. An Act to authorise the Edinburgh, Loanhead, and Roslin Railway Company to make and maintain certain new Railways ; and for other purposes. ccxlv. An Act for making Railways to connect the Evesham and Redditch Railway with the East and West Junction Railway ; and for other purposes. ccxvi. An Act for making a Railway in the counties of Limerick and Kerry ; and for other purposes. ccxvii. An Act to enable the Metropolitan and Saint John's Wood Railway Company to construct Railways to join the Hampstead Junction Railway and the Midland Railway, with a Branch to Willesden, and to confer certain other powers upon the Company, and upon the London and North-western, the Midland, and the Metropolitan Railway Companies ; and for other purposes. ccxviii. An Act to empower the Southern Railway Company to make an Extension Railway to Cashel ; to make Working Agreements with other Companies ; to enable the Waterford and Limerick Railway Company to subscribe for portion of the Capital of the Company ; to provide for a Baronial Guarantee on portion of the Company's Share Capital ; and for other purposes. ccxlix. An Act for making a Railway from the Bodmin and Wadebridge Railway to Delabole ; and for other purposes. ccli. An Act for incorporating the Cornwall Mineral and Bodmin and Wadebridge Junction Railway Company, and for authorising them to make and maintain the Cornwall Mineral and Bodmin and Wadebridge Junction Railway, and for authorising arrangements between them and other Railway Companies ; and for other purposes. ccli. An Act for conferring further Powers on the Somerset and Dorset Railway Company for the construction of Works, and otherwise in relation to their Undertaking ; and for other purposes. colii. An Act for the Lease of the Undertaking of the Belfast, Holywood, and Bangor Railway Company. coliii. An Act for authorising the Construction of Street Tramways in certain parts of Bradford in the west riding of the county of York, and the neighbourhood thereof ; and for other purposes.

---

PRIVATE ACTS,

PRINTED BY THE QUEEN'S PRINTER,

AND WHEREOF THE PRINTED COPIES MAY BE GIVEN IN EVIDENCE.

- (1.) An Act for vesting the Lands and Estate of Cupar Grange in the county of Perth in Trustees, for the purpose of being sold, and for the purchase of other lands to be entailed ; and for other purposes.
(2.) An Act for carrying into effect an Agreement dated the first day of August one thousand eight hundred and seventy-one, between William Thomas Burn Callander and Mary Harriet Burn Callander, Spinster, of the first part : Henry Callander, an Infant, of the second part ; and Mary Frederica Beauclerk Coventry or Callander, Widow, the Honourable Henry Amelius Coventry, and Henry Amelius Beauclerk Coventry, tutors and cura-
- tors of the said Henry Callander, of the third part ; for the compromise and settlement of claims by the said William Thomas Burn Callander and Mary Harriet Burn Callander against the entailed Estates of Crichton and Prestonhall in the county of Edinburgh, Elphinstone in the county of Haddington, and Westertown in the county of Stirling, and the heirs of entail for the time being of the said Estates, for security of the provisions mentioned in the said Agreement ; and to raise Money on the Security of the said Estates for payment of the said provisions ; and for other purposes relating thereto.

---

PRIVATE ACT,

NOT PRINTED.

- (3.) An Act to dissolve the Marriage of Frederick Malcomson, of Portlaw, in the county of Waterford, Ireland, with Marcella Malcomson his now wife, and to enable him to marry again ; and for other purposes.

[ INDEX.

Sittings of the House, Session 1873.

RETURN to an Order of the Honourable The House of Commons, dated 24 July 1873;—for,

A RETURN “of the Number of Days on which The House SAT in the Session of 1873, stating, for each Day, the Date of the Month, and the Day of the Week, the Hour of Meeting, and the Hour of Adjournment; and the Total Number of Hours occupied in the Sittings of The House, and the Average Time; and showing the Number of Hours on which The House Sat each Day, and the Number of Hours after Midnight; and the Number of Entries in each Day's Votes and Proceedings (in continuation of Parliamentary Paper, No. 6123, of Session 1872).”

(Mr. Charles Forster.)

| Month.   | Day. | House met. | House adjourned. | Hours of Sitting. | Hours after Midnight. | Entries in Votes. | Month.   | Day. | House met. | House adjourned. | Hours of Sitting. | Hours after Midnight. | Entries in Votes. |     |
|----------|------|------------|------------------|-------------------|-----------------------|-------------------|----------|------|------------|------------------|-------------------|-----------------------|-------------------|-----|
| 1873     |      |            |                  |                   |                       |                   | 1873     |      |            |                  |                   |                       |                   |     |
| Feb.     | 6    | Th         | 1½               | 11 30             | 10 0                  | - -               | Apr.     | 1    | Tu         | 4 1 30           | 9 30              | 1 30                  | 74                |     |
| "        | 7    | F          | 4                | 8 0               | 4 0                   | - -               | "        | 2    | W          | 12 5 50          | 5 50              | - -                   | 78                |     |
| "        | 10   | M          | 4                | 11 45             | 7 45                  | [ ]               | "        | 3    | Th         | 4 3 0            | 11 0              | 3 0                   | 104               |     |
| "        | 11   | Tu         | 4                | 6 30              | 21 30                 | [ ]               | "        | 4    | F          | 4 8 15           | 4 15              | - -                   | 62                |     |
| "        | 12   | W          | 12               | 4 0               | 4 0                   | - -               | "        | 7    | M          | 4 2 30           | 10 30             | 2 30                  | 134               |     |
| "        | 13   | Th         | 4                | 8 30              | 4 30                  | - -               | "        | 8    | 1          | 30 9 30          | 1 30              | - -                   | 118               |     |
| "        | 14   | F          | 4                | 1 0 0             | 9 0                   | 1 0               | "        | 9    | 22         | Tu               | 4 12 45           | 8 45                  | 0 45              | 101 |
| "        | 17   | M          | 4                | 9 0               | 5 0                   | - -               | "        | 23   | W          | 12 2 45          | 2 45              | - -                   | 44                |     |
| "        | 18   | Tu         | 4                | 10 30             | 6 30                  | - -               | "        | 24   | Th         | 4 2 15           | 10 15             | 2 15                  | 108               |     |
| "        | 19   | W          | 12               | 5 45              | 5 45                  | - -               | "        | 25   | F          | 4 1 0 9 0        | 1 0               | - -                   | 61                |     |
| "        | 20   | Th         | 4                | 12 15             | 8 15                  | 0 15              | "        | 26   | M          | 4 2 15           | 10 15             | 2 15                  | 105               |     |
| "        | 21   | F          | 4                | 8 45              | 4 45                  | - -               | "        | 27   | 1          | 0 9 0            | 1 0               | - -                   | 87                |     |
| "        | 24   | M          | 4                | 9 15              | 5 15                  | - -               | "        | 28   | Tu         | 4 1 0 9 0        | 1 0               | - -                   | 56                |     |
| "        | 25   | Tu         | 4                | 12 45             | 8 45                  | 0 45              | "        | 29   | W          | 12 5 50          | 5 50              | - -                   | - -               |     |
| "        | 26   | W          | 2                | 5 45              | 3 45                  | - -               | "        | 30   | Total...   | 13               | - -               | - -                   | 1,182             |     |
| "        | 27   | Th         | 4                | 12 15             | 8 15                  | 0 15              | "        | 31   | Total...   | 13               | - -               | - -                   | 1,182             |     |
| "        | 28   | F          | 4                | 12 15             | 8 15                  | 0 15              | "        | May  | 1          | Th               | 4 1 45            | 9 45                  | 1 45              | 86  |
| Total... | 17   | - -        | -                | 106 15            | 9 30                  | 1,520             | "        | 2    | F          | 4 1 45           | 9 45              | 1 45                  | 86                |     |
| Mar.     | 3    | M          | 4                | 12 45             | 8 45                  | 0 45              | "        | 3    | W          | 12 5 50          | 5 50              | - -                   | 82                |     |
| "        | 4    | Tu         | 4                | 12 45             | 8 45                  | 0 45              | "        | 4    | 1          | 15               | 9 15              | 1 15                  | 90                |     |
| "        | 5    | W          | 12               | 4 45              | 4 45                  | - -               | "        | 5    | F          | 4 1 15           | 9 15              | 1 15                  | 76                |     |
| "        | 6    | Th         | 4                | 1 15              | 9 15                  | 1 15              | "        | 6    | 12 M       | 4 1 30           | 9 30              | 1 30                  | 114               |     |
| "        | 7    | F          | 4                | 1 30              | 9 30                  | 1 30              | "        | 7    | Tu         | 4 1 30           | 9 30              | 1 30                  | 96                |     |
| "        | 10   | M          | 4                | 12 45             | 8 45                  | 0 45              | "        | 8    | 14 W       | 12 5 55          | 5 55              | - -                   | 63                |     |
| "        | 11   | Tu         | 4                | 2 30              | 10 30                 | 2 30              | "        | 9    | 15 Th      | 4 1 0 9 0        | 1 0               | - -                   | 96                |     |
| "        | 13   | Th         | 4                | 4 45              | 0 45                  | - -               | "        | 10   | 16 F       | 4 2 0            | 10 0              | 2 0                   | 82                |     |
| "        | 17   | M          | 4                | 4 45              | 0 45                  | - -               | "        | 11   | 17 W       | 12 5 55          | 5 55              | - -                   | 123               |     |
| "        | 20   | Th         | 4                | 8 30              | 4 30                  | - -               | "        | 12   | 19 M       | 4 1 45           | 9 45              | 1 45                  | 65                |     |
| "        | 21   | F          | 4                | 1 45              | 9 45                  | 1 45              | "        | 13   | 20 Tu      | 4 8 15           | 4 15              | - -                   | 63                |     |
| "        | 24   | M          | 4                | 1 15              | 9 15                  | 1 15              | "        | 14   | 21 W       | 12 5 55          | 5 55              | - -                   | 84                |     |
| "        | 25   | Tu         | 4                | 9 15              | 5 15                  | - -               | "        | 15   | 22 Th      | 4 1 45           | 9 45              | 1 45                  | 79                |     |
| "        | 26   | W          | 12               | 5 55              | 5 55                  | - -               | "        | 16   | 23 F       | 4 2 0            | 10 0              | 2 0                   | 129               |     |
| "        | 27   | Th         | 4                | 2 10              | 0 20                  | 0 20              | "        | 17   | 24 M       | 4 1 0 9 0        | 1 0               | - -                   | 99                |     |
| "        | 28   | F          | 4                | 8 15              | 4 15                  | - -               | "        | 18   | Total...   | 19               | - -               | - -                   | 1,682             |     |
| "        | 29   | S          | 6½               | 6 45              | 0 15                  | - -               | "        | 19   | Total...   | 19               | - -               | - -                   | - -               |     |
| "        | 31   | M          | 4                | 1 45              | 1 45                  | - -               | "        | 20   | Total...   | 19               | - -               | - -                   | - -               |     |
| Total... | 18   | - -        | -                | 112 40            | 12 30                 | 1,341             | Total... | 20   | Total...   | 19               | - -               | - -                   | - -               |     |

SITTINGS OF THE HOUSE, SESSION 1873.

| Month.   | Day. | House met. | House ad.journed. | Hours ofSitting. |    | Hours afterMidnight. | Entries inVotes. | Month. | Day.     | House met. | House ad.journed. | Hours ofSitting. | Hours afterMidnight. | Entries inVotes. |     |       |   |     |
|----------|------|------------|-----------------------|----------------------|----|--------------------------|----------------------|--------|----------|------------|-----------------------|----------------------|--------------------------|----------------------|-----|-------|---|-----|
|          |      |            |                       | H.                   | M. |                          |                      |        |          |            |                       |                      |                          |                      |     |       |   |     |
| 1873     |      |            |                       |                      |    |                          | cont.                |        |          |            |                       |                      |                          |                      |     |       |   |     |
| June 5   | Th   | 4          | 2                     | 0                    | 10 | 0                        | 2                    | 0      | 121      | July 9     | W                     | 12                   | 6                        | 0                    | 66  |       |   |     |
| " 6      | F    | 4          | 2                     | 0                    | 10 | 0                        | 2                    | 0      | 95       | " 10       | Th                    | 4                    | 0                        | 12                   | 0   |       |   |     |
| " 9      | M    | 4          | 1                     | 45                   | 9  | 45                       | 1                    | 45     | 102      | " 11       | F                     | 2                    | 1                        | 15                   | 49  |       |   |     |
| " 10     | Tu   | 2          | 1                     | 15                   | 11 | 15                       | 1                    | 15     | 69       | " 14       | M                     | 4                    | 4                        | 0                    | 85  |       |   |     |
| " 11     | W    | 12         | 5                     | 55                   | 5  | 55                       | -                    | -      | 54       | " 15       | Tu                    | 2                    | 1                        | 45                   | 58  |       |   |     |
| " 12     | Th   | 4          | 2                     | 15                   | 10 | 15                       | 2                    | 15     | 93       | " 16       | W                     | 12                   | 5                        | 55                   | 45  |       |   |     |
| " 13     | F    | 2          | 1                     | 15                   | 11 | 15                       | 1                    | 15     | 57       | " 17       | Th                    | 4                    | 1                        | 30                   | 83  |       |   |     |
| " 16     | M    | 4          | 2                     | 0                    | 10 | 0                        | 2                    | 0      | 90       | " 18       | F                     | 2                    | 9                        | 20                   | 57  |       |   |     |
| " 17     | Tu   | 2          | 1                     | 15                   | 11 | 15                       | 1                    | 15     | 62       | " 21       | M                     | 4                    | 2                        | 15                   | 105 |       |   |     |
| " 18     | W    | 12         | 5                     | 50                   | 5  | 50                       | -                    | -      | 49       | " 22       | Tu                    | 2                    | 2                        | 0                    | 70  |       |   |     |
| " 19     | Th   | 4          | 12                    | 45                   | 8  | 45                       | 0                    | 45     | 76       | " 23       | W                     | 12                   | 5                        | 55                   | 44  |       |   |     |
| " 20     | F    | 2          | 5                     | 30                   | 3  | 30                       | -                    | -      | 39       | " 24       | Th                    | 4                    | 2                        | 45                   | 99  |       |   |     |
| " 23     | M    | 4          | 2                     | 0                    | 10 | 0                        | 2                    | 0      | 86       | " 25       | F                     | 2                    | 2                        | 30                   | 62  |       |   |     |
| " 24     | Tu   | 2          | 9                     | 15                   | 7  | 15                       | -                    | -      | 60       | " 28       | M                     | 4                    | 3                        | 0                    | 88  |       |   |     |
| " 25     | W    | 12         | 5                     | 50                   | 5  | 50                       | -                    | -      | 55       | " 29       | Tu                    | 2                    | 3                        | 0                    | 73  |       |   |     |
| " 26     | Th   | 4          | 1                     | 45                   | 9  | 45                       | 1                    | 45     | 103      | " 30       | W                     | 12                   | 5                        | 55                   | 56  |       |   |     |
| " 27     | F    | 2          | 9                     | 15                   | 7  | 15                       | -                    | -      | 61       | " 31       | Th                    | 4                    | 1                        | 45                   | 56  |       |   |     |
| " 30     | M    | 4          | 1                     | 15                   | 9  | 15                       | 1                    | 15     | 107      |            |                       |                      |                          |                      |     |       |   |     |
| Total... | 18   | --         | -                     | 157                  | 5  | 19                       | 30                   | 1,378  | Total... | 23         | --                    | -                    | 292                      | 30                   | 36  | 1,628 |   |     |
| July 1   | Tu   | 2          | 9                     | 15                   | 7  | 15                       | -                    | -      | 55       | Aug. 1     | F                     | 2                    | 9                        | 15                   | -   | 66    |   |     |
| " 2      | W    | 12         | 5                     | 55                   | 5  | 55                       | -                    | -      | 63       | " 2        | S                     | 12                   | 4                        | 0                    | -   | 47    |   |     |
| " 3      | Th   | 4          | 1                     | 30                   | 9  | 30                       | 1                    | 30     | 82       | " 4        | M                     | 3                    | 7                        | 0                    | -   | 84    |   |     |
| " 4      | F    | 2          | 1                     | 30                   | 11 | 30                       | 1                    | 30     | 60       | " 5        | Tu                    | 1½                   | Prorogation.             |                      | -   | 46    |   |     |
| " 7      | M    | 4          | 2                     | 0                    | 10 | 0                        | 2                    | 0      | 128      | 64         | Total...              | 4                    | --                       | -                    | 15  | 15    | - | 237 |

SUMMARY.

| Month.        | Days ofSitting. | Hours ofSitting. | Hours afterMidnight. | Entries inVotes. |
|---------------|---------------------|----------------------|--------------------------|----------------------|
|               |                     |                      |                          |                      |
| 1873   |                     |                      |                          |                      |
| February..... | 17                  | 106 15               | 2 30                     | 1,525                |
| March.....    | 18                  | 112 40               | 12 30                    | 1,341                |
| April .....   | 18                  | 106 25               | 15 45                    | 1,132                |
| May .....     | 19                  | 157 10               | 20 0                     | 1,682                |
| June.....     | 18                  | 157 5                | 19 30                    | 1,378                |
| July .....    | 23                  | 222 30               | 36 15                    | 1,628                |
| August.....   | 4                   | 15 15                | -                        | 237                  |
| Total.....    | 112                 | 877 20               | 106 30                   | 8,923                |

Average Time of Sitting, 7 Hours 50 Minutes.

DIVISIONS OF THE HOUSE, SESSION 1873—(PARL. PAPER 0.111.)

SUMMARY.

|                                                        |     |                 |     |
|--------------------------------------------------------|-----|-----------------|-----|
| Number of Divisions on Public Business before Midnight | ... | ...             | 133 |
| Ditto                                                  | "   | after Midnight  | 91  |
| Ditto—Private Business                                 | "   | before Midnight | 2   |
| Ditto                                                  | "   | after Midnight  | —   |
| Total Number of Divisions in Session 1873              | ... | ...             | 226 |

GENERAL INDEX TO SESSION 1873.

---

EXPLANATION OF THE ABBREVIATIONS.

It being a principal object of this Index, that the proceedings on each Motion shall be completely recorded, some abbreviations of forms were necessary. Those who are accustomed to the proceedings of Parliament will readily fill up the voids. Those who are not so familiar, may find the following explanation useful, but will find the whole formulae set out at length in the "Contents."

The names which immediately follow the title of a Bill are those of the Peers or hon. Members who have charge of the Bill.

The numbers which are added at stages of Bills are the official numbers of the prints and reprints ordered at each stage, and, with the Statute, will enable the reader to follow all the changes the Bill has undergone.

The entries—Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2<sup>o</sup>;" Amendt. "this day six months;" Question put, "That 'now,' &c."—indicate the usual form of raising the issue—namely, "That the word 'now' stand part of the Question."

"The Ballot, Amendt. on Committee of Supply" indicates that the Question was raised by means of an Amendment moved on the Motion (after the Order of the Day for the House to go into Committee of Supply had been read), "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair." In this case the issue is formally raised by the Motion "To leave out from the word 'That' to the end of the Question, in order to add" other words. The decision is taken on the Question, "That the words proposed to be left out stand part of the Question."

The Nos. added to the "Parliamentary Papers" are in most cases those given in the Commons' "List of Papers for Sale."

INDEX

TO

HANSARD'S PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES,

IN THE FIFTH SESSION OF

THE TWENTIETH PARLIAMENT OF THE UNITED KINGDOM.

36° & 37° VICTORIA.

1873.

EXPLANATION OF THE ABBREVIATIONS.

In Bills, Read 1<sup>o</sup>, 2<sup>o</sup>, 3<sup>o</sup>, or 1<sup>a</sup>, 2<sup>a</sup>, 3<sup>a</sup>, Read the First, Second, or Third Time.—In Speeches, 1R., 2R., 3R., Speech delivered on the First, Second, or Third Reading.—Amendt., Amendment.—Res., Resolution.—Comm., Committee.—Re-Comm., Re-Committee.—Rep., Report.—Consid., Consideration.—Adj., Adjournment or Adjourned.—cl., Clause.—add. cl., Additional Clause.—neg., Negatived.—M. Q., Main Question.—O. Q., Original Question.—O. M., Original Motion.—P. Q., Previous Question.—s. p., Report Progress.—A., Ayes.—N., Noes.—M., Majority.—1st. Div., 2nd. Div., First or Second Division.—l., Lords.—c., Commons.

When in this Index a * is added to the Reading of a Bill, it indicates that no Debate took place upon that stage of the measure.

When in the Text or in the Index a Speech is marked thus *, it indicates that the Speech is reprinted from a Pamphlet or some authorized Report.

When in the Index a † is prefixed to a Name or an Office (the Member having accepted or vacated office during the Session) and to Subjects of Debate thereunder, it indicates that the Speeches on those Subjects were delivered in the speaker's private or official character, as the case may be.

Some subjects of debate have been classified under the following "General Headings":—
ARMY—NAVY—INDIA—IRELAND—SCOTLAND—PARLIAMENT—POOR LAW—POST OFFICE—METROPOLIS—CHURCH OF ENGLAND—EDUCATION—CRIMINAL LAW—LAW AND JUSTICE—
TAXATION, under WAYS AND MEANS.

A BERDEEN, Earl of Regulation of Railways (Prevention of Accidents), 2R. [214] 587

ABINGER, LORD
Army Regulation Act—Abolition of Purchase, [214] 1599

Achin
Moved, "That an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty for Copy of the Correspondence relating to the abrogation of the Treaty of 1824" (The Lord Stanley of Alderley) July 28, [217] 1077; after short debate, Motion agreed to ADAM, Mr. W. P. (Lord of the Treasury), Clackmannan, &c.

Four Courts Marshalsea (Dublin), [217] 1509

VOL. CCXVII. [THIRD SERIES.]

ADDERLEY, Right Hon. Sir C. B.,
Staffordshire, N.

Africa—West Coast Settlements—Ashantee Invasion, [215] 1560, 1719; [217] 309
Church of England—West Indies Clergy Act—Bishop of Kingston, [217] 1330
Colonies, The, Motion for a Committee, [214] 1113, 1116;—Defence of the, Res. 1530
Digest of Sanitary Statutes, [214] 895, 896
Education—Report of the Committee of Council, [216] 1863
Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment, 2R. [217] 549; Comm. cl. 23, 800; 3R. 1017
Endowed Schools Act (1869) Amendment, 2R. [217] 734
India—Indian Budget, [217] 921
Metropolis Buildings Act Amendment, 2R. [215] 503
Parliament—Address in Answer to the Speech, Report, [214] 169

ADD ADV { GENERAL INDEX } AFR AGA
214-215-216-217.

ADDERLEY, Right Hon Sir C. B.—cont.

- Public Health, 2R. [215] 1864; Comm. [217] 90, 95, 213
- Public Health Legislation—Sanitary Commission, [214] 548
- Railway and Canal Traffic, 3R. [215] 1107
- Sanitary Legislation, [214] 198, 373, 895
- South Africa, [214] 801
- Supply—Governors, &c. of Colonies, [215] 1866
- Windward Islands—Ecclesiastical Policy, Res. [217] 430

Admiralty and War Offices Rebuilding

- Bill (Mr. Ayrton, Mr. Shaw Lefevre, Mr. Campbell-Bannerman)
- c. Ordered; read 1st Feb 10 [Bill 40]
- Bill withdrawn* Mar 24

Admission to Benefices and Churchwardenships, &c. Bill [H.L.]

(The Lord Archbishop of York)

- l. Presented; read 1st June 12 (No. 153)
- Read 2nd June 17
- Committee June 26, [216] 1409 (No. 176)
- Report* June 27 (No. 181)
- Order for 3R. discharged*; Bill re committed July 1
- Committee (on re-comm.) put off sine die July 3

Adulteration of Food Act, 1872—Prosecutions

- Question, Lord Eustace Cecil; Answer, The Attorney General May 22, [216] 274

ADVOCATE, The Lord (Right Hon. G. YOUNG), Wigton, &c.

- 215] Conveyancing (Scotland), 2R. 964; Comm. 1896; cl. 2, 1842; cl. 3, ib.
- 216] cl. 4, 150; cl. 9, 151; cl. 12, 504; cl. 13, 506; cl. 14, 507; cl. 15, ib.; cl. 16, 508, 509; cl. 22, 510; cl. 27, ib.; cl. 41, Amendt. 511, 512
- Education (Scotland) Act (1872), [216] 1412
- Entailed and Settled Estates (Scotland), 2R. [215] 1542; Comm. [216] 1832, 1833, 1834
- Hypothee Abolition (Scotland), 2R. [216] 1361
- Labourers Cottages (Scotland), 2R. [217] 468
- 216] Law Agents (Scotland), Comm. cl. 2, 542, 543; cl. 5, 544, 545; cl. 7, 611, 612, 613; cl. 8, 614, 615; cl. 11, ib.; cl. 15, 616; cl. 19, ib.; add. cl. 617
- 217] Lords Amendts. 968

Parliament—Privilege—Appellate Jurisdiction of the House of Lords, [217] 173

Public Business—Scotch Bills, [216] 434

Whitsun recess, Adjournment for, [216]

428

Poor Law (Scotland), 2R. [214] 1000

Scotland—Church Rates Legislation, [216] 102

Probate, &c. of Wills, [216] 272

Rate for Church Repairs, &c. [215] 645

Supply—Board of Supervision (Scotland), [215] 1458

Supreme Court of Judicature, Comm. cl. 5, [216] 1638; cl. 6, 1736

Africa

Central Africa—Sir Samuel Baker's Expedition, Observations, Earl Granville June 30, [216] 1547; — Telegrams, Question, Mr. Cadogan; Answer, Viscount Enfield June 30, [216] 1561

East African Slave Trade—Treaty with the Sultan of Zanzibar, Question, Mr. Gilpin; Answer, Viscount Enfield June 28, [216] 1247

Fanti Confederation—The Protectorate, Question, Mr. Salt; Answer, Viscount Enfield May 5, [215] 1483

Lagos, Question, Sir Thomas Basley; Answer, Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen April 25, [215] 971

South Africa—The Cape Colony, &c., Question, Observations, Mr. R. N. Fowler; Reply, Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen; debate thereon Feb 21, [214] 790

West Coast Settlements—The Ashantee Invasion, Question, Observations, The Earl of Lauderdale; Reply, The Earl of Kimberley Mar 7, [214] 1515; Questions, Observations, The Earl of Lauderdale; The Earl of Carnarvon; Reply, The Earl of Kimberley May 1, [215] 1392; Question, Observations, The Earl of Lauderdale; Reply, The Earl of Kimberley; short debate thereon May 20, [216] 164; Question, The Earl of Carnarvon; Observations, The Earl of Lauderdale; Reply, The Earl of Kimberley July 10, [217] 138; Question, The Duke of Buckingham; Answer, The Earl of Kimberley July 14, 267

Questions, Mr. Macfie; Answers, Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen Feb 20, [214] 782; Feb 25, 897; Question, Sir John Hay; Answer, Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen April 25, [215] 970; Question, Sir Charles Adderley; Answer, Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen May 6, 1560; Questions, Mr. M'Arthur, Sir Charles Adderley; Answers, Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen May 9, 1719; Question, Sir John Hay; Answer, Mr. Goschen May 26, [216] 430; Questions, Mr. Macfie, Sir Charles Adderley; Answers, Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen July 14, [217] 308; Question, Sir Patrick O'Brien; Answer, Mr. Gladstone August 4, 1525

Parl. Papers—

Correspondence with Mr. Hennessy I. 126

Papers relating to Fanti Confederation c. 171

Ashantee Invasion . 266

Despatches . . . [801] [802] [804] [819]

AGAR-ELLIS, Hon. L. G. F., Kilkenny Co.
Board of Education (Ireland)—Rev. Mr. O'Keeffe, Motion for a Committee, [215] 2051; [217] 1478

Irish Church Act—National Monuments, [215] 1489

Metropolis Water Act (1871), [216] 686

Parliament—Ministerial Explanation, [214] 1946

Parliament—Breach of Privilege—“ Pall Mall Gazette,” Res. [215] 697

Post Office—Telegraphs in Rural Districts, [216] 1229

University Tests (Dublin) (No. 3), 2R. [215] 751

AGN      AGR      { SESSION 1873 }      AGR      ANC
 214—215—216—217.

Answer, Mr. R. Vans, Wigton Co.

Board of Trade—Portpatrick Harbour, [215] 8
 Hypothec Abolition (Scotland), 2R. [216] 1867
 Labourers Cottages (Scotland), 2R. [216] 1146

Agricultural Children Bill (Mr. Clare Read, Mr. Pell, Mr. Akroyd, Mr. Kay-Shuttleworth, Mr. Kennaway)

c. Ordered ; read 1<sup>o</sup> Feb 7      [Bill 8]
 214] Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>, after short debate Feb 19, 689
 Committee — R.R. Feb 26

215] Committee ; Report May 3, 1458
 Considered May 5

Moved, "That the Bill be now read 3<sup>o</sup>"
 May 8, 1708

Amendt. to leave out "now," and add "upon this day six months" (Mr. Mundella) ; Question proposed, "That 'now,' &c." ; after short debate, Amendt. withdrawn ; main Question put, and agreed to ; Bill read 3<sup>o</sup> Lords Amendts.      [Bill 281]

i. Read 1<sup>o</sup> (Lord Heniker) May 9 (No. 102)
 216] Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>, after debate June 10, 712

. Committee June 19, 1151      (No. 185)
 . Report June 30, 1847      (No. 185)

. Read 3<sup>o</sup> July 7, 1842

217] Commons Amendt. to Lords Amendts. and Commons Reasons for disagreeing to one of the Amendts. made by the Lords considered (according to Order) July 21, 847 (No. 220-1)

Clause 8 (Power to suspend temporarily restrictive provisions of Act) omitted by the Lords ; re-inserted by the Commons

After short debate, on Question, whether to insist ? resolved in the negative

The Amendt. to which the Commons have disagreed not insisted on ; The Commons Amendt. to Lords Amendts. disagreed to ; and a Committee appointed to prepare Reasons to be offered to the Commons for the Lords disagreeing to the said Amendt.

Report from the Committee of the Reasons to be offered to the Commons for the Lords disagreeing to the Commons Amendt. to the Lords Amendts. read, and agreed to ; and a Message sent to the Commons to return the said Bill with the Reasons July 22

Returned from the Commons with the Amendt. to which the Lords have disagreed not insisted on July 31

Royal Assent August 5      [36 & 37 Vict. c. 67]

Agricultural Labourers Meeting—Alleged Disturbances at Leighton Buzzard

Question, Lord Edmond Fitzmaurice ; Answer, Mr. Bruce July 23, [217] 805 ; Questions, Colonel Gilpin ; Answers, Mr. Bruce, Lord Edmond Fitzmaurice July 28, 1889 ; Observations, Mr. Bruce July 31, 1825

Agricultural Labourers Unions — Faringdon Highway Board

Question, Mr. Auberon Herbert ; Answer, Mr. Stansfeld May 20, [216] 169

Agricultural Machine Accidents

Question, Mr. Welby ; Answer, Mr. Bruce May 26, [216] 481
 [See Threshing Machines Bill]

Agricultural Returns

Question, Mr. Dent ; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue Mar 21, [214] 1962

AIRLIE, Earl of

Church of Scotland—Patronage, Res. [216] 1032, 1060

Spain—Chinese Coolies, Conveyance of, into Cuba, [217] 394

AKROYD, Mr. E., Halifax

Agricultural Children, 2R. [214] 696

China, Gold Fields of, [214] 541

Treaty of Tien-Tsin, [214] 1610

Elementary Education Act—School Board Elections, [215] 635

"Alabama," The — Compensation for British Property

Questions, Sir Stafford Northcote, Sir James Elphinstone ; Answers, Viscount Enfield May 23, [216] 386 ; Questions, Sir James Elphinstone, Mr. Anderson ; Answers, Mr. Gladstone, Viscount Enfield May 26, 433

ALBEMARLE, Earl of

Army—Half-Pay Officers, [216] 1239, 1240

Aldermen and Councillors Qualification

Bill (Mr. Dixon, Mr. Carter, Mr. Mundella, Mr. Stapleton)

c. Ordered ; read 1<sup>o</sup> Feb 7      [Bill 30]
 2R. July 30

Alderney (Harbour and Fortifications)—Report of the Select Committee

Observations, The Duke of Somerset ; Reply, Viscount Halifax Mar 31, [215] 331 ; short debate thereon July 11, [217] 196

Alkali Act (1863)—Petition for Amendment

Observations, Lord Ravensworth ; Reply, The Marquess of Ripon ; short debate thereon July 4, [216] 1778

AMCOOTTS, Colonel W. C., Lincolnshire, Mid.

Ways and Means—Report, [215] 1349

AMPHLETT, Mr. R. P., Worcestershire, E.

216] Supreme Court of Judicature, 2R. 860 ; Comm. cl. 6, 1733 ; cl. 22, 1800 ; cl. 28, 1876 ; cl. 29, 1879, 1884 ; cl. 31, 1886

217] cl. 48, Amendt. 45 ; cl. 50, 46 ; Amendt. 48 ; cl. 54, 177 ; Consid. cl. 55, 683

Ancient Monuments Bill (Sir John Lubbock, Mr. Beresford Hope, Mr. Bouvierie, Mr. Osborne Morgan, Mr. Plunket)

c. Ordered ; read 1<sup>o</sup> Feb 7      [Bill 5]
 Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>, after short debate May 6, [215] 1607
 Committee [Dropped]

AND ANS { GENERAL INDEX } APP ARG
 214—215—216—217.

- ANDERSON, Mr. G., Glasgow
 "Alabama"—Compensation for British Property, [216] 434
Army—Questions, &c.
 Cavalry Officer, Charge against — Major General Shute, [215] 1786; [216] 1165
 Commander-in-Chief of the Forces in Ireland, [216] 834, 1411; [217] 657, 1323, 1324
 10th Hussars, [215] 400
Army Estimates—Administration of the Army, Amendt. [216] 1287, 1288, 1289, 1291, 1295
Conveyancing (Scotland), Comm. cl. 41, [216]
 512
 Crown Private Estates, 2R. Amendt. [217] 698, 718; Comm. cl. 1, 1002; add. cl. 1006
 Currency—Bank Act, Res. [215] 111, 156, 157
 Customs Out-Port Clerks, Res. Report, [217] 1238
 Duke of Edinburgh's Annuity, 2R. [217] 1348; Comm. cl. 2, Amendt. 1447, 1449, 1450
 Juries, Comm. cl. 5, [216] 522; cl. 57, Motion for reporting Progress, 1519
 Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister, 2R. [214] 822
 Parks Regulation Act—New Rules, [214] 204
 Parliament—Public Business, [216] 1859, 1860; [217] 668
 Parliament—Business of the House (Committee of Supply), Res. [214] 260
 Parliament—Electoral Power, Distribution of, Res. [215] 1570
 Poor Law (Scotland), 2R. [214] 1010
 Post Office—Glasgow Post Office, [215] 903; [217] 911
 Letters, Delivery of, [217] 1517
 Railway Regulation, Comm. [217] 1249
 Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 13, [216] 1235
 Supply—Houses of Parliament, Amendt. [215] 782, 785
 Miscellaneous Expenses, [217] 1150
 Public Departments, [215] 779
 Report, [216] 481
 Supreme Court of Judicature, 3R. [217] 788
- ANNESLEY, Lieut.-Colonel Hon. H., Cavan
 Juries (Ireland) Act, Motion for a Committee, [215] 328
 Shah of Persia—Naval Review, [216] 547
- ANSTRUTHER, Sir R., Fifeshire
 Church of Scotland (Patronage), Res. [216] 1090, 1107
 Parliament—Business of the House (Tuesday Sittings), Res. [214] 288
 Permissive Prohibitory Liquor, 2R. [215] 1648
 Poor Law (Scotland), 2R. [214] 1009
 Poor Law (Scotland) Inspectors, [216] 1410
 Roads and Bridges (Scotland), 2R. [216] 796, 819
 School Boards—Education (Scotland) Act, 1872, [216] 98
 Shah of Persia, Visit of—Windsor Park Review, [216] 997
 Supply—Queen's and Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer, [215] 1455
- Appropriation of Seats (Cahel and Sligo) Bill
 c. Motion for leave (Mr. Butt) July 24, [217] 963; after short debate, Motion withdrawn
- ARBUTHNOT, Major G., Hereford City
Army—Questions, &c.
 Abolition of Purchase — Memorials of Officers, [217] 148, 1482
 Autumn Manoeuvres, [215] 388
 Control Department, [214] 377
 Fine Fund, [215] 1762
 Free Rations, Issue of, [217] 1482
 Gratuities, [214] 1398
 Medical Department, [215] 1299
 Reliefs—North America and West Indies, [215] 18
 Scientific Corps, Majors of the (India), [217] 1488
Army Estimates—Clothing Establishments, &c. [216] 1263
 Control Establishments, Wages, &c. [216] 1251
 Land Forces, [214] 1065, 1151, 1152
 Military Education, Amendt. [216] 1284
 Provisions—Forage, &c. [216] 1260, 1261
 Soldiers' Pay and Rations, [214] 1034, 1035
 Works, Buildings, &c. [216] 1278
 Canada, Dominion of—Transfer of Arms, &c., [215] 1878
 Mauritius—Bishop, Appointment of, [216] 432
 Ecclesiastical Establishments, [216] 999; [217] 658, 659
 Navy Estimates—Freight of Ships for Conveyance of Troops, &c. [217] 1285, 1286
 Supply—Convict Establishments, [217] 1278
- ARCHDALL, Captain M. E., Fermanagh Co.
Army—Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, [216] 100
 Sandhurst, Insubordination at, [215] 902
Army Estimates—Military Education, Amendt. [216] 1280, 1284
- ARGYLL, Duke of (Secretary of State for India)
 Agricultural Returns for Scotland, [216] 1482
 Army—Recruiting, [216] 1620, 1622
 Central Asia—Boundary Line, [214] 587
 Church of Scotland — Patronage, Res. [216] 1063
 Conveyancing (Scotland), 2R. [216] 1689
 East India Stock Dividend Redemption, 2R. [215] 1114
 India—Banda and Kirweo Prize Money, [216] 1703
 Destruction of Life by Wild Beasts, [216] 1487
 Indian Appeals, [216] 983
 Parliament—Privilege—Appellate Jurisdiction of the House, [217] 83
 Punjab, &c., Motion for a Return, [217] 1088

ARM ARM { SESSION 1873 } ARM ARM
214-215-216-217.

ARMY.

"Advanced Class" Examinations, Question, Sir John Lubbock; Answer, Mr. Cardwell July 10, [217] 144

Army Estimates—Soldiers' Pay and Rations, Questions, Major Arbuthnot; Answer, Mr. Cardwell Feb 27, [214] 1034

The new Pay Regulations, Question, Major General Sir Percy Herbert; Answer, Mr. Cardwell Mar 8, [214] 1186; Question, Lord Eustace Cecil; Answer, Mr. Cardwell Mar 6, 1893

Army Fine Fund, Observations, Mr. Solater-Booth; Reply, Mr. Cardwell; short debate thereon May 9, [215] 1750

Recruits—Numbers and Quality, Motion for Returns (The Duke of Richmond) Mar 10, [214] 1609; after short debate Motion agreed to (Parl. P. No. 37)

Army Recruiting—Inaccurate Returns, Questions, Sir John Pakington, Colonel Stuart Knox; Answers, Mr. Cardwell June 26, [216] 1413; Personal Explanation, The Duke of Cambridge June 30, 1893; Observations, The Duke of Richmond; Reply, The Marquess of Lansdowne; short debate thereon July 1, 1893

Army Regulation Act

Officers of Her Majesty's Army—Abolition of Purchase, Question, Observations, The Duke of Richmond; Reply, The Marquess of Lansdowne; debate thereon Mar 10, [214] 1592

Memorials of Officers, Questions, Sir John Pakington, Major Arbuthnot; Answers, Mr. Cardwell July 10, [217] 147

Royal Commission on Officers of Her Majesty's Army, Question, Major Arbuthnot; Answer, Mr. Cardwell August 1, [217] 1482; Question, Colonel North; Answer, Sir Henry Storks August 5, 1581

[See title Army—Abolition of Purchase]

Artillery

Conversion of Cast-Iron Guns, Question, Mr. Osborne; Answer, Sir Henry Storks July 7, [216] 1854

Foreign Breech-Loading Guns, Question, Observations, The Earl of Lauderdale; Reply, The Marquess of Lansdowne April 25, [215] 985

Moncrieff Gun Carriages, Question, Major Beaumont; Answer, Sir Henry Storks Feb 14, [214] 440; Question, Lord Elcho; Answer, Sir Henry Storks Feb 25, 894

The 35-ton Gun, Observations, Lord Elcho; Reply, Sir Henry Storks; short debate thereon July 31, [217] 1386

Autumn Manoeuvres

Billeting, Question, Mr. Bonham-Carter; Answer, Sir Henry Storks July 17, [217] 500

Compensation, Question, Lord Henry Thynne; Answer, Mr. Cardwell June 19, [216] 1162

Extra Allowance to Volunteers, Question, Sir Thomas Batson; Answer, Sir Henry Storks July 14, [217] 311

Horse Blankets, Question, Colonel Egerton Leigh; Answer, Sir Henry Storks June 30, [216] 1552

ARMY—cont.

Licensed Victuallers, Question, Mr. Solater-Booth; Answer, Sir Henry Storks Mar 31, [215] 388

[See title Army—Control Department]

Candidates for Commissions, Questions, Observations, Lord Vivian; Reply, The Marquess of Lansdowne; short debate thereon June 20, [216] 1217;—University Candidates, Question, Observations, The Duke of Richmond; Reply, The Marquess of Lansdowne Mar 8, [214] 1179

Carlisle Fort, Cork Harbour, Question, Mr. McCarthy Downing; Answer, Sir Henry Storks June 12, [216] 839

Case of Lieutenant Robins, Question, Mr. Scourfield; Answer, Mr. Cardwell May 18, [216] 14

Cavalry and Artillery Reserve, Question, Captain Talbot; Answer, Mr. Cardwell Feb 17, [214] 548

Chaplains to the Forces, Question, Mr. O'Reilly; Answer, Sir Henry Storks May 5, [215] 1484

Charge against a Cavalry Officer—Major General Shute, Question, Mr. Anderson; Answer, Sir Henry Storks May 12, [215] 1786; June 19, [216] 1165

Chelsea Hospital Pensioners, Question, Sir Lawrence Palk; Answer, Mr. Cardwell Mar 27, [215] 221

Clothing, &c. of the German Army, Question, Mr. Whitwell; Answer, Sir Henry Storks May 19, [216] 97

Contracts for Gunpowder—Belgian and English Pebble Powder, Question, Colonel Learmonth; Answer, Sir Henry Storks April 24, [215] 901; Question, Mr. Malcolm; Answer, Sir Henry Storks May 8, 1880

Control Department, Question, Major Arbuthnot; Answer, Sir Henry Storks Feb 13, [214] 377; Question, Mr. Holt; Answer, Sir Henry Storks August 4, [217] 1518

Depot Centres—See title Army Regulation Act

Deputy Assistant Adjutant General for Musketry, Question, Mr. Malcolm; Answer, Mr. Cardwell June 18, [216] 999

Education of Officers—Sandhurst, Question, Observations, Lord De L'Isle and Dudley; Reply, The Marquess of Lansdowne; short debate thereon July 7, [216] 1835

Fighting between Soldiers, Question, Sir Wilfrid Lawson; Answer, Mr. Cardwell Feb 27, [214] 1033

Glanders at Leeds Barracks—The 12th Lancers, Questions, Colonel Barttelot, Colonel Leigh; Answers, Sir Henry Storks July 14, [217] 308

Gratuities—Army Circulars 1870-1872, Question, Major Arbuthnot; Answer, Mr. Cardwell Mar 8, [214] 1893

Gunpowder—Mr. Duffey's Invention, Question, Mr. Raikes; Answer, Sir Henry Storks July 24, [217] 906

Half Pay Officers, Question, Sir George Jenkins; Answer, Mr. Cardwell Mar 10, [214] 1614;—The Army List, Question, The Earl of Albemarle; Answer, The Marquess of Lansdowne; short debate thereon June 23, [216] 1239

[cont.]

[cont.]

ARM ARM { GENERAL INDEX } ARM ARM
214—215—216—217.

ARMY—cont.

Honorary Colonels of Cavalry Regiments, Question, Sir Lawrence Palk; Answer, Mr. Cardwell June 19, [216] 1168; Question, Sir Lawrence Palk; Answer, The Attorney General July 1, 1823; Question, Sir Lawrence Palk; Answer, Mr. Cardwell July 3, 1709

India

India—Claims of Indian Officers—The Bonus Fund, Question, Sir Charles Wingfield; Answer, Mr. Cardwell Feb 17, [214] 543

India—Length of Service, Question, Colonel Barttelot; Answer, Mr. Cardwell Feb 13, [214] 368;—Limitation of Age, Question, Mr. W. M. Torrens; Answer, Mr. Campbell-Bannerman July 11, [217] 209

[See title Army—Length of Service of Regiments in India]

Indian Officers—Siege of Lucknow, Question, Major Trench; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff June 26, [216] 1417

Majors of Artillery, Question, Sir David Wedderburn; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff May 2, [215] 1404

Majors of the Scientific Corps (India), Question, Major Arbuthnot; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff August 1, [217] 1438

Medical Officers—The Medical Warrant, Question, Sir Thomas Bazley; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff April 1, [215] 399

Supply of Breach-Loaders, Question, Lord Eustace Cecil; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff Mar 24, [215] 12

Troop Horses, Question, Sir Charles Wingfield; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff April 4, [215] 608

[See title India]

Ireland

Commander-in-Chief of the Forces in Ireland, Question, Mr. Anderson; Answer, Sir Henry Storks June 12, [216] 834; Question, Mr. Anderson; Answer, Mr. Cardwell June 28, 1411; July 21, [217] 657; Questions, Mr. Anderson, Mr. Otway; Answers, Mr. Cardwell July 31, 1828

Issue of Free Rations, Question, Major Arbuthnot; Answer, Mr. Cardwell August 1, [217] 1432

Kriegspiel, Question, Mr. H. Samuelson; Answer, Mr. Cardwell Mar 21, [214] 1963

Medical Department—Dental Surgery, Question, Dr. Brewer; Answer, Sir Henry Storks Feb 28, [214] 1095;—The Medical Warrant, Question, Major Arbuthnot; Answer, Mr. Cardwell May 1, [215] 1299; Question, Mr. R. Shaw; Answer, Sir Henry Storks May 15, 1821; Question, Mr. D. Dalrymple; Answer, Mr. Cardwell July 28, [217] 1088

[See title Army—Medical Officers of the Army]

Military Hospital at Portsmouth, Question, Sir James Elphinstone; Answer, Sir Henry Storks June 12, [216] 839

New Passage Hill, Devonport, Question, Mr. J. D. Lewis; Answer, Mr. Cardwell July 17, [217] 499

Pensioners from Woolwich Arsenal, Question, Mr. Board; Answer, Sir Henry Storks August 5, [217] 1563;—Gun Factory—Pensions to Widows of Artificers, Questions, Mr. Baillie Cochrane; Answers, Mr. Baxter July 14, 312

ARMY—cont.

Queen's and Indian Armies—Supersession of Colonels, Question, Colonel Barttelot; Answer, Mr. Cardwell May 6, [215] 1559

Regimental Facing and Badges, Question, Colonel North; Answer, Sir Henry Storks Feb 10, [214] 196; Feb 14, 440

Rifle Range, Colchester, Question, Colonel Learmonth; Answer, Sir Henry Storks June 12, [216] 838

Royal Arsenal (Woolwich)—Consumption of Coal, Question, Mr. Holt; Answer, Sir Henry Storks Feb 17, [214] 539

Royal Marine Artillery—Officers, Question, Mr. Henry Samuelson; Answer, Mr. Cardwell June 30, [216] 1555; Questions, Mr. Henry Samuelson; Answers, Mr. Goachen July 18, [217] 608

Royal Military Academy, Sandhurst—Examinations (1820)—Direct Commissions, Questions, Colonel Stuart Knox; Answer, Sir Henry Storks April 28, [216] 1025;—Insubordination, Questions, Mr. Trevelyan, Captain Archdall; Answers, Mr. Cardwell April 24, 901

Royal Military Academy, Woolwich—Examinations, Question, Colonel Beresford; Answer, Mr. Cardwell May 12, [215] 1783;—Examination Papers, Question, Captain Archdall; Answer, Sir Henry Storks May 19, [216] 100;—Selection of Subjects, Observations, Lord De Ros; Reply, The Marquess of Lansdowne July 7, 1839;—Gentlemen Cadets, Question, Colonel Beresford; Answer, Mr. Cardwell July 10, [217] 144;—Re-building, Question, Mr. Brush; Answer, Mr. Cardwell May 1, [215] 1298

Sale of Barracks, Question, Mr. O'Reilly; Answer, Sir Henry Storks April 28, [215] 1026

The Duke of York's School, Question, Sir Charles W. Dilke; Answer, Mr. Cardwell June 23, [216] 1248

The late Captain Charles Agnew—Compensation for Commission, Questions, Mr. Henry Samuelson; Answers, Mr. Cardwell July 14, [217] 314

The Military System of Belgium, Question, Sir George Jenkinson; Answer, Viscount Enfield July 28, [217] 804; Question, Mr. Dimsdale; Answer, Viscount Enfield August 1, 1436

The Mutiny Bill, Question, Mr. W. Johnston; Answer, Mr. Cardwell Feb 27, [214] 1083

The 21st R. N. B. Fusiliers, Question, Captain Talbot; Answer, Mr. Cardwell May 9, [215] 1713

The new Valise Equipment, Question, Lord Echo; Answer, Sir Henry Storks June 19, [216] 1165

The 9th Lancers—Case of the late Sub-Lieutenant Tribe, Questions, Observations, Lord Echo; Reply, Mr. Cardwell; debate thereon Feb 14, [214] 490

The Royal Engineers, Question, Colonel Learmonth; Answer, Mr. Cardwell July 21, [217] 661

Troop Ship "Scrapis"—The Scotch Fusilier Guards, Question, Sir John Pakington; Answer, Mr. Cardwell April 24, [215] 902

War Office—Chief Clerk, Military Department, Question, Mr. Watney; Answer, Mr. Cardwell July 28, [217] 1092

[cont.]

[cont.]

ARM ARM { SESSION 1873 } ARM ARM
 214—215—216—217.

ARMY—cont.

Army Re-organisation

Cavalry Sub-Lieutenants, Question, Sir Thomas Bateson; Answer, Mr. Cardwell July 14, [217] 317

Command of Sub-Districts, Question, Colonel North; Answer, Mr. Cardwell July 17, [217] 497

Exchanges—Hon. Captain Drummond, Question, Lord Echo; Answer, Mr. Cardwell August 1, [217] 1436

The 95th Regiment, Question, Lord Eustace Cecil; Answer, Mr. Cardwell May 6, [215] 1559

The 10th Hussars—Retirement of the Lieutenant-Colonel, Question, Mr. Anderson; Answer, Mr. Cardwell April 1, [215] 400

ARMY—Auxiliary Forces

Adjutants, Question, Mr. Muntz; Answer, Mr. Cardwell May 18, [215] 1871

Instruction to Officers, Question, Mr. Henry Samuelson; Answer, Mr. Cardwell Feb 27, [214] 1088

Militia

Question, Mr. Wingfield Baker; Answer, Mr. Cardwell Mar 25, [215] 110

County Regiments, Question, Colonel Corbett; Answer, Mr. Cardwell July 7, [216] 1864

First Devon Militia, Question, Sir Stafford Northcote; Answer, Mr. Cardwell July 10, [217] 149

Irish Militia, Question, Lord Dunsany; Answer, The Marquess of Lansdowne July 25, [217] 970

Militia Adjutants (Ireland), Question, Lord Claud Hamilton; Answer, Mr. Cardwell Mar 24, [215] 14

Militia Adjutants—Retirement Allowances, Question, Mr. Raikes; Answer, Mr. Campbell-Bannerman June 27, [216] 1495

Militia Bands, Question, Mr. Greville-Nugent; Answer, Mr. Campbell-Bannerman May 22, [216] 272

Militia Officers and the Line—General Orders, No. 52, 1872, Question, Colonel Corbett; Answer, Mr. Cardwell June 18, [216] 908

Militia Permanent Staff Sergeants, Question, Mr. Wingfield Baker; Answer, Mr. Cardwell Mar 3, [214] 1185

Militia Reserve—Annual Bounty, Question, Observations, The Marquess of Exeter; Reply, The Marquess of Lansdowne; short debate thereon June 16, [216] 986

Militia Storehouses, Question, Lord George Hamilton; Answer, Mr. Cardwell Feb 18, [214] 596

Militia Subalterns, Question, Colonel Stuart Knox; Answer, Mr. Cardwell June 19, [216] 1170

Militia Surgeons, Question, Mr. D. Dalrymple; Answer, Mr. Campbell-Bannerman April 29, [215] 1137

Retired Adjutants of Militia and Volunteers, Question, Lord Echo; Answer, Mr. Cardwell July 29, [217] 1173

Second Battalions of Militia Regiments, Question, Mr. Stanley; Answer, Mr. Cardwell July 24, [217] 987

7th Lancashire Militia, Question, The O'Donnells; Answer, Mr. Cardwell July 31, [217] 1334

ARMY—cont.

Volunteers

Autumn Manoeuvres—Extra Allowance to Volunteers, Question, Sir Thomas Bateson; Answer, Sir Henry Storks July 14, [217] 311

Brigade Drill, Question, Mr. Fordyce; Answer, Mr. Cardwell June 19, [216] 1160

Easter Monday Reviews, Question, Mr. Henry Samuelson; Answer, Mr. Cardwell Mar 4, [214] 1286; Observations, Questions, Lord Echo, Mr. Charley; Reply, Mr. Cardwell Mar 27, [215] 289; Questions, Mr. Charley; Answers, Mr. Cardwell Mar 28, 298

Reserve Forces Circular—Attendances, Question, Colonel C. H. Lindsay; Answer, Mr. Cardwell April 22, [215] 800

Volunteer Adjutants, Question, Colonel C. Lindsay; Answer, Mr. Cardwell June 18, [216] 910

Volunteer Bands, Question, Lord Echo; Answer, Mr. Cardwell June 9, [216] 637

Volunteer Officers—Vacancies, Question, Colonel C. H. Lindsay; Answer, Sir Henry Storks

May 5, [215] 1486

Yeomanry

Yeomanry Adjutants, Question, Captain Hood; Answer, Mr. Cardwell April 8, [215] 522;

Question, Mr. Brocklehurst; Answer, Mr. Cardwell July 28, [217] 1088;—Horse Duty,

Question, Mr. Monckton; Answer, Sir Henry Storks May 15, [215] 2022

Yeomanry and Volunteer Adjutants, Question, Sir Henry Selwin-Ibbetson; Answer, Mr. Cardwell Feb 27, [214] 1085

Yeomanry Uniforms, Question, Viscount Newport; Answer, Sir Henry Storks Feb 21, [214] 788

ARMY—Abolition of Purchase—Memorials of Officers

Address for, Return of the number of officers of the army who have memorialised His Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief with reference to their position and prospects consequent upon the abolition of purchase; and for, Copies of all letters from the generals commanding districts forwarding the said memorials (The Duke of Richmond) June 20, [216] 1223; after short debate, Motion agreed to (Parl. P. No. 196)

Questions, Sir John Pakington, Major Arbuth-

217] not; Answers, Mr. Cardwell July 10, 147

Moved that an humble Address be presented to

Her Majesty, praying Her Majesty that She will be graciously pleased to issue a Royal Commission to inquire into the allegations of the officers of Her Majesty's Army contained in the memorials mentioned in the Return made to this House (Parliamentary Paper 196.) as to the grievances which they state that they suffer consequent upon the abolition of purchase (The Duke of Richmond) July 21, 621; after debate, on Question? Cont. 129, Not-Cont. 46; M. 83; resolved in the affirmative

Division List, Cont. and Not-Cont. 646

The Queen's Answer to the Address reported by the Lord Steward July 28, 1067

Question, Major Arbuthnot; Answer, Mr.

Cardwell August 1, 1432; Question, Colonel

North; Answer, Sir Henry Storks August 5, 1561

[cont.]

ARM ARM [GENERAL INDEX] ARM ARM
214—215—216—217.

Army—City of London Volunteers—The Artillery Company's Drill Ground

Moved, "That Her Majesty's Government be requested to take such steps as they may deem necessary to obtain for the City of London Volunteers the use of the Artillery Ground in Finsbury at such times as it is not required by the Honourable Artillery Company or the City of London Militia" (Sir John Lubbock) April 22, [215] 810; after short debate, Motion withdrawn

Army—Control Department—Autumn Manoeuvres, 1872—Reports

Question, Major Arbuthnot; Answer, Sir Henry Storks Feb 13, [214] 377

Moved, "That an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty for, Copies of Reports made by Lieutenant General Sir Robert Walpole, Lieutenant General Sir John Michel, and the Generals commanding divisions, upon the working of the Control Department during the last Autumn Manoeuvres" (The Duke of Richmond) June 20, [216] 1220; after short debate, Motion withdrawn

Question, Mr. Holt; Answer, Sir Henry Storks August 4, [217] 1818

Army—Honorary Colonels

Moved, "That, inasmuch as it would greatly conduce to the diminution of our Military expenditure and the improvement of our Military organisation, that our establishment of officers, in all ranks, should be founded upon the actual requirements of the public service, the House is of opinion that no further appointments should be made to the honorary Colonels of regiments" (Mr. Trevelyan) May 6, [215] 1591; after debate, Question put; A. 40, N. 80; M. 40

Army—Length of Service of Regiments in India

Question, Colonel Barttelot; Answer, Mr. Cardwell Feb 13, [214] 388

Amendt. on Committee of Supply Feb 24, To leave out from "That," and add "in the opinion of this House, the term of Service of Regiments in India ought to be shortened" (Colonel Barttelot) v., [214] 838; Question proposed, "That the words, &c.;" after debate, Amendt. withdrawn

Limitation of Age, Question, Mr. W. M. Torrens; Answer, Mr. Campbell-Bannerman July 11, [217] 1209

Army—Medical Officers of the Army—Royal Warrant, 1858

Moved, "That an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty, praying that Her Majesty will be graciously pleased to take into her consideration the present position as regards rank and pay of the medical officers of the Army who volunteered and served on the West Coast of Africa between the years 1859 and 1867, in order that they may receive the benefit of the Royal Warrant signed the 1st of October 1858, of which they have hitherto been deprived" (The Earl De La Warr) July 15, [217] 392; after short debate, Motion withdrawn

Army—Medical Officers Service in Africa

Moved, "That an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty for, Return of the number of Medical Officers of the Army who volunteered and served on the West Coast of Africa between the years 1859 and 1867 under the Royal Warrant dated 1st of October 1858; also, Copy of the said Warrant which relates to medical services on the West Coast of Africa" (The Lord Buckhurst) June 12, [216] 829; after debate, Motion amended, and agreed to (Parl. P. No. 166)

Army—Militia Reserve

Moved, "That an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty, praying that the conditions under which militiamen were induced to enrol in the Militia Reserve Force during the years 1868, 1869, 1870, 1871, and 1872 may not be annulled retrospectively, as proposed by paragraph 1, clause 38, of the Auxiliary and Reserve Forces Circular, dated War Office, 21st April 1873, but that the operation of this clause shall commence only from the date of its issue" (The Earl of Galloway) July 7, [216] 1843; after short debate, Motion withdrawn

Army Regulation Act—Military Centres, Oxford

Question, Mr. Gathorne Hardy; Answer, Mr. Cardwell Feb 17, [214] 544; Question, Mr. Auberon Herbert; Answer, Mr. Cardwell May 20, [216] 171

Amendt. on Committee of Supply May 23, To leave out from "That," and add "a Select Committee be appointed to consider and report upon the reasons urged by Members of the University of Oxford against the selection of Oxford as a military centre, and also to consider and report upon the whole question of the advisability of selecting Oxford as a military centre" (Mr. Auberon Herbert) v., [216] 355; Question proposed, "That the words, &c.;" after debate, Question put; A. 134, N. 90; M. 44

Moved, "That an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty for, Copies of correspondence between the War Office and the Corporation of Oxford, or any other persons, concerning the purchase of a site for a Military Depot" (The Marquess of Salisbury) June 27, [216] 1489; after short debate, Motion agreed to (Parl. P. No. 236)

Depot Centres—Lincoln—Grantham, Question, Mr. Welby; Answer, Mr. Cardwell July 3, [216] 1706

Cost of Depot Centres, Question, Mr. Wharton; Answer, Mr. Cardwell June 19, [216] 1163

Army—The "Boxer-Shrapnell" Shell

Moved for, Copies of Correspondence in 1870-71 between the authorities at the War Office and Mr. W. Hope, V.C., late of the 7th Royal Fusiliers, relative to the shell adopted into the service, and officially known as the "Boxer Shrapnell," which Mr. Hope claims to be his invention, and substantially identical with a shell deposited by himself in charge of the late Superintendent of the Royal Laboratory, Woolwich Arsenal, in December, 1858:

[cont.]

ARM ATT { SESSION 1873 } ATT ATT
 214—215—216—217.

Army—The "Boxer-Shrapnell" Shell—cont.

Also for, Copies of any Correspondence between the authorities at the War Office and Major-General Boxer, or the Judge Advocate-General, or other Law Officer of the Crown, upon the above subject (The Earl of Longford) July 25, [217] 968; after short debate, the latter part of the Motion was withdrawn; Address agreed to (Parl. P. No. 278)

Army—The Cavalry Force

Amendt. on Committee of Supply June 6, To leave out from "That," and add "in the opinion of this House, considering the smallness of the Force, it is expedient to at once take steps for providing a sufficient reserve of men and horses for the Cavalry" (Mr. Reginald Talbot) v., [216] 552; Question proposed, "That the words, &c.;" after short debate, Question put; A. 128, N. 68; M. 60

Army—The Volunteer Force—The New Regulations

Amendt. on Committee of Supply July 11, To leave out from "That," and add, "it is expedient that inquiry should be made into the present state of the Volunteer Force, and into the causes that have led to the resignation of over 2,000 Officers' Commissions which are still vacant" (Colonel Charles Lindsay) v. [217] 229; Question proposed, "That the words, &c.;" after short debate, Question put, and agreed to

ASHETON, Mr. R., Clitheroe

Juries, Comm. cl. 5, Amendt. [216] 519
 Local Taxation, Motion for a Committee, [215] 1839
 Parliament—Electoral Power, Distribution of, Res. [215] 1582
 Register for Parliamentary and Municipal Electors, 2R. [214] 1958
 Salmon Fisheries, 2R. [214] 1375
 Turnpike Acts Continuance, &c. Comm. [217] 102
 Wild Birds Protection, Motion for a Committee, [215] 1189

ATTORNEY GENERAL, The (Sir J. D. Coleridge), Exeter

Adulteration of Food Act, 1872—Prosecutions, [216] 274
 Army—Cavalry Regiments, Honorary Colonels of, [216] 1623
 Criminal Law—Forged Telegrams, [217] 1322
 Shropshire Magistrates—Whitefoot, George, Case of, [215] 1766
 Tichborne Case, The—The Queen v. Castro—Prosecution for Contempt of Court, Explanation, [216] 1173
 East India Revenue Accounts, Comm. [217] 1600
 Election Petitions, Trial of—Canvassing by Judges, [217] 819
 Exhibition, 1851, Commissioners of—South Kensington, Land at, [216] 1169
 Galway Election Petition—Trial of Election Petitions, Res. [215] 987

ATTORNEY GENERAL, The—cont.

Infanticide Law Amendment, 2R. [215] 1987
 International Law—New Rules, Motion for an Address, [214] 2031, 2037, 2043
 Ireland—Dublin University, [215] 529
 Galway Election Prosecutions—Bishop Duggan, &c. [214] 788
 214] Juries, 2R. 547, 564
 215] Comm. cl. 1, 2071, 2072
 216] cl. 5, 516, 517, 518, 519, 520, 521, 522, 523, 524, 525, 526, 527; cl. 7, 528, 529; cl. 9, 530; cl. 41, 532; cl. 43, 533; cl. 45, 534, 539, 1505; cl. 52, Amendt. 1506, 1511, 1513, 1517; cl. 55, 1518; cl. 57, 1519, 1520; cl. 61, 1521; cl. 64, ib.
 217] 590
 Law of Evidence, 2R. [217] 1559
 Letters Patent, [214] 1182
 Married Women's Property Act (1870) Amendment, 2R. [214] 686
 Married Women's Property Act (1870) Amendment (No. 2), 2R. [214] 329
 Masters and Servants—Law of Contract, Res. [216] 692, 694
 Parliament—Breach of Privilege—"Pall Mall Gazette," Res. [215] 535
 Parliamentary and Municipal Electors, [216] 14
 Parliamentary Election Petitions, [214] 372
 Post Office Packet Vote—Churchward, Mr., Claim of, [216] 1706
 Railway and Canal Traffic—Lords Amendts. [216] 1301, 1305
 Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 3, [216] 1012, 1014; cl. 15, 1428
 214] Register for Parliamentary and Municipal Electors, 2R. 1947
 215] Comm. 292, 293; Re-comm. 715, 718, 719; cl. 3, 795; cl. 4, ib.; cl. 5, 959, 960; cl. 9, 962; cl. 10, 1692; cl. 13, ib.; cl. 19, 1694; add. cl. ib.
 Seduction Laws Amendment, 2R. [215] 479
 Spain—Loans to Political Parties, [214] 1096
 Supply—Patent Office, [215] 1021
     Post Office Packet Service, [216] 1500, 1502
 216] Supreme Court of Judicature, 2R. 640, 670, 686, 845, 852, 898; Comm. 1567, 1578; cl. 2, 1585; cl. 5, 1596, 1597, 1600; Amendt. 1623, 1626; Amendt. 1628, 1636; Amendt. 1637, 1638, 1641; cl. 6, 1740, 1746, 1747; cl. 13, 1750, 1751; cl. 17, 1752; Motion for reporting Progress, 1756; cl. 18, 1787; cl. 22, 1801; cl. 24, 1866, 1871; cl. 26, 1872, 1873; cl. 28, 1878; Amendt. 1880, 1881, 1884; cl. 31, Amendt. 1885, 1886, 1888, 1889
 217] cl. 31, 39; cl. 39, Amendt. 40; cl. 44, 43; cl. 45, 44; cl. 46, 45; cl. 50, 49, 50, 51; cl. 52, 52; cl. 54, 178, 179, 180; cl. 57, 181, 182; cl. 61, 186; cl. 74, 189; cl. 75, 190, 215, 216, 217, 218, 219; cl. 78, 220, 223; cl. 79, 225; cl. 80, ib.; cl. 31, Amendt. 226, 227; add. cl. 321, 322, 334, 336, 338, 340, 341, 342; Consid. 670; cl. 22, Amendt. ib.; cl. 55, 683; cl. 79, Amendt. 684, 685
 Trades Unions—Amalgamated Society of Engineers, [215] 220
 Tribunal of Commerce, [214] 439
 Wild Birds Protection Act—Penalties, [216] 100

[cont.]

AUS AYE { GENERAL INDEX } AYT BAL
 214--215--216--217.

- Australasian Colonies (Customs Duties)
- Bill (Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen, Mr. Secretary Bruce)
  - c. Considered in Committee; Bill ordered; read 1st Mar 27 [Bill 106]
  - Read 2nd April 3
  - Committee; Report April 28
  - Considered May 1
  - Read 3rd May 2
  - l. Read 1st (Earl of Kimberley) May 5 (No. 91)
  - Bill read 2nd, after debate May 15, [215] 1998
  - Committee; Report May 20, [215] 158
  - Read 3rd May 28
  - Royal Assent May 28 [36 Vict. c. 29]
- AYTON, Right Hon. A. S. (Chief Commissioner of Works), *Tower Hamlets
- East India Revenue Accounts, Comm. [217] 1405
  - Epping Forest, 2R. [214] 565, 568
  - Epping Forest—Expenditure and Charges, [217] 1383
  - Exhibition, 1851, Commissioners of—South Kensington, Land at, [216] 1168
  - Hampton Court Green, [215] 9
  - Metropolis—Questions, &c.
  - Bethnal Green Museum, [217] 607
  - Green Park, [215] 1137
  - Hyde Park—The Serpentine, [214] 601;—Bathing in, [217] 1254
  - National Gallery—New Buildings, Flooring of, [216] 1171
  - New Courts of Justice, [214] 197; [216] 399;—Revised Designs, [217] 399
  - Palace of Westminster, [216] 991
  - Parliament Street, [217] 495, 496
  - Street Traffic Regulation—Hyde Park, [216] 499
  - Ordnance Survey, [215] 1484;—Sutherlandshire, [216] 1708; [217] 37
  - Palace of Westminster—Decoration of Central Hall, [215] 648
  - Frescoes, [217] 1326, 1327
  - Houses of Parliament—Facilities for Visiting the, [217] 1526
  - Parks Regulation Act—New Rules, [214] 211, 215, 216
  - Parks Regulation Act—Meetings in the Parks, Motion for an Address, [215] 268, 277
  - Royal Academy—The Gibson Bequest, [217] 493
  - South Kensington Museum—Cole, Mr., Retirement of, [217] 152
  - South Kensington—Natural History Museum, [214] 595; [217] 1174, 1175, 1255
  - Supply—British Embassy Houses, [215] 1006
  - Houses of Parliament, [215] 780, 781, 782, 783, 784, 785
  - Metropolitan Police Courts, [215] 791
  - Natural History Museum, [215] 790
  - New Courts of Justice, &c., [215] 792; [217] 1099, 1100
  - New Offices, Downing Street, [215] 786
  - New Palace at Westminster, [217] 1128, 1129, 1262, 1271
  - Public Buildings, [215] 778
  - Public Departments, [215] 779
  - Royal Parks &c., [215] 777, 778
  - Survey of the United Kingdom, [215] 787
  - Works and Buildings, [215] 786
  - Valuation Department (Ireland), Res. [215] 430
- AYTOOUN, Mr. R. Sinclair, *Kirkcaldy, &c.
- Colonies, The, Motion for a Committee, [214] 1111
  - Diplomatic Relations with the Vatican, Motion for Papers, [214] 440
  - Foreign Powers, Treaties with, Res. [214] 1309
- BAGGALLAY, Sir R., *Surrey, Mid.
- Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. add. cl. [216] 1434, 1443
  - 216] Supreme Court of Judicature, 2R. 685, 853, 856; Comm. cl. 5, Amendt. 1586, 1594; cl. 6, 1641, 1744; cl. 17, Amendt. 1751; cl. 22, 1800; cl. 28, 1876, 1877
  - 217] cl. 50, 47; cl. 52, Amendt. 51; cl. 60, 184
- BAGWELL, Mr. J., *Clement
- General Valuation (Ireland), 2R. [215] 1639
  - Parliament—Order of Business, [216] 1312
  - Railway and Canal Traffic, Lords Amendts. [216] 1306
  - Union Rating (Ireland), 2R. [214] 758
  - University Tests (Dublin) (No. 3), Comm. [215] 1525
- BAILEY, Sir J. R., *Herefordshire
- Juries, Comm. cl. 5, [216] 519
  - Police—Radnor Constabulary, [215] 1299
  - Public Health Act, 1872—Royal Engineers, [215] 1678
- BAINES, Mr. E., *Leeds
- British Museum—Duplicate Books, [217] 1178
  - Elementary Education Act Amendment, Rec. comm. cl. 3, [217] 782; 3R. 1020
  - Municipal Elections (Cumulative Vote), 2R. [217] 487
  - Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 4, [216] 1177
  - Supply—British Museum, [217] 1147, 1148
  - Weights and Measures (Metric System), 2R. [217] 462
- BAKER, Mr. R. B. Wingfield, *Essex, S.
- Army—Militia, [215] 110
  - Militia Permanent Staff Surgeons, [214] 1185
  - Elementary Education Act—Music in Training Schools, Examination in, [217] 1086
- BALFOUR, General Sir G., *Aberdeenshire
- Army—New Army Plan, [214] 1186
  - Army—Length of Service (India), Res. [214] 864
  - Army Estimates—Administration of the Army, [216] 1269, 1292
  - Land Forces, [214] 1092
  - Warlike Stores, [216] 1272
  - Central Asia, Motion for an Address, [215] 878
  - Chinese Opium Trade, [216] 395
  - Church of Scotland (Patronage), Res. [216] 1101
  - Consolidated Fund (Appropriation), 2R. [217] 1583, 1584
  - Departmental Expenditure—Purchase and Sale of Stores, Motion for a Committee, [214] 813
  - East India Loan, Comm. [215] 1109

[cont.]

BAL BAL { SESSION 1873 } BAL BAR
 214—215—216—217.

BALFOUR, General Sir G.—cont.

- East India Revenue Accounts, Comm. [217] 1482, 1608
- Hypotheo Abolition (Scotland), 2R. [216] 1345
- India—Euphrates Valley Railway, Res. [215] 811
- India—Officering of the Indian Army, Motion for an Address, [217] 1045
- India—Railway Gauge, Res. [214] 1551
- Labourers Cottages (Scotland), 2R. [216] 1144
- Navy Estimates—Naval Stores, [216] 444
- Public Expenditure, Res. [214] 653
- Revenue and Expenditure—Weekly Returns, [217] 312
- Roads and Bridges (Scotland), 2R. [216] 818
- Supply—Civil Service Estimates, [214] 2058
- Consular Establishments Abroad, &c. [217] 1105, 1109
- Taxes on Locomotion, Res. [215] 444
- Ways and Means, Comm. [215] 953

Ballot Act

- Boards of Guardians—Voting Papers, Question, Mr. Bourke; Answer, Mr. Hibbert July 24, [217] 918
- Declaration of the State of the Polls, Notice, Lord Denman August 4, [217] 1614
- University Elections, Question, Mr. Hardcastle; Answer, Mr. W. E. Forster July 7, [216] 1862

BALL, Right Hon. J. T., Dublin University

- Board of Education (Ireland)—O'Keeffe, Rev. Mr., Motion for a Committee, [215] 2044
- Conspiracy Law Amendment, Lords Amendts. [217] 1543
- Conveyancing (Scotland), Comm. [215] 1697
- Crown Private Estates, 2R. [217] 714
- Ireland—Galway Election Petition—Trial of Election Petitions, Res. [215] 985
- Ireland—Irish Railways, Purchase of, Res. [215] 1182
- Juries (Ireland) Act, Motion for a Committee, [215] 326
- Landed Estates Court (Ireland) (Judges), 2R. [217] 956
- Masters and Servants—Law of Contract, Res. [216] 600
- Minors Protection, 2R. [216] 1377
- Municipal Franchise (Ireland), 2R. [215] 889
- Parliament—Business of the House, [216] 1232
- Privilege—Appellate Jurisdiction of the House of Lords, [217] 352
- Peace Preservation (Ireland), Comm. [216] 68; cl. 2, Proviso, 69, 71, 72
- Railway and Canal Traffic, Lords Amendts. [216] 1303
- Superannuation Act Amendment, Comm. cl. 1, [215] 1704
- Supply—Metropolitan Police of Dublin, [217] 1143
- New Palace of Westminster, [217] 1126

- 216} Supreme Court of Judicature, 2R. 685, 865;
- Comm. 1565; cl. 5, 1592, 1605, 1628, 1628;
- cl. 6, 1738, 1741; cl. 18, 1789; cl. 28, 1797,
- 1798, 1800; cl. 24, 1869; cl. 29, 1879,
- 1882; cl. 31, 1887.
- 217} cl. 44, 48, 49; cl. 50, 48; cl. 54, 179;
- cl. 60, 185; cl. 74, 189; cl. 91, 237; add.
- cl. 330, 338; Schedule cl. 943; Comaid.
- cl. 22, 676

BALL, Right Hon. J. T.—cont.

- *University Education (Ireland), 2R. Amendt. [214] 1634
- University Tests (Dublin) (No. 3), 2R. [215] 782; Comm. 1626; cl. 3, 1634
- Valuation Department (Ireland), Res. [215] 429

BANGOR, Bishop of

- Endowed Schools Commissioners—Denbigh Free Grammar School, Motion for an Address, [217] 592

Bank Act—The Cheque Bank

- Question, Mr. Biddulph; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer June 26, [216] 1418

Bank of England Notes Bill

- (Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Baxter)
- c. Considered in Committee; Bill ordered; read 1st June 12 [Bill 191]
- Bill withdrawn * July 7

Bank of England Returns

- Question, Mr. J. B. Smith; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer May 26, [216] 429

BARCLAY, Mr. J. W., Forfarshire

- Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act, Motion for a Committee, [214] 515
- Hypotheo Abolition (Scotland), 2R. [216] 1353
- Labourers Cottages (Scotland), 2R. [216] 1148
- Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 3, [216] 1025
- Scotland—Northern Lights Commissioners, [217] 313
- Wild Birds Protection, Motion for a Committee, [215] 1188
- Woods and Forests, Office of—Crown Feuds (Scotland), [215] 1788

BARNETT, Mr. H., Woodstock

- Army—Military Centres—Oxford, Motion for a Committee, [216] 373
- Army—9th Lancers—Case of the late Sub-Lieutenant Tribe, [214] 502
- Army Estimates—Non-Effective Services, [216] 1298
- Yeomanry Cavalry, [214] 1158
- Customs—Tobacco (Unpaid Duties), [215] 1677
- Navy (Promotion and Retirement), Motion for a Committee, [216] 794
- Ways and Means—Financial Statement, Comm. [215] 708

BARTTELOT, Colonel W. B., Sussex, W.
 Agricultural Children, 2R. [214] 701; Comm. cl. 4, Amendt. [215] 1458; cl. 11, Amendt. ib.

- Army—Glanders at Leeds Barracks, [217] 308
- Queen's and Indian Armies, [215] 1550
- Army—Cavalry Force, Res. [216] 569
- Army—Length of Service (India), [214] 808; Res. 838, 850, 855

[cont.]

[cont.]

BAR BAS { GENERAL INDEX } BAS BAT
 214—215—216—217.

BARTTELOT, Colonel W. B.—cont.

- Army Estimates—Administration of the Army, [216] 1295
- Control Establishments—Wages, &c. [216] 1257
- Land Forces, [214] 1079, 1080, 1083, 1151
- Pay and Allowances, [214] 1155
- Volunteer Corps, [214] 1158
- Warlike Stores, [216] 1278
- Works, Buildings, &c. [216] 1278
- Customs and Inland Revenue, Comm. cl. 1, [215] 1686
- Elementary Education Act Amendment, Re-comm. cl. 3, [217] 779
- India—Banda and Kirwee Prize Money, [216] 273
- Ireland—Irish Railways, Purchase of, Res. [215] 1175
- Juries, Comm. cl. 5, Amendt. [216] 519
- Local Taxation, Motion for a Committee, [215] 1839
- Malt Tax, [214] 1946
- Married Women's Property Act (1870) Amendment (No. 2), Comm. Motion for Adjournment, [214] 1365
- Municipal Officers Superannuation, 2R. [214] 1372
- Parliament—Business of the House, Motion for a Committee, [215] 242; [216] 1282
- Portugal—Supplies of Ammunition, [217] 499
- Post Office—Mail Contracts—Cape and Zanzibar, [216] 1422; [217] 1553
- Public Health, 2R. [215] 1707; Comm. [217] 92
- Rating (Liability and Value)—Valuation—Consolidated Rate, Leave, [215] 1519; Comm. [216] 726; cl. 3, 922, 1008, 1014, 1019, 1081; cl. 13, 1235; cl. 15, 1425; Re-comm. [217] 614; 3R. 685
- Register for Parliamentary and Municipal Electors, Comm. Motion for Adjournment, [215] 293
- Superannuation Act Amendment, Comm. [215] 1702
- Supply—Alabama Claims, [216] 411
- Convict Establishments, [217] 1135; Amendt. 1136
- Dover Harbour, [217] 1230
- Education, England and Wales, [216] 1458
- Metropolitan Police of Dublin, [217] 1141
- Post Office, [214] 2060
- Supreme Court of Judicature, Comm. cl. 24, [216] 1866
- Turnpike Acts Continuance, &c., Comm. [216] 1757
- Waye and Means—Financial Statement, Comm. [215] 672, 673, 945

BASS, Mr. M. A., Staffordshire, E.
 Railways—Case of James Harris, [214] 722

BASS, Mr. M. T., Derby Bo.
 Hypothec Abolition (Scotland), 2R. [216] 1373
 Railways—Hours of Work—Case of Edwin Chivers, [214] 375

BASSETT, Mr. F., Bedfordshire
 Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act, Motion for a Committee, [214] 513
 Occasional Sermons, 2R. [215] 1980

BASTARDY LAWS Amendment Bill
 (Mr. Charley, Mr. Thomas Hughes, Mr. Eykyn, Mr. Whitewell)

- c. Ordered; read 1st Feb 7 [Bill 33]
- Read 2nd Feb 13, [214] 429
- Committee*; Report Feb 20 [Bill 75]
- Considered * Feb 24
- Read 3rd Feb 26
- l. Read 1st (The Earl of Shaftesbury) Feb 27
- Read 2nd Mar 3 (No. 29)
- Moved, "That the House be put into a Committee" Mar 6; after short debate, Committee put off
- Committee; Report, after debate Mar 24, [215] 1
- Committee* (on re-comm.); Report Mar 27 (Nos. 44-50)
- Read 3rd Mar 28
- Commons Amendts. to Lords Amendts. and Reasons considered April 4, 599; Debate adjourned (No. 60)
- Debate resumed April 21; Amendts. to which the Commons disagree, not insisted on; Commons Amendts. to Lords Amendts. agreed to (No. 63)
- Royal Assent April 24 [38 Vict. c. 9]

BASTARDY LAWS—Legislation

Question, Mr. Charley; Answer, Mr. Stanfield May 8, [215] 1680

BATES, Mr. E., Plymouth

- Merchant Shipping Act—Rules of the Road at Sea, Res. [215] 268
- Merchant Shipping Acts Amendment, Comm. cl. 4, [217] 1024; cl. 15, 1026
- Navy—Admiralty Administration, Res. [214] 967
- Navy—Naval Reserves, Motion for a Committee, [215] 567

BATESON, Sir T., Devizes

- Army—Autumn Manoeuvres—Extra Allowance to Volunteers, [217] 311
- Cavalry Sub-Lieutenants, [217] 317
- Geneva Arbitration—Presentation to the Arbitrators, [216] 500, 1558, 1557
- Metropolis—Knightsbridge Barracks, Millbank and Hyde Park, [217] 1329, 1330

BATH, Marquess of

- Agricultural Children, 2R. [216] 720; Comm. add. cl. 1156
- Children's Employment in Dangerous Performances, 2R. [216] 1244
- Public Worship Facilities, Standing Order No. 34a, [216] 162
- Regulation of Railways (Prevention of Accidents), 2R. [214] 591
- Revising Barristers, Comm. cl. 4, Amendt. [217] 972

BATH AND WELLS, Bishop of Endowed Schools Commissioners—King Edward VI's Grammar School, Motion for an Address, [216] 94

BAX BAX { SESSION 1873 } BAX BEA
 214—215—216—217.

BAXTER, Right Hon. W. E. (Secretary to the Treasury), Montrase, &c.
 Army—Gun Factory, Woolwich—Pensions to Widows of Artificers, [217] 312
 Blackwater Bridge (Composition of Debt), 2R. [216] 1606
 Criminal Law—Convict Labour at Dartmoor, [217] 900
 Customs and Inland Revenue, Comm. [215] 1686
 Customs Department (Salaries), [215] 1788
 Customs Outport Clerks, Res. Report, [217] 1239
 Departmental Expenditure—Purchase and Sale of Stores, Motion for a Committee, [214] 814
 General Valuation (Ireland), Leave, [214] 579, 581; 2R. [215] 1840; Comm. [216] 1338
 Ireland—Questions, &c.
     Board of Works, [215] 526
     Civil Service, [214] 154
     Dublin and Kingstown Railways, [216] 1658
     English Records Relating to, [216] 101
     Land Tax—Chairmen of Counties, [217] 496
     Railways, [216] 1310
 Ireland—Valuation Department Res. [215] 425
 Local Taxation—Criminal Prosecutions, Court of, [215] 1788
 Metropolis—Bethnal Green Museum—Turner Drawings, The, [214] 1283
 Patent Rights—International Conference, Vienna, [217] 1328
 Post Office and Telegraph Departments—Financial Irregularities, [216] 429
 Public Works Loans—England and Ireland, [217] 997
 Revenue and Expenditure—Weekly Returns, [217] 318
 Revenue Departments—Superannuations, [215] 2019
 Russia—Crimea, British Graves in the, [215] 1762
 Salmon Fishing, Crown, [216] 1227, 1228, 1412
 Scotland—Dumfries—Hannahfield Estate, [215] 234
     Fishery Board—Branding Fees, [217] 1327
 Stipendiary Magistrates—Salford and Manchester, [216] 997
 Superannuation Act Amendment, Comm. [215] 1700
 Supply—Anstruther Harbour, [215] 1004
     British Museum, [217] 1147
     Charity Commission, [215] 1015
     Civil Contingencies Fund, [214] 573
     Civil Service Commission, [215] 1016
     Civil Service Estimates, [214] 2056
     Customs Department, [215] 1818
     Endowed Schools Commission, [215] 1797
     Government Property, Rates on, [215] 788
     Harbours, &c. [215] 787
     Inland Revenue, [215] 1819
     Law Officers, &c. [215] 1771
     Learned Societies, [215] 1798
     Legal Charges (Ireland), [217] 1146
     Lighthouses Abroad, [215] 1005
     Miscellaneous Expenses, [215] 1818
     New Courts of Justice, &c., Motion for reporting Progress, [215] 793
     New Palace at Westminster, [217] 1273

[cont.]

BAXTER, Right Hon. W. E.—cont.
 Post Office, [214] 2059, 2060
 Privy Council for Trade, &c. [215] 1010, 1012
 Public Works in Ireland, [215] 1004
 Registrar General of Births, &c. [215] 1016
 Salaries, &c. of Temporary Commissions, [215] 1816, 1817
 Stationery, Printing, &c. [214] 569, 570, 571
 Superannuation Allowances, [215] 1814, 1815
 Temporary Commissions, [217] 1150
 Tonnage Bounties, &c. [214] 572
 Tonnage Duties, [215] 1813
 Ways and Means—Customs—Tobacco (Unpaid Duties), [215] 1877;—Sugar Duties Resolutions, 801; Report, 1307, 1313
 Woods and Forests, Office of—Crown Estates (Scotland), [215] 1789

BAZLEY, Sir T., Manchester

Africa (West Coast)—Lagos, [215] 971
 Army—Indian Medical Officers, [215] 399
 East India Finance Committee, Second Report, [215] 1874
 Factory Acts Amendment, 2R. [217] 1308
 Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 13, [216] 1193
 Weights and Measures (Metric System), 2R. [217] 461

BEACH, Sir M. E. HICKS-, Gloucestershire, E.

Elementary Education Act—Pauper Children, School Fees of, [216] 1709
 Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment, 2R. [217] 586
 Endowed Schools Act, [214] 154
 Endowed Schools Act Amendment, Comm. add. cl. [217] 952; Amendt. 958
 Municipal Boroughs Extension, 2R. [217] 121
 Public Health, Comm. [217] 94
 Railway and Canal Traffic, Comm. cl. 24, [215] 594; add. cl. 596
 Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. Motion for reporting Progress, [216] 749, 750; cl. 3, Motion for reporting Progress, 1017, 1019, 1023, 1076, 1078, 1079; Amendt. 1080, 1083; Consid. [217] 421
 Sanitary Laws, Digest of, [214] 154
 Turnpike Acts Continuance, &c., Comm. [216] 1766, 1768
 University Education (Ireland), 2R. [214] 1269
 Vaccination Act (1871), [216] 1063, 1064

BEACH, Mr. W. W. B., Hampshire, N.

Agricultural Children, 3R. [215] 1709
 Edinburgh, Duke of—The Queen's Message, [217] 1188
 Household Franchise (Counties), 2R. [217] 826
 Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 3, [216] 1005, 1021; Consid. [217] 421

BEA BEN { GENERAL INDEX } BEN BID
 214—215—216—217.

- BEAUCHAMP, Earl
 Elementary Education Provisional Order Confirmation (No. 1), Report, cl. 1, Amendt. [217] 742
 Endowed Schools Act Amendment, Comm. cl. 15, Amendt. [217] 1418
 Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister, 2R. Amendt. [214] 1878, 1879
 Public Worship Facilities—Standing Order No. 34a. [216] 163
- BEAUMONT, Major F. E. B., Durham, S.
 Army—Moncreiff Gun Carriages, [214] 440
 Army Estimates—Land Forces, [214] 1130
 Warlike Stores, [216] 1271, 1278
 South Kensington Museum, [217] 1174, 1175, 1255
- BEAUMONT, Mr. W. B., Northumberland, S.
 Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 3, [216] 1073
- Belgium—Army Re-organization
 Question, Sir George Jenkinson; Answer, Viscount Enfield July 28, [217] 804; Question, Mr. Dimsdale; Answer, Viscount Enfield August 1, 1436
- BELMORE, Earl of
 Australian Colonies (Customs Duties), 2R. [215] 2009; Comm. cl. 2, [216] 184
 Colonial Church, 2R. [216] 490
 Landlord and Tenant (Ireland) Act, 1870, Motion for Returns, [214] 482
 Lands Improvement Acts (Ireland), Motion for a Return, [214] 144
 Railway and Canal Traffic, Comm. cl. 19, [215] 1847
 South Sea Islanders, [216] 428, 1693
 South Sea Islands—Outrages on the Natives, Address for Papers, [214] 185
- BENTINCK, Mr. G. A. F. Cavendish, Whitehaven
 Geneva Award—Arbitrators, [214] 1618;—Present to, [217] 907
 Parks Regulation Act—Meetings in the Parks, Motion for an Address, [215] 286
 Parliament — Public Business, [216] 1498; [217] 688
 Parliament—Business of the House (Committee of Supply), Res. [214] 265
 Parliament—Count Out, The, Motion for Adjournment, [217] 1474
 Parliament—Easter Vacation, Motion for Adjournment, [215] 653
 Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 3, [216] 1030, 1031
 Seduction Laws Amendment, 2R. Amendt. [215] 471, 473, 488
 Supply—British Museum, [217] 1148
     Embassies and Missions Abroad, Amendt. [217] 1148
     New Courts of Justice, &c. [217] 1099
     Post Office Services, [217] 1122
     Report, [216] 479
 Supreme Court of Judicature, Comm. cl. 17, Motion for reporting Progress, [216] 1755, 1756; cl. 50, [217] 50; cl. 74, 189, 190; cl. 75, 219
- BENTINCK, Mr. G. W. P., Norfolk, W.
 Collisions at Sea—Legislation, [214] 373
 Commercial Marine, Motion for an Address, [214] 1349
 Mercantile Marine—Lights in the Channel, Res. [215] 1731, 1732
 Merchant Shipping Act—Rules of the Road at Sea, Res. [215] 248, 250, 260
 Navy—Half-Pay of Officers, [215] 28, 29
     H.M.S. "Devastation," [215] 576, 579, 589
     Trotman, Mr., and the Admiralty, [216] 546
 Navy Estimates—Admiralty Office, [216] 112, 113
     Dockyards, &c. [216] 140
     Men, and Boys, [215] 80
     Naval Stores, [216] 489
 Parliament—Address in Answer to the Speech, [214] 133
     Order of Business, [214] 1945; [215] 226
 Parliament—Business of the House (Committee of Supply), Res. [214] 253
 Parliament—Easter Vacation, Motion for Adjournment, [215] 650
 Public Expenditure, Res. [214] 651
 Railway and Canal Traffic, 2R. [214] 1050; Comm. [215] 366
 Supply—Alabama Claims, Motion for reporting Progress, [216] 410, 412; Report, 456, 473
 University Education (Ireland), [214] 1617; 2R. Amendt. 1880
 Ways and Means, Comm. [215] 939
- BERESFORD, Colonel F. M., Southwark
 Army—Woolwich Royal Military Academy Examinations, [215] 1785;—Cadets, [217] 144.
 Burials, 2R. [215] 213
 Civil Service Writers, Case of the, [216] 843
 Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister, 2R. [214] 328
 Mercantile Marine—Distress Ship Signals, [215] 1785
 Merchant Shipping Act—Thames Pilots, [216] 1860
 Parliament—Business of the House (Tuesday Sittings), Res. [214] 286
 Railway and Canal Traffic, Leave, [214] 243
 Taxes on Locomotion, Res. [215] 450
- BESSEBOOUGH, Earl of (Lord Steward of the Household)
 Endowed Schools Commissioners—King Edward VI.'s Grammar School, Birmingham—Her Majesty's Answer to Address, [216] 414
 Officers of Her Majesty's Army—Abolition of Purchase—Her Majesty's Answer to Address, [217] 1067
- Bethnal Green Museum — The Turner Drawings
 Questions, Mr. Charles Reed; Answers, Mr. Baxter, Mr. W. E. Forster Mar 4, [214] 1288
- Betting Houses Bill—*afterwards
Betting Houses (Scotland) Bill
 (Mr. Thomas Hughes, Dr. Lyon Playfair, Mr. Miller, Mr. Anderson, Mr. Bourring)
 c. Ordered; read 1st June 9 [Bill 185]
 Bill withdrawn * July 31
- BIDDULPH, Mr. M., Herefordshire
 Bank Act—The Cheque Bank, [216] 1418

BIR BON SESSION 1878} BON BOU
214-215-216-217.

BIRLEY, Mr. H., Manchester

Elementary Education Act Amendment, Re-comm. cl. 8, [217] 773; 2R. 1007
Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 18, [216] 1194; add. cl. 1439

BLACHFORD, Lord

Colonial Church, 2R. [216] 484, 493

Blackwater Bridge Bill

(Mr. Montague Guest, Sir John Estronde)

c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> May 28 [Bill 176]

Read 2<sup>o</sup> June 16

Bill committed to a Select Committee*; Committee nominated June 19 as follows:— Mr. Seymour (Chairman), Sir Colman O'Loghlen, Mr. Stone; Colonel Walker, Mr. Edward Wells added by Committee of Selection

Report of Select Comm. June 26 [Bill 218]

Re-comm.—2R. June 30

Report* July 1

Considered* July 2

Read 3<sup>o</sup> July 3

i. Read 1<sup>o</sup> (M. of Lansdowne) July 4 (No. 197)

Read 2<sup>o</sup> July 8

Committee*; Report July 17

Read 3<sup>o</sup> July 18

Royal Assent July 21 [36 & 37 Vict. c. 46]

Blackwater Bridge [Composition of Debt] Bill

(Mr. Baxter, Mr. William Henry Gladstone)

c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> May 26 [Bill 177]
Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>, after short debate June 30, [216] 1605

Committee*; Report July 3

Read 3<sup>o</sup> July 4

i. Read 1<sup>o</sup> (Marquess of Lansdowne) July 7

Read 2<sup>o</sup> July 10 (No. 199)

Committee*; Report July 11

Read 3<sup>o</sup> July 15

Royal Assent July 21 [36 & 37 Vict. c. 47]

BLENNERHASSETT, Sir R., Galway Bo.

*University Education (Ireland), 2R. Amendt. [214] 1450

BLENNERHASSETT, Mr. R. P., Kerry

*Parliament—Electoral Power, Distribution of, [215] 1588

University Education (Ireland), 2R. Amendt. [214] 1672

Board of Trade

Fog Signals, Question, Mr. Eastwick; Answer,

Mr. Chichester Fortescue Feb 7, [214] 152

Register of Shipping Office—Third Class Clerks,

Question, Lord George Hamilton; Answer,

Mr. Chichester Fortescue July 21, [217] 662

[See titles Mercantile Marine Merchant Shipping Acts]

BONHAM-CARTER, Mr. J. (Chairman of Committees of Ways and Means), Winchester

Army—Autumn Manoeuvres—Billeting, [217] 500

Army Estimates—Land Forces, [214] 1134

BONHAM-CARTER, Mr. J.—cont.

Charing Cross and Victoria Embankment Approach, Motion for a Committee, [214] 1030

Crown Private Estates, Comm. cl. 1, [217] 1000, 1001

Elementary Education Act Amendment, Re-comm. cl. 3, [217] 775

Endowed Schools Act Amendment, Comm. cl. 15, [217] 948

Juries, Comm. cl. 45, [216] 534

Navy Estimates—Scientific Branch, [217] 1286, 1287

Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 3, [216] 932, 1019, 1021, 1022

Supply—Bankruptcy Court, London, [215] 1775, 1776

Charity Commission, [215] 1014

Embassy Houses at Vienna and Washington, [217] 1131

Post Office Packet Service, [216] 1502

Supreme Court of Judicature, Comm. cl. 5, [216] 1638; cl. 12, 1748

BOORD, Mr. T. W., Greenwich

Woolwich Arsenal, Pensioners from, [217] 1563

Borough Franchise (Ireland) Bill

(Mr. Callan, Mr. Mitchell Henry, Mr. Downing)

c. Ordered* April 1

Read 1<sup>o</sup> April 2 [Bill 118]

Moved, “That the Order for 2R. be discharged” (Colonel Stuart Know) May 21, [216] 268; after short debate, Question put; A. 108, N. 128; M. 20; 2R. deferred 2R. [Dropped]

BOURKE, Hon. R., Lynn Regis

Ballot Act—Boards of Guardians—Voting Papers, [217] 918

*Central Asia, Motion for an Address, [215] 863;—Atrek Valley, [216] 841

East India Revenue Accounts, Comm. [217] 1459

Education Department—Advertisements, [215] 1027

India—Offering of the Indian Army, Motion for an Address, [217] 1028, 1058

India—Railway Gauge, Res. [214] 1554

Juries (Ireland) Act, Motion for a Committee, [215] 328

Married Women's Property Act (1870) Amendment, 2R. [214] 677

Parliament—Public Business, [215] 1789; [217] 668

Post Office—Mail Contracts—Cape and Zanzibar, [216] 1416

Railway and Canal Traffic, Lords Amends. [216] 1304

Supply—British Museum, [217] 1147, 1148

Supreme Court of Judicature, Comm. [216] 1568, 1584; cl. 2, Amendt. ib.; cl. 6, 1735; Amendt. 1740, 1741; cl. 18, 1796

University Education (Ireland), 2R. Amendt. [214] 1194, 1615

BOURNE, Lieut.-Colonel J., Evesham

Post Office—Telegrams in French, [215] 1139

[cont.]

BOU      BOW      { GENERAL INDEX }      BOW      BRA
 214—215—216—217.

BOUVERIE, Right Hon. E. P., Kilmar- nock, &c.
 Board of Education (Ireland)—O'Keeffe, Rev.
 Mr., [215] 1140, 1720; Motion for a Committee, Amendt. 2032, 2034, 2054; [216] 102; Nomination of Committee, 323, 328, 1711; [217] 210, 213
 Charing Cross and Victoria Embankment Approach, Consid. [215] 2016
 Commercial Marine, Motion for an Address, [214] 1856
 Crown Private Estates, 2R. [217] 702, 703
 Duke of Edinburgh's Annuity, 2R. [217] 1350
 Juries, Comm. cl. 45, [216] 537
 Law Agents (Scotland), Comm. cl. 2, Amendt. [216] 541; cl. 5, 545; cl. 11, 615; cl. 19, 616
 Parliament—Questions, &c.
     Address in Answer to the Speech, [214] 140
     Ascension Day, [216] 172
     Morning Sittings, [216] 435
     Privilege — Appellate Jurisdiction of the House of Lords, [217] 165, 345
     Public Business, [217] 667, 1837
     Strangers ordered to withdraw, [217] 207
 Parliament—Business of the House (Opposed Business), Res. [214] 1362
 Post Office—Mail Contracts, Res. [216] 711, 1000;—Cape and Zanzibar, Amendt. 1206, 1211, 1213, 1307, 1308, 1416, 1422, 1446
 Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 3, [216] 981; Amendt. 933, 1008
 Supply—New Palace at Westminster, [217] 1259
 Supreme Court of Judicature, Comm. [216] 1566; cl. 80, [217] 225; add. cl. 328, 338; Consid. cl. 22, 673
 Telegraphs, Comm. [217] 1248
 University Education (Ireland), 2R. Amendt. [214] 1456, 1487, 1760, 1766
 University Tests (Dublin) (No. 2), [215] 306, 308
 Women's Disabilities, 2R. Amendt. [215] 1214

BOWRING, Mr. E. A., Exeter
 Criminal Law—Chipping Norton Magistrates, [216] 502, 548, 1786
 Customs and Inland Revenue, Comm. cl. 4, [215] 1687; Schedule B, 1690
 Customs Out Port Clerks, Res. Report, [217] 1243
 France — Commercial Treaty, [214] 1392; [215] 15
 Juries, Comm. cl. 5, [216] 521, 527
 Metropolitan Board of Works—Thanksgiving Day, [214] 1285
 Monastic and Conventual Institutions, [216] 1788
 National Gallery — New Buildings, Flooring of the, [216] 1170
 Navy Estimates—Admiralty Office, [216] 106
 Parliament—New Palace of Westminster—Frescoes, [217] 1826, 1827
 Post Office Packet Vote—Churchward, Mr., Claim of, [216] 1706
 Prevention of Crime, 2R. [214] 752
 Salmon Fisheries, Re-comm. cl. 19, Amendt. [215] 890; add. cl. [217] 384
 Shah of Persia—Visit of, [216] 724;—Spithead Review, 1062, 1068
 Superannuation Act Amendment, Comm. cl. 1, [215] 1707

BOWRING, Mr. E. A.—cont.
 Supply—British Museum, [215] 1794
     Civil Contingencies Fund, [214] 572
     Houses of Parliament, [215] 779, 782
     Lighthouses Abroad, [215] 1006
     New Courts of Justice, &c. [217] 1099
     New Offices, Downing Street, [215] 785
     Post Office Packet Service, [216] 1500
     Privy Council for Trade, &c. [215] 1008, 1010
     Queen's and Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer, Amendt. [215] 1458
     Salaries, &c. of Temporary Commissions, [215] 1816, 1817
     Science and Art Department, [216] 1464
     Temporary Commissions, [217] 1150
     Works and Buildings, [215] 786

BRADY, Mr. J., Leitrim Co.
 Criminal Law — Treatment of Untried Prisoners, [214] 152
 Ireland — Shannon, Overflowing of the, Res. [214] 1590
 Metropolis—Green Park, [215] 1137
 University Tests (Dublin) (No. 3), Comm. [215] 1528

BRAND, Right Hon. H. B. W., (see SPEAKER, The)

BRAND, Mr. H. R., Hertfordshire
 Agricultural Children, Comm. cl. 4, [215] 1458
 Army Estimates—Land Forces, [214] 1039
 Endowed Schools Commissioners — Emanuel Hospital Scheme, Motion for an Address, [215] 1913
 India—Euphrates Valley Railway, Res. [215] 628
 Juries, Comm. cl. 5, [216] 521
 Landlord and Tenant, 2R. [216] 1645
 Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 15, [216] 1429
 Register for Parliamentary and Municipal Electors, Leave, [214] 578; 2R. 1954; Re-comm. cl. 3, [215] 794; cl. 9, Amendt. 961, 962; add. cl. 1694

BRASSEY, Mr. T., Hastings
 Merchant Shipping Acts Amendment, Comm. cl. 15, [217] 1025
 Navy—Admiralty Administration, Res. Amendt. [214] 943
 Navy—Naval Reserves, Motion for a Committee, [215] 542, 567
 Navy—Promotion and Retirement, Motion for a Committee, Amendt. [216] 782
 Navy Estimates—Coast Guard Service, [216] 125
     Postponement of Motions, [215] 20

Brasil
 British Emigrants, Question, Mr. Foyer : Answer, Viscount Enfield May 9, [215] 1712 Claims of British Subjects, Question, Viscount Sandon ; Answer, Viscount Enfield June 23, [216] 1240

[cont.]

BRE BRO { SESSION 1878 } BRO BRU
 214—215—216—217.

- BREWER, Dr. W., Colchester
 Army—Medical Department—Dental Surgery, [214] 1095
 Charing Cross and Victoria Embankment Approach, Motion for a Committee, [214] 1880
 Customs Outport Clerks, Res. Report, [217] 1242
 Metropolis Buildings Act Amendment, 2R. [215] 488, 504
 Navy Estimates—Scientific Departments, [216] 128
 Spain—"Vigilante," Capture of the, [217] 1522
 Supreme Court of Judicature, Comm. cl. 78, [217] 221
 Treaties with Foreign Powers, Res. [214] 489
 Ways and Means, Report, [215] 1082
- BRIGHT, Mr. Jacob, Manchester
 Criminal Law—Weaverham Cockfighting Case, [217] 1531
 Public Expenditure, Res. [214] 621
 Women's Disabilities, 2R. [215] 1194, 1287
- BRISBANE, Colonel S. B. RUGGLES-, Essex, E.
 Jury List Allowances—Magistrates' Clerks, [215] 530
 Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 3, [216] 1008; add. cl. Amendt. [217] 611
 Turnpike Acts Continuance, &c. Comm. [217] 198, 196
- BRISTOL, Marquess of
 Elementary Education—English and Scotch Codes, [216] 1168
- BRISTOWE, Mr. S. B., Newark
 Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. [216] 789; cl. 3, 1069; cl. 18, 1335
 Supreme Court of Judicature, Comm. cl. 44, [217] 43
- BROCKLEHURST, Mr. W. C., Macclesfield
 Army—Yeomanry Regiments, Adjutants of, [217] 1088
 France—Commercial Treaty, [216] 1863
- BROGDEN, Mr. A., Wednesbury
 Elementary Education—The Music Fine, [217] 1179
 Ordnance Survey—Sutherlandshire, [216] 1708
 Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 3, [216] 1078
- BROMLEY-DAVENPORT, Mr. W., Warwickshire, N.
 Locomotives on Roads, 2R. [215] 888
 Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 3, [216] 1015
- BROWN, Mr. A. H., Wenlock
 Army—Cavalry Force, Res. [216] 563
 Army—Honorary Colonies, Res. [215] 1601
 Army Estimates—Land Forces, [214] 1063, 1065
 Volunteer Corps, [214] 1158
 Canada Loan Guarantee, 2R. [216] 1324
 Criminal Law—Shropshire Magistrates—Whitefoot, George, Case of, [215] 1765
 Departmental Expenditure—Purchase and Sale of Stores, Motion for a Committee, [214] 811
- BROWNE, Mr. G. E., Mayo Co.
 Ireland—Irish Juries Lists, [216] 1164
 Union Rating (Ireland), 2R. [214] 754
- BRUCE, Right Hon. Lord Ernest, Marlborough
 Lunacy Commission—Lutwidge, Mr. Commissioner, Death of, [217] 1516
- BRUCE, Right Hon. H. A. (Secretary of State for the Home Department), Renfrewshire
 Agricultural Children, Comm. cl. 4, [215] 1458; 3R. 1709
 Agricultural Labourers Meeting—Alleged Disturbances at Leighton Buzzard, [217] 805, 1089, 1090, 1326
 Agricultural Machine Accidents, [216] 481
 Ancient Monuments Preservation, 2R. [215] 1607
 Borough Franchise (Ireland), 2R. [216] 268
 Burials, 2R. [215] 199, 208, 521
 Burial Act—Ancient Burial Place, Pontefract, [215] 398
 Canonnries, 2R. [215] 882
 Church of England Revenues, Address for a Royal Commission, [217] 458
 Church of England—Sacramental Confession—Petition to Convocation, [217] 148, 149
 Coal Mines—Inundations of Workings, [214] 1032
 Coal, Scarcity of, Motion for a Committee, [214] 825
 Colliery Managers, [214] 377
 Compulsory Education—Prisons Act, 1865, [215] 520
 Conspiracy Law Amendment, 2R. [216] 1890; Lords Amendts. [217] 1541
 Contagious Diseases Acts Repeal, 2R. [216] 223, 233, 261
 Conveyancing (Scotland), Comm. [215] 1699
 Counties Ireland (Lord Lieutenants and Magistracy), Motion for a Return, [217] 1568
 Criminal Law—Questions, &c.
 Appropriation of Penalties, [217] 903
 Bath Election, Outrage at, [216] 1553
 Capital Offences, [214] 371
 Chatham Convict Prison, [214] 438;—Self-Mutilations, [217] 985
 Chipping Norton Magistrates, [216] 429, 501, 502, 548, 639, 1785, 1786
 Criminal Proceedings (Scotland)—Private Prosecutors, [217] 917
 Felkstone Magistrates, The, [216] 1497
 Great Northern Railway Company—Inquest on a Guard, [215] 2020
 Halstead Magistrates—Mays, Samuel, Case of, [216] 1163
 Middlesex Grand Juries, [217] 1560
 Murray, Ann, Case of, [215] 528
 Public Prosecutors, [215] 195; [217] 918
 Shropshire Magistrates—Whitefoot, George, Case of, [215] 1298
 Tichborne Case, [215] 1295, 1405, 1486, 1681, 1682, 2019; [216] 408, 962; [217] 36, 265
 Tomlinson, John, Case of, [216] 992
 Untried Prisoners, Treatment of, [214] 152
 Weaverham Cock-Fighting Case, The, [217] 302, 1824, 1531

VOL. COXVII. [THIRD SERIES.]

BRU      BRU      { GENERAL INDEX }      BRU      BRU
 214—215—216—217.

- BRUCE, Right Hon. H. A.—*cont.
- Criminal Law Amendment, Motion for a Select Committee, [217] 459
  - Duke of Edinburgh—Queen's Message, [217] 1097, 1098
  - East India Revenue Accounts, Comm. [217] 1470
  - Expiring Laws Continuance, Comm. [217] 1251, 1262
  - Factory Act—Enforcement of the, [214] 437; —Consolidation of the, 894
  - Factory Acts Amendment, 2R. [216] 827; [217] 1552
  - Fisher Lads—Great Grimsby, [214] 1891
  - Gunpowder, Shipment of, at Newhaven, [216] 1411
  - Habitual Drunkards, [216] 354; 2R. [217] 95
  - Household Franchise (Counties), 2R. [217] 848
  - Inclosure of Commons—Legislation, [216] 433
  - Infanticide Law Amendment, 2R. [215] 1983
  - Infant Life—Rope Spinners, [214] 542
  - Ireland—Irish Constabulary, [217] 1328
Labourers Cottages, [217] 1328
Louth, County of, [217] 1429
  - Ireland—Dundalk Magistracy, Motion for Correspondence, [217] 1566
  - Landlord and Tenant, 2R. [216] 1646
  - Law and Justice—Questions, &c.
Homicide, Law of—Legislation, [216] 1230
Juries (Wales), [216] 271
Leamington Magistracy [215] 100
Licensing Act, 1872—Legislation, [214] 543
Local Courts of Record, [214] 724
Marriage Laws, [215] 99
Probate and Divorce Court, Judge of the, [214] 1183
Standard of Value, [215] 1873; [217] 1069, 1060
Wine Licenses to Grocers, [217] 805
  - Local Taxation—Criminal Prosecutions, [214] 724
  - Locomotive Act, 1861—Inspection of Bridges, [216] 1228
  - Locomotives on Roads, 2R. [215] 886
  - Master and Servant—Wages—Truck System, [216] 840
  - Masters and Servants—Law of Contract, Res. [216] 608
  - Mercantile Marine—Cardiff Magistrates—Plimsoll, Mr., [215] 1688
Unseaworthy Ships, [215] 104
  - Merchant Shipping Act—Questions, &c.
Committals of Seamen, [216] 551;—Sailors, Punishment of—Ship "Wimbledon," 993, 994
"Druid," The, [216] 497
Plimsoll, Mr., and Board of Trade, Explanation, [215] 1784
Steamship "Peru," The, [214] 1100, 1185, 1394, 1395
  - Metropolis—Questions, &c.
Hackney Carriages—Cabmen's Plates, [214] 596, 597;—Cab Fares, Railway Stations, [217] 902
Hyde Park—Regulations, [216] 640
Kensington Gardens, [216] 1564
Street Traffic Regulations, [216] 895
  - Metropolis Buildings Act Amendment, 2R. [215] 502, 503
  - Mines, Assistant Inspectors of, [214] 599
  - Monastic and Conventual Institutions, Leave, [214] 580
  - BRUCE, Right Hon. H. A.—*cont.
  - Municipal Boroughs Extension, 2R. [214] 121
  - Municipal Corporations Act—Devonport Watch Committee, [215] 1784
  - Municipal Corporations (Borough Funds) Act, [215] 105
  - Municipal Franchise (Ireland), 2R. [215] 890
  - Municipal Officers Superannuation, 2R. [214] 1370
  - Nitro-Glycerine Act (1869), [216] 55
  - Parks Regulation Act—New Rules, [214] 143, 199, 200, 201, 228
  - Parks Regulation Act—Meetings in the Parks, Motion for an Address, [215] 282
  - Parliament—Questions, &c.
Business of the House, [216] 1382; [217] 1098
Declaration of the Poll, [217] 1563
Order of Business, [217] 1439
Whitsun Recess, Adjournment for, [216] 497
  - Parliamentary Elections (Expenses), 2R. [216] 1132, 1134
  - Permissive Prohibitory Liquor, 2R. [215] 1656
  - Police—Questions, &c.
Legal Advice, [214] 437;—Lighting of Cells, [217] 1088
Nottingham—Police Interference with Political Placards, [215] 975
Police Superannuation, [214] 128
Radnor, Constabulary of, [215] 1290
  - Police—Administration of the, Motion for a Committee, [215] 1739, 1750
  - Poor Law (Scotland) Inspectors, [216] 1410
  - Post Office—Mail Contracts—Cape and Zambar, [216] 984, 1421, 1422; [217] 1558
  - Prevention of Crime, 2R. [214] 745, 751
  - Reformatory and Industrial Schools—Ashton-under-Lyne Catholic School, [216] 1161
  - Roads and Bridges (Scotland), 2R. [216] 817
  - Salmon Fisheries, 2R. [214] 1370
  - School Boards—Education (Scotland) Act, 1872, [216] 99
  - Seduction Laws Amendment, Comm. cl. 1, [216] 1891, 1892
  - Shah of Persia, Arrival of the, [216] 1186
  - Sunday Trading Prosecutions, [216] 1857
  - Superannuation Act Amendment, Comm. cl. 1, [215] 1704
  - Supply—Convict Establishments, [217] 1184, 1185, 1278, 1279
Criminal Prosecutions at Assizes, &c., [215] 1772
  - Home Department and Subordinate Offices, [215] 1007
  - Theatre Regulation Act—“Happy Land,” [214] 1612
  - Tithe Commutation Acts—Market Gardens, [214] 722
  - Turnpike Acts Continuance, &c. Comm. [216] 1768
  - West Riding Magistracy, [217] 1172
  - Wild Birds Protection, Motion for a Committee, [215] 1189
  - Wild Birds Protection Act—Penalties, [214] 790
  - Women's Disabilities, 2R. [215] 1232
  - Workshops Act, Res. [215] 999

BRUCE, Sir H. H., *Colonial
 Ireland—Landed Estates Court—Vacant Judgeship, [214] 282, 374
 Sale of Liquors on Sunday, 2R. [217] 117

[cont.]

BRU      BUI      { S E S S I O N    1 8 7 3 }      BUI      BUT 214—215—216—217.

BRUEN, Mr. H., Carlow Co.
 Army—Woolwich Royal Military Academy, [215] 1298
 General Valuation (Ireland), 2R. [215] 1538 ; Comm., [216] 1832
 Ireland—Questions, &c.
     Labourers Dwellings, [216] 1705
     Law and Justice—Four Courts Marshal-sea, Dublin, [217] 303
     Poor Law Elections—Forged Voting Papers,
         [216] 1558
     Sanitary Statutes, [216] 1862
     Union Rating, [216] 1711
 Ireland—Civil Servants, Res. [216] 1817
 Juries (Ireland) Act—Clare Assizes, [214] 1036
 Juries (Ireland) Act—Select Committee, [214]
     1960
 Juries (Ireland) Act—Precedence of Motions, [215] 111 ; Motion for a Committee, 315, 329
 Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. add. cl.
     Amendt. [216] 1432 ; Consid. [217] 410
 Sale of Liquors on Sunday, 2R. [217] 109
 Union Rating (Ireland), 2R. [214] 761

BUCLEUCH, Duke of
 Army—Militia Reserve, Motion for an Address, [216] 1846
 Colonial Church, 2R. [216] 492
 Militia (Service, &c.), 2R. [217] 391

BUCKHURST, Lord († Afterwards Earl De LA WARE)
 †Army—Medical Officers in the Army—Royal Warrant, Motion for an Address, [217] 392
 Army—Medical Officers Service in Africa, Motion for an Address, [216] 829, 830
 Children's Employment in Dangerous Performances, 2R. [216] 1243, 1245
 Elementary Education Act—School Boards, [216] 987
 Parliament—Resignation of Ministers, Statement, [214] 1916
 Poor Law—Children of Roman Catholic Parents, Address for a Return, [214] 192
 Railway Casualties, Motion for Returns, [216] 831
 Regulation of Railways (Prevention of Accidents), 2R. [214] 682, 694

BUCKINGHAM and CHANDOS, Duke of Africa—West Coast Settlements—Ashante Invasion, [217] 267
 Canada Loan (Guarantee), 2R. [217] 8
 Steam Threshing Machines, 2R. [217] 601

BUCKLEY, Mr. N., Stalybridge
 University Education (Ireland), 2R. Amendt. [214] 1695

Building Societies Bill
 (Mr. Cross, Mr. Gourley, Mr. Walpole, Mr. Gregory, Mr. Torrens, Mr. Dodds)
 c. Ordered ; read 1<sup>o</sup> Mar 31 [Bill 111]
 Bill withdrawn * July 7

Building Societies (No. 2) Bill
 (Mr. Winterbotham, Mr. Secretary Bruce, Mr. Solicitor General)
 c. Motion for Leave (Mr. Winterbotham) April 29, [215] 1190 ; Bill ordered ; read 1<sup>o</sup> * [Bill 141]
 Bill withdrawn * June 16

Building Societies (No. 3) Bill
 (Mr. Winterbotham, Mr. Secretary Bruce)
 c. Ordered * June 13
 Read 1<sup>o</sup> * June 18 [Bill 196]
 Bill withdrawn * July 7

Building Societies Bills
 Question, Mr. Assheton Cross ; Answer, Mr. Winterbotham May 16, [216] 15

Burials Act—Ancient Burial-Place, Pontefract
 Question, The O'Conor Don ; Answer, Mr. Bruce April 1, [215] 308

Burials—Bethnal Green
 Question, Mr. Charley ; Answer, Mr. Bruce April 3, [215] 520

Burials Bill (Mr. Osborne Morgan, Lord Edmond Fitzmaurice, Mr. Hadfield, Mr. Arthur)

c. Considered in Committee ; Bill ordered ; after short debate, read 1<sup>o</sup> Feb 7, [214] 176 [Bill 9]
 Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2<sup>o</sup>"
 Mar 26, [215] 158
 Amendt. to leave out "now," and add "upon this day six months" (Mr. Disraeli) ; after debate, Question put, "That 'now,' &c.;" A. 280, N. 217 ; M. 63
 Main Question put, and agreed to ; Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>
 Division List, Ayes and Noes, 213
 Order for Committee read ; Moved, "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair" July 9, [217] 122
 Amendt. to leave out from "That," and add "the said Order be discharged" (Mr. Pell) v. ; Question proposed, "That the words, &c.;" after debate, Debate adjourned
 Bill withdrawn * July 23

BURY, Viscount, Berwick-on-Tweed
 Army—Volunteer Force—New Regulations, Res. [217] 262
 Channel Islands—Platte Bone Rock, [216] 1220
 Colonies, The, Motion for a Committee, [214] 1107
 Parliament—Address in Answer to the Speech, [214] 135, 140
 Railway and Canal Traffic, Comm. cl. 22, [215] 592
 Treaty of Washington, [215] 1443

BUTT, Mr. I., Limerick City
 Appropriation of Seats (Cashel and Sligo), Leave, [217] 963
 Consolidated Fund (Appropriation), Comm. [217] 1450
 Customs Outport Clerks, Res. Report, [217] 1246
 Expiring Laws Continuance, Comm. Amendt. [217] 1249, 1250, 1251
 Fisheries (Ireland), [215] 972
 Ireland—Galway Election Petition—Trial of Election Petitions, Res. [215] 983
 Municipal Franchise (Ireland), 2R. [215] 889

BUT CAI { GENERAL INDEX } CAI CAM
214—215—216—217.

BURR, Mr. I.—cont.

Parliament—Order of Business, [217] 1489
Privilege—Appellate Jurisdiction of the House of Lords, [217] 860
Peace Preservation (Ireland), 2R. [215] 2065; Comm. [216] 68; cl. 2, Amendt. 64; Amendt. 68; Proviso, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73
Political Prisoners, Amnesty to, [217] 997
Public Meetings (Ireland), 2R. [216] 1891
Supply—Metropolitan Police of Dublin, [217] 1140
Supreme Court of Judicature, Comm. cl. 44, [217] 44
University Tests (Dublin) (No. 8), 2R. [215] 765

CADOGAN, Hon. F. W., Cricklade

Baker, Sir Samuel—Telegram, [216] 1581
Burials, 2R. [215] 197
Household Franchise (Counties), 2R. [217] 829
Inland Revenue—Income Tax Appeals, [214] 540
Public Health Act (1872)—Port of London, Health of, [216] 1858

CAIRNS, Lord

Albert and European Arbitrations—Ex-Lord Chancellors, [217] 858
Army—Control Department, Motion for Papers, [216] 1222
Bastardy Laws Amendment, Comm. Amendt. [215] 800
Colonial Church, 2R. [216] 491, 492
Conspiracy Law Amendment, 2R. [217] 1320; Comm. 1419
Conveyancing (Scotland), 2R. [216] 1891; Commons Amendts. [217] 1425
East India Stock Dividend Redemption, 2R. [215] 1114
Elementary Education Provisional Order Confirmation (No. 1), Comm. [215] 1674
Endowed Schools Commissioners—Denbigh Free Grammar School, Motion for an Address, [217] 566
Government of Ireland, 1R. [216] 633
Improvement of Land, Motion for a Committee, [215] 516
India—Banda and Kirwee Prize Money, [216] 832
Judicial Peerages, Motion for an Address, Previous Question moved, [216] 1770
Land Titles and Transfer, 1R. [215] 1134; 2R. [216] 841
Merchant Shipping Acts Amendment, 2R. [217] 1318
Mutiny, Comm. [215] 723, 724
Parliament—Address in Answer to the Speech, [214] 29, 37, 40
    Privilege—Appellate Jurisdiction of the House, [217] 3, 10, 34
Public Worship Facilities—Standing Order No. 34a, [216] 160
Railway and Canal Traffic, Comm. cl. 12, [215] 1845; cl. 19, 1848; cl. 25, 1849; Commons Amendts. [217] 10
Rating (Liability and Value), 2R. [217] 993
Register for Parliamentary and Municipal Electors, 2R. Amendt. [216] 1399
Revising Barristers, Comm. cl. 4, [217] 972
Sites for Places of Worship, 2R. [216] 152; Report, 1082

CAIRNS, Lord—cont.

Supreme Court of Judicature, 1R. [214] 360; Comm. [215] 391; Re-comm. cl. 5, Amendt. 1269; Res. 1400; 3R. 1478; Commons Amendts. [217] 879; Amendt. 892, 894, 895, 896; Consid. 1307
University Tests (Dublin), 2R. [215] 1849
Winchester, Late Bishop of, and the Late Lord Westbury, [217] 741

CALLAN, Mr. P., Dundalk

Counties (Ireland)—(Lord Lieutenant and Magistrates), Motion for a Return, [217] 1568, 1569

Election Petitions, Trial of—Canvassing by Judges, [217] 819

Ireland—Louth, County of, [217] 1254, 1429
    Magistracy, Revision of List of, [217] 904
    Peace Preservation (Ireland) Act, [217] 916

Ireland—Dundalk Magistracy, Motion for Correspondence, [217] 1564

Juries (Ireland) Act, 1871—Nomination of Committee, [215] 604

Monastic and Conventual Institutions, 2R. [216] 1678

Sale of Liquors on Sunday, 2R. Amendt. [217] 102

Spain—Carlists, Recognition of the, [217] 1094

Statute Law Revision, Report, [217] 140

Supply—Legal Charges (Ireland), [217] 1146

Stationery Office, Amendt. [215] 1022

University Tests (Dublin)—Withdrawal of Bill, [215] 300

CAMBRIDGE, Duke of (Field Marshal Commanding-in-Chief)

Alderney (Harbour and Fortifications), [217] 201

Army—Candidates for Commissions, [216] 1219
    Recruits, [216] 1523

Army—Control Department, Motion for Papers, [216] 1222

Army, Officers of the—Abolition of Purchase, Address for a Royal Commission, [217] 636

Army Regulation Act—Abolition of Purchase, [214] 1008, 1808

CAMERON, Mr. D., Inverness-shire

Criminal Proceedings (Scotland)—Private Prosecutions, [217] 917

Parliament—Public Business—Scotch Bills, [216] 434

CAMPBELL, Lord

East African Slave Trade, Res. [217] 1068, 1075

Treaties of Arbitration, Motion for an Address, [214] 1159, 1178

Zanzibar—Sir Bartle Frere's Mission, Motion for Correspondence, [215] 1779, 1781

CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN, Mr. H. (Financial Secretary, War Department), Stirling, &c.

Army—Questions, &c.

    Fine Fund, [215] 1753

    Militia Adjutants, [216] 1495

    Militia Bands, [216] 272

    Militia Surgeons, [215] 1137

    East India Revenue Accounts, Comm. [217]

    1469

    War Department Buildings, [217] 88

[cont.]

CAM CAN { SESSION 1873 } CAN CAP
 214-215-216-217.

CAMPFREDOWN, Earl of (Lord of the Admiralty)
 Navy—H.M.S. "Devastation," [214] 829, 831 ;
 [215] 336, 342 ; [216] 428
 Pebble Powder—Review at Portsmouth,
 [217] 141, 142, 148, 985
 Shah of Persia, Visit of—Reviews, [216] 989, 1150

Canada, Dominion of Boundary with United States—Robert's Point,
 Question, Sir John Hay ; Answer, Viscount Enfield Feb 27, [214] 1032 ;—The Alaska Boundary, Question, Mr. Eastwick ; Answer, Viscount Enfield May 5, [215] 1487 ;—San Juan Water Boundary, Questions, Observations, The Earl of Lauderdale ; Reply, Earl Granville June 19, [216] 1157
 Charges of Corruption in Reference to Pacific Railroad, Questions, Sir Charles W. Dilke ; Answers, Mr. Gladstone August 1, [217] 1430
 Manitoba, Question, Sir Stafford Northcote ; Answer, Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen April 29, [215] 1140
 The Guaranteed Loan, Question, Sir Charles W. Dilke ; Answer, The Solicitor General August 4, [217] 1527
 Transfer of Arms, Stores, &c., Question, Major Arbuthnot ; Answer, Sir Henry Storks May 8, [215] 1878
 Treaty of Washington—The Fisheries, Question, Mr. Percy Wyndham ; Answer, Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen May 15, [215] 2018
 Parl. Papers—
 Treaty of Washington — Correspondence . . . . . [702]
 Canadian Pacific Railway . . . . . [750]
 [774]

Canada Loan Guarantee Bill
 (Mr. Bonham-Carter, Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen, Mr. Baxter)
 c. Ordered ; read 1<sup>o</sup> * May 9 [Bill 159]
 Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2<sup>o</sup>"
 June 24, [216] 1813
 Amendt. to leave out "now," and add "upon this day three months" (Sir Charles Dilke) ; after debate, Question put, "That 'now,' &c." A. 117, N. 15 ; M. 102
 Main Question put, and agreed to ; Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>
 Committee * ; Report June 26
 Read 3<sup>o</sup> * June 27
 l. Read 1<sup>o</sup> * (E. of Kimberley) June 30 (No. 183)
 Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>, after short debate July 8, [217] 4
 Committee * ; Report July 10
 Read 3<sup>o</sup> * July 11
 Royal Assent July 21 [36 & 37 Vict. c. 45]

CANDLISH, Mr. J., Sunderland
 Customs Outport Clerks, Res. Report, [217]
 1244
 East India Loan, Comm. [215] 1113
 Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment, Re-comm. cl. 3, Amendt. [217] 762 ; cl. 23, 798 ; 3R. 1008
 Merchant Shipping Acts Amendment, 2R. [217] 691 ; Comm. cl. 4, 1024 ; cl. 15, 1026 ; cl. 16, 1027

CANDLISH, Mr. J.—cont.
 Parliamentary Electors Registration, 2R. [217]
 483
 Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 3, [216] 1084 ; add. cl. 1438 ; Re-comm. [217] 612 ; Consid. 616 ; 3R. 687
 Seduction Laws Amendment, 2R. [215] 482
 Supply — Constabulary Forces, Ireland, [215]
 1778

Metropolitan Police of Dublin, [217] 1139
 New Works, &c. [216] 451
 Post Office, [214] 2059
 Union of Benefices—Withdrawal of Bill, [217]
 659

Canonries Bill (Mr. Beresford Hope, Mr. William Henry Smith, Mr. J. G. Talbot)
 c. Ordered ; read 1<sup>o</sup> * Feb 7 [Bill 18]
 Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>, after debate April 28, [215] 878
 Committee * ; Report April 25
 Read 3<sup>o</sup> * April 28
 l. Read 1<sup>o</sup> * (M. of Salisbury) April 29 (No. 83)
 Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>, and referred to a Select Committee May 8
 And, on June 13, the Lords following were named of the Committee :—Abp. Canterbury, M. Salisbury, E. Carnarvon, E. Powis, E. Nelson, E. Ducie, V. Portman, Bp. Winchester, Bp. Lichfield, L. Blanchford
 Report of Select Comm. * June 20 [No. 168]
 Bill reported * June 20 (No. 169)
 Committee * June 26
 Report * June 27
 Read 3<sup>o</sup> * July 3
 Royal Assent July 21 [36 & 37 Vict. c. 39]

CANTERBURY, Archbishop of
 Church Association—Confession, Motion for a Select Committee, [217] 275, 282
 College Statutes, Alteration of, [216] 11
 Colonial Church, 2R. [216] 487
 Public Worship Facilities, 2R. [216] 1389
 Supreme Court of Judicature, 3R. [215] 1468, 1470 ; Commons Amendments, [217] 872, 877
 Tithe Commutation Acts Amendment, 2R. [216] 1607
 Winchester, Late Bishop of, and the late Lord Westbury, [217] 738

CANTERBURY, Viscount
 Australian Colonies (Customs Duties), 2R. [215] 2006

Cantorbury Cathedral—Alleged "Pilgrimage"
 Questions, Mr. Whalley ; Answers, Mr. Gladstone July 18, [217] 603

Capital Punishment Abolition Bill
 (Mr. Charles Gilpin, Mr. Robert Fowler, Mr. Hadfield, Mr. McLaren)
 c. Ordered ; read 1<sup>o</sup> * Feb 11 [Bill 46]
 Bill withdrawn * June 26

CAR CAR { GENERAL INDEX } CAR CAR
 214-215-216-217.

CARDWELL, Right Hon. E. (Secretary of State for War), Oxford City
 Army—Questions, &c.
     Abolition of Purchase—Memorials of Officers, [217] 148; [217] 1432
     “Advanced Class” Examinations, [217] 144
     Agnew, Late Captain C.—Compensation, [217] 315
     Autumn Manœuvres—Compensation, [216] 1162
     Auxiliary Forces—Adjutants, [215] 1872;—Instruction to Officers of the, [214] 1036;—Volunteer Bands, [216] 637
     Cavalry and Artillery Reserve, [214] 543
     Cavalry Regiments, Honorary Colonels of, [216] 1168, 1709
     Cavalry Sub-Lieutenants, [217] 317
     Chelsea Hospital Pensioners, [215] 231
     Claims of Indian Officers—Bonus Fund, [214] 544
     Command of Sub-districts, [217] 497
     Depot Centres, Cost of, [216] 1163;—Lincoln—Graetham, 1707
     Duke of York’s School, [216] 1248
     Easter Monday Reviews, [214] 1287; [215] 290, 291, 298
     Fighting between Soldiers, [214] 1033
     Fine Fund, [215] 1759
     First Devon Militia, [217] 149
     Free Rations, Issue of, [217] 1432
     Gratuities, [214] 1893
     India, Service in—Limitation of Age, [217] 210
     Ireland—Commander-in-Chief of the Forces in, [216] 1411; [217] 657, 1323, 1324
     Kriegspiel, [214] 1968
     Medical Department, [215] 1209
     Medical Warrant, [217] 1088
     Military Centres—Oxford, [214] 545
     Militia, [215] 110; [216] 1804
     Militia Adjutants (Ireland), [215] 14
     Militia—General Orders, [216] 908;—Sub-alterns of, 1170
     Militia Permanent Staff Sergeants, [214] 1186
     Militia Regiments—2nd Battalions of, [217] 907
     Militia Storehouses, [214] 596
     Musketry, Deputy-Assistant Adjutant-General for, [216] 999
     Mutiny, [214] 1038
     New Army Plan, [214] 1186
     New Passage Hill, Devonport, [217] 500
     New Pay Regulations, [214] 1393
     96th Regiment, [215] 1559
     9th Lancers—Case of the late Sub-Lieutenant Tribe, [214] 496, 498, 499, 507
     Queen’s and Indian Armies, [215] 1569
     Recruits—Inaccurate Returns, [216] 1414, 1415
     Re-organization—Exchanges, [217] 1437
     Reserve Forces, [215] 800
     Retired Adjutants of Militia and Volunteers, [217] 1173
     Robins, Lieutenant, Case of, [216] 14
     Royal Engineers, [217] 661
     Royal Marine Artillery—Officers, [216] 1555
     Sandhurst, Insubordination at, [215] 902
     7th Lancashire Militia, [217] 1334
     10th Hussars, [215] 400

CARDWELL, Right Hon. E.—cont.
 Troop Ship “Serapis”—Scotch Fusilier Guards, [215] 902
 21st R.N.B. Fusiliers, [215] 1713
 Volunteer Adjutants, [216] 910
 Volunteers—Brigade Drill, [216] 1161
 War Office—Chief Clerk—Military Department, [217] 1098
 Woolwich Royal Military Academy, [215] 1296;—Examinations, 1785;—Cadets, [217] 145
 Yeomanry Adjutants, [215] 622; [217] 1088
 Yeomanry and Volunteer Adjutants, [214] 1036
 Army—Cavalry Force, Res. [216] 563, 570
 Army—City of London Volunteers—The Artillery Company’s Drill Ground, Res. [215] 816
 Army—Depot Centres—Oxford, [216] 171; Motion for a Committee, 364
 Army—Honorary Colonels, Res. [215] 1602
 Army—Length of Service (India), [214] 368; Res. 849
 Army—Volunteer Force—New Regulations, Res. [217] 248, 255, 257
 Army Estimates—Administration of the Army, [216] 1288, 1291, 1292, 1295, 1296
     Clothing Establishments, &c. [216] 1263
     Control Department—Wages, &c. [216] 1258
     Land Forces, [214] 855, 881, 888, 884, 1058, 1060, 1061, 1062, 1063, 1065, 1070, 1080, 1082, 1094, 1124, 1126, 1143, 1151, 1152, 1154
     Military Education, [216] 1283, 1284, 1285
     Militia Pay and Allowances, [214] 1156, 1157
     Non-Effective Services, [216] 1298
     Pay and Allowances, [214] 1155
     Provisions, Forage, &c. [216] 1260, 1262
     Soldiers’ Pay and Rations, [214] 1034, 1035
     Volunteer Corps, [214] 1158
     Warlike Stores, [216] 1276
     Works, Buildings, &c. [216] 1278, 1280
 Army Regulation—Half-Pay Officers, [214] 1614
 Board of Education (Ireland)—O’Keeffe, Rev. Mr., Motion for a Committee, [215] 2042
 Ireland—Galway Election Trials, Dublin, [214] 281
 Metropolis—Knightsbridge Barracks, Millbank, and Hyde Park, [217] 1320, 1330
 Mutiny, 3R. [215] 389
 Parliament—Business of the House, [217] 1098
 Patentees, Rights of, [216] 552
 Shah of Persia, Visit of—Windsor Park Review, [216] 997, 999;—Review at Woolwich, 1173
 Supply—Convict Establishments, [217] 1135, 1136
 University Education (Ireland), 2R. Amendt. [214] 1694, 1701, 1744
 University Tests (Dublin) (No. 2), [215] 309

CARLISLE, Bishop of Agricultural Children, Comm. add. et. [216] 1156, 1166

CARNARVON, Earl of Admission to Benefices and Churchwardenships, Comm. cl. 5, [216] 1409
 Africa—West Coast Settlements—Ashantee Invasion, [215] 1390; [216] 167; [217] 138

[cont.]

[cont.]

CAR CAV { SESSION 1873 } CAV CEN
 214-215-216-217.

CARNARVON, Earl of—cont.

Agricultural Children, 2R. [216] 721; Report, 1549
 Army—Military Depot at Oxford, Address for Correspondence, [216] 1498
 Australian Colonies (Customs Duties), 2R. [215] 2008
 Canada Loan (Guarantee), 2R. [217] 7
 Emigration to Brazil—Warwickshire Labourers, Address for a Paper, [214] 532
 Expiring Laws Continuance, 2R. [217] 1426
 Government of Ireland, 2R. [216] 1545, 1546
 Navy—Pebble Powder—Review at Portsmouth, [217] 141
 Persian Government—Concession to Baron de Reuter, Address for Correspondence, [217] 200
 Public Worship Facilities—Standing Order No. 34a, [216] 159, 160, 163; 2R. 1378
 Regulation of Railways (Prevention of Accidents), 2R. [214] 592
 Spain, Extradition Treaty with—“Northfleet” and “Murillo,” [214] 144
 Spain—“Morillo,” Release of the, Motion for Papers, [216] 1245, 1247
 Supreme Court of Judicature, 1R. [214] 384; 3R. [215] 1472; Commons Amendts. [217] 881
 Vagrancy Law Amendment, 2R. [215] 2013
 Winchester, Late Bishop of, and the late Lord Westbury, [217] 740

CARTER, Mr. R. M., Leeds

Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment, Re-comm. cl. 10, [217] 704
 Mercantile Marine—Plimsoll, Mr., and Cardiff Shipowners, [215] 1714
 Merchant Shipping Act—“Druid,” The, [216] 1497
 Sailors, Punishment of—Ship “Wimbleton,” [216] 993
 Unseaworthy Vessels, [217] 316, 317
 Municipal Elections (Cumulative Vote), 2R. [217] 490
 Poor Law—Guardians of St. Germans, [216] 834
 West Riding Magistracy, [217] 1171, 1172

CARTWRIGHT, Mr. W. C., Oxfordshire

Central Asia, Motion for an Address, [215] 869
 France—Commercial Treaty, The New, [216] 1310
 Supply—Embassy Houses at Vienna and Washington, [217] 1131

Cattle

Importation of German Cattle, Question, Mr. Clare Read; Answer, Mr. W. E. Forster May 9, [215] 1717

CAVE, Right Hon. S., New Shoreham

Chinese Coolie Trade, [216] 380
 Customs and Inland Revenue, Comm. [215] 1684, 1685
 Harbours of Refuge, Motion for a Committee, [215] 1423
 Railway and Canal Traffic, Comm. cl. 22, [215] 593; cl. 33, 594, 596
 Supply—Local Government Board, [215] 1020
 Ways and Means, Report, [215] 1104, 1300
 Sugar Duties—International Conferences, [215] 1717

CAVENDISH, Lord G. H., Derbyshire, N.

Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. [216] 740; cl. 3, Amendt. 927; Amendt. 1010, 1025; Amendt. 1028, 1072; cl. 15, 1427; Consid. [217] 421, 423
 Supreme Court of Judicature, Comm. cl. 75, [217] 191
 Teignmouth and Dawlish Turnpike Trust, [216] 1710
 Turnpike Acts Continuance, &c. Comm. Amendt. [216] 1756, 1758; [217] 194, 320, 382

CAWLEY, Mr. C. E., Salford

Licensing Act, [217] 1063
 Locomotives on Roads, 2R. [215] 883, 889
 Navy—Chatham Dockyard—River Wall, [217] 1531, 1532, 1562
 Parliament—Resignation of Ministers, Ministerial Statement, [214] 1913
 216] Rating (Liability and Value), 2R. Amendt. 277, 318; Comm. cl. 3, 932, 1007, 1022; cl. 4, 1181; cl. 7, Amendt. 1184, 1189; cl. 13, 1192; Amendt. 1193, 1194, 1195, 1293; add. cl. 1498, 1441
 217] Consid. Amendt. 406, 414, 421; Amendt. 618
 Reformatory and Industrial Schools—Ashton-under-Lyne Catholic School, [216] 1161
 Register for Parliamentary and Municipal Electors, Comm. cl. 9, [215] 961; Re-comm. cl. 19, Amendt. 1693, 1694
 Stipendiary Magistrates—Salford and Manchester, [216] 997
 Supply—Local Government Board, [215] 1020
 Supreme Court of Judicature, Comm. cl. 6, [216] 1746; cl. 13, 1750; cl. 18, 1793

CREIL, Lord E. H. B. G., Essex, W.

Adulteration of Food Act, 1872—Prosecutions, [216] 274
 Army—Questions, &c.
 India—Breech-loaders, Supply of, [215] 12
 New Pay Regulations, [214] 1303
 95th Regiment, [215] 1559
 9th Lancashire—Case of the late Sub-Lieutenant Tribe, [214] 502
 Army—Cavalry Force, Res. [216] 563, 564
 Army—Volunteer Force—New Regulations, Res. [217] 262
 Army Estimates—Clothing Establishments, &c. [216] 1268
 Control Establishments—Wages, &c. [216] 1255, 1258
 Land Forces, [214] 1057, 1060, 1061, 1062, 1063
 Military Education, [216] 1281, 1284
 Works, Buildings, &c. [216] 1279
 Colonies, Defence of the, Res. [214] 1520, 1532

Census, 1871, Returns

Question, Mr. F. S. Powell; Answer, Mr. Hibbert Feb 20, [214] 728

Census of Land and House Owners

Question, Mr. Wren-Hoskyns; Answer, Mr. Stansfeld Feb 25, [214] 891

CEN CEN { GENERAL INDEX } CEY CHA
214—215—216—217.

Central Asia

Afghanistan, Question, Sir Harry Verney; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff June 24, [216] 1311;—Boundaries of the Afghan States, Questions, The Duke of Somerset; Answer, The Duke [214] of Argyll Feb 17, 587; Questions, Mr. Rylands, Mr. Baillie Cochrane; Answers, Viscount Enfield Feb 20, 724; Question, Mr. Seymour; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff Feb 21, 786; Question, Sir James Elphinstone; Answer, Mr. Gladstone Feb 24, 837;—Frontiers of Afghanistan—Russian Map, Question, Mr. Eastwick; Answer, Viscount Enfield May 27, [216] 500
Extension of the Russian Frontier, Question, Mr. Eastwick; Answer, Viscount Enfield May 15, [215] 2017
Mr. Forsyth's Mission, Question, Mr. Osborne; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff Feb 27, [214] 1041
Russia and Persia—Valley of the Atrek, Question, Sir Charles W. Dilke; Answer, Viscount Enfield Feb 14, [214] 439; Question, Mr. Osborne; Answer, Viscount Enfield Feb 28, 1099; Question, Mr. Bourke; Answer, Viscount Enfield June 12, [216] 841
Russian Expedition to Khiva, Question, Mr. Eastwick; Answer, Viscount Enfield Mar 21, [214] 1962; Question, Viscount Mahon; Answer, Viscount Enfield April 1, [215] 399
The Khan of Kalat, Question, Mr. Eastwick; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff June 26, [216] 1418
The "Intermediate Zone," Question, Mr. Montague Guest; Answer, Viscount Enfield Feb 27, [214] 1034
The Turko-Persian Boundary, Question, Observations, Viscount Stratford de Redcliffe; Reply, Earl Granville July 11, [217] 201
Parl. Papers—Correspondence with Russia [699] [704]

Central Asia—Boundaries of the Afghan States

Address for, Copies of the Memorandum on the frontier of the Badkshan and Wakhan provinces of Afghanistan drawn at the India Office from maps and information furnished by Sir Henry Rawlinson, together with the Despatch on the subject from the Government of India; and, of the sketch Map, showing the northern boundary of the Afghan territories, assented to by Government of India, and adopted by the Foreign Office" (Mr. Rylands) Feb 20, [214] 771; after short debate, Motion withdrawn

Central Asia—Mr. Thompson's Mission to Khiva

Moved, "That an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty, That She will be graciously pleased to give directions, that there be laid before this House Copies of Correspondence relating to the Missions to Khiva of Mr. Thompson and Rajib Ali: "And, of any Despatches in 1862 and 1863 respecting the employment of British Officers with the troops of His Majesty the Shah, and respecting the state of Khorásán at that time" (Mr. Eastwick) April 22, [215] 818; after long debate, Motion withdrawn

Ceylon—The Breakwater at Colombo

Questions, Sir James Elphinstone; Answers, Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen Feb 20, [214] 733

CHADWICK, MR. D., Macclesfield

Income Tax, Motion for a Committee, [215] 157

Parliament—Business of the House, Motion for a Committee, [215] 248

CHAMBERS, Sir T., Marylebone

Endowed Schools Commissioners—Emanuel Hospital Scheme, Motion for an Address, [215] 1955

Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister, 2R. [214] 299, 328

Metropolis—Hyde Park—Bathing in the Serpentine, [217] 1254

Monastic and Conventional Institutions, Leave, [214] 530

CHAMBERS, Mr. M., Devonport

Army Estimates—Land Forces, [214] 882, 1070

Counties (Ireland)—(Lord Lieutenants and Magistrates), Motion for a Return, [217] 1870

Foreign Powers, Treaties with, Res. [214] 1318

Juries, 2R. [214] 557; Comm. cl. 55, [216] 1617

Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister, Comm. cl. 1, [214] 576

Merchant Shipping Act—Collision between "C. M. Palmer" and "Larnax," [215] 800

Merchant Shipping Act—Rules of the Road at Sea, Res. [215] 258

Parliament—Business of the House, Motion for a Committee, [215] 244

Railway Accidents, Res. [216] 217

Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 7, [216] 1188

Russia—Crimea, Graves in the, [215] 1762

Supply—Steam Machinery, &c. [216] 449, 451

Workshops Act, Res. [215] 998

CHANCELLOR, THE LORD (Lord SELBORNE)

Albert and European Arbitrations—Ex-Lord Chancellors, [217] 864

Bastardy Laws Amendment, Comm. [214] 1382; [215] 4; Commons Amendts. 601, 724

College Statutes, Alteration of, [216] 12, 18

Colonial Church, 2R. [216] 498

Confession in the Church of England, Address for a Paper, [217] 1169

Consolidated Fund (Appropriation), 2R. [217] 151

Conspiracy Law Amendment, Comm. [217] 1422

Conveyancing (Scotland), 2R. [216] 1684, 1691; Comm. cl. 3, [217] 600; Report, 856; Commons Amendts. 1424

County Courts (England), Motion for a Return, [217] 1615

Crown Private Estates, 2R. [216] 1550

Edmunds, Leonard, Esquire—Petition of, [216] 967

Expiring Laws Continuance, 2R. [217] 1427

Government of Ireland, 2R. [216] 1553

[cont.]

CHA      CHA      { S E S S I O N  1 8 7 3 }      CHA      CHA
 214—215—216—217.

CHANCELLOR, The Lord—cont.

India—Banda and Kirwee Prize Money, [215] 1704
 Judicial Peerages, Motion for an Address, [216] 1772
 Land Titles and Transfer, 1R. [215] 1116, 1185; 2R. [216] 350
 Law Agents (Scotland), 2R. [216] 1780, 1782; Comm. [217] 203; Report, 388; Consid. 1084
 Marriage Laws, [216] 1701
 Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister, 2R. [214] 1898
 Marriages (Ireland), 2R. [215] 92; Comm. 892
 Marriages (Ireland) Legalization, 2R. [216] 1550
 Parliament—Queen's Speech, The, [214] 2;—Address in Answer to, 40
 Privilege — Appellate Jurisdiction of the House, [217] 25, 33
 Prorogation of — Queen's Speech, [217] 1556, 1570
 Pollution of Rivers, 2R. [216] 6
 Prevention of Frauds on Charitable Funds, 2R. [216] 1850
 Public Worship Facilities—Standing Order No. 34a, [216] 161, 164
 Railway and Canal Traffic, Comm. cl. 19, [215] 1848; cl. 25, 1849; Commons Amendts. [217] 9
 Statute Law Revision—Report, Amendt. [217] 140
 Supreme Court of Judicature, 1R. [214] 331, 363, 365; 2R. 1716, 1721, 1731; Comm. [215] 6, 393, 397; Re-comm. cl. 5, 1270; Res. 1398; 3R. 1476; Commons Amendts. [217] 886, 888, 892, 893, 894, 895; Consid. 1807
 Tithe Commutation Acts Amendment, 2R. [216] 1607
 Treaties of Arbitration, Motion for an Address, [214] 1172, 1177
 Vagrants Law Amendment, 2R. [215] 2018; Comm. cl. 3, [216] 426
 Winchester, late Bishop of, and the late Lord Westbury, [217] 737

CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER (Right Hon. R. LOWE), *London University

Army Estimates—Land Forces, [214] 1058
 Superannuation Allowances, [216] 1298
 Bank Act—The Cheque Bank, [216] 1410
 Bank of England Returns, [216] 430
 Chancery (Funds) Act—Accountant General in Chancery, Res. [217] 264
 Civil Service Examinations, [215] 102, 345
 Civil Service Writers, [216] 1062; [217] 902
 Consolidated Fund (Appropriation), 2R. [217] 1368, 1384; Comm. 1451
 County Court Judges—Minute of June, 1872, Res. [214] 1990, 1302
 Court of Probate—District Registry Clerks, [216] 1708, 1709
 Criminal Law—Tichborne Case, [216] 960, 1167
 Currency—Bank Act, Res. [215] 147
 Customs—Extra Treasury Clerks, [217] 180, 151
 Out Port Clerks, [217] 305, 1238
 Customs and Inland Revenue, Comm. [215] 1685; cl. 4, 1688; Schedule B, 1690

CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER—cont.

Endowed Schools Act Amendment, Comm. add. cl. [217] 953
 India—Euphrates Valley Railway, Res. [215] 607, 622
 Ireland—Civil Service, Report of the Commissioners, [215] 11, 346
 Drainage of Land, [216] 1498, 1559
 Shannon River, [214] 368; Res. 1588; [215] 348; [217] 154, 1528, 1529
 Ireland—Civil Servants, Res. [216] 1810
 Ireland—Irish Railways, Purchase of, Res. [215] 1176
 Juries, Comm. cl. 45, [216] 538
 Law Officers of the Crown—Attorney General, The, [215] 14
 Metropolis—Wellington Monument, The, [217] 308
 Nineveh Excavations, [216] 273
 Parliament—Address in Answer to the Speech, [214] 79, 128
 Business of the House, [214] 199
 Public Business, [217] 688
 Parliament—Business of the House (Committee of Supply), Res. [214] 244, 268
 Post Office (Balances)—Telegraphic Department, Res. [217] 1215
 Post Office—Questions, &c.
 Cape of Good Hope, Conveyance of Mails to, [215] 1488
 Extension of Telegraphs—Post Office and Telegraph Services—Financial Irregularities, [215] 528, 1558; [216] 429, 1172
 Savings Banks—Investment of Deposits, [215] 1718;—Increase of Staff, [217] 1529
 Post Office—Cape and Zanzibar Mail Contracts, [216] 357; Res. 688; Motion for Adjournment, 710, 1002, 1195, 1202, 1203; [217] 1179, 1553
 Public Works Loans—England and Ireland, [217] 660, 661, 908
 Sheriffs Substitute (Scotland), [215] 523;—Salaries, [216] 1862
 Superannuation Act Amendment, Comm. [215] 1702; cl. 1, 1703, 1705
 Supply—Alabama Claims, [216] 411
 Civil Service Commission, [215] 1016
 Dover Harbour, [217] 1284
 Miscellaneous Expenses, [217] 1150
 New Palace at Westminster, [217] 1125, 1126
 Post Office, [214] 2058
 Privy Council for Trade, &c. [215] 1009, 1010
 Superannuation Allowances, [215] 1815
 Wellington Monument, [215] 788, 789
 Supreme Court of Judicature, Comm. cl. 73, [217] 187; add. cl. 329
 Taxes on Locomotion, Res. [215] 445
 Telegraphs, Comm. [217] 1246, 1247; cl. 4, 46, 1248
 University Education (Ireland), 2R. Amendt. [214] 1479, 1767
 Ways and Means—Questions, &c.
 Dog Licence, [215] 525
 Estimates and Revenue, [217] 1521
 Inland Revenue—Duty on Volunteer Prizes, [216] 1173
 Income Tax Appeals, [214] 540
 Post Office Revenues, [217] 153
 Sugar Duties—International Conference, 1864, [215] 347, 528, 1717, 1718

[cont.]

CHA CHE { GENERAL INDEX } CHE CHU
214-215-216-217.

CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER—cont.

Ways and Means, Financial Statement, Comm. [215] 654, 670, 673, 708, 713; Report, 920, 921; Comm. 948, 956, 968, 1041, 1062, 1322

Chancery (Funds) Act—The Accountant General in Chancery

Observations, Mr. Dickinson; Reply, The Chancellor of the Exchequer July 11, [217] 263

Channel Islands—Platte Bone Rock

Question, Viscount Bury; Answer, Mr. Shaw Lefevre June 20, [216] 1229

Charing Cross and Victoria Embankment Approach Bill

c. Moved, "That Standing Orders Nos. 7 and 203 be suspended in the case of the Charing Cross and Victoria Embankment Approach Bill, and that the Bill be referred to a Select Committee of Nine Members, Five to be nominated by the House, and Four by the Committee of Selection, and that they be empowered to consider generally and report upon the Charing Cross and Victoria Embankment Approaches" (Lord Echo) Feb 27, [214] 1024; after debate, Question put: 'A. 72, N. 187; M. 115
Bill considered, after short debate May 15, [215] 2014

CHARLEY, Mr. W. T., Salford

Army—Easter Monday Reviews, [215] 200, 291, 298

Bastardy Laws—Proceedings in Bastardy, [215] 1880

Bastardy Laws Amendment, 2R. [214] 429

Burials, [215] 630

Conveyancing (Scotland), Comm. [215] 1698

Criminal Law—Tomlinson, John, Case of, [216] 992

Homicide, Law of—Legislation, [216] 1230

Infanticide Law Amendment, 2R. [215] 1991

Infant Life—Rope Spinners, [214] 542

Parliament—Business of the House (Opposed Business), Res. Amendt. [214] 1363

Railway and Canal Traffic, Comm. cl. 4, [215] 374

Register for Parliamentary and Municipal Electors, Re-comm. cl. 4, Amendt. [215] 795; cl. 5, 980; cl. 10, Amendt. 1691; add. cl. 1694

Seduction Laws Amendment, 2R. [215] 468

Supreme Court of Judicature, 2R. Amendt. [216] 645, 900; Comm. cl. 17, Motion for reporting Progress, 1765; Oonsid. [217] 670

Windward Islands—Ecclesiastical Policy, Res. [217] 424, 439

CHELMSFORD, Lord

Custody of Infants, 2R. [215] 4

Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment Comm. cl. 10, Amendt. [217] 1808

Intestates Widows and Children, 2R. [214] 1380, 1381

Marriage Laws, [216] 1698

Shah of Persia—Naval Review at Spithead, [216] 1216

Supreme Court of Judicature, 2R. [214] 1710, 1721; Commons Amendts. [217] 893

Chelsea Water Bill [H.L.]

i. Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2<sup>o</sup>" Feb 27, [214] 1012

Amendt. to leave out ("now,") and insert ("this day six months") (The Marquess of Salisbury); after short debate, on Question, That ("now") do.; Cont. 20, Not-Cont. 70; M. 41; resolved in the negative; and Bill to be read 2<sup>o</sup> this day six months
Division List, Cont. and. Not-Cont. 1023

CHICHESTER, Bishop of

Confession in the Church of England, Address for a Paper, [217] 1170

CHILDERS, Right Hon. Hugh C. E. (Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster), Pontefract

Lancaster and Ulverston Sands, [215] 1293

Lancaster, Duchy of—Guide over Lancaster Sands, [217] 1093

Navy—Half-Pay of Officers, [215] 29, 30
Navy (Promotion and Retirement), Motion for a Committee, [216] 787, 792

Navy Estimates—Admiralty Office, [216] 123

Public Expenditure, Res. Amendt. [214] 665

Railway and Canal Traffic, Comm. [215] 869; cl. 3, 371; cl. 4, 375; cl. 10, 376, 377, 379, 380; cl. 22, 592; add. cl. 598

Supply—Court of Chancery, [215] 1774

*Ways and Means, Comm. [215] 980

Children's Employment in Dangerous Performances Bill [H.L.]

(The Lord Buckhurst)

i. Presented; read 1<sup>o</sup> June 17 (No. 162)
Bill withdrawn, after short debate June 23, [216] 1242

Children's Protection Bill

(Mr. Mundella, Mr. Andrew Johnston, Mr. John Gilbert Talbot, Mr. Raikes)

c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> Mar 4 [Bill 89]
2R. [Dropped]

China

Coolie Trade, Observations, Sir Charles Wingfield; Reply, Viscount Enfield; debate thereon May 23, [216] 375;—Macao, Question, Sir Charles Wingfield; Answer, Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen June 10, 724

The Coolie Kwok-a-Sing, Question, Sir James Lawrence; Answer, Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen Feb 20, [214] 737

Treaty of Tien-Tsin, Question, Mr. Akroyd; Answer, Viscount Enfield Mar 10, [214] 1610

Cholera, The

Question, Mr. Dent; Answer, Mr. Stansfeld July 7, [216] 1854

Church Discipline Act Amendment Bill

(Mr. Whalley, Mr. Jones Parry)

c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> July 10 [Bill 234]
2R. [Dropped]

Church of England, Confession in the

Moved that a Select Committee be appointed to consider by what legislation or other means the danger apprehended of a considerable minority of the clergy and laity desiring to subvert the principles of the Reformation may be averted (The Lord Oranmore and Browne) July 14, [217] 289; after debate, on Question 1 resolved in the negative

Personal Explanation, Lord Oranmore and Browne; Reply, The Bishop of Winchester July 15, 385

Moved, that an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty for, Copy of petition presented to the Upper House of Convocation of the Province of Canterbury by the Archbishop of Canterbury, praying among other things for the training and licensing of a body of confessors in the Church of England; together with the names of the subscribers and copy of the answer to the same presented by the Committee of the whole Upper House (The Earl of Harrowby) July 29, [217] 1186; after short debate, Motion withdrawn

Sacramental Confession—Letters of the Pri-mates, Questions, Viscount Sandon, Mr. Whalley; Answers, Mr. Gladstone July 7, [216] 1851;—Petition to Convocation, Questions, Sir John Pakington; Answers, Mr. Bruce July 10, [217] 148

West Indies Clergy Act—The Bishop of Kingston, Question, Sir Charles Adderley; Answer, Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen July 31, [217] 1330

Church of England Revenues

Moved, "That an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty, praying that She will appoint a Royal Commission to inquire into the amount and application of the revenues of the Church of England and into the system of parochial benefices, with a view to the better adjustment of parishes and incomes and the amendment of the Law relating to patronage (Mr. Thomas Hughes) July 15, [217] 447; after debate, Question put, and negatived

Churches of England and Scotland—Dis-establishment

Amendt. on Committee of Supply May 16, To leave out from "That," and add "the establishment by Law of the Churches of England and Scotland involves a violation of religious equality, deprives those churches of the right of self-government, imposes on Parliament duties which it is not qualified to discharge, and is hurtful to the religious and political interests of the community, and, therefore, ought no longer to be maintained" (Mr. Mall) v., [216] 18; Question proposed, "That the words, &c.;" after short debate, Question put; A. 356, N. 61; M. 295

Division List, Ayes and Noes, 50

Civil Bills, &c. (Ireland) Bill

(Mr. Downing, Sir Colman O'Loughlen, Mr. Smith Barry, Mr. William Shaw)
c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> June 11 [Bill 187]
Read 2<sup>o</sup> July 9
Bill withdrawn * July 18

Civil Bills, &c. (Ireland) [Salaries]

Considered in Committee July 14, [217] 383
Moved, "That it is expedient to authorise the payment, out of the Consolidated Fund, of any increase of Salaries provided for under any Act of the present Session to consolidate and amend the Laws relating to Civil Bills and Courts of Quarter Sessions in Ireland" (Mr. Downing)

Moved, "That the Chairman do report Progress" (Mr. Glyn): Motion negatived Original Question again proposed; Moved, "That the Chairman do report Progress" (Mr. Secretary Bruce); Question put; A. 21, N. 26; M. 5
Original Question put; A. 18, N. 28; M. 10; [No Report]

Civil Service

Appointments by Public Departments, Question, Mr. O'Reilly; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer Mar 25, [215] 101; Question, The O'Conor Don; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer Mar 31, 345

Pensions, Question, Mr. Watney; Answer, Mr. W. H. Gladstone August 4, [217] 1530
Pensions to Widows and Families, Observations, Mr. Baillie Cochrane August 1, [217] 1471 [House counted out]
Superannuation Act—Case of Mr. Freeth. Question, Mr. Watney; Answer, Mr. W. H. Gladstone August 5, [217] 1561

Civil Service Writers

Case of the Writers, Question, Personal Explanation, Mr. Otway; Reply, Mr. Gladstone June 12, [216] 842; Question, Mr. Otway; Answer, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer June 17, 1062

Select Committee appointed "to inquire whether Writers appointed before August 1871 have suffered any wrong or injustice by the cessation of the system of a progressive rate of payment" (Mr. Otway) June 17, 1108

And, on July 2, Committee nominated as follows:—Mr. Otway (Chairman), Mr. Backhouse, Mr. Bates, Mr. Dillwyn, Lord George Hamilton, Sir Percy Herbert, Sir Henry Hoare, Mr. Kirkman Hodgeson, Mr. Plunket, Mr. Stansfeld, and Mr. Percy Wyndham
Report of Select Committee July 30
(Parl. P. No. 370)

Question, Mr. Dillwyn; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer July 24, [217] 902
New Appointments, Question, Mr. White; Answer, Mr. Gladstone July 7, [216] 1865

CR
WILLIAM B. CARDE, Marquess of Bridgewater, &c., Motion for a Return, dia 137, 103, 104
ates Widows and Children, 2R, 1381
DUBLIN, Not in, [216] 617, [214] 1381
[cont.]

CLA      COA      { G E N E R A L I N D E X }      COA      COG
 214—215—216—217.

CLANRICARDE, Marquess of—cont.

Juries Act (Ireland), 1871, [214] 1389
 Marriages (Ireland) Legalization, 2R. [216]
 1550
 Rock of Cashel, 2R. [216] 424

CLARENDON, Earl of

Parliament—Address in Answer to the Speech,
 [214] 7

CLAY, Mr. J., Kingston-on-Hull

Commercial Marine, Motion for an Address,
 Amendt. [214] 1334, 1361
 Crown Private Estates, 2R. [217] 702

Clerical Justices Disqualification and Justices of Peace Qualification Bill
(Mr. Hinde Palmer, Mr. Locke King)

c. Ordered ; read 1st June 18      [Bill 197]
 Bill withdrawn * July 29

CLEVELAND, Duke of

Agricultural Children, 2R. [216] 719
 Elementary Education Provisional Order Confirmation (No. 1), Comm. [217] 492 ; Report, cl. 1, 749
 Gas Companies—Coal and Gas, Price of, [215] 1461
 Improvement of Land, Motion for a Committee, [215] 509
 Palace of Westminster—House of Commons—Peers Gallery, [214] 1923
 Pollution of Rivers, 2R. [216] 3
 Vagrants Law Amendment, 2R. [215] 2012

Coal

Coal Fields of China, Question, Mr. Akroyd ; Answer, Viscount Enfield Feb 17, [214] 541
Coal Mines—Inundations of Workings, Question, Mr. Newdegate ; Answer, Mr. Bruce Feb 27, [214] 1031
Coal Supply, Question, Mr. Corrane ; Answer, Mr. Gladstone Feb 7, [214] 153
Coals, Price of—Metropolitan Railways, Question, Mr. Eykyn ; Answer, Mr. A. Peel Feb 17, [214] 547
Colliery Managers, Question, Mr. Finnie ; Answer, Mr. Bruce Feb 13, [214] 877
Duties or Restrictions on Export, Question, Mr. W. H. Smith ; Answer, Mr. Gladstone Feb 13, [214] 370

Coal, Scarcity of

Amendt. on Committee of Supply Feb 21, To leave out from "That," and add "a Select Committee be appointed to inquire into the causes of the present dearness and scarcity of Coal, and report thereon to the House" (Mr. Mundella) v., [214] 815 ; after short debate, Question, "That the words, &c." put, and negatived ; words added ; main Question, as amended, put, and agreed to ; Select Committee appointed

And, on Mar 4, Committee nominated as follows :—Mr. Ayrton (Chairman), Mr. Anderson, Mr. Carter, Mr. Corrane, Mr. Denison, Mr. Elliot, Mr. Grieve, Mr. Liddell, Mr. Mundella, Mr. Pease, Mr. Pim, Mr. Edmund

[cont.]

Coal, Scarcity of—cont.

Potter, Mr. William Henry Smith, Mr. Stanhope, Mr. Hussey Vivian, Mr. Watney, and Mr. Wharton
 Report of Select Committee July 18
(Parl. P. No. 318)
 Question, Mr. Stapleton ; Answer, Mr. Gladstone Feb 27, 1031

COBBETT, Mr. J. M., Oldham

Criminal Law—Chipping Norton Magistrates, [216] 1785

COCHRANE, Mr. A. D. W. R. Baillie, Isle of Wight

Army—Gun Factory, Woolwich—Pensions to Widows of Artificers, [217] 312
 Central Asia—Boundary Question, [214] 726
 Charing Cross and Victoria Embankment Approach, Motion for a Committee, [214] 1026
 Civil Servants (Pensions to Widows and Families), [217] 1471
 Diplomatic and Consular Committee—Pensions to Consuls, [215] 295
 Diplomatic Service—Pensions to Widows of Consular Officers, [216] 1560
 Egypt—Judicial Reforms—Suez Canal, The, [214] 369
 Endowed Schools Commissioners—Emanuel Hospital Scheme, Motion for an Address, [215] 1911
 India—Central Asian Railway, [216] 546
 India—Euphrates Valley Railway, Res. [215] 616

Merchant Shipping Act—The "Westdale," [216] 1496

Parks Regulation Act—Meetings in the Parks, Motion for an Address, [215] 269

Parliament—Questions, &c.

Address in Answer to the Speech ; Report, [214] 155

Alteration of Questions by the Clerks at the Table, [217] 803

Persian Concessions to Baron de Reuter, [217] 803

Public Business, [217] 1835, 1936

Rules of the House—Questions, [217] 37, 38

Parliament—Business of the House, Motion for a Committee, [215] 238, 241

Shah of Persia—Naval Review, [216] 547 ;—Spithead, 1063

Suez Canal—Shipping Tolls, [215] 844

Suez Canal—Augmentation of Dues, Res. [215]

451, 466 ; Explanation, 806

Treaty of Washington, [215] 1439, 1486

War Department Buildings, [217] 87, 98

COGAN, Right Hon. W. H. F., Kildare Co.

Board of Education (Ireland)—O'Keeffe, Rev. Mr., Motion for a Committee, [215] 2049

General Valuation (Ireland), 2R. [215] 1541

Ireland—English Records relating to, [216] 101

Licensing Act, [216] 15

University Education, [214] 1617

University Tests (Dublin) (No. 8), Comm. [215] 1527

COL COL { SESSION 1873 } COL COL
214—215—216—217.

COLCHESTER, Lord

Judicial Peerages, Motion for an Address, [216] 1771
Standards Commission—Weights and Measures, [217] 1076

COLE, Lieut.-Colonel Hon. H. A., Fermagh
Ireland—Galway Magistracy—Case of Mr. Dickson, [215] 15

COLEBROOKE, Sir T. E., Lanarkshire, N.
Church of Scotland (Patronage), Res. [216] 1108
Consolidated Fund (Appropriation), 2R. [217] 1885
Conveyancing (Scotland), 2R. [215] 964; Comm. 1698; cl. 9, [216] 151; cl. 13, 504
Entailed and Settled Estates (Scotland), 2R. [215] 1542
Hypotheo Abolition (Scotland), 2R. Amendt. [216] 1847
Law Agents (Scotland), Comm. cl. 7, [216] 612
Locomotives on Roads, 2R. [215] 885
Parliament—Public Business—Scotch Bills, [216] 494
Poor Law (Scotland), 2R. Amendt. [214] 984
Roads and Bridges (Scotland), 2R. [216] 814

COLERIDGE, Sir J. D., (see ATTORNEY GENERAL, The)

College Statutes, Alteration of
Question, The Marquess of Salisbury; Answer, The Marquess of Ripon; short debate thereon May 16, [216] 10

COLLINS, Mr. T., Boston
Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment, Re-comm. cl. 3, [217] 780, 785; cl. 10, Amendt. 791; cl. 23, 799; 3R. 1022
Endowed Schools Act (1899) Amendment, Comm. cl. 3, [217] 631; cl. 6, Amendt. 942, 948, 950
Household Franchise (Counties), 2R. Previous Question moved, [217] 823
Ireland—Galway Election Petition—Trial of Election Petitions, Res. [215] 982
Juries, Comm. cl. 5, [216] 524, 526
Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister, Comm. [214] 575; 3R. Amendt. 753
Metropolis—Hyde Park—Regulations, [216] 640
Municipal Elections (Cumulative Vote), 2R. [217] 482
Municipal Officers Superannuation, 2R. [214] 1373

Occasional Sermons, 2R. Amendt. [215] 1986
Parliament—Business of the House, Motion for a Committee, [215] 288; [217] 1985
Parliament—Electoral Power, Distribution of, Res. Amendt. [215] 1573, 1590
Parliament—Resignation of Ministers, Ministerial Statement, [214] 1911
Parliamentary Electors Registration, 2R. [217] 468
Public Health, 2R. [215] 1665
Railway and Canal Traffic, Lords Amendts. [216] 1303
Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. [216] 740; cl. 2, 750; cl. 8, 927, 1082, 1083; cl. 4, Amendt. 1175; Commis. add. cl. [217] 615

COLLINS, Mr. T.—cont.

214] Register for Parliamentary and Municipal Electors, 2R. 1953
215] Comm. 292; Re-comm. cl. 3, 794, 795; cl. 4, t̄b.; cl. 5, 980; cl. 9, 981; cl. 10, 1891; cl. 13, 1898; cl. 16, Amendt. t̄b.; add. cl. 1894
Shah of Persia, Arrival of the, Motion for Adjournment, [216] 1135
Supply—Dover Harbour, [217] 1282
Local Government Board, [215] 1017, 1019
Supreme Court of Judicature, Comm. cl. 31, [216] 1888; cl. 74, [217] 189; Consid. cl. 23, 680
Turnpike Acts Continuance, &c., Comm. [216] 1757; [217] 382
University Education (Ireland), 2R. [214] 1513, 1817
University Tests (Dublin) (No. 2), [215] 305
Weights and Measures (Metric System), 2R. [217] 482

COLMAN, Mr. J. J., Norwich

Local Taxation, Motion for a Committee, [215] 1839
Municipal Officers Superannuation, 2R. [214] 1871
Rating (Liability and Value), 2R. [216] 304

Colonial Church Bill [H.L.]

(The Lord Blachford)

1. Presented; read 1st May 15 (No. 118)
Bill read 2nd, and referred to a Select Committee, after short debate May 27, [216] 484
And, on June 12, the Lords following were named of the Committee:—Abp. Canterbury, Abp. York, D. Richmond, M. Salisbury, D. Abercorn, E. Doncaster, E. Belmore, E. Chichester, E. Grey, E. Harrowby, E. Kimberley, V. Canterbury, V. Eversley, Bp. Winchester, Bp. Lichfield, L. Brodrick, L. Cairns, L. Hatherley, L. Lisgar, and L. Blachford
Report of Select Comm. * July 10 [No. 202]
Bill reported * July 10 (No. 203)
Committee * July 11 (No. 208)
Report * July 14
Read 3rd * July 15
c. Read 1st * July 17 [Bill 248]
Read 2nd * July 23
Committee [Dropped]

Colonies

Amendt. on Committee of Supply Feb 28, To leave out from "That," and add "a Select Committee be appointed to consider the relations that subsist between the United Kingdom and the Colonies, particularly as they affect the direction which emigration takes and the occupation of waste lands within the Empire" (Mr. Macfie) v., [214] 1102; after debate, Question, "That the words, &c.," put, and agreed to

Colonies, Defence of the Amendt. on Committee of Supply Mar 7, To leave out from "That," and add "this House is of opinion that the time has now come when, having regard to the best interests of

[cont.]

[cont.]

COL CON { GENERAL INDEX } CON CON
214—215—216—217.

Colonies, Defence of the—cont.

the Empire, the taxpayers of the United Kingdom should be relieved from the unequal burden of taxation which they have hitherto borne for Imperial purposes; and that with this view each Colony should be invited to contribute, in proportion to its population and wealth, such annual contingents of men or such sums of money towards the defence of the Empire as may, by arrangement between the Home and Colonial Governments, be hereafter deemed just and necessary" (Lord Eustace Cecil v. [214] 1820; Question proposed, "That the words, &c.," after debate, Amendt. withdrawn

COLONSAY, Lord

Conveyancing (Scotland), 2R. [216] 1887;
Comm. cl. 3, Amendt. [217] 599, 600;
Commons Amendt. Amendt. 1423
Law Agents (Scotland), 2R. [216] 1781;
Comm. add. [217] 203, 204, 205; Report,
Amendt. 887; Consider. 1084

COLTHURST, Sir G., Kinsale

Union Rating (Ireland), 2R. Amendt. [214] 754

Commons, Inclosure of—Legislation

Question, Mr. Spencer Stanhope; Answer, Mr.
Bruce May 26, [216] 432

CONOLLY, Mr. T., Donegal Co.

University Education (Ireland), 2R. Amendt.
[214] 1856

Consolidated Fund Appropriation Bill

(Mr. Bonham-Carter, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Baxter)

- c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> July 30
- 217] Read 2<sup>o</sup>, after debate July 31, 1858
Order for Committee read; Moved, "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair"
August 1, 1450; after short debate, Committee; Report
Read 3<sup>o</sup>, after short debate August 2, 1477
- i. Read 1<sup>o</sup> (Earl Granville) August 2
Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>, after short debate August 4, 1810;
Committee negatived; Standing Orders Nos.
37. and 38. considered (according to Order) and dispensed with; Bill read 3<sup>o</sup>
Royal Assent August 5 [36 & 37 Vict. c. 79]

Consolidated Fund &c. (Permanent Charges Redemption) Bill

(Mr. Baxter, Mr. William Henry Gladstone)

- c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> June 24 [Bill 206]
Read 2<sup>o</sup> June 30
Committee*; Report July 8
Read 3<sup>o</sup> July 4
- i. Read 1<sup>o</sup> (Marquess of Lansdowne) July 7
Read 2<sup>o</sup> July 21 (No. 198)
Committee*; Report July 24
Read 3<sup>o</sup> July 25
Royal Assent July 28 [36 & 37 Vict. c. 57]

Consolidated Fund (20,317,346 19s. 9d.)
Bill (Mr. Bonham-Carter, Mr. Baxter, Mr.
William Henry Gladstone)

- c. Resolutions [March 21] reported; Bill ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> Mar 24
Read 2<sup>o</sup> Mar 26
Committee*; Report Mar 27
Read 3<sup>o</sup> Mar 28
- i. Read 1<sup>o</sup> (Marquess of Lansdowne) Mar 28
Read 2<sup>o</sup>; Committee negatived; read 3<sup>o</sup>;
Royal Assent Mar 29 [36 Vict. c. 3]

Consolidated Fund (£12,000,000) Bill
(Mr. Bonham-Carter, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Baxter)

- c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> May 16
Read 2<sup>o</sup> May 19
Committee*; Report May 21
Read 3<sup>o</sup> May 22
- i. Read 1<sup>o</sup> (Earl Granville) May 23
Read 2<sup>o</sup> May 26
Committee*; Report May 27
Read 3<sup>o</sup> June 9
Royal Assent June 16 [36 Vict. c. 26]

Consolidated Rate Bill (Mr. Stansfeld, Mr. Secretary Bruce, Mr. Goschen, Mr. Hibbert)

- c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> May 5 [Bill 148]
Question, Mr. W. Morrison; Answer, Mr.
Hibbert May 23, [216] 857
Bill withdrawn* July 7

Conspiracy Law Amendment Bill

(*Mr. Vernon Harcourt, Mr. Mundella, Mr.
Rathbone, Mr. James*)

- c. Ordered* June 11
Read 1<sup>o</sup> June 12 [Bill 190]
Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>, after short debate July 7, [216]
1889
- Committee*; Report July 24 [Bill 263]
Considered* July 25
Read 3<sup>o</sup> July 28
- i. Read 1<sup>o</sup> (Earl of Kimberley) July 29 (No. 256)
217] Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>, after short debate July 31, 1819
Committee, after short debate August 1, 1419;
Amends. made (No. 270)
Report*; read 3<sup>o</sup> August 2
- c. Order for consideration of Lords Amendts.
read August 4, 1533
Moved, "That the Lords Amendts. be taken into Consideration this day three months" (Mr. Vernon Harcourt), 1533; after short debate, Question put, and agreed to

Constabulary Force (Ireland) Bill

(The Marquess of Hartington, Mr. Secretary Bruce)

- c. Resolution [July 21] reported, and agreed to;
Bill ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> July 22 [Bill 257]
Read 2<sup>o</sup> July 25
Committee*; Report July 28
Committee* (on re-comm.); Report July 29
Read 3<sup>o</sup> July 30
- i. Read 1<sup>o</sup> (M. of Lansdowne) July 31 (No. 261)
Read 2<sup>o</sup>; Committee negatived August 1
Read 3<sup>o</sup> August 2
Royal Assent August 5 [36 & 37 Vict. c. 74]

CON CON { SESSION 1873 } CON COR
 214—215—216—217.

Consular Service, The

Question, Mr. Eastwick; Answer, Viscount Enfield Feb 28, [214] 1100

Contagious Diseases Acts Repeal (1866-1869) Bill (Mr. William Forster, Mr. Jacob Bright, Mr. Mundella)

c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> Feb 7 [Bill 29]
 Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2<sup>o</sup>" May 21, [216] 218

Amendt. to leave out "now," and add "upon this day six months" (Sir John Pakington); after long debate, Question put, "That now, &c." A. 128, N. 251; M. 123

Words added; main Question, as amended, put, and agreed to; Bill put off for six months

Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act

Moved, "That a Select Committee be appointed to inquire into the operations of the Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act, 1869, and the Cattle Disease Acts (Ireland), and the constitution of the Veterinary Departments of Great Britain and Ireland" (Mr. Clare Read) Feb 14, [214] 508; after debate, Motion agreed to; Select Committee appointed

And, on Feb 28, Committee nominated as follows:—Mr. William Edward Forster (Chairman), Mr. James Barclay, Mr. Jacob Bright, Mr. Callan, Mr. Cawley, Mr. Clay, Mr. Dent, Mr. Dodson, Mr. William Johnston, Mr. Kavanagh, Mr. Lusk, Mr. Monsell, Lord Robert Montagu, Mr. O'Conor, Mr. Pell, Mr. Clare Read, Mr. Ridley, Sir Henry Selwin-Ibbetson, and Mr. Tipping

Report of Select Committee July 25
 (Parl. P. No. 353)

Question, Colonel North; Answer, Mr. W. E. Forster August 4, [217] 1520.

Conveyancing (Scotland) Bill

(Mr. Secretary Bruce, The Lord Advocate, Mr. Winterbotham)

c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> Mar 27 [Bill 108]
 215] Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>, after short debate April 24, 1862

Order for Committee read; Moved, "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair" May 8, 1865

Amendt. to leave out from "That," and add "the Bill be committed to a Select Committee" (Mr. Gordon) v.; Question, "That the words, &c.," put, and agreed to; Main Question, "That Mr. Speaker, &c.," put, and agreed to; Committee—R.P. 216 Committee—n.r. May 19, 1861

Committee; Report May 27, 508 [Bill 178]
 Considered June 5

Read 3<sup>o</sup> June 6

Lords Amendts. [Bill 268]

i. Read 1<sup>o</sup> (Lord Chancellor) June 9 (No. 141)
 . Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>, after debate July 8, 1865

217] Committee July 18, 598 (No. 297)
 . Report July 24, 856; further Amendts. made (No. 298)

Read 3<sup>o</sup> July 25

Conveyancing (Scotland) Bill—cont.

e. Lords Amendts. considered; several agreed to; several disagreed to; and several amended, and agreed to; Committee appointed "to draw up Reasons to be assigned to The Lords for disagreeing to the Amendts. to which this House hath disagreed" July 29 Lords Reasons for disagreeing to certain of the Lords Amendts. reported, and agreed to; to be communicated to the Lords July 30.

i. Returned from the Commons with several of the Amendts. agreed to; several agreed to, with Amendts.; and several disagreed to, with Reasons; the said Reasons and Amendts. to be printed July 31 (No. 264)
 Moved, That the Commons amendts. to Lords amendts. and Commons reasons for disagreeing to certain of the amendts. made by the Lords be now considered (The Lord Chancellor) August 1, 1868

Amendt. to leave out ("now") and insert ("this day three months") (The Lord Colonsay); after short debate, on Question, That ("now,") &c.; Coms. 25, Not-Cont. 43; M. 18

Division List, Cont. and Not-Cont. 1426
 Resolved in the negative; Commons amendts. to Lords amendts. and Commons reasons for disagreeing to certain of the amendts. made by the Lords, to be considered on this day three months

CORBETT, Colonel E., Shropshire, S.

Army—Auxiliary Forces, [216] 1854

Militia—General Orders, [216] 908

Army—Length of Service (India), Res. [214] 854

Army Estimates—Land Forces, [214] 1058

Criminal Law—Chipping Norton Magistrates, [216] 501

Shropshire Magistrates—Whitefoot, George, Case of, [215] 1769

CORRANCE, Mr. F. S., Suffolk, E.

Agricultural Children, 3R. [215] 1708
 Barking Charity Schools, Motion for an Address, [215] 1960

Coal Supply, [214] 153

Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment, Re-comm. cl. 3, [217] 775, 778

Landlord and Tenant, 2R. [216] 1645

Local Government Board—Inspectors and Health Officers, [215] 18

Local Taxation, Motion for a Committee, [215] 1838

Merchant Shipping Code, [214] 1397

Parliament—Address in Answer to the Speech, Report, [214] 165

Parliamentary Elections (Expenses), 2R. [216] 1126

Public Health, 2R. Amendt. [215] 1665; Comm. [217] 90

Rating (Liability and Value)—Valuation—Consolidated Rate, Leave, [215] 1512; 2R. [216] 284; Comm. 739; cl. 3, 923; Amendt. 1023, 1028, 1029; cl. 13, 1193, 1195, 1839; cl. 15, 1424

San Juan Award—Rights of British Subjects, [214] 597

Supply—Local Government Board, [215] 1019

Ways and Means, Financial Statement, Comm. [215] 682; Report, 917

COR COU { GENERAL INDEX } COU COW
 214—215—216—217.

- CORRIGAN, Sir D. J., Dublin City
 Customs Outport Clerks, Res. Report, [217]
 1242
 Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment,
 Re-comm. cl. 3, [217] 773
 Endowed Schools Act (1869) Amendment,
 Comm. add. cl. [217] 952
 Ireland—Civil Servants, Res. [216] 1826
 Lunatic Asylum Boards (Ireland), [217] 145
 Navy—Assistant Surgeons, [217] 1253
 Rating Liability (Ireland), 2R. [217] 962
 Sale of Liquors on Sunday, 2R. [217] 98, 120
 Supply—Metropolitan Police of Dublin, [217]
 1141
 Turkey—Courts of Justice, [217] 900
 *University Education (Ireland), 2R. [214]
 1659, 1751
 Weights and Measures (Metric System), 2R.
 [217] 462

- Court of Queen's Bench (Ireland) (Grand Juries) Bill (Sir Colman O'Loghlen, Mr. Sergeant Sherlock)
 c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> June 19 [Bill 198]
 Read 2<sup>o</sup> June 28
 Committee*; Report June 26
 Read 3<sup>o</sup> June 27
 Lords Amends. [Bill 269]
 l. Read 1<sup>o</sup> (Lord O'Hagan) June 30 (No. 184)
 Read 2<sup>o</sup> July 11
 Committee* July 17 (No. 224)
 Report* July 18
 Read 3<sup>o</sup> July 21
 Royal Assent August 5 [36 & 37 Vict. c. 65]

COURTOWN, Earl of
 Colonial Church, 2R. [216] 491
 Game, &c., Motion for a Return, [214] 1282

- County Authorities (Loans) Bill
 (Mr. Winterbotham, Mr. Secretary Bruce)
 c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> April 21 [Bill 134]
 Read 2<sup>o</sup> May 5
 Committee*—n.r. May 12
 Committee*; Report May 15
 Considered* May 16
 Read 3<sup>o</sup> May 19
 l. Read 1<sup>o</sup> (Earl of Morley) May 20 (No. 124)
 Read 2<sup>o</sup> June 10
 Committee*; Report June 13
 Read 3<sup>o</sup> June 16
 Royal Assent July 7 [36 & 37 Vict. c. 35]

- Courts of Justice, The New
 Question, Mr. Gregory; Answer, Mr. Ayrton Feb 10, [214] 198; Observations, Mr. Gregory; Reply, Mr. Ayrton; debate thereon May 23, [216] 396
The Revised Designs, Questions, Mr. Wait;
 Answers, Mr. Ayrton July 15, [217] 398

- Cove Chapel, Tiverton, Marriages Legalization Bill [H.L.]
 (The Lord Bishop of Exeter)
 l. Presented; read 1<sup>o</sup> Feb 11 (No. 11)
 Read 2<sup>o</sup> Feb 14
 Committee*; Report Feb 23
 Read 3<sup>o</sup> Feb 27
 c. Read 1<sup>o</sup> (Mr. Winterbotham) Feb 28
 Read 2<sup>o</sup> Mar 3 [Bill 86]
 Committee*; Report Mar 4
 Read 3<sup>o</sup> Mar 6
 l. Royal Assent Mar 13 [36 Vict. c. 1]

- COWPER, Earl
 Gas and Water Works Facilities Act Amendment, 2R. [217] 205; Comm. 390; 3R. 802
 Mercantile Marine—Royal Commission, [215] 97, 98
 Merchant Shipping Acts Amendment, 2R. [217] 1318
 Nottingham Liberal Dinner—Unconstitutional Language, [217] 655, 656
 Railway Casualties, Motion for Return, [216] 832
 Railways, &c. (Transfer and Amalgamation), Commons Message, [214] 890
 Regulation of Railways (Prevention of Accidents), 2R. Amendt. [214] 686
 Standards Commission—Weights and Measures, [217] 1077

- COWPER-TEMPLE, Right Hon. W. F., Hampshire, S.
 Contagious Diseases Acts Repeal, 2R. [216] 266
 Mercantile Marine—Loss of Life at Sea, Motion for a Commission, [217] 619
 Merchant Shipping Acts Amendment, Comm. cl. 15, [217] 1026, 1027
 Occasional Sermons, 2R. [215] 1962
 Supply—New Houses of Parliament, [217] 1276

- County Courts (England)
 Moved for, Return from every County Court in England of the specific days on which the Judge sat in the six months ended the 30th June 1873, together with the following particulars, viz.:
 The County Court of holden at [Tabular form]
 (The Lord Chancellor) August 4, [217] 1515;
 Motion agreed to

- County Franchise (Ireland) Bill
 (Mr. Callan, Mr. Mitchell Henry, Mr. Downing)
 c. Ordered* April 1
 Read 1<sup>o</sup> April 2 [Bill 119]
 2R. Order discharged* June 18

CRA CRI { SESSION 1873 } CRI CRI
 214—215—216—217.

CRAUFURD, Mr. E. H. J., Ayr, &c.
 Church of Scotland (Patronage), Res. Previous Question moved, [216] 1190
 Conveyancing (Scotland), 2R. [215] 965 ; Comm. cl. 3, Amendt. 1842 ; cl. 18, [216] 506 ; cl. 16, 508 ; cl. 41, 512
 Customs Outport Clerks, Res. Report, [217] 1289, 1243
 Endowed Schools Act (1869) Amendment, Comm. cl. 11, Amendt. [217] 946 ; cl. 15, 948 ; add. cl. 953
 Juries, Comm. cl. 5, [216] 517 ; cl. 45, 535, 538
 216] Law Agents (Scotland), Comm. cl. 2, 541 ; Amendt. 543, 544 ; cl. 5, Amendt. 545 ; cl. 7, 613 ; cl. 8, Amendt. ib., 614 ; cl. 13, Amendt. 615 ; cl. 15, Amendt. ib. ; cl. 19, Amendt. 616
 Poor Law (Scotland), 2R. [214] 972, 999, 1011 Rating (Liability and Value)—Valuation—Consolidated Rate, Leave, [215] 1516 ; Comm. [216] 741 ; cl. 2, 910 ; cl. 3, 924 ; Consid. [217] 401, 402, 403, 414, 418
 Roads and Bridges (Scotland), 2R. Amendt. [216] 804
 Valuation, 2R. [216] 318

CRAWFORD, Mr. R. W., London
 Army—35-ton Gun, The, [217] 1388
 Army—City of London Volunteers—The Artillery Company's Drill Ground, Res. [215] 817
 Charing Cross and Victoria Embankment Approach, Motion for a Committee, [214] 1029
 Commercial Marine, Motion for an Address, [214] 1351
 Currency—Bank Act, Res. [215] 143, 156
 Customs and Inland Revenue, Comm. cl. 4, [215] 1687, 1688
 East India Stock Dividend Redemption, [215] 736
 Endowed Schools Commissioners—Emanuel Hospital Scheme, Motion for an Address, [215] 1875, 1895, 1897, 1899, 1902, 1956
 India—Railway Gauge, Res. [214] 1550
 Juries, Comm. cl. 5, Amendt. [216] 522, 523, 524, 525
 Merchant Shipping Act—"Atlantic," Wreck of the, [215] 647
 Parliament—Business of the House, Motion for a Committee, [215] 244
 Parliament—Business of the House (Tuesday Sittings), Res. [214] 285
 Parliament—Resignation of Ministers, Ministerial Statement, [214] 1909, 1918
 Post Office—Mail Contracts—Cape and Zanzibar, [216] 1911
 Supply—New Palace at Westminster, [217] 1128
 Union of Benefices, [214] 283, 283 ; 2R. 507
 University Education (Ireland), [214] 1816
 Ways and Means, Financial Statement, Comm. [215] 683 ; Report, 914 ; Comm. 950

CRICHTON, Viscount, Enniskillen
 Ireland—Judicial Bench—Justice Lawson, Mr., Libels upon, [215] 1297
 Juries (Ireland) Act, Select Committee, [214] 1980

VOL. CCXVII. [THIRD SERIES.]

CRIMINAL LAW

Appropriation of Penalties, Question, Mr. W. H. Smith ; Answer, Mr. Bruce July 24, [217] 903
Capital Offences, Question, Sir George Jenkinson ; Answer, Mr. Bruce Feb 13, [214] 371
Case of Ann Murray, Question, Mr. W. Lowther ; Answer, Mr. Bruce April 3, [215] 528
Case of John Tomlinson, Question, Mr. Charley ; Answer, Mr. Bruce June 18, [216] 992
Chatham Convict Prison, Question, Mr. R. N. Fowler ; Answer, Mr. Bruce Feb 14, [214] 438 ;—Self Mutilations in, Question, Mr. R. N. Fowler ; Answer, Mr. Bruce July 25, [217] 995
Chipping Norton Magistrates, Question, Mr. Mundella ; Answer, Mr. Bruce May 26, [216] 429 ; Questions, Mr. Corbett, Mr. Bowring ; Answers, Mr. Bruce May 27, 501 ; Question, Mr. Bowring ; Answer, Mr. Bruce June 6, 548 ; Explanation, Mr. Bruce June 9, 639 ; Questions, Sir George Jenkinson, Mr. Cobbett, Mr. Bowring ; Answers, Mr. Bruce July 4, 1784
Convict Labour at Dartmoor, Question, Sir Charles W. Dilke ; Answer, Mr. Baxter July 24, [217] 900
Folkestone Magistrates—Case of "Coleman v. Smithson," Question, Mr. F. S. Powell ; Answer, Mr. Bruce June 27, [216] 1497
Forged Telegrams, Question, Mr. Peak ; Answer, The Attorney General July 31, [217] 1321
Great Northern Railway Company—Inquest on a Guard, Question, Mr. Straight ; Answer, Mr. Bruce May 15, [215] 2020
Halstead Magistrates—Case of Samuel Mays, Question, Mr. P. A. Taylor ; Answer, Mr. Bruce June 19, [216] 1163
Middlesex Grand Juries, Question, Mr. Eykyn ; Answer, Mr. Bruce August 6, [217] 1560
Newbury Magistrates, Question, Earl De La Warr ; Answer, The Earl of Morley Mar 7, [214] 1514
New South Wales—Commutation of Sentences, Question, Admiral Erskine ; Answer, Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen Feb 10, [214] 197
Outrage at the Bath Election, Question, Mr. Dixon ; Answer, Mr. Bruce June 30, [216] 1553
Private Prosecutors (Scotland), Question, Mr. Cameron ; Answer, Mr. Bruce July 24, [217] 917
Public Prosecutors, Question, Mr. Magniac ; Answer, Mr. Bruce July 24, [217] 918
Shropshire Magistrates—Case of George Whitefoot, Question, Mr. P. A. Taylor ; Answer, Mr. Bruce May 1, [215] 1298 ; Observations, Mr. P. A. Taylor ; Reply, The Attorney General ; short debate thereon May 9, 1763
The Weaverham Cock-Fighting Case, Question, Mr. P. A. Taylor ; Answer, Mr. Bruce July 14, [217] 302 ; July 31, 1324 ; Question, Mr. Jacob Bright ; Answer, Mr. Bruce August 4, [217] 1631 ; Question, Sir Wilfrid Lawson ; Answer, Sir Henry Storks August 5, 1560

Treatment of Untried Prisoners, Question, Mr. Brady ; Answer, Mr. Bruce Feb 7, [214] 152

CRI CRI { GENERAL INDEX } CRI CBO
 214—215—216—217.

Criminal Law and Police

Administration of the Police—Motion for a Select Committee, Observations, Mr. Eykyn; Reply, Mr. Bruce; short debate thereon May 9, [215] 1733

Constabulary of Radnor, Question, Sir Joseph Bailey; Answer, Mr. Bruce May 1, [215] 1299

Metropolitan Police—Constable Goodchild, Question, Mr. Auberon Herbert; Answer, Mr. Winterbotham April 7, [215] 643;—Legal Advice, Question, Mr. Stapleton; Answer, Mr. Bruce Feb 14, [214] 487

Police Interference with Political Placards—Nottingham, Question, Mr. Auberon Herbert; Answer, Mr. Bruce April 25, [215] 974

Police Superannuation, Question, Sir John Ogilvy; Answer, Mr. Bruce Mar 4, [214] 1284

Criminal Law—The Tichborne Case—The Queen v. Castro

215] Question, Mr. Whalley; Answer, Mr. Bruce May 1, 1294; Question, Mr. M. Guest; Answer, Mr. Bruce May 2, 1405; Question, Mr. Whalley; Answer, Mr. Bruce May 5, 1488; Questions, Mr. Whalley; Answers, Mr. Bruce May 8, 1681; Question, Mr. O'Conor; Answer, Mr. Bruce May 15, 2019; 216] Question, Observations, Mr. Whalley; Reply, Mr. Bruce May 23, 408

Moved, "That in the case of 'The Queen v. Castro, alias Tichborne,' Copies be produced of the Application to the Lords of the Treasury for aid to the Defendant, and of the Reply thereto; of the Correspondence between Mr. Whalley, M.P., and the Solicitor to the Treasury on the subject of the said prosecution; and for a Return of the sums allowed by the Treasury in respect of Fees to Counsel and other expenses incurred by prisoners in Ireland during the last ten years" (Mr. Whalley) June 13, 959; after debate, the last paragraph struck out; Motion, as amended, agreed to

Copies ordered, "of the Application to the Lords of the Treasury for aid to the Defendant in the case of Queen v. Castro alias Tichborne, and of the Reply thereto; and, of the Correspondence between Mr. Whalley, M.P., and the Solicitor to the Treasury, on the subject of the said prosecution" (Mr. Whalley) (Parl. P. No. 297)

Question, Mr. Whalley; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer June 19, 1167; Question, Mr. Whalley; Answer, Mr. Bruce July 8, [217] 38

Prosecution for Contempt of Court, Question, Mr. Whalley; Answer, Mr. Gladstone June 17, 1084; Explanation, The Attorney General June 19, 1173; Observations, Mr. Whalley; Reply, Mr. Bruce July 11, [217] 264 [House counted out]

Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1871

Moved, "That a Select Committee be appointed to consider what changes it is desirable to make in the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1871" (Mr. Auberon Herbert) July 16, [217] 459; after short debate, Question put; A. 35, N. 39; M. 4

Criminal Law Amendment Act (1871)

Repeal Bill } (Mr. Mandella, Mr. Morley, Mr. Carter, Mr. Eustace Smith)

e. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> April 12 [Bill 161]
2R. [Dropped]

CROFT, Sir H. G. D., Herefordshire

*Burials, 2R. [215] 208
Railway and Canal Traffic, 2R. [214] 1046, 1398; 3R. Amendt. [215] 1105*

CROSS, Mr. R. Ascheton, Lancashire, S.W.

Agricultural Children, Comm. cl. 4, Amendt. [215] 1488

*Building Societies, [216] 15
Building Societies (No. 2), Leave, [215] 1193*

*Burials, 2R. [215] 187, 203
Church of England Revenues, Address for a Royal Commission, [217] 488*

County Court Judges, Minute of June, 1872, Res. [214] 1800, 1803

Edinburgh, Duke of—Queen's Message, [217] 1097

Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment, Re-comm. cl. 23, Amendt. [217] 799

Juries, Comm. cl. 5, [216] 521; cl. 41, 532; cl. 46, 585; Motion for reporting Progress, 539; cl. 57, 1519; Motion for reporting Progress, [217] 590

Local Taxation, Motion for a Committee, [215] 1830, 1833

*Municipal Boroughs Extension, 2R. [217] 121
Municipal Officers Superannuation, 2R. [214] 1369*

Parliament—Public Business, [216] 1860; [217] 400, 663, 913

Post Office (Balances)—Telegraphic Department, Res. [217] 1189, 1218, 1229

214] Railway and Canal Traffic, Leave, 242
215] Comm. 361; cl. 4, 373; cl. 10, 376, 377; Amendt. 378, 380, 382; cl. 11, 384; cl. 20, 386, 387; cl. 24, Amendt. 594; cl. 33, 595; 2R. 1107

216] Lords Amendts. Amendt. 1301, 1303, 1304, 1305

Rating (Liability and Value), 2R. [216] 306; Comm. cl. 8, 1024, 1026; Consid. [217] 414; Amendt. 418

Register for Parliamentary and Municipal Electors, Comm. [215] 293; cl. 9, 961; Re-comm. cl. 13, 1693

Superannuation Act Amendment, Comm. cl. 1, [215] 1704, 1706, 1707

Supreme Court of Judicature, 2R. [216] 686; Comm. cl. 13, Amendt. 1749, 1750; cl. 18, 1791; cl. 27, Amendt. 1873, 1874; cl. 31, 1887; cl. 39, [217] 46; Consid. cl. 22, 681

Turnpike Acts Continuance, &c. Comm. [216] 1758

University Education (Ireland), [214] 599

Valuation, [217] 607

Ways and Means, Comm. [215] 947

Crown Lands Bill—Formerly } Woods and Forests Bill }

(Mr. William Henry Gladstone, Mr. Baxter)

e. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> April 28 [Bill 140]

Read 2<sup>o</sup> May 5

*Committee*; Report May 8*

[cont.]

CBO CUR { SESSION 1873 } CUS DAL
 214-215-216-217.

Crown Lands Bill [cont.]

Considered * May 12
 Read 3<sup>o</sup> * May 13
 l. Read 1<sup>o</sup> * (Duke of St. Albans) May 15
 Read 2<sup>o</sup> * May 23 (No. 117)
 Committee *; Report June 10
 Read 3<sup>o</sup> * June 13
 Royal Assent July 7 [36 & 37 Vict. c. 36]

Crown Private Estates Bill [H.L.]
 (The Lord Chancellor)

l. Presented; read 1<sup>o</sup> June 26 (No. 175)
 216] Bill read 2<sup>o</sup> June 30, 1858
 Committee *; Report July 1
 Read 3<sup>o</sup> * July 8
 c. Read 1<sup>o</sup> * (Mr. Gladstone) July 7 [Bill 292]
 217] Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2<sup>o</sup>"
 July 21, 1858

Amendt. to leave out from "That," and add
 "it is expedient to extend the scope of the Act 25 and 26 Vic. c. 37, until the secrecy at present attaching exclusively to Crown testaments is abolished" (Mr. Anderson) v.; Question proposed, "That the words, &c.;"
 after debate, Amendt. withdrawn
 Main Question put: A. 167, N. 35; M. 132;
 Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>
 Division List, Ayes and Noes, 718
 Committee; Report, after short debate July 25,
 1858
 Moved, "That the Bill be read 3<sup>o</sup> upon Monday next" (Mr. Gladstone), 1007 Amendt. to leave out "Monday next," and insert "Friday" (Mr. Dickinson) v.; Question, "That 'Monday,'" put, and agreed to;
 main Question put, and agreed to
 Read 3<sup>o</sup> * July 28
 l. Royal Assent August 5 [36 & 37 Vict. c. 61]

Crown Salmon Fisheries (Scotland)
 Questions, Mr. Ellice; Answers, Mr. Baxter
 June 20, [216] 1227; June 26, 1412

CURRITT, Mr. G., Surrey, W.
 Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment,
 Consid. add. cl. [217] 958
 Supply—Charity Commission, [215] 1013

Currency—The Bank Act
 Moved, "That, in the opinion of this House, the present system of Currency is dangerous to the commerce of the Country, and that some change is necessary to prevent such extreme fluctuations in the discount rate as have been frequent since the passing of the Bank Act of 1844, and that an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty, praying that She will be pleased to issue a Royal Commission to inquire into the means of remedy for the evils complained of" (Mr.
 Anderson) Mar 25, [215] 111

Amendt. to leave out from "That," and add
 "a Select Committee be appointed to inquire into the operation of the Bank Act of 1844, and of the Bank Acts for Ireland and Scotland of 1845" (Sir John Lubbock) v.,
 135; Question proposed, "That the words,
 &c.;" after debate, Amendt. and Motion withdrawn

Custody of Infants Bill

(Mr. William Fowler, Colonel Loyd Lindsay,
 Mr. Lopes, Mr. Mundella)

c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> Feb 17 [Bill 87]
 Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>, after short debate Feb 24, [214]
 884
 Committee *—H.P. Feb 28
 Committee *; Report Mar 4
 Considered Mar 6, 1813
 Read 3<sup>o</sup> * Mar 7
 l. Read 1<sup>o</sup> * (Lord Chelmsford) Mar 10 (No. 38)
 Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>, after debate Mar 24, [215] 4
 Committee * Mar 28 (No. 51)
 Report * Mar 31
 Read 3<sup>o</sup> * April 1
 Royal Assent April 24 [36 Vict. c. 12]

Customs

Customs Department (Salaries), Question, Mr.
 Trevelyan; Answer, Mr. Baxter May 13,
 [215] 1788
Extra Treasury Clerks, Question, Lord Elcho;
 Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer
 July 10, [217] 150
Out-Port Clerks, Question, Viscount Sandon;
 Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer
 July 14, [217] 305; Postponement of Motion,
 Viscount Sandon July 25, 1058

Customs and Inland Revenue Bill

(Mr. Bonham-Carter, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Baxter)

e. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> May 1 [Bill 144]
 Read 2<sup>o</sup> * May 5
 Committee; Report May 8, [215] 1684
 Read 3<sup>o</sup> * May 9
 l. Read 1<sup>o</sup> * (Earl Granville) May 12 (No. 106)
 Read 2<sup>o</sup> *; Committee negative; read 3<sup>o</sup>
 May 13
 Royal Assent May 15 [36 Vict. c. 18]

Customs Duties (Isle of Man) Bill

(Mr. Bonham-Carter, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Baxter)

c. Considered in Committee; Bill ordered;
 read 1<sup>o</sup> * May 5 [Bill 151]
 Read 2<sup>o</sup> * May 12
 Committee *; Report May 13
 Read 3<sup>o</sup> * May 14
 l. Read 1<sup>o</sup> * (Marquess of Lansdowne) May 15
 Read 2<sup>o</sup> * June 10 (No. 116)
 Committee *; Report June 12
 Read 3<sup>o</sup> * June 13
 Royal Assent June 16 [36 Vict. c. 29]

DALHOUSIE, Earl of
 Church of Scotland (Patronage), Res. [216]
 1044, 1053

DALEYMPLE, Mr. C., Buteshire
 Church of Scotland (Patronage), Res. [216]
 1097
 Conveyancing (Scotland), 2R. [215] 984
 Education—Night Schools, [216] 836
 Elementary Education Act—Stourbridge
 School Board, [217] 318

DAL DEL { GENERAL INDEX } DEL DEN
214—215—216—217.

DALRYMPLE, Mr. C.—cont.

Factory Act, Enforcement of the, [214] 437
Hypotheo Abolition (Scotland), 2R. [216] 1351
Navy—"Britannia" Training Ship, [215] 1138
Supply—Education, England and Wales, [216]
1460
United States—British Vessels in American Waters, [214] 1615
Workshops Act, Res. [215] 991

DALRYMPLE, Mr. D., Bath

Army—Medical Department—Medical Warrant, The, [217] 1088
Militia Surgeons, [215] 1137
Church of England Revenues, Address for a
Royal Commission, [217] 487
Colonies, The, Motion for a Committee, [214]
1105
Crown Private Estates, Comm. cl. 1, [217]
1001
Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment,
Consid. add. cl. [217] 988
Habitual Drunkards, [216] 888; 2R. 1109;
[217] 95
Parliament—Order of Business, [216] 841
Permissive Prohibitory Liquor, 2R. [215] 1629
Public Health, Comm. [217] 92
Superannuation Act Amendment, Comm. et. 1,
[215] 1705
Supply—Embassy Houses at Vienna and Washington, [217] 1134
Report, [216] 469

DAMER, Hon. Captain L. S. W. DAWSON-, Portarlington
Spain—Sale and Purchase of Arms, [215] 222

DAVIES, Mr. R., Anglesey Co.
Endowed Schools Commissioners — David
Hughes's Charity, [216] 635

Defamation Bill

(Mr. Raikes, Mr. Cross, Mr. Whitbread)
c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> Feb 18 [Bill 70]
2R. negatived* April 1

Defence Acts Amendment Bill

(Mr. Campbell-Bannerman, Mr. Secretary Cardwell, Sir Henry Storks)
c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> July 22 [Bill 355]
Read 2<sup>o</sup> July 24
Committee*; Report July 25
Read 3<sup>o</sup> July 28
l. Read 1<sup>o</sup> (Marquess of Lansdowne) July 29
Read 2<sup>o</sup> July 31 (No. 255)
Committee*; Report August 1
Read 3<sup>o</sup> August 2
Royal Assent August 5 [36 & 37 Vict. c. 72]

DELAHUNTY, Mr. J., Waterford City
Ireland—Irish Railways, Purchase of, Res.
[215] 1178

Public Works Loans—England and Ireland,
[217] 660, 661, 905, 998
Railway and Canal Traffic, 2R. [214] 1055
Supreme Court of Judicature, 8R. [217] 789
Union Rating (Ireland), 2R. [214] 769

DE LA WARR, Earl (see also BUCKHURST Lord)

Army—Medical Officers in the Army—Royal
Warrant, Motion for an Address, [217] 392
Army Regulation Act—Abolition of Purchase,
[214] 1598
Criminal Law—Newbury Magistrates, [214]
1514

DE L'ISLE AND DUDLEY, Lord

Army—Education of Officers, [216] 1835, 1839

DENBIGH, Earl of

University Tests (Dublin), 2R. [215] 1860

DENISON, Mr. O. BECKETT-, Yorkshire,
W. R., E. Div.

Army Estimates—Administration of the Army,
[216] 1292

Consolidated Fund (Appropriation), 3R. [217]
1477

Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act, Motion for a Committee, [214] 514

Duke of Edinburgh's Annuity, Comm. cl. 2,
[217] 1449

East India (Financial Statement), Res. [215]
414

East India Revenue Accounts, Comm. Motion for Adjournment, [217] 1470, 1478

Endowed Schools Act (1869) Amendment,
Comm. [217] 955; Consid. cl. 13, Amendt. 1065

India—Officering of the Indian Army, Motion for an Address, [217] 1057

India—Railway Gauge, Res. [214] 1560

Post Office—Telegraphs, Purchase of—Outstanding Claims, [216] 1166

Railway and Canal Traffic, Comm. cl. 3, [215]
371; cl. 4, 374; cl. 10, 381; cl. 12, 386;
cl. 22, 591; Lords Amendt. [216] 1303

Railway Regulation, Comm. [217] 1248

Shah of Persia, Visit of, [216] 498, 638

Suez Canal—Augmentation of Dues, Res. [215]
466

Shipping Tolls, [215] 297

Supply—Dover Harbour, [217] 1282

New Palace at Westminster, [217] 1261

Telegraphs, Comm. cl. 4, 1247

DENMAN, Lord

Ballot Act—Declaration of the State of the Polls, [217] 1514

Consolidated Fund (Appropriation), 2R. [217]
1511

County Courts (England), Motion for a Return, [217] 1515

Edmonds, Leonard, Esquire, Petition of, [216]
978

Judicial Peerages, Motion for an Address, [216]
1782

Public Offices—New Admiralty and War Offices,
[217] 1514

Supreme Court of Judicature, 2R. Amendt.
[214] 1714; Comm. [215] 7, 394; Res. 1398;

3R. Amendt. 1463

DENT, Mr. J. D., Scarborough

Agricultural Returns, [214] 1962

Cholera, The, [216] 1854

Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 3, [216]
1005

DEP      DIG      SESSION 1873      DIL      DIP
214—215—216—217.

Departmental Expenditure—Purchase and Sale of Stores

Attendt. on Committee of Supply Feb 21, To leave out from "That," and add "a Select Committee be appointed to inquire into and report upon the existing principles and practice which in the several Public Departments and Bodies regulate the purchase and sale of materials and stores" (Mr. Holmes) v., [214] 803; Quotation proposed, "That the words, &c.;" after debate, Amendt. withdrawn

DERBY, Earl of

Alkali Act (1863)—Petition, [216] 1778
India—Banda and Kirwee Prize Money, [216] 1702
Parliament—Address in Answer to the Speech, [214] 18

DE ROS, Lord

Army—Education of Officers, [216] 1736
Recruiting, [216] 1619
Royal Military Academy—Woolwich Examinations, [216] 1839
Army—Control Department, Motion for Papers, [216] 1223
Children's Employment in Dangerous Performances, 2R. [216] 1244
Elementary Education Provisional Order Confirmation (No. 1), Comm. [215] 1672

DICK, Mr. W. W. Fitzwilliam, Wicklow
Navy—Cadets, Age of, [217] 151

DICKINSON, Mr. S. S., Stroud

Army Estimates—Administration of the Army, [216] 1292
Chancery (Funds) Act—Accountant General in Chancery, Res. [217] 263
Crown Private Estates, Comm. cl. 1, Amendt. [217] 1000, 1001, 1002
Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment, Re-comm. add. cl. [217] 800
Endowed Schools Commissioners—Emmanuel Hospital Scheme, Motion for an Address, [215] 1917
India—Railway Gauge, Res. [215] 1554
Married Women's Property Act (1870) Amendment, 2R. [214] 684
Municipal Officers Superannuation, 2R. [214] 1369
Superannuation Act Amendment, Comm. [215] 1702; cl. 1, Amendt. 1703, 1704
Supply—Customs Department, [215] 1818
Inland Revenue, [215] 1819
Superannuation Allowances, [215] 1815

DICKSON, Major A. G., Dover
Dover Harbour, [215] 1027, 1788
Supply—Dover Harbour, [217] 1283

DIGBY, Mr. K. T., Queen's Co.

University Tests (Dublin) (No. 3), Comm. [215] 1526

DILKE, Sir C. W., Chelsea, &c.

Army—Duke of York's School, [216] 1248
Canada, Deminion of—Pacific Railroad, [217] 1430, 1431
Canada Loan Guarantee, 2R. Amendt. [216] 1320; [217] 1597
Criminal Law—Convict Labour at Dartmoor, [217] 900
Crown Private Estates, 2R. [217] 709; Comm. 1000; add. cl. 1002, 1007
Duke of Edinburgh's Annuity, Comm. cl. 1, [217] 1440, 1443
Gas Companies—Increased Price of Gas, [216] 269
Hampton Court Green, [215] 8
Merchant Shipping Acts Amendment, 2R. [217] 691
Metropolis—Gas, Price of, [215] 221
Parliament—Electoral Power, Distribution of, Res. [215] 1561, 1590
Register for Parliamentary and Municipal Electors, Re-comm. cl. 5, Amendt. [215] 959
Russian Settlements on the River Atrek, [214] 439

DILLWYN, Mr. L. L., Swansea

Civil Service Writers, [217] 902
Criminal Law—Shropshire Magistrates—Whitefoot, George, Case of, [215] 1769
Endowed Schools Act (1869) Amendment, 2R. Amendt. [217] 718; Comm. 930; cl. 5, Amendt. 940; cl. 6, [217] 943, 944; cl. 15, 949
Juries, Comm. cl. 5, Amendt. [216] 621
Parliament—Business of the House—Opposed Business, Res. [214] 1364
Parliament—Resignation of Ministers, Ministerial Statement, Amendt. [214] 1913
Post Office—Telegraphs, Extension of—Misapplication of Funds, [216] 1172
Railway and Canal Traffic, Comm. cl. 23, [215] 594
Railways—Case of James Harris, [214] 723
Salmon Fisheries, 2R. [214] 1378
Supply—Bankruptcy Court, London, [215] 1775
Charity Commission, [215] 1014
Local Government Board, [215] 1019
Lord Privy Seal, [215] 1791
Natural History Museum, [215] 790
Queen's and Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer, [215] 1454
Wild Birds Protection, Motion for a Committee, [215] 1189

DIMSDALE, Baron, Hertford

Belgium—Military System of, [217] 1436
Public Health, Comm. Motion for Adjournment, [217] 94
Rating (Liability and Value), Consid. [217] 616
Supreme Court of Judicature, 3R. [217] 989

Diplomatic and Consular Services

Consul General in Egypt, Question, Mr. W. Lowther; Answer, Viscount Enfield May 22, [216] 272
Foreign Representatives in Morocco, Question, Mr. Graham; Answer, Viscount Enfield July 29, [217] 1175
Greek Legations, Question, Mr. Ion Hamilton; Answer, Viscount Enfield May 22, [216] 275

[cont.]

DIP DIX { GENERAL INDEX } DOD DOW
214—215—216—217.

Diplomatic and Consular Services—cont.

- H.M. Consul at Constantinople*—Case of Mr. Paul Tomagian, Question, Mr. Locke; Answer, Viscount Enfield August 4, [217] 1527
Pensions to Consuls, Question, Mr. Baillie Cochrane; Answer, Viscount Enfield Mar 28, [215] 205
Pensions to Widows of Consular Officers, Question, Mr. Baillie Cochrane; Answer, Viscount Enfield June 30, [216] 1560
Staff of Secretaries and Attachés, Question, Mr. W. Lowther; Answer, Viscount Enfield May 12, [215] 1787

DISRAELI, Right Hon. B., Buckinghamshire

- Berials, 2R. Amendt. [215] 171, 172
 Factory Acts Amendment, 2R. [216] 827
 International Law—New Rules, Motion for an Address, [214] 2042, 2043
 Parliament—Questions, &c.
     Address in Answer to the Speech, [214] 69, 79
 Privilege—Appellate Jurisdiction of the House of Lords, [217] 157, 167, 171, 863, 874
 Public Business, [215] 1790; [216] 1860; [217] 685
 Resignation of Ministers, Ministerial Statement, [214] 1917; *Explanation, 1929
 Parliament—Breach of Privilege—“Pall Mall Gazette,” Res. [215] 532
 Post Office—Mail Contracts, Res. [216] 710, 934;—Cape and Zanzibar, 1314, 1241
 Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 3, [216] 925, 932
 Supreme Court of Judicature, 2R. [216] 685; Comm. 1567; cl. 6, 1712, 1728, 1729, 1746
 University Education (Ireland), Leave, [214] 427; 2R. Amendt. 1807
 Ways and Means, Report, [215] 1349

Divorce Bills

- Select Committee nominated April 29, as follows:—Mr. Spencer Walpole (Chairman), Sir Charles Adderley, Mr. Bonham Carter, Colonel French, Mr. Gathorne Hardy, Mr. Headlam, The Lord Advocate, Sir John Pakington, and Colonel Wilson Patten

DIXON, Mr. G., Birmingham

- Agricultural Children, 2R. [214] 698, 701
 Criminal Law—Bath Election, Outrage at the, [216] 1553
 Elementary Education Act (1870) [214] 1288; [215] 14;—Puttenham School Rates, 1782
 Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment, Leave, [216] 905, 908; 2R. [217] 671; Re-comm. Amendt. 758; cl. 3, 782; Amendt. 784; cl. 6, Amendt. 790; cl. 23, Amendt. 796; add. cl. 801
 Fiji Islands—Consul March, [215] 347
 Household Franchise (Counties), 2R. [217] 830
 Parliament—Business of the House, [216] 1172
     Public Business, [215] 684
 Register for Parliamentary and Municipal Electors, Re-comm. cl. 3, [215] 793; cl. 4, Amendt. 796
 University Tests (Dublin), [214] 1946

DODDS, Mr. J., Stockton

- Probates, &c. of Wills (Scotland), [216] 272
 Register for Parliamentary and Municipal Electors, Re-comm. cl. 3, [215] 794, 795
 Salmon Fisheries, 2R. [214] 1378
 Salmon Fisheries Commissioners, 3R. [215] 88

DODSON, Right Hon. J. G., Sussex, E.

- Army Estimates—Land Forces, [214] 1087
 Central Asia, Motion for an Address, [215] 877
 India—Euphrates Valley Railway, Res. [215] 614
 Juries, Comm. cl. 1, [215] 2072
 Parliament—Business of the House (Committee of Supply), [214] 251
 Parliament—Business of the House, Motion for a Committee, [215] 236
 Parliament—Private Bill Legislation, [217] 497, 498
 Railway and Canal Traffic, Leave, [214] 243; 2R. 1052
 Railway Regulation, Comm. [217] 1248, 1249
 Rating (Liability and Value), 2R. [216] 815; Comm. cl. 3, 922, 1006, 1010, 1018, 1019, 1022, 1030; cl. 15, 1425, 1429; Consid. [217] 413, 417
 Supreme Court of Judicature, Comm. cl. 31, [216] 1889
 University Education (Ireland), [214] 1395; 2R. Amendt. 1712, 1785
 University Tests (Dublin) (No. 2), Leave, [215] 305, 308
 University Tests (Dublin) (No. 3), Comm. cl. 3, [215] 1534

Dover Harbour Bill

- Question, Major Dickson; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue April 28, [215] 1027; May 12, 1788

DOWNING, Mr. M'Carthy, Cork Co.

- Army—Carlisle Fort, [216] 839
 Board of Education (Ireland)—O'Keeffe, Rev. Mr., Nomination of Committee, [216] 330
 Clerical Magistrates, [216] 550
 Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act, Motion for a Committee, [214] 525
 General Valuation (Ireland), 2R. [215] 1538; Comm. [216] 1330
 Ireland—Affairs in, [214] 790
     Board of Works, [215] 526
     Civil Service, Reports of Commissioners, [215] 536
 Ireland—Civil Servants, Res. [216] 1815
 Ireland—Irish Railways, Purchase of, Res. [215] 1174, 1177
 Ireland—Valuation Department, Res. [215] 428
 Juries (Ireland) Act, Motion for a Committee, [215] 327
 Monastic and Couventual Institutions, Leave, [214] 529
 Parliament—Breach of Privilege—“Pall Mall Gazette,” Res. [215] 534
 Rating (Liability and Value), Consid. [217] 417
 Sale of Liquors on Sunday, 2R. [217] 118
 Union Rating (Ireland), 2R. [214] 758, 761
 University Tests (Dublin) (No. 2), Leave, Motion for Adjournment, [215] 368
 University Tests (Dublin) (No. 3), Res. [215] 505

DRA DUF { SESSION 1873 } DUF DUK
 214—215—216—217.

- Drainage and Improvement of Lands
 (Ireland) Provisional Orders Bill
 (Mr. William Henry Gladstone, Mr. Baxter)
 c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup>* Feb 14 [Bill 63]
 Read 2<sup>o</sup>* Feb 20
 Committee*; Report Feb 21
 Read 3<sup>o</sup>* Feb 24
 l. Read 1<sup>o</sup>* (The Marquess of Lansdowne) Feb 25
 Read 2<sup>o</sup>* Mar 6 (No. 25)
 Committee*; Report Mar 7
 Read 3<sup>o</sup>* Mar 10
 Royal Assent Mar 20 [36 Vict. c. ii]
- Drainage and Improvement of Lands
 (Ireland) Provisional Orders (No. 2)
 Bill (Mr. William Henry Gladstone,
 Mr. Baxter)
 c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup>* Feb 25 [Bill 82]
 Read 2<sup>o</sup>* Feb 28
 Committee*; Report Mar 10
 Read 3<sup>o</sup>* Mar 21
 l. Read 1<sup>o</sup>* (The Marquess of Lansdowne) Mar 24
 Read 2<sup>o</sup>* April 22 (No. 46)
 Committee*; Report April 24
 Read 3<sup>o</sup>* April 25
 Royal Assent May 18 [36 Vict. c. xv]

- Drainage and Improvement of Lands
 (Ireland) Provisional Order (No. 3)
 Bill (Mr. William Henry Gladstone,
 Mr. Baxter)
 c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup>* June 5 [Bill 183]
 Read 2<sup>o</sup>* June 10
 Committee*; Report June 19
 Read 3<sup>o</sup>* June 20
 l. Read 1<sup>o</sup>* (Marquess of Lansdowne) June 23
 Read 2<sup>o</sup>* July 17 (No. 166)
 Committee*; Report July 18
 Read 3<sup>o</sup>* July 21
 Royal Assent July 28 [36 & 37 Vict. c. ccviii]

Drainage of Land (Ireland) Act, 1863—
Drainage of the Rivers Suck and Shannon—See title Ireland—The Shannon Navigation

Duchy of Lancaster—Guide over Lancaster Sands
 Question, Mr. F. Stanley; Answer, Mr. Childers
 July 28, [217] 1093

DUCIE, Earl of
 Endowed Schools Commissioners—King Edward VI's Grammar School, Birmingham, Motion for an Address, Amendt. [216] 80
 Railway and Canal Traffic, 2R. [215] 1566

DUDLEY, Earl of
Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister, 2R. [214] 1898

DUFF, Mr. M. E. Grant (Under Secretary of State for India), Elgin, &c.
 Central Asia—Boundaries of the Afghan States, [214] 786;—Mr. Forsyth's Mission, 1041;—Afghanistan, [216] 1811;—Khan of Khelat, 1416

- DUFF, Mr. M. E. Grant—cont.
 Central Asia, Motion for an Address, [215] 852
 East India (Financial Statement), Res. [215] 421
 East India Loan, Comm. [215] 1109
 East India Museum, [216] 838
 East India Revenue Accounts, Comm. [217] 1389, 1460, 1484
 East India Stock Dividend Redemption, [215] 728
 India—Questions, &c.
 Army—Banda and Kirwee Prize Money, [215] 100, 223, 646, 1485; [216] 273
 Breech-loaders, Supply of, [215] 12
 Burmese Embassy, [215] 904
 Education, [215] 1024
 European Officers, Regulations for—Prize, [217] 146, 495
 Forest Department, [217] 35
 H.M. Roman Catholic Servants, [215] 1484
 Indian Officers—Siege of Lucknow, [216] 1418
 Majors of Artillery, [215] 1404
 Medical Officers, [215] 899
 Mutiny Medal—20th Regiment, [216] 1864
 Peshawur Railway, The, [214] 372
 Railway Gauge, [215] 687;—Punjab Lines, 1028
 Scientific Corps, Officers of the, [216] 270, 384; [217] 1433
 Scripture Readers—Sandwell, Mr., [217] 210
 Snake-Bites, Deaths by, [216] 275
 Troop Horses, [215] 608
 India—Army—Officering of the Indian Army, Motion for an Address, [217] 1049
 India—Railway Gauge, Res. [214] 1540

- DUFF, Mr. R. W., Banffshire
 Hypothec Abolition (Scotland), 2R. [216] 1387
 Mercantile Marine—Unseaworthy Ships, [215] 103
 Merchant Shipping Act—"Maggie," Case of the, [215] 299
 Navy—Half Pay of Officers, [215] 32
 Navy—Admiralty Administration, Res. [214] 953
 Navy Estimates—Coast Guard Service, [216] 126
 Dockyards, &c. [216] 140

- Duke of Edinburgh, H.R.H. The
 217] l. Message from the Queen—Delivered by The Earl Granville, and read by The Lord Chancellor July 28, 1068
 Ordered, That the said Message be taken into consideration To-morrow
 The Queen's Message considered July 29, 1159
 Then, after short debate, an humble Address of thanks and concurrence ordered nemine dissentientis to be presented to Her Majesty thereupon: The said Address to be presented to Her Majesty by the Lords with white staves
 c. Message from Her Majesty brought up, and read by Mr. Speaker July 28, 1098 Moved, "That this House will To-morrow, at Two of the clock, resolve itself into Committee to consider Her Majesty's Gracious Speech" (Mr. Bruce); after short debate, Motion agreed to

[cont.]

[cont.]

DUK DYN { GENERAL INDEX } EAS EAS
214—215—216—217.

Duke of Edinburgh, H.R.H.—cont.

Message from Her Majesty [28th July] considered in Committee July 29, [217] 1180
(In the Committee)

Queen's Message read

Moved, (1.) "That the annual sum of Ten Thousand Pounds be granted to Her Majesty, out of the Consolidated Fund of Great Britain and Ireland, towards providing for the Establishment of His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh and Her Imperial Highness the Grand Duchess Marie Alexandrovna of Russia, the said Annuity to be settled on His Royal Highness for his life, in such manner as Her Majesty shall think proper, and to commence from the day of the Marriage of their Royal Highnesses, such Annuity to be in addition to the Annuity now enjoyed by His Royal Highness under the Act of the twenty-ninth year of Her present Majesty"
(2.) "That Her Majesty be enabled to secure to Her Imperial Highness the Grand Duchess Marie Alexandrovna, in case she shall survive His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh, an annual sum not exceeding Six Thousand Pounds during her life, to support her Royal Dignity" (Mr. Gladstone); after short debate, Motion agreed to

Duke of Edinburgh's Annuity Bill.

(Mr. Bonham-Carter, Mr. Gladstone, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer)

217] c. Resolutions reported from the Committee on the Message from Her Majesty [28th July]; Resolutions agreed to; Bill ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> July 30, 1257

Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2<sup>o</sup>" July 31, 1337

Amendt. to leave out "now," and add "upon this day month" (Mr. P. A. Taylor); after debate, Question put, "That 'now,' &c.;" A. 162, N. 18; M. 144

Division List, Nos. 1358

Main Question put, and agreed to; Bill read 2<sup>o</sup> Committee; Report August 1, 1440

Read 3<sup>o</sup> August 2

i. Read 1<sup>o</sup> (Earl Granville) August 3 (No. 273)
Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>, after short debate; Committee negatived; Standing Orders Nos. 37. and 38. considered (according to Order) and dispensed with; Bill read 3<sup>o</sup> August 4, 1510

Royal Assent August 5 [36 & 37 Vict. c. 80]

DUNSDAY, Lord

Irish Militia, [217] 970, 971
Juries (Ireland), 3R. Amendt. [216] 906
Peace Preservation (Ireland) Acts Continuance, 2R. [216] 323
Rock of Cashel, 2R. [216] 424

DYNEVOR, Lord

Agricultural Children, 2R. [216] 721
Public Worship Facilities — Standing Order No. 34a, [216] 163; 2R. 1395
Supreme Court of Judicature, 3R. [215] 1474

East Africa—The Slave Trade

Moved to resolve, That in the opinion of this House late proceedings and events in East Africa render it desirable that the consular authority of Great Britain in the Portuguese dominion from Cape Delgado to Delagoa Bay should now be re-established (The Lord Campbell) July 28, [217] 1068; after short debate, Motion withdrawn

East India (Great Southern of India and Carnatic Railway Companies) Bill
(Mr. Grant Duff, Mr. Ayrton)

c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> July 23 [Bill 259]
Bill withdrawn July 28

East India House Museum

Question, Mr. Reed; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff June 12, [216] 888

East India Loan Bill

(Mr. Grant Duff, Mr. Ayrton)

c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> Mar 24 [Bill 103]
Read 2<sup>o</sup> Mar 31
Order for Committee read; Moved, "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair" April 3; Debate adjourned

Debate resumed April 28, [215] 1108

Amendt. to leave out from "That," and add "in the opinion of this House, it is inexpedient that a loan of a large amount should be raised upon the security of the revenues of India, when the measure which authorises the loan contains no statement of the purposes to which it is proposed to devote the money, and provides no security that a portion of the loan may not be employed as ordinary revenue, or may not be applied to objects different from those for which the loan was originally intended" (Mr. Fawcett) v.; Question proposed, "That the words, &c.; after short debate, Question put; A. 88, N. 46; M. 42; main Question, "That Mr. Speaker, &c.," put, and agreed to; Committee—R.P.

Committee *; Report May 8

Considered * May 9

Read 2<sup>o</sup> May 12

i. Read 1<sup>o</sup> (Duke of Argyll) May 13 (No. 109)

Read 2<sup>o</sup> May 20

Committed *; Report May 23

Read 3<sup>o</sup> May 26

Royal Assent June 16 [36 Vict. c. 32]

East India (Railway Shares) Bill—see title Indian Railways Registration Bill

East India Stock Dividend Redemption Bill—formerly

East India Company's Stock (Redemption of Dividend) Bill

(Mr. Grant Duff, Mr. Ayrton)

c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> Mar 26 [Bill 102]

Read 2<sup>o</sup> Mar 31

Committee *; Report April 3

Considered * April 7

Read 3<sup>o</sup> April 21

Question, Mr. Crawford; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff April 21, [215] 726

[cont.]

EAS EDM { SESSION 1873 } EDM ELE
214—215—216—217.

East India Stock Dividend Redemption Bill—cont.

- i. Read 1st (Duke of Argyll) April 22 (No. 67)
Read 2nd April 29, 1114.
Committee*; Report May 6
Read 3rd May 8
Royal Assent May 15 [36 Vict. c. 17]

EASTWICK, Mr. E. B., Penryn, &c.

- Board of Trade—Fog Signals, [214] 152
Central Asia—Russian Expedition to Khiva, [214] 1862
Russian Frontier, Extension of, [215] 2017
Russian Map, [216] 500;—Khan of Khelat, 1416
Central Asia, Motion for an Address, [215] 818, 877
Central Asia—Boundary Line, Motion for an Address, [214] 772
Chinese Coolie Trade, [216] 390
Consular Service, [214] 1100
East India (Financial Statement), Res. [215] 413
Fiji, Protectorate of, Res. [216] 955
India—Burmese Embassy, [215] 904
India—Euphrates Valley Railway, Res. [215] 634
Mercantile Marine—Lights in the Channel, Res. [215] 1721
Municipal Officers Superannuation, 2R. [214] 1378
Post Office—Mail Contracts, Res. [216] 708
South Africa, [214] 798
Suez Canal—Augmentation of Dues, Res. [215] 466
Treaty of Washington, [215] 1442
United States—British North America—Alaska Boundary, [215] 1487
Women's Disabilities, 2R. [215] 1208

EATON, Mr. H. W., Coventry

France—Commercial Treaty, 1860, [215] 528

Ecclesiastical Commissioners Bill [H.L.] (The Lord President)

- i. Presented; read 1st June 20 (No. 170)
Read 2nd June 27
Committee* July 7 (No. 200)
Report* July 8
Read 3rd July 10
Commons Amendts. (No. 241)
c. Read 1st (Mr. Winterbotham) July 11
Read 2nd July 15, [217] 424 [Bill 235]
Committee*; Report July 21
Considered* July 22
Read 3rd July 24
l. Royal Assent August 5 [36 & 37 Vict. c. 64]

Ecclesiastical Commissioners (Salaries)

Question, Mr. Monk; Answer, Mr. Gladstone May 1, [215] 1294
The Derwentwater Estates, Question, Mr. T. E. Smith; Answer, Mr. Goschen July 10, [217] 145

Edmunds, Leonard, Esquire—Petition of
Moved, "That the petition of Leonard Edmunds, esquire, presented on the 26th day of May last, be referred to the Comptroller and

Edmunds, Leonard, Esquire—Petition of—cont.

Auditor General, with directions to him to examine the several accounts mentioned therein, and any other accounts which may be submitted to him relating to the matters set forth in such petition, and to report thereon to the House" (The Lord Redesdale) June 18, [216] 963; after debate, on Question* resolved in the negative

EDUCATION

Compulsory Education—Prisons Act, 1865, Question, Colonel Egerton Leigh; Answer, Mr. Bruce April 3, [215] 520

Education Department—Advertisements, Question, Mr. Bourke; Answer, Mr. W. E. Forster April 28, [215] 1027;—The New Revised Code, 1873, Questions, Mr. J. G. Talbot, Lord Edmond Fitzmaurice; Answers, Mr. W. E. Forster Mar 31, 348;—Revised Code, 1873, Article 59—Teachers for Elementary Schools, Question, Sir John Kennaway; Answer, Mr. W. E. Forster July 24, [217] 912

Education of Blind and Deaf-Mute Children, Question, Mr. Wheelhouse; Answer, Mr. W. E. Forster Feb 11, [214] 281

Report of the Committee of Council, Question, Sir Charles Adderley; Answer, Mr. W. E. Forster July 7, [216] 1863

Education of Blind and Deaf-Mute Children Bill (Mr. Wheelhouse, Mr. Mellor)

c. Ordered; read 1st Feb 12 [Bill 53]
2R. negatived, after short debate June 10, [216] 795

Education (Scotland) Act, 1872

Board of Education (Scotland), Question, Mr. Gordon; Answer, Mr. W. E. Forster May 2, [215] 1406

School Boards—Inspectors of the Poor, Question, Sir Robert Anstruther; Answer, Mr. Bruce May 19, [216] 98

Sec. 56—Teachers, Question, Mr. Gordon; Answer, Mr. W. E. Forster April 7, [215] 649

Sec. 57—Examination of Teachers, Question, Mr. Gordon; Answer, Mr. W. E. Forster April 1, [215] 401

The Poor Law—Payment of School Fees, Question, Mr. Miller; Answer, The Lord Advocate June 26, [216] 1412

Elementary Education Act (1870)

Annuities to Certificated Teachers, Question, Lord George Hamilton; Answer, Mr. W. E. Forster July 14, [217] 311

Board Schools—The National Anthem, Question, Mr. Hunt; Answer, Mr. W. E. Forster June 26, [216] 1413; Question, Lord Claud John Hamilton; Answer, Mr. W. E. Forster August 1, [217] 1437

Cost per Head—Explanation, Question, Sir Henry Wilmot; Explanation, Mr. W. E. Forster June 12, [216] 835

English and Scotch Codes, Question, The Marquess of Bristol; Answer, The Marquess of Ripon June 19, [216] 1158

[cont.]

[cont.]

ELE EGY { GENERAL INDEX } EGY ELC
214—215—216—217.

Elementary Education Act (1870)—cont.

- Legislation, Question, Mr. W. H. Smith ; Answer, Mr. Gladstone Feb 13, [214] 369 ; Questions, Mr. Kay - Shuttleworth, Mr. Dixon ; Answers, Mr. Gladstone Mar 4, 1287 ; Question, Mr. Dixon ; Answer, Mr. W. E. Forster Mar 24, [215] 14
London School Rate, Question, Sir John Kenaway ; Answer, Mr. Stansfeld May 20, [216] 169
Music in Training Schools, Question, Mr. Wingfield Baker ; Answer, Mr. W. E. Forster July 28, [217] 1086
New Code, 1873—The Music Fine, Question, Mr. Brogden ; Answer, Mr. W. E. Forster July 29, [217] 1179
Night Schools, Question, Mr. C. Dalrymple ; Answer, Mr. W. E. Forster June 12, [216] 836
Puddingham School Rates, Question, Mr. Dixon ; Answer, Mr. Hibbert May 12, [215] 1782
School Accommodation, Question, Mr. Salt ; Answer, Mr. W. E. Forster June 18, [216] 991 ; Questions, Mr. Scourfield ; Answer, Mr. W. E. Forster June 23, 1949
School Boards, Question, Observations, Lord Buckhurst ; Replies, The Earl of Morley, Viscount Halifax June 18, [216] 987
School Board Elections, Question, Mr. Akroyd ; Answer, Mr. W. E. Forster April 7, [215] 635
School Board, Holme St. Cuthbert's, Question, Mr. F. S. Powell ; Answer, Mr. W. E. Forster July 31, [217] 1321
School Fees of Pauper Children, Question, Sir Michael Hicks-Bass ; Answer, Mr. Stansfeld July 3, [216] 1709
Stourbridge School Board, Question, Mr. C. Dalrymple ; Answer, Mr. W. E. Forster July 14, [217] 318

EGERTON OF TATTON, Lord

- Gas Companies—Coal and Gas, Price of, [215] 1462

EGERTON, Hon. A. E., Lancashire, S.E.

- Army Estimates—Yeomanry Cavalry, [214] 1157
 Landlord and Tenant, 2R. [216] 1648
 Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 3, [216] 1079
 Seduction Laws Amendment, 2R. [215] 481
 Supreme Court of Judicature, Comm. cl. 74, [217] 188

EGERTON, Hon. Admiral F., Derbyshire, E.

- Navy—H.M.S "Devastation," [215] 579
 Navy Estimates—Retired Pay, [217] 1188

EGERTON, Hon. Wilbraham, Cheshire, Mid.

- Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 3, [216] 1030

Egypt

- Assassination of Captain C. Agnew*, Question, Major Gavin ; Answer, Viscount Enfield May 8, [215] 1683

Egypt—cont.

- Claims of British Subjects*, Question, Mr. Miller ; Answer, Viscount Enfield July 17, [217] 499
Judicial Reforms—The Suez Canal, Question, Mr. Baillie Cochrane ; Answer, Viscount Enfield Feb 13, [214] 389 ;—Increase of Dues, Question, Mr. Norwood ; Answer, Viscount Enfield July 24, [217] 899
Sir Samuel Baker, Question, Lord Ronald Gower ; Answer, Viscount Enfield Mar 24, [215] 19 ;—Telegram, Question, Mr. Cadogan ; Answer, Viscount Enfield June 30, [216] 1561

[See title Suez Canal]

ECHO, Lord, Haddingtonshire

- Army—Questions, &c.
 Artillery—35-Ton Gun, The, [217] 1386
 Auxiliary Forces—Volunteer Bands, [216] 637
 Easter Monday Reviews, [215] 289, 291
 Moncreiff Gun Carriages, [214] 894
 9th Lancers, Case of the late Sub-Lieutenant Tribe, [214] 490, 497, 498, 499, 500
 Re-organization—Exchanges, [217] 1438
 Retired Adjutants of Militia and Volunteers, [217] 1173
 Valve Equipment, The New, [216] 1165
 Army—Volunteer Force—New Regulations, Res. [217] 244, 248, 257, 262
 Army Estimates—Administration of the Army, [216] 1292
 Army Purchase Commissioners, Motion for reporting Progress, [214] 1591
 Clothing Establishments, &c. [216] 1263
 Control Establishments—Wages, &c. [216] 1255, 1258
 Land Forces, [214] 882, 1057, 1058
 Military Education, [216] 1286
 Provisions, Forage, &c. [216] 1261
 Warlike Stores, [216] 1274, 1276
 Works Buildings, &c. [216] 1279
 Charing Cross and Victoria Embankment Approach, Motion for a Committee, [214] 1024, 1028
 Charing Cross and Victoria Embankment Approach, Consid. [215] 8014
 Customs—Extra Treasury Clerks, [217] 150, 151
 Hypothec Abolition (Scotland), 2R. [216] 1371
 India—Banda and Kirwee Prize Money, [215] 222
 India—Offering of the Indian Army, Motion for an Address, [217] 1042
 Landlord and Tenant, [214] 1740 ; [215] 644
 Landlord and Tenant, 2R. [216] 1646, 1650
 Law Agents (Scotland), Comm. cl. 5, Amendt. [216] 544
 Masters and Servants—Law of Contract, Res. [216] 584
 Metropolis—South Kensington Museum, [217] 1436
 Navy—"Britannia" Training Ship, [215] 1189
 Navy Estimates—Admiralty Office, [216] 189
 Freight of Ships for Conveyance of Troops, &c. [217] 1286
 Scientific Branch, [217] 1296, 1287
 Parks Regulation Act—New Rules, [214] 204
 Parliament—Business of the House, [214] 199
 Public Business, [217] 1386
 Whitsun Recess, Adjournment for, [216] 498

[cont.]

[cont.]

ELC ELE { SESSION 1873 } ELE ELE
214-215-216-217.

ELCHO, Lord—cont.

Parliament—Committee of Supply, Res. [214] 260
Roads and Bridges (Scotland), 2R. [216] 808, 812
Shah of Persia, Visit of the, [216] 1173
South Kensington Museum, [217] 1175
Supply—Convict Establishments, [217] 1135, 1136
Legal Charges (Ireland), [217] 1146
Metropolitan Police of Dublin, [217] 1139
New Courts of Justice, &c. [217] 1100

Elementary Education Act (1870)

Amendment, &c. Bill

(Mr. William Edward Forster, Mr. Secretary Bruce)

216] c. Orders of the Day postponed June 12, 843.
. Motion for Leave (Mr. W. E. Forster) June 12, 900; after short debate, Motion agreed to; Bill ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup>* [Bill 188]
. Notice of Amendment; Question, Mr. W. H. Smith; Answer, Mr. Dixon June 13, 908
217] Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2<sup>o</sup>" July 17, 502
Previous Question proposed, "That that Question be now put" (Mr. Torrens); after long debate, Question put; A. 343, N. 72; M. 271; main Question put, and agreed to; Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>; Committee; Report [Bill 245]
Division List, Ayes and Noes, 587
. Order for Committee (on re-comm.) read; Moved, "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair" July 22, 753
Amendt. to leave out from "That," and add "in the opinion of this House, no Amendment of the Education Act will be satisfactory which does not make the attendance of children at school and the formation of School Boards compulsory throughout England and Wales, and which fails to remove the objections entertained to the principles embodied in the twenty-fifth section of the Act" (Mr. Dixon) v.; Question proposed, "That the words, &c." after short debate, Question put; A. 129, N. 45; M. 84
Division List, Ayes and Noes, 760
Main Question, "That Mr. Speaker, &c." put, and agreed to; Committee—R.P.
. Committee; Report July 22, 790
. Considered July 24, 956
. Bill read 3<sup>o</sup>, after debate July 25, 1007
l. Read 1<sup>o</sup>* (Lord President) July 25 (No. 243)
. Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>, after short debate July 29, 1162
. Committee July 31, 1308
Report*; read 3<sup>o</sup> August 1. (No. 265)
Royal Assent August 5 [36 & 37 Vict. c. 86]

Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment (Application for School Board)
Bill (Mr. Heygate, Mr. Akroyd, Mr. Francis S. Powell)
c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup>* July 7 [Bill 228]
2R. [Dropped]

Elementary Education Provisional Order Confirmation (No. 1) Bill

(Mr. William Edward Forster, Mr. Winterbotham)

c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup>* Mar 21 [Bill 95]
Read 2<sup>o</sup>* Mar 24
Committee*; Report April 3
Considered * April 7
Read 3<sup>o</sup>* April 21
l. Read 1<sup>o</sup>* (The Lord President) April 22
Read 2<sup>o</sup>* May 1 (No. 68)
Committee: referred to a Select Committee May 8, [215] 1867
And, on May 18, the Lords following were named of the Committee:—D. Cleveland, E. Harrowby, E. Beauchamp, V. Eversley, L. Bp. Winchester, L. Keasten, and L. Lawrence
Report of Select Comm.* June 20 [No. 186]
Bill reported*, and committed June 20
Committee, after short debate July 17, [217] 492 (No. 187)
Report July 23, 742
Read 3<sup>o</sup>* July 24
Royal Assent August 5 [36 & 37 Vict. c. ccxiv]

Elementary Education Provisional Order Confirmation (No. 2) Bill

(Mr. William Edward Forster, Mr. Winterbotham)

c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup>* Mar 21 [Bill 96]
Read 2<sup>o</sup>* Mar 24
Committee*; Report April 3
Considered * April 7
Read 3<sup>o</sup>* April 21
l. Read 1<sup>o</sup>* (The Lord President) April 22
Read 2<sup>o</sup>* May 1 (No. 69)
Committee*; Report May 8
Read 3<sup>o</sup>* May 9
Royal Assent May 15 [36 Vict. c. xxii]

Elementary Education Provisional Order Confirmation (No. 3) Bill (Mr. William Edward Forster, Mr. Secretary Bruce)

c. Ordered * April 1
Read 1<sup>o</sup>* April 2 [Bill 115]
Read 2<sup>o</sup>* April 13
Committee*; Report April 21
Read 3<sup>o</sup>* April 22
l. Read 1<sup>o</sup>* (The Lord President) April 24
Read 2<sup>o</sup>* May 2 (No. 78)
Committee*; Report May 8
Read 3<sup>o</sup>* May 9
Royal Assent May 15 [36 Vict. c. xxiii]

Elementary Education Provisional Order Confirmation (No. 4) Bill [H.L.]

(The Lord Privy Seal)

l. Presented; read 1<sup>o</sup>* June 10 (No. 181)
Read 2<sup>o</sup>* June 19
Committee*; Report June 20
Read 3<sup>o</sup>* June 23
c. Read 1<sup>o</sup>* (Mr. W. E. Forster) June 27
Read 2<sup>o</sup>* June 30 [Bill 208]
Committee*; Report July 9
Read 3<sup>o</sup>* July 10
l. Royal Assent July 21 [36 & 37 Vict. c. cxxxvii]

ELE ELP { GENERAL INDEX } ELP END
214-215-216-217.

Elementary Education Provisional Order

- Confirmation (No. 5) Bill [H.L.]
(The Lord Privy Seal)
l. Presented; read 1st June 10 (No. 149)
Read 2nd June 19
Committee*; Report June 20
Read 3rd June 23
c. Read 1st (Mr. W. E. Forster) June 27
Read 2nd June 30 [Bill 209]
Committee*; Report July 9
Read 3rd July 10
l. Royal Assent July 21 [36 & 37 Vict. c. cxlviii]

Elementary Education Provisional Order

- Confirmation (No. 6) Bill [H.L.]
(The Lord Privy Seal)
l. Presented; read 1st June 10 (No. 152)
Read 2nd June 19
Committee*; Report June 20
Read 3rd June 23
c. Read 1st (Mr. W. E. Forster) June 27
Read 2nd June 30 [Bill 210]
Committee*; Report July 9
Read 3rd July 10
l. Royal Assent July 21 [36 & 37 Vict. c. cxxxix]

ELLICE, Mr. E., St. Andrews, &c.

Hypothee Abolition (Scotland), 2R. [216] 1357
Parliament—Rules and Practice, [214] 194
Roads and Bridges (Scotland), 2R. [216] 818
Salmon Fishings, Crown, [216] 1297, 1298, 1413

ELLIOT, Mr. G., Durham, N.

Nitro Glycerine Act (1869), [216] 57
Railway and Canal Traffic, Comm. cl. 10, [215] 380

ELPHINSTONE, Sir J. D. H., Portsmouth

"Alabama"—Compensation to British Ship-owners, [216] 356, 433
Army—Military Hospital at Portsea, [216] 839
Central Asia—Boundary of the Afghan States, [214] 837
Ceylon—Breakwater at Colombo, [214] 733
Commercial Marine, Motion for an Address, [214] 1360
Fiji, Protectorate of, Res. [216] 958
Hypothee Abolition (Scotland), 2R. [216] 1369
Labourers Cottages (Scotland), 2R. Amendt. [216] 1142
Mercantile Marine—Unseaworthy Ships, Commission as to, [216] 167
Navy—Questions, &c.
Contract Prices, [215] 519
Half Pay of Officers, [215] 20, 26, 30
H.M.S. "Devastation," [215] 574, 576, 577
Straits of Magellan, [214] 1098
Navy—Admiralty Administration, Res. [214] 950
Navy Estimates—Admiralty Office, [216] 108, 112
Dockyards, &c. [216] 141
Men and Boys, [215] 87
Naval Stores, [216] 436, 445
New Works, &c. [216] 451
Postponement of Motions, [215] 20
Scientific Departments, [216] 129
Shipping Survey, &c. [215] 1994

ELPHINSTONE, Sir J. D. H.—cont.

Shah of Persia, Visit of—Naval Review at Spithead, [216] 909
Supply—Alabama Claims, [216] 411
Report, [217] 1259

Emigration to Brazil — Warwickshire Labourers

Address for, Copy of letter addressed by the Vicar of Napton to the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, describing the condition of certain Warwickshire Labourers who were emigrated to Cananea in Brazil (The Earl of Carnarvon) Feb 17, [214] 532; after short debate, Motion withdrawn

Endowed Schools Act (1869)

Question, Sir Michael Hicks-Beach; Answer, Mr. W. E. Forster Feb 7, [214] 154
After short debate, Select Committee appointed, "to inquire into the operation of 'The Endowed Schools Act, 1869'" (Mr. W. E. Forster) Feb 11, 289
And, on Feb 14, Committee nominated as follows:—Mr. William Edward Forster (Chairman), Sir Thomas Acland, Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, Mr. Collins, Mr. Hardcastle, Mr. Hardy, Mr. Heygate, Mr. Illingworth, Mr. Andrew Johnston, Mr. Kay-Shuttleworth, Mr. Alderman Lawrence, Mr. Leatham, Mr. Neville-Grenville, Sir John Pakington, Dr. Lyon Playfair, Mr. Powell, Mr. John Talbot, Mr. Trevelyan, and Mr. Welby
Report of Select Committee June 17
(Parl. P. No. 264)

Endowed Schools Act (1869) Amendment

Bill (Mr. William Edward Forster, Mr. Secretary Bruce)

- c. Ordered; read 1st June 26 [Bill 297]
217] Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2nd" July 21, 718
Amendt. to leave out "now," and add "upon this day three months" (Mr. Dilke); Question proposed, "That 'now,' &c.;" after short debate, Question put; A. 84, N. 70; M. 14
Main Question put, and agreed to; Bill read 2nd
. Order for Committee read; Moved, "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair" July 24, 921
Amendt. to leave out from "That," and add "This House will, upon this day three months, resolve itself into the said Committee" (Mr. Newdegate) v.; Question, "That the words, &c.," put, and agreed to Main Question, "That Mr. Speaker, &c.," put, and agreed to; Committee; Report Considered July 25, 1065
Read 3rd July 28
l. Read 1st (Lord President) July 29 (No. 253)
. Read 2nd, after short debate July 31, 1309
. Committee August 1, 1418; Amendts. made
. Report August 2, 1472
Further Amendts. made: The Queen's Consent Signified; the Standing Orders Nos. 37. and 38. considered (according to Order) and dispensed with; Bill read 3rd, with the Amendts. August 2
Royal Assent August 5 [36 & 37 Vict. c. 87]

[cont.]

END END { SESSION 1878 } END ENF
214—215—216—217.

Endowed Schools Address Bill

(*Mr. William Edward Forster, Mr.
Winterbotham*)

- c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> Mar 21 [Bill 94]
Read 2<sup>o</sup> Mar 24
Committee—R.P. Mar 26
Committee; Report Mar 27
Read 3<sup>o</sup> Mar 28
l. Read 4<sup>o</sup> (Lord President) Mar 31 (No. 54)
Read 2<sup>o</sup>; Committee negatived April 1
Read 3<sup>o</sup> April 3
Royal Assent April 4 [36 Vict. c. 7]

Endowed Schools Commissioners Schemes

David Hughes's Charity, Bemmaris, Question,
Mr. Davies; Answer, Mr. W. E. Forster
June 9, [216] 635

Expiry of 40 days, Questions, Observations,
The Marquess of Salisbury, Lord Redesdale;
Reply, The Marquess of Ripon Feb 13, [214]
366

Sir John Port's Foundation, Repton and Etwall, Question, Mr. R. Smith; Answer, Mr. W. E.
Forster July 14, [217] 318

Barking Charity Schools Scheme

Moved, "That an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty, praying that She will be graciously pleased to withhold Her assent to the scheme of the Endowed Schools Commissioners for the management of the Barking
Charity Schools" (Mr. Corrane) May 18, [215] 1960; after short debate, Motion
withdrawn

Denbigh Free Grammar School

Moved, "That an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty, praying Her Majesty to refuse her assent to the schemes of the Endowed Schools Commissioners for the management of the Free Grammar School and of the Blue Coat School
Charity at Denbigh in the county of Denbigh,
North Wales" (The Lord Bishop of Bangor)
July 18, [217] 593; after short debate, on Question? Cont. 68, Not-Cont. 46; M. 23;
resolved in the affirmative

Her Majesty's Answer to the Address reported July 22, 738

Explanation, The Marquess of Ripon July 28, 1867

Emanuel Hospital Scheme

Moved, "That an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty, praying Her Majesty that She will be graciously pleased to withhold Her assent from the scheme of the Endowed Schools Commissioners for the management of Emanuel Hospital, in the parish of St.
Margaret, in the city of Westminster"
(Mr. Crawford) May 18, [215] 1875; after long debate, Question put; A. 238, N. 286;
M. 48

Division List, Ayes and Noes, 1986

Grey Coat Hospital, Westminster

Address to Her Majesty, praying that She will be graciously pleased to suspend the approbation of the Scheme of the Endowed School Commissioners for the management of Grey
Coat Hospital in the city of Westminster,

Endowed Schools Commissioners Schemes—Grey Coat Hospital, Westminster—cont.

until the Schemes now under consideration for the management of the other Hospitals in Westminster are presented for Her Majesty's approval" (Mr. W. H. Smith) Feb 7, [214] 178; after short debate, Question put;
A. 22, N. 64; M. 42

Heath Free Grammar School

Moved, "That an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty, praying Her Majesty to refuse her assent to the scheme of the Endowed Schools Commissioners for the management of the Free Grammar School of Queen Elizabeth at Heath in the borough of Halifax in the county of York" (The Marquess of Salisbury) July 18, [217] 597; after short debate,
on Question? resolved in the negative

King Edward VI.'s Grammar School Birmingham

- 216] Moved, "That an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty, praying that Her Majesty will withhold her assent from the scheme of the Endowed Schools Commissioners relating to the Free Grammar School of King Edward VI. in Birmingham" (The Marquess of Salisbury) May 19, 74 Amendt. moved, after ("from") to insert ("so much of") (The Earl of Ducie); after debate, on Question; Cont. 60, Not-Cont.
106; M. 46; resolved in the negative;
then original Motion for said Address agreed to
Division List, Cont. and Not-Cont. 95
Her Majesty's Answer to the Address reported
May 26, 414

ENFIELD, Viscount (Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs), Middlesex

Africa (West Coast)—Fanti Confederation,
[215] 1483

"Alabama"—Compensation to British Shipowners, [216] 356, 434

Belgium—Army Re-organization, [217] 804
Military System of, [217] 1436

Boانيا—Moslem Fanaticism, Alleged Outbreak of, [216] 1786

Brazil, British Emigrants to, [215] 1712
British Subjects, Claims of, [216] 1249

Canadian Boundary—Robert's Point, [214]
1033

Central Asia—Atrek Valley, [216] 841;—
Russian Map, 500

Russian Expedition to Khiva, [214] 1962

Russian Frontier, Extension of, [215] 2017

Central Asia—Boundary Question, [214] 724,
725, 826; Motion for an Address, 771, 1034;
[215] 877

Central Asian Railway, [216] 546

China, Coal Fields of, [214] 541

Coolie Trade, [216] 386

Treaty of Tien-Tsin, [214] 1610

Consular Service, [214] 1100

Diplomatic and Consular Committee—Pensions to Consuls, [215] 295

Diplomatic and Consular Service—Constantinople, H.M.'s Consul at—Case of Mr. Paul Tomagian, [217] 1527

Diplomatic Relations with the Vatican, Motion for Papers, [214] 445

[cont.]

ENF ENF { GENERAL INDEX } ENF ERS
214—215—216—217.

ENFIELD, Viscount—cont.

Diplomatic Service—Attachees, Staff of, [215] 1787

Pensions to Widows of Consular Officers, [216] 1561

Egypt—Questions, &c.

Agnew, Captain Charles, Assassination of, [215] 1683

Baker, Sir Samuel, [215] 19 ;—Telegram, [216] 1561

Claims of British Subjects, [217] 499

Judicial Reforms—Suez Canal, The, [214] 369 ;—Shipping Tolls, [215] 297, 344

Egypt—Suez Canal—Augmentation of Dues, Res. [215] 461, 466 ; [217] 899

Fiji Islands—British Protectorate, [214] 597, 899

Consul March, [215] 347, 1560

Fiji, Protectorate of, Res. [216] 958

Foreign Office—Consul General (Egypt), [216] 272

Greek Legations, [216] 275

Foreign Powers, Treaties with, Res. [214] 1314

France—Questions, &c.

Commercial Treaty, The New, [214] 1302 ; [216] 1311, 1558, 1863 ; [217] 143, 1177

Commercial Treaty between Ava and France, [217] 1087

Mexico—Diplomatic Relations, [217] 1564

Morocco, Foreign Representatives in, [217] 1176

Passports, [215] 602

Selby, Mr., Disappearance of, [214] 1615

Treaty of Commerce, 1860, [215] 15, 521 ; —1873, 636 ; [216] 1784 ; [217] 919

France and Belgium—Travellers' Luggage, Examination of, [216] 1230

International Law—Arbitration, Motion for an Address, Previous Question moved, [217] 88

Parliament—Persian Concessions to Baron de Reuter, [217] 804

Patent Rights—International Conference, [215] 636 ; [217] 310, 1564

Portugal—Commercial Tariff, [215] 1029

Extradition Treaty with, [214] 1095

Railways—Heberlein Break, [214] 1962

Rome, Court of—Religious Corporations, [215] 295

Vansittart, Mr., Attack upon, [215] 1490

Russia—Khiva Expedition, [215] 399

Russia and Persia—Valley of the Atrek, [214] 440, 1099

Sandwich Islands, [215] 219

Shah of Persia, Visit of, [216] 638, 724

Slave Trade—Zanzibar, [215] 603

South Sea Islands—Upolo and Navigator Islands, [215] 1788

Spain, [215] 219

Carlists, Recognition of the, [217] 1094

King Amadeus, [214] 731, 1186

“Northfleet” Collision—The “Murillo,” [214] 601, 729 ; [215] 344

Sale and Purchase of Arms, [215] 229

Spanish Republic, Recognition of, [216] 837

“Vigilante,” Capture of the, [217] 1524

Supply—Consular Establishments Abroad, &c.

[217] 1108, 1110

Embassies and Missions Abroad, [215] 1803,

1804 ; [217] 1149

Embassy Houses at Vienna and Washington, [217] 1131

Report, [216] 469

Secret Services, [215] 1028

ENFIELD, Viscount—cont.

Sweden, Coronation of the King of, [216] 353

Treaties with Foreign Powers, Res. [214] 489

Treaty of Washington, [215] 1436, 1440 ;—

Claim for Aves Island, [217] 1099

Turkey and Greece—Brigandage, [216] 1710

Turkey—Courts of Justice, [217] 900

United States—British North America—Alaska Boundary, [215] 1488

Offences on the High Seas, [214] 1082

Vienna—International Exhibition, 1873—Embassy Chapel, [214] 199

Zanzibar, Treaty with the Sultan of, [216] 1247

Entailed and Settled Estates (Scotland)

Bill (The Lord Advocate, Mr. Secretary Bruce, Mr. Adam)

c. Ordered ; read 1<sup>o</sup> * April 7 [Bill 180]
Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>, after short debate May 5, [215] 1541

Order for Committee read ; Moved, “That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair” July 4, [216] 1831 ; after short debate, Moved, “That the Debate be now adjourned” (Sir John Hay) ; Question put : A. 20, N. 65 ; M. 45

Question again proposed, “That Mr. Speaker, &c.” Moved, “That this House do now adjourn” (Mr. James Lowther) ; Motion withdrawn

Original Question put, and agreed to ; Committee—R.P.

Bill withdrawn * July 28

Epping Drainage

Moved, “That it is inexpedient that any such further rate should be raised in the present unsatisfactory state of the works, and whilst the uncertainty still exists of obtaining a sufficient water supply to justify their expenditure of such a large sum of money” (Sir Henry Selwin-Ibbetson) July 1, [216] 1643
[House counted out]

Epping Forest—Expenditure and Charges

Question, Mr. R. N. Fowler ; Answer, Mr. Ayrton July 31, [217] 1333

Epping Forest Bill

(Mr. Ayrton, Mr. Baxter)

c. Ordered ; read 1<sup>o</sup> * Feb 10 [Bill 39]
Read 2<sup>o</sup> Feb 17, [214] 565

Committee * ; Report Feb 18

Read 3<sup>o</sup> * Feb 19

d. Read 1<sup>o</sup> * (Duke of St. Albans) Feb 20 (No. 19)
Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>, after short debate Mar 3, 1178

Order for Committee discharged * Mar 4

Bill reported, and committed * Mar 6

Committee * ; Report Mar 25

Read 3<sup>o</sup> * Mar 27

Royal Assent Mar 29 [36 Vict. c. 5]

ERSKINE, Admiral J. E., Stirlingshire

Criminal Law—New South Wales—Commutation of Sentences, [214] 197

Fiji Islands, [215] 1560

Fiji, Protectorate of, Res. [216] 954

[cont.]

ERS EXE { SESSION 1873 } EXP FAO
214—215—216—217.

ERSKINE, Admiral J. E.—cont.

- Navy—Good Service Pensions, [215] 824
- Half Pay of Officers, [215] 81
- Naval Retirement, [217] 911
- Navy—Naval Reserves, Motion for a Committee, [215] 557, 560
- Navy Estimates—Admiralty Office, [216] 118
- Coast Guard Service, Amendt. [216] 123, 126, 127
- Dockyards, &c. [216] 148
- Retired Pay, [217] 1188
- South Sea Islands—Outrages on Natives, [214] 893

ESMONDE, Sir J., Waterford Co.

- Juries (Ireland) Act, Motion for a Committee, [215] 330
- Parliament—Breach of Privilege—“ Pall Mall Gazette,” Res. [215] 541
- University Education (Ireland), 2R. Amendt. [214] 1688
- University Tests (Dublin) (No. 2), Leave, [215] 305

EVERSLEY, Viscount

- Elementary Education Provisional Order Confirmation (No. 1), Report, cl. 1, [217] 750

EWING, Mr. A. Orr, Dumbarton

- Church of Scotland (Patronage), Res. [216] 1102
- Conveyancing (Scotland), 2R. [215] 964
- Hypothen Abolition (Scotland), 2R. [216] 1365
- Labourers Cottages (Scotland), 2R. [217] 477
- Law Agents (Scotland), Comm. cl. 2, [216] 544; cl. 8, 616
- Poor Law (Scotland), 2R. [214] 996, 997
- Roads and Bridges (Scotland), 2R. [216] 802

EWING, Mr. H. E. CRUM, Paisley

- Customs Outport Clerks, Res. Report, [217] 1243
- Ways and Means, Comm. [215] 955

EXCHEQUER, CHANCELLOR of the, see CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER

Exchequer Bonds (£1,600,000) Bill

(Mr. Bonham-Carter, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Baxter)

- c. Ordered * May 1
- Read 1<sup>o</sup> * July 9 [Bill 230]
- Read 2<sup>o</sup> * July 14
- Committee *; Report July 15
- Read 3<sup>o</sup> * July 16
- l. Read 1<sup>o</sup> * (Earl Granville) July 17 (No. 222)
- Read 2<sup>o</sup> * July 18
- Committee *; Report July 24
- Read 3<sup>o</sup> * July 25
- Royal Assent July 28 [36 & 37 Vict. c. 54]

EXETER, Marquess of

- Army—Militia Reserve—Annual Bounty, [216] 986

Expiring Laws Continuance Bill

- (Mr. Baxter, Mr. William Henry Gladstone)
- c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> * July 24 [Bill 261]
- Read 2<sup>o</sup> * July 25
- Order for Committee read; Moved, “ That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair ” July 29, [217] 1249
- Amendt. to leave out from “ That,” and add “ this House will, upon this day month, resolve itself into the said Committee ” (Mr. Butt) v.; after short debate, Amendt. withdrawn; Question, “ That the words, &c.,” put, and agreed to
- Main Question, “ That Mr. Speaker, &c.,” put, and agreed to; Committee; Report Considered *; read 3<sup>o</sup> July 30

- l. Read 1<sup>o</sup> * (Earl of Morley) July 31 (No. 258)
- Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>; after short debate August 1, 1426; Committee negatived
- Read 3<sup>o</sup> * August 2
- Royal Assent August 5 [36 & 37 Vict. c. 75]

Extradition Act 1870) Amendment Bill

- (Mr. Attorney General, Mr. Solicitor General)
- c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> * July 3 [Bill 220]
- Read 2<sup>o</sup> * July 17
- Committee *; Report July 21
- Considered * July 22
- Read 3<sup>o</sup> * July 23
- l. Read 1<sup>o</sup> * (The Lord Chancellor) July 24
- Read 2<sup>o</sup> * July 25 (No. 235)
- Committee *; Report July 28
- Read 3<sup>o</sup> * July 29
- Royal Assent August 5 [36 & 37 Vict. c. 80]

EYKYN, Mr. R., Windsor

- Army Estimates—Land Forces, [214] 882
- Coal—Scarcity of, Motion for a Committee, [214] 824
- Coals, Price of—Railways, [214] 547
- Criminal Law—Middlesex Grand Juries, [217] 1560
- Masters and Servants—Law of Contract, Res. [216] 610
- Police—Administration of the, Motion for a Committee, [215] 1733, 1749
- Public Prosecutors, [215] 104
- Railway Companies and the Coal Trade, [214] 1286
- Seduction Laws Amendment, 2R. [215] 482
- Supply—Post Office Services, [217] 1117
- Tramway Bills, [214] 1097

Factory Acts Amendment Bill

- (Mr. Mundella, Mr. Morley, Mr. Shaw, Mr. Philips, Mr. Cobbett, Mr. Anderson)
- c. Motion for Leave (Mr. Mundella) Feb 11, [214] 283; Bill ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> * [Bill 47]
- Moved, “ That the Bill be now read 2<sup>o</sup> June 11, [216] 819; after short debate, Debate adjourned
- Debate resumed July 30, [217] 1287
- Amendt. to leave out from “ That,” and add “ in the opinion of this House, it is undesirable to sanction a measure which would discourage the employment of women, by subjecting their labour to a new legislative restriction to which it is not proposed to subject the labour of men ” (Mr. Fawcett)

[cont.]

FAC FAW { GENERAL INDEX } FAW FIS
214—215—216—217.

Factory Acts Amendment Bill—cont.

v.; Question proposed, "That the words, &c.," after debate, Debate adjourned Debate resumed August 4, 1844; after short debate, Question put, and agreed to; main Question withdrawn; Bill withdrawn

FAWCETT, Mr. H.—cont.

University Tests (Dublin) (No. 8), Res. Motion for Adjournment, [215] 505; 2R. 727; Comm. 1530; cl. 2, 1532; cl. 3, 1535
Ways and Means (Financial Statement), Comm. [215] 696; Report, 1088
Women's Disabilities, 2R. [215] 1239

Factory Acts Consolidation

Question, Mr. F. S. Powell; Answer, Mr. Bruce Feb 25, [214] 894
Enforcement of the Acts, Question, Mr. C. Dalrymple; Answer, Mr. Bruce Feb 14, [214] 437

FEVERSHAM, Earl of

Fairs, 2R. [216] 158
Vagrants Law Amendment, 2R. [215] 2011
Winchester, late Bishop of, and the late Lord Westbury, [215] 742

Fairs Act (1868) Amendment Bill—Afterwards Fairs Bill
(Mr. Dodds, Mr. Pease, Mr. Clare Read, Mr. Millbank)

- c. Ordered * April 1
- Read 1° * April 3 [Bill 125]
- Read 2° * April 21
- Committee *; Report April 24
- Re-comm. *; Report May 1 [Bill 186]
- Considered * May 5
- Read 3° * May 7
- l. Read 1° (Earl of Feversham) May 8 (No. 97)
- Bill read 2°, after debate May 20, [216] 158
- Committee * May 26
- Report * June 16 (No. 131)
- Read 3° * June 29
- Royal Assent July 7 [36 & 37 Vict. c. 37]

FIELDEN, Mr. J., Yorkshire, W.R., E. Div.

Municipal Officers Superannuation, 2R. Amendt. [214] 1366
Railway and Canal Traffic, Comm. Amendt. [215] 881, 370; cl. 21, Motion for reporting Progress, 388
Superannuation Act Amendment, Comm. Amendt. [215] 1701; cl. 1, 1705

Fawcett, Mr. H., Brighton

Agricultural Children, 3R. [215] 1709
East India (Financial Statement), Res. [215] 402, 419

Fiji Islands, The

Question, Sir Charles Wingfield; Answer, Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen Feb 17, [214] 544; Question, Admiral Erskine; Answer, Viscount Enfield May 6, [215] 1860
Consul March, Question, Mr. Dixon; Answer, Viscount Enfield Mar 31, [215] 347
Recognition of the Government, Questions, Mr. M'Arthur, Sir Charles Wingfield; Answers, Viscount Enfield, Mr. Goodeben Feb 18, [214] 597; Question, Sir Charles Wingfield; Answer, Viscount Enfield Feb 25, 899
Parl. Papers relating to . . Nos. 76, 124, 337

Fiji Islands—The Protectorate

Amendt. on Committee of Supply June 13, To leave out from "That," and add "as the Chiefs of Fiji and the white residents therein have signified their desire that Great Britain should assume the protectorate or sovereignty of those Islands, it is desirable that Her Majesty's Government, in order to put an end to the condition of things now existing in the Group, should take steps to carry into effect one or other of those measures" (Mr. M'Arthur) v., [216] 934; Question proposed, "That the words, &c." after debate, Question put; A. 86, N. 50; M. 36

Finnie, Mr. W., Ayrshire, N. Colliery Managers, [214] 377

Fires Bill

(Mr. McLagan, Mr. Charles Turner, Mr. Agar-Ellis)

- c. Ordered; read 1° * Feb 7 [Bill 31]
- Read 2° * Mar 3
- Bill withdrawn * June 26

Fisher Lads—Great Grimsby

Question, Mr. Seely; Answer, Mr. Bruce Mar 6, [214] 1390

[cont.]

FIS FOR (SESSION 1878) FOR FOR
 214-215-216-217.

Fisheries (Ireland) Bill

(The Marquess of Hartington, Mr. Secretary Bruce)

c. Ordered; read 1st June 5 [Bill 181]
 Bill withdrawn * July 7

Fishery Board (Scotland)—Branding Fees
 Question, Mr. Macfie; Answer, Mr. Baxter
 July 81, [217] 1327

Fishery Inspectors (Ireland) Bill

(Mr. Butt, Mr. Callan)

c. Ordered; read 1st April 29 [Bill 186]
 Read 2nd April 25
 Committee [Dropped]

FITZGERALD, Right Hon. Lord Otho (Comptroller of the Household), Kildare Co.

Parliament—Queen's Answer to the Address, [214] 281

FITZMAURICE, Lord E. G., Cavan

Agricultural Children, 3R. [215] 1709
 Agricultural Labourers Meeting—Alleged Disturbances at Leighton Buzzard, [217] 805, 1089, 1090
 Burials, Comm. [217] 185
 Education Department—New Code, 1879, [215] 348
 Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment, Re-comm. add. cl. [217] 801
 Poor Law—Labourers Unions, [216] 1705
 Supply—New Palace at Westminster, [217] 1125
 Treaties with Foreign Powers, Res. [214] 462
 University Education (Ireland), 2R. Amendt. [214] 1203
 University Tests (Dublin) (No. 3), Comm. cl. 3, [215] 1534

FITZWALTER, Lord

Chelsea Water, 2R. [214] 1012, 1014, 1022

FLETCHER, Mr. I., Cockermouth

Railway and Canal Traffic, Comm. cl. 11, [215] 885

FLOYER, Mr. J., Dorsetshire

Brazil—British Emigrants, [215] 1712
 Criminal Law—Shropshire Magistrates—Whitefoot, George, Case of, [215] 1769
 Juries, Comm. cl. 1, [215] 2072; cl. 52, [216] 1516; cl. 57, 1520
 Parliamentary Elections (Expenses), 2R. [216] 1116, 1134
 Rating (Liability and Value), 2R. [216] 314; Comm. 737; cl. 3, 928, 1009, 1011

FORDYCE, Mr. W. D., Aberdeenshire, E.
 Army—Volunteers—Brigade Drill, [216] 1160
 Labourers Cottages (Scotland), 2R. [216] 1135; [217] 481

VOL. COXVII. [THIRD SERIES.]

Foreign Decorations

Address for, Return of any correspondence that may have passed between the Foreign Office and the Government of France with regard to decorations that might be offered for British subjects engaged or employed in the International Exhibition of Paris (Lord Houghton) Feb 21, [214] 773; after short debate, Motion withdrawn

Foreshore—Encroachments at Truro

Question, Colonel Hogg; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue July 28, [217] 1090

FORSTER, Right Hon. W. E. (Vice President of the Committee of Council on Education), Bradford

Agricultural Children, 2R. [214] 699
 Ballot Act—University Elections, [216] 1862
 Barking Charity Schools, Motion for an Address, [215] 1960

Bradford Improvement, 2R. [215] 1877

Cattle—German Cattle, Importation of, [215] 1717

Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act, Motion for a Committee, [214] 519, 522; Report, [217] 1520

Education—Questions, &c.

Education Department—Advertisements, [215] 1028

Education of Blind and Deaf Mute Children, [214] 281

New Code, 1873, [215] 348

Report of Committee of Council, [216] 1884

Teachers for Elementary Schools, [217] 912

Education (Scotland)—Board of, [215] 1406

Examination of Teachers, [215] 402, 649

New Code, [216] 274

Elementary Education Act (1870)—Questions, &c.

Annuities to Certificated Teachers, [217] 311

Cost per head, [216] 885

Legislation, [215] 14

Music in Training Schools, Examinations in, [217] 1087

Music Fine, The, [217] 1179

National Anthem, The [216] 1413; [217] 1437, 1438

Night Schools, [216] 836

School Accommodation, [216] 991, 1249, 1250

School Board Elections, [215] 635

School Board, Holme St. Cuthbert's, [217] 1321

Stourbridge School Board, [217] 318

216] Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment, Leave, 900

217] 2R. 502, 522, 564, 583; Re-comm. 758; cl. 3, 768, 779, 780, 781, 782, 784; cl. 6, 790; cl. 8, ib.; cl. 10, 792, 793, 795; cl. 20, ib.; cl. 23, 796, 797, 798, 799; add. cl. 800, 801; Consid. add. cl. 957, 958, 959, 960, 961; 3R. 1009

217] Endowed Schools Act (1869) Amendment, 2R. 729, 734; Comm. 929; cl. 3, 931, 933; cl. 4, 938, 939; cl. 5, ib., 940; cl. 6, 941, 942, 944; cl. 11, 946; cl. 15, 947, 949; add. cl. 951, 953, 954; Consid. add. cl. 1065

Endowed Schools Act, [214] 155; Motion for a Committee, 289, 295

FOR FOR { GENERAL INDEX} FOR FOR 214—215—216—217.

FORSTER, Right Hon. W. E.—cont.

- Endowed Schools Commissioners—David Hughes's Charity, [216] 635 ;—Sir John Port's Foundation, [217] 318
- Endowed Schools Commissioners—Emanuel Hospital Scheme, Motion for an Address, [215] 1950
- Endowed Schools Commissioners—Grey Coat Hospital, Westminster, Motion for an Address, [214] 178
- Household Franchise (Counties), 2R. [217] 836, 852
- International Law—New Rules, Motion for an Address, [214] 1984, 2002
- Mercantile Marine—“Druid,” The, [215] 223
- Metropolis—Bethnal Green Museum—Turner Drawings, The, [214] 1283
- South Kensington Museum, [217] 1436, 1560
- Parks Regulation Act—New Rules, [214] 207, 223
- Parliament—Public Business, [217] 684
- Resignation of Ministers, Ministerial Statement, [214] 1910, 1913, 1918
- Scotch Bills, [216] 435
- Supply—Education (England and Wales), [216] 1451, 1461
- Public Education in Scotland, [216] 1465
- Science and Art Department, [216] 1464

FORSTER, Mr. C., Walsall

- Household Franchise (Counties), [217] 919
- Parliament, Meeting of, Motion for an Address, [214] 962, 919
- Privilege—Public Petitions Committee—Informal Petitions, [216] 1708

FORTESCUE, Earl

- Agricultural Children, Comm. add. cl. [216] 1155
- Army—Recruiting, [216] 1691
- Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment, 2R. [217] 1165
- Tithe Commutation Acts Amendment, 2R. [216] 1607, 1608

FORTESCUE, Right Hon. Chichester S. (President of the Board of Trade), Louth Co.

- Agricultural Returns, [214] 1962
- Board of Trade—Railway Returns, [215] 1487
- Register of Shipping Office—Third Class Clerks, [217] 303, 662
- Commercial Marine, Motion for an Address, [214] 1840
- Dover Harbour, [215] 1027, 1789
- Foreshores—Truro, Encroachments at, [217] 1091
- Gas Companies—Increased Price of Gas, [216] 269
- Harbours—Docks and Piers Act, [217] 1339
- Harbours of Refuge, Motion for a Committee, [215] 1414, 1420
- Life Assurance Companies Act, 1870—Returns, [217] 657
- Mercantile Marine—Questions, &c.
- Balbriggan, Lifeboat at, [215] 900
- Board of Trade—Fog Signals, [214] 152

FORTESCUE, Right Hon. Chichester S.—cont.

- Collisions at Sea—Legislation, [214] 373
- Danger Signals, [216] 723
- Loss of Life at Sea, [214] 543 ; [217] 147 ; —Royal Commission on, [215] 298, 1025 ; —Plimsoll, Mr., and Board of Trade, [217] 151, 1094
- Merchant Service—Supply of Seamen, [214] 373
- Merchant Shipping Code, [214] 1397
- Portpatrick Harbour, [215] 8
- Mercantile Marine—Lights in the Channel, Res. [215] 1728
- Merchant Shipping Act—“Peru,” The, [214] 1185
- “Sea Queen,” Loss of the, [215] 106, 638
- Merchant Shipping Act, 1871—Questions, &c.
- “Atlantic,” Wreck of the, [215] 648, 1974
- Collision between the “C. M. Palmer” and “Larnax,” [215] 800
- Deck Loads, [216] 515
- “Druid,” The, [215] 223
- “Eleanor,” The, [215] 639, 642
- “Hindoo” and “Parga,” The, [215] 10, 11, 1297
- “Knight Templar,” The, [215] 225
- “Maggie,” Case of the, [215] 300
- Plimsoll, Mr., and Cardiff Shipowners, [215] 1714
- Sea-going Vessels, Draught of, [216] 1061
- Thames Pilots, [216] 1861
- Unseaworthy Ships, [215] 102, 103, 104 ; —Commission as to, [216] 168, 1417 ; [217] 317 ;—The “William” of Exeter, 901, 903
- “Westdale,” The, Overloading of, [216] 1497
- Merchant Shipping Act—Rules of the Road at Sea, Res. [215] 255, 257, 260
- Merchant Shipping Acts Amendment, Leave, [215] 1961 ; 2R. [217] 692 ; Comm. cl. 3, 1023 ; cl. 4, Amendt. ib. 1024 ; cl. 14, ib. ; cl. 15, 1025, 1027 ; cl. 16, ib.
- Metric Weights and Measures—Legislation, [214] 875, 884
- Metropolis—Gas, Price of, in the, [215] 221
- Parliament—Private Bill Legislation, [217] 497
- Peace Preservation (Ireland), Comm. cl. 2, [216] 66 ; Proviso, 70, 72
- Railway Accidents, Res. [214] 376 ; [216] 212
- Railway Amalgamation Bills—Joint Committees, [214] 846
- Railway and Canal Commissioners Court, [215] 903, 1097
- Railway and Canal Companies Amalgamation, Res. [214] 783, 785
- Railway and Canal Companies—Joint Committee, [215] 1487
- [214] Railway and Canal Traffic, Leave, 229, 243 ; 2R. 1055, 1396
- [215] Comm. 349 : cl. 3, Amendt. 371 ; cl. 4, 372, 373 ; Amendt. 374 ; cl. 7, Amendt. 375 ; cl. 10, 377 ; Amendt. 378, 379, 380, 381, 382 ; cl. 11, 384, 385 ; cl. 12, 386 ; cl. 20, ib., 387 ; cl. 21, 398 ; Amendt. 590 ; cl. 22, Amendt. 591, 593 ; cl. 23, Amendt. ib. ; cl. 33, 595, 596 ; add. cl. ib., 597 ; Consid. cl. 4, Amendt. 720 ; cl. 10, ib. ; 3R. 1108
- [216] Lords' Amendts. 482, 483 ; Amendt. 1299, 1304 ; Amendt. 1305, 1306
- [217] Amendt. 383

[cont.]

[cont.]

FOR FOW { SESSION, 1873 } FOW FRA
214—215—216—217.

FORTESCUE, Right Hon. Chichester S.—cont.

- Railway Companies and the Coal Trade, [214] 1286
- Railways—Communication between Passengers and Guards, [215] 1712 ; [217] 1172, 1173
- Railways—Hours of Work—Case of Edwin Chivers, [214] 375
- Scotland—Northern Lights Commissioners, [217] 314
- Supply—Dover Harbour, [217] 1151, 1280, 1283, 1334
- Privy Council for Trade, &c. [215] 1012
- Tramway Bills, [214] 1097
- United States—British Vessels in American Waters, [214] 1615
- University Education (Ireland), 2R. Amendt. [214] 1422, 1509, 1627, 1774
- Workmen's Compensation for Injuries, [216] 514

Four Courts Marshalsea (Dublin) Bill
(The Marquess of Hartington, Mr. Secretary Bruce)

- c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> July 25 [Bill 285]
- Read 2<sup>o</sup> July 28
- Committee <sup>o</sup> R.P. July 29
- Committee <sup>o</sup> S.P. July 31
- Committee August 2, [217] 1509
- Moved, "That the Chairman do now leave the Chair" (The Marquess of Hartington); Motion agreed to [No Report]

- FOWLER, Mr. R. N., Penryn, &c.
- Army—35-Ton Gun, The, [217] 1389
  - Army Estimates—Administration of the Army, [216] 1203, 1295
  - Land Forces, [214] 883
  - Canada Loan Guarantee, 2R. [216] 1325
  - Chinese Coolie Trade, [216] 385
  - Colonies, The, Motion for a Committee, [214] 1122 ;—Defence of the, Res. 1525
  - Criminal Law—Chatham Convict Prison, [214] 438 ;—Self-Mutilations, [217] 995
  - Customs Outport Clerks, Res. Report, [217] 1288
  - East India (Financial Statement), Res. [215] 402, 422
  - East India Revenue Accounts, Comm. [217] 1465
  - Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment, Re-comm. cl. 23, [217] 799 ; 3R. 1014
  - Epping Forest—Expenditure and Charges, [217] 1383
  - Fiji, Protectorate of, Res. [216] 953
  - India—Offering of the Indian Army, Motion for an Address, [217] 1038
  - Indian Budget, [216] 637 ; [217] 319
  - Juries, Comm. cl. 5, [216] 525, 527 ; cl. 29, 531 ; [217] 590
  - Merchant Shipping Acts Amendment, Comm. cl. 15, [217] 1025
  - Metropolitan Police—Lighting of Cells, [217] 1088
  - Municipal Boroughs Extension, 2R. Motion for Adjournment, [217] 121
  - Municipal Officers Superannuation, 2R. [214] 1372
  - Parliament—Address in Answer to the Speech, Report, [214] 171
  - Public Business, [217] 606, 603, 669

FOWLER, Mr. R. N.—*cont.

- Parliament—Business of the House, Motion for a Committee, [215] 241
- Parliament—Business of the House (Committee of Supply), Res. [214] 249
- Parliament—Count-Out, The, Motion for Adjournment, [217] 1476
- Post Office—Newspapers insufficiently stamped, [214] 1184, 1519
- Post Office—Mail Contracts, Res. [216] 708
- Public Health, 2R. [215] 1708
- Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 8, [216] 1074 ; cl. 4, 1181 ; add. cl. 1488
- Russia—Orfmean Cemeteries, [215] 1761
- South Africa, [214] 790, 794
- Supply—Dover Harbour, [217] 1282
- Metropolitan Police Courts, [215] 791
- New Palace at Westminster, [217] 1126
- Queen's and Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer, [215] 1455
- Supreme Court of Judicature, Comm. cl. 5, Motion for reporting Progress, [216] 1604 ; cl. 73, Amendt. [217] 186 ; cl. 31, 227
- Turnpike Acts Continuance, &c., 2R. Motion for Adjournment, [216] 1642
- Vienna—International Exhibition, 1873—Embassey Chapel, [214] 199
- Ways and Means (Financial Statement), Comm. [215] 677 ; Report, 915

FOWLER, Mr. W., Cambridge Bo.

- Army Estimates—Land Forces, [214] 882 ; Amendt. 1075
- Miscellaneous Services, [216] 1286
- Contagious Diseases Acts Repeal, 2R. [216] 218, 233, 267
- Currency—Bank Act, Res. [215] 136
- Custody of Infants, 2R. [214] 884, 885 ; Consid. cl. 3, 1513
- Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment, Re-comm. cl. 3, [217] 776
- Landlord and Tenant, 2R. [216] 1649
- Married Women's Property Act (1870) Amendment, 2R. [214] 681
- Parliament—Business of the House—Opposed Business, [214] 1363
- Post Office—Telegraph Act, 1869—Compensations, [215] 345
- Post Office (Balances)—Telegraphic Department, Res. [217] 1202
- Real Estate Settlements, 2R. [216] 1644
- Supply—New Courts of Justice, &c. [217] 1099
- Post Office Services, [217] 1118
- Supreme Court of Judicature, 2R. [216] 870 ; Comm. cl. 5, 1593, 1626 ; cl. 50, [217] 48, 50 ; cl. 78, 223
- Ways and Means (Financial Statement), Comm. [215] 688 ; Report, 917

France

- Commercial Treaty with Ava, Question, Mr. Macfie ; Answer, Viscount Enfield July 28, [217] 1087
- Disappearance of Mr. Selby, Question, Mr. W. M. Torrens ; Answer, Viscount Enfield May 10, [214] 1615
- Passports, Question, Sir David Wedderburn ; Answer, Viscount Enfield April 4, [215] 602

FRA      GAL { GENERAL INDEX }    GAL    GAS
 214—215—216—217.

France—cont.

The Commercial Treaties, Question, Mr. Cartwright; Answer, Viscount Enfield June 24, [216] 1310; Question, Mr. Miall; Answer, Viscount Enfield July 4, 1783

The Commercial Treaty, 1860

Question, Mr. Bowring; Answer, Viscount Enfield Mar 24, [215] 15

Correspondence, Question, Mr. Brocklehurst; Answer, Viscount Enfield July 7, [216] 1863

The "surface de pavillon." Question, Mr. Raikes; Answer, Viscount Enfield April 6, [215] 521

The "most-favoured-nation" Article, Question, Mr. Eaton; Answer, Mr. Gladstone April 3, [215] 528

The New Commercial Treaty

Mineral Oils, Question, Mr. Maude; Answer, Viscount Enfield April 7, [215] 636; Question, Mr. McLagan; Answer, Viscount Enfield June 30, [216] 1558

Export Duty on Coal, Question, Lord John Manners; Answer, Viscount Enfield July 10, [217] 143

Article 14. ad valorem Duties, Question, Mr. Bowring; Answer, Viscount Enfield Mar 6, [214] 1392

Questions, Mr. Newdegate; Answers, Viscount Enfield, Mr. Gladstone July 29, [217] 1178

Signature of the New Treaty, Question, Mr. Whitwell; Answer, Viscount Enfield July 24, [217] 919

Parl. Papers—

Correspondence . . . . [Nos. 700, 821]
Copy of Treaty . . . . [822]

France and Belgium—Examination of Travellers' Luggage

Question, Mr. Muntz; Answer, Viscount Enfield June 20, [216] 1280

FRENCH, Right Hon. Colonel F., Roscommon Co.

Ireland—Galway Election Prosecutions Expenses, [214] 787

Valuation Department (Ireland), Rss. [215] 425

Fulford Chapel Marriages Legalization Bill [H.L.] (The Lord Bishop of Chichester)

1. Presented; read 1<sup>o</sup> April 29 (No. 83)

Read 2<sup>o</sup> May 2

Committee*; Report May 6

Read 3<sup>o</sup> May 8

c. Read 1<sup>o</sup> May 9 [Bill 160]

Read 2<sup>o</sup> May 12

Committee*; Report May 13

Read 3<sup>o</sup> May 14

l. Royal Assent May 26 [36 Vict. c. 20]

GAGE, Viscount

*Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister, 2R. [214] 1874

GALLOWAY, Earl of

Army—Militia Reserve, Motion for an Address, [216] 1843

GALWAY, Viscount, Reiford (East)

Public Health, Comm. [217] 98

Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 3,

[216] 981, 1018, 1027, 1030; cl. 16, 1427

Turnpike Acts Continuance, &c. Comm. [216] 1757

Galway Election

Galway Election Trials, Dublin, Question, Mr. O'Connor; Answer, Mr. Cardwell Feb 11, [214] 281

As to further Proceedings, Question, Mr. Mitchell Henry; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington Feb 25, [214] 898

Bishop Duggan, &c., Question, Mr. Mitchell Henry; Answer, The Attorney General Feb 21, [214] 788

Prosecutions Expenses, Question, Colonel French; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington Feb 21, [214] 787

The Attorney General for Ireland, Question, Colonel Stuart Knox; Answer, Mr. Gladstone Feb 27, [214] 1040

Game Birds (Ireland) Bill [H.L.]

(The Viscount Powerscourt)

1. Presented; read 1<sup>o</sup> June 9 (No. 127)

Bill read 2<sup>o</sup> June 12, [216] 829

Committee*; Report June 13

Read 3<sup>o</sup> June 16

c. Read 1<sup>o</sup> (Viscount Crichton) June 17 [Bill 196]
2R. [Dropped]

Game, &c.

Ordered, That there be laid before the House, Return of the numbers of Game, Wild Fowl, and Hares and Rabbits sold by the Licensed Game Dealers in England, Wales, and Scotland during the year 1872 (Earl of Malmesbury) Mar 4, [214] 1278—(Parl. P. No. 104)

Game Laws

Select Committee appointed and nominated

Feb 12, as follows:—Mr. Ward Hunt (Chairman), Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, Mr. Cameron,

Mr. Cooper, Mr. Deat, Lord Echo, Sir George Grey, Mr. Hardcastle, Mr. M'Combie,

Mr. McLagan, Viscount Mahon, Mr. Muntz,

Mr. Pell, Mr. Clare Read, Sir Henry Selwin-

Ibbetson, Mr. Sherlock, Mr. Sturt, Sir John

Trelawny, Mr. Whitbread, Mr. Rowland

Winn, and Mr. Winterbotham

Report of Select Comm. July 8 . . . No. 285

Gas and Water Provisional Orders Bill

(Mr. Arthur Peel, Mr. Chichester Fortescue)

c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> April 3 [Bill 126]

Read 2<sup>o</sup> April 7

Committee*; Report April 24

Considered* April 28

Read 3<sup>o</sup> April 29

l. Read 1<sup>o</sup> (Marquess of Lansdowne) May 1

Read 2<sup>o</sup> May 12 (No. 87)

Committee*; Report May 13

Read 3<sup>o</sup> May 15

Royal Assent May 26 [36 Vict. c. xliii]

GAS GEN [SESSION 1873] GEN GLA
 214-215-216-217.

Gas and Water Provisional Orders Confirmation (No. 2) Bill

- (Mr. Arthur Peel, Mr. Chichester Fortescue)
 c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> * May 5 [Bill 149]
 Read 2<sup>o</sup> * May 8
 Committee; Report May 19
 Considered * May 21
 Read 3<sup>o</sup> * May 22
 l. Read 1<sup>o</sup> * (Earl Couper) May 23 (No. 125)
 Read 2<sup>o</sup> * June 9
 Committee; Report June 10
 Read 3<sup>o</sup> * June 12
 Royal Assent July 7 [36 & 37 Vict. c. 81]

Gas and Water Works Facilities Act (1870) Amendment Bill [H.L.]
 (The Earl Couper)

- l. Presented; read 1<sup>o</sup> * July 8 (No. 201)
 Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>, after short debate July 11, [217] 205
 Committee; Report July 15, 389
 Read 3<sup>o</sup> July 18, 602
 c. Read 1<sup>o</sup> * July 21 [Bill 252]
 Read 2<sup>o</sup> * July 25
 Committee; Report July 29
 Considered *; read 3<sup>o</sup> August 1
 l. Royal Assent August 5 [36 & 37 Vict. c. 89]

Gas Companies—Increased Price of Gas
 Question, Sir Charles W. Dilke; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue May 22, [216] 269

Gas Companies Bills—Price of Coal and Gas

Observations, Lord Redesdale; Reply, Earl Granville; short debate thereon May 5, [215] 1459

GAVIN, Major G., Limerick

Agnew, Captain Charles, Assassination of, [215] 1883
 Army—9th Lancers—Case of the late Sub-lieutenant Tribe, [214] 506

General Police and Improvement (Scotland) Acts Amendment Bill

- (Sir Edward Colebrooke, Mr. Orr Ewing)
 c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> * June 23 [Bill 200]
 Read 2<sup>o</sup> * July 9
 Bill withdrawn * July 23

General Register and Record Office of Shipping and Seamen—Third Class Clerks

Question, Lord George Hamilton; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue July 14, [217] 308

General Valuation (Ireland) Bill

- (Mr. Baxter, The Marquess of Hartington)
 c. Motion for Leave (Mr. Baxter) Feb 17, [214] 579; Bill ordered, after short debate; read 1<sup>o</sup> * [Bill 64]
 Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2<sup>o</sup>" May 5, [215] 1535

General Valuation (Ireland) Bill—cont.

- Amendt. to leave out "now," and add "upon this day six months" (The O'Conor Don); after short debate, Question put, "That now &c." A. 198, N. 45; M. 153; main Question put, and agreed to; Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>
 Order for Committee read; Moved, "That this House will To-morrow, at Two of the clock, resolve itself into the said Committee" (Mr. Gladstone) June 28, [216] 1306
 Amendt. to leave out "To-morrow, at Two of the clock," and insert "upon Thursday" (Sir Colman O'Loghlen) v.; Question put, "That To-morrow, at Two of the Clock, &c." A. 47, N. 25; M. 22
 Main Question put, and agreed to Order for Committee read; Moved, "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair" (Mr. Baxter) June 24, 1830
 Amendt. to leave out from "That," and add "the Bill be referred to a Select Committee" (Mr. Kavanagh); Question proposed, "That the words, &c." after debate, Debate adjourned
 Bill withdrawn * June 30

GILPIN, Colonel R. T., Bedfordshire Agricultural Labourers Meeting at Leighton Buzzard—Alleged Disturbance, [217] 1089
Army—Length of Service (India), Res. [214] 853
Army Estimates—Land Forces, [214] 1068, 1080
Supply—New Palace at Westminster, [217] 1124

GILPIN, Mr. C., Northampton Bo.

- East India Revenue Accounts, Comm. [217] 1508
 Merchant Shipping Act—Sailors, Punishment of—Ship "Wimbledon," [216] 992, 994
 Unseaworthy Ships — The "William" of Exeter, [217] 901
 Parliament—Resignation of Ministers, Ministerial Statement, [214] 1912
 Portugal, Extradition Treaty with, [214] 1095
 Railway and Canal Traffic, Leave, [214] 241; Comm. cl. 4, [215] 378
 Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. add. cl. [216] 1439
 South Sea Islands—Outrages on Natives, [214] 802
 Supply—Convict Establishments, [217] 1279
 New Palace at Westminster, [217] 1261
 Post Office Services, [217] 1118
 Zanzibar—Treaty with the Sultan of, [216] 1247

GLADSTONE, Right Hon. W. E. (First Lord of the Treasury), Greenwich

- Administrative Departments—Courts of Justice, [217] 494
 Africa—West Coast Settlements—Ashantee Invasion, [217] 1526
 "Alabama"—Compensation for British Property, [216] 438
 Army Estimates—Administration of the Army, [216] 1294
 Board of Education (Ireland)—O'Keeffe, Rev. Mr., [215] 1720, 1770; Motion for a Committee, 2053, 2054; Nomination of Committee, [216] 327, 330, 1711; [217] 211, 213, 1474

[cont.]

[cont.]

GLA      GLA      { G E N E R A L   I N D E X }      GLA      GLA
 214—215—216—217.

- GLADSTONE, Right Hon. W. E.—cont.
- Canada, Dominion of— Pacific Railroad, [217] 1480, 1482
  - Canada Loan Guarantee, 2R. [216] 1326
  - Canterbury Cathedral—Alleged “Pilgrimage,” [217] 603, 605
  - Central Asia—Boundary of the Afghan States, [214] 837
  - Central Asia, Motion for an Address, [215] 874
  - Church Discipline—Letters of the Primates, [216] 1852, 1853
  - Church of Scotland (Patronage), Res. [216] 1103
  - Civil Service Writers, Case of the, [216] 843
New Appointments, [216] 1856
  - Clerical Magistrates, [216] 550
  - Coal—Economy of Fuel, [214] 1031
Export of—Duties or Restrictions, [214] 370
Supply of, [214] 153
  - Colonies, Defence of the, Res. [214] 1532
  - Commercial Marine, Motion for an Address, [214] 1381
  - Consolidated Fund (Appropriation), 2R. [217] 1872
  - Conspiracy, Law of, [216] 723
  - County Court Judges—Minute of June, 1872, Res. [214] 1292, 1295, 1298, 1299, 1300
  - Criminal Law—Tichborne Case, [216] 962, 1064
  - Crown Private Estates, 2R. [217] 893, 703 ; Comm. cl. 1, 1001 ; add. cl. 1004
  - Currency—Bank Act, Res. [215] 155
  - Customs and Inland Revenue, Comm. Schedule, A, [215] 1689
  - Departmental Expenditure—Purchase and Sale of Stores, Motion for a Committee, [214] 809
  - Diplomatic Relations with the Vatican, Motion for Papers, [214] 447
  - Disestablishment of the Churches of England and Scotland, Res. [216] 87
  - Duke of Edinburgh—The Queen’s Message, [217] 1180, 1187, 1188
  - Duke of Edinburgh’s Annuity, 2R. [217] 1352 ; Comm. cl. 1, 1441, 1445, 1448 ; cl. 2, 1447, 1449
  - Durham, County Palatine of—“Queen v. Cotton,” [214] 1288
  - East India Finance Committee—Second Report, [215] 1874, 1875
  - East India (Financial Statement), Res. [215] 416
  - Ecclesiastical Commissioners, [215] 1294 ; 2R. [217] 424
  - Elementary Education Act, [214] 369, 1287, 1288
  - Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment, 2R. [217] 520, 532, 542 ; Re-comm. cl. 3, 771, 778 ; add. cl. 801 ; cl. 15, 948 ; Comisid. add. cl. 958
  - Endowed Schools Commissioners—Emanuel Hospital Scheme, Motion for a Committee, [215] 1893
  - Entailed and Settled Estates (Scotland), Comm. [216] 1831
  - Fiji, Protectorate of, Res. [216] 943, 949
  - France—Commercial Treaty, 1860, [215] 529 ; [217] 1176, 1177
  - General Valuation (Ireland), Comm. [216] 1306, 1560
  - Geneva Award, The, [214] 1163 ;—Arbitrators, 1613 ;—Letter of Mr. Fish, [216] 170 ;—Presentation to Arbitrators, 500, 501, 1656 ; [217] 907
  - GLADSTONE, Right Hon. W. E.—cont.
  - India—Euphrates Valley Railway, [214] 389
Railway Communication with, [216] 837
  - India—Railway Gauge, Res. [214] 1567
  - Indian Budget, [216] 637 ; [217] 319, 920, 921
  - International Law—Arbitration, Motion for an Address, [217] 73, 83
  - International Law—New Rules, Motion for an Address, [214] 2044, 2047, 2050
  - Ireland—Questions, &c.
  - Charters of Dublin University and Trinity College, [214] 545
  - Drainage of Land—Rivers Suok and Shannon, [217] 1483, 1484, 1485
  - Dublin College of Science, [214] 1519
  - Galway Election Prosecutions, [214] 1040
  - Irish Railway Companies, Loans to, [216] 1551
  - Louth, County of, [217] 1254
  - Magee College, [214] 898
  - Supremacy and Uniformity, Acts of, [216] 839
  - Ireland—Civil Servants, Res. [216] 1819 ; [217] 149, 150
  - Ireland—Irish Railways, Purchase of, Res. [215] 1187, 1183
  - Irish Church Act—National Monuments, [215] 1489
  - Irish Land Act, 1870—12th Clause, [214] 834
  - Juries, Comm. cl. 45, [216] 535, 539, 540, 541 ; [217] 590, 591
  - Local Taxation, [215] 798
  - Master of the Rolls, Office of, [215] 847, 899
  - Metropolis—Parks—Bathing Accommodation, [215] 1020
  - Science and Art—British Museum and South Kensington, [217] 914
  - South Kensington and Bethnal Green Museums, [217] 1519
  - Occasional Sermons, 2R. [215] 1973
  - Oxford University—Professorship of Pastoral Theology, [215] 401
  - Parks Regulation Act—Meetings in the Parks, Motion for an Address, [215] 287
  - Parliament—Questions, &c.
  - Address in Answer to the Speech, [214] 99, 142 ; Report, 172, 174
  - Ascension Day, [216] 171
  - Breach of Privilege—Mr. Plimsoll, [214] 742
  - Business of the House, [215] 7 ; [216] 1172, 1230, 1231, 1232 ; [217] 1256, 1257
  - Committees of the House—Divisions, [216] 725
  - Count Out, The—Motion for Adjournment, [217] 1476
  - Easter Vacation, Motion for Adjournment, [215] 850, 851
  - Hours of Meeting of this House, [217] 1532, 1533
  - Meeting of the House—Ash Wednesday, [214] 901, 902, 912
  - Morning Sittings, [216] 435
  - Opposed Business, [214] 1363
  - Order of Business, [214] 1945 ; [215] 226 ; [216] 841, 1174, 1812 ; [217] 213, 918, 914, 1438, 1439
  - Privilege—Appellate Jurisdiction of the House of Lords, [217] 154 ; Motion for Adjournment, 158, 171, 173, 360, 373
  - Privilege—Public Petitions Committee—Informal Petitions, [216] 1707

[cont.]

[cont.]

GLA GLA { SESSION 1873 } GLA GOL
214—215—216—217.

GLADSTONE, Right Hon. W. E.—cont.

- Public Business, [215] 634, 1141, 1789, 1790; [216] 1250, 1499, 1858, 1860; [217] 605, 606, 663, 664, 666, 1885, 1836, 1337
- Resignation of Ministers, Ministerial Statement, [214] 1909, 1911; Motions for Adjournment, 1913, 1916, 1918, 1919, 1924, 1939
- Strangers ordered to withdraw, [217] 208
- Whitsuntide Recess, [215] 1790, 1791;—Adjournment for, [216] 498
- Parliament—Breach of Privilege—"Pall Mall Gazette," Res. [215] 540
- Parliament—Business of the House, [214] 151; (Committee of Supply), Res. 278;—(Tuesday Sittings), Res. 286
- Parliament—Business of the House, Motion for a Committee, [215] 239; [217] 1180
- Parliament—Election of Representative Peers (Scotland and Ireland), [215] 313
- Parliament—Electoral Power, Distribution of, Res. [215] 1575
- Parliamentary Representation—Vacant Seats, [216] 103
- Political Prisoners, Amnesty to, [217] 997
- Post Office (Balances)—Telegraphic Department, Res. [217] 1227
- Post Office—Mail Contracts, Res. [216] 710, 1001, 1002;—Cape and Zanzibar, 1214, 1250, 1448
- Prison Ministers Committee, 1870, [215] 297
- Public Expenditure, Res. [214] 627, 642
- Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. [216] 729; cl. 3, 912, 1019, 1021; cl. 4, 1179; cl. 13, 1236, 1238; add. cl. 1441, 1444; Consid. [217] 416, 418
- Roads and Bridges (Scotland), 2R. [216] 815
- Russia—Crimean Cemeteries, [215] 530
- Sanitary Legislation, [214] 198
- San Juan Award—Rights of British Subjects, [214] 598
- Scotland—Civil Service, [216] 1865
- Shah of Persia, Visit of, [216] 498, 638, 1174
- Spain—Carlists, Subscriptions for the, [215] 633
- International Law, [215] 896
- Superannuation, [216] 15
- Superannuation Act Amendment, Comm. cl. 1, [215] 1708, 1707
- Supply, [215] 399
  - Alabama Claims, [216] 411, 412; Report, 470, 473, 475
  - Charity Commission, [215] 1014, 1015
  - Constabulary Force (Ireland), [215] 1778
  - Court of Chancery, [215] 1774
  - Criminal Proceedings (Scotland), [215] 1777
  - Lord Privy Seal, [215] 1792
  - New Palace at Westminster, [217] 1265, 1272, 1273, 1277
  - Report, [217] 1257
- Supreme Court of Judicature, 2R. Motion for [216] Adjournment, 685, 688; Comm. 1801; cl. 5, 1595, 1604, 1630; cl. 6, 1639, 1641, 1642, 1723, 1726, 1728, 1729, 1746; cl. 18, 1793; cl. 20, 1883, 1884; cl. 31, 1888
- [217] cl. 74, 188, 180; cl. 75, 191; add. cl. 325, 336, 399; Consid. cl. 22, 678; 3R. 789
- Treasury and Post Office—Alleged Misappropriation of Funds, [215] 101

GLADSTONE, Right Hon. W. E.—cont.

- Treaties with Foreign Powers, Res. [214] 469
  - Treaty of Washington, [215] 1445, 1446, 1449
  - United States—Alabama Claims, [214] 162
  - Geneva Award, The, [215] 17
  - 214] University Education (Ireland), 377; Comm. 378, 427, 429, 600, 838, 900, 901, 1038, 1059; 2R. Amendt. 1186, 1215, 1277, 1503, 1513, 1616, 1617, 1712, 1740, 1766, 1829, 1868
  - University Tests (Dublin) (No. 2), Leave, [215] 306, 307
  - University Tests (Dublin) (No. 3), 2R. [215] 768; Comm. cl. 2, 1532
  - Ways and Means, Report, [215] 910, 1038, 1084, 1084, 1104, 1371, 1386
  - Sugar Duties Resolutions, [215] 801
- GLADSTONE, Mr. W. H., Whitchurch
- Civil Service Pensions, [217] 1530, 1531;—Freeth, Mr., Case of, 1561, 1562
- GLOUCESTER and BRISTOL, Bishop of
- Confession in the Church of England, Address for a Paper, [217] 1168
- GLYN, Hon. G. G., Shaftesbury
- Parliament—Public Business, [217] 664
- GOLDNEY, Mr. G., Chippenham
- Crown Private Estates, 2R. [217] 701
  - Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment, Leave, [216] 905
  - Endowed Schools Act (1869), Motion for a Committee, [214] 291
  - Endowed Schools Act (1869) Amendment, 2R. [217] 738; Consid. add. cl. 1065
  - Juries, Comm. cl. 5, [216] 518; cl. 45, 534, 537
  - Law Agents (Scotland), Comm. cl. 7, [216] 612
  - Local Taxation, Motion for a Committee, [215] 1837
  - Metropolis—New Courts of Justice, [216] 399
  - Municipal Boroughs Extension, 2R. [217] 121
  - Parks Regulation Act—New Rules, [214] 226
  - Parliament, Meeting of, Motion for an Address, [214] 908
  - Railway and Canal Traffic, Comm. [215] 357; cl. 4, 374; cl. 10, 380
  - Rating (Liability and Value)—Valuation—Consolidated Rate, Leave, [215] 1514; Comm. cl. 3, [216] 1015, 1020
  - Register for Parliamentary and Municipal Electors, Re-comm. [215] 719; cl. 9, 961; cl. 10, 1691
  - Supply, Harbours, &c. [215] 787
  - Wellington Monument, [215] 788, 789
  - University Tests (Dublin) (No. 2), Leave, [215] 305
  - Weights and Measures Acts, Res. [216] 1085, 1090
  - Women's Disabilities, 2R. [215] 1252
- GOLDSMID, Sir F. H., Reading
- Consolidated Fund (Appropriation), Comm. [217] 1454
  - Endowed Schools Act (1869) Amendment, Comm. add. cl. [217] 952; Amendt. 953
  - Hypotheo Abolition (Scotland), 2R. [216] 1372
  - Municipal Boroughs Extension, 2R. [217] 122

[cont.]

[cont.]

GOL      GOR      { GENERAL INDEX }      GOR      GOS
 214—215—216—217.

GOLDSMID, Sir F. H.—cont.

Parliament—Business of the House (Opposed Business), Res. [214] 1363
 Supreme Court of Judicature, Comm. cl. 5, [216] 1624, 1627; cl. 21, Amendt. 1797; cl. 78, [217] 228; Consid. Schedule. Amendt. 686

GOLDSMID, Mr. J., Rochester

Factory Acts Amendment, 2R. [217] 1552
 Geneva Award, The, [214] 1183
 Ireland—Irish Railways, Purchase of, [215] 976; Res. Amendt. 1150, 1187
 Juries, Comm. cl. 5, [216] 528; cl. 52, 1515
 Metropolis—New Courts of Justice, [216] 406
     South Kensington Museum, [217] 1560
     Wellington Monument, The, [217] 808
 Navy Estimates—Dockyards, &c. [216] 140
 Parliament—Business of the House (Committee of Supply), Res. [214] 278
 Parliamentary Electors Registration, 2R. [217] 463
 Railway Accidents, Res. [216] 215, 216
 Railway and Canal Traffic, 2R. [214] 1655
 Railway Regulation, Comm. [217] 1248, 1249
 Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. [216] 732; cl. 3, 932, 1003, 1008, 1008, 1015; Consid. [217] 420, 422; Amendt. 423; add. cl. Amendt. 610, 618; 3R. 686
 Register for Parliamentary and Municipal Electors, Comm. cl. 9, [215] 961
 Supply—Consular Establishments Abroad, &c. [217] 1104
     Embassy Houses at Vienna and Washington, [217] 1137
     New Courts of Justice, &c. [215] 798; [217] 1100
     Wellington Monument, [215] 789
 Telegraphs, Comm. [217] 1246

GORDON, Right Hon. E. S., Glasgow, &c. Universities

Church of Scotland (Patronage), Res. [216] 1095, 1107 [215] Conveyancing (Scotland), 2R. 962; Comm. Amendt. 1695; cl. 2, 1841; Motion for reporting Progress, 1842; cl. 3, Amendt. ib.
 [216] cl. 4, Amendt. 150; cl. 8, Amendt. ib.; cl. 9, Amendt. ib.; cl. 12, Amendt. 503, 506; cl. 13, ib.; cl. 14, ib., 507; cl. 22, Amendt. 509; cl. 27, Amendt. 510; cl. 41, 512
 Education (Scotland), Board of, [215] 1406
     Examination of Teachers, [215] 401, 649
     New Code, [216] 273
 Entailed and Settled Estates (Scotland), 2R. [215] 1541; Comm. [216] 1831, 1832, 1834
 Law Agents (Scotland), Comm. cl. 1, [216] 541; cl. 7, Amendt. 610, 613
 Parliament—Privilege—Appellate Jurisdiction of the House of Lords, [217] 170
     Whitsun Recess, Adjournment for, [216] 497
 Poor Law (Scotland), 2R. [214] 1009
 Supreme Court of Judicature, Comm. cl. 5, [216] 1639; cl. 6, ib., 1726, 1738, 1743; cl. 18, 1797; cl. 22, 1801; cl. 28, 1875, 1878
 University Education (Ireland)—Affiliated Institutions, [214] 1038

GORE, Mr. W. R. ORMSBY-, Leitrim Co.
 Ireland—Irish Railways, Purchase of, Res. [215] 1172
 Ireland—Shannon, Overflowing of the, Res. [214] 1890
 Juries, Comm. cl. 45, [216] 534
 Juries (Ireland) Act, Motion for a Committee, [215] 321

GOSCHEN, Right Hon. G. J. (First Lord of the Admiralty), London

Africa—West Coast Settlements—Ashantee Invasion, [216] 480
 Army—Reliefs—North America and West Indies, [215] 13
 East India Revenue Accounts—Financial Statement, [217] 1388
 Ecclesiastical Commissioners—Derwentwater Estates, [217] 146
 Fiji Islands—British Protectorate, [214] 597; Res. [216] 968
 Mercantile Marine—Straits of Magellan, [215] 605
 Navy—Questions, &c.
     Assistant Surgeons, [217] 1253
     “Britannia” Training Ship, [215] 1138, 1139
     Cadets, Age of, [217] 152
     Chatham Dockyard Railways, [217] 315;—
         New River Wall, [217] 1096, 1632
     Good Service Pensions, [215] 524
     Greenwich Hospital Estates, Sale of, [217] 915, 916
     Greenwich Naval Hospital—Dr. Armstrong, [214] 1098
     Greenwich Pensioners, [215] 519
     Half Pay of Officers, [215] 24, 31, 32
     H.M.S. “Devastation,” [215] 579, 582, 589
     Navigation, System of, [215] 846
     Navy Retirement, [217] 911
     Post Office Orders, [214] 1396
     Retirement, [215] 1293
     “Rowena,” The—Shipping Agents, [216] 636
     Royal Marine Artillery, [217] 809, 1822
     Royal Marines—Rank of Major, [214] 601
     Seamen and Marines, Motion for reporting Progress, [215] 890
     Shipbuilding—Plans of the Government, [217] 908
     Straits of Magellan, [214] 1098
     Trotman Anchor, [217] 501
     Trotman, Mr., and the Admiralty, [216] 546
 Navy—Admiralty Administration, Res. [214] 926, 932, 956
 Navy—Naval Reserves, Motion for a Committee, [215] 557
 Navy—Promotion and Retirement, Motion for a Committee, [216] 764, 765, 766, 767, 768, 777, 794, 795
 Navy Estimates—Admiralty Office, [216] 106, 107, 108, 111, 113, 119
     Coast Guard Service, [216] 124, 126
     Dockyards, &c. [216] 135, 141, 144, 145, 148
     Freight of Ships for Conveyance of Troops, &c. [217] 1285, 1286
     Half Pay, &c. [216] 453
     Medical Stores, [216] 453
     Men and Boys, [215] 32, 43, 72, 75, 77, 79, 87
     Miscellaneous Services, [216] 453
     Naval Stores, [216] 438, 443, 445, 447

[cont.]

GOS GRA { SESSION 1873 } GRA GRA
 214—215—216—217.

GOSCHEN, Right Hon. G. J.—cont.

- New Works, &c. [216] 452
- Postponement of Motions, [215] 20
- Retired Pay, [217] 1157
- Royal Marine Artillery, Captains of, [216] 1555
- Scientific Departments, [216] 128, 129, 130, 131; [217] 1287
- Steam Machinery, &c. [216] 448, 449, 450, 451
- Parliament—Order of Business, [215] 225, 226, 227
- Public Business, [215] 1790
- Shah of Persia—Naval Review, [216] 547, 609, 910, 1062, 1063;—Windsor Park Review, 998
- Spain—"Vigilante," Capture of the, [217] 1525
- Supply—Dover Harbour, [217] 1283
- Venus, Transit of, in 1874, [215] 110; [216] 1171
- Ways and Means, Report, [215] 1098, 1103

GOURLEY, Mr. E. T., Sunderland

- Inland Revenue—Duty on Volunteer Prizes, [216] 1173
- Mauritius—Inspectors-General of Police, [216] 98
- Parliament—Breach of Privilege—Mr. Plim-soll, [214] 742
- United States—Offences on the High Seas, [214] 1032

Government of Ireland Bill
(The Earl Russell)

1. Presented; read 1st, after short debate June 9, [216] 618 (No. 147)
- 2 R. negatived June 30, 1597

GOWER, Lord R. S. LEVESON- Sutherland
 Egypt—Baker, Sir Samuel, [215] 19

GRAHAM, Mr. W., Glasgow
 Church of Scotland (Patronage), Res. [216] 1101

Morocco—Foreign Representatives in, [217] 1175

Rating (Liability and Value), Consid. [217] 408, 418; Amendt. 419

GRANARD, Earl of
 Rock of Cashel, 2R. [216] 424

Grand Jury Presentments (Ireland) Bill
(Mr. Heron, Colonel White, Mr. Bagwell)

- c. Ordered; read 1st May 21 [Bill 170]
- Read 2nd May 26
- Committee<sup>2</sup>; Report June 11
- Read 3rd June 12
- l. Read 1st (Earl of Bassborough) June 13
- Read 2nd June 19 (No. 158)
- Committee<sup>2</sup>; Report June 20
- Read 3rd June 23
- Royal Assent July 7 [86 & 87 Vict. c. 34]

GRANVILLE, Earl (Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs)

- Achin, Affairs of, Address for Correspondence, [217] 1081
- Army—Control Department, Motion for Papers, [216] 1222
- Army—Military Depôt at Oxford, Address for Correspondence, [216] 1493
- Baker's, Sir Samuel, Expedition, [216] 1547
- Chester Water, 2R. [214] 1017, 1022
- Children's Employment in Dangerous Performances, 2R. [216] 1245
- Duke of Edinburgh—Queen's Message, [217] 1159
- Duke of Edinburgh's Annuity, 2R. [217] 1510
- East Africa—Slave Trade, Res. [217] 1074
- Elementary Education Provisional Order Confirmation (No. 1), Comm. [215] 1672, 1673
- Emigration to Brazil—Warwickshire Labourers, Address for a Paper, [214] 585
- Epping Forest, 2R. [214] 1179
- Foreign Decorations, Motion for an Address, [214] 777
- Game, &c., Motion for a Return, [214] 1282
- Gas Companies—Coal and Gas, Price of, [215] 1462
- Government of Ireland, 1R. [216] 634; 2R. 1532, 1546
- Horses, Supply of, Address for a Royal Commission, [214] 714, 719
- Improvement of Land, Motion for a Committee, [215] 509
- Investment of Capital in Land, Motion for a Committee, [215] 294
- Ireland—Dublin, Riot in, [216] 617
- Judicial Peerages, Motion for an Address, [216] 1762, 1776
- North America—Alaska Boundary—San Juan Water Boundary, [214] 278; [216] 1157
- Order of Merit, Motion for an Address, [216] 1472
- Palace of Westminster—House of Commons—Peers Gallery, [214] 1924
- Parliament—Questions, &c.
- Address in Answer to the Speech, [214] 26, 29, 40; Explanation, 144
- Easter Recess, [215] 91
- Privilege—Appellate Jurisdiction of the House, [217] 1, 4, 34
- Resignation of Ministers, Statement, [214] 1868, 1869, 1870; Motion for Adjournment, 1914, 1915; Ministerial Explanation, 1919, 1921
- Peace Preservation (Ireland) Acts Continuance, 2R. [216] 332
- Persia—Railways and Telegraphs in, [215] 518
- Persian Government—Concession to Baron de Reuter, Address for Correspondence, [217] 296
- Public Worship Facilities—Standing Order No. 34a, [216] 163
- Rating (Liability and Value), 2R. [217] 989
- Regulation of Railways (Prevention of Accidents), 2R. [214] 594
- Rock of Cashel, 2R. [216] 424
- Shah of Persia—Naval Review at Spithead, [216] 1217
- Spain—Chinese Coolies, Conveyance of, into Cuba, [217] 397
- Spain, Extradition Treaty with—"Northfleet" and "Murillo," [214] 148;—Release of the "Murillo," Motion for Papers, [216] 1246

[cont.]

HAM HAR { GENERAL INDEX } HAR HAR
214—215—216—217.

HAMILTON, Mr. J. G. C., Lanarkshire, S.
Conveyancing (Scotland), Comm. cl. 15, Amendt. [216] 507
Poor Law (Scotland), 2R. [214] 1010
Supply—Queen's and Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer, [215] 1464

Harbour Dues (Isle of Man) Bill
(Mr. Baxter, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer)
a. Considered in Committee; Bill ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup>
May 28 [Bill 175]
Bill withdrawn * July 3

Harbours, Docks, and Piers Act, 1847
Question, Mr. Stevenson; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue July 31, [217] 1332

Harbours of Refuge
Amendt. on Committee of Supply May 2, To leave out from "That," and add "a Select Committee be appointed to inquire into the loss of life and property on the North East coast, and report on the best means of averting the same" (Lord Claud John Hamilton) v., [215] 1406; Question proposed, "That the words, 'do.'," after debate, Question put; A. 109, N. 95; M. 14

HARCOURT, Mr. W. Vernon, Oxford City
Army—Military Centres—Oxford, Motion for a Committee, [216] 368, 371
Army Estimates—Administration of the Army, [216] 1294
Board of Education (Ireland)—O'Keeffe, Rev. Mr. Nomination of Committee, [216] 319
Conspiracy, Law of, [216] 723
Conspiracy Law Amendment, 2R. [216] 1889; Lords Amendts. Amendt. [217] 1583
Disestablishment of the Churches of England and Scotland, Res. [216] 49
Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment, Re-comm. [217] 755; cl. 8, Amendt. 763; cl. 28, 799; Consid. add. cl. 987; cl. 23, 961
Geneva Arbitration—Letter of Mr. Fish, [216] 170; Geneva Award, [215] 17
International Law—New Rules, Motion for an Address, [214] 1992, 2037
Juries, Comm. cl. 5, [216] 517; Amendt. 522
Licensing Act, 1872—Standard of Value, [215] 1873; [217] 1068, 1069
Licensing Act Amendment (Ireland), [216] 1418
Masters and Servants—Law of Contract, Res. [216] 572, 594, 605, 806
Parks Regulation Act—New Rules, [214] 204, 207, 215, 216, 218, 223
Parliament—Address in Answer to the Speech, [214] 122
Privilege—Appellate Jurisdiction of the House of Lords, [217] 171, 353
Public Expenditure, Res. [214] 602, 639, 661
Supply, [215] 399
Stationery, Printing, &c. [214] 568; Amendt. 570
216 Supreme Court of Judicature, Comm. 1569; cf. 6, 1595, 1596; Amendt. 1597, 1605, 1627, 1628, 1629, 1634; Amendt. 1636; cl. 6, Amendt. 1637, 1740; cl. 18, 1789, 1795; cl. 22, 1799, 1800; cl. 34, Amendt. 1801, 1804, 1865, 1870, 1871; cl. 29, Amendt. 1878, 1879, 1883; cl. 31, 1885

HARCOURT, Mr. W. Vernon—cont.
[217] cl. 36, Amendt. 39; cl. 42, 49; cl. 44, 41, 43, 44; cl. 50, 46, 50; cl. 54, 177; cl. 75, Amendt. 216, 218; cl. 78, 220; cl. 79, 223; cl. 80, Amendt. 225; add. cl. Amendt. 333, 334, 336, 338; Schedule 2, 344; Consider. cl. 22, 678

University Education (Ireland), 2R. Motion for Adjournment, [214] 1512; Amendt. 1618

HARDCASTLE, Mr. J. A., Bury St. Edmunds
Ballot Act—University Elections, [216] 1862
Municipal Elections (Cumulative Vote), 2R. Amendt. [217] 434

HARDINGE, Viscount
Army—Militia Reserve—Annual Bounty, [216] 987
Recruiting, [216] 1621
Army—Control Department, Motion for Papers, [216] 1922
Army, Officers of the—Abolition of Purchase, Address for a Royal Commission, [217] 638
Palace of Westminster—Frescoes in Royal Gallery, [215] 1809

HARDY, Right Hon. Gathorne, Oxford University
Army—Military Centres—Oxford, [214] 544; Motion for a Committee, [216] 368
Commercial Marine, Motion for an Address, [214] 1366
Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment, 2R. [217] 575; Re-comm. cl. 8, 769; cl. 10, 793
Endowed Schools Act (1869), Motion for a Committee, [214] 205
Endowed Schools Act (1869) Amendment, Comm. [217] 929; cl. 3, Amendt. 981, 933; cl. 6, Amendt. 941, 942; cl. 15, 948, 949
Infanticide Law Amendment, 2R. [215] 1885
International Law—New Rules, Motion for an Address, [214] 1963, 1964, 2045, 2050, 2055
Juries, 2R. [214] 568; Comm. cl. 1, [215] 2071; cl. 5, Amendt. [216] 516, 518; cl. 46, 539, 540; cl. 52, 1513; cl. 55, 1518
Metropolis—Central London Sick Asylum, [215] 1295
Parliament—Address in Answer to the Speech, [214] 115
Post Office—Mail Contracts, Res. [216] 711
Prevention of Crime, 2R. [214] 750
Rating (Liability and Value)—Valuation—Consolidated Rate, Leave, [215] 1519, 1520; Comm. [216] 748; cl. 3, 981, 1007, 1026, 1072; cl. 4, 1177; cl. 15, 1426
Register for Parliamentary and Municipal Electors, Comm. cl. 9, [215] 961
Seduction Laws Amendment, 2R. [215] 482
Supreme Court of Judicature, Comm. cl. 6, [216] 1841; cl. 17, 1755; cl. 18, Amendt. 1787; add. cl. [217] 323; Consid. cl. 22, 672
University Education (Ireland), 2R. Amendt. [214] 1496, 1500

HAR HAR { SESSION 1873 } HAR HAT
 214-215-216-217.

HARDY, Mr. J. Stewart, Rys
 Army Estimates—Administration of the Army, [216] 1993
 Juries, Comm. cl. 5, [216] 526
 Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 3, [216] 1011; Consid. [217] 420; Re-comm. Amendt. 814
 Ways and Means, Report, [215] 918

HARROWBY, Earl of
 Agricultural Children, 2R. [216] 720
 Children's Employment in Dangerous Performances, 2R. [216] 1244
 Church Association—Confession, Motion for a Select Committee, [217] 284; Address for a Paper, 1168, 1170
 Elementary Education Provisional Order Confirmation (No. 1), Comm. [215] 1672; Report, cl. 1, [217] 760
 India—Banda and Kirwee Prize Money, [216] 1703
 Order of Merit—Motion for an Address, [216] 1476
 Supreme Court of Judicature, 3R. [215] 1476; Commons Amendts. [217] 887, 888

HARTINGTON, Right Hon. Marquess of (Chief Secretary for Ireland); New Radnor
 Appropriation of Seats (Cashel and Sligo); Leave, [217] 964
 Board of Education (Ireland)—O'Keeffe, Rev. Mr., [215] 1140; Motion for a Committee, 2028, 2037, 2034; [216] 102; Nomination of Committee, 321
 Expiring Laws Continuance, Comm. [217] 1250, 1251
 Four Courts Marshalsea (Dublin), Comm. Motion for Adjournment, [217] 1509
 General Valuation (Ireland), Comm. [216] 1837
 India—Indian Budget, [217] 921
 Ireland—Questions, &c.
     Affairs in, [214] 729
     Census of, [216] 814
     Civil Service, Reports of Commissioners, [215] 627
     Coroner for Meath, [217] 999
     Coroners, [215] 1490
     Education—Teachers in Irish Workhouse Schools, [217] 1177
     Fisheries, [215] 973
     Fishery Loans, [214] 1390
     Frankford Bench of Magistrates, [217] 1088
     Galway Election Prosecutions Expenses, [214] 787, 898
     Galway Magistracy—Case of Mr. Dickson, [215] 15
     Grand Jury Laws, [214] 198
     Inquest at Helywood, [214] 727, 898
     Irish Bills, [214] 1183
     Irish Church Act (1869)—Clause 32, [216] 514
     Irish Juries Lists, [216] 1164
     Judicial Bench—Justice Lawson, Mr., Libels upon, [215] 1297
     Labourers Dwellings, [214] 540; [216] 990, 1706
     Land Act, [217] 805

HARTINGTON, Right Hon. Marquess of—cont.
 Landed Estates Court—Vacant Judgeship, [214] 289, 375; [217] 820
 Law and Justice—Four Courts, Marshalsea, Dublin, [217] 308
 Letter-Mullen Coastguard, [214] 729; [216] 1421; [217] 807
 Licensing Act, [216] 15;—Bailsmen, 97, 1115
 Lunatic Asylum Boards, [217] 145
 M'Aleese, Mr., Imprisonment of, [215] 1002
 Magistracy, Revision of List of, [217] 904
 Peace Preservation (Ireland) Act, [217] 917
 Poor Law Elections — Forged Voting Papers, [216] 1558
 Prison Discipline, [216] 357
 Queen's Colleges, [214] 198
 Redistribution of Seats, [214] 195
 Reproductive Loan Funds, [214] 1611
 Royal Irish Constabulary, [217] 861
 Sanitary Statutes, [216] 1863
 Stipendiary Magistrates, [216] 430; [217] 496
 Ireland—Shannon, Overflowing of the, Res. [214] 1591
 Juries (Ireland), 2R. [216] 483
 Juries (Ireland) Act, Select Committee, [214] 1961
 Juries (Ireland) Act, 1872—Clare Assizes, [214] 1037
 Juries (Ireland) Acts, [215] 9; Motion for a Committee, 322; Nomination of Committee, 604
 Landed Estates Court (Ireland) Judges, 2R. [217] 955
 Peace Preservation (Ireland), 2R. [215] 2054, 2070; Comm. [216] 60; cl. 2, 65; Proviso, 69, 70, 71, 73
 Polling Districts (Ireland), Leave, [214] 174
 Public Meetings (Ireland), 2R. [216] 1890
 Rating Liability (Ireland), 2R. [217] 962
 Sale of Liquors on Sunday (Ireland), 2R. [217] 113
 Supply—Commissioners of National Education in Ireland, [216] 1503, 1504
     Constabulary Force (Ireland), [215] 1778; [217] 1145
     Household of Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, [215] 1457
     Legal Charges (Ireland), [217] 1148
     Metropolitan Police of Dublin, [217] 1136, 1144
 Union Rating (Ireland), 2R. [214] 764
 University Education (Ireland), 2R. Amendt. [214] 1255, 1775
 University Tests (Dublin) (No. 3), Comm. cl. 3, [215] 1583

HATHERLEY, Lord
 Confession in the Church of England, Address for a Paper, [217] 1170
 Land Titles and Transfer, 1R. [215] 1135
 Sites for Places of Religious Worship, 2R. [216] 152; 3R. 1241
 Supreme Court of Judicature, Re-comm. cl. 5, [215] 1280; Commons Amendts. [217] 885, 896
 Winchester, late Bishop of, and the late Lord Westbury, [217] 741

[cont.]

HAY HEN { GENERAL INDEX } HEN HEN
 214-215-216-217.

HAY, Rear-Admiral Sir J. C. D., Stamford

- Africa—West Coast Settlements—Ashantee Invasion, [215] 970 ; [216] 480
- Canadian Boundary, Robert's Point, [214] 1032
- Commercial Marine, Motion for an Address, [214] 1353
- Entailed and Settled Estates (Scotland), Comm. Motion for Adjournment, [216] 1833
- India—Snake-Bites, Deaths by, [216] 275
- Juries, Comm. cl. 5, [216] 624 ; cl. 9, Amendt. 529
- Merchant Shipping Act—"Eleanor," The, [215] 641
- Merchant Shipping Act—Rules of the Road at Sea, Res. [215] 250
- Merchant Shipping Acts Amendment, Comm. cl. 15, [217] 1027
- Navy—Questions, &c.

  - Half Pay of Officers, [215] 27
  - H.M.S. "Devastation," [215] 577, 586
  - Post Office Orders, [214] 1395
  - "Rowena," The—Shipping Agents, [216] 636
  - Royal Marines—Rank of Major, [214] 601
  - Navy—(Promotion and Retirement), Motion for a Committee, [216] 751, 755, 756, 767, 791, 792, 795
  - Navy Estimates—Admiralty Office, [216] 108, 104, 105, 106, 107, 122
  - Coast Guard Service, [216] 127
  - Dockyards, &c. [216] 139, 148
  - Half Pay, &c. [216] 455
  - Medical Stores, [216] 453
  - Men and Boys, [215] 50, 56, 87
  - Miscellaneous Services, [216] 453
  - Naval Stores, [216] 437, 438, 443, 446
  - New Works, &c. [216] 452
  - Retired Pay, Amendt. [217] 1151
  - Scientific Departments, [216] 139, 131
  - Steam Machinery, &c. [216] 449, 451
  - Parliament—Order of Business, [215] 227 ; [217] 914
  - Public Business, [215] 1790
  - Shah of Persia, Visit of—Naval Review at Spithead, [216] 909
  - Supply—Dover Harbour, [217] 1283

HEADLAM, Right Hon. T. E., Newcastle-upon-Tyne

- Trades Unions—Amalgamated Society of Engineers, [215] 220

Heligoland, Gambling Houses at

- Question, Mr. W. O. Stanley ; Answer, Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen May 18, [215] 1871

HENDERSON, Mr. J., Durham City

- Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 13, [216] 1191, 1237

HENLEY, Lord, Northampton Bo.

- Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 8, [216] 916, 1009

HENLEY, Right Hon. J. W., Oxfordshire

- Army—Military Centres—Oxford, Motion for a Committee, [216] 375
- Army Estimates—Miscellaneous Services, [216] 1287

HENLEY, Right Hon. J. W.—cont.

- Commercial Marine, Motion for an Address, [214] 1357
- Contagious Diseases Acts Repeal, 2R. [216] 263
- Endowed Schools Act (1969) Amendment, Comm. add cl. [217] 951
- Juries, Comm. cl. 5, [216] 520 ; cl. 15, 538
- Landlord and Tenant, 2R. [216] 1649
- Minors Protection, 2R. [216] 1377
- Prevention of Crime, 2R. [214] 751
- Public Expenditure, Res. [214] 655
- Public Health, Comm. [217] 94
- Railway and Canal Traffic, Comm. [215] 388
- Rating (Liability and Value), 2R. [216] 303 ; Comm. 742 ; cl. 3, 926, 1010, 1022 ; cl. 13, 1287 ; cl. 15, 1428 ; Consid. [217] 414 ; Recomm. add. cl. 611 ; Consid. 617, 618, 619
- Supply—Metropolitan Police of Dublin, [217] 1144
- Supreme Court of Judicature, 2R. [216] 868 ; Comm. 1579 ; cl. 6, 1641, 1744 ; cl. 42, [217] 40 ; add. cl. 328, 340, 422 ; Consid. cl. 22, 680

HENNICKER, Lord

- Agricultural Children, 2R. [216] 712 ; Comm. cl. 4, Amendt. 1151 ; cl. 6, 1154, 1155 ; Report, cl. 8, Amendt. 1547, 1549 ; 3R. Amendt. 1842 ; Commons Amendts. cl. 8, Amendt. [217] 648
- Rating (Liability and Value), 2R. Amendt. [217] 980

HENRY, Mr. Mitchell, Galway Co.

- Army Estimates—Land Forces, [214] 883
- Ireland—Galway Election Prosecutions—Bishop Duggan, &c. [214] 788, 898
- Letter-Mullen Coast Guard, [214] 729 ; [216] 1419 ; [217] 607
- Ireland—Galway Election Petition—Trials of Election Petitions, Res. [215] 989
- Ireland—Shannon, Overflowing of the, Res. [214] 1569
- Minors Protection, 2R. [216] 1373

- Monastic and Conventual Institutions, 2R. [216] 1683

- Nitro Glycerine Act (1869), [216] 68

- Parliament—Privilege—Appellate Jurisdiction of the House of Lords, [217] 169
- Strangers ordered to withdraw, [217] 207, 301

- Parliament—Breach of Privilege—"Pall Mall Gazette," Res. [215] 533

- Peace Preservation (Ireland), 2R. [215] 2080 ; Comm. cl. 2, Proviso, [216] 71

- Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 2, [216] 911

- Shah of Persia, Visit of—Naval Review at Spithead, [216] 909

- Supply—Post Office Packet Service, [216] 1802

- University Education (Ireland), Leave, [214] 427, 1181, 1396 ; 2R. 1513, 1712 ; Amendt. 1791

- University Tests (Dublin), Withdrawal of Bill, [215] 304

- University Tests (Dublin) (No. 3), 2R. Amendt. [215] 732 ; Comm. 1529

HER      HER      { SESSION 1873 }      HER      HER 214—215—216—217.

HERBERT, Right Hon. Major-General
 Sir Percy E., Shropshire, S.
 Army Fine Fund, [215] 1760
 Army Estimates—Land Forces, [214] 883,
 1144
 Militia Pay and Allowances, [214] 1157
 Pay and Allowances, [214] 1155
 Navy (Promotion and Retirement), Motion for a Committee, [216] 763

HERBERT, Hon. Auberon E. W. M.,
Nottingham Bo.
 Agricultural Labourers Unions—Faringdon
 Highway Board, [216] 169
 Army—Depot Centres—Oxford, [216] 171;
 Motion for a Committee, 358, 385, 394
 Army Estimates—Land Forces, [214] 1132,
 1134
 Criminal Law Amendment, Motion for a Select Committee, [217] 459, 460
 Magistracy, The, Motion for an Address, [216]
 1339
 Masters and Servants—Law of Contract, Res.
 [216] 590
 Metropolis Buildings Act. Amendment, 2R.
 [215] 504
 Metropolitan Police—Goodchild, Constable,
 [215] 648
 Nottingham—Police Interference with Political Placards, [215] 974
 Parks Regulation Act—New Rules, [214] 226
 Parks Regulation Act—Meetings in the Parks,
 Motion for an Address, Amendt. [215] 271
 Professorship of Pastoral Theology, Oxford,
 [215] 401
 Public Expenditure, Res. [214] 847
 Treaties with Foreign Powers, Res. [214] 485
 University Education (Ireland), Leave, [214]
 429
 University Fellowships (Compensation), Leave,
 [215] 801
 Ways and Means—Financial Statement,
 Comm. [215] 707
 Wild Birds Protection, Motion for a Committee, [215] 1187
 Wild Birds Protection Act—Penalties, [216]
 100

HERBERT, Mr. H. A., *Kerry Co.
 Ireland—Fishery Loans, [214] 1390
 Reproductive Loan Funds, [214] 1611
 Ireland—Irish Railways, Purchase of, Res.
 [215] 1184
 Metropolis—Street Traffic Regulation—Hyde Park, [216] 498

HERMON, Mr. E., *Preston
 Customs and Inland Revenue, Comm. [215]
 1686; cl. 4, 1688
 Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment,
 Re-comm. cl. 23, [217] 798
 Municipal Officers Superannuation, 2R. [214]
 1371
 Navy Estimates—Naval Stores, [216] 438, 443
 Parliament—Committees of the House—Divisions, [216] 724
 Public Business—Rules and Practice of the House, [217] 605 Parliament—Business of the House (Committee of Supply), Res. [214] 271

HERMON, Mr. E.—cont.
 Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 3, [216] 1010, 1015; cl. 13, 1105, 1285; Re-
 comm. [217] 612
 Salmon Fisheries, 2R. [214] 1374
 Supply—Convict Establishments, [217] 1278
 Dover Harbour, [217] 1285
 Ways and Means, Report, Motion for Adjournment, [215] 920, 921; Comm. 958

HERON, Mr. D. C., *Tipperary Co.
 Juries (Ireland) Act, Motion for a Committee,
 [215] 318
 Post Office—Galway, Telegraph Stations in, [216] 385
 University Tests (Dublin) (No. 2), Leave, [215]
 306
 University Tests (Dublin) (No. 3), 2R. [215]
 742
 Valuation Department (Ireland), Res. [215] 432
 Women's Disabilities, 2R. [215] 1248

HERTFORD, Marquess of Army—Abolition of Purchase, Motion for Papers, [216] 1225
 Army, Officers of the—Abolition of Purchase,
 Address for a Royal Commission, [217] 640
 Chelsea Water, 2R. [214] 1018

HEYGATE, Sir F. W., *Londonderry Co.
 Endowed Schools Act (1869) Amendment,
 Comm. [217] 930; cl. 3, Amendt. ib.
 General Valuation (Ireland), 2R. [215] 1539;
 Comm. [216] 1835, 1559
 Ireland—Questions, &c.
 Census of, [216] 514
 Charters of Dublin University and Trinity College, [214] 545
 Irish Constabulary, [217] 1327
 Labourers Dwellings, [214] 540; [216]
 990; [217] 1328
 Irish Church Act (1869)—Clause 32, [216] 514
 Labourers Cottages (Scotland), 2R. [217] 472
 Life Assurance Companies Act, 1870—Returns,
 [217] 657
 Sale of Liquors on Sunday (Ireland), 2R. [217]
 116
 Supply—Commissioners of National Education
 in Ireland, [216] 1505
 University Education (Ireland), Leave, [214]
 429

HEYGATE, Mr. W. U., *Leicestershire, S.
 Burials, 2R. [215] 197
 Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment,
 2R. [217] 543; Re-comm. cl. 10, 794;
 add. cl. 800
 Endowed Schools Act (1869) Amendment, 2R.
 [217] 730; Comm. cl. 5, Amendt. 939;
 cl. 6, Amendt. 942, 946; add. cl. 954
 Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister, 2R.
 [214] 325
 Post Office—"Post Office Tea," [216] 431
 Post Office (Balances)—Telegraphic Department, Res. [217] 1222
 Railway and Canal Traffic, Comm. add cl. [215]
 596
 Russia—Crimean Cemeteries, [215] 529
 Supply—Home Department and Subordinate
 Offices, [215] 1007
 Privy Council for Trade, &c. [215] 1011

[cont.]

HIB HIL { GENERAL INDEX } HIL HOL
214—215—216—217.

HIBBERT, Mr. J. T. (Secretary to the Poor Law Commissioners), Oldham:
Ballot Act—Boards of Guardians Voting Papers, [217] 918
Census (1871) Returns, [214] 728
Education of Blind and Deaf-Mute Children, 2R. [216] 795
Elementary Education Act—Puttenham School Rates, [215] 1782
Local Taxation, Motion for a Committee, [215] 1840
Metropolis—Central London Sick Asylum, [215] 1296
Public Health, 2R. [215] 1665; Comm. [217] 94
Public Health Act—Epping Drainage District, [215] 1872
Salaries, [215] 1873
Public Schools Act—Shrewsbury School, [216] 99
Rating (Liability and Value), 2R. [216] 311; Comm. cl. 3, 912, 923, 932, 1014, 1022, 1077, 1081, 1088; cl. 4, 1181; cl. 13, 1193; add. cl. 1432; Consid. [217] 423; Re-comm. 612; Consid. 616
Rating of Government Property—Consolidated Rate, [216] 358
Register for Parliamentary and Municipal Electors, Leave, [214] 576, 578; 2R. 1957; Comm. [215] 292; Re-comm. cl. 3, 793, 795; cl. 7, Amendt. 960, 961; cl. 9, 1690, 1691; Schedule 1, 1695
Sanitary Acts—Mineral Works, [215] 728
Supply—Local Government Board, [215] 1017, 1018, 1020, 1021
Turnpike Acts Continuance, &c. Comm. [216] 1757; [217] 193, 195, 320
Vaccination Act (1871), [216] 1064

HICK, Mr. J., Bolton
Army Estimates—Warlike Stores, [216] 1904

Highland Schools (Scotland) Bill
(Mr. Baxter, Mr. William Henry Gladstone)
c. Resolution [June 28] reported, and agreed to;
Bill ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> * June 24 [Bill 202]
Read 2<sup>o</sup> * July 3
Committee *; Report July 4
Considered * July 7
Read 3<sup>o</sup> * July 8
l. Read 1<sup>o</sup> * (Earl of Morley) July 10 (No. 205)
Read 2<sup>o</sup> * July 17
Committee *; Report July 18
Read 3<sup>o</sup> * July 22
Royal Assent July 28 [36 & 37 Vict. c. 53]

HILL, Mr. A. Staveley, Coventry
Conveyancing (Scotland), Comm. [215] 1699
Juries, 2R. Motion for Adjournment, [214] 557, 564; Comm. cl. 55, Amendt. [216] 1818
Married Women's Property Act (1870) Amendment, 2R. [214] 680
Married Women's Property Act (1870) Amendment (No. 2), 2R. [214] 328; Comm. 1364; Motion for Adjournment, 1365
Nitro Glycerine Act (1869), [216] 53, 58
Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 3, [216] 1013, 1077, 1083; cl. 13, 1234; cl. 16, 1428

HILL, Mr. A. Staveley—cont.
Supreme Court of Judicature, Comm. cl. 6, [216] 1741; cl. 29, 1884; cl. 42, [217] 40; cl. 44, 48; cl. 54, 177; cl. 73, 187
Treaties with Foreign Powers, Res. [214] 459
United States—Alabama Claims, [214] 152

HOARE, Sir H. A., Chelsea, &c.
Exhibition, 1851, Commissioners of—South Kensington, Land at, [216] 1188, 1189, 1170
Metropolis—Kensington Gardens, [216] 1554
South Kensington Museum—Cole, Mr., Retirement of, [217] 152
Parks Regulation Act—New Rules, [214] 295
Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. [216] 738; cl. 3, 922, 933, 1006
Wild Birds Protection, Motion for a Committee, [215] 1187

HODGSON, Mr. W. N., Cumberland, E.
Parliamentary Elections (Expenses), 2R.
Amendt. [216] 1115
Railway and Canal Traffic, Lords Amendts.
Amendt. [216] 482, 1298, 1299, 1302
Salmon Fisheries, 2R. [214] 1375

HOGG, Colonel J. M., Truro
Charing Cross and Victoria Embankment Approach, Motion for a Committee, [214] 1025, 1026
Charing Cross and Victoria Embankment Approach, Consid. [215] 2017
Customs Outport Clerks, Res. Report, Motion for Adjournment, [217] 1243, 1244
Foreshores—Truro, Encroachments at, [217] 1090
Metropolis—Thames Embankment, [216] 503
Metropolitan Board of Works—Thanksgiving Day, [214] 1285
Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 3, [216] 1072

HOLKER, Mr. J., Preston
Infanticide Law Amendment, 2R. [215] 1984
Local Taxation—Criminal Prosecutions, Cost of, [215] 1788
Supreme Court of Judicature, 2R. [216] 686, 873

HOLMES, Mr. J., Hackney
Army Estimates—Land Forces, [214] 1085
Departmental Expenditure—Purchase and Sale of Stores, Motion for a Committee, [214] 803
Metropolis—Parks—Bathing Accommodation, [215] 1028
Navy—Chatham Dockyard Railway, [217] 315
Post Office—Cape of Good Hope, Conveyance of Mail to, [215] 1488
Post Office—Cape and Zanzibar Mails Contract, [216] 357; Res. Amendt. * 690, 710; Amendt. 1202, 1203, 1211

HOLT, Mr. J. M., Lancashire, N.E.
Army—Control Department, [217] 1518
Duke of Edinburgh—The Queen's Message, [217] 1187
Monastic and Conventual Institutions, 2R. [216] 1680
Palace of Westminster—Houses of Parliament, Facilities for Visiting the, [217] 1520
Parliament—Public Business, [217] 663

[cont.]

[cont.]

HOL HOR { SESSION 1873 } HOR HOW
214—215—216—217.

HOLT, Mr. J. M.—cont.

Royal Arsenal (Woolwich)—Consumption of Coal, [214] 539
Supreme Court of Judicature, Consid. cl. 22, [217] 680

HOOD, Captain Hon. A. W., Somerset, W.
Army—Yeomanry Adjutants, [215] 522

HOPE, Mr. A. J. Beresford, Cambridge University

Burials, Leave, [214] 176; Comm. [217] 124, 128, 135
Canonries, 2R. [215] 878
Charing Cross and Victoria Embankment Approach, Motion for a Committee, [214] 1029

Church of England Revenues, Address for a Royal Commission, [217] 457
Endowed Schools Act (1860) Amendment, Comm. add. cl. [217] 950, 962
Endowed Schools Commissioners—Emmanuel Hospital Scheme, Motion for an Address, [215] 1886

Juries, Comm. [217] 591
Labourer Cottages (Scotland), 2R. [217] 466
Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister, 2R. Amendt. [214] 308

Metropolis—New Courts of Justice, [216] 405
Parliament—Order of Business, [217] 914

Whitsuntide Recess, [215] 1790
Public Worship Facilities, 2R. [214] 969, 970
Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 3, [216] 938, 1005; Consid. [217] 816

Seduction Laws Amendment, Comm. add. cl. [216] 1892

Supreme Court of Judicature, Comm. cl. 18, [216] 1791; cl. 52, [217] 52

University Fellowships (Compensation), Leave, [215] 809

University Tests (Dublin) (No. 3), Comm. cl. 2, [215] 1532

Weights and Measures (Metric System), 2R. [217] 481

Women's Disabilities, 2R. [215] 1296

Horses—Our Supply of Horses

Address for "a Royal Commission to inquire into the condition of this country with regard to horses, and its capabilities of supplying any present or future demand for them" (Lord Rosebery) Feb 20, [214] 702; after debate, Motion withdrawn

Moved, "That a Select Committee be appointed to inquire into the condition of this country with regard to horses, and its capabilities of supplying any present or future demand for them" (Lord Rosebery) Feb 21; Motion agreed to

And, on Feb 24, the Lords following were named of the Committee:—D. Cambridge, Lt. Privy Seal, D. Richmond, M. Lansdowne, M. Ailesbury, E. Portsmouth, E. Malmesbury, E. Lucan, E. Grey, V. Falmouth, Lt. Steward, L. Tyrone, L. Redesdale, L. Rosebery, L. Kesteven, and L. Blachford; Feb 25, His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales added; Feb 27, L. Strathnairn added in the place of E. Lucan

Report of Select Committee Feb 28
(Parl. P. No. 32)

VOL. COXVII. [THIRD SERIES.]

HORSMAN, Right Hon. E., Liskeard
International Law—New Rules, Motion for an Address, [214] 2038
Mercantile Marine—"Sea Queen," Loss of the, [215] 106
Parliament—Address in Answer to the Speech, [214] 84
Breach of Privilege—Mr. Plimsoll, [214] 741

University Education (Ireland), [214] 899, 901; 2R. Motion for Adjournment, 1277; Amendt. 1398, 1426, 1495, 1500, 1711, 1835

HOSKINS, Mr. C. WREN, Hereford City
Census of Land and House Owners, [214] 891
Landlord and Tenant, 2R. [216] 1648

HOUGHTON, Lord
Confession in the Church of England, Address for a Paper, [217] 1168
Foreign Decorations, Motion for an Address, [214] 773, 782
Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister, 2R. [214] 1870, 1879
Order of Merit—Motion for an Address, [216] 1474
Palace of Westminster—House of Commons—Peers Gallery, [214] 1923
Parliament—Resignation of Ministers, Statement, [214] 1870
Railway and Canal Traffic, 2R. [215] 1552; Comm. cl. 10, 1845; cl. 12, Amendt. 1846; Commons Amendts. [217] 10
Railways, &c. (Transfer and Amalgamation), Commons Message, [214] 890
Regulation of Railways (Prevention of Accidents), 2R. [214] 588

Household Franchise (Counties) Bill
(Mr. Trevelyan, Sir John Trelawny, Sir Robert Anstruther, Mr. Osborne Morgan, Mr. Andrew Johnston)

c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> * Feb 7 [Bill 3]
217] Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2<sup>o</sup>" July 23, 806
. Previous Question moved, "That that Question be now put" (Mr. Collins), 823; after long debate, Debate adjourned
. Question, Mr. C. Forster; Answer, Mr. Trevelyan July 24, 919
Bill withdrawn * July 24

Household Suffrage Counties (Scotland) Bill
(Mr. Trevelyan, Sir Robert Anstruther, Sir David Wedderburn)

c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> * Feb 11 [Bill 50]
Bill withdrawn * July 24

HOWARD, Mr. J., Bedford Bo.

Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act, Motion for a Committee, [214] 517
Landlord and Tenant, [214] 1741
Letters Patent, [214] 1182
Locomotives Act, 1861—Bridges, Inspection of, [216] 1228

HOWARD DE WALDEN, Lord

Horses, Supply of, Address for a Royal Commission, [214] 719

HUG HUN { GENERAL INDEX } HUN IMP
214—215—216—217.

- HUGHES, Mr. T., *Frome
 Army—Military Centres—Oxford, Motion for a Committee, [216] 374
 Burials, 2R. [215] 184
 Church of England Revenues, Address for a Royal Commission, [217] 447, 459
 Factory Act Amendment, 2R. [217] 1305, 1545
 India—Banda and Kirwee Prize Money, [215] 99
 Occasional Sermons, 2R. [215] 1971
 Parliament—Public Business, [217] 667
     Whitau Recess, Adjournment for, [216] 494
 Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 3, [216] 1084; Consid. [217] 403
 Supply—Post Office Services, [217] 1114
 Supreme Court of Judicature, Comm. cl. 5, [216] 1634; cl. 22, 1799; cl. 24, 1862; cl. 75, [217] 215, 217
- HUNT, Right Hon. G. W., *Northamptonshire, N.
 Army Fine Fund, [215] 1757, 1760
 Blackwater Bridge (Composition of Debt), 2R. [216] 1605
 Consolidated Fund (Appropriation), 2R. [217] 1370
 Customs Outport Clerks, Res. Report, [217] 1241
 Duke of Edinburgh—The Queen's Message, [217] 1186
 East India Finance Committee, Second Report, [215] 1875
 Elementary Education (England) Act—The National Anthem, [216] 1413
 Infantiocide Law Amendment, 2R. [215] 1987
 International Law—New Rules, Motion for an Address, [214] 2034
 Parliament—Business of the House, Motion for a Committee, [215] 238; [217] 1256
     Resignation of Ministers, Ministerial Statement, [214] 1912, 1913
 Post Office (Balances)—Telegraphic Department, Res. [217] 1217
 Post Office—Mail Contracts, [216] 1002;—Cape and Zanzibar, 1210; Amendt. 1213, 1215; Amendt. 1446
 Railway and Canal Traffic, 2R. [214] 1042
 [216] Rating (Liability and Value), 2R. 290; Comm. 731; cl. 3, 930, 933, 1008, 1010, 1012, 1014, 1016, 1018, 1019, 1021, 1027, 1030; cl. 15, 1429
 [217] Consid. 412, 413, 417, 421; Amendt. 422, 423
     Register for Parliamentary and Municipal Electors, 2R. [214] 1951, 1952; Comm. [215] 292; Re-comm. 717, 719; cl. 3, 794; cl. 9, Motion for reporting Progress, 962
 Supply—British Museum, [217] 1147
     Constabulary Force (Ireland), [217] 1145
     Court of Chancery, [215] 1773, 1774
     Dover Harbour, [217] 1284
     Metropolitan Police of Dublin, [217] 1142
     Natural History Museum, [215] 790
     New Courts of Justice, &c. [215] 792
     New Palace at Westminster, [217] 1270, 1271, 1273, 1277
 Supreme Court of Judicature, Comm. Motion for Adjournment, [216] 1577; cl. 54, [217] 175, 180, 181; cl. 75, 216, 217; cl. 80, 225; add. cl. 321, 340; Amendt. 341, 342
 Telegraphs, Comm. [217] 1247
 Valuation, 2R. [216] 319
- Hunt, Right Hon. G. W.—cont.
 Valuation Department (Ireland), Res. [215] 427, 428
 Ways and Means—Financial Statement, Comm. [215] 670, 713, 921, 1810
 Ways and Means—Sugar Duties Resolutions, [215] 801
- HUNTLY, Marquess of
 Church of Scotland—Patronage, Res. [216] 1048
 Railway and Canal Traffic, Report, cl. 26, Amendt. [216] 9
- Hypothec Abolition (Scotland) Bill
 (Sir David Wedderburn, Mr. Carter, Mr. Fordyce, Mr. Craufurd)
- o. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> Feb 7 [Bill 21]
 Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2<sup>o</sup>" June 25, [216] 1340
 Amendt. to leave out "now," and add "upon this day three months" (Sir Edward Colebrooke); Question proposed, "That 'now,' &c." after long debate, Question put; A. 83, N. 147; M. 64
 Words added; main Question, as amended, put, and agreed to; Bill put off for three months
- ILLINGWORTH, Mr. A., *Knaresborough
 Endowed Schools Act (1869) Amendment, 2R. [217] 733; Comm. cl. 5, 940; cl. 8, 945
 Occasional Sermons, 2R. [215] 1979
 Supply—Dover Harbour, [217] 1284
     Embassy Houses at Vienna and Washington, [217] 1181
- Imprisonment for Debt
 Select Committee appointed, "to inquire into the subject of Imprisonment for Debt by County Court Judges" (Mr. Bass) Feb 7 And, on Feb 14, Committee nominated as follows:—Mr. Spencer Walpole (Chairman), Mr. Anderson, Mr. Ayton, Mr. Baines, Mr. Bass, Mr. Cawley, Mr. Chadwick, Mr. Cobbett, Mr. Cross, Mr. Fielden, Mr. Robert Fowler, Mr. James, Mr. Lopes, Mr. M'Mahon, Mr. Norwood, Mr. Salt, Mr. Richard Shaw, Mr. Stapleton, and Mr. Torr
 Report of Select Committee July 24 No. 348
- Improvement of Land—Limited Owners
 Moved, "That a Select Committee be appointed to inquire into the facilities afforded by the existing law to limited owners of land for the investment of capital in the improvement of such land, and to report whether any alteration of the law is requisite in order further to encourage such investment" (The Marquess of Salisbury) April 3, [215] 506; after short debate, Motion agreed to; Select Committee appointed
 And, on April 4, the Lords following were named of the Committee:—D. Richmond, D. Bedford, D. Cleveland, M. Salisbury, M. Bath, E. Derby, E. Airlie, E. Grey, E. Kimberley, L. Dinevor, L. Vernon, L. Meldrum, L. Colchester, L. Stanley of Alderley, L. Egerton, L. Houghton, L. Kesteven, L. Ettrick, and L. Hanmer
 Report of Select Comm. July 18 No. 81

[cont.]

INC IND { SESSION 1873 } IND IND
214—215—216—217.

INCHIQUIN, Lord

Peace Preservation (Ireland) Acts Continuance,
2R. [216] 340
Scottish and Irish Peerages, Motion for an Address, [216] 1779

Income Tax

Notice of Motion, "That a Select Committee be appointed to inquire into the incidence, management, and collection of the Income Tax; with power to report on the amendments required, or the advisability of repealing the Tax" (Mr. Chaturuk) Mar 25, [215]
157; [House counted out]

Income Tax Assessment Bill

(Mr. Baxter, Mr. William Henry Gladstone)
e. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> Mar 21 [Bill 98]
Read 2<sup>o</sup> Mar 27
Committee; Report Mar 28
Read 3<sup>o</sup> Mar 31
l. Read 1<sup>o</sup> (Marquess of Lansdowne) April 1
Read 2<sup>o</sup>; Committee negatived; read 3<sup>o</sup>
April 3 (No. 55)
Royal Assent April 4 [36 Vict. c. 8]

INDIA

Army

Banda and Kirwee Prize Money, Question,
Mr. T. Hughes; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff [215] Mar 25, 99; Question, Lord Eleho; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff Mar 27, 222; Question, Colonel North; Answer, Mr. Grant

Duff April 7, 646; Question, Mr. W. M.
Torrens; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff May 5,
1485; Question, Colonel Barttelot; Answer,
[216] Mr. Grant Duff May 22, 273; Questions,

Lord Cairns; Observations, The Earl of Longford; Reply, Viscount Halifax June 12,
332; Question, The Earl of Derby; Answer,
The Duke of Argyll; short debate thereon
July 3, 1702

Claims of Indian Officers—The Bonus Fund,
Question, Sir Charles Wingfield; Answer,
Mr. Cardwell Feb 17, [214] 543

Indian Officers—Siege of Lucknow, Question,
Major Trench; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff
June 26, [216] 1417

Length of Service of Regiments, Question,
Colonel Barttelot; Answer, Mr. Cardwell
Feb 13, [214] 368; — Limitation of Age,
Question, Mr. W. M. Torrens; Answer, Mr.
Campbell-Bannerman July 11, [217] 209

[See title Army—Length of Service of Regiments in India]

Majors of Artillery, Question, Sir David Wedderburn; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff May 2, [215] 1404

Majors of the Scientific Corps (India), Question, Major Arbuthnot; Answer, Mr. Grant
Duff August 1, [217] 1438

Medical Officers—The Medical Warrant, Question, Sir Thomas Basley; Answer, Mr. Grant
Duff April 1, [215] 399

Regulations for European Officers—Prize,
Question, Colonel Stuart Knox; Answer, Mr.
Grant Duff July 10, [217] 146; Question,
Mr. Vance; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff July 17, 494

INDIA—Army—cont.

Supply of Breech-Loaders, Question, Lord
Eustace Cecil; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff
Mar 24, [215] 12

The 28th Regiment—The Indian Mutiny Medal, Question, Sir Patrick O'Brien; Answer, Mr.
Grant Duff July 7, [216] 1864

Troop Horses, Question, Sir Charles Wingfield;
Answer, Mr. Grant Duff April 4, [215] 603

Burmese Embassy, The, Question, Mr. Eastwick; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff April 24, [215] 904

Civil Services, &c.

Public Works Department—Officers of the Scientific Corps, Question, Major Trench;
Answer, Mr. Grant Duff May 22, [216] 270;
May 23, 354

Scripture Readers—Mr. Sandwell, Question,
Mr. Whalley; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff
July 11, [217] 210

The Forest Department—Competitions, Question, Mr. Raikes; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff
July 8, [217] 35

Deaths by Snake-Bites, Question, Sir John
Hay; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff May 22, [216]
275

Destruction of Life by Wild Beasts, Question,
Observations, Lord Napier and Ettrick;
Reply, The Duke of Argyll June 27, [216]
1485

Education, Question, Mr. Stapleton; Answer,
Mr. Grant Duff April 28, [215] 1024

H.M. Roman Catholic Servants, Question,
Mr. O'Reilly; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff
May 5, [215] 1484

Indian Appeals, Observations, Lord Stanley of Alderley; Reply, The Duke of Argyll June 16, [216] 979

India—Communication with—Railways

Euphrates Valley Railway, Question, Sir
George Jenkinson; Answer, Mr. Gladstone
Feb 13, [214] 868

Amendt. on Committee of Supply April 4,
To leave out from "That," and add "in the opinion of this House, the evidence laid before the Select Committee on the Euphrates Valley Railway last Session demonstrates the great advantages, both politically and commercially, that would accrue to England by the acquisition of an alternative route to and from India, especially in case of any emergency arising, and that this object would be best secured by a Railway which would connect the Mediterranean with the head of the Persian Gulf; and, therefore, the Recommendation of the Select Committee on this subject to Her Majesty's Government is well deserving of their serious attention, with a view to carrying it into effect" (Sir George Jenkinson) v., [215] 606; Question proposed,
"That the words, &c.", after debate, Question put; A. 106, N. 29; M. 74

Railway Communication with, Question, Sir
George Jenkinson; Answer, Mr. Gladstone
June 12, [216] 836

M. de Lesseps' Project of a Central Asian Railway, Question, Mr. Baillie Cochrane; Answer, Viscount Enfield June 6, [216] 546

[cont.]

[cont.]

IND IND { GENERAL INDEX } IND IND
214—215—216—217.

India—Communication with—Railways—cont.

The Peshawur Railway—Break of Gauge,
Amendt. on Committee of Supply Mar 7,
To leave out from "That," and add "it is contrary to Imperial policy to allow a break of gauge in the Railway communication between the important frontier town of Peshawur and the main Railway system of India" (Mr. Laing) v. [214] 1636; Question proposed, "That the words, &c.," after long debate, Amendt. withdrawn

Railway Gauge—The Punjab Lines, Question,
Mr. Laing; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff Feb 13, [214] 372; Question, Sir Charles Wingfield;
Answer, Mr. Grant Duff April 7, [215] 637;
April 28, 1028

India—East India Finance

Select Committee appointed, "to inquire into the Finance and Financial Administration of India" (Mr. Ayrton) Feb 7
And, on Feb 10, Committee nominated as follows:—Mr. Ayrton (Chairman), Sir George Balfour, Mr. Baring, Sir Thomas Bazley, Mr. Beach, Mr. Birley, *Mr.
Bourke*, Mr. Candlish, Mr. Stephen Cave,
Mr. Baillie Cochrane, Mr. Crawford, *Mr.
Cross*, Mr. Charles Dalrymple, *Mr. Beckett-
Denison*, Mr. Dickinson, Mr. Grant Duff, *Mr.
Eastwick*, Sir James Elphinstone, *Mr.
Fawcett*, Lord Edmond Fitzmaurice, *Mr.
Robert Fowler*, Mr. Haviland Burke, *Mr.
Hermon*, Mr. Lyttelton, Mr. McClure, *Sir
Stafford Northcote*, *Mr. John Benjamin
Smith*, Sir David Wedderburn, and Sir Charles Wingfield; Mar 21, Mr. Campbell-Bannerman added

Reports of Select Commn. (Nos. 179, 194, 384)

India—Financial Statement

Moved, "That, in the opinion of this House, it is desirable that the Statement of the Financial Affairs of India should be made at a period of the Session when it can be fully discussed" (Mr. Robert Fowler) April 1, [215] 402

Amendt. to leave out from "That," and add "it be an Instruction to the Select Committee on East India Finance to consider and report whether the Indian Financial year which now terminates on the 31st March, should be altered to the year ending on the 31st December, in order that the Secretary of State for India may be enabled to make his Financial Statement to the House before the Easter Recess" (Sir Charles Wingfield) v.; Question proposed, "That the words, &c.," after debate, Question put; A. 89, N. 130; M. 41; words added; main Question, as amended, put, and agreed to

India—East India Revenue Accounts

East India Finance Committee—Second Report, Questions, Sir Thomas Bazley, *Mr.
Hunt*, Sir Stafford Northcote; Answers, *Mr.
Gladstone May 13*, [215] 1874
Question, Mr. R. N. Fowler; Answer, *Mr.
Gladstone June 9*, [216] 637; July 14, 819;
Observations, Mr. Fawcett July 24, 919;
Moved, "That the House do now adjourn;"

[cont.]

India—East India Revenue Accounts—cont.

after short debate, Motion withdrawn; Question, Mr. Fawcett; Answer, Mr. Goschen
[217] July 31, 1885

Order for Committee read; Moved, "That Mr.
Speaker do now leave the Chair" (*Mr.
Grant Duff*) July 31, 1889; after debate,
Moved, "That the Debate be now adjourned"
(Mr. Fawcett); after further short debate,
Motion withdrawn

Question again proposed; Amendt. to leave out from "That," and add "in the opinion of this House, the present constitution of the Government of India fails to secure an efficient or economical management of its finances, and that this House views with apprehension
the state of local taxation in that Country, and is of opinion that its financial condition must be regarded as unsatisfactory so long as the Income Tax forms its only financial reserve" (Mr. Fawcett) v.; Question proposed,
"That the words, &c.," Debate adjourned

Debate resumed August 1, 1884; after debate,
Moved, "That the Debate be now adjourned"
(Mr. Beckett-Denison); Motion agreed to;
Debate further adjourned

Debate resumed August 2, 1877; after long debate, Amendt. withdrawn; main Question, "That Mr. Speaker, &c.," put, and agreed to; Accounts considered in Committee:—after debate, a Resolution agreed to, 1508

Parl. Papers—
Accounts for 1871-2 . . . . . 203
Home Accounts . . . . . 204
Progress and Condition, 1871-2 . . . . 172
Liabilities on Revenue . . . . . 49
Return of Monies raised . . . . . 48
Reports of Select Committee on Indian
Finance . . . . . 179, 194, 384

India—Officers of the Native Army of India

Amendt. on Committee of Supply July 25, To leave out from "That," and add "an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty, praying Her Majesty to be graciously pleased to appoint a Royal Commission to inquire into the mode in which European Officers are supplied to the Native Army of India, and to the promotion, pay, pensions, and retiring allowances of such officers" (Mr. Bourke) v., [217] 1028; Question proposed, "That the words, &c.," after long debate, Question put,
and agreed to

India—Punjab, &c.—Army Services

Moved for, Return of the services in the field of the army on the Punjab frontier from 1849 to 1863 for which medals were granted;
showing the strength of the forces employed, the name of the officer who commanded, the number of casualties, upon each occasion separately: And for,

Similar Return respecting the Bazooee Expedition of February 1869; and to ask the Secretary of State for India, why the provisions of the Warrant of 1868, granting medals for frontier services, were not extended to the forces of which the last-named expedition was composed (The Marquess of Clanricarde)
July 28, [217] 1083; after short debate,
Motion agreed to

Part. P. 272

IND INT { SESSION 1873 } INT IRE
214—215—216—217.

Indian Railways Registration Bill—}
Formerly
East India (Railway Shares) Bill }
(Mr. Grant Duff, Mr. Ayrton)
c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> * May 21 [Bill 168]
Read 2<sup>o</sup> * May 26
Committee *—n.r. June 12
Committee *; Report June 16
Read 3<sup>o</sup> * June 18
l. Read 1<sup>o</sup> * (Duke of Argyll) June 19 (No. 164)
Read 2<sup>o</sup> * July 10
Committee *; Report July 11
Read 3<sup>o</sup> * July 14
Royal Assent July 21 [36 & 37 Vict. c. 43]

Industrial and Provident Societies Bill
(Mr. Thomas Hughes, Mr. Morrison)
c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> * Feb 11 [Bill 51]
Read 2<sup>o</sup> * Feb 25
Committee [Dropped]

Infanticide Law Amendment Bill
(Mr. Charley, Mr. Gilpin, Mr. Charles Lewis)
c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> * Feb 10 [Bill 42]
Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>, after short debate May 14, [215] 1881
Committee * July 4
Committee *; Report July 15 [Bill 241]
Committee [Dropped]

Infant Life—Rope Spinners
Question, Mr. Charley; Answer, Mr. Bruce Feb 17, [214] 542

Inland Revenue—Income Tax Appeals
Question, Mr. Cadogan; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer Feb 17, [214] 540

Innkeepers Liability Bill
(Mr. Wheelhouse, Mr. Locke)
c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> * Feb 11 [Bill 49]
2R. negatived * June 10

International Exhibition, Vienna, 1873—
The Embassy Chapel
Question, Mr. R. N. Fowler; Answer, Viscount Enfield Feb 10, [214] 199

International Law—Arbitration
Moved, "That a humble Address be presented to Her Majesty, praying that She will be graciously pleased to instruct Her Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs to enter into communication with Foreign Powers with a view to further improvement in International Law and the establishment of a general and permanent system of International Arbitration" (Mr. Henry Richard) July 8, [217] 52; after debate, Previous Question proposed, "That that Question be now put;" A. 88, N. 98; M. 10; main Question put, and agreed to
Division List, Ayes and Noes, 88
Her Majesty's Answer to Address reported July 17, 500

International Law—The New Rules

Amendt. on Committee of Supply Mar 21, to leave out from "That," and add "an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty, praying Her Majesty that, having regard to the oppressive and impracticable character of the obligations, hitherto unknown to International Law, which would be imposed upon neutral nations through the interpretation placed by the Tribunal of Geneva upon the three Rules in the 6th Article of the Treaty of Washington, and upon the principles of International Law with respect to the duties of neutrals in connection with the subject-matter of the said Rules, Her Majesty will be graciously pleased, in bringing these Rules to the knowledge of other maritime Powers and inviting them to accede to the same, to declare to them, and also to the Government of the United States, Her Majesty's dissent from the principles set forth by the Tribunal as the basis of their Award, principles which, by unduly enlarging the rights of belligerent Powers against neutrals, would discourage in the future the observance of neutrality by States desirous of peace" (Mr. Gathorne Hardy) v. [214], 1963; Question proposed, "That the words, &c.;" after long debate, Amendt. withdrawn

International Law—Loans to Charles VII. of Spain, Question, Mr. Stapleton; Answer, The Attorney General Feb 28, [214] 1095
[See title—Treaties of Arbitration]

Intestates Widows and Children Bill [H.L.]
(The Lord Chelmsford)

l. Presented; read 1<sup>o</sup> * Mar 8 (No. 38)
Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>, after short debate Mar 8, [214] 1880
Committee * Mar 7
Report * Mar 10 (No. 39)
Read 3<sup>o</sup> * Mar 13
Commons Amendts. (No. 225)
c. Read 1<sup>o</sup> * April 2 [Bill 114]
Read 2<sup>o</sup> * April 23
Committee *; Report June 30 [Bill 214]
Committee * (on re-comm.); Report July 14
Considered * July 16
Read 3<sup>o</sup> * July 17
l. Royal Assent July 28 [36 & 37 Vict. c. 52]

Investment of Capital in Land

Moved, "That a Select Committee be appointed to inquire into the facilities afforded by the existing law for the investment of capital in the improvement of land, and to report whether any alteration of the law is requisite in order further to encourage such investment" (The Marquess of Salisbury) Mar 28, [215] 294; after short debate, Motion postponed

[See title—Improvement of Land—Limited Owners]

IRELAND

MISCELLANEOUS QUESTIONS

Acts of Supremacy and Uniformity, Question, Mr. J. Martin; Answer, Mr. Gladstone June 12, [216] 839
Amnesty to Political Prisoners, Question, Mr. Butt; Answer, Mr. Gladstone July 25, [217] 997

[cont.]

IRE IRE { GENERAL INDEX } IRE IRE
214—215—216—217.

IRELAND—cont.

Belfast Assizes—Case of Mr. M'Aliese, Question, Sir John Gray ; Answer, Mr. Winterbotham April 7, [215] 650 ; Observations, Sir John Gray ; Reply, The Marquess of Hartington April 25, 1001 P.P. 267

Board of Works (Ireland), Question, Mr. McCarthy Downing ; Answer, Mr. Baxter April 3, [215] 526

Callan Schools—Rev. R. O'Keefe—See title Ireland—National Education Commissioners
Census of Ireland, Question, Sir Frederick W. Heygate ; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington June 5, [216] 514

Charters of Dublin University and Trinity College, Question, Sir Frederick W. Heygate ; Answer, Mr. Gladstone Feb 17, [214] 645

Church Temporalities Commissioners (Ireland)—Purchase of Tithe Rent Charge, Question, Observations, The Earl of Longford ; Reply, The Earl of Kimberley Feb 24, [214] 831 ; Question, The Earl of Leitrim ; Answer, The Marquess of Lansdowne July 22, [217] 752

Civil Service (Ireland)—Reports of the Commissioners, Question, Mr. Plunket ; Answer, Mr. Baxter Feb 7, [214] 154 ; Question, Mr. Plunket ; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer Mar 24, [215] 11 ; Question, The O'Conor Don ; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer Mar 31, 345 ; Question, Mr. McCarthy Downing ; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington April 3, 526 ; Questions, Mr. Plunket ; Answer, Mr. Gladstone July 10, [217] 149

[See title—Ireland—The Irish Civil Servants]

Commander-in-Chief of the Forces in Ireland, Question, Mr. Anderson ; Answer, Sir Henry Stork June 12, [216] 834 ; Question, Mr. Anderson ; Answer, Mr. Cardwell June 26, 1411 ; July 21, [217] 657 ; Questions, Mr. Anderson, Mr. Otway ; Answers, Mr. Cardwell July 31, 1323

Coroners (Ireland), Question, Mr. Vance ; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington May 5, [215] 1490 ;—Coroner for Meath, Question, Mr. J. Martin ; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington July 25, [217] 998

Criminal Law

Refusal of Publicans as Bailiffs, Question, Mr. W. Johnston ; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington May 19, [216] 97

The Convict Montgomery, Question, Colonel North ; Answer, Mr. Winterbotham August 4, [217] 1529

The Holywood Murders—The Inquest, Question, Mr. W. Johnston ; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington Feb 20, [214] 727 ; Feb 25, 896

The Letter-Mullen Coastguard, Question, Mr. Mitchell Henry ; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington Feb 20, [214] 729 ; Question, Observations, Mr. Mitchell Henry ; Reply, The Marquess of Hartington June 26, [216] 1410 ; Question, Mr. Mitchell Henry ; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington July 18, [217] 607

Murders (Ireland)—Return Parl. P. l. 145

[cont.]

IRELAND—cont.

Drainage Acts (Ireland)—See title Ireland—The Shannon Navigation

Dublin College of Science, Question, Mr. Pim ; Answer, Mr. Gladstone Mar 7, [214] 1518
Dublin, Riot in, Question, The Marquess of Claricarde ; Answer, Earl Granville June 9, [216] 617

Dublin University—10 Geo. IV. Chap. 7, Question, Mr. P. J. Smyth ; Answer, The Attorney General April 3, [215] 529

English Records relating to Ireland, Question, Mr. Cogan ; Answer, Mr. Baxter May 19, [216] 101

Fisheries—Reproductive Loan Fund, Question, Mr. H. A. Herbert ; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington Mar 6, [214] 1390 ; Mar 10, 1611 ; Question, Mr. Butt ; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington April 26, [215] 973

Galway Election Trials, Dublin

Question, Mr. O'Conor ; Answer, Mr. Cardwell Feb 11, [214] 281

As to further Proceedings, Question, Mr. Mitchell Henry ; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington Feb 25, [214] 898

Bishop Duggan, &c., Question, Mr. Mitchell Henry ; Answer, The Attorney General Feb 21, [214] 788

Prosecutions Expenses, Question, Colonel French ; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington Feb 21, [214] 787

The Attorney General for Ireland, Question, Colonel Stuart Knox ; Answer, Mr. Gladstone Feb 27, [214] 1040

General Valuation of Ireland—The Dublin and Kingstown Railway, Question, The O'Conor Don ; Answer, Mr. Baxter June 30, [216] 1852 ; Question, Sir Frederick W. Heygate ; Answer, Mr. Gladstone, 1559

Irish Bills—Corporation of Dublin, Question, Mr. Vance ; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington Mar 3, [214] 1182

Irish Church Act (1869)—Clause 25—National Monuments, Question, Mr. Agar-Ellis ; Answer, Mr. Gladstone May 5, [215] 1489 ;—Clause 32 (Purchase of Tithe Rent-Charges), Question, Sir Frederick W. Heygate ; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington June 5, [216] 514

Judicial Bench (Ireland)—Libels upon Mr. Justice Lawson, Question, Viscount Crichton ; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington May 1, [215] 1297

Juries Act (Ireland) 1871, Question, Observations, The Earl of Limerick ; Reply, Lord O'Hagan Mar 6, [214] 1382
Return—P.P. . . . . 278

Report from Select Comm. 283
Juries (Ireland) Act, 1872—Clare Assizes, Question, Mr. Bruen ; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington Feb 27, [214] 1036 ;—Select Committee, Notice, Mr. Bruen ; Question, Viscount Crichton ; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington Mar 21, 1960

Juries Lists—Remuneration of Clerks of Unions, Question, Mr. G. Browne ; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington June 19, [216] 1164

[See title—Juries (Ireland) Act]

[cont.]

IRE IRE { SESSION 1873 } IRE IRE
214—215—216—217.

IRELAND—cont.

Labourers Dwellings (Ireland), Question, Sir Frederick W. Heygate; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington Feb 17, [214] 540; June 16, [216] 990; Question, Mr. Bruen; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington July 3, 1705; Question, Sir Frederick W. Heygate; Answer, Mr. Bruce July 31, [217] 1328

Landed Estates Court—The Vacant Judgeship, Question, Mr. Osborne; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington Feb 11, [214] 282; Question, Sir Hervey Bruce; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington Feb 18, 374; Question, Mr. McCarthy Downing; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington Feb 20, 729;—Registration of Improvements, Questions, The Earl of Leitrim, The Earl of Longford; Answers, The Marquess of Lansdowne Feb 17, 538

Landed Estates Court (Ireland) Bill, Question, Colonel Stuart Knox; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington July 14, [217] 320

Landlord and Tenant (Ireland) Act, 1870
Motion for Returns (The Earl of Leitrim) Feb 14, [214] 431; Motion amended, and agreed to (Parl. P. No. 108)
Motions for Papers and Returns (The Earl of Leitrim) July 22, [217] 751; Motions agreed to Chairmen of Counties, Question, Mr. Vance; Answer, Mr. Baxter July 17, [217] 498
Clerks of the Peace, Question, Major Trench; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington July 18, [217] 605
Contracts—The 12th Clause, Question, Mr. M'Mahon; Answer, Mr. Gladstone Feb 24, [214] 834

Law of Rating, Question, Mr. McCarthy Downing; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington Feb 20, [214] 729

Licensing Act in Ireland, Question, Mr. Cogan; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington May 16, [216] 15

Lunatic Asylum Boards (Ireland), Question, Sir Dominic Corrigan; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington July 10, [217] 145

National Education—Teachers in Irish Workhouse Schools, Question, Mr. Pim; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington July 29, [217] 1177

Peace Preservation (Ireland) Act, Question, Mr. Callan; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington July 24, [217] 916

Poor Law Elections (Ireland)—Forged Voting Papers, Question, Mr. Bruen; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington June 30, [216] 1558

Prison Discipline, Question, Mr. Pim; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington May 23, [216] 356

Queen's Colleges (Ireland)—Grand Jury Laws (Ireland), Questions, The O'Conor Don; Answers, The Marquess of Hartington Feb 10, [214] 198

Railways—Valuation of Lines, Question, The O'Conor Don; Answer, Mr. Baxter June 24, [216] 1309;—Loans to Railway Companies, Question, Mr. M'Clure; Answer, Mr. Gladstone June 30, 1551

[See title Irish Railways—Purchase by the State]

IRELAND—cont.

Redistribution of Seats (Ireland), Question, Mr. Pim; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington Feb 10, [214] 195

Royal Irish Constabulary, Question, Mr. Kavanaugh; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington July 21, [217] 661; Question, Sir Frederick W. Heygate; Answer, Mr. Bruce July 31, 1327

Sanitary Statutes (Ireland), Question, Mr. Bruen; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington July 7, [216] 1862

The Magistracy (Ireland)

Frankford Bench of Magistrates, Question, Sir Patrick O'Brien; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington July 28, [217] 1085

Galway Magistracy—Case of Mr. Dickson, Question, Colonel Cole; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington Mar 24, [215] 15

Louth, The County of, Question, Mr. Callan; Answer, Mr. Gladstone July 30, [217] 1254; Question, Mr. Callan; Answer, Mr. Bruce August 1, 1429

Revision of List of Magistracy, Question, Mr. Callan; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington July 24, [217] 904

[See titles—Ireland—Dundalk Magistracy

Ireland—Counties

Skipendiary Magistrates, Question, Lord Claud John Hamilton; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington May 26, [216] 430; July 17, [217] 496

Valuation Department (Ireland)—See that title

Ireland—Constabulary—Sub-Constable John Howe

Moved for, Copy of the report made by sub-constable John Howe, dated Ballycumber, the 26th of March 1873, or thereabouts, relative to the alleged cruelty to a horse near Ballycumber in the King's County, Ireland: [and other Papers] (The Earl of Leitrim) July 22, [217] 752; on Question, resolved in the negative

Ireland—Counties (Lords Lieutenant and Magistrates)

Moved, "That there be laid before the House, a Return, as per annexed form, as to each County in Ireland stating the name of Lieutenant and date of his appointment as such; names of the local Magistracy with dates of appointment, distinguishing resident from non-resident, and amount of property for which each Magistrate appears rated for the relief of the poor as Occupier and as immediate Lessor, and stating whether usually resident or non-resident in County, in a tabular form" (Mr. Callan) August 5, [217] 1566; after short debate, Motion negatived

Ireland—Crime in Ireland

Moved that there be laid before this House, Police Returns of all Crime in Ireland, showing where perpetrators have not been discovered and where they have been prosecuted and convicted, since the 1st of January 1872: Any remarks of Judges at the last Spring

[cont.]

[cont.]

IRE IRE { GENERAL INDEX } IRE IRE
214—215—216—217.

Ireland—Crime in Ireland—cont.

Assizes and of Assistant Barristers at Quarter Sessions since the new Jury Bill came into force as to the competency of Jurors (The Lord Oranmore and Browne) May 16, [216] 7; after short debate, Motion withdrawn

Ireland—Dundalk Magistracy

Moved, "That there be laid before this House, a Copy of Correspondence, and all Documents connected therewith, between the Lord Chancellor of Ireland, his Lordship's Secretaries, and Mr. Callan, M.P., and E. H. McArdle, esquire, between the 23rd day of December 1868 and the 31st day of July 1869, with respect to the filling up of a vacancy on the Dundalk Bench of Magistrates, by the appointment of the Chairman of the Town Commissioners thereto" (Mr. Callan) August 5, [217] 1584; after short debate, Motion withdrawn

Ireland—Galway Election Petition—Trial of Election Petitions

Amendt. on Committee of Supply April 25, To leave out from "That," and add "in the opinion of this House, the present system of trying Election Petitions is unsatisfactory and requires alteration" (Mr. O'Conor) v., [215] 677; Question proposed, "That the words, &c." after short debate, Question put, and agreed to

Ireland—Land Improvement Acts—Loans

Motion for, Return of the total amount of all loans under the Land Improvement Acts sanctioned by the Board of Public Works in Ireland since 1st January, 1871; to be made in the following form [Tabular Form] (Earl of Belmore) Feb 7, [214] 144; after short debate, Motion agreed to (Parl. P. No. 30)

Ireland—National Education Commissioners—The Callan Schools—Dismissal of Rev. Robert O'Keeffe

215] Question, The Marquess of Hartington; Answer, Mr. Bouvierie April 29, 1140; Question, Mr. Bouvierie; Answer, Mr. Gladstone May 9, 1720; Question, Colonel Taylor; Answer, Mr. Gladstone May 9, 1770
Moved, "That a Select Committee be appointed to inquire into and report to the House the circumstances of the dismissal by the Commissioners of National Education in Ireland, of the Reverend Robert O'Keeffe from the office of Manager of the Callan Male, Female, and Infant National Schools, and the Newtown and Coolagh National Schools, by their Order the 23rd day of April 1872, and of the removal of the said Schools from the Roll of National Schools by their Order the 7th day of January 1873" (The Marquess of Hartington) May 15, 2023

Amendt. to leave out from "That," and add "this House, having partly already before it, and having partly ordered to be laid before it, Copies of all Minutes and Proceedings, and of all Correspondence of the Board of

Ireland—National Education Commissioners—cont.

National Education in Ireland, relating to the Schools at Callan or to the Reverend Robert O'Keeffe, do pass to the Orders of the Day" (Mr. Bouvierie) v.;—After long debate, Question put, "That the words, &c." A. 159, N. 131; M. 28; main Question put, and agreed to; Select Committee appointed

216] Questions, Colonel Stuart Knox, Mr. Spencer Walpole; Answers, The Marquess of Hartington, Mr. Bouvierie May 19, 101

Nomination of the Select Committee, On Motion of The Marquess of Hartington, Mr. Secretary Cardwell (Chairman), Mr. Gathorne Hardy, Mr. Whitbread, Mr. Bourke, and The O'Conor Don nominated Members of the said Committee May 22, 319

Moved, "That Dr. Lyon Playfair be one other Member of the said Committee" (Mr. Vernon Harcourt); after short debate, Question put; A. 200, N. 182; M. 18

Moved, "That Mr. Cross be one other Member of the said Committee" (Mr. Vernon Harcourt); Question put; A. 205, N. 165; M. 40

Moved, "That the Select Committee have power to send for persons, papers, and records;" Moved, "That the Debate be now adjourned" (Sir Patrick O'Brien); after further short debate, Motion withdrawn; original Question put, and agreed to

Question, Mr. Bouvierie; Answer, Mr. Gladstone July 3, 1711

217] Notice of Motion [July 4] withdrawn, Question, Observations, Mr. Bouvierie; Reply, Mr. Gladstone July 11, 210; Question, Mr. Agar-Ellis; Answer, Mr. Gladstone August 2, 1473

Parl. Papers—

Return respecting . . . . (1) No. 144

Report of Select Comm. . . . No. 255

Correspondence with Plans . . . 85, 196

Memorial of Education Board . . . 222

Ireland—The Irish Civil Servants

Amendt. on Committee of Supply July 4, To leave out from "That," and add "the Civil Service (in Ireland) Commissioners" having reported that the dissatisfaction on the ground of 'the general inadequacy of the present scale of salaries, having regard to the great increase which has taken place in latter years in the cost of living,' is well founded; and that 'there is no reason, based on local considerations, for giving salaries to Civil Servants stationed in Dublin less in amount than those assigned to persons in London performing analogous duties,' this House is of opinion that such general inadequacy of the present scale of salaries of the Civil Servants serving in Ireland should as soon as possible be redressed, and that they should be placed upon an equality as to remuneration with those performing duties in England corresponding in difficulty and responsibility" (Mr. Plunket) v., [216] 1805; Question proposed, "That the words, &c." after debate, Question put; A. 117, N. 130; M. 18; words added; main Question, as amended, put, and agreed to

Division List, Ayes and Noes, 1829

IRE JAC { SESSION 1873 } JAM JOH
214-215-216-217.

Ireland—The Shannon Navigation

Question, The O'Conor Don; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer Feb 18, [214] 368

Amendt. on Committee of Supply Mar 7, to leave out from "That," and add "the evils brought upon a large portion of Ireland by the periodical floods of the Shannon and her tributaries are attributable to the state of the navigation works, and to the neglect of the recommendations of the Commissioners appointed under the Act 5 and 6 Will. 4, c. 67; and that the navigation works, which are the property of the Government, and under their exclusive control, are far behind the present state of engineering science, and admit of great improvement at a comparatively moderate cost; and that it is reasonable and right that, whilst amply maintaining the means of public navigation, measures should be forthwith adopted to relieve a district of many hundreds of miles of the vast and unnecessary suffering inflicted upon it by the useless impounding of the waters of the River Shannon" (Mr. Mitchell Henry) v., 1569; Question proposed, "That the words, &c.;" after debate, Amendt. withdrawn

Drainage of Land (Ireland) Act. 1863—Rivers Suck and Shannon, Question, Major Trench; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer June 27, [216] 1498; June 30, 1559; July 10, [217] 154; Questions, Major Trench; Answers, Mr. Gladstone August 1, 1433; August 4, 1528

The River Shannon—Legislation, Questions, Major Trench; Answers, The Chancellor of the Exchequer Mar 31, [215] 348

Returns relating to . . . . P.P. 121

Irish Railways—Purchase by the State

Question, Mr. Goldsmid; Answer, Lord Claud Hamilton April 25, [215] 976

Moved, "That this House, whilst expressing no opinion on the subject of State ownership or State management of Railways in other parts of the Empire, is of opinion that it is desirable (having regard to the universally expressed wishes and wants of the Irish people) that the Railways in Ireland should be acquired on equitable terms by the State, with a view to their management being conducted in the interests of the public: this measure to be carried out in such a way as not to involve any loss to the finances of the Empire" (Lord Claud Hamilton) April 29, 1141

Amendt. to leave out from "That," and add "the purchase of the Irish Railways by the State would be financially inexpedient, would unduly enlarge the patronage of the Government, and seriously increase the pressure of business in Parliament" (Mr. Goldsmid) v.; Question proposed, "That the words, &c.;" after long debate, Amendt. withdrawn; main Question put; A. 65, N. 197; M. 182

JACKSON, Mr. R. Ward, Hartlepool Harbours of Refuge, Motion for a Committee, [215] 1426

JAMES, Mr. H., Taunton

Board of Education (Ireland)—O'Keeffe, Rev. Mr., Nomination of Committee, [216] 327

County Court Judges—Minute of June, 1872, Res. [214] 1289, 1290, 1292, 1298, 1299

Crown Private Estates, 2R. [217] 715

Juries, 2R. [214] 559; Comm. cl. 1, [215] 2072; cl. 5, [216] 524, 526; cl. 29, 531; cl. 43, 533; cl. 52, 1517

Masters and Servants—Law of Contract, Res. [216] 607

Parliamentary Elections Expenses, 2R. [216] 1129

Register for Parliamentary and Municipal Electors, 2R. [214] 1952; Comm. cl. 5, [215] 980; cl. 9, 981; cl. 32, Amendt. [216] 413

216] Supreme Court of Judicature, 2R. 673; Comm. cl. 5, 1602; cl. 8, 1744, 1745, 1746; cl. 22, 1800; cl. 29, 1879, 1883; cl. 31, 1885, 1888, 1889

217] cl. 50, 47; cl. 54, 177, 179, 180; cl. 74, 189; cl. 75, 219; cl. 31, 226, 228; add. cl. 342; Schedule, Sec. 30, Amendt. 344; Consid. cl. 55, 683

JENKINSON, Sir G. S., Wiltshire, N.
Army Regulation Bill—Half-Pay Officers, [214] 1614

Belgium—Army Re-organization, [217] 804

Criminal Law—Capital Offences, [214] 371 Chipping Norton Magistrates, [216] 1784, 1786

Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment, Re-comm. cl. 23, [217] 798, 799

India, Railway Communication with, [216] 836, 837

India—Euphrates Valley Railway, [214] 368; Res. [215] 606, 616

Infanticide Law Amendment, 2R. [215] 1987

Malt Tax, [214] 1946

Parliament—Address in Answer to the Speech, Report, [214] 161

Rating (Liability and Value), 2R. [216] 318; Comm. cl. 3, Amendt. 912, 923, 926, 1015, 1020, 1029; cl. 13, Amendt. 1238; 3R. [217] 686

Supply—Alabama Claims, [216] 411

Turnpike Acts Continuance, &c. Comm. [216] 1767

Ways and Means—Financial Statement, Comm. [215] 681; Report, 919, 1334

JERVIS, Colonel H. J. W., Harwich

India—Offering of the Indian Army, Motion for an Address, [217] 1057

JESSEL, Sir G., see SOLICITOR GENERAL, The

JOHNSTON, Mr. A., Essex, S.

Bosnia—Moslem Fanaticism, Alleged Outbreak of, [216] 1786

Endowed Schools Act (1869) Amendment, Comm. add. cl. [217] 955

Endowed Schools Commissioners—Emanuel Hospital Scheme, Motion for an Address, [215] 1920, 1925

Metropolis—Parliament Street, [217] 495, 496

[cont.]

JOH JUR { GENERAL INDEX } JUR JUR
214—215—216—217.

JOHNSTON, Mr. A.—cont.

Rating (Liability and Value)—Valuation—Consolidated Rate, Leave, [215] 1517
Supply—Education, England and Wales, [216] 1459
Weights and Measures Acts, Res. [216] 1090

JOHNSTON, Mr. W., Belfast

Army—Mutiny, [214] 1033
Colonies, The, Motion for a Committee, [214] 1109
Ireland—Inquest at Holywood, [214] 727, 896
Licensing (Ireland)—Bailsmen, [216] 97
University Education (Ireland), 2R. Amendt. [214] 1447

JOHNSTONE, Sir H., Scarborough

Harbours of Refuge, Motion for a Committee, [215] 1421
Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 16, [216] 1427

JONES, Mr. J., Carmarthenshire

Post Office—Telegraph Department—Carmarthen District, [215] 1557

Judicial Peerages

Moved, "That an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty; praying that for the advantage of this House and of the suitors thereto, and for the honour of the legal profession, Her Majesty will be pleased to sanction the erection of the offices of Lord High Chancellor, Lord Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench, Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, and Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer of England into Baronies which shall entitle the holders of those offices to writs of summons to Parliament by tenure thereof under such titles as Her Majesty shall in each case be pleased to summon them; and that such writs of summons as aforesaid shall make the persons receiving the same, although they may not continue to hold the said offices, Peers of Parliament for life, without remainder to the heirs of their bodies; and that in the event of Her Majesty being pleased at any time after such writ shall have been issued to create the person sitting under the same a baron by patent under the same title, with remainder to the heirs male of his body, the barony so created may, if Her Majesty shall be so pleased, take precedence from the date of the first writ of summons directed to such person" (The Lord Redesdale) July 4, [216] 1758; Previous Question moved (The Lord Cairns); after debate, a Question being stated thereupon, the Previous Question was put, "Whether the said Question shall be now put?" resolved in the negative

Juries Bill

(Mr. Attorney General, Mr. Solicitor General)

c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> Feb 10 [Bill 35]
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2<sup>o</sup>" Feb 17, [214] 547
Moved, "That the Debate be now adjourned" (Mr. Staveley Hill); after short debate, Motion withdrawn; original Question put; Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>

Juries Bill—cont.

Committee*—R.P. Mar 20
Committee—R.P. May 15, [215] 207
Committee—R.P. June 5, [216] 515
Committee—R.P. June 27, 1505
Committee July 17, [217] 590
Moved, "That the Chairman do report Progress, and ask leave to sit again" (Mr. Cross); after short debate, Question put; A. 78, N. 126; M. 48 Moved, "That the Chairman do now leave the Chair" (Mr. F. S. Powell); after further short debate, Motion withdrawn
Committee R.P.
Bill withdrawn* July 28

Juries (Ireland) Act

Questions, Mr. Vance, Lord Claud John Hamilton; Answers, The Marquess of Hartington Mar 24, [215] 9
Amendt. on Committee of Supply Mar 28, To leave out from "That," and add "a Select Committee be appointed to inquire into the operation of the Act 34 and 35 Vic. c. 65, Juries (Ireland) Act, and whether it is necessary to amend the same in order to secure the due administration of justice" (Mr. Bruen) v. [215] 315; Question proposed, "That the words, &c.;" after short debate, Amendt. withdrawn

Select Committee appointed, "to inquire and report on the working of the Irish Jury system before and since the passing of the Act 34 and 35 Vic. c. 65; and, whether any and what amendments in the Law are necessary to secure the due administration of justice" (Mr. Bruen) Mar 31

And, on April 2, Committee nominated as follows:—Marquess of Hartington (Chairman), Mr. Attorney General, Dr. Ball, Sir Rowland Blennerhassett, Mr. Bourke, Mr. Bruen, Viscount Crichton, Mr. Downing, Mr. Heron, Mr. Charles Lewis, The O'Conor Don, The O'Donoghue, Major O'Reilly, Colonel Wilson Patten, and Colonel Vandeleur; April 29, Colonel Forde added, Lord Claud Hamilton disch.; May 5, Mr. Henry Herbert added, Mr. M'Mahon disch.

Nomination of the Committee, Question, Mr. Callan; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington April 4, [215] 804

Parl. Papers—

|                          |     |
|--------------------------|-----|
| First Report . . . . .   | 210 |
| Special Report . . . . . | 252 |
| Second Report . . . . .  | 283 |

Juries (Ireland) Bill (The Marquess of Hartington, Mr. Secretary Bruce)

c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> May 16 [Bill 166]
Precedence of Motions, Question, Mr. Bruen; Answer, Mr. W. H. Smith Mar 25, [215] 111
Bill read 2<sup>o</sup> May 26, [216] 483
Order for Committee read; Moved, "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair" May 27; Debate adjourned
Committee*; Report June 5
Considered* June 6
Read 8<sup>o</sup> June 9
l. Read 1<sup>o</sup>* (M. of Lansdowne) June 10 (No. 150)
Read 2<sup>o</sup>*; Committee negatived June 12
Read 3<sup>o</sup> June 13, 906
Royal Assent June 16 [36 Vict. c. 27]

[cont.]

JUR KIM { SESSION 1873 } KIN KNI
 214-215-216-217.

Jury List Allowances—Magistrates' Clerks
 Question, Colonel Brise; Answer, Mr. Stansfeld April 3, [215] 530

KAVANAGH, Mr. A. M., Carlow Co.
 General Valuation (Ireland), 2R. [215] 1537 ;
 Comm. Amendt. [216] 1330
 Ireland—Royal Irish Constabulary, [217] 861
 Mercantile Marine—Unseaworthy Ships, [215]
 102
 Union Rating (Ireland), 2R. [214] 755
 Ways and Means, Report, [215] 1072

KAY-SHUTTLEWORTH, Mr. U. J., Hastings
 Education—Revised Code—Teachers for Elementary Schools, [217] 912
 Elementary Education Act, 1870, [214] 1287

KENNAWAY, Sir J. H., Devonshire, E.
 Elementary Education Act—London School
 Rate, [216] 169
 Household Franchise (Counties), 2R. [217] 827
 Newfoundland — Telegraphic Communication,
 [217] 898

KILDARE, Marquess of
 Government of Ireland, 1R. [216] 638

KIMBERLEY, Earl of (Secretary of State for the Colonies)
 Africa—West Coast Settlements—Ashantee
 Invasion, [214] 1516, 1618 ; [215] 1393, 1396 ;
 [216] 164, 167 ; [217] 139, 140, 267
 Agricultural Children, 2R. [216] 718 ; Comm.
 cl. 4, 1153
 Army—Military Depôt at Oxford, Address for Correspondence, [216] 1494
 Australian Colonies (Customs Duties), 2R.
 [215] 1998, 2010 ; Comm. cl. 2, [216] 156
 Bastardy Laws Amendment, Commons Amendments.
 [215] 600
 Canada Loan (Guarantee), 2R. [217] 4
 Children's Employment in Dangerous Performances, 2R. [216] 1243
 Church Temporalities Commissioners (Ireland)
 —Purchase of Rent Charge, [214] 832
 Colonial Church, 2R. [216] 192
 Conspiracy Law Amendment, 2R. [217] 1319 ;
 Comm. 1422
 Expiring Laws Continuance, 2R. [217] 1427
 Government of Ireland, 1R. [216] 627 ; 2R.
 1532, 1533
 Land Improvement Acts (Ireland), Motion for a Return, [214] 144
 Landlord and Tenant (Ireland) Act, 1870, Motion for Returns, [214] 434
 Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister, 2R.
 [214] 1906
 Metropolis—Parliament Street, [217] 1428
 Parliament—Address in Answer to the Speech,
 [214] 51
 Rating (Liability and Value), 2R. [217] 973
 South Sea Islands—Outrages on the Natives,
 Address for Papers, [214] 187, 192 ; [216]
 428, 1697
 Turks and Caicos Islands, Comm. [214] 430

KINGSCOTE, Colonel R. N. F., Gloucestershire, W.

Army—Cavalry Force, Res. [216] 584
 Turnpike Acts Continuance, Comm. [217] 193

KINNAIRD, Hon. A. F., Perth
 East India (Financial Statement), Res. [215]
 412, 415
 Election of Representative Peers (Scotland and Ireland), [215] 315
 Fiji, Protectorate of, Res. [216] 957, 958
 Navy Estimates—Admiralty Office, [216] 107
 South Africa, [214] 799
 Supply—Consular Establishments Abroad, &c., [217] 1109
 Dover Harbour, [217] 1282
 Post Office Services, [217] 1114
 Secret Services, [215] 1023

KINTORE, Earl of Rock of Cashel, [216] 424

KNATCHBULL-HUGESSEN, Right Hon. E.
 H. (Under Secretary of State for the Colonies), Sandwich
 Africa, South, [214] 793, 800
 Africa (West Coast)—Lagos, [215] 972
 Africa—West Coast Settlements—Ashantee
 Invasion, [215] 970, 1560, 1719 ; [217] 309 ;
 —Gambia—British Settlements on the, [214]
 732, 897

Canada, Dominion of—Fisheries, [215] 2018
 Manitoba, 1140

Canada Loan Guarantee, 2R. [216] 1813

Ceylon—Breakwater at Colombo, [214] 733

China—Chinese Coolie Trade, [216] 724

Church of England—West Indies Clergy Act—

Bishop of Kingston, [217] 1831

Colonies, Parliamentary Reporting in the,
 [217] 1091

Colonies, Defence of the, Res. [214] 1526

Colonies, The, Motion for a Committee, [214]
 1116

Coolie Prosecutions, [214] 727

Criminal Law—New South Wales—Commutation of Sentences, [214] 197

Fiji Islands, [214] 844

Heligoland, Gambling Houses at, [215] 1871

Mauritius—Bishop, Appointment of, [216] 432

Ecclesiastical Establishments, [216] 999 ;

[217] 658, 659

Inspectors General of Police, [216] 98

Newfoundland—Telegraphic Communication,
 [217] 899

Parliament—Address in Answer to the Speech,
 Report, [214] 168

Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 3,
 [216] 1018

South Sea Islands—Outrages on Natives, [214]
 893

Spain—"Lark," Sloop, The, [215] 2023

Supply—Emigration, [215] 1814

Governors, &c., Colonies, [215] 1809

Windward Islands—Ecclesiastical Policy, Res.
 [217] 433, 439

Women's Disabilities, 2R. [215] 1252

KNIGHT, Mr. F. W., Worcestershire, W.
 Public Health, Comm. Motion for Adjournment,
 [217] 94

KNI LAB { GENERAL INDEX } LAI LAN
214-215-216-217.

- KNIGHTLEY, Sir R., Northamptonshire, S.
 Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment,
 Re-comm. cl. 3, [217] 784
 Landlord and Tenant, 2R. [216] 1847
 Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. [216] 738
- KNOX, Hon. Colonel W. Stuart, Dunganon
 Army—Militia, Subalterns of, [216] 1170
 Recruits—Inaccurate Returns, [216] 1415
 Sandhurst College—Direct Commissions,
 [215] 1025, 1028, 1027
 Army—Length of Service (India), Res. [214]
 853
 Army Estimates—Land Forces, [214] 1134,
 1153, 1154
 Pay and Allowances, [214] 1155
 Provisions, Forage, &c. [216] 1262
 Board of Education (Ireland)—O'Keeffe, Rev.
 Mr., Motion for a Committee, [215] 2027,
 2051, 2054; [216] 101
 Borough Franchise (Ireland), 2R. Amendt.
 [216] 268
 Geneva Arbitration—Presentation to the Arbitrators, [216] 501 India—European Officers, Regulations for—
 Prize, [217] 146
 Ireland—Galway Election Prosecutions, [214]
 1040
 Juries (Ireland) Act, Motion for a Committee,
 [215] 330
 Landed Estates Court (Ireland), [217] 320
 Navy Estimates—Admiralty Office, [216] 105
 Parliament—Forms and Usages of the House,
 [216] 276
 Public Business, [216] 1250, 1860
 Post Office—Religious Periodicals, Registration of, [215] 1786, 1787
 Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 3,
 Motion for reporting Progress, [216] 927
 Sale of Liquors on Sunday (Ireland), 2R. [217]
 119
 Supply—Convict Establishments, [217] 1136
 Metropolitan Police of Dublin, [217] 1142
 University Education (Ireland), Select Committee, [214] 1396
- Labourers Cottages Bill
 (Mr. Whitwell, Mr. Wren-Haskyns)
 c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> Feb 13 [Bill 58]
 2R. [Dropped]
- Labourers Cottages (Scotland) Bill
 (Mr. Fordyce, Mr. McCombie, Mr. Barclay, Sir George Balfour, Mr. Parker)
 c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> Feb 26 [Bill 89]
 Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2<sup>o</sup>"
 June 18, [216] 1135
 Amendt. to leave out "now," and add "upon this day three months" (Sir James Elphinstone); Question proposed, "That 'now,' &c.;" after debate, Debate adjourned
 Debate resumed July 16, [217] 484; after long debate, Question put; A. 74, N. 78; M. 4; words added; main Question, as amended, put, and agreed to; Bill put off for three months
- LAING, Mr. S., Orkney, &c.
 Currency—Bank Act, Res. [215] 156
 India—Peshawar Railway, The, [214] 372
 India—Officering of the Indian Army, Motion for an Address, [217] 1054
 India—Railway Gauge, Res. [214] 1535, 1569
 International Law—New Rules, Motion for an Address, [214] 2017
 Ireland—Irish Railways, Purchase of, Res. [215] 1185
 Parliament—Address in Answer to the Speech, Report, [214] 162
 Post Office—Telegraph Extension to Orkney and Shetland, [214] 371
 Public Expenditure, Res. [214] 657
 Railway and Canal Traffic, Comm. cl. 10; [215] 380, 382; Lords Amendts. [216] 1808
 Taxes on Locomotion, Res. [215] 433, 450
 Ways and Means—Financial Statement, Comm. [215] 702, 945
- LAIRD, Mr. J., Birkenhead
 Navy Estimates—Naval Stores, [216] 447
 Parliament—Address in Answer to the Speech, [214] 98
- Lancaster and Ulverston Banks
 Question, Mr. Stanley; Answer, Mr. Childers May 1, [215] 1293
- LANCASTER, Mr. J., Wigan
 Railway and Canal Traffic, Comm. cl. 10, Amendt. [215] 377; cl. 11, 383, 385; cl. 12, Amendt. 386
- Land Drainage Provisional Order Bill
 (Mr. Winterbotham, Mr. Secretary Bruce)
 c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> Mar 21 [Bill 97]
 Read 2<sup>o</sup> Mar 24
 Committee*; Report April 7
 Read 3<sup>o</sup> April 21
 2. Read 1<sup>o</sup> (Earl of Morley) April 22
 Read 2<sup>o</sup> May 6 (No. 70)
 Committee*; Report May 8
 Read 3<sup>o</sup> May 9
 Royal Assent May 15 [36 Vict. c. xxiv]
- Landed Estates Court (Ireland) (Judges) Bill
 (The Marquess of Hartington, Mr. Baxter)
 c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> June 5 [Bill 182]
 Bill withdrawn, after short debate July 24, [217] 955
- Landlord and Tenant Bill
 (Mr. James Howard, Mr. Clare Read)
 c. Ordered* Feb 11
 Read 1<sup>o</sup> Feb 18 [Bill 58]
 Question, Lord Echo; Answer, Mr. J. Howard Mar 11, [214] 1740; Observations, Question, Lord Echo; Reply, Mr. Clare Read April 7, [215] 644
 After short debate, Order for 2R. discharged; Bill withdrawn July 2, [216] 1644

LAN LAN { SESSION 1873 } LAN LAU
 214—215—216—217.

Landlord and Tenant (Ireland) Act (1870)
Amendment Bill [H.L.]
(The Earl of Leitrim)

i. Presented; read 1<sup>o</sup> Feb 14 (No. 15)

Landlord and Tenant (Ireland) Act (1870)
Amendment Bill

(Mr. Heron, Mr. John Bright, Mr. Pim)
 c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> May 19 [Bill 187]
 2R. [Dropped]

Landlord and Tenant (Ireland) Act (1870)
Amendment (No. 2) Bill

(Mr. Butt, Mr. P. J. Smyth)
 c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> July 29 [Bill 271]
 2R. [Dropped]

Land Rights and Conveyancing (Scotland)
Bill (Mr. Gordon, Mr. Charles Dalrymple, Sir Graham Montgomery)

c. Ordered * Mar 31
 Read 1<sup>o</sup> April 1 [Bill 112]
 Bill withdrawn * July 9

Land Settlement Bill

(Mr. Wren-Hoskyns, Mr. M'Lagan)
 c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> Feb 25 [Bill 80]
 Bill withdrawn * July 21

Land Titles and Transfer Bill [H.L.]

(The Lord Chancellor)
 i. Presented; read 1<sup>o</sup>, after short debate April 29, [215] 1116 (No. 85)
 Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>, after short debate May 23, [216] 341

Langbaugh Coroners Bill

(Mr. Secretary Bruce, Mr. Winterbotham)
 c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> July 15 [Bill 242]
 Read 2<sup>o</sup> July 22
 Committee * Report July 24
 Read 3<sup>o</sup> July 25
 l. Read 1<sup>o</sup> (Earl of Morley) July 28 (No. 248)
 Read 2<sup>o</sup> July 29
 Committee * July 31
 Report * August 1
 Read 3<sup>o</sup> August 2
 Royal Assent August 5 [36 & 37 Vict. c. 81]

LANSDOWNE, Marquess of (Under-Secretary of State for the War Department)

Army—Questions, &c.
 Artillery—Foreign breech-loading guns, [215] 967, 968
 Candidates for Commissions, [216] 1218, 1219
 Commissions in the, [214] 1181
 Education of Officers, [216] 1835, 1838

LANSDOWNE, Marquess of—cont.

Half-Pay Officers, [216] 1241
 Recruiting, [216] 1615, 1616, 1619
 Army—"Boxer-Shrapnel" Shell, Motion for Correspondence, [217] 969
 Army—Control Department, Motion for Papers, [216] 1221, 1223
 Army—Medical Officers of the Army—Royal Warrant, Motion for an Address, [217] 893
 Army—Medical Officers Service in Africa, Motion for an Address, [216] 830
 Army—Military Depot at Oxford, Address for Correspondence, [216] 1491, 1494
 Army—Militia Reserve—Annual Bounty, [216] 986, 987; Motion for an Address, 1845
 Army, Officers of the—Abolition of Purchase, Motion for Papers, [216] 1225, 1226; Address for a Royal Commission, [217] 630
 Army—Recruits, Motion for Returns, [214] 1609, 1610
 Constabulary (Ireland)—Sub-Constable John Howe, Motion for Papers, [217] 753
 Ireland—Irish Church Temporalities Commission, [217] 752
 Irish Militia, [217] 970, 971
 Ireland—Crime in, Motion for Returns, [216] 7
 Juries (Ireland), 2R. [216] 906
 Landed Estates Court—Registration of Improvements, [214] 536, 537
 Local Government Board (Ireland), 2R. [216] 907
 Marriages (Ireland) Legalization, 2R. [216] 1550
 Militia (Service, &c.), 2R. [217] 390, 392
 Mutiny, Comm. [215] 722, 723, 724
 Peace Preservation (Ireland) Acts Continuance, 2R. [216] 381, 341
 Portpatrick Harbour, 2R. [215] 969; Comm. 1023
 Royal Military Academy, Woolwich—Examinations, [216] 1840
 Shah of Persia—Review at Windsor, [216] 1151

LAUDERDALE, Earl of

Africa—West Coast Settlements—Ashantee Invasion, [214] 1515, 1518; [215] 1392; [216] 164, 167; [217] 140, 268
 Alderney (Harbour and Fortifications), [217] 965, 968
 Army—Artillery—Foreign breech-loading guns, [215] 201
 Improvement of Land, Motion for a Committee, [215] 516
 Mercantile Marine—Royal Commission, [215] 94, 99
 Navy—H.M.S. "Devastation," [214] 830; [215] 332, 341; [216] 427
 Pebble Powder—Review at Portsmouth, [217] 142
 North America—Alaska Boundary—San Juan Water Boundary, [214] 278; [216] 1157
 Pollution of Rivers, 2R. [216] 5
 South Sea Islands—Outrages on the Natives, Address for Papers, [214] 192
 Spain, Extradition Treaty with—"Northfleet" and "Murillo," [214] 148
 Treaties of Arbitration, Motion for an Address, [214] 1177

[cont.]

LAW    LAW { GENERAL INDEX }    LAW    LAW
214—215—216—217.

Law Agents (Scotland) Bill
(The Lord Advocate, Mr. Adam)

- c. Ordered * April 30
- Read 1<sup>o</sup> * May 5                                  [Bill 150]
- Read 2<sup>o</sup> * May 12
- 216] Committee—p.r. June 5, 541
- . Committee; Report June 6, 610 [Bill 184]
- Considered * June 16
- Read 3<sup>o</sup> June 17
- l. Read 1<sup>o</sup> * (Lord Chancellor) June 18 (No. 163)
- . Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>, after short debate July 4, 1780
- 217] Committee July 11, 203                          (No. 207)
- . Report July 15, 387                                  (No. 213)
- Read 3<sup>o</sup> July 17
- . c. Lords Amendts. considered July 24, 963                          [Bill 264]

After short debate, Committee appointed "to draw up reasons to be assigned to The Lords for disagreeing to certain of the Amendts. made by the Lords to the Law Agents (Scotland) Bill"

- l. Commons Reasons for disagreeing to certain of the Amendts. made by the Lords considered (according to Order) July 28, 1084 (No. 247)
- Moved, not to insist upon the Amendts. made by their Lordships (The Lord Chancellor)
- After short debate, Motion agreed to; Lords Amendts. to which the Commons have disagreed not insisted on

Royal Assent August 5 [36 & 37 Vict c. 63]

Law and Justice

Bastardy Laws—Legislation, Question, Mr. Charley; Answer, Mr. Stanfeld May 8, [215] 1680

Chipping Norton Magistrates, Question, Mr. Mundella; Answer, Mr. Bruce May 26, [216] 429; Questions, Mr. Corbett, Mr. Bowring; Answers, Mr. Bruce May 27, 501; Question, Mr. Bowring; Answer, Mr. Bruce June 6, 548; Explanation, Mr. Bruce June 9, 639; Questions, Sir George Jenkinson, Mr. Cobett, Mr. Bowring; Answers, Mr. Bruce July 4, 1784

Commission of the Peace—Clerical Magistrates, Question, Mr. McCarthy Downing; Answer, Mr. Gladstone June 6, [216] 550

Court of Probate—District Registry Clerks, Questions, Viscount Mahon; Answers, The Chancellor of the Exchequer July 3, [216] 1708

Court of Justice—Administrative Departments, Question, Mr. Rathbone; Answer, Mr. Gladstone July 17, [217] 494

Digest of Sanitary Statistics, Question, Sir Michael Hicks-Beach; Answer, Mr. Stanfeld Feb 7, [214] 164; Question, Sir Charles Adderley; Answer, Mr. Gladstone Feb 10, 198; Question, Sir Charles Adderley; Answer, Mr. Stanfeld Feb 13, 373; Feb 25, 895; Question, Mr. Gregory; Answer, Mr. Hibbert April 21, [215] 726

Four Courts Marshalsea, Dublin, Question, Mr. Bruce; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington July 14, [217] 303

Judge of the Probate and Divorce Court, Question, Mr. Raikes; Answer, Mr. Bruce Mar 3, [214] 1182

Juries (Ireland)—See title Juries (Ireland) Act

Juries (Wales), Question, Mr. O. Stanley; Answer, Mr. Bruce May 22, [216] 271

[cont.]

Law and Justice—cont.

Law Officers of the County Palatine of Durham, Question, Mr. Wheelhouse; Answer, Mr. Gladstone Mar 4, [214] 1288

Law Officers of the Crown—The Attorney General, Question, Mr. Raikes; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer Mar 24, [215] 14

Law of Conspiracy—Legislation, Question, Mr. Vernon Harcourt; Answer, Mr. Gladstone June 19, [216] 723

Law of Homicide—Legislation, Question, Mr. Charley; Answer, Mr. Bruce June 20, [216] 1230

Leamington Magistracy—The Labourers Union, Question, Lieutenant-Colonel Parker; Answer, Mr. Bruce Mar 26, [215] 100

Letters Patent—Legislation, Question, Mr. J. Howard; Answer, The Attorney General Mar 8, [214] 1182

Licensing Act, 1872

Legislation, Question, Mr. Straight; Answer, Mr. Bruce Feb 17, [214] 543

Standard of Value, Question, Mr. Vernon Harcourt; Answer, Mr. Bruce May 18, [215] 1873

The Valuation Sections, Observations, Mr. Vernon Harcourt; Reply, Mr. Bruce: short debate thereon July 25, [217] 1068

Wine Licences to Grocers, Question, Sir Wilfrid Lawson; Answer, Mr. Bruce July 14, [217] 304

Local Courts of Record, Question, Mr. West; Answer, Mr. Bruce Feb 20, [214] 724

Marriage Laws—Legislation, Question, Mr. Salt; Answer, Mr. Bruce Mar 25, [215] 99; Question Observations, Lord Chelmsford; Reply, The Lord Chancellor July 3, [216] 1698

Office of Master of the Rolls, Question, Sir David Wedderburn; Answer, Mr. Gladstone April 7, [215] 647;—Appeals, Question, Mr. Gregory; Answer, Mr. Gladstone April 24, [215] 899

Public Health—Legislation, Question, Mr. Raikes; Answer, Sir Charles Adderley Feb 17, [214] 546

Public Prosecutors Bill—Legislation, Question, Mr. Eykyn; Answer, Mr. Hibbert Mar 28, [215] 104

Stipendiary Magistrates—Salford and Manchester, Question, Mr. Cawley; Answer, Mr. Baxter June 16, [216] 997

The Magistracy, Motion for an Address (Mr. Auberon Herbert) June 24, [216] 1339

West Riding Magistracy, Questions, Mr. Carter; Answers, Mr. Bruce July 29, [217] 1173

[See title Imprisonment for Debt]

Law of Evidence Bill

(Mr. Attorney General, Mr. Solicitor General)

- c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> * July 31                          [Bill 274]
- Bill withdrawn August 5, [217] 1559

LAW LEA { SESSION 1873 } EEA LEE
 214-215-216-217.

LAWRENCE, Lord

Elementary Education Provisional Order Confirmation (No. 1), Comm. [215] 1869, 1872; Report, cl. 1, [217] 746
 India—Destruction of Life by Wild Beasts, [216] 1488

LAWRENCE, Alderman Sir J. C., Lambeth

Cocaine Prosecutions, [214] 727
 Endowed Schools Commissioners—Emanuel Hospital Scheme, Motion for an Address, [215] 1905

LAWRENCE, Mr. Alderman W., London Commercial Marine, Motion for an Address, [214] 1860

Endowed Schools Act (1869) Amendment, Comm. add. cl. [217] 955

Endowed Schools Commissioners—Emanuel Hospital Scheme, Motion for an Address, [215] 1941

Endowed Schools Commissioners—Grey Coat Hospital, Westminster, Motion for an Address, [214] 179

Juries, 2R. [214] 561; Comm. cl. 5, Amendt. [216] 524, 526, 528; cl. 29, Amendt. 530, 531; cl. 41, Amendt. 532; cl. 43, Amendt. 533; cl. 52, 1512

Metropolis—New Courts of Justice, [216] 408
 Municipal Officers Superannuation, 2R. [214] 1870

Post Office—Telegraphs—Return Messages, [217] 1087

Register for Parliamentary and Municipal Electors, Re-comm. cl. 9, Amendt. [215] 1690
 Supply—New Courts of Justice, &c. [215] 792; [217] 1099

Taxes on Locomotion, Res. [215] 460
 Ways and Means—Financial Statement, Comm. [215] 701

LAWSON, Sir W., Carlisle

Army—Fighting between Soldiers, [214] 1033
 Army Estimates—Land Forces, [214] 882, 1135

Criminal Law—Weaverham Cockfighting Case, [217] 1560

East India Revenue Accounts, Comm. [217] 1464

*International Law—Arbitration, Motion for an Address, [217] 82

Landlord and Tenant, 2R. [216] 1645, 1650

Licensing Act Amendment (Ireland), [216] 1415

Licensing Act—Wine Licences to Grocers, [217] 304

Municipal Corporations Act—Devonport Watch Committee, [215] 1783

Parliament—Strangers, Rules as to, [217] 301

Permissive Prohibitory Liquor, 2R. [215] 1609, 1657, 1659

Shah of Persia, Visit of, [216] 638

Treaties with Foreign Powers, Res. [214] 479

Ways and Means—Financial Statement, Comm. [215] 675

LEA, Mr. T., Kidderminster

Board of Trade—Railway Returns (1873), [215] 1487

Monastic and Conventual Institutions, Leave, [214] 631

Railway Accidents, Res. Amendt. [216] 191

LEARMONTH, Colonel A., Colchester

Army—Gunpowder, Contracts for, [215] 901
 Rifle Range, Colchester, [216] 838
 Royal Engineers, [217] 661
 Russia—Crimea, British Graves in the, [215] 1762

LEATHAM, Mr. E. A., Huddersfield

Church of England Revenues, Address for a Royal Commission, [217] 449
 *Endowed Schools Act (1869) Amendment, 2R. [217] 720
 Women's Disabilities, 2R. [215] 1225

LEEMAN, Mr. G., York

Hypotheo Abolition (Scotland), 2R. [216] 1368
 Juries, Comm. cl. 5, [216] 518, 519, 521, 527, 528; cl. 41, 532
 Railway and Canal Traffic, Comm. cl. 3, [215] 371; cl. 4, 372; cl. 7, 375; cl. 10, 378, 381, 383; cl. 23, 591, 592
 Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. add. cl. [216] 1438
 Supreme Court of Judicature, Comm. cl. 50, [217] 48; cl. 60, 183

LEFEVRE, Mr. J. G. Shaw (Secretary to the Board of Admiralty), Reading

Channel Islands—Platte Bone Rock, [216] 1229

Married Women's Property Act (1870) Amendment, 2R. [214] 678, 679

Navy—Admiralty Contracts, [216] 836

Contract Prices, [215] 519
 Officers of the—Relative Rank, [217] 1435

Navy—Naval Reserves, Motion for a Committee, [215] 559

Navy Estimates—Admiralty Office, [216] 104, 105, 117

Men and Boys, [215] 84
 Naval Stores, [216] 437, 440, 446

New Works, &c. [216] 451, 452

Spain—King Amadeus, [214] 732

LEIGH, Lieut.-Colonel Egerton, Cheshire Mid.

Army—Autumn Manœuvres—Horse Blankets, [216] 1552

Glanders at Leeds Barracks, [217] 307

Army—Cavalry Force, Res. [216] 565

Compulsory Education—Prisons Act, 1865, [215] 620

Contagious Diseases Acts Repeal, 2R. [216] 254

Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 3, [216] 938, 1012

LEITH, Mr. J. F., Aberdeen

Conspiracy Law Amendment, Lords Amendts. [217] 1544

East India Revenue Accounts, Comm. [217] 1498

Factory Acts Amendment, 2R. [217] 1548

Law Agents (Scotland), Comm. cl. 7, [216] 812; Lords Amendts. [217] 963

LEIM LOIC { GENERAL INDEX } LOIC LIN
 214—215—215—217.

- LEITRIM, Earl of
 Constabulary (Ireland)—Sub-Constable John Howe, Motion for Papers, [217] 752
 Irish Church Temporalities Commission, [217] 753
 Landed Estates Court—Registration of Improvements, [214] 586
 Landlord and Tenant (Ireland) Act, 1870, Motion for Returns, [214] 431; [217] 751
 Peace Preservation (Ireland) Acts Continuance, 2R. [216] 339
- LENNOX, Lord H. G. C. G., Chichester
 Navy—H.M.S. "Devastation," [215] 567, 582, 583
 Navy Estimates—Admiralty Office, [216] 107
 Dockyards, &c. [216] 137; Amendt. 143, 149
 Men and Boys, [215] 43, 48, 55, 68, 75, 77, 86
 Miscellaneous Services, [216] 453
 Naval Stores, [216] 440, 442
 Postponement of Motions, [215] 20
 Scientific Department, [216] 180
 Shipbuilding—Plans of Government, [217] 908
 Steam Machinery, &c. [216] 447
 Parliament—Order of Business, [215] 225, 226
- LEWIS, Mr. C. E., Londonderry
 General Valuation (Ireland), Comm. [216] 1333
 Parks Regulation Act—Meetings in the Parks, Motion for an Address, [215] 287
 Parliamentary and Municipal Electors, [216] 14
 Peace Preservation (Ireland), Comm. cl. 2, [216] 67
 214] Register for Parliamentary and Municipal Electors, 2R. 1954
 215] Comm. 293; Re-comm. Amendt. 713; cl. 3, Amendt. 793; cl. 5, Amendt. 959; cl. 9, Amendt. 1690; cl. 12, Amendt. 1692; cl. 13, Amendt. ib.; add. cl. 1695; Schedule 1, ib.
 Supply—Local Government Board, [215] 1017
 216] Supreme Court of Judicature, Comm. cl. 5, 1591; cl. 24, 1803, 1804; cl. 28, Amendt. 1876
 217] cl. 50, 51; cl. 54, 181; cl. 60, 185
 University Education (Ireland), [214] 1039; 2R. Amendt. 1211, 1215
- LEWIS, Mr. Harvey, Marylebone
 Post Office—Calais, Detention of Mails at, [215] 1713
- LEWIS, Mr. J. D., Devonport
 Army—New Passage Hill, Devonport, [217] 499
 *Contagious Diseases Acts Repeal, 2R. [216] 239
 Occasional Sermons, 2R. [215] 1968
- Licensing Act Amendment (Ireland) Bill
 Question, Sir Wilfrid Lawson: Answer, The Marquess of Hartington; Observations, Mr. Vernon Harcourt June 26, [216] 1415
- Licensing Law Amendment (Scotland)
 Bill—see title Spirituous Liquors (Scotland) Bill
- LIDDELL, Hon. H. G., Northumberland, S.
 Army Fine Fund, [215] 1756
 Coals, Scarcity of, Motion for a Committee, [214] 819
 Consolidated Fund (Appropriation), 2R. [217] 1875
 Customs Outport Clerks, Res. Report, [217] 1944
 Mercantile Marine—Unseaworthy Ships, [215] 104
 Mercantile Marine—Lights in the Channel, Res. [215] 1781
 Merchant Shipping Act—Rules of the Road at Sea, Res. [215] 284
 Metropolis—Street Traffic Regulations, [216] 994
 Mines, Assistant Inspectors of, [214] 599
 Navy—Admiralty Administration, Res. [214] 953
 Navy—Naval Reserves, Motion for a Committee, [215] 553
 Navy (Promotion and Retirement), Motion for a Committee, [216] 787
 Peace Preservation (Ireland), Comm. cl. 2, Proviso, [216] 69
 Railway and Canal Traffic, Comm. cl. 11, [215] 384
 Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 3, [216] 1022, 1026, 1075, 1077, 1078, 1083; cl. 17, 1430; add. cl. Amendt. 1434, 1437; Preamble, 1445
 Salmon Fisheries Commissioners, Comm. [214] 1958
 Supply—Convict Establishments, [217] 1278
 New Palace at Westminster, [217] 1124, 1273
 Post Office, [214] 2059
 Telegraph Department, Report, [215] 88
 University Education (Ireland), 2R. Amendt. [214] 1712
 Ways and Means, Report, [215] 919, 1313
 Wild Birds Protection, Motion for a Committee, [215] 1189
- Life Assurance Companies Act, 1870—
Life Assurance Offices Returns
 Question, Sir Frederick W. Heygate: Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue July 21, [217] 657
- LIFFORD, Viscount
 Government of Ireland, 2R. [216] 1546
 Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister, 2R. [214] 1894
- LIMERICK, Earl of
 Juries Act (Ireland) 1871, [214] 1382, 1385
 Rock of Cashel, 2R. [216] 423
- LINDSAY, Hon. Colonel C. H., Abingdon
 Army—Reserve Forces, [215] 800
 Volunteer Adjutants, [216] 910
 Volunteer Officers, [215] 1486
 Army—Volunteer Force—New Regulations, Res. [217] 229, 263

LIN LOC { SESSION 1873 } LOC LOC
 214-215-216-217.

- Lindsay, Colonel R. J. Loyd; Berkshire Army—City of London Volunteers—The Artillery Company's Drill Ground, Rec. [215] 814
- Lisgar, Lord Australian Colonies (Customs Duties), Comm. cl. 2, [216] 155
- LLANDAFF, Bishop of Public Worship Facilities, 2R. [216] 1895
- Local Government Board—Inspectors and Health Officers
 Question, Mr. Corrance; Answer, Mr. Stansfeld Mar 24, [215] 18
- Local Government Board (Ireland) Provisional Order Confirmation Bill (The Marquess of Hartington, Mr. Baxter)
 c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup>* April 24 [Bill 139]
 Read 2<sup>o</sup>* April 28
 Committee*; Report May 9
 Considered* May 12
 Read 3<sup>o</sup>* May 13
 l. Read 1<sup>o</sup>* (Marquess of Lansdowne) May 15
 Read 2<sup>o</sup>* May 23 (No. 115)
 Committee*; Report May 26
 Read 3<sup>o</sup>* May 27
 Royal Assent June 16 [36 Vict. c. 61]
- Local Government Board (Ireland) Provisional Order Confirmation (No. 2) Bill [H.L.] (The Earl of Bessborough)
 l. Presented; read 1<sup>o</sup>* May 27 (No. 134)
 Read 2<sup>o</sup>* June 20
 Committee* June 26
 Report* June 30 (No. 177)
 Read 3<sup>o</sup>* July 1
 Commons Amends. (No. 232)
 c. Read 1<sup>o</sup>* (Marquess of Hartington) July 7
 Read 2<sup>o</sup>* July 8 [Bill 229]
 Committee*; Report July 17
 Considered* July 18
 Read 3<sup>o</sup>* July 21
 l. Royal Assent July 28 [36 & 37 Vict. c. ccix]
- Local Government Districts (Consolidated Rate) Bill (Mr. Andrew Johnston, Mr. Francis Powell, Colonel Brise)
 c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup>* Feb 26 [Bill 84]
 Read 2<sup>o</sup>* Mar 7
 Committee August 6
- Local Government Provisional Orders Bill Formerly—
- Local Government Supplemental Bill (Mr. Hibbert, Mr. Stansfeld)
 c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup>* Feb 7 [Bill 2]
 Read 2<sup>o</sup>* Feb 10
 Committee*; Report Feb 20
 Considered* Feb 21
 Read 3<sup>o</sup>* Feb 24
- Local Government Provisional Orders Bill—cont.
- l. Read 1<sup>o</sup>* (The Earl of Morley) Feb 25 (No. 26)
 Read 2<sup>o</sup>* Mar 7
 Committee* Mar 10
 Report* Mar 11
 Read 3<sup>o</sup>* Mar 13
 Royal Assent Mar 24 [36 Vict. c. i]
- Local Government Provisional Orders (No. 2) Bill (Mr. Hibbert, Mr. Stansfeld)
 a. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup>* May 14 [Bill 163]
 Read 2<sup>o</sup>* May 19
 Committee*; Report June 5
 Read 3<sup>o</sup>* June 6
 l. Read 1<sup>o</sup>* (Earl of Morley) June 9 (No. 142)
 Read 2<sup>o</sup>* June 17
 Committee*; Report June 19
 Read 3<sup>o</sup>* June 20
 Royal Assent July 7 [36 & 37 Vict. c. 82]
- Local Government Provisional Orders (No. 3) Bill (Mr. Hibbert, Mr. Stansfeld)
 a. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup>* May 21 [Bill 169]
 Read 2<sup>o</sup>* May 26
 Committee*; Report June 5
 Read 3<sup>o</sup>* June 6
 l. Read 1<sup>o</sup>* (Earl of Morley) June 9 (No. 143)
 Read 2<sup>o</sup>* June 17
 Committee*; Report June 19
 Read 3<sup>o</sup>* June 20
 Royal Assent July 7 [36 & 37 Vict. c. 83]
- Local Government Provisional Orders (No. 4) Bill (Mr. Hibbert, Mr. Stansfeld)
 c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup>* May 23 [Bill 174]
 Read 2<sup>o</sup>* June 5
 Bill withdrawn* June 11
- Local Government Provisional Orders (No. 4) Bill [H.L.] (The Earl of Morley)
 l. Presented; read 1<sup>o</sup>* June 9 (No. 135)
 Read 2<sup>o</sup>* June 17
 Committee*; Report June 19
 Read 3<sup>o</sup>* June 20
 c. Read 1<sup>o</sup>* (Mr. Hibbert) June 27 [Bill 211]
 Read 2<sup>o</sup>* June 30
 Committee*; Report July 9
 Read 3<sup>o</sup>* July 10
 l. Royal Assent July 21 [36 & 37 Vict. c. cxii]
- Local Government Provisional Orders (No. 5) Bill [H.L.] (The Marquess of Lansdowne)
 l. Presented; read 1<sup>o</sup>* June 12 (No. 154)
 Read 2<sup>o</sup>* June 20
 Committee*; Report June 23
 Read 3<sup>o</sup>* June 26
 c. Read 1<sup>o</sup>* (Mr. Hibbert) June 27 [Bill 212]
 Read 2<sup>o</sup>* June 30
 Committee*; Report July 9
 Read 3<sup>o</sup>* July 10
 l. Royal Assent July 21 [36 & 37 Vict. c. cxii]

LOC LOC [GENERAL INDEX] LOC LOC
214—215—216—217.

Local Government Provisional Orders (No. 6) Bill [H.L.]

(The Marquess of Lansdowne)

1. Presented ; read 1<sup>o</sup>* June 13 (No. 157)
Read 2<sup>o</sup>* June 20
Committee* July 10
Report* July 11
Read 3<sup>o</sup>* July 15
c. Read 1<sup>o</sup>* July 17. [Bill 244]
Read 2<sup>o</sup>* July 18
Committee* ; Report July 28
Considered* July 29
Read 3<sup>o</sup>* July 30
l. Royal Assent August 5 [86 & 37 Vict. c. cxvi]

Local Legislation (Ireland) Bill
(Mr. McMahon, Mr. Montagu Chambers, Colonel French, Mr. Bagwell)

- c. Ordered ; read 1<sup>o</sup>* Feb. 19 [Bill 72]
2R. August 20

Local Legislation Bill

(Mr. Heron, Mr. Serjeant Simon)

- c. Ordered ; read 1<sup>o</sup>* April 23 [Bill 137]
2R. [Dropped]

Local Rates and Taxes (Scotland) Bill
(The Lord Advocate, Mr. Secretary Bruce)

- c. Ordered ; read 1<sup>o</sup>* July 22 [Bill 256]
Read 2<sup>o</sup>* July 25
Bill withdrawn * July 28

Local Taxation

Administration of Justice &c., Question, Sir Massey Lopes ; Answer, Mr. Gladstone April 22, [215] 798

Costs of Criminal Prosecutions, Question, Sir Massey Lopes ; Answer, Mr. Bruce Feb 20, [214] 733 ; Question, Mr. Holker ; Answer, Mr. Baxter May 12, [215] 1788

Exemption of Real Property, Questions, Sir John St. Aubyn, Sir Massey Lopes ; Answers, Mr. Stanfeld Mar 24, [215] 18

Local Taxation (Accounts) Bill

(Mr. Pell, Sir Massey Lopes, Mr. Clare Read, Mr. Rowland Winn, Viscount Mahon)

- c. Ordered ; read 1<sup>o</sup>* Feb 7 [Bill 16]
Read 2<sup>o</sup>* Mar 7
Committee*—R.P. Mar 21
Committee April 1, [215] 467 [Count out]
Committee* ; Report April 3 [Bill 22]
Considered [Dropped]

Local Taxation—Boundaries of Parishes, Unions, and Counties

Moved, "That a Select Committee be appointed to inquire and report whether the existing Areas and Boundaries of Parishes, Unions, and Counties may be so altered and adjusted as to prevent the inconvenience in matters of Local Administration and Taxation which now arises from the limited extent or subdivision of certain Parishes, or the overlapping of Parishes in two or more administrative areas, or from Parishes and Unions being situate in more than one County, with power to recommend whether any and, if so, what measures should be taken to give effect to their Report" (Mr. Stanfeld) May 12, [215] 1819

Local Taxation—Boundaries of Parishes, Unions, and Counties—cont.

After debate, Amendt. proposed, in line 3, after "Parishes," to insert "Municipal Boroughs" (Mr. Samuelson), 1834 ; Question proposed, "That those words be there inserted;" after further debate, Amendt. withdrawn ; main Question put, and agreed to ; Select Committee appointed

And, on May 22, Committee nominated as follows :—Mr. Stanfeld (Chairman), Colonel Barttelot, Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, Mr. Candlish, Lord George Cavendish, Mr. Floyer, Mr. Goldney, Mr. Hibbert, Mr. Locke King, Mr. Leemun, Sir John St. Aubyn, Mr. Welby, and Mr. Whitbread ; June 10, Mr. Cawley added, Mr. Ridley disch. ; June 13, Mr. Stephen Cave and Mr. Woods added ; June 16, Colonel Brise added, Mr. Gross disch. ;

|                                                |     |
|------------------------------------------------|-----|
| Report P.P. . . . .                            | 308 |
| Abstract of Returns (England) 1871-2 . . . . . | 344 |
| Exchequer Payments in Aid . . . . .            | 402 |

LOCKE, MR. J., Southwark

Consolidated Fund (Appropriation), Comm. [217] 1451

County Court Judges—Minute of June, 1872, Res. [214] 1308, 1308

Diplomatic and Consular Service—Constantinople, H.M. Consul at—Case of Mr. Paul Tomagian, [217] 1527

Endowed Schools Act (1869), Motion for a Committee, [214] 290, 296

Endowed Schools Act (1869) Amendment, 2R. [217] 732 ; Comm. cl. 4, 937 ; add. cl. 954

Epping Forest, 2R. [214] 606, 607

Metropolis Buildings Act Amendment, 2R. [215] 499

Municipal Elections (Cumulative Vote), 2R. [217] 487

Register for Parliamentary and Municipal Electors, Re-comm. cl. 4, [215] 798 ; cl. 7, 900 ; cl. 9, 1691

Supply—Houses of Parliament, [215] 783

Post Office Services, [217] 1115

Supreme Court of Judicature, Comm. cl. 24, [216] 1805

Ways and Means, Report, [215] 918

Locomotion, Taxes on

Moved, "That, in the opinion of this House, Taxes on the means of Locomotion are opposed to public policy, and should be repealed at the earliest opportunity" (Mr. Loring) April 1, [215] 433 ; after debate, Question put, and negatived

Locomotive Act, 1861 — Inspection of Bridges

Question, Mr. Howard ; Answer, Mr. Bruce June 20, [216] 1228

[cont.]

LOC      LOP      { SESSION 1873 }      LOP      LOW
 214—215—216—217.

Locomotives on Roads

Select Committee appointed, "to inquire into the effect of the use of Locomotive Engines on Turnpike and other Public Roads, and as to the limitations and restrictions which ought to be imposed by Law on their use upon such roads for securing the public safety and protecting the public interests" (Mr. Cawley) April 29

And, on May 6, Committee nominated as follows:—Mr. Cawley (Chairman), Mr. Ashton, Mr. Biddulph, Lord George Cavendish, Mr. Wilbraham Egerton, Mr. Fordyce, Mr. Greville-Nugent, Mr. Hibbert, Mr. Hick, Mr. Holt, Mr. James Howard, Mr. Hurst, Sir George Jenkinson, Mr. Frederick Stanley, and Mr. William Wells

Report of Select Committee July 18 No. 312

Locomotives on Roads Bill

(Mr. Cawley, Mr. Wykham Martin, Mr. Frederick Stanley, Mr. Hick, Mr. Pender)

c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> Mar 4 [Bill 88]
 Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2<sup>o</sup>" April 23, [215] 883

Amendt. to leave out "now," and add "upon this day six months" (Mr. Gregory); Question proposed, "That 'now,' &c.;" after short debate, Amendt. and Motion withdrawn; Bill withdrawn

LONDON, Bishop of

Confession in the Church of England, Address for a Paper, [217] 1167

Elementary Education Provisional Order Confirmation (No. 1), Comm. [215] 1673

Supreme Court of Judicature, 2R. [215] 1481; Commons Amendts. [217] 897

LONGFORD, Earl of

Army—"Boxer Shrapnell" Shell, Address for Correspondence, [217] 966

Church Temporalities Commissioners (Ireland)

—Purchase of Rent Charge, [214] 831

Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment, 2R. [217] 531

Government of Ireland, 2R. [216] 1592

India—Banda and Kirwee Prize Money, [216] 883

Landed Estates Court—Registration of Improvements, [214] 537

Landlord and Tenant (Ireland) Act, 1870,

Motion for Returns, [214] 432

Peace Preservation (Ireland) Acts Amendment, 2R. [216] 383

LOPES, Sir Massey, Devonshire, S.

Local Taxation—Criminal Prosecutions, [214]

723

Exemption of Real Property, [215] 18, 798

Parliament—Address in Answer to the Speech, Report, [214] 171

Rating (Liability and Value)—Valuation—Consolidated Rate, Leave, [215] 1509; 2R. [216] 308; Comm. cl. 3, 924

Supreme Court of Judicature, Comm. cl. 54, [217] 176

Ways and Means, Report, [215] 1092, 1098, 1103

LOPES, Mr. H. G., Launceston

Custody of Infants, 2R. [214] 885

Juries, 2R. [214] 562; Comm. cl. 5, [216] 518, 520, 521, 527; cl. 7, 529; cl. 29, 531; cl. 45, 535, 539, 1508; cl. 52, 1510; cl. 57, 1519; cl. 61, 1521; cl. 64, ib.

Married Women's Property Act (1870) Amendment, 2R. [214] 673

Minors Protection, 2R. [216] 1376

Municipal Officers Superannuation, 2R. [214] 1368

Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. [216] 741; cl. 3, 932, 1008, 1006, 1023, 1025, 1029, 1030, 1048, 1080; cl. 13, 1235, 1238; cl. 15, 1423, 1427

216] Supreme Court of Judicature, 2R. 686, 844; Comm. cl. 24, 1871; cl. 26, 1873; cl. 29, 1878, 1884

217] cl. 46, Amendt. 44, 45; cl. 50, 46; cl. 54, 179; cl. 60, 182; cl. 75, Amendt. 190, 215, 216, 217; cl. 78, 220, 222; cl. 79, 224; Consid. cl. 59, Amendt. 684

LOWE, Right Hon. R., see CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER

LOWTHER, Mr. J., York City

Appropriation of Seats (Cashel and Sligo), Leave, [217] 963

Borough Franchise (Ireland), 2R. [216] 268

Conspiracy Law Amendment, Lords Amendts. [217] 1544

Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment, Re-comm. cl. 3, [217] 778, 780; cl. 28, Amendt. 797

Entailed and Settled Estates (Scotland), Comm. Motion for Adjournment, [216] 1833

Household Franchise (Counties), 2R. [217] 854

Juries, Comm. cl. 1, [215] 2072; cl. 5, [216]

520; cl. 43, 533; cl. 45, 541; [217] 590

Labourers' Cottages (Scotland), 2R. Amendt. [217] 464, 465

Parks Regulation Act—New Rules, [214] 224

Parks Regulation Act—Meetings in the Parks,

Motion for an Address, [215] 260, 287, 288

Parliament—Questions, &c.

Business of the House, [217] 1256

Count Out, The, Motion for an Adjournment, [217] 1478

Hours of Meeting of this House, [217] 1582

Morning Sittings, [216] 435

Order of Business, [217] 1439

Public Business, [217] 668

Parliament—Business of the House (Committee of Supply), Res. [214] 271, 273

Parliamentary Electors Registration, 2R. [217] 463

Post Office—Compulsory Registration of Stamps, [217] 1064

Public Health, Comm. Amendt. [217] 95

Public Meetings (Ireland), 2R. [216] 1891

Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 3, [216] 1003, 1011; Motion for reporting Progress, 1031, 1074, 1080, 1082; cl. 4, 1182; Consid. Amendt. [217] 420, 421

Sale of Liquors on Sunday (Ireland), 2R. [217] 106

Supply—Dover Harbour, [217] 1284

New Palace at Westminster, [217] 1274

Supreme Court of Judicature, Comm. cl. 31,

[216] 1888

LOW LUS { GENERAL INDEX } LUS MAC
214—215—216—217.

- LOWTHER, Mr. W., Westmoreland
 Criminal Law—Murray, Ann, Case of, [215] 528
 Diplomatic Service—Attachés, Staff of, [215]
     1787
 Foreign Office—Consul General (Egypt), [216]
     272
 Metropolis—Cab Fares—Railway Stations,
     [217] 902
     Fires—Water Supply, [217] 903
 Supply—Embassies and Missions Abroad, [215]
     1804
- LUBBOCK, Sir J., Maidstone
 “Advanced Class” Examinations, [217] 144
 Ancient Monuments Preservation, 2R. [215]
     1607, 1608
 Army—City of London Volunteers—The Artillery Company’s Drill Ground, Res. [215]
     810, 817
 Consolidated Fund (Appropriation), Comm.
     [217] 1451
 Currency—Bank Act, Res. Amendt. [215]
     123, 156, 157
 East India Revenue Accounts, Comm. [217]
     1469
 Endowed Schools Act (1868) Amendment, Comm.
     cl. 6, Amendt. [217] 943; add. cl. 950, 951
 Post Office (Balances)—Telegraphic Department, Res. Amendt. [217] 1205
 Post Office—Mail Contracts, Res. [216] 709
 Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. [216] 734;
     cl. 4, 1178
 Supply—Education, England and Wales, [216]
     1458
 Venus, Transit of, [215] 110
 Ways and Means—Financial Statement, Comm.
     [215] 694
- Lunacy Commission—Death of Mr. Commissioner Lutwidge
 Question, Lord Ernest Bruce; Answer, Mr. Winterbotham August 4, [217] 1516
- LUSH, Dr. J. A., Salisbury
 Public Health, Comm. [217] 93
 Public Health Act, 1872—Poor Law Inspectors, [215] 524
 Ways and Means—Financial Statement, Comm.
     [215] 686
- LUSK, Mr. Alderman A., Finsbury Bo.
 Army Estimates—Land Forces, [214] 684
 Currency—Bank Act, Res. [215] 154
 Departmental Expenditure—Purchase and Sale of Stores, Motion for a Committee, [214] 812
 Juries, Comm. cl. 5, [216] 519, 525, 526, 528;
     cl. 29, 531; cl. 48, 533; cl. 45, 535
 Mercantile Marine—Loss of Life at Sea, [217]
     147
 Merchant Shipping Act Amendment—Deck
     Loads, [216] 515
 Merchant Shipping Acts Amendment, Comm.
     cl. 15, [217] 1025
 Navy—Naval Reserves, Motion for a Committee,
     [215] 558
 Supply—Anstruther Harbour, [215] 1003
     British Embassy Houses, &c. [215] 1006
     Customs Department, [215] 1818
     Emigration, [215] 1814
     Governors, &c. Colonies, [215] 1809
- LUSK, Mr. Alderman A.—cont.
 Houses of Parliament, [215] 780, 782
 Inland Revenue, [215] 1819
 Law Officers, &c. [215] 1771
 Lighthouses Abroad, [215] 1005
 Metropolitan Police Courts, [215] 791
 New Palace at Westminster, [217] 1127
 Privy Council for Trade, &c. [215] 1010
 Public Buildings, [215] 778
 Public Departments, [215] 779
 Queen’s and Lord Treasurer’s Remembrancer, [215] 1454
 Royal Parks, &c. [215] 777
 Tonnage Duties, &c. [215] 1813
- LYTTELTON, Lord
 Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment,
 Comm. cl. 10, [217] 1809
 Endowed Schools Act (1869) Amendment, 2R.
     [217] 1815
 Endowed Schools Commissioners—King Edward VI’s Grammar School, Birmingham, Motion for an Address, [216] 90, 91
 Endowed Schools Commissioners—Denbigh
     Free Grammar School, Motion for an Address, [217] 593
- LYTTELTON, Hon. C. G., Worcestershire, E.
 Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment,
 2R. [217] 1165
 Parliament—Address in Answer to the Speech,
     [214] 67
 Resignation of Ministers—Statement, [214]
     1915
- MCARTURH, Mr. W., Lambeth
 Africa—West Coast Settlements—Ashantee Invasion, [215] 1719
 Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment,
 Re-comm. cl. 3, [217] 785; add. cl. 801
 Fiji Islands—British Protectorate, [214] 597
 Fiji, Protectorate of, Res. [216] 934, 949
- MCCLURE, Mr. T., Belfast
 Ireland—Irish Railway Companies, Loans to,
     [216] 1551
 *University Education (Ireland), 2R. Amendt.
     [214] 1777
- McCOMBIE, Mr. W., Aberdeenshire, W.
 Metropolis Buildings Act Amendment, 2R.
     [215] 500
- MACFIE, Mr. R. A., Leith, &c.
 Africa, West Coast—Ashantee Invasion, [217] 398
     Gambia—British Settlements on the, [214]
     732, 897
 Army Estimates—Pay and Allowances, [214]
     1155
 Canada Loan Guarantee, 2R. [216] 1329
 Church of Scotland (Patronage), Res. [216]
     1106
 Colonies, The, Motion for a Committee, [214]
     1102, 1116;—Defence of the, Res. 1530
 Commercial Treaty between Ava and France,
     [217] 1087
 Crown Private Estates, Comm. cl. 1, [217] 1002

[cont.]

[cont.]

MAC MAC { SESSION 1873 } MAC MAH
 214—215—216—217.

MACFIE, Mr. R. A.—cont.

- Customs and Inland Revenue, Comm. Schedule B, [215] 1689
- Customs Outport Clerks, Res. Report, [217] 1237
- Duke of Edinburgh's Annuity, Comm. cl. 1, [217] 1446
- Fishery Board (Scotland)—Branding Fees, [217] 1327
- France—Commercial Treaty, 1872, [215] 638
- Juries, Comm. cl. 5, [216] 523
- Locomotives on Roads, 2R. [215] 888
- Merchant Shipping Act—"Maggie," The, [215] 649
- Nineveh Excavations, [216] 273
- Occasional Sermons, 2R. [215] 1980
- Parliament—Privilege—Appellate Jurisdiction of the House of Lords, [217] 173
- Parliamentary Elections—Declaration of the Poll, [217] 1562
- Patent Rights—International Conference, [215] 636 ; [217] 310, 1328, 1564
- Post Office—Registration of Letters containing Postage Stamps, [217] 909, 911, 1329
- Public Expenditure, Res. [214] 650
- Railway and Canal Traffic, Lords Amendt. [216] 1303
- Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 7, [216] 1189 ; add. cl. 1440 ; Consid. [217] 410
- Supply—Anstruther Harbour, [215] 1003
- Customs Department, [215] 4818
- Emigration, [215] 1814
- Governor, &c. Colonies, [215] 1809
- Government Property, Rates on, [215] 787
- House of Commons, Offices of the, [215] 1007
- Inland Revenue, [215] 1819
- Natural History Museum, [215] 790
- New Works, &c. [216] 452
- Patent Office, [215] 1021
- Post Office Services, [217] 1118
- Privy Council for Trade, &c. [215] 1009
- Queen's and Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer, [215] 1454
- Temporary Commissions, [217] 1150
- Supreme Court of Judicature, Comm. cl. 6, [216] 1731 ; cl. 18, 1796
- University Education (Ireland), [214] 1739, 1740
- Ways and Means—Financial Statement, Comm. [215] 693 ; Report, 919 ; Comm. 956
- Windward Islands—Ecclesiastical Policy, Res. [217] 444

McLAGAN, Mr. P., Linlithgowshire

- Conveyancing (Scotland), 2R. [215] 964 ; Comm. cl. 4, Amendt. [216] 150
- France—Commercial Treaty, New, [216] 1658
- Labourers Cottages (Scotland), 2R. [217] 466
- Landlord and Tenant, 2R. [216] 1649

MCLAREN, Mr. D., Edinburgh

- Church of Scotland (Patronage), Res. [216] 1095
- Church Rates Legislation (Scotland), [216] 102, 103 ; Res. 1522
- Consolidated Fund (Appropriation), 2R. [217] 1382
- Conveyancing (Scotland), Comm. [215] 1699 ; cl. 12, [216] 504 ; cl. 15, 508 ; cl. 16, 509 ; cl. 27, 510

M'LAUREN, Mr. D.—cont.

- Disestablishment of the Churches of England and Scotland, Res. [216] 32
- Endowed Schools Commissioners—Emanuel Hospital Scheme, Motion for an Address, [215] 1929
- Entailed and Settled Estates (Scotland), 2R. [215] 1542
- General Valuation (Ireland), Comm. [216] 1398
- Hypothee Abolition (Scotland), 2R. [216] 1368
- Ireland—Irish Railways, Purchase of, Res. [215] 1169
- Ireland—Shannon, Overflowing of the, Res. [214] 1578
- Labourers Cottages (Scotland), 2R. [217] 480
- Law Agents (Scotland), Comm. cl. 2, [216] 543 ; cl. 7, 613 ; cl. 8, 614, 615 ; cl. 19, 616
- Parliamentary Elections (Expenses), 2R. [216] 1131
- Poor Law (Scotland), 2R. [214] 1006
- Rates for Church Repairs, &c. (Scotland), [215] 646
- Rating (Liability and Value), 2R. [216] 317 ; Comm. 750 ; cl. 2, 911 ; Consid. [217] 409, 618
- Roads and Bridges (Scotland), 2R. [216] 808
- Scotland—Civil Service, [216] 1865
- Supply—Learned Societies, [215] 1795, 1796
- Local Government Board, [215] 1017
- Metropolitan Police of Dublin, Amendt. [217] 1137, 1145
- Post Office Services, [217] 1118
- Privy Council for Trade, &c. [215] 1010 ; Amendt. 1011
- Public Works in Ireland, [215] 1004
- University Tests (Dublin) (No. 3), Comm. cl. 3, [215] 1534
- Ways and Means—Financial Statement, Comm. [215] 682

McMAHON, Mr. P., New Ross

- Irish Land Act, 1870—12th Clause, [214] 834
- Post Office—Book Post, [215] 647
- Newspapers, [215] 12
- Union Rating (Ireland), 2R. [214] 753, 771 ; [216] 1711

MAGNIAC, Mr. C., St. Ives

- Chinese Coolie Trade, [216] 383
- Criminal Law—Public Prosecutors, [217] 918
- Juries, Comm. cl. 45, Amendt. [216] 533, 534, 535, 538, 545
- Merchant Shipping Acts Amendment, Comm. cl. 16, Amendt. [217] 1027
- Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 3, [216] 1013, 1074
- Supply—Consular Establishments Abroad, &c. [217] 1105
- Steam Machinery, &c. [216] 449
- Ways and Means, Report, [215] 1087

MAHON, Viscount, Suffolk, E.

- Court of Probate—District Registry Clerks, [216] 1708, 1709
- Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment, Re-comm. cl. 3, [217] 776
- Landlord and Tenant, 2R. [216] 1649
- Metropolis—Street Traffic Regulations, [216] 995
- Russia—Khiva Expedition, [215] 399

[cont.]

MAL MAR { GENERAL INDEX } MAR MAR
214—215—216—217.

- MALCOLM, Mr. J. W., Boston
Army—Gunpowder, Contracts for, [215] 1680
Musketry, Deputy Assistant Adjutant General for, [216] 999
- MALMESBURY, Earl of
Army—Candidates for Commissions, [216] 1939
Recruiting, [216] 1821
Children's Employment in Dangerous Performances, 2R. [216] 1244
Game, &c., Motion for a Return, [214] 1278, 1282
Government of Ireland, 2R. [216] 1546
Judicial Peerages, Motion for an Address, [216] 1769
Mercantile Marine—Royal Commission, [215] 97
Palace of Westminster—House of Commons—Peers Gallery, [214] 1922, 1923
Salmon Fisheries, 2R. [217] 856
Treaties of Arbitration, Motion for an Address, [214] 1176
- Malt Tax—Notice of Motion
Question, Sir George Jenkinson; Answer, Colonel Barttelot Mar 20, [214] 1946
- MANNERS, Right Hon. Lord J. J. R., Leicestershire, N.
Board of Education (Ireland)—O'Keeffe, Rev. Mr., Nomination of Committee, [216] 323
Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment, Consid. add. cl. [217] 959
Endowed Schools Act (1869) Amendment, Comm. cl. 18, [217] 950
France—Commercial Treaty, The New, [217] 143
Household Franchise (Counties), 2R. [217] 842
Metropolis—Palace of Westminster, [216] 990
Parliament—Public Business, [217] 401, 668
Parliament—Business of the House (Tuesday Sittings), Res. [214] 283, 287
Post Office—Mail Contracts—Cape and Zanzibar, [216] 1250, 1807
Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 3, [216] 927, 1030; cl. 4, 1178; cl. 18, 1238
Supply—British Embassy Houses, &c. [215] 1006
Privy Council for Trade, &c. [215] 1011
Supreme Court of Judicature, Comm. cl. 5, [216] 1506, 1635; cl. 75, Motion for reporting Progress, [217] 191; cl. 79, 224
Treaties with Foreign Powers, Res. [214] 468
Treaty of Washington, [215] 1445, 1446
Turnpike Acts Continuance, &c. Comm. [217] 184
University Education (Ireland), 2R. Amendt. [214] 1687
Windward Islands—Ecclesiastical Policy, Res. [217] 439
Women's Disabilities, 2R. [215] 1229
Workshops Act, Res. [215] 997
- Marine Mutiny Bill (Mr. Bonham-Carter, Mr. Goschen, Mr. Shaw Lefevre)
c. Ordered * Mar 26
Read 1<sup>o</sup> * Mar 27
Read 2<sup>o</sup> * Mar 28
Committee *; Report Mar 31
Considered * April 2
Read 3<sup>o</sup> * April 3
- Marine Mutiny Bill—cont.
l. Read 1<sup>o</sup> * (Earl of Camperdown) April 3
Read 2<sup>o</sup> * April 4
Committee *; Report April 21
Read 3<sup>o</sup> * April 22
Royal Assent April 24 [36 Vict. c. 11]
- MARLBOROUGH, Duke of
Agricultural Children, Comm. add. cl. [216] 1155, 1156
Public Worship Facilities—Standing Order No. 34a, [216] 163
- MARLING, Mr. S. S., Gloucestershire, W.
Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 13, [216] 1194
- Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister Bill
(Sir Thomas Chambers, Mr. Morley, Mr. Leith)
c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> * Feb 7 [Bill 15]
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2<sup>o</sup>"
[214] Feb 12, 299
Amendt. to leave out "now," and add "upon this day six months" (Mr. Beresford Hope); after debate, Question put, "That 'now,' &c.;" A. 126, N. 87; M. 39
Main Question put, and agreed to; Bill read 2<sup>o</sup> Committee; Report, after short debate Feb 17, 575
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 3<sup>o</sup>"
Feb 20, 753
Amendt. to leave out "now," and add "upon this day six months" (Mr. Collins); Question put, "That 'now,' &c.;" A. 98, N. 54; M. 44
Main Question put, and agreed to; Bill read 3<sup>o</sup>
l. Read 1<sup>o</sup> * (Lord Houghton) Feb 21 (No. 21)
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2<sup>o</sup>" Mar 13, 1870
Amendt. to leave out ("now,") and insert ("this day six months") (The Earl Beauchamp); after long debate, on Question, That ("now,") &c.? Cont. 49, Not-Cont. 74; M. 25
Resolved in the negative; Bill to be read 2<sup>o</sup> this day six months
Division List, Cont. and Not-Cont. 1907
- Marriages (Ireland) Bill (Mr. Pim, Mr. Heygate, Sir Rowland Blennerhassett)
c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> * Feb 17 [Bill 68]
Read 2<sup>o</sup> * Mar 3
Committee *; Report Mar 5
Read 3<sup>o</sup> * Mar 19
l. Read 1<sup>o</sup> * (Viscount Middleton) Mar 11 (No. 40)
Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>, after debate Mar 26, [215] 91
Committee April 24, 891
Report * April 29 (No. 75)
Read 3<sup>o</sup> * May 3
Royal Assent May 15 [36 Vict. c. 16]
- Marriages (Ireland) Legalization Bill [H.L.]
(The Marquess of Clarendon)
l. Presented; read 1<sup>o</sup> * May 6 (No. 94)
Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>, after short debate June 30, [216] 1550

[cont.]

MAR MAR { SESSION 1873 }
 214—215—216—217.

MAR MAU

Marriages Legalization, St. John's Chapel,
 Eton, Bill [H.L.]

(The Lord Bishop of Oxford)

- a. Presented; read 1<sup>o</sup> May 8 (No. 99)
 Read 2<sup>o</sup> May 19
 Committee *; Report May 20
 Read 3<sup>o</sup> May 23
 c. Read 1<sup>o</sup> May 27 [Bill 179]
 Read 2<sup>o</sup> June 5
 Committee *; Report June 6
 Read 3<sup>o</sup> June 9
 Royal Assent June 18 [36 Vict. c. 28]

Married Women's Property Act (1870)
Amendment Bill

(Mr. Hinde Palmer, Mr. Amphlett, Mr. Osborne Morgan, Mr. Jacob Bright)

- c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> Feb 7 [Bill 7]
 Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2<sup>o</sup>"
 Feb 19, [214] 687
 Amendt. to leave out "now," and add "upon this day six months" (Mr. Gregory); after debate, Question put, "That 'now,' &c.;"
 A. 124, N. 103; M. 21
 Main Question put, and agreed to; Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>
 Committee *—R.P. Mar 28
 Committee *—R.P. April 25
 Moved, "That the House do now go into Committee upon the said Bill" May 2, [215] 1459 [House counted out]
 Committee *—R.P. May 5
 Committee *; Report June 26 [Bill 260]
 Considered [Dropped]

Married Women's Property Act (1870)
Amendment (No. 2) Bill

(Mr. Staveley Hill, Mr. Raikes, Mr. Goldney)

- c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> Feb 7 [Bill 24]
 Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>, after short debate Feb 12, [214] 328
 Order for Committee read; Moved, "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair" Mar 4, 1864
 Amendt. to leave out from "That," and add "this House will, upon this day six months, resolve itself into the said Committee" (Mr. Hinde Palmer); Question proposed, "That the words, &c.;" Moved, "That the Debate be now adjourned" (Colonel Barttelot); Motion agreed to; Debate adjourned
 Committee *; Report July 9

MARTIN, Mr. J., Meath

Ireland—Coroner for Meath, [217] 998
 Supremacy and Uniformity, Acts of, [216] 839

Ireland—Civil Servants, Res. [216] 1828
 Monastic and Conventual Institutions, 2R. [216] 1684
 Sale of Liquors on Sunday (Ireland), 2R. [217] 117

MARTIN, Mr. P. Wykeham, Rochester
 Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment,
 Re-comm. cl. 3, [217] 782; cl. 23, 798
 Juves, Comm. cl. 5, [216] 520
 Municipal Officers Superannuation, 2R. [214] 1368

MARTIN, Mr. P. Wykeham—cont.

- Navy Estimates—Dockyards, &c. [216] 136, 141, 143
 Naval Stores, [216] 443
 Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. [216] 738; cl. 7, 1184; Re-comm. [217] 614
 Register for Parliamentary and Municipal Electors, Re-comm. cl. 3, [215] 795; cl. 9, 961
 Supply—Houses of Parliament, [215] 783

MASSEY, Right Hon. W. N., Tiverton
 Post Office—Mail Contracts—Cape and Zanzibar, [216] 1450
 Ways and Means, Report, [215] 1817

Masters and Servants—Wages Bill—The Truck System

Question, Sir David Wedderburn; Answer, Mr. Bruce June 12, [216] 840;—Law of Contract, Observations, Mr. Vernon Harcourt; Reply, The Attorney General June 6, 572

Matrimonial Causes Acts Amendment Bill
 (Mr. Attorney General, Mr. Solicitor General)

- c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> Mar 26 [Bill 101]
 Read 2<sup>o</sup> Mar 31
 Committee *; Report May 8
 Read 3<sup>o</sup> May 9
 d. Read 1<sup>o</sup> (The Lord Chancellor) May 12
 Read 2<sup>o</sup> June 9 (No. 105)
 Committee *; Report June 10
 Read 3<sup>o</sup> June 12
 Royal Assent June 16 [36 Vict. c. 31]

MATTHEWS, Mr. H., Dungarvan

Monastic and Conventual Institutions, Leave, [214] 528; 2R. [216] 1672, 1674
 Peace Preservation (Ireland), Comm. cl. 2, Proviso, [216] 70, 72
 Rome—Vansittart, Mr., Attack upon, [215] 1489

- 216] Supreme Court of Judicature, 2R. 676, 681; Comm. 1681; cl. 5, 1638; cl. 6, 1642; Amendt. 1742; Amendt. 1743; cl. 8, Amendt. 1747; cl. 12, Amendt. 1748; cl. 22, Amendt. 1798; cl. 29, Amendt. 1886
 217] cl. 45, Amendt. 44; cl. 50, Amendt. 49; cl. 54, 178, Amendt. 179, 181; cl. 60, 185; cl. 61, Amendt. 186; cl. 75, 217, 218; cl. 78, Amendt. 219, 220; cl. 79, Amendt. 223; add. cl. 339; Schedule 1, 343; Amendt. 345

Mauritius, The

Appointment of Bishop, Question, Major Arbutnott; Answer, Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen May 26, [216] 432

Ecclesiastical Establishments, Question, Major Arbutnott; Answer, Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen June 16, [216] 999; July 21, [217] 658

Inspectors-General of Police, Question, Mr. Gourley; Answer, Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen May 19, [216] 98

[cont.]

MED MER { GENERAL INDEX } MER MER
 214—215—216—217.

Medical Act Amendment (University of London) Bill

(Sir John Lubbock, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, Sir Philip Egerton, Mr. Robert Fowler)
 c. Ordered; read 1st July 7. [Bill 224]
 Read 2nd July 10
 Committee*; Report July 14.
 Read 3rd July 16
 l. Read 1st (Earl Granville) July 17 (No. 214)
 Read 2nd July 22
 Committee*; Report July 24.
 Read 3rd July 25
 Royal Assent July 28 [36 & 37 Vict. c. 55]

Medical Act (1858) Amendment Bill

(Mr. Headlam, Sir Henry Selwin-Ibbetson)
 c. Ordered; read 1st April 7 [Bill 127]
 2R. [Dropped]

MELLOR, Mr. T. W., Ashton-under-Lyne
 Army Estimates—Provisions, Forage, &c. [216] 1259
 Municipal Officers Superannuation, 2R. [214] 1887
 Navy Estimates—Naval Stores, [216] 447
 Superannuation, [216] 15
 Superannuation Act Amendment, Comm. [215] 1702
 Supply—Post Office Services, [217] 1121
 Superannuation Allowances, [215] 1814, 1815

MELVILLE, Mr. G., Stoke-upon-Trent

Army—City of London Volunteers—The Artillery Company's Drill Ground, Res. [215] 817
 Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment, 2R. [217] 588; Re-comm. cl. 3, 781; Comis. add. cl. 958
 Endowed Schools Act (1869), Motion for a Committee, [214] 292
 Married Women's Property Act (1870) Amendment (No. 2), Comm. [214] 1364
 Mercantile Marine—Loss of the "Sea Queen," [215] 105, 108
 Parliamentary Elections (Expenses), 2R. [216] 1118
 Railway and Canal Traffic, Comm. cl. 20, [215] 387
 Register for Parliamentary and Municipal Electors, Re-comm. cl. 3, [215] 795
 Taxes on Locomotion, Res. [215] 449

Mercantile Marine

Board of Trade—Fog Signals, Question, Mr. Eastwick; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue Feb 7, [214] 152
 Collisions at Sea—Legislation, Question, Mr. G. Bentinck; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue Feb 13, [214] 373
 Danger Signals (Admiral Sir W. H. Hoyle), Question, Mr. Ilisbury-Tracy; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue June 10, [216] 723
 Distress Ship Signals, Question, Colonel Beresford; Answer, Sir Henry Storks May 12, [215] 1785

Mercantile Marine—cont.

Light at Portpatrick Harbour, Question, Mr. Agnew; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue Mar 24, [215] 8

Loss of Life at Sea, Question, Mr. Plimsoll; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue Feb 17, [214] 642

Merchant Shipping Code Bill, Question, Mr. Corrane; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue Mar 6, [214] 1897

The Lifeboat at Balbriggan, Question, Mr. Hambro; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue April 24, [215] 900

The Merchant Service—Supply of Seamen, Question, Mr. Norwood; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue Feb 18, [214] 872

The Straits of Magellan, Question, Sir James Elphinstone; Answer, Mr. Goschen Feb 28, [214] 1098; Question, Mr. Muntz; Answer, Mr. Goschen April 4, [215] 605

Mercantile Marine—Lights in the Channel

Amendt. on Committee of Supply May 9, To leave out from "That," and add "it is expedient that fog signals, either steam whistles or guns, or both, be added to the lights on the Skerries Island, the Codling Bank, and the Tuskar Rock, and that the lights on the Codling Bank be improved; also that a Royal Commission be appointed to inquire into the whole subject of fog signals before the desultory establishment of signals at various points makes it difficult to apply a proper system for the whole of our coasts" (Mr. Eastwick) v., [215] 1721; Question proposed, "That the words, &c.," after debate, Question put, and agreed to

Mercantile Marine—Loss of Life at Sea

Moved, "That it is expedient that a Commission be appointed to inquire and report to the Board of Trade as to the practicability of stowing conveniently in Passenger Ships such a number of Refuge Boats or Rafts, or other insubmergible appliances, as may be sufficient in their aggregate capacity to receive all on board in the event of accidents to the ship" (Mr. Cowper-Temple) July 18, [217] 619 [House counted out]

Mercantile Marine—Unseaworthy Ships

Moved, "That an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty, praying that She will be pleased to issue a Royal Commission to inquire into the condition of, and certain practices connected with, the Commercial Marine of the United Kingdom" (Mr. Plimsoll) Mar 4, [214] 1819

Amendt. to leave out "an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty, praying that She will be pleased to issue a Royal Commission to inquire into," and insert "it is desirable that a Bill be forthwith introduced into this House by Her Majesty's Government for the purpose of constituting a Commission to inquire into upon oath and report upon" (Mr. Clay) v., 1894; Question proposed, "That the words, &c.," after long debate, Amendt. and Motion withdrawn

[cont.]

[cont.]

MER      MER      { SESSION 1878 }      MER      MET
 214—215—216—217.

Mercantile Marine—Unseaworthy Ships—cont.

*Loss of Life at Sea—Unseaworthy Ships—Issue of a Royal Commission, Question, Observations, The Earl of Lauderdale; Reply, Earl Cowper; short debate thereon Mar 25, [215] 94; Question, Mr. Plimsoll; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue Mar 28, 208; Question, Mr. T. E. Smith; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue April 28, 1024; Question, Sir James Elphinstone; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue May 20, [216] 187; Question, Mr. Alderman Lusk; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue July 10, [217] 147; —Mr. Plimsoll and the Board of Trade, Question, Sir Stafford Northcote; Answer Mr. Chichester Fortescue July 10, [217] 161; Question, Mr. Slater-Booth; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue July 28, 1094*

Merchant Shipping Act

The "Northfleet" Collision—Release of the "Murillo," Question, Mr. T. E. Smith; Answer, Viscount Enfield Feb 18, [214] 600; Feb 20, 728; Mar 31, [215] 343
The "Sea Queen," Question, Mr. Plimsoll; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue April 7, [215] 637
The Steamship "Peru," Question, Mr. Hambro; Answer, Mr. Bruce Feb 28, [214] 1099; Questions deferred, Mr. Hambro; Observations, Mr. Chichester Fortescue, Mr. Bruce Mar 3, 1184; Questions, Mr. Hambro, Sir John Pakington; Answers, Mr. Bruce Mar 6, 1394

Merchant Shipping Act, 1871

Cardiff Magistrates—Mr. Plimsoll, Question, Mr. Hussey Vivian; Answer, Mr. Bruce May 8, [215] 1682; Question, Mr. Carter; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue May 9, 1714; Explanation, Mr. Bruce May 12, 1784
Case of the "Maggie," Question, Mr. R. W. Duff; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue Mar 28, [215] 209; Question, Mr. Macfie; Answer, Mr. Winterbotham April 7, 649
Collision between the "C. M. Palmer" and "Larnax," Question, Mr. Montagu Chambers; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue April 22, [215] 800
Commitments of Seamen—Return, Question, Mr. Plimsoll; Answer, Mr. Bruce June 6, [216] 551
Draught of Sea-going Vessels, Question, Mr. Plimsoll; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue June 17, [216] 1061
Merchant Shipping Act Amendment—Legislation—Deck Loads, Question, Mr. Alderman Lusk; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue June 5, [216] 515
Overloading—The "Westdale," Question, Mr. Carter; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue June 27, [216] 1496
Punishment of Sailors—The Ship "Wimbleton," Questions, Mr. Gilpin, Mr. Carter; Answers, Mr. Bruce June 16, [216] 992
The "Druid," Question, Mr. Hambro; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue Mar 27, [215] 228; Question, Mr. Carter; Answer, Mr. Bruce June 27, [216] 1497

Merchant Shipping Act, 1871—cont.

The "Eleanor"—Mr. Plimsoll and the Board of Trade, Question, Mr. Plimsoll; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue April 7, [215] 639; Question, Mr. T. E. Smith; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue June 26, [216] 1416
The "Hindoo" and "Parga," Questions, Mr. Plimsoll, Sir John Pakington; Answers, Mr. Chichester Fortescue Mar 24, [215] 10
*The "Knight Templar"—Explanation, Question, Mr. Rathbone; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue Mar 27, [215] 225
The "Parga," Question, Mr. T. E. Smith; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue May 1, [215] 1297
The Thames Pilots, Question, Colonel Beresford; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue July 7, [216] 1860
 215] Unseaworthy Ships, Questions, Mr. Kavanagh, Mr. R. W. Duff, Mr. Hambro, Mr. Liddell; Answers, Mr. Chichester Fortescue, Mr. Bruce Mar 25, 102; Questions, Mr. Carter; Answers, Mr. Chichester Fortescue 217] July 14, 316; —The "William," of Exeter, Questions, Mr. Gilpin; Answers, Mr. Chichester Fortescue July 24, 901
Wreck of the "Atlantic," Question, Mr. Crawford; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue April 7, [215] 647; Question, Sir John Pakington; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue April 26, 973*

Merchant Shipping Act—Rules of the Road at Sea

Moved, "That, in the opinion of this House, other regulations are required, with a view to the better avoidance of the annual great loss of life and of property which is caused by the want of more stringent regulations on the subject" (Mr. Bentinck) Mar 27, [215] 248; after debate, Question put, and negatived

Merchant Shipping Acts Amendment Bill (Mr. Bonham-Carter, Mr. Chichester Fortescue, Mr. Arthur Peel)

- c. Considered in Committee; Bill ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup>, after short debate May 13, [215] 1981 [Bill 182]
- Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>, after short debate July 21, [217] 690; Committee; Report Committee (on re-comm.)—B.P. July 25, 1023; Report [Bill 253]
- Considered *; read 3<sup>o</sup> July 28
- l. Read 1<sup>o</sup>* (The Earl Cowper) July 29 (No. 254) Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>, after short debate July 31, 1818 Committee * August 1 (No. 269)
- Report *; read 3<sup>o</sup> August 2 Royal Assent August 5 [36 & 37 Vict. c. 85]

Metalliferous Mines Rating Bill

(Sir John St. Aubyn, Mr. Brydges Willyams, Mr. Arthur P. Vivian, Mr. Pease)

- c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup>* April 7 [Bill 128]
- 2R. [Dropped]

MET MET { GENERAL INDEX } MET MET
214-215-216-217.

METROPOLIS

Central London Sick Asylum, Question, Mr. Gathorne Hardy; Answer, Mr. Hibbert May 1, [215] 1295
Chapter House, Westminster Abbey, Question, Mr. Baillie Cochran; Answer, Mr. Gladstone June 27, [216] 1496
Fires—Water Supply, Question, Mr. W. Lowther; Answer, Mr. Stansfeld July 24, [217] 903
Hackney Carriages—Authorized Book of Cab Fares—Railway Stations, Question, Mr. W. Lowther; Answer, Mr. Bruce July 24, [217] 902;—Cabmen's Plates, Question, Lord George Hamilton; Answer, Mr. Bruce Feb 18, [214] 598
Hampton Court Green, Question, Sir Charles W. Dilke; Answer, Mr. Ayrton Mar 24, [215] 8
Knightsbridge Barracks, Millbank, and Hyde Park, Question, Sir Thomas Bateson; Answer, Mr. Cardwell July 31, [217] 1829
Metropolitan Police—Legal Advice, Question, Mr. Stapleton; Answer, Mr. Bruce Feb 14, [214] 487;—Lighting of Cells, Question, Mr. R. N. Fowler; Answer, Mr. Bruce July 28, [217] 1088
National Gallery—Flooring of the New Buildings, Question, Mr. Bowring; Answer, Mr. Ayrton June 19, [216] 2170
New Courts of Justice, Question, Mr. Gregory; Answer, Mr. Ayrton Feb 10, [214] 196; Observations, Mr. Gregory; Reply, Mr. Ayrton; debate thereon May 28, [216] 398;—The Revised Designs, Questions, Mr. Wait; Answers, Mr. Ayrton July 15, [217] 398
Parliament Street—The Public Offices, Question, Mr. A. Johnston; Answer, Mr. Ayrton July 17, [217] 495; Questions, Lord Redesdale; Answers, The Duke of St. Albans, The Earl of Kimberley August 1, 1428
Science and Art—Natural History Museum, Question, Mr. Slater-Booth; Answer, Mr. Ayrton Feb 18, [214] 595; Questions, Major Beaumont; Answers, Mr. Ayrton July 29, [217] 1174; July 30, 1865; Question, Lord Elcho; Answer, Mr. W. E. Forster August 1, 1436; Question, Mr. Mundella; Answer, Mr. Gladstone August 4, 1519; Question, Mr. Goldsmid; Answer, Mr. W. E. Forster August 5, 1560
Small-Pox Hospital at Hatcham, Question, Mr. Watney; Answer, Mr. Stansfeld July 21, [217] 859
South Kensington and Bethnal Green Museums—Bethnal Green Museum—The Turner Drawings, Questions, Mr. Charles Reed; Answers, Mr. Baxter, Mr. W. E. Forster Mar 4, [214] 1283;—The Site, Question, Mr. Wheelhouse; Answer, Mr. Ayrton July 18, [217] 607;—Retirement of Mr. Cole, Question, Sir Henry Hoare; Answer, Mr. Ayrton July 10, [217] 152;—The British Museum and South Kensington, Question, Mr. Mundella; Answer, Mr. Gladstone July 24, [217] 914;—Duplicate Books, Question, Mr. Baines; Answer, Mr. Spencer Walpole July 29, [217] 1178;—Royal Academy—The Gibson Bequest, Question, Mr. C. S. Parker; Answer, Mr. Ayrton July 17, [217] 493

METROPOLIS—cont.

Street Traffic Regulation, Question, Mr. Herbert; Answer, Mr. Ayrton May 27, [216] 498; Questions, Mr. Liddell, Viscount Mahon; Answers, Mr. Bruce June 16, 994
The Parks
Bathing Accommodation—Mrs. Brown's Bequest, Question, Mr. Holms; Answer, Mr. Gladstone April 28, [215] 1028
Hyde Park—The Regulations, Question, Mr. Collins; Answer, Mr. Bruce June 9, [216] 840;—The Serpentine, Question, Mr. F. S. Powell; Answer, Mr. Ayrton Feb 18, [214] 601;—Bathing in the, Question, Sir Thomas Chambers; Answer, Mr. Ayrton July 30, [217] 1254
The Green Park, Question, Mr. Brady; Answer, Mr. Ayrton April 29, [215] 1137
Kensington Gardens, Question, Sir Henry Hoare; Answer, Mr. Bruce June 30, [216] 1554
Parks Regulation Act—Hyde Park—The New Rules—See that title
The Price of Gas, Question, Sir Charles W. Dilke; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue Mar 27, [215] 221
The Thames Embankment, Question, Mr. J. G. Talbot; Answer, Colonel Hogg May 27, [216] 502
[See title Charing Cross and Victoria Embankment Approach Bill]
The Wellington Monument, Question, Mr. Goldsmid; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer July 14, [217] 308 (Part. P. No. 335)
Metropolis Buildings Act Amendment Bill (Dr. Brewer, Mr. W. M. Torrens, Mr. M'Arthur, Mr. Locke)
c. Ordered; read 1st Feb 12 [Bill 54]
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2nd" April 2, [215] 488
Amendt. to leave out "now," and add "upon this day six months" (Mr. Francois Powell); Question proposed, "That 'now,' &c.;" after debate, Amendt. and Motion withdrawn; Bill withdrawn
Metropolis Water Act (1871)
Question, Mr. Agar-Ellis; Answer, Mr. Stansfeld June 9, [216] 636
Metropolitan Board of Works
Thanksgiving in the Metropolitan Cathedral, Question, Mr. Bowring; Answer, Colonel Hogg Mar 4, [214] 1285
Metropolitan Commons Supplemental Bill (Mr. Winterbotham, Mr. Secretary Bruce)
c. Ordered; read 1st Mar 27 [Bill 107]
Read 2nd Mar 31
Referred to Select Committee* April 21
Report of Select Comm.* May 6 [Bill 153]
Committee* (on re-comm.); Report May 9
Read 3rd May 12
l. Read 1st (E. of Morley) May 18 (No. 110)
Read 2nd May 23
Committee*; Report June 23
Read 3rd June 26
Royal Assent July 7 [36 & 37 Vict. c. 86]

cont.

MET MIA { SESSION 1873 } MID MIL
 214-215-216-217.

Metropolitan Tramways Provisional Orders Bill

(Mr. Arthur Peel, Mr. Chichester Fortescue)

- c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> Feb 20 [Bill 76]
 Read 2<sup>o</sup>, and referred to a Select Committee Mar 7

Order [7th March] read, and discharged

Select Committee appointed, "to consider the schemes contained in the Metropolitan Tramways Provisional Orders Bill of this Session, and to report whether, in their opinion, it is desirable that all or any of the proposed lines of Tramways should be constructed within the Metropolitan area under the jurisdiction respectively of the Corporation of the City of London and the Metropolitan Board of Works" (Mr. Arthur Peel) Mar 24

And, on May 28, Committee nominated as follows:—Sir Francis Goldsmid (Chairman), Mr. A. Egerton, Mr. J. S. Hardy, Sir Wilfrid Lawson, Mr. Locke, Sir John St. Aubyn, and Mr. Salter-Booth; April 30, Sir Francis Goldsmid (Chairman) disch., Lord Henley (Chairman) added

Report of Select Comm. * May 22 (No. 222)
 Bill reported * May 22 [Bill 173]

Re-comm. *; Report May 26

Read 3<sup>o</sup> * May 27

- i. Read 1<sup>o</sup> * (Earl Cowper) June 9 (No. 139)
 Read 2<sup>o</sup> *, and committed June 17
 And, on June 27, the Lords following were appointed:—D. Buckingham (Chairman), M. Winchester, L. Eliot, L. Leigh, L. Hylton
 Special Report from Select Committee July 21 [No. 228]
 Bill reported * July 21 (No. 229)
 Committee * July 28
 Report * July 29
 Read 3<sup>o</sup> * July 31
 Royal Assent August 5 [36 & 37 Vict. c. coxx.]

Metropolitan Tramways Provisional Orders (No. 2) Bill

(Mr. Arthur Peel, Mr. Chichester Fortescue)

- c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> Feb 20 [Bill 77]
 Read 2<sup>o</sup> *, and referred to a Select Committee Mar 7

Order [7th March] read, and discharged May 9

Committee *; Report May 12

Read 3<sup>o</sup> * May 13

- i. Read 1<sup>o</sup> * (Earl Cowper) May 13 (No. 114)
 Read 2<sup>o</sup> * May 26
 Committee * May 27
 Report * June 9
 Read 3<sup>o</sup> * June 16
 Royal Assent July 7 [36 & 37 Vict. c. 85]

Mexico—Diplomatic Relations

Question, Mr. H. B. Sheridan; Answer, Viscount Enfield August 5, [217] 1563

MIALL, Mr. E., Bradford

*Disestablishment of the Churches of England and Scotland, Res. [216] 16

Endowed Schools Act (1869), Motion for a Committee, [214] 292

France—Treaty of Commerce (1872), [216] 1783

University Education (Ireland), 2R. Amendt. [214] 1688

MIDDLETON, Viscount

Chelsea Water, 2R. [214] 1019
 Church Association—Confession, Motion for a Select Committee, [217] 289
 Marriages (Ireland), 2R. [215] 91; Comm. 892
 Rock of Cashel, 2R. Amendt. [216] 421
 Supreme Court of Judicature, Commons Amendments. [217] 890

Military Manœuvres Bill

(Mr. Secretary Cardwell, Sir Henry Storks, Mr. Campbell-Bannerman)

- c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> * June 30 [Bill 215]
 Read 2<sup>o</sup> * July 7
 Committee *—r.p. July 8
 Committee *; Report July 10
 Committee *; Report July 11
 Considered * July 14
 Read 3<sup>o</sup> * July 15
 i. Read 1<sup>o</sup> * (Marquess of Lansdowne) July 17
 Read 2<sup>o</sup> * July 22 (No. 216)
 Committee *; Report July 24
 Read 3<sup>o</sup> * July 25
 Royal Assent July 28 [36 & 37 Vict. c. 58]

Militia Pay Acts Amendment Bill

(Mr. Campbell-Bannerman, Mr. Secretary Cardwell)

- c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> * July 30 [Bill 373]
 Read 2<sup>o</sup> * July 31
 Committee *; Report; Considered; read 3<sup>o</sup> August 1
 i. Read 1<sup>o</sup> * (E. Camperdown) August 1 (No. 271)
 Read 2<sup>o</sup> *; Committee negatived August 2
 Read 3<sup>o</sup> * August 4
 Royal Assent August 5 [36 & 37 Vict. c. 84]

Militia (Service, &c.) Bill

(Mr. Secretary Cardwell, Sir Henry Storks, Mr. Campbell-Bannerman)

- c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> * June 30 [Bill 216]
 Read 2<sup>o</sup> * July 8
 Committee *; Report July 7
 Considered * July 8
 Read 3<sup>o</sup> * July 10
 i. Read 1<sup>o</sup> * (M. of Lansdowne) July 11 (No. 208)
 Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>, after short debate July 15, [217] 390
 Committee * July 24 (No. 287)
 Report * July 25
 Read 3<sup>o</sup> * July 28
 Royal Assent August 5 [36 & 37 Vict. c. 68]

MILLER, Mr. J., Edinburgh City

Church of Scotland (Patronage), Res. [216] 1108

Egypt—Claims of British Subjects, [217] 499

Elementary Education (Scotland) Act, [216] 1412

Ganpowder, Shipment of, at Newhaven, [216] 1411

Law Agents (Scotland), Comm. cl. 2, [216] 544; cl. 8, 614

Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister, 2R. [214] 827

Navy—Admiralty Contracts, [216] 838

Parks Regulation Act—New Rules, [214] 228

[cont.]

MIL MON (GENERAL INDEX) MON MON
214—215—216—217.

MILLER, Mr. J.—cont.

- Parliament—Whitsun Recess, Adjournment for, [216] 497
Post Office—Edinburgh General Post Office, [216] 1248
Edinburgh Sorters, [215] 1678, 2022
Railway and Canal Traffic, 2R. [214] 1054
Railway Regulation, Comm. [217] 1249
Supply—Learned Societies, [215] 1796
Post Office Services, [217] 1116
Public Education (Scotland), [216] 1464
Survey of the United Kingdom, [215] 786

Mine Dues Bill

(Mr. Lopez, Mr. Gregory)

- c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> Feb 10 [Bill 44]
2R. [Dropped]

Mines—Appointment of Assistant Inspectors of

Question, Mr. Liddell; Answer, Mr. Bruce
Feb 18, [214] 599

Minors Protection Bill

(Mr. Mitchell Henry, Mr. Headlam, Mr. Butt, Mr. Scowfield, Mr. Charles Gilpin)
c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> Feb 18 [Bill 69]
2R., debate adjourned June 25, [216] 1374
Bill withdrawn * July 7

MINTO, Earl of

Constabulary (Scotland) Superannuation, [215]
1710

Monastic and Conventual Institutions

Bill (Mr. Newdegate, Mr. Holt, Sir Thomas Chambers)

- c. Motion for Leave (Mr. Newdegate) Feb 14, [214] 520; after short debate, Question put; A. 74, N. 31; M. 48; Bill ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> A. 74, N. 31; M. 48; Bill ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2<sup>o</sup>" July 2, [216] 1650 [Bill 62]
Amendt. to leave out "now," and add "upon this day three months" (Mr. Pease); Question proposed, "That 'now,' &c.;" after debate, Question put; A. 96, N. 131; M. 35
Words added; main Question, as amended, put, and agreed to; Bill put off for three months
Personal Explanation, Mr. Whalley July 4, 1788

MONCK, Viscount

Government of Ireland, 1R. [216] 630, 638
Peace Preservation (Ireland) Acts Continuance, 2R. [216] 340
Rock of Cashel, 2R. [216] 428

MONCKTON, Hon. G. F. M., Nottinghamshire, N.

Criminal Law Amendment, Motion for a Select Committee, [217] 460
Rating (Liability and Value), Consid. Amendt. [217] 420
Supply—Post Office Services, [217] 1111

MONCKTON, Mr. F., Staffordshire, W.
Army—Yeomanry Cavalry—Horse Duty, [216] 2022

Landlord and Tenant, 2R. [216] 1649
Parliament—Rules and Orders of the House, [217] 38

MONK, Mr. C. J., Gloucester City

Ecclesiastical Commissioners, [215] 1294
Juries, Comm. cl. 1, Amendt. [215] 2071; cl. 45, [216] 588

Parliament—Business of the House, [216] 1232
Post Office—Compulsory Registration of Stamps, &c. [217] 1064

Mail Contracts—Cape and Zanzibar, Motion for Adjournment, [216] 1307, 1308, 1422
Public Worship Facilities, 2R. [214] 970; Comm. cl. 6, Amendt. 1959

Railway and Canal Traffic, Leave, [214] 243; Comm. cl. 4, Amendt. [215] 371, 372; cl. 7, 375; cl. 10, Amendt. 379; cl. 11, 384; cl. 33, 596

Supply—Charity Commission, [215] 1014
Civil Service Commission, [215] 1018
Court of Chancery, [215] 1773
Criminal Proceedings, Scotland, [215] 1777
Houses of Parliament, [215] 781
Miscellaneous Expenses, Amendt. [215] 1818

Post Office, [214] 2059; [217] 1110
Privy Council for Trade, &c. [215] 1018
Public Works in Ireland, [215] 1004

Secret Services, [215] 1023
Supreme Court of Judicature, Comm. cl. 73, [217] 187

MONSELL, Right Hon. W. (Postmaster General), Limerick Co.

Post Office—Questions, &c.
Anglo-Italian Mails, [214] 1286
Annuities, [214] 892
Argentine Republic, Postal Arrangements with, [215] 904
Book Post, [215] 647
Calais, Detention of Mails at, [215] 1713
Cape Colony—Postal Contracts, [214] 1101
Dublin Post Office—Sorters and Letter Carriers, [217] 913, 1528
Edinburgh General Post Office—Sorters, [215] 1678, 2022;—Salaries, [216] 1248
Glasgow Post Office, [215] 903; [217] 911
Halfpenny Post Cards, [214] 1102
Ireland—Galway, Telegraph Stations in, [216] 355;—Sub-Postmasters, [217] 1338
Letters, Delivery of, [217] 1817
Newspapers, [215] 12
Newspapers Insufficiently Stamped, [214] 1184, 1519
"Post Office Tea," [216] 431
Registered Letters, [214] 1613
Registration of Letters containing Postage Stamps, [217] 910, 911, 1329
Religious Periodicals, Registration of, [215] 1788, 1787
Savings Bank Account, [215] 604
Savings Banks Department—Increase of Staff, [217] 1529
Telegrams between France and England, [215] 1299
Telegrams in French, [215] 1140
Telegrams to Foreign Countries, [215] 901

[cont.]

MON MOR { SESSION 1873 } MOR MUN
 214-215-216-217.

MONBELL, Right Hon. W.—cont.

- Telegraph Act, 1869—Compensations, [215] 345
- Telegraph Department—Capital Expenditure, [215] 1558;—Carmarthen District, ib.;—Purchase of the Midland Railway System, 976
- Telegraphic Department, [217] 313;—Herring's Telegraph Printing Instrument, 1334
- Telegraph Extensions, Expenditure for, [215] 645
- Telegraphs—Charges for Messages, [214] 195;—Extension to Orkney and Shetland, 372;—Purchase of, [216] 101, 1165;—Rural Districts, 1229;—Return Messages, [217] 1087
- Post Office (Balances)—Telegraphic Department, Res. [217] 1210
- Supply—Post Office Packet Service, [216] 1501
- Post Office Services, [217] 1112, 1119, 1122

MONSON, Lord

- United States—Consular Convention—Offences on the High Seas, [217] 1512

MONTAGU, Right Hon. Lord R., Huntingdonshire

- Ireland—Magee College, [214] 898
- Register for Parliamentary and Municipal Electors, Leave, [214] 577
- University Education (Ireland), [214] 892, 893, 1038, 1039; 2R. Amendt. 1234

MONTEAGLE, Lord

- Parliament—Address in Answer to the Speech, [214] 12

MORGAN, Mr. G. Osborne, Denbighshire

- Burials, Leave, [214] 178; 2R. [215] 158, 172, 210; Comm. [217] 122, 128
- Household Franchise (Counties), 2R. [217] 822
- Juries, Comm. cl. 5, Amendt. [216] 526; cl. 45, 538
- Married Women's Property Act (1870) Amendment, 2R. [214] 878
- Metropolis—New Courts of Justice, [216] 398
- Parliament—Privilege—Appellate Jurisdiction of the House of Lords, [217] 357, 369
- Railway and Canal Traffic, Comm. cl. 22, [215] 592
- Superannuation Act Amendment, Comm. cl. 1, [215] 1705; Amendt. 1706, 1707
- [216] Supreme Court of Judicature, 2R. 664; Comm. cl. 5, 1590, 1598, 1599, 1628, 1633; Amendt. 1635, 1638; cl. 6, 1738, 1742; cl. 13, Amendt. 1748, 1749; cl. 18, 1790; cl. 22, 1798; cl. 24, 1804; cl. 29, 1880, 1883; cl. 31, 1887
- [217] cl. 50, 47; cl. 54, 177; cl. 73, 187; Schedule, Sec. 1, 343; Schedule, Sec. 2, Amendt. 344; Consid. cl. 22, 680
- University Education (Ireland), 2R. Amendt. [214] 1228
- University Tests (Dublin) (No. 3), Comm. cl. 3, [215] 1534

MORLEY, Earl of

- Constabulary (Scotland) Superannuation, [215] 1710
- Criminal Law—Newbury Magistrates, [214] 1514
- Elementary Education Act—School Boards, [216] 988
- Pollution of Rivers, 2R. [216] 1; Comm. [217] 1161
- Poor Allotments Management, 2R. [214] 1515
- Poor Law—Children of Roman Catholic Parents, Address for a Return, [214] 193
- Rating (Liability and Value), 2R. [217] 985
- Registration of Births and Deaths, 2R. [215] 892, 895; Comm. 1667
- Salmon Fisheries, 2R. [217] 855
- Steam Threshing Machines, 2R. [217] 601
- Vagrants Law Amendment, 2R. [215] 2012

MORLEY, Mr. S., Bristol

- Burials, 2R. [215] 193
- Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment, 3R. [217] 1015

MORRISON, Mr. W., Plymouth

- Municipal Elections (Cumulative Vote), 2R. [217] 485
- Parliamentary Elections (Expenses), 2R. [216] 1127
- Rating of Government Property—Consolidated Rate, [216] 357
- University Tests (Dublin) (No. 2), [215] 308

MOWBRAY, Right Hon. J. R., Oxford University

- Army—Military Centres—Oxford, Motion for a Committee, [216] 361
- Endowed Schools Act (1869) Amendment, Comm. add. cl. [217] 951

MUNDILLA, Mr. A. J., Sheffield

- Agricultural Children, 2R. [214] 700, 701; 3R. Amendt. [215] 1708
- Coal, Scarcity of, Motion for a Committee, [214] 815
- Contagious Diseases Acts Repeal, 2R. [216] 234, 284, 285
- Criminal Law—Chipping Norton Magistrates, [216] 429
- Criminal Law Amendment, Motion for a Select Committee, [217] 459
- Currency—Bank Act, Res. [215] 123, 151
- Duke of Edinburgh—Queen's Message, [217] 1097
- Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment, Re-comm. cl. 10, [217] 791; add. cl. 802; Consid. cl. 28, 962
- Factory Acts Amendment, Leave, [214] 283; 2R. [216] 818, 828; [217] 1548, 1552
- International Law—Arbitration, Motion for an Address, [217] 73
- Metropolis—South Kensington and Bethnal Green Museums, [217] 914, 1519
- Parliament—Order of Business, [216] 841
- Railway and Canal Traffic, Consid. cl. 10, Amendt. [215] 720
- Seduction Laws Amendment, 2R. [215] 475
- Supply—British Museum, [215] 1795
- Post Office Services, [217] 1115
- Workshops Act, Res. [215] 995

MUN MUN { GENERAL INDEX } MUN MUN
214—215—216—217.

Municipal Boroughs Extension Bill
(*Mr. Henry Sampson, Mr. Wykeham Martin,
Mr. Staveley Hill*)

- c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> Feb 11 [Bill 48]
Moved, "That the Order for 2<sup>o</sup> be discharged"
July 9, [217] 120
After short debate, Moved, "That the debate be now adjourned" (Mr. Robert Fowler); after further short debate, Motion agreed to Moved, "That the debate be adjourned till this day three months" (Mr. Henry Sampson); Question put; A. 185, N. 91; M. 94

Municipal Corporation (Borough Funds)
Bill

- (Mr. Secretary Bruce, Mr. Winterbotham)
c. Question, Mr. Rathbone; Answer, Mr. Bruce
Mar 25, [215] 105
Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> June 9 [Bill 186]
Bill withdrawn * July 23

Municipal Corporations Act—The Devonport Watch Committee

Question, Sir Wilfrid Lawson; Answer, Mr.
Bruce May 12, [215] 1783

Municipal Corporations Evidence Bill
(Mr. Hinde Palmer, Mr. Watkin Williams)

- c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> May 7 [Bill 155]
Read 2<sup>o</sup> May 14
Committee *; Report May 21
Read 3<sup>o</sup> May 23
l. Read 1<sup>o</sup> (Lord Romilly) May 26 (No. 129)
Read 2<sup>o</sup> June 13
Committee *; Report June 16
Read 3<sup>o</sup> June 17
Royal Assent July 7 [36 & 37 Vict. c. 38]

Municipal Elections (Cumulative Vote)
Bill (Mr. Collins, Mr. Morrison)

- c. Motion for Leave (Mr. Collins) June 26, [216]
1465; Bill ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> [Bill 206]
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2<sup>o</sup>"
July 16, [217] 489
Amendt. to leave out "now," and add "upon this day three months" (Mr. Hardcastle); Question proposed, "That 'now,' &c.," after debate, Debate adjourned
Bill withdrawn * August 4

Municipal Franchise (Ireland) Bill
(Mr. Butt, Mr. Patrick Smyth)

- c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> Feb 16 [Bill 73]
Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>, after short debate April 28, [215]
889
Committee [Dropped]

Municipal Officers Superannuation Bill
(*Mr. Rathbone, Mr. Massey, Mr. Birley, Mr.
Dixon, Mr. Morley, Mr. Cross*)

- c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> Feb 7 [Bill 6]
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2<sup>o</sup>"
Mar 5, [214] 1866
Amendt. to leave out "now," and add "upon this day six months" (Mr. Joshua Fielden);
after debate, Question put, "That 'now,'
&c.;" A. 101, N. 44; M. 57

Municipal Officers Superannuation Bill—cont.
Main Question put, and agreed to; Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>
Committee *—R.P. April 29
Committee *—R.P. May 13
Bill withdrawn * July 21

Municipal Privileges (Ireland) Bill
(Mr. Butt, Mr. Patrick Smyth)

- c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> Feb 19 [Bill 74]
2R. [Dropped]

MUNSTER, Mr. W. F., Mallow

Landlord and Tenant, 2R. [216] 1649
Monastic and Conventual Institutions, 2R.
[216] 1678, 1882
Parliament—Order of Business, [216] 1312
Parliament—Breach of Privilege—"Pall Mall
Gazette," Res. [215] 530, 531, 539, 541
Peace Preservation (Ireland), 2R. [215] 2064;
Comm. [216] 62; Proviso, 69, 70
University Tests (Dublin) (No. 3), 2R. [215]
775

MUNTZ, Mr. P. H., Birmingham

Army—Auxiliary Forces—Adjutants, [215]
1871
Army Estimates—Administration of the Army,
[216] 1293
Conveyancing (Scotland), Comm. cl. 41, [216]
512
Crown Private Estates, 2R. [217] 706
Duke of Edinburgh's Annuity, Comm. cl. 1,
[217] 1443, 1445
France and Belgium—Travellers' Luggage,
Examination of, [216] 1230
General Valuation (Ireland), Comm. [216]
1332
India—Euphrates Valley Railway, Res. [215]
627
Juries, Comm. cl. 1, Amendt. [215] 2071, 2072;
cl. 5, Amendt. [216] 517, 518; cl. 45, 534

Labourers Cottages (Scotland), 2R. [217] 479
Married Women's Property Act (1870) Amendment, 2R. [214] 686
Mercantile Marine—Straits of Magellan, [215]
605

Merchant Shipping Acts Amendment, Comm.
cl. 15, Amendt. [217] 1026, 1026
Minors Protection, 2R. [216] 1377
Permissive Prohibitory Liquor, 2R. [215] 1651
Post Office—Telegrams to Foreign Countries,
[215] 900

Railway and Canal Traffic, Comm. cl. 11, [215]
385; cl. 21, Amendt. 387, 590; cl. 38, 596;
Lords Amendts. [216] 1302

216] Rating (Liability and Value), 2R. 302; Comm.
cl. 3, 1007, 1021, 1028, 1073, 1074, 1077;
Amendt. 1079, 1080, 1084; cl. 4, 1175,
1183; cl. 13, Amendt. 1191, 1193; cl. 15,
1425; add. cl. 1440, 1443

217] Re-comm. 614; 3R. 689
Register for Parliamentary and Municipal Electors, Re-comm. cl. 3, [215] 794
Rome, Court of—Religious Corporations, [215]
295
Spain — "Vigilante," Capture of the, [217]
1524

[cont.]

[cont.]

MUN NAV { SESSION 1878 } NAV NAV
 214—215—216—217.

MUNNS, Mr. P. H.—cont.

- Supply—British Embassy Houses, &c. [215] 1007
 Household of the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, [215] 1457
 Houses of Parliament, Amendt. [215] 782
 Works and Buildings, [215] 786
 Ways and Means—Financial Statement, Comm. [215] 705
 Weights and Measures Acts, Res. [216] 1089
 Weights and Measures (Metric System), 2R. [217] 461

MURPHY, Mr. N. D., Cork City

- Ireland—Irish Railways, Purchase of, Res. [215] 1181
 Peace Preservation (Ireland), Comm. d. 2, [216] 67

Mutiny Bill (Mr. Bonham-Carter, Mr. Secretary Cardwell, Mr. Campbell-Bannerman)

- c. Ordered * Mar 3
 Read 1° * Mar 21
 Read 2° * Mar 24
 Committee * ; Report Mar 27
 Considered * Mar 28
 Read 3° * Mar 31
 Observations, Colonel North ; Reply, Mr. Cardwell Mar 31, [215] 889
 l. Read 1°* (Marquess of Lansdowne) April 1
 Read 2°* April 3
 Committee ; Report April 21, 722
 Read 3°* April 22
 Royal Assent April 24 [36 Vict. c. 10]

NAPIER AND ETTRICK, Lord

- Agricultural Children, 2R. [216] 721
 Agricultural Returns for Scotland, [216] 1478
 Army—The "Boxer Shrapnell" Shell, Motion for Correspondence, [217] 969
 Church of Scotland (Patronage), Res. [216] 1047, 1052
 Improvement of Land, Motion for a Committee, [215] 509
 India—Destruction of Life by Wild Beasts, [216] 1485
 Persian Government—Concession to Baron de Reuter, Address for Correspondence, [217] 298

National Debt Commissioners (Annuities) Bill

- (Mr. Baxter, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer)
 c. Ordered ; read 1°* June 23 [Bill 201]
 Read 2°* June 30
 Committee * ; Report July 1
 Read 3°* July 2
 l. Read 1°* (Marquess of Lansdowne) July 3
 Read 2°* July 8 (No. 191)
 Committee * ; Report July 10
 Read 3°* July 14
 Royal Assent July 21 [36 & 37 Vict. c. 44]

NAVY

- Admiralty Contracts, Question, Mr. Miller ; Answer, Mr. Shaw Lefevre June 12, [216] 886
 Age of Cadets, Question, Mr. Fitzwilliam Dick ; Answer, Mr. Goschen July 10, [217] 151

NAVY—cont.

- Army Relief—North America and the West Indies, Question, Major Arbuthnot ; Answer, Mr. Goschen Mar 24, [215] 18
 Assistant Surgeons, Question, Sir Dominic Corrigan ; Answer, Mr. Goschen July 30, [217] 1253
 "Britannia" Training Ship, Questions, Mr. C. Dalrymple, Lord Elcho ; Answer, Mr. Goschen April 29, [215] 1138
 Chatham Dockyard Railways, Question, Mr. Holmes ; Answer, Mr. Goschen July 14, [217] 315 ; The River Wall, Question, Mr. J. B. Smith ; Answer, Mr. Goschen July 28, [217] 1098 ; Questions, Mr. Cawley ; Answers, Mr. Goschen, Sir Henry Storks August 4, 1531 ; August 5, 1562
 Contract Prices, Question, Sir James Elphinstone ; Answer, Mr. Shaw Lefevre April 8, [215] 519
 Good-Service Pensions, Question, Admiral Erskine ; Answer, Mr. Goschen April 8, [215] 524
 Greenwich Naval College—Dr. Armstrong, Question, Mr. A. Guest ; Answer, Mr. Goschen Feb 28, [214] 1097
 Greenwich Pensioners, Question, Mr. Stone ; Answer, Mr. Goschen April 8, [215] 519
 Half Pay of Officers, Observations, Sir James Elphinstone ; Reply, Mr. Goschen ; short debate thereon Mar 24, [215] 20
 H.M.S. "Devastation"—Postponement of Notice, Observations, The Earl of Camperdown ; Reply, The Earl of Lauderdale ; short debate thereon Feb 24, [214] 829 ; Question, Observations, The Earl of Lauderdale ; Reply, The Earl of Camperdown ; short debate thereon Mar 31, [215] 332 ; Observations, Lord Henry Lennox ; Reply, Mr. Goschen ; debate theron April 3, 567 ; Question, Observations, The Earl of Lauderdale ; Reply, The Earl of Camperdown May 26, [216] 427
 Dimensions, Weight, &c. P. P. c. 249
 Naval Retirement, Question, Mr. Hanbury-Tracy ; Answer, Mr. Goschen May 1, [215] 1293 ; Question, Admiral Erskine ; Answer, Mr. Goschen July 24, [217] 911
 Navy Estimates, Postponement of Motions Mar 24, [215] 20 — Statement of the First Lord of the Admiralty on moving the First Vote, 32
 Officers of the Navy—Relative Rank, Question, Mr. H. Samuelson ; Answer, Mr. Shaw Lefevre August 1, [217] 1435
 Pebble Powder—The Review at Portsmouth, Question, The Earl of Carnarvon ; Answer, The Earl of Camperdown ; short debate thereon July 10, [217] 141 ; Question, Lord Vivian ; Answer, The Earl of Camperdown July 25, 984
 Post Office Orders, Question, Sir John Hay ; Answer, Mr. Goschen Mar 8, [214] 1395
 Sale of Greenwich Hospital Estates, Question, Mr. Fawcett ; Answer, Mr. Goschen July 24, [217] 915
 Shipbuilding—Plans of the Government, Question, Lord Henry Lennox ; Answer, Mr. Goschen July 24, [217] 908 Shipping Agents—The "Rowena," Question, Sir John Hay ; Answer, Mr. Goschen June 9, [216] 636

[cont.]

NAV NAV. { GENERAL INDEX } NAV NEW 214—215—216—217.

NAV—cont.

Straits of Magellan, Question, Sir James Elphinstone; Answer, Mr. Goschen Feb 28, [214] 1098; Question, Mr. Muntz; Answer, Mr. Goschen April 4, [215] 605

System of Navigation, Question, Mr. Hanbury-Tracy; Answer, Mr. Goschen Mar 31, [215] 846

The Royal Marines—Rank of Major, Question, Sir John Hay; Answer, Mr. Goschen Feb 18, [214] 601;—Captains of the Royal Marine Artillery, Question, Mr. H. Samuelson; Answer, Mr. Goschen June 30, [216] 1555;—Captains, Question, Mr. Watney; Answer, Mr. Goschen July 31, [217] 1393; Question, Mr. H. Samuelson; Answer, Mr. Shaw Lefevre August 1, 1435

The Trotman Anchor—Correspondence between Mr. Trotman and the Admiralty, Question, Mr. G. Bentinck; Answer, Mr. Goschen June 6, [216] 546; Question, Lord Henry Scott; Answer, Mr. Goschen July 17, [217] 501

Navy—Admiralty Administration

Moved, "That this House, in order to remedy certain defects in the administration of the Admiralty, recommends the Government to take into consideration the propriety of administering that department by means of a Secretary of State; and further, of appointing to the offices of Controller and of Superintendent of Her Majesty's Dockyards persons who possess practical knowledge of the duties they have to discharge, and also of altering the rule which limits their tenure of office to a fixed term of years" (Mr. Seely) Feb 25, [214] 919

After short debate, Amendt. to leave out "Secretary of State," and insert "a Board of Admiralty with such modifications of constitution and procedure as experience has shown to be desirable" (Mr. Brassey) v., 943; Question proposed, "That the words, &c.;" after further debate, Amendt. withdrawn; original Question put; A. 18, N. 114; M. 101

Navy (Promotion and Retirement)

Moved, "That a Select Committee be appointed to consider the present system of Promotion and Retirement in the Royal Navy, and to report their opinion thereon to this House" (Sir John Hay) June 10, [216] 761

Amendt. to leave out from "consider," and add "how far Naval Officers on half-pay can be more generally employed in the Consular Service, and in the numerous appointments under the Marine Department of the Board of Trade" (Mr. Thomas Brassey) v., 782; Question proposed, "That the words, &c.;" after long debate, Question put; A. 64, N. 81; M. 17; words added; main Question, as amended, put, and agreed to; Select Committee appointed

[The Committee was not nominated]

Navy—The Naval Reserve

Amendt. on Committee of Supply April 3, To leave out from "That," and add "a Select Committee be appointed to inquire into the condition of the Naval Reserves" (Mr. Brassey) v., [215] 542; Question proposed, "That the words, &c.;" after debate, Amendt. withdrawn

NELSON, Earl

Agricultural Children, 2R. [216] 720
Confession in the Church of England, Address for a Paper, [217] 1169
Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment, 2R. [217] 1166

NEVILLE-GRENVILLE, Mr. R., Somersetshire, Mid

Ireland—Shannon, Overflowing of the, Res. [214] 1589
Parliamentary Elections (Expenses), 2R. [216] 1128

Supply—Charity Commission, [215] 1014
Endowed Schools Commission, [215] 1796

NEWDEGATE, Mr. C. N., Warwickshire, N.
Board of Education (Ireland)—O'Keeffe, Rev.

Mr. Motion for a Committee, [215] 2053, 2054; Nomination of Committee, [216] 324

Burials, 2R. [216] 210

Coal Mines—Inundations of Workings, [214] 1081

Counties, Ireland (Lord Lieutenants and Magistrates), Motion for a Return, [217] 1568

Customs and Inland Revenue, Comm. Schedule A, [215] 1688

Diplomatic Relations with the Vatican, Motion for Papers, [214] 446

Duke of Edinburgh—The Queen's Message, [217] 1188

Duke of Edinburgh's Annuity, Comm. cl. 1, [217] 1446

Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment, [217] 538

Endowed Schools Act (1869) Amendment, 2R. [217] 735; Comm. Amendt. 921, 930

Endowed Schools Commissioners—Emanuel Hospital Scheme, Motion for an Address, [215] 1948

Expiring Laws Continuance, Comm. [217] 1252

France—Commercial Treaty, The New, [217] 1178, 1177

Household Franchise (Counties), 2R. [217] 831

Juries, Comm. cl. 45, [216] 540

Monastic and Conventional Institutions, Leave, [214] 526, 531; 2R. [216] 1000, 1653, 1674, 1676, 1684

Parks Regulation Act—New Rules, [214] 200

Parliament—Address in Answer to the Speech, Report, [214] 174

Business of the House, [216] 1231

Hour of Meeting of this House, [217] 1532

Ministerial Explanation, [214] 1945

Morning Sittings, [216] 435; [217] 1256

Order of Business, [214] 1946

Public Business, [217] 1335

Whitsuntide Recess, [215] 1791

[cont.]

NEW NOR (SESSION 1873) NOR NOR 214—215—216—217.

Newgate, Mr. C. N.—cont.

- Parliament—Business of the House (Committee of Supply), Res. [214] 257
- Parliament—Business of the House, Motion for a Committee, [215] 227, 236, 247
- Parliament—Easter Vacation, Motion for Adjournment, [215] 652
- Parliament—Meeting of, Motion for an Address, Amendt. [214] 908, 919
- Railway and Canal Traffic, Comm. [215] 863; S.R. 1105
- Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 3, [216] 917, 926
- Register for Parliamentary and Municipal Electors, Re-comm. [215] 717, 718, 719
- Seduction Laws Amendment, 2R. [215] 472
- Supply—Education, England and Wales, [216] 1457
- Embassy Houses at Vienna and Washington, [217] 1131
- New Palace at Westminster, [217] 1275
- Supreme Court of Judicature, Comm. [216] 1581; cl. 17, 1753; add. cl. [217] 338
- Treaties with Foreign Powers, Res. [214] 482
- University Tests (Dublin) (No. 2), [215] 306
- Ways and Means, Report, [215] 921
- Windward Islands—Ecclesiastical Policy, Res. [217] 444
- Women's Disabilities, 2R. [215] 1254

Newfoundland—Telegraphic Communication

- Question, Sir John Kennaway; Answer, Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen July 24, [217] 896

NEWPORT, Viscount, Shropshire, N.
Army—Yeomanry Uniforms, [214] 788

New Zealand Roads, &c. Loan Act (1870)
Amendment Bill

- (Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen, Mr. Baxter)
- c. Ordered; read 1st April 2 [Bill 116]
- Read 2nd April 7
- Committee; Report April 21
- Read 3rd April 22
- l. Read 1st (Earl of Kimberley) April 24
- Read 2nd April 28 (No. 76)
- Committee; Report April 29
- Read 3rd May 1
- Royal Assent May 15 [36 Vict. c. 15]

Nineteen Excavations

- Question, Mr. Macfie; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer May 22, [216] 273

Nitro-Glycerine Act (1869)

- Observations, Mr. Staveley Hill; Reply, Mr. Bruce; short debate thereon May 16, [216] 53

NORTH, Lieut-Colonel J. S., Oxfordshire
Army—Questions, &c.

- Army Fine Fund, [215] 1756
- Commander-in-Chief of the Forces in Ireland, [217] 1324
- Command of Sub-districts, [217] 497
- Officers of the — Abolition of Purchase, [217] 1561
- Regimental Facings and Badges, [214] 196, 440

NORTH, Lieut.-Colonel J. S.—cont.

- Army Estimates—Administration of the Army, [216] 1289, 1291, 1292, 1294
- Land Forces, [214] 1169
- Military Education, [216] 1286
- Provisions, Forage, &c. [216] 1260
- Works, Buildings, &c. [216] 1278, 1279
- Contagious Diseases (Animals), Report, [217] 1630
- Criminal Law (Ireland)—Montgomery, The Convict, [217] 1629
- Duke of Edinburgh's Annuity, 2R. [217] 1350
- India—Kirkee Prize Money, [215] 646
- Mutiny, 2R. [215] 389
- Landlord and Tenant, 2R. [216] 1650
- Parliament—Privilege—Public Petitions Committee—Informal Petitions, [216] 1707
- Railway Passengers Communication, [217] 1172
- Supply—Post Office Services, [217] 1118

North America—Alaska Boundary—San Juan Water Boundary

- Question, Mr. Eastwick; Answer, Viscount Enfield May 5, [215] 1487; Questions, Observations, The Earl of Lauderdale; Reply, Earl Granville June 19, [216] 1157

Parl Papers—

- Case of the British Government . . . [690]
- Memorial on the Canal de Haro . . . [691]
- Second Statement of British Government . . . [692]
- Reply of United States . . . [693]
- Maps, &c. . . . . [694-5]
- Correspondence respecting Award . . . [696]
- Protocol (Washington) . . . [735]

NORTHCOTE, Right Hon. Sir S. H., Devonshire, N.

- "Alabama"—Compensation to British Shipowners, [216] 356

Army—1st Devon Militia, [217] 149

Burials, 2R. [215] 205

Canada, Dominion of—Manitoba, [215] 1140

Central Asia, Motion for an Address, [215] 869

Commercial Marine, Motion for an Address, [214] 1864

East India Finance Committee—Second Report, [215] 1875

East India (Financial Statement), Res. [215] 415

East India Loan, Comm. [215] 1113

India—Euphrates Valley Railway, Res. [215] 618

India—Officering of the Indian Army, Motion for an Address, [217] 1956

India—Railway Gauge, Res. [214] 1563

International Law—New Rules, Motion for an Address, [214] 2092

Parliament—Address in Answer to the Speech, [214] 198, 140

Public Business, [215] 1790

Parliament—Business of the House, Motion for a Committee, [215] 246

Pimlico, Mr., and the Board of Trade—Royal Commission, [217] 151

Post Office—Mail Contracts, Res. [216] 709; —Cape and Zanzibar, 1449

Supply, Report, [216] 464

Teignmouth and Dawlish Turnpike Trust, [216] 1710

Ways and Means, Report, [215] 1054, 1103, 1308

NOR OBR {GENERAL INDEX} OBR 000

214-215-216-217.

- NORTHUMBERLAND, Duke of
 Pollution of Rivers, Comm. [217] 1161
 Public Worship Facilities, Standing Order No.
 34a, [216] 163
- NORWOOD, Mr. C. M., Kingston-upon-Hull
 Currency—Bank Act, Res. [215] 143
 Egypt—Suez Canal—Increase of Dues, [217]
 899
 Merchant Service—Supply of Seamen, [214]
 372
 Merchant Shipping Acts Amendment, 2R.
 [217] 690; Comm. cl. 3, Amendt. 1023; cl. 4,
 Amendt. ib.; cl. 15, 1026
 Shipping Survey, &c., Leave, [214] 274
 Supreme Court of Judicature, 2R. [216] 863
 Treasury and Post Office—Alleged Misappropriation of Funds, [215] 522
- Nottingham Liberal Dinner—Unconstitutional Language
 Question, Observations, The Duke of Richmond; Reply, The Duke of St. Albans; short debate thereon July 21, [217] 648
- Noxious Businesses—7 & 8 Vict. c. 84
 Select Committee appointed, "to consider the operation of Clauses 55 and 56 of Act 7 and 8 Vic. c. 84, and the best means of making provision concerning the offensive or noxious businesses therein specified" May 19, Committee nominated as follows:—Mr. Headlam (Chairman), Sir Charles Addeley, Dr. Brewer, Mr. Broome-Davenport, Mr. Montague Guest, Lord George Hamilton, Mr. Coke, Sir Charles Mills, Mr. Morley, Sir John Ogilvy, Mr. Samuda, Mr. William Henry Smith, Mr. McCullagh Torrens, Mr. Edmund Turnor, and Mr. Frederick Walpole
 Report of Select Committee July 8 No. 284
- O'BRIEN, Sir P., King's Co.
 Africa—West Coast Settlements—Aahantee Invasion, [217] 1525
 Army Estimates—Administration of the Army, [216] 1290, 1295
 Board of Education (Ireland)—O'Keffe, Rev. Mr., Nomination of Committee, Motion for Adjournment, [216] 330
 East India Revenue Accounts, Comm. [217] 1470
 General Valuation (Ireland), Comm. [216] 1337
 Indian Mutiny Medal—20th Regiment, [216] 1864
 Ireland—Frankford Bench of Magistrates, [217] 1085
 Ireland—Shannon, Overflowing of the, Res. [214] 1590
 Parliament—Privilege—Appellate Jurisdiction of the House of Lords, [217] 359
 Peace Preservation (Ireland), 2R. [215] 2087
 Sale of Liquors on Sunday (Ireland), 2R. [217] 118
 Shah of Persia, Visit of—Windsor Park Review, [216] 998
- O'BRIEN, Sir P.—cont.
 Supply—Household of the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, [215] 1458
 Queen's and Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer, [215] 1455
 University Education (Ireland), 2R. Amendt. [214] 1805
- Occasional Sermons Bill
 (Mr. Couper-Temple, Mr. Thomas Hughes)
 Considered in Committee; Bill ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> Feb 7 [Bill 22]
 Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2<sup>o</sup>" May 14, [215] 1962
 Amendt. to leave out "now," and add "upon this day six months" (Mr. Collins); after debate, Question put, "That 'now,' &c." A. 58, N. 199; M. 146; words added; main Question, as amended, put, and agreed to; Bill put off for six months
- O'CONOR DON, The, Roscommon Co.
 Burials Act—Ancient Burial Place, Pontefract, [215] 398
 Civil Service Examination—Public Departments, [215] 345
 General Valuation (Ireland), Leave, [214] 580; 2R. Amendt. [215] 1535; Comm. [216] 1334
 Ireland—Questions, &c.
 Civil Service—Reports of the Commissioners, [215] 345
 Grand Jury Laws, [214] 198
 Queen's Colleges, [214] 198
 Railways, [216] 1309;—Dublin and Kingstown Railway, 1552
 River Shannon, [214] 868
 Ireland—Irish Railways, Purchase of, Res. [215] 1149
 Ireland—Valuation Department, Res. [215] 422, 428, 432
 Monastic and Conventual Institutions, Leave, [214] 530
 Peace Preservation (Ireland), Comm. cl. 2, [216] 65; Proviso, 73
 Post Office—Mail Contracts—Cape and Zanzibar, [216] 1308
 Rating (Liability and Value), Consid. [217] 416
 University Education (Ireland), 2R. Amendt. [214] 1781
 University Tests (Dublin) (No. 2), [215] 306
 University Tests (Dublin) (No. 3), Comm. [215] 1527
- O'CONOR, Mr. D. M., Sligo Co.
 Expiring Laws Continuance, Comm. [217] 1250
 Ireland—Galway Election Trials, Dublin, [214] 281
 Ireland—Galway Election Petition, Trial of, Res. [215] 977
 Ireland—Shannon, Overflowing of the, Res. [214] 1590
 Parliamentary Election Petitions, [214] 372
 Peace Preservation (Ireland), Comm. cl. 2, [216] 67
 Tichborne Trial, [215] 2019

[cont]

ODO      ORD      { SESSION 1878 }      ORD      OSB
 214—215—216—217.

O'DONOGHUE, The, Tralee

Army—7th Lancashire Militia, [217] 1884
 Peace Preservation (Ireland), 2R. [215] 2063
 Railway and Canal Commissioners Court, [215]
 903
 University Education (Ireland), 2R. Amendt.
 [214] 1291
 University Tests (Dublin) (No. 3), 2R. [215]
 747; Comm. 1824

Office of Woods and Forests—Crown Revenues—Crown Thirls (Scotland)
 Question, Mr. J. W. Barclay; Answer, Mr. Baxter May 12, [215] 1789

OGILVY, Sir J., Dundee
 Police Superannuation, [214] 1284

O'HAGAN, Lord (Lord Chancellor of Ireland)
 Government of Ireland, 2R. [216] 1588, 1590
 Juries Act (Ireland), 1871, [214] 1384, 1385
 Landlord and Tenant (Ireland) Act (1870),
 Motion for Papers, [217] 751
 *Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister, 2R.
 [214] 1887
 Marriages (Ireland), 2R. [215] 93
 Public Records (Ireland) Act Amendment,
 2R. [217] 971

O'LOGHLEN, Right Hon. Sir C. M., Clare Co.
 General Valuation (Ireland), Comm. Amendt.
 [216] 1307
 Railway and Canal Traffic, Lords Amendts.
 [216] 1304
 Supply—Commissioners of National Education
 in Ireland, [216] 1564

ORANMORE AND BROWNE, Lord
 Church Association—Confession, Motion for a Select Committee, [217] 269; Explanation, 386
 Government of Ireland, 1R. [216] 630
 Ireland, Crime in, Motion for Returns, [216]
 7, 8
 Peace Preservation (Ireland) Acts Continuance,
 2R. [216] 333
 Shah of Persia, Visit of—Reviews, [216] 989, 1181
 University Tests (Dublin), 2R. [215] 1868

Order of Merit

Moved that an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty, praying that Her Majesty would be pleased to take into her gracious consideration the institution of an Order of Merit by which Her Majesty would be enabled to bestow a sign of her royal approbation upon men who have deserved well of their country in science, literature, and art"
 (The Earl Stanhope) June 27, [216] 1466; after short debate, on Question first resolved in the negative

Ordnance Survey

Question, Mr. Greaves; Answer, Mr. Ayrton
 May 5, [215] 1483; Question, Mr. Whalley;
 Answer, Mr. Ayrton July 8, [217] 36;—
 Sutherlandshire, Question, Mr. Brodgen;
 Answer, Mr. Ayrton July 8, [216] 1708

O'REILLY, Mr. M. W., Longford Co.

Army—Barracks, [215] 1925
 Chaplains to the Forces, [215] 1484
 Army Estimates—Administration of the Army,
 [216] 1294
 Control Establishments, Wages, &c. [216]
 1255
 Provisions, Forage, &c. [216] 1259
 Civil Service Examinations, [215] 101
 India—H.M. Roman Catholic Servants, [215]
 1484
 Ireland—Civil Servants, Res. [216] 1819
 Ireland—Irish Railways, Purchase of, Res.
 [215] 1167
 Post Office—Telegrams between France and
 England, [215] 1292
 Superannuation Act Amendment, Comm. cl. 1,
 [215] 1794
 University Education (Ireland), 2R. Amendt.
 [214] 1748

O'REILLY-DEASB, Mr. M., Louth

Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister, 2R.
 [214] 325

OSBORNE, Mr. R. Bernal, Waterford City

Army—Artillery—Cast-iron Guns, Conversion of, [216] 1854
 Central Asia—Afghanistan (Northern) Boundary—Mr. Forsyth's Mission, [214] 1041 Ireland—Landed Estates Court—Vacant Judgeship, [214] 282
 Masters and Servants—Law of Contract, Res.
 [216] 588
 Palace of Westminster—Decoration of Central Hall, [215] 648
 Parks Regulation Act—New Rules, [214] 200,
 203, 207
 Parliament—Questions, &c.
 Address in Answer to the Speech, [214] 93
 Business of the House, [217] 1098
 Resignation of Ministers, Ministerial Statement, [214] 1911
 Parliament—Breach of Privilege—"Pall Mall
 Gazette," Res. [215] 538

Parliament—Business of the House (Tuesday Sittings), Res. [214] 287

Permissive Prohibitory Liquor, 2R. [215] 1638,
 1654

Post Office (Balances)—Telegraphic Department, Res. [217] 1222, 1228

Post Office—Mail Contracts—Cape and Zanzibar, [216] 1422

Russia and Persia—Valley of the Atrek, [214]
 1099

University Education (Ireland), 2R. Amendt.
 [214] 1691, 1694

OTW PAK { GENERAL INDEX } PAK PAR
214—215—216—217.

OTWAY, Mr. A. J., Chatham

Army—Autumn Manoeuvres, [215] 888
Commander-in-Chief of the Forces in Ireland, [217] 1323
Civil Service Writers, Case of the, [216] 842, 843, 1062; Motion for a Select Committee, 1108
Ireland—Civil Servants, Res. [216] 1818, 1825
Navy Estimates—Admiralty Office, [216] 115
Parks Regulation Act—Meetings in the Parks, Motion for an Address, [215] 284
Spain—"Vigilante," Capture of the, [217] 1623, 1825
Supply—Consular Establishments Abroad, &c. [217] 1104

Outlawries Bill

c. Read 1<sup>o</sup> * Feb 6

OXFORD, Bishop of

Army—Military Depot at Oxford, Address for Correspondence, [216] 1494
Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister, 2R. [214] 1885

Oxford University—Professorship of Pastoral Theology

Question, Mr. Auberon Herbert; Answer, Mr. Gladstone April 1, [215] 401

Oyster and Mussel Fisheries Order Confirmation Bill

(Mr. Arthur Peel, Mr. Chichester Fortescue)
c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> * April 21 [Bill 181]
Read 2<sup>o</sup> * April 24
Committee *; Report May 5
Read 3<sup>o</sup> * May 7
l. Read 1<sup>o</sup> * (Earl of Morley) May 8 (No. 96)
Read 2<sup>o</sup> * May 19
Committee * May 20.
Report * May 23
Read 3<sup>o</sup> * May 26
Royal Assent June 16 [38 Vict. c. 62]

PAGET, Major R. H., Somersetshire, Mid.
Police, Administration of, Motion for a Committee, [215] 1749

Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 8, [216] 931, 1072, 1076

PAKINGTON, Right Hon. Sir J. S., Droitwich

Army—Questions, &c.
Abolition of Purchase—Memorials of Officers, [217] 147
Recruits—Inaccurate Returns, [216] 1413
Troop Ship "Serapis"—Scotch Fusilier Guards, [215] 902
Army—Length of Service (India), Res. [214] 855
Army Estimates—Administration of the Army, [216] 1294
Land Forces, Motion for reporting Progress, [214] 881, 1094, 1123, 1124
Military Education, [216] 1984
Militia Pay and Allowances, [214] 1156
Church of England—Sacramental Confession—Petition to Convocation, [217] 148

PAKINGTON, Right Hon. Sir J. S.—cont.

Commercial Marine, Motion for an Address, [214] 1330, 1849
Contagious Diseases Acts Repeal, 2R. Amendt. [216] 234
Endowed Schools Act (1869) Amendment, Comm. [217] 928
Harbours of Refuge, Motion for a Committee, [215] 1419
Mercantile Marine—"Atlantic," Wreck of the, [215] 973
"Hindoo" and "Parga," [215] 11
Merchant Seamen's Act—The "Peru," [214] 1395
Navy Estimates—Men and Boys, [215] 87
Parliament—Business of the House, [216] 1231, 1232
Railway and Canal Traffic, Comm. cl. 21, [215] 387

PALK, Sir L., Devonshire, E.

Army—Cavalry Regiments, Honorary Colonels of, [216] 1168, 1623, 1709
Chelsea Hospital Pensioners, [215] 927
Parliament—Order of Business, [215] 926
Theatre Regulation Act—"Happy Land," [214] 1611

PALMER, Mr. J. Hinde, Lincoln City

Conspiracy Law Amendment, Lords Amendt. [217] 1543
Custody of Infants, Consid. add. cl. [214] 1513 ; cl. 3, Amendt. ib.
Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment, Consid. add. cl. [217] 959
Endowed Schools Act (1869), Motion for a Committee, [214] 298
Expiring Laws Continuance, Comm. [217] 1260 ; Amendt. 1261
Juries, Comm. cl. 5, Amendt. [216] 516, 517
Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister, 2R. [214] 827
Married Women's Property Act (1870) Amendment, 2R. [214] 667, 689
Married Women's Property Act (1870) Amendment (No. 2), 2R. [214] 329 ; Comm. Amendt. 1365
Metropolis—New Courts of Justice, [216] 899
Nitro Glycerine Act (1869), [216] 57
Railway and Canal Traffic, 3R. [215] 1108
Railway Regulation, Comm. [217] 1248
Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 15, [216] 1429
Supply—Court of Chancery, [215] 1773
Natural History Museum, [215] 790
Patent Office, [215] 1021
216] Supreme Court of Judicature, 2R. 885, 865 ; Comm. cl. 5, 1892, 1680 ; cl. 6, 1745 ; cl. 13, 1750 ; cl. 22, 1798 ; cl. 24, 1806 ; cl. 29, 1883
217] cl. 50, 47 ; cl. 54, 177, 181 ; cl. 75, Amendt. 190, 215 ; add. cl. 842 ; Schedule 1, 343 ; Consid. cl. 55, 682
Workmen's Compensation for Injuries, [216] 514

PARKER, Lieut.-Colonel W., Suffolk, W.
Magistracy—Leamington, [215] 100

PAR PAR { SESSION 1873 } PAR PAR
 214-215-216-217.

PARKER, MR. C. S., Perthshire

Hypotheo Abolition (Scotland), 2R. [216] 1370
 Labourers Cottages (Scotland), 2R. [217] 475,
 477
 Royal Academy—The Gibson Bequest, [217]
 403
 Wild Birds Protection, Motion for a Committee,
 Amendt. [215] 1189

Parks Regulation Act—Hyde Park—The New Rules

Notice, Mr. Bruce Feb 6, [214] 143
 Copy of Substituted Rules under the Parks Regulation Act, presented; Moved, "That these Rules do lie upon the Table of the House" (Mr. Bruce) Feb 10, 189; after debate, Motion agreed to.
 Rules and Regulations . . . P.P. 4, 9
 Rules dated 28 July, 1872 . . . [683]
 Rules dated 1 Oct., 1873 . . . [684]

Parks Regulation Act—Meetings in the Parks

Moved, "That an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty, praying that She will be graciously pleased to direct that rules be drawn up for the more effectual protection of Her Majesty's subjects while availing themselves of the privilege accorded them of using the Royal Parks for purposes of recreation by prohibiting the delivery of public addresses in such parks" (Mr. James Louther) Mar 27, [215] 260

Amendt. to leave out from "That," and add "this House approves of the Rules lately issued by Her Majesty's Government for the Regulation of the Royal Parks, and is of opinion that no alteration affecting the existing rights of public meeting therein should be made unless previously approved by Parliament" (Mr. Auberon Herbert) v., 271; Question proposed, "That the words, &c." after debate, Question put; A. 142, N. 46; M. 96; after further short debate, main Question put, and negatived

Parliament

LORDS—

214 Meeting of the PARLIAMENT Feb 6, 1.
 The Session of PARLIAMENT opened by Commission

Her MAJESTY'S Most Gracious Speech delivered by The LORD CHANCELLOR Feb 6, 3
 An ADDRESS to HER MAJESTY thereon moved by The Earl of CLARENCE (the Motion being seconded by The Lord MONTEAGLE), and, after debate, agreed to, Nemine Dissidente Feb 6, 7; Explanation, The Duke of Richmond Feb 7, 143

Her MAJESTY'S ANSWER to THE ADDRESS reported Feb 11, 276

ROLL OF THE LORDS—delivered, and ordered to lie on The Table Feb 6; The Lord Chancellor acquainted the House that the Clerk of the House had prepared and laid it on the Table; The same was ordered to be printed Feb 10 (No. 10)

PARLIAMENT—LORDS—cont.

Chairman of Committees—The Lord Redesdale appointed, Nemine Dissidente, to take the Chair in all Committees of this House for this Session Feb 6

Committee for Privileges—appointed Feb 6
 Sub-Committee for the Journals—appointed Feb 6

Appeal Committee—appointed Feb 6

Office of the Clerk of the Parliaments and Office of the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod—Select Committee appointed Feb 11, as follows:—Ld. Chancellor, Ld. President, Ld. Privy Seal, D. Richmond, D. Saint Albans, M. Lansdowne, M. Salisbury, M. Bath, E. Devon, E. Tankerville, E. Stanhope, E. Carnarvon, E. Malmesbury, E. Granville, E. Kimberley, Ld. Chamberlain, V. Hawarden, V. Eversley, Ld. Steward, L. Colville of Culross, L. Redesdale, L. Colchester, L. Skelmersdale, L. Aycland, and L. Cairns Report—Part I . . . No. 58

Privilege—The Appellate Jurisdiction of this House—Supreme Court of Judicature Bill, Observations, Earl Granville; Reply, Lord Cairns July 8, [217] 1; Observations, Lord Cairns; short debate thereon July 8, 10

Private Bill Legislation

Orders respecting Petitions Feb 7, [214] 143 (No. 9)

Private Bills—Standing Order Committee on, appointed Feb 17; The Lords following, with the Chairman of Committees, were named of the Committee:—Ld. President, Ld. Privy Seal, D. Somerset, M. Winchester, M. Lansdowne, M. Bath, M. Ailesbury, E. Devon, E. Airlie, E. Hardwicke, E. Carnarvon, E. Belmore, E. Romney, E. Chichester, E. Powis, E. Verulam, E. Morley, E. Stradbroke, E. Amherst, Ld. Chamberlain, V. Hawarden, V. Hardinge, V. Eversley, Ld. Steward, L. Camoys, L. Saye and Sele, L. Colville of Culross, L. Sondes, L. Digby, L. Sheffield, L. Colchester, L. Silchester, L. De Tabley, L. Skelmersdale, L. Portman, L. Belper, L. Ebury, L. Egerton, L. Hyton, and L. Penrhyn Opposed Private Bills—The Lords following, viz.:—M. Lansdowne, Ld. Steward, L. Colville of Culross, and L. Skelmersdale were appointed, with the Chairman of Committees, a Committee to select and propose to the House the names of the five Lords to form a Select Committee for the consideration of each opposed Private Bill Feb 17

Orders—Ordered, That no Private Bill brought from the House of Commons shall be read a second time after Thursday the 19th day of June next [and other Orders] April 24, [215] 891

Gas Companies Bills—Price of Coal and Gas, Observations, Lord Redesdale; Reply, Earl Granville; short debate thereon May 5, [215] 1459

So much of the Standing Order of the 15th day of March 1859 which requires "that the Examiner shall give at least two clear days notice of the day on which any Bill shall be examined," and also section 9. of

[cont.]

[cont.]

PAR PAR { GENERAL INDEX } PAR PAR
214—215—216—217.

PARLIAMENT—LORDS—cont.

Private Bill Legislation—cont.

Standing Order No. 178, considered, and dispensed with for the remainder of the Session June 12
Standing Orders 159, 176, 178, 179, 182, 184, 185, 186a, 189 and Schedule referred to in Standing Order 181 (scot. 1.), considered, and amended; and to be printed as amended (The Chairman of Committees) August 4, [217] 1815

The Easter Recess, Question, The Duke of Richmond; Answer, Earl Granville Mar 25, [215] 91; House adjourned on Friday, 4th April, to Monday, 21st April
The Whitsuntide Recess—House adjourned on Monday, 26th May, to Monday, 9th June

Palace of Westminster

The Frescoes in the Royal Gallery, Question, Viscount Hardinge; Answer, The Duke of St. Albans May 18, [215] 1869

The Peers' Gallery, House of Commons, Observations, The Earl of Malmesbury; Reply, Earl Granville; short debate thereon Mar 20, [214] 1922

The late Bishop of Winchester and the late Lord Westbury, Observations, The Duke of Richmond July 21, [217] 621; Observations, Earl Granville; short debate thereon July 22, 736

Business of the House

Moved, That for the remainder of the Session the Bill or Bills which are entered for consideration on the Minutes of the day shall have the same precedence which Bills have on Tuesdays and Thursdays" (The Lord Redesdale) July 28; Motion agreed to

PROBATION OF THE PARLIAMENT August 5
HER MAJESTY'S SPEECH delivered to both Houses by The LORD CHAMBERLAIN
The Parliament prorogued to Wednesday, the 22nd day of October next

COMMONS—

MEETING OF THE PARLIAMENT Feb 6

- 214] The QUEEN'S SPEECH reported; An humble Address thereon moved by Mr. LYTTELTON (the Motion being seconded by Mr. STONE) Feb 6, 67; after debate, Motion agreed to; and a Committee appointed to draw up the said Address
- Committee nominated as follows:—Mr. Charles Lyttelton (Chairman), Mr. Adam, Mr. Secretary Bruce, Mr. Secretary Cardwell, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Secretary Childers, Mr. W. E. Forster, Mr. Chichester Fortescue, Mr. Gladstone, Mr. Glyn, Mr. Goschen, Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen, Mr. Mansell, Mr. Stanfield, Mr. Stone, Sir Henry Storks, and Mr. Winterbotham
- Report of Address brought up, and read Feb 7, 155; after debate, Address agreed to; to be presented by Privy Councillors
- HER MAJESTY'S ANSWER TO THE ADDRESS reported Feb 11, 281

[cont.]

PARLIAMENT—COMMONS—cont.

Committee for Privileges—appointed Feb 6

Public Accounts—Committee nominated Feb 7, as follows:—Mr. Solater-Booth (Chairman), Mr. Baxter, Mr. Candish, Lord Eustace Cecil, Mr. Crawford, Mr. Algernon Egerton, Mr. Goldney, Mr. Liddell, Mr. O'Reilly, Mr. Rylands, and Mr. Seely

Kitchen and Refreshment Rooms (House of Commons)—Standing Committee appointed and nominated Feb 10, as follows:—Colonel French (Chairman), Mr. Dalglish (Chairman) (appointed July 11, on Colonel French's death), Mr. Adam, Mr. Fitzwilliam Dick, Mr. Henry Edwards, Mr. Goldney, and Mr. Alderman Lawrence; Feb 11, Mr. Arthur Guest added; April 8, Mr. Staepole added; Mr. Onslow died; June 13, Mr. Dyke and Captain Greville added

Public Petitions—Select Committee appointed and nominated Feb 10, as follows:—Mr. C. Forster (Chairman), Mr. Cavendish Bentinck, Mr. Dimsdale, Major Gavin, Mr. William Ormeby Gore, Mr. A. Guest, Mr. Locke King, Mr. Kinnaird, Mr. McLagan, The O'Connor Don, Earl Percy, Lord Arthur Russell, Sir David Salomons, Mr. Owen Stanley, and Mr. Reginald Yorke

Printing—Select Committee appointed and nominated Feb 11, as follows:—Mr. Bonham-Carter, Mr. Secretary Cardwell, Mr. Dodson, Mr. Henley, Mr. Hunt, Sir Stafford Northcote, The O'Connor Don, Sir John Pakington, Mr. Solater-Booth, Mr. Stanfield, and Mr. Spencer Walpole

Standing Orders—Select Committee nominated Feb 14, as follows:—Colonel Wilson Patten (Chairman), Sir Edward Colebrooke, Viscount Crichton, Mr. Dent, Mr. Dodson, Mr. Henley, Mr. Charles Howard, Sir Graham Montgomery, The O'Connor Don, Mr. Scourfield, and Mr. Whitbread

Selection—Committee nominated Feb 12, as follows:—Colonel Wilson Patten (Chairman), Mr. Dodson, Sir Graham Montgomery, The O'Connor Don, Mr. Scourfield, and Mr. Whitbread

Privilege

Breach of Privilege—“The Pall Mall Gazette”—Mr. Munster having complained of a certain writing in The Pall Mall Gazette as reflecting on certain Members of this House, and delivering in a copy of the said journal, a paragraph was read therefrom.—Then it was Moved, “That the said article contains libellous reflections upon certain Members of this House in breach of the Privileges of this House” (Mr. Munster) April 3, [215] 530; after debate, Motion withdrawn

Bradford Improvement Bill (Lords) (by Order), Order for Second Reading read; Mr. Speaker informed the House that the Bill contained clauses which imposed a tax upon the people, and ought therefore to have been introduced into this House, and not into the other House of Parliament May 8, [215] 1878; after Explanation, Bill read 2<sup>d</sup>, and committed

Public Petitions Committee—Informal Petitions, Question, Colonel North; Answer, Mr. Gladstone July 3, [216] 1707

[cont.]

PAR PAR { SESSION 1873 } PAR PAR
214—215—216—217.

PARLIAMENT—COMMONS—cont.

The Appellate Jurisdiction of the House of Lords—Supreme Court of Judicature Bill, Explanation, Mr. Gladstone July 10, [217] 154

[See title Supreme Court of Judicature Bill]

Business of the House

Re-appointment of the Committee on Public Business, Question, Sir Henry Selwin-Ibbetson; Answer, Mr. Gladstone Feb 7, [214] 151

The Resolutions, Question, Lord Echo; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer Feb 10, [214] 199

Tuesday Sittings, Moved, "That the House do meet on Tuesdays at 2 p.m., and rise at 7 p.m." (Lord John Manners) Feb 11, [214] 283; after short debate, Motion withdrawn

Ash Wednesday, Moved, "That this House do meet To-morrow at Two of the clock" (Mr. Gladstone) Feb 25, [214] 901; after short debate, Question put; A. 222, N. 56; M. 168

Order of Public Business, Question, Mr. J. Lowther; Answer, Mr. Gladstone Mar 20, [214] 1948

Public Business before Easter, Observations, Mr. Gladstone Mar 24, [215] 7

Juris (Ireland)—Precedence of Motions, Question, Mr. Bruce; Answer, Mr. W. H. Smith Mar 25, [215] 111

Order of Business—Navy Estimates, Question, Lord Henry Lennox; Answer, Mr. Goschen Mar 27, [215] 225

Public Business after Easter, Question, Mr. Dixon; Answer, Mr. Gladstone April 7, [215] 634

Public Business, Observations, Mr. Gladstone April 29, [215] 1141; Questions, Mr. Bourke, Sir John Hay, Sir Stafford Northcote, Mr. Disraeli; Answers, Mr. Gladstone May 12, 1789

Ascension Day, Moved, "That Committees shall not sit on Thursday, being Ascension Day, until Two of the clock, and have leave to sit until Six of the clock, notwithstanding the sitting of the House" (Mr. Gladstone) May 20, [216] 171; after short debate, Question put; A. 181, N. 80—M. 101

Morning Sittings, Moved, "That, whenever the House shall meet at Two o'clock, the sitting of the House shall be held subject to the Resolutions of the House of the 30th day of April, 1869" (Mr. Gladstone) May 26, [216] 435; after short debate, Motion agreed to

Order of Business—Factory Acts Amendment Bill, Questions, Mr. Mundella, Mr. D. Dalrymple; Answers, Mr. Gladstone June 12, [216] 841; Observations, Colonel Taylor, Mr. Bagwell, Mr. Munster; Reply, Mr. Gladstone June 24, 1811

Education Act Amendment Bill, Question, Mr. Dixon; Answer, Mr. Gladstone June 19, [216] 1172

Arrangement of Business, June 20, [216] 1230

Arrival of the Shah of Persia, Moved, "That this House do now adjourn" (Mr. Collins) June 18, [216] 1135; Question put, and negatived

PARLIAMENT—COMMONS—cont.

Visit of the Shah, Moved, "That this House do adjourn this day at the close of the Morning Sitting" (Mr. Gladstone) June 20, [216] 1230; after short debate, Motion agreed to

Order of Business, Observations, Mr. Gladstone July 11, [217] 213

Private Bill Legislation, Question, Mr. Dodson; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue July 17, [217] 497

Arrangement of Business before Prorogation, Questions, Mr. Hermon, Mr. R. N. Fowler; Answers, Mr. Gladstone July 18, [217] 605

Valuation Bill, Questions, Mr. Assheton Cross, Mr. Vance; Answers, Mr. Stansfeld July 16, [217] 400; Questions, Mr. Bourke, Mr. Assheton Cross, Mr. R. N. Fowler, Mr. Wheelhouse, Mr. Dixon, Mr. Dillwyn; Answers, Mr. Holt, Mr. Gladstone, Mr. W. E. Forster July 21, 663

Precedence of Government Orders, Moved, "That To-morrow, and upon every succeeding Tuesday during the remainder of the Session, Orders of the Day have precedence of Notices of Motion, Government Orders of the Day having the priority" (Mr. Gladstone) July 21, [217] 665; after short debate, Question put, and agreed to

Moved, "That on Wednesday next, and every succeeding Wednesday, Government Orders of the Day do have precedence" (Mr. Bruce) July 28, [217] 1098; after short debate, Motion agreed to

Order of Business—The Post Office and Telegraph Vote, Questions, Mr. Assheton Cross, Mr. Beresford Hope, Sir John Hay; Answers, Mr. Gladstone July 24, [217] 918

The Post Office Balances, Moved, "That the House will proceed, this day, with the Motion relating to Post Office Balances, of which Notice has been given, after the Order of the Day for a Committee to consider of Her Majesty's Message" (Mr. Gladstone) July 29; Motion agreed to

Precedence of Orders of the Day, Observations, Question, Mr. Collins; Reply, Mr. Speaker; short debate thereon July 30, [217] 1255 Question, Mr. Baillie Cochrane; Answer, Mr. Gladstone; short debate thereon July 31, 1835

Order of Business, Question, Mr. Fawcett; Answer, Mr. Gladstone August 1, [217] 1438 Moved, "That the Orders of the Day appointed for the Evening Sitting this day be postponed until after the Notice of Motion relating to the Widows and Families of Civil Servants of the Crown and the three Notices of Motions next following" (Mr. Gladstone); after short debate, Motion agreed to

The Count Out [August 1], Observations, Mr. Cavendish Bentinck August 2, [217] 1474; Moved, "That this House do now adjourn" (Mr. Cavendish Bentinck); after short debate, Motion withdrawn

Hour of Meeting of this House, Observations, Mr. J. Lowther; short debate thereon August 1, [217] 1532

[See title Parliament—Business of the House]

[cont.]

[cont.]

PAR PAR { GENERAL INDEX } PAR PAR
214—215—216—217.

PARLIAMENT—COMMONS—cont.

Public Business

Scotch Bills, Questions, Sir Edward Collebrooke, Mr. Cameron, Dr. Lyon Playfair; Answers, The Lord Advocate, Mr. W. E. Forster May 26, [216] 434
General Valuation (Ireland) Bill, Observations, Mr. Vance, Colonel Stuart Knox; Reply, Mr. Gladstone June 23, [216] 1256
Supply, Observations, Mr. Cavendish Bentinck; Reply, Mr. Gladstone June 27, [216] 1498
Bills withdrawn, Question, Mr. Anderson; Answer, Mr. Gladstone; short debate thereon July 7, [216] 1858

Forms and Usages of the House

Postponement of Bills—Notice, Question, Mr. Ellice; Answer, Mr. Speaker Feb 10, [214] 194

Printing of Bills, Question, Colonel Stuart Knox; Answer, Mr. Speaker May 22, [216] 276

Rules of Debate—Loss of the "Sea Queen"—Question, Mr. Mollo; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue Mar 25, [215] 106

Committees of the House—Divisions, Question, Mr. Hermon; Answer, Mr. Gladstone June 10, [216] 724

Rules and Orders of the House—Alteration of Questions by the Clerks at the Table—Public Offices, Questions, Mr. Baillie Cochrane; Answers, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Campbell-Bannerman July 8, [217] 37; The Persian Concessions to Baron de Reuter, Observations, Question, Mr. Baillie Cochrane; Replies, Mr. Speaker, Viscount Enfield July 23, [217] 803

Strangers Ordered to Withdraw July 11, [217] 207

Rules and Orders of the House as to Strangers—Reports of the Debates, Notices, Sir Wilfrid Lawson, Mr. Mitchell Henry July 14, [217] 301

The Easter Recess, after short debate, House adjourned on Monday 7th April to Monday 21st April, [215] 650

The Whitsuntide Recess, Questions, Mr. Beresford Hope, Mr. Newdegate; Answers, Mr. Gladstone May 12, [215] 1790; after short debate, House adjourned from Tuesday, May 27, till Thursday the 5th day of June next, [216] 494

Palace of Westminster—Decoration of the Central Hall, Question, Mr. Osborne; Answer, Mr. Ayrton April 7, [215] 648

The Frescoes, Questions, Mr. Bowring; Answers, Mr. Ayrton July 31, [217] 1326

Facilities for Visiting the Houses of Parliament, Question, Mr. Holt; Answer, Mr. Ayrton August 4, [217] 1526

PROROGATION OF THE PARLIAMENT August 5

Message to attend the Lords Commissioners, [217] 1570:—The House went: H.M. Majesty's SPEECH delivered to both Houses of Parliament by The EARL GRANVILLE, pursuant to Her Majesty's Command

After which, Parliament prorogued to Wednesday, October 22

Parliament—Breach of Privilege—Mr. Plimsoll

Observations, Mr. T. E. Smith Feb 20, [214] 733

Moved, "That to accuse, in a printed book, Members of this House of grievous offences, and to threaten them with further exposure if they take part in its Debates, is conduct highly reprehensible, and injurious to the honour and dignity of this House" (Mr. Eustace Smith); after debate, Motion withdrawn

Parliament—Business of the House (Committee of Supply)

Moved, "That, whenever Notice has been given that Estimates will be moved in Committee of Supply, and the Committee stands as the first Order of the Day upon any Day except Thursday and Friday on which Government Orders have precedence, the Speaker shall, when the Order for the Committee has been read, forthwith leave the Chair without putting any Question, and the House shall thereupon resolve itself into such Committee, unless on first going into Committee on the Army, Navy, or Civil Service Estimates respectively, an Amendment be moved relating to the division of Estimates proposed to be considered on that day" (Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer) Feb 10, [214] 244

Amendt. to leave out from "That," and add "a Select Committee be appointed to consider the best means of facilitating the despatch of Public Business in this House, and that the Reports and Evidence of the last three Committees on this subject be referred to it" (Sir Henry Selwin-Ibbetson) v.; Question proposed, "That the words, &c.: after debate, Question put: A. 148, N. 78; M. 70; main Question put, and agreed to

Parliament—Business of the House—Counting the House on resuming Sitting at Nine o'clock

Moved, "That when the House after a Morning Sitting resumes its Sitting at Nine o'clock, and it appears on Notice being taken that Forty Members are not present, the House shall suspend Debates and Proceedings until a quarter past Nine, and Mr. Speaker shall then count the House, and if Forty Members are not then present, the House shall stand adjourned" (Sir Henry Selwin-Ibbetson) April 29, [215] 1190; Resolution agreed to

Parliament—Business of the House—Hour of Meeting

Moved, "That a Select Committee be appointed to consider the time of the day at which the House should assemble, the hours during which the House can most conveniently sit for the transaction of Public Business, when the Business introduced by Her Majesty's Ministers should have precedence, and what Notice should be given of any proposal to alter the time at which the House will assemble, for the distribution of Business" (Mr. Newdegate) Mar 27, [215] 297; after debate, Motion withdrawn

Observations, Mr. J. Lowther; short debate thereon August 1, [217] 1552

PAR PAR { SESSION 1873 } PAR PAR
214—215—216—217.

Parliament—Business of the House (Opposed Business)

Moved, "That, except for a Money Bill, no Order of the Day or Notice of Motion be taken after half-past Twelve of the clock at night, with respect to which Order or Notice of Motion, a Notice of Opposition or Amendment shall have been printed on the Notice Paper, or if such Notice of Motion shall only have been given the next previous day of sitting, and objection shall be taken when the Notice is called" (Mr. Bowlerie) Mar 4, [214] 1362; after short debate, Amendt., after "Day," in line 2, to insert "for the Second Reading of a Bill" (Mr. Charley); Question proposed, "That the words, do;" after further short debate, Amendt. withdrawn; main Question put; A. 191, N. 37; M. 164

Parliament—Distribution of Electoral Power

Moved, "That, in the opinion of this House, it is desirable to redress the inequalities of the distribution of Electoral power in England and Scotland as well as in Ireland" (Sir Charles W. Dilke) May 6, [215] 1861 Amendt. to add at the end of Question "by the application of the cumulative vote or otherwise, so as to secure a better proportional representation of the people in the respective constituencies" (Mr. Collins), 1873; Question proposed, "That those words be there added;" after debate, Amendt. withdrawn; main Question put; A. 77, N. 268; M. 191

Parliamentary Elections—Declaration of the Poll, Question, Mr. Macfie; Answer, Mr. Brace August 5, [217] 1862

Parliamentary Representation—The Vacant Seats (England), Question, Mr. Raikes; Answer, Mr. Gladstone May 19, [216] 103.
Redistribution of Seats (Ireland), Question, Mr. Pim; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington Feb 10, [214] 196

Parliament—Meeting of Parliament

Moved, "That an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty, praying that She will be graciously pleased to take into consideration the expediency of summoning Parliament not later than the last week of November, in accordance with the Fifth Resolution of the Committee on Public Business, 1871" (Mr. Charles Forster) Feb 25, [214] 902

Amendt. to leave out from "That," and add "a Select Committee be appointed to consider the time of the day at which the House should assemble, the Hours during which the House can most conveniently sit for the transaction of Public Business, when the business introduced by Her Majesty's Ministers should have precedence, and what Notice should be given of any proposal to alter the time at which the House will assemble for the distribution of business" (Mr. Newdegate) v.; Question proposed, "That the words, do;" after debate, Amendt. and Motion withdrawn

Parliament—Representative Peers (Scotland and Ireland), Election of Observations, Mr. Stapleton; Reply, Mr. Gladstone Mar 28, [215] 310

Parliament—Resignation of Ministers

Ministerial Statement, Earl Granville; short 214] debate thereon Mar 13, 1868; Mar 17, 1914; Ministerial Explanation, Earl Granville; Observations, The Duke of Richmond Mar 20, 1919

Ministerial Statement, Mr. Gladstone Mar 13, 1909

Moved, "That this House, at its rising, do adjourn till Monday next" (Mr. Gladstone); after debate, Motion agreed to

Ordered, That all Committees have leave to sit, notwithstanding the adjournment of the House

Ministerial Statement, Mr. Gladstone Mar 17, 1918

Moved, "That the House, at its rising, do adjourn till Thursday" (Mr. Gladstone); after short debate, Motion agreed to

Ordered, That all Committees have leave to sit, notwithstanding the adjournment of the House

Ministerial Explanation, Mr. Gladstone; Observations, Mr. Disraeli Mar 20, 1924

Parliament—Trial of Election Petitions—Galway Election Petition

Amendt. on Committee of Supply April 25, To leave out from "That," and add "in the opinion of this House, the present system of trying Election Petitions is unsatisfactory and requires alteration" (Mr. O'Conor) v., [215] 977; Question proposed, "That the words, do;" after short debate, Question put, and agreed to

PARLIAMENT—HOUSE OF LORDS

New Peers

Feb 6—The Right Hon. Sir Roundell Palmer, Lord Chancellor of Great Britain, created Baron Selborne
Sir John Hanmer, baronet, created Baron Hanmer

May 6—Edward Berkeley, Baron Portman, created Viscount Portman of Bryanston, county Dorset

Sir Robert Alexander Shafto Adair, baronet, created Baron Waveney of South Elmham, county Suffolk

May 12—James Charles Herbert Welbore Ellis, Earl of Normanton in that part of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland called Ireland, created Baron Somerton of Somerley, county Southampton

Sat First

Feb 20—The Duke of Leeds, after the death of his Father

Mar 7—The Lord Carysfort (Earl of Carysfort) after the death of his Brother

Mar 20—The Lord Harris, after the death of his Father

April 28—The Viscount Canterbury, after the death of his Brother

[cont.]

PAR PAR { GENERAL INDEX } PAR PAR
214—215—216—217

PARLIAMENT—LORDS—Sat First—cont.

- May 5*—The Lord Churston, after the death of his Grandfather
May 20—The Earl of Zetland, after the death of his Uncle
 The Lord Stewart of Garlies (Earl of Galloway), after the death of his Father
June 12—The Lord Brancopeth (Viscount Boyne), after the death of his Father
July 15—The Earl De La Warr, after the death of his Brother
 The Lord Stourton, after the death of his Father
 The Lord Manners, after the death of his Father
July 21—The Lord Lytton, after the death of his Father
July 22—The Earl of Chesterfield, after the death of his Cousin
Representative Peer for Ireland
 (Writs and Returns)
Feb 18—Lord Crofton, v. Lord Clarina, deceased
April 21—Lord Inchiquin, v. Lord Kilmaine, deceased

HOUSE OF COMMONS

New Writs Issued

During Recess

- For Preston*, v. Sir Thomas George Fermer Heaketh, baronet, deceased
For Flint Burrough, v. Sir John Hanmer, baronet, now Baron Hanmer
For Richmond, v. Right Hon. Sir Roundell Palmer, knight, Chancellor of Great Britain
For Tiverton, v. Hon. George Denman, one of the Justices of Her Majesty's Court of Common Pleas
For Londonderry City, v. Right Hon. Richard Dowse, one of the Barons of Her Majesty's Court of Exchequer in Ireland
For Cork City, v. John Francis Maguire, esquire, deceased
For Kincardine County, v. James Dyce Nicol, esquire, deceased
For Forfar County, v. Hon. Charles Carnegie, Inspector of Constabulary in Scotland
For Orkney and Shetland, v. Frederick Dundas, esquire, deceased
For Liverpool, v. Samuel Robert Graves, esquire, deceased
Feb 6—For Armagh County, v. Sir William Verner, baronet, deceased
For Wigtonshire, v. Hon. Alan Plattenet Stewart, commonly called Lord Garlies, called up to the House of Peers
Feb 10—For Lisburn, v. Edward Wingfield Verner, esquire, Chiltern Hundreds
Feb 21—For Mid Cheshire, v. George Cornwall Legh, esquire, Chiltern Hundreds
Mar 20—For Tyrone County, v. The Right Hon. Henry Thomas Lowry Corry, deceased

PARLIAMENT—COMMONS—New Writs Issued—cont.

- April 28*—For Bath, v. Sir William Tite, deceased
May 1—For Gloucester City, v. William Philip Price, esquire, Chiltern Hundreds
May 21—For Richmond, v. Lawrence Dundas, esquire, now Earl of Zetland
June 9—For Devon (Southern Division), v. Samuel Trehawke Kekewich, esquire, deceased
June 11—For Roscommon, v. Colonel the Right Hon. Fitzstephen French, deceased
June 16—For Berwick, v. David Robertson, esquire, called up to the House of Peers by the title of Baron Marjoribanks of Ladykirk in the County of Berwick. (Mem.—Lord Marjoribanks died on the 19th of June without having taken his seat)
June 19—For Bath, v. Hon. George Henry Cadogan, now Earl Cadogan, called up to the House of Peers
June 25—For Waterford County, v. Edmond De la Poer, esquire, Chiltern Hundreds
July 21—For Stafford (Eastern Division), v. John Robinson McClean, esquire, deceased
July 25—For Greenwich, v. Sir David Salomons, baronet, deceased
For Dundee, v. George Armitstead, esquire, Chiltern Hundreds

New Members Sworn

- Feb 6*—Right Hon. Hugh Culling Eardley Childers, Pontefract
 John Holker, esquire, Preston
 Right Hon. William Nathaniel Massey, Tiverton
 Sir Robert Alfred Cunliffe, baronet, Flint Burrough
 James William Barclay, esquire, Forfar County
 Samuel Laing, esquire, Orkney and Shetland
 Sir George Balfour, Kincardine
 Charles Edward Lewis, esquire, Londonderry City
 Lawrence Dundas, esquire, Richmond
Feb 16—John Torr, esquire, Liverpool
Feb 27—Sir Richard Wallace, baronet, Lisburn
 Robert Vans Agnew, esquire, Wigtonshire
Feb 27—Edward Wingfield Verner, esquire, Armagh County
Mar 3—Joseph Philip Ronayne, esquire, Cork City
Mar 10—Egerton Leigh, esquire, Mid Cheshire
April 21—Hon. Henry William Lowry Corry, Tyrone County
May 7—Hon. George Henry (Cadogan), Viscount Chelsea, Bath
May 12—William Killigrew Wait, esquire, Gloucester City
June 5—John Charles Dundas, esquire, Richmond
June 17—John Carpenter Garnier, esquire, Devon County (Southern Division)
June 24—Hon. Charles French, Roscommon

[cont.]

[cont.]

PAR PAT { SESSION 1873 } PAT PEA
214—215—216—217.

PARLIAMENT—COMMONS—New Members Sworn—cont:

- June 30—William Miller, esquire, Berwickshire
- Viscount Grey de Wilton, Bath
- July 7—Hon. Henry Windsor Villiers Stuart, Waterford County
- August 4—Thomas William Board, esquire, Greenwich

Parliamentary and Municipal Electors Bill

Question, Mr. C. E. Lewis; Answer, The Attorney General May 16, [216] 14

Parliamentary Election Petitions—Legislation

Question, Mr. O'Conor; Answer, The Attorney General Feb 13, [214] 372

Parliamentary Elections (Expenses) Bill (Mr. Fawcett, Mr. Barnes, Mr. McLaren)

- c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> Feb 7 [Bill 32]
- Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2<sup>o</sup>" June 18, [216] 1110
- Amendt. to leave out "now," and add "upon this day three months" (Mr. Nicholson Hodgson); after debate, Question put, "That 'now,' &c.;" A. 91, N. 205; M. 114
- Words added; main Question, as amended, put, and agreed to; Bill put off for three months

Parliamentary Electors Registration Bill (Mr. Pell, Mr. Bourke, Mr. William Henry Smith, Mr. Rowland Winn)

- c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> Feb 7 [Bill 26]
- Bill withdrawn, after short debate July 16, [217] 463

Parliamentary Reporting in the Colonies

Question, Mr. Pim; Answer, Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen July 28, [217] 1091

Patent Laws—International Conference, Vienna

Question, Mr. Macfie; Answer, Viscount Enfield April 7, [215] 686; July 14, [217] 310; Question, Mr. Macfie; Answer, Mr. Baxter July 31, 1828; Question, Mr. Macfie; Answer, Viscount Enfield August 5, 1864

Patentes, Rights of—Government Manufacturers

Question, Lord Claud John Hamilton; Answer, Mr. Cardwell June 6, [216] 553

PATTEN, Right Hon. Colonel J. W., Lancashire, N.

Army Estimates—Land Forces, [214] 884
Militia Pay and Allowances, [214] 1155
Endowed Schools Act (1869) Amendment, Comm. cl. 6, [217] 944; add. cl. 951
General Valuation (Ireland), Comm. [216] 1838

PATTEN, Right Hon. Colonel J. W.—cont.

- Ireland—Irish Railways, Purchase of, Res. [215] 1186
- Ireland—Shannon, Overflowing of the, Res. [214] 1590
- Navy Estimates—Dockyards, &c. [216] 149
- Parliament—Resignation of Ministers, Ministerial Statement, [214] 1910
- Parliament—Business of the House, Motion for a Committee, [215] 242
- Parliament—Business of the House—Opposed Business, Res. [214] 1864
- Peace Preservation (Ireland), 2R. [215] 2062
- Police, Administration of the, Motion for a Committee, [215] 1748
- Railway and Canal Traffic, Comm. cl. 10, [215] 382
- Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 3, [216] 927
- Superannuation Act Amendment, Comm. cl. 1, [215] 1704, 1708
- Supply—Houses of Parliament, [215] 785
- Union Rating (Ireland), 2R. [214] 767
- University Education (Ireland), 2R. Amendt. Motion for Adjournment, [214] 1711, 1741, 1744
- University Tests (Dublin) (No. 2), [215] 308
- University Tests (Dublin) (No. 3), Comm. cl. 2, Amendt. [215] 1531

Peace Preservation (Ireland) Bill

(The Marquess of Hartington, Mr. Secretary Bruce)

- c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> May 5 [Bill 145]
- Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2<sup>o</sup>" May 15, [215] 2054
- Amendt. to leave out "now," and add "upon this day six months" (Mr. Sherlock); after debate, Question put, "That 'now,' &c.;" A. 233, N. 28; M. 185; main Question put, and agreed to; Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>
- Order for Committee read; Moved, "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair" May 16, [216] 59
- Amendt. to leave out from "That," and add "the Bill be committed to a Select Committee" (Mr. Pim) v.; after short debate, Question, "That the words, &c.," put, and agreed to; main Question, "That Mr. Speaker, &c.," put, and agreed to; Committee: Report Read 3<sup>o</sup> May 19
- l. Read 1<sup>o</sup> (The Marquess of Lansdowne) May 20 (No. 123)
- Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>, after short debate; Committee negatived; Standing Orders Nos. 37 and 38 considered (according to Order), and dispensed with; Bill read 3<sup>o</sup> May 23, 331 Royal Assent May 26 [36 Vict. c. 24]

PHASE, Mr. J. W., Durham, S.

- Army Estimates—Land Forces, [214] 1092; Motion for reporting Progress, 1093
- Harbours of Refuge, Motion for a Committee, [215] 1424
- Monastic and Conventual Institutions, 2R. Amendt. [216] 1668
- Municipal Officers Superannuation, 2R. [214] 1372
- Prevention of Crime, 2R. [214] 751

[cont.]

[cont.]

PEA PEN GENERAL INDEX PER PER 214—215—216—217.

PEASE, Mr. J. W.—cont.

- Railway and Canal Traffic, 2R. [214] 1045 ; Comm. cl. 10, [215] 379 ; cl. 11, 384, 385 ; add. cl. 597 ; Consid. cl. 10, 720
- [215] Rating (Liability and Value)—Valuation—Consolidated Rate, Leaves, 1515
- 216] 2R. 288 ; Comm. 728 ; cl. 8, 1008, 1012, 1022, 1073 ; Amendt. 1076, 1083 ; cl. 13, 1194, 1287 ; cl. 15, 1487 ; cl. 18, Amendt. 1480
- Salmon Fisheries, 2R. [214] 1378.
- Supply—Queen's and Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer, [215] 1455
- Taxes on Locomotion, Res. [215] 460

PEEK, Mr. H. W., Surrey, Mid.

Criminal Law—Forged Telegrams, [217] 1821

PEEL, Right Hon. Sir R., Tamworth
Spain—King Amadeus, [214] 730, 732

PEEL, Mr. A. W. (Secretary to the Board of Trade), Warwick Bo.

- Coals, Price of—Railways, [214] 547
- Commercial Marine, Motion for an Address, [214] 1359
- Mercantile Marine—Lights in the Channel, Res. [215] 1732
- Railway Regulation, Comm. [217] 1249
- Railways—Case of James Harris, [214] 722
- Weights and Measures Acts, Res. [216] 1087

PELL, Mr. A., Leicestershire, S.

- Agricultural Children, 2R. [214] 697
- Burials, Comm. Amendt. [217] 124
- Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act, Motion for a Committee, [214] 525
- Juries, Comm. cl. 46, [216] 540
- Labourers Cottages (Scotland), 2R. [217] 474
- Landlord and Tenant, 2R. [216] 1648
- Local Taxation Accounts, Comm. add. cl. [215] 467
- Parliamentary Electors Registration, 2R. [217] 463
- Public Health, Comm. [217] 92, 214
- Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. [216] 733 ; cl. 2, 750 ; cl. 3, 1015 ; cl. 13, Motion for reporting Progress, 1238 ; cl. 15, Amendt. 1423, 1426 ; Consid. [217] 417, 421
- Register for Parliamentary and Municipal Electors, 2R. [214] 1958 ; Comm. Amendt. [215] 292
- Turnpike Acts Continuance, Comm. [217] 193

Penalties (Ireland) Bill

(The Marquess of Hartington, Mr. Secretary Bruce)

- c. Ordered ; read 1° July 14 [Bill 289]
- Read 2° July 17
- Committee* ; Report July 22
- Read 3° July 24
- l. Read 1° (Lord O'Hagan) July 25 (No. 242)
- Read 2° July 29
- Committee* July 31
- Report* August 1
- Read 3° August 2
- Royal Assent August 5 [86 & 87 Vict. c. 62]

PERCY, Earl, Northumberland, N.
Army—Volunteer Forces—New Regulations, Res. [217] 282

Women's Disabilities, 2R. [215] 1249

Permissive Prohibitory Liquor Bill

(Sir Wilfrid Lawson, Lord Claud Hamilton, Sir Thomas Basley, Mr. Downing, Mr. Richard, Mr. Miller, Mr. Dabwury)

- b. Considered in Committee ; Bill ordered ; read 1° Feb 7 [Bill 14]
- Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2°" May 7, [215] 1609
- Amendt. to leave out "now," and add "upon this day six months" (Mr. Wheathorne) ; after long debate, Question put, "That now, do," A. 81, N. 321 ; M. 240 ; words added ; main Question, as amended, put, and agreed to ; Bill put off for six months
- Division List, Ayes and Noes, 1661

Persian Government—Concession to Baron de Reuter

Question, Observations, Lord Strathnairn ; Reply, Earl Granville April 8, [215] 517

Moved that an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty for Copy of correspondence between Her Majesty's Government, and Baron de Reuter on the subject of the concession recently made by the Persian Government to him (The Earl of Carnarvon) July 14, [217] 290 ; after short debate, Motion agreed to

Part. P. [803]

Persia—Visit of the Shah

- 216] Question, Mr. Denison ; Answer, Mr. Gladstone May 27, 498 ; Questions, Mr. Denison, Mr. Rylands, Sir Wilfrid Lawson ; Answers, Mr. Gladstone, Viscount Enfield June 9, 538 ; Question, Mr. Bowring ; Answer, Viscount Enfield June 10, 724

Naval Review at Spithead, Questions, Colonel Annesley, Mr. Badlie Cochrane ; Answers, Mr. Goschen June 6, 547 ; Questions, Sir John Hay, Mr. Mitchell Henry, Mr. Yorke ; Answers, Mr. Goschen June 13, 909 ; Question, Mr. Bowring ; Answers, Mr. Gowen June 17, 1063 ; Observations, The Earl of Camperdown June 19, 1150 ; Question, Lord Charnwood ; Answer, Earl Granville June 20, 1218

Review at Woolwich, Question, Lord Elcho ; Answer, Mr. Cardwell June 19, 1973

Review in Windsor Park, Questions, Mr. Walsh, Sir Robert Anstruther, Sir Patrick O'Brien, Viscount Galway ; Answers, Mr. Cardwell, Mr. Goschen June 16, 997 ; Question, Lord Oranmore and Browne ; Answer, The Marquess of Lansdowne June 19, 1151 ; Question, The Duke of Richmond ; Answer, The Marquess of Ripon June 20, 1218

The Naval and Military Reviews, Question, Lord Oranmore and Browne ; Answer, The Earl of Camperdown June 16, 989

PET · · PIM / { SESSION 1878 } PLA · POL
214—215—256—287.

Petitions of Right (Ireland) Bill
(Mr. Butt, Sir Colman O'Loghlen, Mr. Collan)
 c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> June 12 [Bill 189]
 Read 2<sup>o</sup> June 19
 Committee *; Report June 23
 Read 3<sup>o</sup> June 26
 l. Read 1<sup>o</sup> (Marquess of Clanricarde) June 27
 Read 2<sup>o</sup> July 10 (No. 180)
 Committee * July 22 (No. 233)
 Report * July 24
 Read 3<sup>o</sup> July 29
 Royal Assent August 5 [36 Vict. c. 69]

PHILLIPS, Mr. R. N., Bury (Lancashire)
 Currency—Bank Act, Res. [215] 148
 Juries, Comm. cl. 57, [216] 1520

Pier and Harbour Orders Confirmation Bill
(Mr. Arthur Peel, Mr. Chichester Fortescue)
 c. Considered in Committee; Bill ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> April 21 [Bill 132]
 Read 2<sup>o</sup> April 24
 Committee *; Report May 5
 Read 3<sup>o</sup> May 7
 Lord's Amendments (No. 91)
 l. Read 1<sup>o</sup> (Earl of Morley) May 8 (No. 96)
 Read 2<sup>o</sup> May 10
 Committee * May 20
 Report * May 28
 Read 3<sup>o</sup> June 10
 Royal Assent June 16 [36 Vict. c. 83]

PIM, Mr. J., Dublin City
 Colonies, The—Parliamentary reporting in the [217] 1091
 Customs Outport Clerks, Res. Report, [217] 1239
 General Valuation (Ireland), 2R. [215] 1540
 Ireland—Questions, &c.
     Dublin College of Science, [214] 1818
     Education—Teachers in Irish Workhouse Schools, [217] 1177
     Prison Discipline, [216] 366
     Redistribution of Seats, [214] 195
 Ireland—Civil Servants, Res. [216] 1817
 Peace Preservation (Ireland), Comm. Amend. [216] 69; Proviso, 60
 Post Office—Dublin Post Office—Sorters and Letter Carriers, [217] 919
 Railway Accidents, Res. [216] 212
 Railway and Canal Traffic, Comm. cl. 10, Amendt. [215] 378; Consid. cl. 10, Amendt. 720
 Rating Liability (Ireland), 2R. Amendt. [217] 983
 Sale of Liquors on Sunday (Ireland), 2R. [217] 110
 Supply—Metropolitan Police of Dublin, [217] 1139
     Post Office Services, [217] 1115
 Supreme Court of Judicature, Comm. cl. 50, Amendt. [217] 51
 University Education (Ireland), 2R. Amendt. [214] 1437, 1699
 University Tests (Dublin) (No. 3), 2R. [215] 766; Comm. cl. 2, 1532

PLAYFAIR, Dr. Lyon, Edinburgh and St. Andrews' Universities
 Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment, Re-comm. cl. 8, [217] 763; Consid. add. cl. 987
 Endowed Schools Act (1869) Amendment, Comm. cl. 3, [217] 939; cl. 6, 944; add. cl. 952
 Endowed Schools Commissioners—Emmanuel Hospital Scheme, Motion for an Address, [215] 1981
 Parliament—Public Business—Scotch Bills, [216] 484
 *University Education (Ireland), 2R. Amendt. [214] 1459
 Supply—Learned Societies, [215] 1795

PLIMSOLL, Mr. S., Derby Bo.
 Commercial Marine, Motion for an Address, [214] 1819, 1861
 Loss of Life at Sea, [214] 542
 Mercantile Marine—"Hindoo" and "Parga," [215] 9
 Royal Commission, [215] 298
 "Sea Queen," Loss of the, [215] 106, 637
 Merchant Shipping Act—Commitments of Seamen, [216] 561
     "Eleanor," The, [215] 639, 642
 Sea-going Vessels, Draught of, [216] 1961
 Parliament—Breach of Privilege, [214] 740
 Shipping Survey, &c., Leave, [214] 273; 2R. [215] 1987

PLUNKET, Hon. D. R., Dublin University
 Civil Service (Ireland), [214] 154
 India—Indian Budget, [217] 921
 Ireland—Civil Servants, Case of, Res. [216] 1805; [217] 149
 Ireland—Civil Service, Report, [215] 11
 Post Office—(Ireland)—Purchase of Telegraphs, [216] 101
     Sub-Postmasters, [217] 1332
     Telegraph Department—Purchase of the Midland Railway System, [215] 975, 976
 Supply—Metropolitan Police of Dublin, [217] 1143
     Telegraphs, Comm. [217] 1246
 University Education (Ireland), Leave, [214] 429
 University Tests (Dublin) (No. 3), 2R. [215] 762; Comm. cl. 3, 1533

Polling Districts (Ireland) Bill
(The Marquess of Hartington, Mr. Secretary Bruce)
 c. Motion for Leave (The Marquess of Hartington) Feb 7, [214] 174; Bill ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup>* Read 2<sup>o</sup> Feb 14 [Bill 1]
     Committee *; Report Feb 17
     Considered * Feb 21
     Read 3<sup>o</sup> Feb 24
 l. Read 1<sup>o</sup> (Marquess of Lansdowne) Feb 25
     Read 2<sup>o</sup> Feb 28 (No. 24)
     Committee * Mar 3 (No. 34)
     Report * Mar 4
     Read 3<sup>o</sup> Mar 6
     Royal Assent Mar 13 [36 Vict. c. 2]

POL POR { GENERAL INDEX } POR POS
 214—215—216—217.

Pollution of Rivers Bill [n.l.]
(The Earl of Shaftesbury)

- i. Presented ; read 1<sup>o</sup> April 3 (No. 59)
 Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>, after short debate, and referred to a Select Committee May 16, [216] 1
 And, on May 20, the Lords following were named of the Committee :—Ld. Privy Seal, D. Northumberland, M. Salisbury, E. Doncaster, E. Lauderdale, E. Morley, V. Portman, L. Vivian, L. Aveland, L. Penrhyn
 Report of Select Comm. * July 21 (No. 230)
 Bill reported * July 21
 Order for Committee discharged, after short debate ; Bill withdrawn July 29, [217] 1161

POLTIMORE, Lord (Treasurer of the Household)
 Parliament—The Queen's Answer to the Address, [214] 276

Poor Allotments Management Bill [n.l.]
(The Duke of Richmond)

- i. Presented ; read 1<sup>o</sup> Feb 20 (No. 20)
 Bill read 2<sup>o</sup> Mar 7, [214] 1515
 Committee Mar 24 (No. 43)
 Report Mar 27
 Read 3<sup>o</sup> Mar 28
 Commons Amendments (No. 88)
 c. Read 1<sup>o</sup> (Sir Stafford Northcote) April 2
 Read 2<sup>o</sup> April 7 [Bill 113]
 Committee ; Report April 28
 Considered April 30
 Read 3<sup>o</sup> May 1
 i. Royal Assent May 18 [36 Vict. c. 19]

Poor Law

Children of Roman Catholic Parents, Address for a Return (The Lord Buckhurst) Feb 10, [214] 192 ; after short debate, Motion amended, and agreed to Labourers' Unions—Refusal of Relief—Guardians of St. Germans, Question, Mr. Carter ; Answer, Mr. Stansfeld June 12, [216] 834 ; Question, Lord Edmond Fitzmaurice ; Answer, Mr. Stansfeld July 3, 1705

Poor Law (Scotland) Bill

(Mr. Crawford, Sir David Wedderburn, Mr. Miller)
 c. Ordered ; read 1<sup>o</sup> Feb 7 [Bill 4]
 Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2<sup>o</sup>" Feb 28, [214] 973
 Amendt. to leave out "now," and add "upon this day six months" (Sir Edward Colebrooke) ; after debate, Question put, "That 'now,' &c." A. 48, N. 181 ; M. 188
 Main Question, as amended, put, and agreed to ; Bill put off for six months

PORTMAN, Lord

Agricultural Children, 2R. [216] 716
Pollution of Rivers, 2R. [216] 6
Public Worship Facilities, Standing Order No. 34a, [216] 161

Portpatrick Harbour (Repeal of Acts) Bill—Afterwards

- Portpatrick Harbour Bill
(Mr. Arthur Peel, Mr. Chichester Fortescue)
 c. Ordered * Feb 13
 Read 1<sup>o</sup> Feb 14 [Bill 61]
 Read 2<sup>o</sup> Feb 28
 Order for Committee read, and discharged ; Bill committed to a Select Committee * Mar 17
 Committee nominated by the Committee of Selection as follows :—Sir Lawrence Falk (Chairman), Mr. Harris, Mr. William Wells, and Mr. Charles Williams
 Bill reported * April 2
 Re-comm. ; Report April 7
 Read 3<sup>o</sup> April 21
 i. Read 1<sup>o</sup> (Marquess of Lansdowne) April 22
 Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>, after short debate April 25, [215] 969
 Committee ; Report April 28, 1023
 Read 3<sup>o</sup> April 29
 Royal Assent May 15 [36 Vict. c. 14]

Portugal

Extradition Treaty — Capital Punishment, Question, Mr. Gilpin ; Answer, Viscount Enfield Feb 28, [214] 1095
Supplies of Ammunition, Question, Colonel Barttelot ; Answer, Sir Henry Storks July 17, [217] 499
The Commercial Tarif, Question, Mr. Grieve ; Answer, Viscount Enfield April 28, [215] 1029

POST OFFICE

Delivery of Letters, Question, Mr. Anderson ; Answer, Mr. Monsell August 4, [217] 1517
Detention of Mails at Calais, Question, Mr. Harvey Lewis ; Answer, Mr. Monsell May 9, [215] 1718
Dublin Letter Carriers, Question, Major Trench ; Answer, Mr. Monsell August 4, [217] 1528 ; Sub-Postmasters (Ireland), Question, Mr. Plunket ; Answer, Mr. Monsell July 31, 1833
Dublin Post Office—Sorters and Letter Carriers, Question, Mr. Pim ; Answer, Mr. Monsell July 24, [217] 912
Edinburgh and Glasgow Letter-Sorters, Question, Mr. Anderson ; Answer, Mr. Monsell April 24, [215] 903 ; Question, Mr. Miller ; Answer, Mr. Monsell May 8, 1878 ; May 15, 2022
General Post Office, Edinburgh — Salaries, Question, Mr. Miller ; Answer, Mr. Monsell June 28, [216] 1248
Glasgow Post Office, Question, Mr. Anderson ; Answer, Mr. Monsell July 24, [217] 911
Halfpenny Post-Cards, Question, Mr. Welby ; Answer, Mr. Monsell Feb 28, [214] 1161
Inefficiently Stamped Newspapers, Question, Mr. R. N. Fowler ; Answer, Mr. Monsell Mar 8, [214] 1184 ; Mar 7, 1519
Postal Arrangements with the Argentine Republic, Question, Mr. W. H. Smith ; Answer, Mr. Monsell April 24, [215] 904
Post Office Annuities, Question, Mr. Salt ; Answer, Mr. Monsell Feb 26, [214] 892
Post Office Packet Vote—Claim of Mr. Churchward, Question, Mr. Bewring ; Answer, The Attorney General July 8, [216] 1706

[cont.]

POS      POS      { SESSION 1873 }      POS      POS
 214—215—216—217.

Post Office—cont.

Post Office Savings Bank Account, Question, Mr. W. H. Smith; Answer, Mr. Monsell April 4, [215] 604;—Investment of Deposits, Question, Mr. Watney; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer May 9, 1718
Post Office Savings Bank Department—Increase of Staff, Question, Mr. J. G. Talbot; Answers, The Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Monsell August 4, [217] 1529
 “Post Office Tea,” Question, Mr. Heygate; Answer, Ms. Monsell May 26, [216] 451
Registered Letters, Question, Mr. Torr; Answer, Mr. Monsell Mar 10, [214] 1812
Registration of Letters containing Postage Stamps, Question, Mr. Macfie; Answer, Mr. Monsell July 24, [217] 910; Observations, Mr. Monk July 25, 1064; Question, Mr. Macfie; Answer, Mr. Monsell July 31, 1829
Registration of Religious Periodicals, Questions, Colonel Stuart Knox; Answers, Mr. Monsell May 12, [215] 1786
Registration of Newspapers, Question, Mr. McMahon; Answer, Mr. Monsell Mar 24, [215] 12
The Anglo-Italian Mails, Question, Sir David Wedderburn; Answer, Mr. Monsell Mar 4, [214] 1284
The Book Post, Question, Mr. McMahon; Answer, Mr. Monsell April 7, [215] 647

Telegraphic Department

Charges for Messages, Question, Lord Claud John Hamilton; Answer, Mr. Monsell Feb 10, [214] 194;—Return Messages, Question, Mr. Alderman W. Lawrence; Answer, Mr. Monsell July 28, [217] 1087;—Charges for Delivery, Question, Mr. Clare Read; Answer, Mr. Monsell July 14, [217] 316

Extension of Telegraphs to Orkney and Shetland, Question, Mr. Laing; Answer, Mr. Monsell Feb 13, [214] 371;—Carmarthen District, Question, Mr. Jones; Answer, Mr. Monsell May 6, [215] 1657;—Galway, Question, Mr. Heron; Answer, Mr. Monsell May 23, [216] 355

Herring's Telegraph Printing Instrument, Question, Mr. W. M. Torrens; Answer, Mr. Monsell July 31, [217] 1334

Post Office and Telegraph Departments—See title Post Office (Balances)

Purchase of Telegraphs, Question, Mr. Plunket; Answer, Mr. Monsell May 19, [216] 101;—Outstanding Claims, Question, Mr. Denison; Answer, Mr. Monsell June 19, 1185

Purchase of the Midland Railway System, Question, Mr. Plunket; Answer, Mr. Monsell April 26, [215] 975

Statement of Capital Expenditure, Question, Mr. Seely; Answer, Mr. Monsell May 6, [215] 1558

Telegraphs in Rural Districts, Question, Mr. Agar-Ellis; Answer, Mr. Monsell June 20, [216] 1229

Telegrams between France and England, Question, Mr. O'Reilly; Answer, Mr. Monsell May 1, [215] 1292

Telegrams in French, Question, Colonel Bourne; Answer, Mr. Monsell April 29, [215] 1189

Post Office—cont.

Telegrams to Foreign Countries, Question Mr. Muntz; Answer, Mr. Monsell April 24, [215] 900
Telegraph Act, 1869—Compensations, Question, Mr. W. Fowler; Answer, Mr. Monsell Mar 31 [215] 345

Post Office (Balances)—Telegraphic Department—Misappropriation of Funds Explanation, Mr. Slater-Booth Mar 24, [215] 88

Extension of Telegraphs—Misapplication of Funds, Committee of Supply Mar 21;—Report of the Committee on Public Accounts, Observations, Mr. White; debate thereon, [214] 2056

Extension of Telegraphs—Post Office and Telegraph Services—Financial Irregularities, Question, Mr. Fawcett; Answer, Mr. Gladstone Mar 25, 101; Question, Mr. Norwood; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer April 3, 522; Question, Mr. Rylands; Answer, Mr. Monsell April 7, 645; Question, Mr. Seely; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer May 6, 1558; Questions, Mr. Slater-Booth, Mr. Synan; Answers, The Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Baxter 216] May 26, 429; Question, Mr. Dillwyn; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer June 19, 1172

Moved, “That this House, having considered the Reports of the Select Committee of Public Accounts, records its disapproval of the conduct of the Post Office in respect of the misappropriation of balances therein mentioned; and is of opinion that the control of the Treasury over the Post Office as a Revenue Department having proved inadequate for the earlier detection and rectification of such irregularities requires to be more watchfully exercised” (Mr. Cross) July 29, [217] 1189

Amendt. to leave out from “House,” and add “regrets to find, from the Reports of the Committee of Public Accounts, that the Post Office revenue and Savings Bank balances have been largely employed for the purposes of Telegraph capital expenditure without the authority of Parliament, and is of opinion that it is the duty of the Government to take effectual measures to prevent the recurrence of such a proceeding” (Sir John Lubbock v., 1205; Question proposed, “That the words, &c.” after long debate, Question put; A. 111, N. 161; M. 50

Division List, Ayes and Noes, 1230
 Words added; main Question, as amended put, and agreed to

Post Office—Mail Contracts—Cape of Good Hope and Zanzibar Mail Contract

Question, Mr. Salt; Answer, Mr. Monsell Feb 28, [214] 1101; Question, Mr. Holms; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer May 5, [215] 1488; May 23, [216] 357

Orders of the Day postponed June 9, 640

Moved, “That the Contract for the Conveyance of Mails between the Cape of Good Hope and Zanzibar with the Union Steam

[cont.]

[cont.]

POS POS (GENERAL INDEX) POS POW
214—215—216—217.

Post Office—Mail Contracts—cont.

- Ship Company be approved" (Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer) June 9, 686; after debate, Moved, "That the debate be now adjourned" (Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer); after further short debate, Question put; A. 205, N. 121; M. 84; debate adjourned
- Question, Mr. Disraeli; Answer, Mr. Bruce June 13, 934; Question, Observations, Mr. Bouverie; Reply, Mr. Gladstone; short debate thereon June 16, 1000
- Moved, "That the Order for resuming the Adjourned Debate [9th June] be discharged" (The Chancellor of the Exchequer); Motion agreed to; Order discharged
- Orders of the Day postponed June 19, 1174
- Moved, "That the Contract for the Conveyance of Mails between the Cape of Good Hope and Zanzibar with the Union Steam Ship Company be approved" (Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer) June 19, 1195
- After debate, Amendt. to leave out from "That," and add "a Select Committee be appointed to inquire into the circumstances under which Articles of Agreement were made on the 7th day of May 1873 between the Union Steamship Company, Limited, and the Right Honourable William Monsell, Her Majesty's Postmaster General" (Mr. Bouverie) v., 1206; Question, "That the words, etc." put, and negatived
- Question proposed, "That the words 'a Select Committee be appointed to inquire into the circumstances under which Articles of Agreement were made on the 7th day of May 1873 between the Union Steamship Company, Limited, and the Right Honourable William Monsell, Her Majesty's Postmaster General,' be there added;" after further debate, Question, "That those words be there added," put, and agreed to; main Question, as amended, put, and agreed to; Select Committee appointed
- Question, Lord John Manners; Answer, Mr. Gladstone June 23, 1250
- Nomination of Select Committee, Moved, "That Mr. Dodson be one of the Members of the Select Committee on the Cape of Good Hope and Zanzibar Mail Contract" (Mr. Bouverie) June 23, 1307
- Moved, "That the debate be now adjourned" (Mr. Monk); after short debate, Motion agreed to
- Question, Mr. Bourke; Answer, Mr. Bouverie June 26, 1416
- Orders of the Day June 26, 1421
- Question again proposed; Debate resumed June 26, 1446
- Amendt. To leave out from "That," and add "the Committee do consist of Seven Members, Five to be nominated by the Committee of Selection and Two to be added by the House" (Mr. Hunt) v.; Question proposed, "That the words etc.;" after debate, Question put; A. 124, N. 85; M. 39
- Main Question put, and agreed to; Select Committee nominated as follows: — Mr. Dodson (Chairman), Mr. Beeson, Sir Rowland Blennerhassett, Sir Edward Colebrooke, Mr. Gosechen, Mr. Holms, Mr. Leatham, Viscount Sandon, and Mr. Waterhouse
- Report of Select Committee July 23 No. 334

[cont.]

Post Office—Mail Contracts—cont.

- Question, Mr. Slater-Booth; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer July 29, [217] 1179
- Copies of Contracts Nos. 61, 62, 199, 253
- Correspondence . . . . . No. 241

Post Office—Mail Contract (Table Bay and Zanzibar), and (Zanzibar and Aden)

- Moved, "That the fresh Contract for the Conveyance of the Mails between Table Bay and Zanzibar with the Union Steam Ship Company be approved" (Mr. Bruce) August 4, [217] 1553; after short debate, Motion agreed to—Then
- Resolved, That the Contract for the Conveyance of Mails between Zanzibar and Aden with the British India Steam Navigation Company be approved (Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer)
- Copy of Contract . . . . . No. 374

POTTER, Mr. E., Carlisle

- Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 13, [216] 1193

POWELL, Mr. F. S., Yorkshire, W. R., N. Div.

- Census (1871) Returns, [214] 728
- Criminal Law—Folkestone Magistrates, The, [216] 1497
- Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment, Re-comm. cl. 3, [217] 765; cl. 8, Amendt. 790; add. cl. 801
- Elementary Education Act—School Boards—Holme St. Cuthbert's, [217] 1321
- Endowed Schools Act (1869) Amendment, 2R. [217] 731; Comm. cl. 4, 939; cl. 5, Amendt. ib.; cl. 6, 944; add. cl. 951
- Factory Acts, Consolidation of the, [214] 894
- Juries, Comm. Motion for Adjournment, [217] 590
- Metropolis—Hyde Park—Serpentine, The, [214] 601
- New Courts of Justice, [216] 407
- Metropolis Buildings Act Amendment, 2R. Amendt. [215] 497
- Minor Protection, 2R. [216] 1377
- Parliament—Address in Answer to the Speech, Report, [214] 171
- Public Health, Comm. [217] 91
- Railway and Canal Traffic, Comm. cl. 24, Amendt. [215] 594
- Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 3, [216] 1078; cl. 13, Amendt. 1233
- Supply—Alabama Claims, [216] 411;—Report, 463

- Convict Establishments, [217] 1134
- Education—England and Wales, [216] 1459
- Embassy Houses at Vienna and Washington, [217] 1131
- Harbours, &c. [215] 787
- New Palace at Westminster, [217] 1126
- Privy Council for Trade, &c. [215] 1011
- Public Buildings, [215] 778
- Registrar General of Births, &c. [215] 1016; [217] 401
- Salaries, &c. of Temporary Commissions, [215] 1816
- Survey of the United Kingdom, [215] 786

[cont.]

POW    PRI    { SESSION 1873 }    PRI    PUB
 214—215—216—217.

POWELL, Mr. F. S.—none.

Supreme Court of Judicature, Comm. cl. 8, [216] 1894; cl. 29, 1879; cl. 54, [217] 181; cl. 57, Amendt. ib.
 University Tests (Dublin) (No. 3), Comm. cl. 3, [215] 1533
 Ways and Means, Report, [215] 918
 Workshops Act, Res. [215] 996

POWERSCOURT, Viscount

Game Birds (Ireland), 2R. [216] 829
 Peace Preservation (Ireland) Acts Continuance, 2R. [216] 840

POWIS, Earl of

Fairs, 2R. [216] 158
 Land Titles and Transfer, 2R. [216] 350
 Sites for Places of Religious Worship, Report, [216] 1082

Prevention of Crime Bill

(Mr. Secretary Bruce, Mr. Winterbotham)
 c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> Feb 10 [Bill 36]
 Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>, after short debate Feb 20, [214] 743
 Bill withdrawn * July 7

Prevention of Frauds on Charitable Funds Bill [H.L.]

(The Earl of Shaftesbury)
 l. Presented; read 1<sup>o</sup> May 19 (No. 122)
 Bill withdrawn, after short debate July 7, [216] 1847

PRICE, Mr. W. P., Gloucester City

Railway and Canal Companies Amalgamation, Res. [214] 785
 Railway and Canal Traffic, Comm. cl. 11, Amendt. [215] 883

Prison Ministers Act (1863) Amendment

Bill (Sir John Trelawny, Mr. Osborne, Lord Arthur Russell)
 c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> Feb 7 [Bill 18]
 Bill withdrawn * June 30

Prison Ministers Committee, 1870

Questions, Sir John Trelawny, Mr. Clare Read; Answers, Mr. Gladstone Mar 28, [215] 396

Prison Officers Superannuation (Ireland)

Bill (Sir John Gray, Mr. Pim, Mr. Ion Trant Hamilton)
 c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> April 29 [Bill 142]
 Read 2<sup>o</sup> May 7
 Committee *—R.P. May 14
 Committee *—R.P. June 11
 Committee *; Report June 26
 Considered * June 30
 Read 3<sup>o</sup> July 1

l. Read 1<sup>o</sup> (Earl of Longford) July 3 (No. 192)
 Read 2<sup>o</sup> July 8

Committee * July 10

Report * July 11

Read 3<sup>o</sup> July 14

Royal Assent July 28 [36 & 37 Vict. o. 51]

VOL. CCXVII. [THIRD SERIES.]

Prisoners on Demand Bill

(Mr. Henry B. Sheridan, Mr. Looke, Mr. McLagan)
 c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> July 7 [Bill 290]
 2R. July 28

Proportional Representation Bill

(Mr. Morrison, Mr. Fawcett, Mr. Auberon Herbert, Mr. Thomas Hughes)
 c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> June 18 [Bill 194]
 2R. July 30

Public Departments (Purchases, &c.)

Select Committee appointed, "to inquire into and report upon the existing principles and practice which in the several Public Departments and Bodies regulate the purchase and sale of Materials and Stores" (Mr. Holmes) Mar 10, [214]

Committee nominated as follows:—Mr. Holmes (Chairman), Sir George Balfour, Colonel Barttelot, Mr. Bates, Mr. Baxter, Mr. Brand, Mr. Alexander Brown, Mr. Campbell-Bannerman, Mr. Crum-Ewing, Mr. Goldney, Sir John Hay, Mr. Mitchell Henry, Mr. Hick, Mr. Laird, Mr. J. D. Lewis, Mr. Mellor, Mr. Salt, Mr. Torr, and Mr. Whitwell

Report of Select Comm. July 18 No. 311

Public Expenditure

Moved, "That the present rate of Public Expenditure is excessive; and that this House desires that it should be reduced, with a view to the diminution of the public burdens" (Mr. Vernon Harcourt) Feb 18, [214] 602

After long debate, Amendt. to leave out from "That," and add "a Select Committee be appointed to inquire whether any and what reductions can be effected in the expenditure for Civil Services (other than the National Debt and the Civil List), whether charged on the Consolidated Fund or defrayed from Votes of Parliament, with special reference to those branches thereof which are not under the direct or effectual control of the Treasury" (Mr. Childers) v.; Question, "That the words, &c." put, and negatived; words added; main Question, as amended, put, and agreed to

Civil Service Expenditure, Select Committee appointed on

And, on Feb 28, Committee nominated as follows:—Mr. Childers (Chairman), Viscount Crichton, Mr. Cubitt, Mr. Vernon Harcourt, Mr. Hermon, Mr. Kirkman Hedgson, Mr. McLaren, Mr. Melly, Sir Stafford Northcote, Mr. Raikes, Mr. Rathbone, Mr. Rylands, Mr. Slater-Booth, Mr. William Henry Smith, Mr. Frederick Stanley, Mr. West, and Mr. White

Reports of Select Comm. Nos. 131, 248, 352

Public Health Bill

(Sir Charles Adderley, Mr. Francis Sharp Powell, Mr. Whitbread, Lord Robert Montagu, Mr. Stephen Cave, Mr. Richards)

c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> Mar 21 [Bill 99]
 Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2<sup>o</sup>" May 7, [215] 1884

PUB      PUB      { GENERAL INDEX }      PUB      PUB
214—215—216—217.

Public Health Bill—cont.

Amendt. to leave out from "That," and add "it is inexpedient to add to the duties at present imposed upon sanitary authorities constituted by the Act 1872, until their powers are better defined by a consolidation of the statutes, and appointments have been completed in conformity with the intention of the Act" (Mr. Corrance) v.; Question proposed, "That the words, &c." after short debate, Debate adjourned. Debate resumed May 8, 1870; after short debate, Amendt. withdrawn; main Question put, and agreed to; Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>. Order for Committee read; Moved, "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair" July 8, [217] 90; after short debate, Moved, "That the debate be now adjourned" (Mr. Dimsdale); Question put; A. 36, N. 92; M. 58. Question again proposed, "That Mr. Speaker, &c." Moved, "That this House do now adjourn" (Mr. Knight); Question put, and negatived. Original Question put, and agreed to; Committee—R.P. Moved, "That this House will, upon Friday next, again resolve itself into the said Committee" Amendt. to leave out "Friday next," and insert "Tuesday the 12th day of August" (Mr. James Lowther) v.; Question put, "That 'Friday next,' &c." A. 74, N. 24; M. 50; main Question put, and agreed to. Order for Committee discharged; Bill withdrawn July 11, 213.

Public Health Act, 1872

Epping Drainage District, Question, Sir Henry Selwin-Ibbetson; Answer, Mr. Hibbert May 13, [215] 1872. Health of the Port of London, Question, Mr. Cadogan; Answer, Mr. Stansfeld July 7, [216] 1858. Poor Law Inspectors, Question, Dr. Lush; Answer, Mr. Stansfeld April 3, [215] 624. Royal Engineers, Question, Sir Joseph Bailey; Answer, Mr. Stansfeld May 8, [215] 1878. Salaries, Question, Sir Henry Selwin-Ibbetson; Answer, Mr. Hibbert May 13, [215] 1873.

Public Health Act (1872) Amendment Bill
(Mr. Spencer Walpole, Mr. Beresford Hope, Sir Robert Torrens, Mr. William Fowler)

c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> July 14 [Bill 238]. Read 2<sup>o</sup> July 16. Committee*; Report July 28. Considered*; read 3<sup>o</sup> July 29. l. Read 1<sup>o</sup> (Earl Powis) July 31 (No. 257). Read 2<sup>o</sup> August 1. Committee*; Report; read 3<sup>o</sup> August 2. Royal Assent August 5 [36 & 37 Vict. c. 73].

Public Health Legislation—The Sanitary Commission

Question, Mr. Raikes; Answer, Sir Charles Adderley Feb 17, [214] 646. Digest of Sanitary Statutes, Question, Sir Michael Hicks-Beach; Answer, Mr. Stansfeld Feb 7, [214] 154; Question, Sir Charles

Public Health Legislation—cont.

Adderley; Answer, Mr. Gladstone Feb 10, 198; Question, Sir Charles Adderley; Answer, Mr. Stansfeld Feb 18, 373; Feb 25, 395; Question, Mr. Gregory; Answer, Mr. Hibbert April 21, [215] 726.

Public Meetings (Ireland) Bill

(Mr. P. J. Smyth, Mr. M'Mahon, Mr. Ronayne, Sir John Gray, Mr. Downing, Mr. Butt) c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> May 7 [Bill 157]. Read 2<sup>o</sup>; debate adjourned June 17. Debate resumed July 7, [216] 1890; after short debate, Question put, and negatived. Bill withdrawn* July 24.

Public Offices—New Admiralty and War Offices

Question, Lord Redesdale; Answer, The Duke of St. Albans; short debate thereon August 4, [217] 1513.

Public Prosecutors Bill

(Mr. Secretary Bruce, Mr. Attorney General, Mr. Winterbotham) c. Question, Mr. Eykyn; Answer, Mr. Bruce Mar 26, [215] 104. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> May 23 [Bill 173]. Bill withdrawn* July 7.

Public Records (Ireland) Act (1867)

Amendment Bill (The Marquess of Hartington, Mr. Secretary Bruce) c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> June 30 [Bill 217]. Read 2<sup>o</sup> July 3. Committee*—R.P. July 7. Committee*; Report July 10. Read 3<sup>o</sup> July 11. l. Read 1<sup>o</sup> (Lord O'Hagan) July 14 (No. 209). Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>, after short debate July 25, [217] 971. Committee discharged* July 31.

Public Schools Act—Shrewsbury School

Question, Mr. Straight; Answer, Mr. Hibbert May 19, [216] 99.

Public Schools (Eton College Property)

Bill [H.L.] (The Lord Lyttelton) l. Presented; read 1<sup>o</sup> July 10 (No. 204). Read 2<sup>o</sup> July 14. Committee*; Report July 15. Read 3<sup>o</sup> July 17. c. Read 1<sup>o</sup> (Mr. Spencer Walpole) July 21. Read 2<sup>o</sup> July 24 [Bill 251]. Committee*; Report July 25. Read 3<sup>o</sup> July 28. l. Royal Assent August 5 [36 & 37 Vict. c. 62].

[cont.]

PUB RAI { SESSION 1873 } RAI RAI
 214—215—216—217.

Public Works Loan Commissioners (School and Sanitary Loans) Bill—Formerly

Public Works Commissioners [Loans to School Boards and Sanitary Authorities] Bill

(Mr. Baxter, Mr. William Henry Gladstone)

c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> June 24 [Bill 208]

Read 2<sup>o</sup> June 30

Committee*; Report July 1

Read 3<sup>o</sup> July 2

l. Read 1<sup>o</sup> (Marquess of Lansdowne) July 8

Read 2<sup>o</sup> July 18 (No. 193)

Committee*; Report July 17

Read 3<sup>o</sup> July 18

Royal Assent July 21 [36 & 37 Vict. c. 49]

Public Works Loans—England and Ireland

Questions, Mr. Delahunt; Answers, The Chancellor of the Exchequer July 21, [217] 680; July 24, 905; Question, Mr. Delahunt; Answer, Mr. Baxter July 25, 996

Public Worship Facilities Bill

(Mr. Salt, Mr. Couper-Temple, Sir Smith Child, Mr. Akroyd, Mr. Dimsdale)

c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> Feb 7 [Bill 27]

214] Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>, after short debate Feb 25, 969

Moved, "That the Bill be committed to a Select Committee" (Mr. Beresford Hope); after further short debate, Question put; A. 9, N. 40; M. 31

Committee; Report Mar 20, 1859 [Bill 100]

Bill considered* Mar 27

Read 3<sup>o</sup> Mar 31

l. Read 1<sup>o</sup> (E. of Carnarvon) April 1 (No. 56)

216] Standing Order, No. 34a, considered (according to order), and, after short debate, dispensed with in respect of the said Bill May 20, 1859

Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2<sup>o</sup>" June 26, 1878

Amendt. to leave out ("now,") and insert ("this day three months") (The Earl of Shaftesbury); after debate, on Question, That ("now,") &c.; Cont. 52, Not-Cont. 68; M. 16; resolved in the negative

Division List, Cont. and Not-Cont., 1896

RAIKES, Mr. H. C., Chester

Army—Adjutants of Militia, [216] 1495

Gunpowder—Duffey's, Mr. Invention, [217] 906

Endowed Schools Act (1869), Motion for a Committee, [214] 297

France—Commercial Treaty, 1860, [215] 521

India—Forest Department, [217] 35

Juries, Comm. cl. 5, [216] 526

Law Officers of the Crown—Attorney General, [215] 14

Married Women's Property Act (1870) Amendment, 2R. [214] 688

Municipal Boroughs Extension, 2B. [217] 121

Parliamentary Representation—Vacant Seats, [216] 103

Probate and Divorce Court, Judge of the, [214] 1182

RAIKES, Mr. H. C.—cont.

Public Health Legislation—Sanitary Commission, [214] 546

Supply—Court of Chancery, [215] 1774

Supreme Court of Judicature, Comm. [216] 1582; cl. 5, Amendt. 1595; cl. 6, 1742; cl. 28, Amendt. 1874, 1875; cl. 74, Amendt. [217] 188; cl. 75, Amendt. 218; add. cl. Amendt. 335, 336

Sweden—Coronation of the King of, [216] 353

University Education (Ireland), 2R. Amendt. [214] 1758

Railway Accidents

Question, Sir Henry Selwin-Ibbetson; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue Feb 18, [214] 376

Moved, "That, in the opinion of this House, the time is come when the Government should take powers to enforce the adoption, where necessary, on Railway Companies, of additional securities for the safety of the public" (Sir Henry Selwin-Ibbetson) May 20, [216] 174

Amendt. To leave out from "when," and add "the Railways of the United Kingdom should become the property, and be under the control and management of the State" (Mr. Lea) v.; Question proposed, "That the words, &c.;" after debate

[House counted out]

Railway and Canal Traffic Bill

(Mr. Chichester Fortescue, Mr. Childers, Mr. Arthur Peel)

214] c. Motion for Leave (Mr. Chichester Fortescue) Feb 10, 220; after debate, Bill ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> [Bill 34]

Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>, after debate Feb 27, 1042

Question, Sir Herbert Croft; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue Mar 6, 1386

215] Order for Committee read; Moved, "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair" Mar 31, 349

Amendt. to leave out from "That," and add "this House will, upon this day six months, resolve itself into the said Committee" (Mr. Joshua Fielden) v.; after debate, Question, "That the words, &c.," put, and agreed to Main Question, "That Mr. Speaker, &c.," put, and agreed to; Committee—R.P.

Committee; Report April 3, 590 [Bill 121]

Moved, "That the Bill be now taken into Consideration" April 7, 719; A. 103, N. 23; M. 80; Bill considered

Moved, "That the Bill be now read 3<sup>o</sup>" April 28, 1105

Amendt. to leave out from "Bill be," and add "re-committed in respect of certain new Clauses" (Sir Herbert Croft) v.; Question proposed, "That the words, &c.;" after short debate, Amendt. withdrawn; main Question put, and agreed to; Bill read 3<sup>o</sup>

l. Read 1<sup>o</sup> (Lord President) April 29 (No. 84)

Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>, after short debate May 6, 1544

Committee May 13, 1843 (No. 112)

216] Report May 18, 8 (No. 120)

Read 3<sup>o</sup> May 19

l. Lord's Amendments. considered May 26, 482; after short debate, further consideration deferred [Bill 171]

[cont.]

[cont.]

RAI RAI { GENERAL INDEX } RAI RAI
214-215-216-217.

Railway and Canal Traffic Bill—cont.

- 216] Lords Amendts. further considered June 23, 1298 ; several agreed to ; one amended, and agreed to ; one disagreed to .
- Committee appointed, "to draw up Reasons to be assigned to The Lords for disagreeing to the Amendt. to which this House hath disagreed :" List of the Committee, 1306
- 217] i. Commons Amendts. to Lords Amendts. and Commons Reasons for disagreeing to one of the Amendts. made by the Lords considered July 8, 8 (Nos. 172-211)
- Commons Amendts. to Lords Amendts. agreed to .
- Moved, not to insist on the Amendt. in Clause 25 to which the Commons have disagreed (The Lord President)
- After short debate, on Question, whether to insist ? Cont. 79, Not-Cont. 63 ; M. 18 ; resolved in the affirmative
- An Amendt. made to the said Amendt. ; and a Committee appointed to prepare Reasons to be offered to the Commons for the Lords insisting on their Amendt.
- c. Lords Amendts. July 14, 383 [Bill 171]
- Moved, "That this House doth not insist on its disagreement to the Amendt. made by the Lords in page 11, line 3, and which Amendt. was leave out (may also, if they think fit), and insert (shall)"
- Question put, and agreed to .
- Amendt. to insert after the word "shall" in the said Lords Amendts., the words "in all proceedings before them under sections 5, 10, 11, and 12 of this Act, and may, if they think fit, in all other proceedings before them under this Act" (Mr. Chichester Fortescue)
- Question proposed, "That those words be there inserted"
- Amendt. proposed to the said proposed Amendt. to leave out the figure "10" (Mr. Rathbone) ; Question put, "That '10,' &c. ;" A. 88, N. 14 ; M. 74 ; words inserted
- i. Royal Assent July 21 [36 & 37 Vict. c. 48]

Railway Casualties

Moved, That there be laid before the House "Return of the number of persons in the service of each railway company in the United Kingdom who had been killed or seriously injured in the discharge of their duties from the 1st of January, 1872, to the 1st of June, 1873, and of the amount of compensation given by the Company in each case" (Lord Buckhurst) June 12, [216] 831 ; after short debate, Motion amended, and agreed to

Railway Communication with India—See title India

Railway, &c. (Transfer and Amalgamation) Bills

- c. Joint Committees, Question, Mr. Rathbone ; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue Feb 17, [214] 546 ; Questions, Mr. Woods, Mr. Rathbone ; Answers, Mr. Chichester Fortescue May 6, [215] 1486

Resolved, That all Bills of the present Session which include among their main provisions

cont.

Railway, &c. (Transfer and Amalgamation) Bills
—cont.

any of the following objects—(1) The transfer to any Railway or Canal Company of the undertaking or part of the undertaking of any other such Company ; or (2) The transfer to any Railway or Canal Company of any Harbour ; or (3) The amalgamation of the undertaking or any part of the undertaking of any Railway or Canal Company with the undertaking of any other such Company, shall be referred to a Joint Committee of Lords and Commons (Mr. Chichester Fortescue) Feb 21 ; Resolution to be communicated to the Lords, and their concurrence desired thereto.

i. The Commons Message

Moved, "That the Message of the House of Commons on the subject of Railway, &c. (Transfer and Amalgamation) Bills be taken into consideration" (The Lord President) Feb 25, [214] 886 ; Motion agreed to

Then it was moved that the House do concur in the Resolution communicated by the Commons ; after debate, Motion agreed to ; and a Message sent to the Commons to acquaint them therewith

And, on May 1, Committee of the Commons nominated as follows :—Mr. Massey (Chairman), Mr. Leveson Gower, and Mr. Gregory And, on May 2, the Lords following were named of the Committee :—E. Belmore, E. Grey, L. Blachford

Message from the Commons that they have directed the Committees appointed by them to join with the Select Committee of their Lordships for the consideration of, to meet the Committee appointed by their Lordships May 8

Railway and Canal Commissioners' Names, Observations, Mr. Chichester Fortescue April 28, [215] 1027

Railway and Canal Commissioners' Court, Question, The O'Denoghue ; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue April 24, [215] 903

Railway Regulation Bill—Formerly

Regulation of Railways (Returns) Bill
(Mr. Chichester Fortescue, Mr. Arthur Peel)

- c. Ordered ; read 1st July 10 [Bill 232]
- Read 2nd July 17
- Committee ; Report July 29, [217] 1248
- Considered * ; read 3rd July 30
- i. Read 1st (Earl Cowper) July 31 (No. 259)
- Read 2nd ; Committee negatived August 1
- Read 3rd August 2
- Royal Assent August 5 [36 & 37 Vict. c. 76]

Railways

Board of Trade Returns (1872), Question, Mr. Lea ; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue May 5, [215] 1487

Communication between Passengers and Guards, Question, Mr. Watney ; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue May 9, [215] 1711 ; Questions, Colonel North, Mr. J. G. Talbot ; Answers, Mr. Chichester Fortescue July 29, [217] 1172

Hours of Work—Case of Edwin Chivers, Question, Mr. M. T. Bass ; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue Feb 19, [214] 875 ;—

cont.

RAI RAT { SESSION 1873 } RAT RAT
214—215—216—217.

Railways—cont.

Case of James Harris, Question, Mr. M. A. Bass; Answer, Mr. Peel; Observations, Mr. Dillwyn Feb 20, 722

Railway Companies and the Coal Trade, Question, Mr. Eykyn; Answer, Mr. A. Peel Feb 17, [214] 547; Questions, Mr. J. B. Smith, Mr. Eykyn; Answers, Mr. Chichester Fortescue Mar 4, 1286

The Heberlein Break, Question, Sir Henry Selwin-Libbетson; Answer, Viscount Enfield Mar 21, [214] 1981

Railways Amalgamation Bill

(Mr. Stapleton, Mr. Dickinson)

c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> July 7 [Bill 227]
Bill withdrawn * July 23

Railways Provisional Certificate Bill
Afterwards

Railways Provisional Certificates
(Widnes Railway) Bill

(Mr. Arthur Peel, Mr. Chichester Fortescue)

c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> Feb 24 [Bill 78]
Read 2<sup>o</sup> Mar 5

Order for Committee read, and discharged; ordered that the Bill be committed to a Select Committee, to be appointed in the same manner as in the case of a Railway or Canal Bill Mar 7

Bill reported * May 7

Report of Select Committee [Bill 156]

Re-comm.—R.P. May 8

Committee*; Report May 9

Read 3<sup>o</sup> May 12

l. Read 1<sup>o</sup> (Earl of Morley) May 13 (No. 111)

Read 2<sup>o</sup> May 23

Committee*; Report June 16

Read 3<sup>o</sup> June 17

Royal Assent July 7 [36 & 37 Vict. c. 84]

RATHBONE, Mr. W., Liverpool

Administrative Departments—Courts of Justice, [217] 495

Commercial Marine, Motion for an Address, [214] 1355

International Law—New Rules, Motion for an Address, [214] 2007

Juries, Comm. cl. 5, Amendt. [216] 528

Local Taxation, Motion for a Committee, [215] 1834

Mercantile Marine—"Knight Templar," The, [215] 225

Municipal Corporations (Borough Funds) Act, [215] 105

Municipal Officers Superannuation, 2R. [214] 1887

Post Office—Mail Contracts, Res. [216] 709;—Cape and Zanzibar, 1218

Railway Amalgamation Bills—Joint Committees, [214] 548

Railway and Canal Companies—Joint Committee, [215] 1487

Railway and Canal Traffic, Comm. cl. 4, [215] 374; cl. 10, Amendt. 378, 379, 381; cl. 33, 595; add. cl. 597; Lords Amendts. [216] 1305; Amendt. [217] 383

Register for Parliamentary and Municipal Electors, Re-comm. [215] 719; cl. 3, 795; cl. 10, Amendt. 1691; cl. 13, 1893; add. cl. 1694

RATHBONE, Mr. W.—cont.

Supply—Education, England and Wales, [216] 1453

Supreme Court of Judicature, Comm. cl. 26, [216] 1873; cl. 50, [217] 47; cl. 60, Amendt. 182, 184; add. cl. 78, 229

Vexatious Objections (Borough Registration), 2R. [214] 665

Ways and Means, Report, [215] 1338

Rating (Liability and Value) Bill

(Mr. Stansfeld, Mr. Secretary Bruce, Mr. Goechen, Mr. Hibbert)

215] c. Motion for Leave (Mr. Stansfeld) May 5, 1491; Bill ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> [Bill 146]

216] Government Property, Question, Mr. W. H. Smith; Answer, Mr. Stansfeld May 20, 171 Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2<sup>o</sup>" May 22, 277

Amendt. to leave out "now," and add "upon this day six months" (Mr. Cawley); Question proposed, "That 'now,' &c.;" after short debate, Amendt. withdrawn; main Question put, and agreed to; Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>

Order for Committee read; Moved, "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair" June 10, 725

Amendt. to leave out from "That," and add "the Bill be committed to a Select Committee" (Mr. Scourfield) v.; after debate, Question put, "That the words, &c.;" A. 211, N. 181; M. 30

Main Question, "That Mr. Speaker, &c.," put, and agreed to; Committee—R.P.

Committee—R.P. June 19, 910

Committee—R.P. June 16, 1003

Committee—R.P. June 17, 1065

Committee—R.P. June 19, 1174

Committee—R.P. June 20, 1232

Committee; Report June 26, 1423 [Bill 205]

217] Order for Consideration, as amended, read July 16, 401

After short debate, Moved, "That the Bill be now taken into Consideration"

Amendt. to leave out from "Bill be," and add "re-committed" (Mr. Cawley) v.; after further short debate, Question, "That the words, &c.," put and negatived; Question proposed, "That 're-committed' be added," v.; after further short debate, Amendt. proposed to the said proposed Amendt., to add "in respect of Clauses 3 and 19, and of any new Clauses relating to the subject matter of those Clauses" (Mr. Cross); Question, "That those words be added to the proposed Amendt.," put, and agreed to Amendt. proposed to the said proposed Amendt., as amended, to add, at the end thereof, "and also in respect of Clauses 4 and 6" (Mr. Graham); Question put, "That those words be there added;" A. 136, N. 193; M. 57

Words "re-committed in respect of Clauses 3 and 19, and of any new Clauses relating to the subject matter of those Clauses," added to the words "That the Bill be," in the main Question; main Question, so amended, put, and agreed to; Committee—R.P. 419

Committee; Report; Considered July 18, 610

Read 3<sup>o</sup>, after short debate July 21, 685

l. Read 1<sup>o</sup> (Earl of Kimberley) July 21 (No. 231)

Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2<sup>o</sup>" July 25, 973

[cont.]

[cont.]

RAT REA { GENERAL INDEX } REA RED
 214—215—216—217.

Rating (Liability and Value) Bill—cont.

Amendt. to leave out ("now,") and insert ("this day three months") (Lord Henniker) ; after debate, on Question, That ("now,") &c. ; Cont. 43, Not-Cont. 59 ; M. 16 ; resolved in the negative, and Bill to be read 2<sup>o</sup> this day three months
 Division List, Cont. and Not-Cont. [217] 903

Rating (Liability and Value) [Payment of Rates]

Considered in Committee June 10, [216] 795 ; Resolution agreed to ; reported June 11

Rating Liability (Ireland) Bill

(The Marquess of Hartington, Mr. Secretary Brace)

c. Ordered ; read 1<sup>o</sup> July 17 [Bill 246]
 Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2<sup>o</sup>" July 24, [217] 962
 Amendt. to leave out "now," and add "upon this day three months" (Mr. Pim) ; Question proposed, "That 'now,' &c." after short debate, Amendt. withdrawn ; main Question put, and agreed to ; Bill read 2<sup>o</sup> Bill withdrawn * July 25

Rating of Government Property—Consolidated Rate Bill

Question, Mr. W. Morrison ; Answer, Mr. Hibbert May 28, [216] 357

RAVENSWORTH, Lord

Alkali Act, 1868—Petition, [216] 1776
 Pollution of Rivers, 2R. [216] 3

READ, Mr. Clare S., Norfolk, S.

Agricultural Children, 2R. [214] 689 ; Comm. cl. 4, [215] 1458 ; 3R. 1709
 Cattle—German Cattle, Importation of, [215] 1717
 Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act, Motion for a Committee, [214] 508, 521
 Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment, Consid. add. cl. [217] 960
 Endowed Schools Act (1869) Amendment, Comm. cl. 6, [217] 945
 Labourers Cottages (Scotland), 2R. [217] 473
 Landlord and Tenant, [215] 644 ; 2R. [216] 1644
 Metropolis Buildings Act Amendment, 2R. [215] 501
 Police, Administration of the, Motion for a Committee, [215] 1748
 Post Office—Telegraphic Department, [217] 516
 Prison Ministers Committee, [215] 297
 Public Health, 2R. [215] 1708 ; Comm. [217] 93
 215] Rating (Liability and Value)—Valuation—Consolidated Rate, Leave, 1519
 216] Comm. 735 ; cl. 3, 928, 933, 1006, 1008, 1010 ; Amendt. 1011, 1013, 1019, 1020, 1021, 1028, 1029, 1031 ; cl. 15, 1424, 1427, 1428 ; Amendt. 1429, 1430
 217] Consid. 415, 420, 421, 619
 Supply—Education, England and Wales, [216] 1469
 Tithe Commutation Act—Market Gardens, [214] 722

READ, Mr. Clare S.—cont.

Turnpike Acts Continuance, Comm. Motion for Adjournment, [217] 194
 Ways and Means—Financial Statement, Comm. [215] 687 ; Report, 1346
 Wild Birds Protection, Motion for a Committee, [215] 1188

Real Estate Intestacy Bill

(Mr. Locke King, Mr. Hindle Palmer)

c. Ordered ; read 1<sup>o</sup> Feb 7 [Bill 20]
 Bill withdrawn * August 1

Real Estate Settlements Bill

(Mr. William Fowler, Mr. Robert Brand, Mr. Watkin Williams)

c. Ordered ; read 1<sup>o</sup> Feb 19 [Bill 38]
 Order for 2R. discharged ; Bill withdrawn July 2, [216] 1643

Real Property Limitation Bill [H.L.]

(The Lord Chancellor)

l. Presented ; read 1<sup>o</sup> April 29 (No. 86)
 Read 2<sup>o</sup> May 28

Record of Title (Ireland) Act (1865)

Amendment Bill

(Sir Robert Torrens, Sir Colman O'Loghlen, Mr. Pim, Mr. Matthews)

c. Motion for Leave (Sir Robert Torrens) Feb 25, [214] 968 ; Bill ordered ; read 1<sup>o</sup> [Bill 79] 2R. [Dropped]

REDESDALE, Lord (Chairman of Committees)

Agricultural Children, 2R. [216] 721
 Army—Military Depôt at Oxford, Address for Correspondence, [216] 1494
 Bastardy Laws Amendment, Comm. [214] 1382 ; Commons Amends. [215] 601
 Chelsea Water, 2R. [214] 1023, 1025
 Consolidated Fund Appropriation, 2R. [217] 1511
 Edmunds, Leonard, Esquire—Petition of, [216] 963, 978
 Endowed Schools Commission, [214] 867
 Epping Forest, 2R. [214] 1179
 Gas and Water Works Facilities Act (1870) Amendment, 2R. [217] 205 ; Comm. Amendt. 389, 390 ; 3R. Amendt. 602
 Gas Companies—Coal and Gas, Price of, [215] 1459, 1463
 Improvement of Land, Motion for a Committee, [215] 508
 Judicial Peerges, Motion for an Address, [216] 1758, 1775, 1776
 Marriages (Ireland), 2R. [215] 92
 Metropolis—Parliament Street, [217] 1428, 1429
 Parliament—Address in Answer to the Speech, [214] 47
 Public Offices—New Admiralty and War Offices, [217] 1513, 1514
 Public Worship Facilities—Standing Order No. 34a. [216] 100

[cont.]

[cont.]

RED REG { SESSION 1873 }

214-215-216-217.

REG REG

REDDY, Lord—cont.

- Railway and Canal Traffic, 2R. [215] 1854; 1856; Report, cl. 20, [216] 9
 Railways, &c. (Transfer and Amalgamation), Commons Message, [214] 888
 Registration of Births and Deaths, 2R. [215] 895
 Shah of Persia—Review at Windsor, [216] 1216, 1217
 Supreme Court of Judicature, 1R. [214] 365; Comm. [215] 394; Re-comm. 1268; Res. 1396, 1402; 3R. Amendt. 1463; Commons Amendts. Amendt. [217] 869

REDMOND, Mr. W. A., Wexford

- Union Rating (Ireland), 2R. [214] 762
 University Tests (Dublin) (No. 3), 2R. [215] 776

REED, Mr. C., Hackney

- Bethnal Green Museum—Turner Drawings, The, [214] 1283
 East India House Museum, [216] 888
 Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment, 2R. [217] 545; Re-comm. cl. 3, Amendt. 778, 780, 782; cl. 20, 795; add. cl. 801; Consid. add cl. 959; cl. 23, 961
 Juries, Comm. cl. 7, [216] 529
 Rating (Liability and Value), 2R. [216] 289; Comm. cl. 8, Amendt. 1081; Re-comm. [217] 613; Consid. 617
 Register for Parliamentary and Municipal Electors, Re-comm. cl. 10, [215] 1691

Reformatory and Industrial Schools—

- Ashton-under-Lyne Catholic School
 Question, Mr. Cawley; Answer, Mr. Bruce June 19, [216] 1161

Register for Parliamentary and Municipal Electors Bill

(Mr. Attorney General, Mr. Hibbert)

- c. Motion for Leave (Mr. Attorney General) 214] Feb 17, 576; Bill ordered, after short debate; read 1<sup>o</sup>. [Bill 68]
 . Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>, after short debate Mar 20, 1947
 Order for Committee read; Moved, "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair" 215] Mar 27, 292
 Amendt. to leave out from "That," and add "the Bill be committed to a Select Committee" (Mr. Pell) v.; Question proposed, "That the words, &c.," after short debate, Moved, "That the debate be now adjourned" (Colonel Barttelot); A. 45, N. 64; M. 19
 Original Question again proposed; Amendt. withdrawn; main Question, "That Mr. Speaker, &c.," put, and agreed to; Committee; Report
 Order for Committee (on re-comm.) read; Moved, "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair" April 7, 713
 Amendt. to leave out from "That," and add "the Bill be committed to a Select Committee" (Mr. Charles Lewis) v.; after short debate, Question put, "That the words, &c.," A. 110, N. 38; M. 72
 Question again proposed; Moved, "That the debate be now adjourned" (Mr. Greene); after further short debate, Motion withdrawn

Register for Parliamentary and Municipal Electors Bill—cont.

- Main Question, "That Mr. Speaker, &c.," put, and agreed to; Committee—R.P. [Bill 105] 215] Committee—R.P. April 21, 793
 . Committee—R.P. April 24, 959
 . Committee; Report May 8, 1890
 216] Bill considered May 23, 412 [Bill 158]
 Read 3<sup>o</sup> May 26
 l. Read 1<sup>o</sup> (Lord Privy Seal) May 27 (No. 133)
 Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2<sup>o</sup>"
 . June 26, 1897
 Amendt. to leave out ("now,") and insert ("this day three months") (The Lord Cairns); after short debate, on Question, That ("now,") &c. Cont. 26, Not-Cont. 62; M. 36
 Resolved in the negative
 . Division List, Cont. and Not-Cont. 1408

Registration (Ireland) Bill

(The Marquess of Hartington, Mr. Secretary Bruce)

- c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> May 18 [Bill 165]
 Read 2<sup>o</sup> May 23
 Committee; Report May 26
 Considered May 27
 Read 3<sup>o</sup> June 5
 l. Read 1<sup>o</sup> (Marquess of Lansdowne) June 9
 Read 2<sup>o</sup> June 10 (No. 138)
 Committee; Report June 12
 Read 3<sup>o</sup> June 13
 Royal Assent June 16 [36 Vict. c. 30]

Registration of Births and Deaths Bill
 [H.L.] (The Earl of Morley)

- l. Presented; read 1<sup>o</sup> Mar 27 (No. 49)
 Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>, after short debate April 24, [215] 892
 Committee May 8, 1868
 Report May 20 (No. 100)
 Read 3<sup>o</sup> May 23
 c. Read 1<sup>o</sup> (Mr. Stansfeld) May 27 [Bill 180]
 Question, Mr. W. H. Smith; Answer, Mr. Stansfeld June 10, [216] 722; Question, Mr. F. S. Powell; Answer, Mr. Stansfeld July 15, [217] 401
 Bill withdrawn July 21

Registration of Firms Bill

(Mr. Norwood, Mr. Charles Turner, Mr. Whitwell, Mr. Barnett)

- c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> Feb 13 [Bill 59]
 Bill withdrawn June 24

Registration of Trade Marks Bill—See title—Trade Marks Registration Bill

Regulation of Railways (Prevention of Accidents) Bill [H.L.]
 (The Lord Buckhurst)

- l. Presented; read 1<sup>o</sup> Feb 11 (No. 12)
 Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2<sup>o</sup>" Feb 18, [214] 582
 Amendt. to leave out ("now,") and insert ("this day six months") (The Earl Couper); after short debate, on Question, That ("now,") &c.; resolved in the affirmative; Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>, and referred to a Select Committee

cont.

[cont.]

REG RIC { GENERAL INDEX } RIC RID
214-215-216-217.

Regulation of Railways (Prevention of Accidents) Bill—cont.

And, on Feb 24, the Lords following were named of the Committee:—Ld. Privy Seal, D. Somerset, M. Salisbury, E. Devon, E. Cowper, E. Vane, V. Gordon, L. Colville of Culross, L. Vernon, L. Wharncliffe, L. Belper, L. Houghton, and L. Buckhurst.

Regulation of Railways (Returns) Bill—
See title—Railway Regulation Bill

Representative Councils in Counties (Ireland) Bill (Mr. Butt; Mr. Callan)

c. Ordered * July 17
Read 1st * July 23 [Bill 259]
2R. July 30

Revenue and Expenditure—Weekly Returns
Question, Sir George Balfour; Answer, Mr. Baxter July 14, [217] 312

Revenue Departments—Superannuations
Question, Mr. W. H. Smith; Answer, Mr. Baxter May 18, [215] 2019

Revising Barristers Bill

(Mr. Charley, Mr. Holker)

c. Ordered; read 1st * July 4 [Bill 221]
Read 2nd * July 9
Committee: Report July 11
Considered * July 15
Read 3rd * July 16
b. Read 1st * (Lord Cairns) July 17 (No. 218)
Read 2nd * July 21
Committee July 25, [217] 972 (No. 244)
Report * July 28
Read 3rd * July 29
Royal Assent August 5 [36 & 37 Vict. c. 70]

RICHARD, Mr. H., Merthyr Tydfil
Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment, Leave, [216] 905; 2R. [217] 454; 3R. 1017

International Law—Arbitration, Motion for an Address, [217] 52, 87

RICHMOND, Duke of
Agricultural Children, 2R. [216] 717; Comm. cl. 4, 1152; cl. 6, 1153; cl. 9, Amendt. 1154; Report, 1549.

Army—Questions, &c.

Candidates for Commissions, [216] 1218
Commissions in the, [216] 1179
Education of Officers, [216] 1898
Half Pay Officers, [216] 1240

Army—Control Department, Motion for Papers, [216] 1219, 1222, 1223

Army—Military Depot at Oxford, Address for Correspondence, [216] 1492

Army—Recruits, Motion for Returns, [214] 1609; Res. [216] 1527, 1608, 1615, 1616, 1622

RICHMOND, Duke of—cont.

Army Regulation Act—Abolition of Purchase, [214] 1592, 1608;—Address for a Royal Commission, [217] 621, 644

Chelsea Water, 2R. [214] 1021

Children's Employment in Dangerous Performances, 2R. [216] 1245

Church of Scotland—Patronage, Res. [216] 1050, 1052, 1053

Colonial Church, 2R. [216] 489

Conveyancing (Scotland), Report, [217] 856

Criminal Law — Newbury Magistrates, [214] 1514

Elementary Education Provisional Order Confirmation (No. 1), Comm. [215] 1671, 1674

Epping Forest, 2R. [214] 1179

Gas and Water Works Facilities Act (1870) Amendment, 2R. [217] 206; 3R. 602

Gas Companies—Coal and Gas, Price of, [215] 1461

Government of Ireland, 2R. [216] 1582, 1546

Horses, Supply of, Address for a Royal Commission, [214] 720

Law Agents (Scotland), 2R. [216] 1781; Comm. [217] 204

Marriages (Ireland), 2R. [216] 94,

Militia (Services, &c.), 2R. [217] 391

Mutiny, Comm. [215] 723

Nottingham Liberal Dinner—Unconstitutional Language, [217] 648, 651

Palace of Westminster—Frescoes in Royal Gallery, [215] 1870

House of Commons—Peers Gallery, [214] 1923

Parliament—Questions, &c.

Address in Answer to the Speech, [214] 47, 51; Explanation, 143

Easter Recess, [215] 91

Privilege—Appellate Jurisdiction of the House, [217] 33

Resignation of Ministers, Statement, [214] 1870, 1914; Ministerial Explanation, 1920

Peace Preservation (Ireland) Acts Continuance, 2R. [216] 382

Poor Allotments Management, 2R. [214] 1515

Portpatrick Harbour, 2R. [215] 969

215] Railway and Canal Traffic, 2R. 1550; Comm. add. cl. 1843, 1844; cl. 6, Amendt. ib.; cl. 10, Amendt. ib.; cl. 12, Amendt. 1845, 1846; cl. 16, Amendt. ib.; cl. 19, 1847, 1848; cl. 28, Amendt. ib.

216] Report, cl. 20, 9

217] Commons Amendments. 9

Railways, &c. (Transfer and Amalgamation), Common Message, [214] 887.

Rating (Liability and Value), 2R. [217] 990

Registration of Births and Deaths, 2R. [215] 894; Comm. 1687

Regulation of Railways (Prevention of Accidents), 2R. [214] 590

Shah of Persia—Review at Windsor, [216] 1216

Tithe Commutation Acts Amendment, 2R. [216] 1667

Vagrants Law Amendment, 2R. [215] 2012; Comm. cl. 3, Amendt. [216] 426

Winchester, late Bishop of, and the late Lord Westbury, [217] 621

RIDLEY, Mr. M. W., Northumberland, N.
Dog Licence, [215] 525

[cont.]

RIP ROA { SESSION 1878 } ROC ROS
 214-215-216-217.

RIPON, Marquess of (Lord President of the Council)

- Agricultural Children, Comm. cl. 4, [216] 1152 ; cl. 6, 1153 ; add. cl. 1154, 1155, 1156
- Alkali Act, 1868—Petition, [216] 1779
- Army—Half Pay Officers, [216] 1240
- Army, Officers of the—Abolition of Purchase, Address for a Royal Commission, [217] 642
- College Statutes, Alteration of, [216] 10, 12
- Elementary Education—English and Scotch Codes, [216] 1158
- Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment, 2R. [217] 1162, 1166 ; Comm. cl. 3, Amendt. 1808 ; cl. 10, 1809
- Elementary Education Provisional Order Confirmation (No. 1), Comm. [215] 1671, 1674 ; [217] 492
- Endowed Schools Act (1869) Amendment, 2R. [217] 1309 ; Comm. cl. 15, 1418 ; Report, Amendt. 1472
- Endowed Schools Commission, [214] 386, 387
- Endowed Schools Commissioners—Denbigh Free Grammar School, Motion for an Address, [217] 595, 1067
- Endowed Schools Commissioners—Heath Free Grammar School, Motion for an Address, [217] 598
- Endowed Schools Commissioners—King Edward VI's Grammar School, Birmingham, Motion for an Address, [216] 82
- Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister, 2R. [214] 1896
- Palace of Westminster—Frescoes in Royal Gallery, [215] 1870
- Parliament—Address in Answer to the Speech, [214] 37
- Pollution of Rivers, 2R. [216] 8
- [215] Railway and Canal Traffic, 2R. 1544, 1557 ; Comm. add. cl. 1844 ; cl. 6, 66 ; cl. 10, 66 ; cl. 12, 1845, 1846 ; cl. 16, 1847 ; cl. 19, 1848 ; cl. 26, 1849
- [216] Report, cl. 20, Amendt. 8, 9 ; cl. 26, 10
- [217] Commons Amendts. 8
- Railways, &c. (Transfer and Amalgamation), Commons Message, [214] 886
- Shah of Persia—Review at Windsor, [215] 1916
- Supreme Court of Judicature, Commons Amendts. Consid. [217] 1807

Rivers Pollution—The River Ribble

Question, Mr. F. Stanley ; Answer, Mr. Stansfeld July 14, [217] 808

Roads and Bridges (Scotland) Bill

(Sir Robert Anstruther, Mr. M'Lagan, Mr. Miller, Mr. Parker)

- c. Ordered ; read 1st Feb 11. {Bill 46}
- Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2nd" June 11, [216] 796
- Amendt. to leave out from "That," and add "whereas the Roads and Bridges (Scotland) Bill involves the compulsory imposition of new local burdens, this House declines to entertain this Bill until the question of the relief to be granted from Imperial funds to local taxation shall have been definitively settled" (Mr. Crawford, v.) ; Question proposed, "That the words, &c.," after debate, Question put ; A. 124, N. 115 ; M. 9
- Main Question put, and agreed to ; Bill read 2nd Bill withdrawn yest ¶

Rock of Cashel Bill

(Mr. Heron, Sir John Esmonde, Sir Colman O'Leighlen, Colonel White, Sir John Gray)
 c. Ordered ; read 1st Mar 26 [Bill 104]
 2R. [Dropped]

Rock of Cashel Bill [H.L.]

(Lord Stanley of Alderley)

- L. Presented ; read 1st May 5 (No. 90)
- Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2nd" May 28, [216] 414
- Amendt. to leave out ("now,") and insert ("this day six months") (Viscount Middleton) ; after debate, on Question, That ("now,") &c. ? Cont. 23, Not-Cont. 112 ; M. 89 ; resolved in the negative
- Division List, Cont. and Not. Cont. 425

RODEN, Mr. W. S., Stoke-on-Trent

Army Estimates—Volunteer Corps, [214] 1158
 Union Rating (Ireland), 2R. [214] 770

Rome

Court of Rome—Religious Corporations, Question, Mr. Muntz ; Answer, Viscount Enfield Mar 28, [215] 295

The Attack upon Mr. Vansittart, Question, Mr. Matthews ; Answer, Viscount Enfield May 5, [215] 1489 [Parl. P. [772]

Rome—Diplomatic Relations with the Vatican

Amendt. on Committee of Supply Feb 14, To leave out from "That," and add "there be laid before this House, a Copy of Papers (in continuation of a Paper [C—247], Session 1871, intituled 'Correspondence respecting the Affairs of Rome, 1870-71') (Mr. Sinclair Agnew) v., [214] 440 ; Question proposed, "That the words, &c.," after short debate, Question put ; A. 116, N. 68 ; M. 53

ROMILLY, Lord

Land Titles and Transfer, 1R. [215] 1134
 Railway and Canal Traffic, Comm. cl. 12, [215] 1846
 Sites for Places of Worship, 2R. [216] 152
 Supreme Court of Judicature, 2R. [214] 1722 ; Re-comm. cl. 8, [215] 1279

RONAYNE, Mr. J. P., Cork City

General Valuation (Ireland), 2R. [215] 1540
 Parliament—Breach of Privilego—"Pall Mall Gazette," Res. [215] 689
 Peace Preservation (Ireland), 2R. [215] 2068 ; Comm. [216] 64 ; cl. 2, 67 ; Proviso, 68, 71
 University Education (Ireland), 2R. Amendt. [214] 1775
 University Tests (Dublin) (No. 3), Comm. [215] 1538

ROSEBERY, Earl of

Church of Scotland—Patronage, Res. [216] 1042
 Horses, Supply of, Address for a Royal Commission, [214] 702, 720
 Judicial Peerages, Motion for an Address, [216] 1769

[cont.]

ROS RYL { GENERAL INDEX } RYL SAI
 214—215—216—217.

ROSEBERRY, Earl of—cont.

Law Agents (Scotland), Report, [217] 389
 Spain, Extradition Treaty with—"Northfleet" and "Murillo," [214] 147
 Turks and Caicos Islands, Comm. [214] 436

Royal Naval Artillery Volunteer Force
 Bill (Mr. Goschen, Mr. Shaw Lefevre)

c. Ordered; read 1st July 25 [Bill 264]
 Read 2nd July 28
 Committee*; Report July 29
 Read 3rd July 30
 l. Read 1st (Earl of Camperdown) July 31
 Read 2nd; Committee neg. August 1 (No. 280)
 Read 3rd August 2
 Royal Assent August 5 [36 & 37 Vict. c. 77]

ROYSTON, Right Hon. Viscount, Cambridgeshire

Landlord and Tenant, 2R. [216] 1846

RUSSELL, Earl

Government of Ireland, 1R. [216] 618, 633;
 2R. 1527, 1539

Russia and Persia

British Graves in the Crimea, Question, Mr. Heygate; Answer, Mr. Gladstone April 3, [215] 529; Observations, Mr. R. N. Fowler; Reply, Mr. Baxter; short debate thereon May 9, 1761
 Valley of the Atrek, Question, Sir Charles W. Dilke; Answer, Viscount Enfield Feb 14, [214] 439; Question, Mr. Osborne; Answer, Viscount Enfield Feb 28, 1899
 [See title Central Asia]

RUTLAND, Duke of

Rating (Liability and Value), 2R. [217] 992

RYLANDS, Mr. P., Warrington

Army Estimates—Warlike Stores, [216] 1276
 Army Fine Fund, [215] 1757
 Central Asia—Boundary Line, [214] 724, 725; Motion for an Address, 771, 772
 Customs Outport Clerks, Res. Report, [217] 1243
 Juries, Comm. cl. 87, [216] 1520
 Municipal Officers Superannuation, 2R. [214] 1368
 Navy—Half Pay of Officers, [215] 82
 Navy Estimates—Admiralty Office, [216] 105
 Dockyards, &c. Amendt. [216] 131, 185, 143
 Men and Boys, [215] 83
 Miscellaneous Services, [216] 453
 Naval Stores, [216] 446
 Seamen and Marines, [215] 890
 Steam Machinery, &c. [216] 450
 Parks Regulation Act—New Rules, [214] 201
 Parks Regulation Act—Meetings in the Parks, Motion for an Address, [215] 273
 Parliament—Address in Answer to the Speech, Report, [214] 159
 Post Office—Telegraph Extension—Expenditure for, [215] 645

RYLANDS, Mr. P.—cont.

Railway and Canal Traffic, Comm. cl. 38, [215] 595
 Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 3, [216] 927, 1022; add. cl. 1437
 Register for Parliamentary and Municipal Electors, Re-comm. [215] 719; cl. 10, 1691
 Shah of Persia, Visit of, [216] 638
 Superannuation Act Amendment, Comm. cl. 1, [215] 1703, 1705, 1707
 Supply—Board of Supervision (Scotland), [215] 1455
 Charity Commission, [215] 1015
 Consular Establishments Abroad, &c. [217] 1108
 Court of Chancery, [215] 1773
 Dover Harbour, [217] 1151, 1279, 1884
 Embassies and Missions Abroad, Amendt. [215] 1797, 1804
 Embassy Houses at Vienna and Washington, [217] 1130
 Houses of Parliament, [215] 784
 Law Officers, &c. [215] 1771
 Local Government Board, [215] 1017
 Metropolitan Police Courts, [215] 791; Amendt. ib.
 New Palace at Westminster, [217] 1122, 1128, 1275
 Post Office, [214] 2059
 Post Office Services, [217] 1121
 Salaries, &c. of Temporary Commissions, Amendt. [215] 1816, 1817
 Secret Services, Amendt. [215] 1022
 Stationery, Printing, &c. [214] 570
 Superannuation Allowances, [215] 1815
 Tonnage Bounties, &c. [214] 572
 Supreme Court of Judicature, Comm. cl. 24, [216] 1805, 1865; cl. 28, 1878; cl. 67, [217] 215, 217; cl. 78, 220; add. cl. 339, 341
 Treaties with Foreign Powers, Res. [214] 448
 Ways and Means, Comm. [215] 941

SACKVILLE, Mr. Sackville G. STOPFORD-Northamptonshire, N.

Supply—Court of Chancery, [215] 1773

ST. ALBANS, Duke of

Epping Forest, 2R. [214] 1178
 Metropolis—Parliament Street, [217] 1428
 Nottingham—Liberal Dinner—Unconstitutional Language, [217] 660, 661
 Palace of Westminster—Frescoes in Royal Gallery, [215] 1870
 Public Offices—New Admiralty and War Offices, [217] 1813

ST. AUBYN, Sir J., Cornwall, W.

Local Taxation—Exemption of Real Property, [215] 18
 Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 3, Amendt. [216] 1005, 1074

ST. LAWRENCE, Viscount, Galway Bo.
 Ireland—Irish Railways, Purchase of, Res. [215] 1172

SAL SAL { SESSION 1873 } SAL SAL
 214-215-216-217.

Sale of Liquors on Sunday (Ireland) Bill

(Sir Dominic Corrigan, Mr. Pim, Mr. O'Neill, Viscount Crichton, Mr. McClure, Mr. William Johnston, Lord Claud Hamilton, Mr. Dease)

c. Ordered * Feb 11

Read 1<sup>o</sup> * Feb 12

Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2<sup>o</sup>"
July 9, [217] 96

Amendt. to leave out "now," and add "upon this day three months" (Mr. Callan); Question proposed, "That 'now,' &c.;" after debate, Question put; A. 83, N. 140; M. 57

Words added; main Question, as amended, put, and agreed to; 2R. put off for three months

SALISBURY, Marquess of

Agricultural Children, 2R. [216] 719; Comm. cl. 4, 1152; cl. 6, 1153; add. cl. 1156; Commons Amendts. cl. 8, [217] 648

Army—Military Depot at Oxford, Address for Correspondence, [216] 1489, 1491, 1493

Bastardy Laws Amendment, Comm. [214] 1381; [215] 1; Commons Amendts. 598, 601, 724, 725

Canonries, 2R. [215] 1675

Chelsea Water, 2R. Amendt. [214] 1014, 1015, 1023

Church Association—Confession, Motion for a Select Committee, [217] 281, 282

College Statutes, Alteration of, [216] 10, 12

Confession in the Church of England, Address for a Paper, [217] 1169

Duke of Edinburgh—Queen's Message, [217] 1180

Duke of Edinburgh's Annuity, 2R. [217] 1510

East Africa—Slave Trade, Res. [217] 1075

Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment, Comm. cl. 10, [217] 1309

Elementary Education (Provisional Order Confirmation (No. 1), Comm. Amendt. [215] 1667, 1672, 1673; [217] 492; Report, cl. 1, 747

Endowed Schools Act (1869) Amendment, 2R. [217] 1310

Endowed Schools Commission, [214] 366, 367

Endowed Schools Commissioners—Denbigh Free Grammar School, Motion for an Address, [217] 583

Endowed Schools Commissioners—Heath Free Grammar School, Motion for an Address, [217] 597

Endowed Schools Commissioners—King Edward VI's Grammar School, Birmingham, Motion for an Address, [216] 74, 91.

Epping Forest, 2R. [214] 1179

Expiring Laws Continuance, 2R. [217] 1427

Gas and Water Works Facilities Act (1870) Amendment, Comm. [217] 399

Improvement of Land, Motion for a Committee, [215] 506, 517

Investment of Capital in Land, Motion for a Committee, [215] 294

Judicial Peerages, Motion for an Address, [216] 1765, 1769

Local Government Board (Ireland), 2R. [216] 907

Marriages (Ireland), 2R. [215] 93

Mutiny, Comm. [215] 722, 723

SALISBURY, Marquess of—cont.

Nottingham Liberal Dinner—Unconstitutional Language, [217] 652, 655

Palace of Westminster—House of Commons—Peers' Gallery, [214] 1924

Parliament—Address in Answer to the Speech, [214] 85

Privilege—Appellate Jurisdiction of the House, [217] 80

Resignation of Ministers, Statement, [214] 1869

Pollution of Rivers, 2R. [216] 4; Comm. [217] 1161

Prevention of Frauds on Charitable Funds, 2R. [216] 1848

Public Worship Facilities—Standing Order No. 34a, [216] 163, 164

Railway and Canal Traffic, Comm. cl. 10, [215] 1844; cl. 12, 1846; cl. 16, 1847; cl. 19, 1848

Rating (Liability and Value), 2R. [217] 988

Sites for Places of Religious Worship, 3R. Amendt. [216] 1241, 1242

Supreme Court of Judicature, 2R. [214] 1726; Comm. [215] 397; Re-comm. cl. 6, Amendt. 1283, 1291; 3R. Amendt. 1464, 1470, 1482;

Commons Amendts. [217] 877, 878, 894

Treaties of Arbitration, Motion for an Address, [214] 1169, 1177, 1178

Vagrants Law Amendment, 2R. [215] 2013

Salmon Fishery Bill—Formerly }
 Salmon Fisheries Bill }

(Mr. Dillwyn, Mr. William Lowther, Mr. Assheton, Mr. Alexander Brown)

c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> * Feb 7 [Bill 19]

Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>, after debate Mar 5, [214] 1373

Committee*; Report Mar 21 [Bill 93]

Committee (on re-comm.); Report April 23, [215] 890

Moved, "That the Bill be now taken into Consideration" July 14, [217] 384; Question put; A. 89, N. 7; M. 32; Bill considered

Read 3<sup>o</sup> * July 15

i. Read 1<sup>o</sup> * (Earl of Morley) July 17 (No. 215)

Read 2<sup>o</sup> * July 24, 855

Committee* July 28

Report * July 29 (No. 249)

Read 3<sup>o</sup> * July 31

Royal Assent August 5 [36 & 37 Vict. c. 71]

Salmon Fisheries (No. 2) Bill

(Mr. Dodds, Lord Kensington, Mr. Pease)

c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> * Feb 13 [Bill 60]

Bill withdrawn * June 10

Salmon Fisheries Commissioners Bill

(Mr. Winterbotham, Mr. Secretary Bruce)

c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> * Feb 27 [Bill 85]

Read 2<sup>o</sup> * Mar 3

Committee; Report Mar 20, [214] 1958

Bill read 3<sup>o</sup>, after debate Mar 24, [215] 88

i. Read 1<sup>o</sup> * (Earl of Morley) Mar 25 (No. 47)

Read 2<sup>o</sup> * Mar 31

Committee*; Report April 1

Read 3<sup>o</sup> * April 3

Royal Assent April 24 [36 Vict. c. 13]

[cont.]

SAL SAM { GENERAL INDEX } SAN - SCI
 214-215-216-217.

SALT, Mr. T., Stafford

Africa (West Coast) — Fanti Confederation, [215] 1483
 Army Estimates — Control Establishments, Wages, &c. [216] 1259
 Elementary Education Act — School Accommodation, [216] 991
 Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment, 2R. [217] 551; Re-comm. cl. 10, 795
 Marriage Law, [215] 99
 Municipal Officers Superannuation, 2R. [214] 1368
 Post Office—Annuities, [214] 892
 Cape Colony — Postal Contracts, [214] 1101
 Public Worship Facilities, 2R. [214] 969; Comm. 1959
 Sandwich Islands, [215] 219
 South Sea Islands — Upolo and Navigator Islands, [215] 1782
 Supply—Embassies and Missions Abroad, [215] 1803

SAMUDA, Mr. J. D'A., Tower Hamlets

Commercial Marine, Motion for an Address, [214] 1385
 Merchant Shipping Act — Rules of the Road at Sea, Res. [215] 253
 Merchant Shipping Acts Amendment, Comm. cl. 15, [217] 1025, 1028
 Navy—H.M.S. "Devastation," [215] 576, 578, 584
 Navy Estimates—Dockyards, &c. [216] 133, 138, 146
 Men and Boys, [215] 78, 79
 Naval Stores, [216] 443
 Steam Machinery, &c. [216] 449, 450
 Post Office—Mail Contracts, Res. [216] 708
 Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 18, [216] 1195

SAMUELSON, Mr. B., Banbury

Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment, Re-comm. cl. 8, [217] 768, 770, 773, 779; Amendt. 781, 784
 Local Taxation, Motion for a Committee, Amendt. [215] 1833
 Municipal Boroughs Extension, 2R. [217] 121
 Navy—Officers of the—Relative Rank, [217] 1435
 Navy Estimates—Admiralty Office, [216] 116
 Dockyards, &c. [216] 137
 Scientific Department, [216] 127, 129
 Permissive Prohibitory Liquor, 2R. [215] 1635
 Supply—Salaries, &c. of Temporary Commissions, [215] 1817

SAMUELSON, Mr. H. B., Cheltenham

Army—Questions, &c.
 Agnew, late Captain C. — Compensation, [217] 314, 315
 Auxiliary Forces, Instruction to the, [214] 1036
 Easter Volunteer Review, [214] 1286
 Kriegspiel, [214] 1963
 Royal Marine Artillery — Officers, [216] 1555; [217] 608, 609
 Army Estimates—Land Forces, [214] 1068
 Local Taxation, Motion for a Committee, [215] 1841
 Municipal Boroughs Extension, 2R. Amendt. [217] 120, 122
 Navy—Royal Marine Artillery, Captains of, [215] 1555

SANDON, Viscount, Liverpool

Brazil—British Subjects, Claims of, [216] 1949
 Church Discipline—Letters of Primates, [216] 1851, 1853
 Customs Outport Clerks, [217] 305, 1058; Res. Report, 1832, 1242
 Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment, Consid. add. cl. [217] 958, 957
 Supply—Metropolitan Police of Dublin, [217] 1143
 Report, [217] 1259
 Treaty of Washington—Claim for Aves Island, [217] 1092

Sandwich Islands, The

Question, Mr. Salt; Answer, Viscount Enfield Mar 27, [215] 219

Sanitary Act (1868) Amendment (Ireland)

Bill (The Marquess of Hartington, Mr. Secretary Bruce)
 c. Ordered : read 1st July 25 [Bill 266]
 Read 2nd July 28
 Committee* ; Report July 29
 Read 3rd July 30
 l. Read 1st (Marquess of Lansdowne) July 31
 Read 2nd ; Committee neg. August 1 (No. 262)
 Read 3rd August 4
 Royal Assent August 5 [96 & 97 Vict. c. 78]

Sanitary Acts

Digest of Sanitary Law, Question, Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, Answer, Mr. Stansfeld Feb 7, [214] 154; Question, Sir Charles Adderley ; Answer, Mr. Gladstone Feb 10, 198; Question, Sir Charles Adderley ; Answer, Mr. Stansfeld Feb 13, 373

Exemption of Mineral Works, Question, Mr. Gregory ; Answer, Mr. Hibbert April 21, [215] 726
 [See title Public Health]

SAUNDERSON, Mr. E. J., Cavan Co.

Board of Education (Ireland)—O'Keeffe, Rev. Mr., Motion for a Committee, [215] 2042

Science and Art

Bethnal Green Museum—The Turner Drawings, Questions, Mr. Charles Reed; Answers, Mr. Baxter, Mr. W. E. Forster Mar 4, [214] 1283; — The Site, Question, Mr. Wheelhouse ; Answer, Mr. Ayton July 18, [217] 607

East India House Museum, Question, Mr. Reed ; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff June 12, [216] 888

Natural History Museum, Question, Mr. Slater-Booth ; Answer, Mr. Ayton Feb 18, [214] 595 ; Questions, Major Beaumont ; Answers, Mr. Ayton July 29, [217] 1174 ; July 30, 1255 ; Question, Lord Echo ; Answer, Mr. W. E. Forster August 1, 1436 ; Question, Mr. Mundella ; Answer, Mr. Gladstone August 4, 1519 ; Question, Mr. Goldsmid ; Answer, Mr. W. E. Forster August 5, 1560
Niniveh Excavations, Question, Mr. Macle ; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer May 22, [216] 273

[cont.]

SOL SOL { SESSION 1873 } SOL SCO
 214—215—216—217.

Science and Art—cont.

- Royal Academy—The Gibson Bequest, Question, Mr. G. S. Parker; Answer, Mr. Ayrton July 17, [217] 493
- South Kensington Museum—Retirement of Mr. Cole, Question, Sir Henry Hoare; Answer, Mr. Ayrton July 10, [217] 152
- The British Museum and South Kensington, Question, Mr. Mundella; Answer, Mr. Gladstone July 24, [217] 914 :—Duplicate Books, Question, Mr. Baines; Answer, Mr. Spencer Walpole July 29, [217] 1178
- Venus, Transit of, in 1874, Question, Sir John Lubbock; Answer, Mr. Goschen Mar 25, [215] 110; Question, Sir David Wedderburn; Answer, Mr. Goschen June 19, [216] 1171

- SOLATER-BOOTH, Mr. G., Hampshire, N.
- Army—Autumn Manœuvres, [215] 388
- Fine Fund, [215] 1780
- Army Estimates—Administration of the Army, [216] 1298
- Land Forces, [214] 882
- Provisions, Forage, &c. [216] 1961
- Bradford Improvement, 2R. [215] 1676
- Consolidated Fund (Appropriation), 2R. [217] 1358
- Ireland—Irish Railways, Purchase of, Res. [215] 1180
- Juries, Comm. cl. 45, [216] 535, 537, 540
- Local Taxation, Motion for a Committee, [215] 1834
- Loss of Life at Sea, Royal Commission on—Plimsoll, Mr., and the Board of Trade, [217] 1994
- Navy Estimates—Admiralty Office, [216] 104
- Naval Stores, [216] 427
- Post Office and Telegraph Departments—Financial Irregularities, [216] 499
- Post Office (Balances)—Telegraphic Department, Res. [217] 1214
- Post Office—Mail Contracts—Cape and Zanzibar, [216] 1214; [217] 1179
- Public Expenditure, Res. [214] 644
- [216] Rating (Liability and Value), 2R. 317; Comm. 750; cl. 2, 611; cl. 8, 1028, 1083; cl. 7, 1188; Preamble, 1444
- South Kensington—Natural History Museum, [214] 596
- Supply—Charity Commission, [215] 1014; Amendt. 1018
- Civil Service Commission, [215] 1016
- Consular Establishments Abroad, &c. [217] 1100
- Endowed Schools Commission, [215] 1797
- Government Property, Rates on, [215] 787
- Houses of Parliament, [215] 781, 782, 784
- Local Government Board, [215] 1017
- Metropolitan Police of Dublin, [217] 1139
- New Courts of Justice, &c. [215] 792; [217] 1099
- New Offices, Downing Street, [215] 785
- New Palace at Westminster, [217] 1261
- Post Office, [214] 2068
- Post Office Services, [217] 1118
- Privy Council for Trade, &c. [215] 1010, 1011, 1012
- Science and Art Department, [216] 1464
- Stationery, Printing, &c. [214] 670
- Telegraph Department, Report, [215] 88
- Supreme Court of Judicature, Comm. cl. 74 [217] 188, 190

[cont.]

SOLATER-BOOTH, Mr. G.—cont.

- Telegraphs, Comm. [217] 1245
- Ways and Means—Financial Statement, Comm. [215] 707; Report, 921, 1088, 1312

Scotch and Irish Peerage

- Moved, “That an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty for, Returns of the present state of the Irish and Scotch Peerage, showing what Peerages have become extinct since the union of those countries with England, and what extinct Peerages are now represented by inferior titles; the number of Scotch and Irish Peers without seats in Parliament; and the roll of English, United Kingdom, Scotch, and Irish Peerages at the respective dates of union, and at the present time; also, the number of Irish Peerages created since the Union, and the number of British Peerages conferred on Irish and Scotch Peers, and the years in which they were granted” (The Lord Inchiquin) July 4, [216] 1778; Motion agreed to

SCOTLAND

- Agricultural Returns for Scotland*, Question, Observations, Lord Napier and Ettrick; Reply, The Duke of Argyll June 27, [216] 1478

- Board of Education (Scotland)*, Question, Mr. Gordon; Answer, Mr. W. E. Forster May 2, [215] 1406 ;—Poor Law Inspectors, Question, Sir Robert Anstruther; Answer, Mr. Bruce June 26, [216] 1410 ;—The Poor Law—Payment of School Fees, Question, Mr. Miller; Answer, The Lord Advocate June 26, 1412

- Church Rates Legislation (Scotland)*, Question, Mr. McLaren; Answer, The Lord Advocate May 19, [216] 102 ;—Rates for Church Repairs, &c., Question, Mr. McLaren; Answer, The Lord Advocate April 7, [215] 645 [See title Scotland—Church Rates]

- Civil Service (Scotland)*, Question, Mr. McLaren; Answer, Mr. Gladstone July 7, [216] 1865

- Constabulary Superannuations*, Question, Observations, The Earl of Minto; Reply, The Earl of Morley May 9, [215] 1710

- Crown Revenues—Crown Lands*, Question, Mr. J. W. Baxter; Answer, Mr. Baxter May 12, [215] 1789

- Crown Salmon Fisheries (Scotland)*, Question, Mr. Ellice; Answer, Mr. Baxter June 20, [216] 1227; June 28, 1412

- Dumfries—The Estate of Hannahfield—Grant by the Crown*, Question, Lord Claud John Hamilton; Answer, Mr. Baxter Mar 27, [215] 224 Treasury Letter P.P. 180

- Northern Lights Commissioners—The Tay Lights*, Question, Mr. J. W. Barclay; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue July 14, [217] 313

- Probates, &c. of Wills (Scotland)*, Question, Mr. Dodds; Answer, The Lord Advocate May 22, [216] 272

- Sheriffs Substitute*, Question, Sir David Wedderburn; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer April 3, [215] 523 ;—Salaries, Question, Sir David Wedderburn; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer July 7, [216] 1862

SCO      SCO      { GENERAL INDEX }      SCO      SEL
 214—215—216—217.

Scotland, Church of—Patronage

Moved to resolve, that whereas the presentation of ministers to churches in Scotland by patrons under the existing law and practice has been the cause of much division among the people and in the Church of Scotland, it is expedient that Her Majesty's Government should take the whole subject into consideration with the view of legislating as to the appointment and settlement of ministers in the Church of Scotland (The Earl of Airlie) June 17, [216] 1032 ; after long debate, Motion withdrawn

Moved, "That, whereas the presentation of Ministers to Churches in Scotland by patrons under the existing Law and practice has been the cause of much division among the people and in the Church of Scotland, it is expedient that Her Majesty's Government should take the whole subject into consideration, with a view of legislating as to the appointment and settlement of Ministers in the Church of Scotland" (Sir Robert Anstruther) June 17, 1090 ; after short debate, Previous Question proposed, "That that Question be now put" (Mr. Crawford) ; after further debate, Previous Question and Motion withdrawn

Scotland—Church Rates

Question, Mr. McLaren ; Answer, 'The Lord Advocate May 19, [216] 102

Moved, "That the levying of local rates and assessments on lands and houses for the erection and repair of Churches and Manses in Scotland, for the supposed benefit of a minority of the population, is unjust in principle, and the cause of great dissatisfaction amongst the people ; and looking to the hopes held out by the Government on the subject, this House is of opinion that a Bill should be introduced by the Government during the present Session of Parliament, to remove the existing grievance" (Mr. McLaren) June 27, [216] 1522 [House counted out]

SCOTT, Lord H. J. M. D., Hampshire, S.

Landlord and Tenant, 2R. [216] 1647

Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister, Comm. [214] 874

Navy—Trotman Anchor, [217] 501

Navy Estimates—Men and Boys, [215] 84

Rating (Liability and Value), Re-comm. [217] 614

SCOURFIELD, Mr. J. H., Pembrokeshire, S.

Army—Robins, Lieutenant, Case of, [216] 14

Burials, 2R. [215] 195

Customs Outport Clerks, Res. Report, [217] 1243

Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment, Re-comm. cl. 8, [217] 781 ; cl. 10, 791, 794 ; cl. 23, 798 ; 3R. 1007

Elementary Education—School Accommodation, [216] 1249, 1250

Household Franchise (Counties), 2R. [217] 850

Juries, Comm. cl. 1, [215] 2072 ; cl. 5, [216] 516, 520

[cont.]

SCOURFIELD, Mr. J. H.—cont.

Local Taxation, Motion for a Committee, [215] 1840

Navy Estimates—Admiralty Office, [216] 123

Dockyards, &c. [216] 136

Men and Boys, [215] 84

Parks Regulation Act—Meetings in the Parks, Motion for an Address, [215] 287

Parliament—Business of the House, Motion for a Committee, [215] 244

Parliamentary Elections (Expenses), 2R. [216] 1180

Post Office—Mail Contracts—Cape and Zanzibar, [216] 1450

216] Rating (Liability and Value), 2R. 297; Comm. Amendt. 728 ; cl. 8, 1028 ; cl. 7, 1198, 1199 ; cl. 18, 1237 ; add. cl. 1439, 1444

217] Consid. 415, 617 ; 3R. 687

Roads and Bridges (Scotland), 2R. [216] 816

Supply—Criminal Prosecutions at Assizes, &c. [215] 1772

Education—England and Wales, [216] 1464

Report, [217] 1259

Salaries, &c. of Temporary Commissions, [215] 1817

Stationery Office, [215] 1022

Taxes on Locomotion, Res. [215] 449

Ways and Means, Comm. [215] 944

Weights and Measures Acts, Res. [216] 1090

Women's Disabilities, 2R. [215] 1219

Seduction Laws Amendment Bill

(Mr. Charley, Mr. Egkyn, Mr. Mundella, Mr. Whitwell)

c. Ordered ; read 1<sup>o</sup> Feb 7 [Bill 10]

Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2<sup>o</sup>" April 2, [215] 468

Amendt. to leave out "now," and add "upon this day six months" (Mr. Cavendish Bentinck) ; Question proposed, "That 'now,' &c." ; after debate, Amendt. withdrawn ; main Question put, and agreed to ; Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>

Committee : Report July 7, [216] 1891

Bill withdrawn * July 10 [Bill 223]

SEELY, Mr. C., Senr., Lincoln City

Fisher Lads, Great Grimsby, [214] 1390

Navy—Admiralty Administration, Res. [214] 919, 932, 967

Post Office—Financial Irregularities, [215] 1568

Telegraph Department—Capital Expenditure, [215] 1568

SELBORNE, Lord (see CHANCELLOR, The Lord)

Select Vestries

Bill, pro forma, read 1<sup>o</sup> Feb 6

SELKIRK, Earl of

Rating (Liability and Value), 2R. [217] 988

SEL SHE { SESSION 1873 } SHE SIN
214—215—216—217.

- SELWIN-IBBETSON, Sir H. J., Essex, W.
- Army—Autumn Manoeuvres, [215] 388
  - Yeomanry and Volunteer Adjutants, [214] 1035
  - Commercial Marine, Motion for an Address, [214] 1854
  - Epping Drainage, Res. [216] 1643
  - Epping Forest, 2R. [214] 565
  - Juries, Comm. cl. 5, [216] 521
  - Licensing Act, [217] 1063
  - Locomotives on Roads, 2R. [215] 888
  - Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister, 2R. [214] 320
  - Parliament—Business of the House, [214] 151
Opposed Business, [214] 1368
  - Parliament—Business of the House, Motion for a Committee, [215] 235; Res. 1190
  - Parliament—Business of the House (Committee of Supply), Res. Amendt. [214] 245
  - Parliament—Tuesday Sittings, Res. [214] 285
  - Permissive Prohibitory Liquor, 2R. [215] 1636
  - Public Health Act—Epping Drainage District, [215] 1872
Salaries, [215] 1872
  - Railway Accidents, [214] 376; Res. [216] 174
  - Railway and Canal Traffic, Comm. [215] 359; cl. 4, 373; cl. 10, 380; cl. 20, 386; cl. 33, 595
  - Railways—Heberlein Break, [214] 1961
  - Supply—Court of Chancery, [215] 1773
  - Ways and Means, Report, Amendt. [215] 905, 920
- Settled Estates Bill
(Mr. Stapleton, Mr. Wheelhouse)
- c. Ordered * Feb 18
  - Read 1<sup>o</sup> * Feb 19 [Bill 71]
  - Bill withdrawn * July 23
- SHYMPUR, Mr. A., Salisbury
- Central Asia—Boundaries of the Afghan States, [214] 786
  - Supply—Natural History Museum, [215] 790, 791
- SHAFTESBURY, Earl of
- Admission to Benefices and Churchwardenships, Comm. cl. 5, Amendt. [216] 1409
  - Agricultural Children, 2R. [216] 718
  - Bastardy Laws Amendment, Comm. [214] 1882; [215] 3; Commons Amendts. 601
  - Children's Employment in Dangerous Performances, 2R. [216] 1243
  - Prevention of Frauds on Charitable Funds, 2R. [216] 1847, 1850
  - Public Worship Facilities—Standing Order No. 34a, [216] 162; 2R. Amendt. 1381
- SHAW, Mr. R., Burnley
- Army—Medical Officers, [215] 2021
  - Register for Parliamentary and Municipal Electors, Re-comm. cl. 9, [215] 1691
  - Superannuation Act Amendment, Comm. cl. 1, [215] 1706
- SHERIDAN, Mr. H. B., Dudley
- Mexico—Diplomatic Relations, [217] 1568
- SHERLOCK, Mr. Serjeant D., King's Co.
- Board of Education (Ireland)—O'Keeffe, Rev. Mr., Nomination of Committee, [216] 329
  - Burials, 2R. [215] 213
  - Juries (Ireland) Act, Motion for a Committee, [215] 328
  - Landlord and Tenant, 2R. [216] 1648
  - Monastic and Conventual Institutions, 2R. [216] 1679
  - Peace Preservation (Ireland), 2R. Amendt. [215] 2058; Comm. [216] 84
  - Railway Accidents, Res. [216] 189
  - Rating (Liability and Value), Consid. [217] 422
  - Sale of Liquors on Sunday (Ireland), 2R. [217] 117
  - Supreme Court of Judicature, Comm. cl. 29, [216] 1879
  - Women's Disabilities, 2R. [215] 1220

Shipping Survey, &c. Bill

- (Mr. Plimsoll, Mr. Horseman, Mr. Charles Lewis, Mr. Staveley Hill, Mr. Semuda, Mr. Carter, Sir Henry Selwin-Ibbetson, Sir Robert Torrens, Mr. Eykyn, Mr. Leaman)
- c. Considered in Committee; Bill ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup>, after short debate Feb 10, [214] 273 [Bill 43]
  - Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2<sup>o</sup>" May 14, [215] 1987; after short debate, Debate adjourned
  - Adjourned Debate on 2R. [Dropped].

Shop Hours Regulation Bill

- (Sir John Lubbock, Mr. Thomas Hughes, Mr. Morley, Mr. Mundella)
- c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> * April 3 [Bill 128]
  - Bill withdrawn * July 10

Shrewsbury and Harrow Schools Property Bill—Formerly

- Shrewsbury School Property Bill
- (Mr. Winterbotham, Mr. Secretary Bruce)
- c. Ordered * April 1
  - Read 1<sup>o</sup> * April 2 [Bill 117]
  - Read 2<sup>o</sup> * May 8
  - Committee *; Report May 15 [Bill 184]
  - Committee * (on re-comm.); Report May 26
  - Read 3<sup>o</sup> * May 27
  - l. Read 1<sup>o</sup> * (The Lord Privy Seal) June 9
  - Read 2<sup>o</sup> * July 1 (No. 140)
  - Committee * July 3
  - Report * July 4
  - Read 3<sup>o</sup> * July 7
  - Royal Assent July 21 [36 & 37 Vict. c. 41]

- SIMON, Mr. Serjeant J., Dewsbury
- Criminal Law—Shropshire Magistrates—Whitefoot, George, Case of, [215] 1770
- Spain—"Lark," Sloop, The, [215] 2023
- Spain—Jenoken, Mr. H. D., Assault on, Motion for an Address, [215] 628
- Supreme Court of Judicature, 2R. [216] 864; Comm. cl. 5, 1594, 1897; cl. 8, 1747; cl. 18, 1769; cl. 24, 1865; cl. 27, 1874; cl. 29, 1884; cl. 54, [217] 176

- SINCLAIR, Sir J. G. T., Caithness-shire
- Ways and Means—Report, [215] 1345

SIT SMI { GENERAL INDEX } SMI SMI
 214-215-216-217.

- Sites for Places of Religious Worship Bill
(Mr. Osborne Morgan, Mr. Morley, Mr. Binde Palmer, Mr. Charles Reed)
- c. Ordered; read 1st Feb 7 [Bill 25]
 Read 2nd Mar 26
 Committee*; Report Mar 81
 Read 3rd April 2
 Lords Amendments [Bill 219]
 l. Read 1st (Lord Hatherley) April 8 (No. 61)
 Bill read 2nd, after debate May 20, [216] 152
 Committee*; Report May 28 (No. 128)
 Re-comm. June 16 (No. 159)
 Report June 17, 1032
 Read 3rd June 23, 1941
 Royal Assent July 21 [36 & 37 Vict. c. 50]
- Slave Trade (Consolidation) Bill [H.L.]
(The Earl of Camperdown)
- l. Presented; read 1st July 1 (No. 188)
 Read 2nd July 7
 Committee*; Report July 8
 Read 3rd July 14
 Read 1st July 17 [Bill 249]
 Read 2nd July 22
 Committee*—R.R. July 24
 Committee*; Report July 28
 Considered* July 29
 Read 3rd July 30
 l. Royal Assent August 5 [36 & 37 Vict. c. 88]
- Slave Trade (East African Courts) Bill [H.L.]
(The Earl of Camperdown)
- l. Presented; read 1st July 1 (No. 187)
 Read 2nd July 7
 Committee*; Report July 8
 Read 3rd July 10
 c. Read 1st July 11 [Bill 236]
 Read 2nd July 22
 Committee*; Report July 24
 Read 3rd July 26
 l. Royal Assent August 5 [36 & 37 Vict. c. 59]
- SMITH, Mr. J. B., Stockport
- Bank of England Returns, [216] 429
 Currency—Bank Act, Res. [215] 140
 Metric Weights and Measures—Legislation, [214] 833
 Municipal Officers Superannuation, 2R. [214] 1967
 Navy—Chatham Dockyard—New River Wall, [217] 1098
 Railway Companies and the Coal Trade, [214] 1286
 Sugar Duties—International Conference, [215] 1718
 Ways and Means—Financial Statement, Comm. [215] 678, 956
- SMITH, Mr. R., Derbyshire, S.
- Endowed Schools Commissioners—Sir John Port's Foundation, [217] 318
- SMITH, Mr. T. E., Tynemouth, &c.
- Agricultural Children, 3R. [215] 1709
 Ecclesiastical Commissioners—Derwentwater Estates, [217] 145
 Juries, Comm. cl. 5, [216] 523
 Loss of Life at Sea, Commission on, [215] 1024
- [cont.]
- SMITH, Mr. T. E.—cont.
- Mercantile Marine—Unseaworthy Ships, [216] 1416, 1417
 Merchant Shipping Act—“Parga,” The, [215] 1297
 Merchant Shipping Act—Rules of the Road at Sea, Res. [215] 258
 Merchant Shipping Acts Amendment, Leave, [215] 1981
 Metropolis—New Courts of Justice, [216] 408
 “Northfleet” Collision—The “Murillo,” [214] 600, 728;—Case of the, [215] 343
 Parliament—Breach of Privilege—Mr. Plimball, [214] 733, 736, 742
 Railway and Canal Traffic, Lords Amendt. [216] 1304
 Shipping Survey, &c., 2R. Amendt. [215] 1994
 Suez Canal—Augmentation of Dues, Res. [215] 469, 480
 University Tests (Dublin) (No. 3), Comm. cl. 8, Amendt. [215] 1533, 1535
- SMITH, Mr. W. H., Westminster
- Coal, Export of—Duties or Restrictions, [214] 370
 Criminal Law—Appropriation of Penalties, [217] 903
 Customs and Inland Revenue, Comm. [215] 1685
 Elementary Education, [216] 908
 Elementary Education Act (1870), [214] 369
 Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment, Re-comm. cl. 8, [217] 767; cl. 23, 796; Consid. add. cl. 969
 Endowed Schools Commissioners—Emanuel Hospital Scheme, Motion for an Address, [215] 1929
 Endowed Schools Commissioners—Grey Coat Hospital, Westminster, Motion for an Address, [214] 178
 Juries (Ireland), Precedence of Motions, [215] 111
 Local Taxation, Motion for a Committee, [215] 1836
 Metropolis Buildings Act Amendment, 2R. [215] 504
 Metropolis—New Courts of Justice, [216] 407
 Parks Regulation Act—Meetings in the Parks, Motion for an Address, [215] 288
 Post Office—Argentine Republic—Postal Arrangements with, [215] 904
 Savings Bank Account, [215] 804
 Railway and Canal Traffic, Comm. cl. 4, [215] 373, 374; cl. 10, 376; cl. 23, 593
 Rating (Liability and Value), [216] 171; Comm. 750; cl. 7, 1186
 Register for Parliamentary and Municipal Electors, Re-comm. cl. 13, [215] 1693
 Registration of Births and Deaths, [216] 722
 Revenue Departments—Superannuations, [215] 2019
 Supply—Dover Harbour, [217] 1284
 Education (England and Wales), [216] 1460
 Embassy Houses at Vienna and Washington, [217] 1134
 Post Office Services, [217] 1112
 Supreme Court of Judicature, Comm. cl. 50, [217] 47; Consid. cl. 55, Amendt. 682
 Tribunal of Commerce, [214] 439
 Ways and Means, Report, Amendt. [215] 1030, 1033

SMY SOU { SESSION 1873 } SOU SPA

214-215-216-217.

SMYTH, Mr. P. J., *Westmeath Co.
 Ireland—Dublin University, [215] 529
 Peace Preservation (Ireland), 2R. [215] 2059
 University Education (Ireland), [214] 1815;
 2R. Amendt. 1849
 University Tests (Dublin) (No. 3), Comm.
 Amendt. [215] 1520

SOLICITOR GENERAL, The (Sir G. JESSEL),
*Dover
 Canada, Dominion of—Guarantee Loan, [217]
 1527
 Conveyancing (Scotland), Comm. cl. 12, [216]
 505
 Crown Private Estates, 2R. [217] 707; Comm.
 cl. 1, 1000; cl. 3, 1002
 Expiring Laws Continuance, Comm. [217] 1280
 Juries, Comm. cl. 5, [216] 531
 Masters and Servants—Law of Contract, Res.
 [216] 608
 Railway and Canal Traffic, Comm. cl. 4, [215]
 371, 374; cl. 21, 387; cl. 22, 592; Consid.
 cl. 10, 720
 216] Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 3, 1004, 1010, 1026, 1030, 1079, 1080;
 cl. 4, 1177, 1178; cl. 13, 1192, 1194, 1284;
 cl. 15, 1430; add. cl. 1436
 217] Consid. 413, 420, 421, 422
 Supply—Court of Chancery, [215] 1773, 1774
 216] Supreme Court of Judicature, 2R. 678, 681,
 878; Comm. 1580, 1582; cl. 5, 1586,
 1593, 1596, 1603, 1631; cl. 6, 1785;
 Amendt. 1743, 1744, 1745; cl. 18, 1748;
 cl. 22, Amendt. 1797, 1798, 1799, 1800;
 cl. 24, 1869; cl. 28, 1875, 1876, 1877; cl. 29,
 1882; cl. 31, 1887
 217] cl. 36, 39; cl. 54, 174, 176, 180, 181; cl. 60,
 184, 185; cl. 74, 189; cl. 75, 190, 217, 218;
 cl. 78, 223; cl. 79, 224; cl. 31, 228; add.
 cl. 338; Schedule sec. 1, 343; Schedule
 sec. 2, 344; sec. 30, 345; Consid. cl. 22,
 681; cl. 55, 682

SOMERSET, Duke of
 Alderney (Harbour and Fortifications), Report,
 [215] 331, 333; [217] 196
 Army Regulation Act—Abolition of Purchase,
 [214] 1698
 Central Asia—Boundary Line, [214] 537
 Navy—H.M.S. “Devastation,” [214] 839;
 [215] 339

South Kensington Exhibition of 1871—
*Sale of Land
 Questions, Sir Henry Hoare; Answers, Mr.
 Ayton, The Attorney General June 19,
 [216] 1168

South Sea Islands—Upolo and the Navigator Islands
 Question, Mr. Salt; Answer, Viscount Enfield
 May 12, [215] 1783

South Sea Islands—Outrages on the Natives
 The Ship “Karl,” Questions, Mr. Gilpin, Admiral Erskine; Answers, Viscount Enfield,
 Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen Feb 25, [214] 892

VOL. CCXVII. [THIRD SERIES.] [cont.]

South Sea Islands—Outrages on the Natives—
 cont.

Address for Copies or extracts of any communications of importance respecting outrages committed upon natives of the South Sea Islands which may have been received from the Governors of any of the Australasian Colonies, from the Senior Naval Officers commanding in Australia and China, or from Her Majesty’s Consuls in the Pacific since the last issue of papers upon this subject (Earl of Belmore) Feb 10, [214] 185; after short debate, Motion agreed to Question, Observations, The Earl of Belmore;
 Reply, The Earl of Kimberley July 8,
 [216] 1893 (Part I. P. 57)

Spain

Abdication of King Amadeus — The British Fleet in the Tagus, Questions, Sir Robert
 Peel; Answers, Viscount Enfield, Mr. Shaw
 Lefevre Feb 20, [214] 730
Capture of the “Vigilante,” Questions, Dr.
 Brewer; Observations, Mr. Otway; Reply,
 Viscount Enfield August 4, [217] 1622
Recognition of de facto Government, Question,
 Mr. Whitwell; Answer, Viscount Enfield
 Mar 3, [214] 1185; Question, Mr. P. A.
 Taylor; Answer, Viscount Enfield Mar 27,
 [215] 219; June 12, [216] 837
Sale and Purchase of Arms — International Law, Question, Captain Dawson-Damer;
 Answer, Viscount Enfield Mar 27, [215] 222
Subscriptions for the Carlists — International Law, Question, Mr. Stapleton; Answer, The Attorney General Feb 28, [214] 1045; Question, Mr. Stapleton; Answer, Mr. Gladstone
 April 7, [215] 633; April 24, 896; —Recognition of the Carlists, Question, Mr. Callan;
 Answer, Viscount Enfield July 28, [217] 1094
The Sloop “Lark,” Question, Mr. Serjeant
 Simon; Answer, Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen
 May 16, [215] 2033
Conveyance of Chinese Coolies into Cuba,
 Question, Observations, The Earl of Airlie;
 Reply, Earl Granville July 15, [217] 394

Spain—Assault on Mr. Henry Diedrich Jencken

Moved, “That an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty, praying Her Majesty to be graciously pleased to direct Her Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs to enter into communication with the Spanish Government with the view to obtaining compensation for Mr. H. D. Jencken, on account of the injuries received by him at the hands of the populace at Lorca in 1869” (Mr.
 Serjeant Simon) April 4, [215] 628 [House counted out]

Spain — Extradition Treaty with — The “Northfleet” and the “Murillo”

Questions, Observations, The Earl of Carnarvon, The Earl of Rosebery, The Earl of Lauderdale; Reply, Earl Granville Feb 7,
 [214] 144

SPA SPE { GENERAL INDEX } SPE SPE
214—215—216—217.

Spain—Extradition Treaty with—The “North-fleet” and the “Murillo”—cont.

Moved, That an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty for, Copy of Correspondence between Her Majesty's Government and the Spanish Authorities with respect to the Spanish steamship "Murillo" (The Earl of Carnarvon) June 28, [216] 1245 ; after short debate, Motion agreed to

SPEAKER, The (Right Hon. H. B. W. BRAND), Cambridgeshire

Amendments — No second Amendment until first disposed of—Mr. Speaker said that there was an Amendment before the House—that the Bill [Labourers Cottages (Scotland) Bill] should be read a second time that day six months—and until that Amendment was disposed of, no other Amendment could be moved, [217] 485

Bills—Money Clauses—Rating (Liability and Value) Bill—Order for Consideration, as amended, read. Mr. Craufurd said he understood that the President of the Local Government Board was about to import into the Bill certain clauses [which he referred to]—Mr. Speaker said, that if the clauses to be proposed by the right hon. Gentleman imposed any new charge they must be moved in Committee of the Whole House, [217] 402, 403

Amendments varying the incidence of a rate come within the rule, and the Bill must be re-committed with respect to the clauses affected, 413

Bills — Delay in circulating a Bill after Leave given—in answer to Colonel Stuart Knox, who complained that copies of a certain Bill had not yet been distributed—Mr. Speaker said, that leave was given by the House for the introduction of the [Borough Franchise (Ireland)] Bill upwards of six weeks ago, and that on the same occasion the Bill was ordered to be printed. No doubt it was opposed to the usage of the House that so great a delay should take place between the Order of the House for the printing of the Bill and the circulation of the Bill among hon. Members, [216] 276

Bills—Alteration in Bills after Leave given—an hon. Member who has obtained the leave of the House to introduce a Bill is at liberty to suspend the introduction of that Bill and to alter it in any way he thinks proper, provided it is not so altered as to be inconsistent with his original Leave.—University Tests (Dublin) Bill, [215] 303, 304, 305, 306

Bills—Alteration in Bills actually before the House—There is no principle more clearly laid down in this House than this—When a Member has introduced a Bill to the House it ceases to be in that Member's hand, and passes into the possession of the House. No essential alteration of that Bill, at any stage, may then be made without the distinct order of the House. The House has laid down a clear course for Members to take if they desire to make any essential alteration in a Bill of which they have charge at any stage.

{cont.

SPEAKER, The—cont.

That course is to ask the Leave of the House to withdraw the Bill and to present another instead thereof

Under such circumstances, no Notice on the part of the hon. Member in charge of the Bill is necessary in order to raise the Question whether he should or should not be permitted to present another Bill, [215] 303

Bills—Notice of Postponement—if an hon. Member be desirous of postponing a Bill of which he has charge, it is the ordinary practice to allow him to move its postponement without Notice, [214] 194

Debate—Effect of agreeing to Motion “That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair.” The House having already declared that the words “That I do now leave the Chair” stand part of the Question, the hon. Member's Amendment cannot now be moved : therefore it is only open to him to call the attention of the House to the circumstances he has brought forward.—Supply—Administration of the Police, [215] 094, 1789

Debate—Effect of moving the Adjournment of the Debate—Right of Speaking a second time—A Member who has moved “That the Debate be now adjourned” is not entitled to address the House a second time in withdrawing that Motion.—Register for Parliamentary Electors, &c. Bill, [215] 710

East India Revenue Accounts—Committee, Moved, “That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair.” Mr. Fawcett moved, “That the Debate be now adjourned.” On representation made, Mr. Fawcett asked whether he should lose the right of speaking on the Main Question if he made one or two observations to explain why he moved the Adjournment of the Debate ? Mr. Speaker said the hon. Gentleman was entitled to speak on the Motion he had made for the Adjournment of the Debate ; but he could not speak again on the Main Question

If the House allowed him to withdraw his Motion, he might then speak on the Main Question, [217] 1405

Debate—Effect of Motion, “That this House do now adjourn”—Mr. Gladstone having moved “That this House do now adjourn.” Mr. Dillwyn proposed to move that the Salmon Fisheries Bill be committed pro formâ. Mr. Speaker said, the Question before the House is “That the House do now adjourn.” The hon. Member cannot interpose with his Motion.—Resignation of Ministers, [214] 1912

Debate—No debate when no Motion before the House—Statements having been made to the House as to the proceedings pending the Resignation of Ministers, hon. Members desired to address the House—Mr. Speaker said there was at present no Motion before the House. The House had just heard the Ministerial Explanations ; but it would be irregular to continue the discussion without some Motion before the House ; therefore, according to the usual practice, it would now be his duty to proceed with the Notices of Motion, [214] 1945

{cont.

SPE      SPE      { S E S S I O N   1 8 7 3 }
 214—215—216—217.

SPE      SPE

SPEAKER, The—cont.

Debate—Sufficient Notice and Motion—Mr. Secretary Bruce having laid upon the Table a Copy of the Substituted Rules under the Parks Regulation Act, proposed to state the substance of those Rules—Mr. Osborne rose to Order, and asked whether it was open to the right hon. Gentleman to enter on the subject, seeing that there was no Notice on the Paper with respect to it? Mr. Speaker said, the right hon. Gentleman had stated in his place that he intended to lay on the Table the new Rules with reference to the regulation of the Parks; and, in pursuance of that Notice, he was now about to move that those Rules do lie upon the Table. The proceeding was quite regular.

It was then asked whether, as the statement was likely to lead to a debate, the right hon. Gentleman intended to conclude with a Motion? Mr. Bruce said, that all he desired to do was to state the substance of the New Rules. It was objected that, in that case, he was not entitled to make any statement whatever. Mr. Speaker said, the right hon. Gentleman must necessarily conclude by moving "That these Rules do now lie upon the Table;" and upon that Motion a debate might arise, [214] 200

Debate—Premature reference to a subject—It is irregular to anticipate under cover of a Question, the discussion of a Motion which is set down for future consideration, [216] 962; [217] 358, 576, 577

Debate—Reference to a Debate in the present Session—Latitude in Observation—An hon. Member is out of Order in referring to what had occurred in a Debate in the present Session; but it was usual, in cases like the present, where personal explanations became necessary, to grant considerable latitude.

Whatever the explanation required, the hon. Member to whom reference was made ought to be in his place.—Conventual and Monastic Institutions Bill, [216] 1788

Debate—Reference to a subject now before a Court of Law—Mr. Whalley, in moving for Papers connected with "The Tichborne Case," proposed to make comments upon the case itself. Mr. Speaker said, the hon. Gentleman is certainly out of Order in discussing proceedings that are at this time sub judice.—The Queen v. Castro, [216] 960, 961

Debate—Relevancy of Debate—Mr. Speaker reminded the hon. and learned Member that the Motion before the House was that the Order for the Second Reading of the [Landlord and Tenant] Bill be discharged. To go into the merits of the Bill upon such a Question would be quite out of Order, [216] 1648

Debate—Relevancy of Debate—Question, "That this Bill, as amended, be considered on Thursday next"—On this Motion no Amendment can be moved, except as to the time at which the Consideration of the Bill should be taken; and therefore any discussion not relevant to an Amendment of that kind is out of place, [217] 358

SPEAKER, The—cont.

Debate—Resumption of a Debate adjourned by the Six o'clock Rule—According to the Standing Orders of the House, the debate stood adjourned till To-morrow, when it would rest with the hon. Member for Sheffield to propose a day when it should be continued.—Factory Acts Amendment Bill, [216] 828

Debate—Unparliamentary Language—It is not Parliamentary language to speak of any body of men in this House as otherwise than a body of independent Members, [216] 1878

Opposed Business—The House having agreed to the Resolution that Opposed Business shall not be taken after 12.30 at night, and immediately thereafter the Order of the Day for the Second Reading of a Bill being read (it being then past 12.30 a.m.), Mr. Melly asked Mr. Speaker if it was consistent with the Resolution to proceed with this Bill on which various Amendments were to be proposed? Mr. Speaker was of opinion that the Resolution ought not to apply to Orders of the Day standing on the Paper before the Resolution was adopted by the House. The House ought to have full knowledge of the passing of the Resolution before it was enforced, [214] 1364

Opposed Business—Money Bills—Mr. Fawcett having asked whether the East India Loan Bill, being a Money Bill for India, was exempted from the Rule that Opposed Business should not be taken after half-past Twelve o'clock? Mr. Speaker said that the Bill was undoubtedly a Money Bill, and as such exempted from the Rule, [215] 1109

Order—When a subject is already before the House—Mr. Auberon Herbert having given Notice "To call attention to the Criminal Law Amendment Act of 1871," and notice being taken that there was already before the House a Bill to repeal that Act, which stood for consideration to-morrow—Mr. Speaker said there could be no doubt that the hon. Member for Nottingham would be out of Order in moving his Resolution that evening, seeing that the matter was already before the House, [217] 38

Order—Where a matter is already decided—The House having by a previous vote refused to entertain the proposal that the mode of conducting the Business of the House be referred to a Select Committee, it is out of Order to propose now, by another Amendment, that such a course should be taken.—Business of the House—Resolution, [214] 287

Order—Nomination of Committees—Peace Preservation (Ireland) Bill. Order for Committee read. Mr. Pim said he would move that the Order for Committee be discharged, and that the Bill be referred to a Select Committee, consisting of the Marquess of Hartington and Mr. Secretary Bruce, together with all Members who represented Irish constituencies—Mr. Speaker said the hon. Member might move to refer the Bill to a Select Committee, but the nomination of that Committee must be made the subject of a separate Motion, [216] 609

SPE      SPE      { G E N E R A L , I N D E X }      SPE      SPE
 214—215—216—217.

SPEAKER, The—cont.

Order—Precedence of Government Orders of the Day — The House having ordered (July 28) “That on Wednesday next, and every succeeding Wednesday, Government Orders of the Day have precedence.” On the next Wednesday (July 30), Mr. Collins rose to a point of Order—A Bill, of which he had charge, had been placed No. 21 on the Paper, while the Bill of the hon. Member for Sheffield had been placed No. 4—and he desired to ask Mr. Speaker whether that precedence was in accordance with the Resolution? Mr. Speaker said that the proper construction of the Order was, that the Government had not only power to place their own Orders, but those of private Members, according to their pleasure, and that therefore the Bill of the hon. Member for Sheffield properly had precedence that day, [217] 1265

Order—Rules of Debate—Mr. Melly, having read an extract from a speech of the hon. Member for Derby (Mr. Plimball), made out of this House, reflecting on the conduct of officers of the Board of Trade, asked the President of the Board whether his attention had been called to that speech, and whether such statement is correct? Objection being made, Mr. Speaker said that he saw nothing irregular in putting a Question calling the attention of the President of the Board of Trade to the statement made out of the House. But that Question being followed by another, “and whether such statement is correct?” Mr. Speaker said that if the hon. Member questioned the statement made by a Member of the House, that proceeding would be irregular; but he did not understand that to be so—the hon. Member for Stoke only inquired of the President of the Board of Trade, whether the conduct of the officers of the Board of Trade was such as described by the hon. Member for Derby.—Mercantile Marine—Loss of the “Sea Queen,” [215] 105

Order — Withdrawal of Amendment — The Votes and Journals—Question arising, Mr. Hodgson said that an high authority had stated a few days ago that an Amendment moved by any hon. Member must be withdrawn by that hon. Member himself. He certainly never withdrew his Amendment, and therefore trusted it might be considered as still standing for approval. Mr. Speaker said that the hon. Member was understood to have withdrawn his Amendment; and the Amendment having appeared on the Proceedings of the House as being withdrawn, it must be taken to be so.—Railway and Canal Trafic Bill, [216] 1299 Privilege—Money Bills—Mr. Speaker pointed out that a Private Bill (Bradford Improvement Bill) which had come down from the House of Lords contained clauses which imposed a tax upon the people, and should therefore have been introduced into this House, and not into the other House of Parliament: But Mr. Speaker said that as the Promoters were not responsible for the introduction of the Bill into the other House, and had signified their intention to withdraw those clauses, he thought this course would sufficiently repair the irregularity. After some observations, the Bill was read the second time, [215] 1676

SPEAKER, The—cont.

Questions—Alteration of Questions by the Clerks at the Table—One of the established Rules of the House with reference to Questions is that no argumentative matter shall be introduced; and if such matter appears it is always struck out by Mr. Speaker's authority, [217] 87, 893

Questions—Latitude of Observations in putting a Question—Mr. Whalley, in putting a Question having reference to the expenses in the trial of “The Tichborne Case,” proposed to offer some remarks. Mr. Speaker said, the hon. Gentleman was out of Order in going into the merits of the case. If the hon. Gentleman would confine himself to the expenses incurred in consequence of the prosecution of this person he would be quite in Order.—The Queen v. Castro, [214] 1611; [215] 644; [216] 409

Questions—Latitude in Answering—Mr. Plimball having put a Question to the President of the Board of Trade relating to the conduct of officers of the Board:—Mr. Chichester Fortesque made an explanatory Answer at some length. Sir John Hay rose to Order. Mr. Speaker said, the hon. Member for Derby has asked a Question having reference to the conduct of the officers of the Board of Trade:—Undoubtedly the House will be of opinion that the President of the Board of Trade, in answering a Question of this kind, is entitled to considerable indulgence.—Merchant Shipping Act—The Eleanor, [215] 641

Questions—Limitation of Answer—Mr. Brunen having asked Mr. M'Mahon what course he intends to pursue with regard to the Union Rating (Ireland) Bill, and the latter proposing to answer at some length—Mr. Speaker said he must remind the hon. Member that he was quite out of Order in explaining the provisions of his Bill on the Question now put to him, [216] 1711

Standing Order, 24th July, 1860—Mail Packet Contracts—The Standing Order [of the 24th July, 1860] is very clear and explicit. It lays down the Rule that every Packet and Telegraphic Contract shall be laid upon the Table of the House, accompanied by a Minute of the Lords of the Treasury setting forth the grounds on which they have proceeded to authorize it. Now the Contract in question has, no doubt, been laid on the Table of the House, accompanied by a letter from an officer of the Treasury to the Postmaster General; but such a letter in no sense fulfils the requirement of the Standing Order, and therefore, in my judgment, that Contract is not in a condition to be considered in its present shape by the House.—Cape of Good Hope and Zanzibar Mail Contract, [216] 1001

[cont.]

[cont.]

SPI STA { SESSION 1878 } STA STA
 214-215-216-217.

- Spiritous Liquors (Scotland) Bill—
Formerly
Licensing Law Amendment (Scotland) Bill
(Sir Robert Anstruther, Sir Graham Montgomery, Sir David Wedderburn, Mr. Charles Dalrymple, Mr. Fordyce)
 c. Considered in Committee; Bill ordered; read 1st July 17 [Bill 247]
 Bill withdrawn July 28
- STAIR, Earl of
 Church of Scotland (Patronage), Rec. [216] 1047
- Standards Commission, 1870 — Weights and Measures
 Observations, Question, Lord Colchester; Reply, Earl Cowper July 28, [217] 1076
- STANHOPE, Earl
 Army—Medical Officers' Services in Africa, Motion for an Address, Amendt. [216] 880
 Foreign Decorations, Motion for an Address, [214] 781
 Government of Ireland, 2R. [216] 1532
 Order of Merit, Motion for an Address, [216] 1466
 Parliament—Resignation of Ministers, Statement, [214] 1869
- STANHOPE, Mr. W. T. W. S., Yorkshire, W.R.
 Army—Half Pay Officers, [216] 1240
 Inclosure of Commons—Legislation, [216] 432
 Juries, Comm. cl. 57, [216] 1518, 1520
 Railway and Canal Traffic, 2R. [214] 1051; Comm. cl. 10, [215] 379; 3R. 1708
 Rating (Liability and Value), 2R. [216] 301; Comm. cl. 3, 1025
- STANLEY OF ALDERLEY, Lord
 Achan, Affairs of, Address for Correspondence, [217] 1077
 Alkali Act (1863), Petition, [216] 1779
 Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment, Comm. cl. 10, [217] 1309
 Indian Appeals, [216] 979
 Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister, 2R. [214] 1883
 Persian Government—Concession to Baron de Reuter, Address for Correspondence, [217] 295
 Rock of Cashel, 2R. [216] 414
- STANLEY, Hon. Captain F. A., Lancashire, N.
 Lancaster and Ulverston Sands, [215] 1293;—Guide over Lancaster Sands, [217] 1093
 Locomotives on Roads, 2R. [215] 886
 Navy (Promotion and Retirement), Motion for a Committee, [216] 793
 Navy Estimates—Dockyards, &c. [216] 148
 Scientific Departments, [216] 130
 Rivers Pollution—The River Ribble, [217] 308
 Supply—Consular Establishments Abroad, &c. [217] 1105
- STANLEY, Hon. W. O., Beaumaris
 Heligoland, Gambling Houses at, [215] 1871
 Juries (Wales), [216] 271
 Militia Regiments, 2nd Battalions of, [217] 907
- STANFIELD, Right Hon. J. (President of the Local Government Board), Halifax
 Agricultural Labourers' Unions—Faringdon Highway Board, [216] 169
 Bastardy Laws—Proceedings in Bastardy, [215] 1680
 Census of Land and House Owners, [214] 891
 Cholera, The, [216] 1854
 County Court Judges—Minute of June, 1872, Rec. [214] 1290, 1302, 1803
 Elementary Education Act—London School Rate, [216] 169
 Pauper Children, School Fees of, [216] 1709
 Jury List Allowances—Magistrates' Clerks, [215] 580
 Local Government Board—Inspectors and Health Officers, [215] 18
 Local Taxation—Exemption of Real Property, [215] 19
 Local Taxation, Motion for a Committee, [215] 1810, 1832, 1839, 1840, 1841
 Metropolis—Fires—Water Supply, [217] 903
 Hatcham, Small Pox Hospital at, [217] 860
 Metropolis Water Act (1871), [216] 836
 Parliament—Public Business, [216] 1860; [217] 400, 401
 Poor Law—Guardians of St. Germans, [216] 835
 Labourers' Unions, [216] 1705
 Public Health, Comm. [217] 92
 Public Health Act, 1872—Poor Law Inspectors, [215] 525
 Port of London, Health of the, [216] 1858
 Royal Engineers, [215] 1678
- [215] Rating (Liability and Value)—Valuation—Consolidated Rate, Leave, 1401, 1617, 1619, 1520
 [216] 171; 2R. 291; Comm. 743, 749, 750; cl. 2, Amendt. ib., 910, 911; cl. 3, 928, 927, 928, 929, 930, 931, 933, 1003, 1005, 1007, 1008; Amendt. 1010, 1015, 1016, 1017, 1018; Amendt. 1019, 1020; Amendt. 1021, 1023, 1027, 1028; Amendt. 1030; Amendt. 1031, 1071, 1072, 1076, 1080, 1082; cl. 4, 1170, 1181; cl. 7, 1187; Amendt. 1189; cl. 9, Amendt. 1190, 1194, 1195; cl. 13, 1263, 1288, 1239; cl. 15, 1423, 1429, 1430; cl. 17, ib.; cl. 18, 1431; add. cl. 1b, 1432, 1483, 1484, 1489; Preamble, 1445
 [217] Consid. 492, 403, 411, 413, 414, 415; Amendt. 419, 420; add. cl. 421, 422, 423; Re-comm. 610, 612, 614, 617, 618, 619; 3R. 688
 Registration of Births and Deaths, [216] 722; [217] 401
 Rivers Pollution—The River Ribble, [217] 308
 Sanitary Acts, [214] 373
 Sanitary Law, Digest of, [214] 154, 895, 896
 Valuation, 2R. [216] 219; [217] 807

STA      STO      { G E N E R A L   I N D E X }      STO      STO
 214—215—216—217.

- STAPLETON, Mr. J., Berwick-on-Tweed
- Coal—Economy of Fuel, [214] 1031
  - Election of Representative Peers (Scotland and Ireland), [215] 310
  - Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment, Re-comm. [217] 755
  - Hypothee Abolition (Scotland), 2R. [216] 1861
  - India—Education, [215] 1024
  - Labourers' Cottages (Scotland), 2R. [217] 485
  - Metropolitan Police—Legal Advice, [214] 487
  - Railway and Canal Traffic, Comm. cl. 10, [215] 878
  - Rating (Liability and Value), Re-comm. Amendt. [217] 613
  - Spain—Carlists, Subscriptions for the, [215] 633
  - International Law, [215] 896
  - Loans to Political Parties, [214] 1095
  - University Tests (Dublin) (No. 3), Comm. [215] 1530
- Statute Law Revision Bill [H.L.]
(The Lord Chancellor)
- a. Presented; read 1st June 26 (No. 174)
  - Read 2nd July 4
  - Committee: Report July 10, [217] 140
  - Read 3rd July 11
  - c. Read 1st July 15 [Bill 240]
  - Read 2nd July 22
  - Committee: Report July 28
  - Considered* July 29
  - Read 3rd July 30
  - f. Royal Assent August 5 [36 & 37 Vict. c. 91]
- Steam Threshing Machines Bill—
 See title
- Threshing Machines Bill
- STEVENSON, Mr. J. C., South Shields
- Harbours—Docks and Piers Act, [217] 1332
  - Harbours of Refuge, Motion for a Committee, [215] 1422
  - Railway and Canal Traffic, Comm. cl. 11, Amendt. [215] 383, 385
  - Register for Parliamentary and Municipal Electors, 2R. [214] 1958
  - Salmon Fisheries, 2R. [214] 1374
  - Weights and Measures (Metric System), 2R. [217] 463
- Stipendiary Magistrates (Scotland) Bill
*(The Lord Advocate, Mr. Secretary Bruce,
 Mr. Adam)*
- c. Ordered: read 1st April 7 [Bill 129]
  - Read 2nd April 28
  - Committee*—R.P. June 6
  - Bill withdrawn* July 31
- STONE, Mr. W. H., Portsmouth
- Navy—Greenwich Pensioners, [215] 519
  - Navy Estimates—Dockyards, &c. [216] 189
  - Scientific Departments, [216] 137
  - Parliament—Address in Answer to the Speech, [214] 84
  - Rating (Liability and Value), 2R. [216] 299; Comm. cl. 7, 1185; 3R. [217] 687
- STORKS, Right Hon. Major General Sir H. (Surveyor General of Ordnance), Ripon
- Army—Questions, &c.
- Artillery—Cast-iron Guns, Conversion of, [216] 1858
  - Autumn Manoeuvres, [215] 388;—Horse Blankets, [216] 1582;—Extra Allowance to Volunteers, [217] 312;—Billing, 500
  - Carlisle Fort, [216] 839
  - Cavalry Officer, Charge against—Major-General Shute, [215] 1788; [216] 1168
  - Chaplains to the Forces, [215] 1484
  - Clothing, &c. of the German Army, [216] 98
  - Commander-in-Chief of the Forces in Ireland, [216] 884
  - Control Department, [214] 377; [217] 1518
  - Glanders at Leeds Barracks, [217] 307
  - Gunpowder, Contracts for, [215] 901, 1880
  - Gunpowder, Dudley's, Mr. Invention, [217] 908
  - Medical Department—Dental Surgery, [214] 1095
  - Medical Officers, [215] 2022
  - Military Hospital at Portsea, [216] 840
  - Moncreiff Gun Carriages, [214] 440, 894
  - 9th Lancasters—Case of the late Sub-Lieutenant Tribe, [214] 503
  - Officers of H.M.'s Army—Abolition of Purchase, [217] 1561
  - Regimental Facing and Badges, [214] 196, 440
  - Rifle Range, Colchester, [216] 839
  - Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, [216] 100
  - Sandhurst College—Direct Commissions, [215] 1026
  - 35-Ton Gun, The, [217] 1388
  - Valise Equipment, The New, [216] 1185
  - Volunteer Officers, [215] 1488
  - Woolwich Arsenal, Pensioners from, [217] 1588
  - Yeomanry Cavalry—Horse Duty, [215] 2022
  - Yeomanry Uniforms, [214] 786
- Army—Cavalry Force, Reg. [216] 566
- Army—Military Centres—Oxford, Motion for a Committee, [216] 373, 374
- Army Estimates—Clothing Establishments, &c. [216] 1288
- Control Establishments, Wages, &c. [216] 1266, 1369
- Land Forces, [214] 1154
- Pay and Allowances, [214] 1155
- Provisions, Forage, &c. [216] 1259, 1260, 1281
- Warlike Stores, [216] 1273, 1275, 1276, 1277
- Works, Buildings, &c. [216] 1278
- Canada, Dominion of—Transfer of Arms, &c. [215] 1079
- Criminal Law—Weaverham Cock-fighting Case, [217] 1561
- Merchant Marine—Distress Ship Signals, [215] 1785
- Navy—Chatham Dockyard—River Wall, [217] 1532, 1562
- Navy Estimates—Freight of Ships for Convoyance of Troops, &c. [217] 1286
- Nitro Glycerine Act (1869), [216] 58
- Portugal—Supplies of Ammunition, [217] 499

[cont.]

STO SUN { SESSION 1873 } SUP SUP
 214—215—216—217.

STOKES, Right Hon. Major General Sir H.—cont.
 Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 7, [216] 1190
 Superannuation Act Amendment, Comm. cl. 1, [215] 1703
 Supply—Household of the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, [215] 1458
 Woolwich (Royal Arsenal)—Consumption of Coal, [214] 539

STRAIGHT, Mr. D., Shrewsbury
 Criminal Law—Great Northern Railway Company—Inquest on a Guard, [215] 2020
 Epping Forest, 2R. [214] 568
 Juries, Comm. cl. 1, [215] 2072
 Licensing Act, 1872—Legislation, [214] 543
 Parks Regulation Act—Meetings in the Parks, Motion for an Address, [215] 276
 Public Schools Act—Shrewsbury School, [216] 99
 Seduction Laws Amendment, 2R. [215] 477

STRATFORD DE REDCLIFFE, Viscount Turko-Persian Boundary, [217] 201

STRATHNAIRN, Lord
 Army—Education of Officers, [216] 1838
 Militia Reserve—Annual Bounty, [216] 937
 Army, Officers of the—Abolition of Purchase, Address for a Royal Commission, [217] 645
 Railways and Telegraphs in Persia, [215] 617

Suez Canal—Increase of Dues
 214] Question, Mr. Baillie Cochrane; Answer, Viscount Enfield Feb 18, 369; Question, Mr. Denison; Answer, Viscount Enfield Mar 28, 215] 297; Question, Mr. Baillie Cochrane; Answer, Viscount Enfield Mar 31, 344
 Moved, "That, the Commerce of this Country being so deeply interested in the uninterrupted navigation of the Suez Canal, it is desirable that Her Majesty's Government should at once give its adhesion to the judicial reforms in Egypt, suggested and approved of by the Representatives of all the European Powers, by which tribunals will be created for the better administration of justice in Egypt, and the adjudication of differences which may arise between British Shipowners and the administrators of the Suez Canal Company" (Mr. Baillie Cochrane) April 1, 451; after short debate, Motion withdrawn
 Personal Explanation, Mr. Baillie Cochrane April 4, 606

Sugar Duties—International Conference, 1864
 Question, Mr. Grieve; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer Mar 31, [215] 347; April 3, 527; Questions, Mr. Stephen Cave; Mr. J. B. Smith; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer May 9, 1717
 Minutes on Drawbacks P.P. [706] [861]

Sunday Trading Prosecutions — Sunday Observation Amendment Act, 1872
 Question, Mr. P. A. Taylor; Answer, Mr. Bruce July 7, [216] 1856

Superannuation Act Amendment Bill
 (Mr. William Henry Gladstone, Mr. Baxter)
 a. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> * April 21 [Bill 135]
 Read 2<sup>o</sup> * May 5
 Order for Committee read; Moved, "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair" May 8, [215] 1700
 Amend. to leave out from "That," and add "this House will, upon this day six months, resolve itself into the said Committee" (Mr. Joshua Fielden) v.; Question proposed, "That the words, &c." after short debate, Question put; A. 110, N. 43; M. 67
 Main Question, "That Mr. Speaker, &c.," put, and agreed to; Committee; Report Considered * May 12
 Read 3<sup>o</sup> * May 13
 Question, Mr. Mellor; Answer, Mr. Gladstone May 16, [216] 15
 l. Read 1<sup>o</sup> * (Marquess of Lansdowne) May 15
 Read 2<sup>o</sup> * May 19 (No. 113)
 Committee *; Report May 20
 Read 3<sup>o</sup> * May 23
 Royal Assent May 26 [36 Vict. c. 23]

SUPPLY
 Considered in Committee Feb 14—Committee R.P.
 214] Considered in Committee Feb 17, 563—SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES—NAVAL AND CIVIL SERVICES—ARMY PURCHASE COMMISSION—Resolutions reported Feb 18
 . Considered in Committee Feb 24, 855—ARMY ESTIMATES—Statement of the Secretary of State for War in introducing the Army Estimates; after debate, Committee R.P.
 . Considered in Committee Feb 27, 1056—ARMY ESTIMATES—Committee R.P.
 . Considered in Committee Feb 28, 1123—ARMY ESTIMATES—Resolutions reported Mar 3
 . Considered in Committee Mar 7, 1591—ARMY ESTIMATES—Resolutions reported Mar 10
 . Considered in Committee Mar 21, 2055—DEFICIENCIES, 1872-3—CIVIL SERVICES, 1872-3—POST OFFICE—POST OFFICE TELEGRAPH SERVICE—CIVIL SERVICES, £1,842,000 ON ACCOUNT—Resolutions reported Mar 24
 215] Considered in Committee Mar 24, 32—NAVY ESTIMATES—Statement of the First Lord of the Admiralty (Mr. Goschen) on moving the First Resolution—Resolutions reported Mar 26
 Considered in Committee Mar 28—POST OFFICE TELEGRAPH SERVICE, £136,000 ON ACCOUNT—Resolution reported Mar 31
 . Question, Mr. Vernon Harcourt; Answer, Mr. Gladstone April 1, 399
 . Considered in Committee April 3, 590—NAVY ESTIMATES—Committee R.P.
 . Considered in Committee April 21, 777—CIVIL SERVICE ESTIMATES—CLASS I.—PUBLIC WORKS AND BUILDINGS—Votes 1 to 24—Resolutions reported April 22
 . Considered in Committee April 25, 1003—CIVIL SERVICE ESTIMATES—CLASS I.—PUBLIC WORKS AND BUILDINGS—Votes 24 to 29—CLASS II.—SALARIES AND EXPENSES OF PUBLIC DEPARTMENTS—Votes 1 to 7, 9 to 12—Resolutions reported April 28

SUP SUP GENERAL INDEX; SUP SUP
214-215-216-217.

Supply—cont.

- 215] Considered in Committee May 9, 1859—CIVIL SERVICE ESTIMATES—CLASS II.—SALARIES AND EXPENSES OF PUBLIC DEPARTMENTS—Votes 29 to 41—Resolutions reported May 5
. Considered in Committee May 9, 1871—CIVIL SERVICE ESTIMATES—CLASS III.—LAW AND JUSTICE—Votes 1 to 32—Resolutions reported May 12
. Considered in Committee May 12, 1791—CIVIL SERVICE ESTIMATES—CLASS II.—SALARIES AND EXPENSES OF PUBLIC DEPARTMENTS—Vote 8—CLASS III.—LAW AND JUSTICE—Votes 33 to 38—CLASS IV.—EDUCATION, SCIENCE, AND ART—Votes 3 to 16—CLASS V.—COLONIAL, CONSULAR, AND OTHER FOREIGN SERVICES—Votes 1, 3 to 8—CLASS VI.—SUPERANNUATION AND RETIRED ALLOWANCES, &c.—Votes 1 to 6—CLASS VII.—MISCELLANEOUS, SPECIAL, AND TEMPORARY OBJECTS—Votes 1 to 3
CUSTOMS DEPARTMENT—INLAND REVENUE—Resolutions reported May 13
216] Considered in Committee May 19, 1863—NAVY ESTIMATES—Votes 2 to 9—Resolutions reported May 21
. Considered in Committee May 23, 1810—ALABAMA CLAIMS—Resolution reported
. Moved, "That the said Resolution be now read a second time" May 26, 1868; after

[cont.]

Supply—cont.

- debate, Question put, and agreed to; Resolution agreed to 216] Considered in Committee May 26, 1868—NAVY ESTIMATES—Votes 10 to 16—Resolutions reported May 27
Considered in Committee—R.P. June 6
Considered in Committee—R.P. June 13
. Considered in Committee June 23, 1851—ARMY ESTIMATES—Votes 9 to 25—Resolutions reported June 24
. Considered in Committee June 26, 1851—CIVIL SERVICE ESTIMATES—Votes 1 and 2—CLASS IV.—EDUCATION, SCIENCE, AND ART—Votes 1, 2, 9, and 10—Resolutions reported June 27
. Considered in Committee June 27, 1866—POST OFFICE PACKET SERVICE—CIVIL SERVICE ESTIMATES—CLASS IV.—EDUCATION, SCIENCE, AND ART—Votes 13 and 14—Resolutions reported June 30
217] Considered in Committee—R.P. July 25
. Considered in Committee July 28, 1868—CIVIL SERVICE ESTIMATES—CLASS I.—PUBLIC WORKS AND BUILDINGS—Resolutions reported July 29
. Considered in Committee July 28, 1822—SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES—Resolutions reported July 29
. Considered in Committee July 28, 1851—NAVY ESTIMATES—Resolutions reported July 29

SUMMARY.

| APPROPRIATION OF GRANTS.                                 |           | £           | s. | d. |
|----------------------------------------------------------|-----------|-------------|----|----|
| Deficiencies, 1871-2                                     | ... ...   | 235,989     | 19 | 9  |
| Supplementary, 1872-3                                    | ... ...   | 217,457     | 0  | 0  |
|                                                          | 1873-4.   |             |    |    |
| NAVY SERVICES                                            | ... ...   | 9,899,725   | 0  | 0  |
| ARMY SERVICES                                            | ... ...   | 14,416,100  | 0  | 0  |
| ARMY PURCHASE COMMISSION                                 | ...       | 841,900     | 0  | 0  |
| CIVIL SERVICES—viz.:I. Public Works andBuildings | ... ...   | 1,394,002   |    |    |
| II. Salaries, &c. Pub-lic Departments                | ... ...   | 2,063,383   |    |    |
| III. Law and Justice                                     | 4,345,000 |             |    |    |
| IV. Education, Sci-ence, and Art                     | 2,488,942 |             |    |    |
| V. Colonial and Con-sular Services                   | ... ...   | 672,091     |    |    |
| VI. Superannuation,&c.                               | ... ...   | 527,674     |    |    |
| VII. Miscellaneous                                       | ... ...   | 52,907      |    |    |
|                                                          |           | 11,464,149  | 0  | 0  |
| REVENUE DEPARTMENTS, &c.                                 | ... ...   | 7,369,941   | 0  | 0  |
| ADVANCES FOR GREENWICH Hos-PITAL AND SCHOOL          | ... ...   | 142,901     | 0  | 0  |
| ALABAMA CLAIMS                                           | ... ...   | 8,900,000   | 0  | 0  |
| Total                                                    | ... ...   | £47,788,062 | 19 | 9  |

SUMMARY.

WAYS AND MEANS.

GRANTS OUT OF THE CONSOLIDATED FUND.

| For the service ofthe years ending31st March 1873and 1873; | £       | s.          | d.  | £       | s. | d. |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------|-------------|-----|---------|----|----|
| Under Act 36 Vic.cap. 3                                            | ... ... | ...         | ... | 453,346 | 19 | 9  |
| For the service ofthe year ending31st March1874; viz.      |         |             |     |         |    |    |
| Under Act 36 Vic.cap. 3                                            | ... ... | 8,884,000   | 0   | 0       |    |    |
| Under Act 36 Vic.cap. 26                                           | ..      | 12,000,000  | 0   | 0       |    |    |
| Under this Act                                                         | ... ... | 26,470,716  | 0   | 0       |    |    |
| Total                                                                  | ... ... | £47,788,716 | 0   | 0       |    |    |
|                                                                        |         |             |     |         |    |    |
| Total                                                                  | ... ... | £47,788,062 | 19  | 9       |    |    |

DEFICIENCIES 1872-3.

COMMITTEE Mar 21—REPORT Mar 24

| CIVIL SERVICES, viz.,CLASS I. | £       | s.  | d. | Total ofVote | Supply—cont.             | Total ofVote. |
|-----------------------------------|---------|-----|----|------------------|--------------------------|-------------------|
|                                   |         |     |    | £                | s.                       | d.                |
| Furniture of Public Offices       | ... ... | 67  | 12 | 0                | British Museum Buildings | ... ...           |
| Industrial Museum, Edinburgh      | ... ... | 220 | 16 | 2                | Portland Harbour         | ... ...           |

[cont.]

Supply—cont.

|                                                |         |       |    |         |
|------------------------------------------------|---------|-------|----|---------|
| British Embassy Houses, Paris andMadrid    | ... ... | 1,106 | 18 | 0       |
| St. Paul's Cathedral; NationalThanksgiving | ... ... | 378   | 1  | 6       |
|                                                |         |       |    | [cont.] |

SUP      SUP      SESSION 1873 }      SUP      SUP
 214—215—216—217.

Supply—cont.

| CLASS II.                                   |     |             | Total ofVote. |
|---------------------------------------------|-----|-------------|-------------------|
| £                                           | s.  | d.          |                   |
| Foreign Office                              | ... | 81 9 11     |                   |
| Charity Commission                          | ... | 69 10 10    |                   |
| Poor Law Commission, England                | ... | 408 19 4    |                   |
| Office of Works and Public Buildings        | ... | 1,038 14 4  |                   |
| Household of the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland | ... | 100 19 0    |                   |
| CLASS III.                                  |     |             |                   |
| Court of Chancery, England                  | ... | 4 2 0       |                   |
| County Courts                               | ... | 16,172 17 8 |                   |
| Land Registry Office, England               | ... | 2 8 1       |                   |
| Court of Probate, Ireland                   | ... | 128 19 10   |                   |
| Registry of Judgments, Ireland              | ... | 18 16 10    |                   |
| County Prisons, Ireland                     | ... | 1,537 7 9   |                   |
| CLASS IV.                                   |     |             |                   |
| Universities, &c. in Scotland               | ... | 121 0 3     |                   |
| CLASS VII.                                  |     |             |                   |
| Temporary Commissions                       | ... | 4,340 19 3  |                   |
| After short debate, Vote agreed to          |     |             |                   |
| [214] 2056                                  |     |             |                   |
|                                             |     | 26,838 11 8 |                   |

REVENUE DEPARTMENTS, viz.

|                                                                                                                |     |                |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|----------------|
| Post Office                                                                                                    | ... | £37,775 10 0   |
| Post Office Telegraph Service                                                                                  | ... | £171,775 18 1  |
| Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £209,551 8s. 1d., be granted, &c."                                           |     | 209,551 8 1    |
| Moved, to report Progress (Mr. Fawcett); after short debate, Question put; A. 23, N. 64; M. 41; Vote agreed to |     | [214] 9056     |
| Report, Explanation, Mr. Solater-Booth, [215] 88                                                               |     |                |
| Total                                                                                                          | ... | £236,689, 19 9 |

SUPPLEMENTARY.

COMMITTEE Feb 17—REPORT Feb 18

| Navy, viz.                                                                                                            | £      |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------|
| Miscellaneous — Reward to Captain Scott, R. N., for his gunnery inventions ...                                        | 6,000  |
| ARMY PURCHASE COMMISSION                                                                                              | 85,000 |
| CIVIL SERVICES, viz.:                                                                                                 |        |
| CLASS I.                                                                                                              |        |
| Harbours, &c. under the Board of Trade                                                                                | 9,620  |
| Metropolitan Police Courts                                                                                            | 3,260  |
| New Palace at Westminster, acquisition of lands                                                                       | 1,250  |
| CLASS II.                                                                                                             |        |
| Printing and Stationery [214] 568                                                                                     |        |
| Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £51,666, be granted, &c."                                                           |        |
| Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £31,666, &c." (Mr. Vernon Harcourt); after debate, Motion withdrawn; Vote agreed to | 51,666 |

Supply—cont.

| CLASS III.                                                        |     |          | Total ofVote. |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|----------|-------------------|
| £                                                                 |     |          |                   |
| Police, counties and boroughs (Great Britain)                     | ... | ...      | 14,000            |
| Miscellaneous legal charges, England                              | ... |          | 730               |
| CLASS V.                                                          |     |          |                   |
| Grants in aid of expenditure in certain colonies                  | ... | ...      | 20,000            |
| Tonnage Bounties, &c., and Liberated African Department [214] 571 |     |          | 6,000             |
| After short debate, Vote agreed to                                |     |          |                   |
| CLASS VII.                                                        |     |          |                   |
| Mediterranean Extension Telegraph Company                         | ... | ...      | 1,395             |
| Repayments to civil contingencies                                 | ... |          | 18,536            |
| After short debate, Vote agreed to                                |     |          |                   |
| [214] 572                                                         |     |          |                   |
| Total                                                             | ... | £217,457 |                   |

NAVY ESTIMATES, 1873-4.

COMMITTEE Mar 24—REPORT Mar 26

|                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |     |           |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|-----------|
| 60,000 Men and Boys—Statement of the First Lord of the Admiralty (Mr. Goschen) on moving a Resolution "That 60,000 Men and Boys be employed for the Sea and Coastguard Service for the year ending 31st March, 1874, including 14,000 Royal Marines" Mar 24, [215] 32; after Numbers, long debate, Vote agreed to | ... | 60,000    |
|                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |     |           |
| Total ofVote.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |     |           |
| £                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |     |           |
| (1.) Wages to Seamen and Marines                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  | ... | 2,629,884 |

COMMITTEE April 3—R.P.

COMMITTEE May 19—REPORT May 21

|                                                                                                                        |           |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------|
| (2.) Victuals and Clothing for ditto...                                                                                | 1,035,719 |
| (3.) Admiralty Office [216] 103                                                                                        | 174,983   |
| After long debate, Vote agreed to                                                                                      |           |
| (4.) Coast Guard Service, Royal Naval Coast Volunteers, and Royal Naval Reserve [216] 128                              |           |
| Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £167,575, be granted, &c."                                                           |           |
| Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £183,036, &c." (Admiral Erskine); after debate, Motion withdrawn; Vote agreed to     | 167,575   |
| (5.) Scientific Branch [216] 127                                                                                       | 86,654    |
| After short debate, Vote agreed to                                                                                     |           |
| (6.) Dockyards and Naval Yards at Home and Abroad [216] 131                                                            |           |
| Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £1,115,080, be granted, &c."                                                         |           |
| Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £1,065,080, &c." (Mr. Rylands); after long debate, Motion withdrawn                  |           |
| Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £1,100,080, &c." (Lord Henry Lennox); after debate, Motion withdrawn; Vote agreed to | 1,115,080 |
| [216] 143                                                                                                              |           |

[cont.]

[cont.]

SUP SUP { GENERAL INDEX } SUP SUP
 214-215-216-217.

Supply—cont.

|                                                                                                                                             | Total ofVote.£ |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------|
| (7.) Victualling Yards at Home andAbroad ... ... ...                                                                                    | 70,935                 |
| (8.) Medical Establishments at Homeand Abroad ... ... ...                                                                               | 62,214                 |
| (9.) Marine Divisions ... ... ...                                                                                                           | 18,683                 |
| COMMITTEE May 26—Report May 27                                                                                                       |                        |
| (10.) Naval Stores for the Building,Repair, and Outfit of the Fleet andCoast Guard, Steam Machinery andShips built by Contract: |                        |
| Section I. Naval StoresAfter debate, Vote agreed to ... 1,072,380[216] 436                                                          |                        |
| Section II. Steam Machinery andShips built by ContractAfter debate, Vote agreed to ... 609,866[216] 447                         |                        |
| (11.) New Works, Buildings, Machinery,and Repairs ... ... [216] 451                                                                     | 682,218                |
| After short debate, Vote agreed to                                                                                                          |                        |
| (12.) Medicines and Medical Stores ... 70,800                                                                                               |                        |
| After short debate, Vote agreed to ... [216] 453                                                                                            |                        |
| (13.) Martial Law and Law Charges ... 16,080                                                                                                |                        |
| (14.) Miscellaneous Services [216] 453                                                                                                      | 105,288                |
| After short debate, Vote agreed to                                                                                                          |                        |
| Total for the Effective Service ... 7,917,859                                                                                        |                        |
| (15.) Half Pay, Reserved Half Pay, andRetired Pay to Officers of the Navyand Royal Marines [216] 453                                |                        |
| Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding£847,462, be granted, &c.;" afterExplanation, Motion withdrawn                                     |                        |
| Comm. July 28—Vote agreed to—                                                                                                        |                        |
| Report July 29 ... 847,463                                                                                                           |                        |
| (16.) Military and Civil Pensions andAllowances:                                                                                        |                        |
| Section I. Military Pensionsand Allowances ... 643,216                                                                                  |                        |
| Section II. Civil Pensions andAllowances ... 296,448                                                                                    |                        |
| Total for the Naval Service ... 9,704,985                                                                                            |                        |

|                                                                    |         |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------|---------|
| COMMITTEE July 28—REPORT July 30                            |         |
| FOR THE SERVICE OF OTHER DEPART-                            |         |
| MENTS OR GOVERNMENT.                                        |         |
| (17.) Army Department (Conveyanceof Troops) ... ... ...        | 167,740 |
| Resolution reported July 30, and,after short debate, agreed to |         |
| [217] 1285                                                         |         |
| Total NAVY ESTIMATES ... £9,872,725                         |         |

SUPPLEMENTARY.

|                                                                                                                                                                          |        |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------|
| COMMITTEE July 28—REPORT July 30                                                                                                                                  |        |
| (5.) Scientific Branch—Royal NavalCollege, Greenwich [217] 1286                                                                                                      | 12,000 |
| Resolution reported July 30, and,after short debate, agreed to                                                                                                       |        |
| (15.) Half Pay—Increase of RetiredPay to certain Officers [217] 1151                                                                                                 |        |
| Moved, "That a Supplementary sum,not exceeding £15,000, be granted,&c.;" after short debate, Questionput; A. 69, N. 30; M. 89; Voteagreed to ... ... ... | 15,000 |

Grand Total NAVY ESTIMATES ... £9,899,725

[cont.]

ARMY ESTIMATES, 1873-74.

COMMITTEE Feb 24

Statement of the Secretary of State for War (Mr. Cardwell) on moving Resolution (a), "That a number of Land Forces not exceeding 128,968 be maintained for the Service, &c. from the 1st day of April 1873, to the 31st day of March
1874" [214] 855

After short debate, Committee a.r.

COMMITTEE Feb 27

Question again proposed, "That a number of Land Forces, not exceeding 128,968, &c."

Motion made, and Question proposed,
"That a number of Land Forces, not exceeding 118,968, &c." (Mr.
W. Fowler); after long debate,
Committee a.r. [214] 1056

COMMITTEE Feb 28

Original Question again proposed;
whereon Question (Mr. W. Fowler) again proposed; after further long debate, Question put; A. 43,
N. 188; M. 115 [214] 1123

Original Question put, and agreed to

NUMBERS.

Numbers

|                                                                                                                                           |                |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------|
| (a.) Total number of Men, exclusiveof the Staff of Brigade Depots tobe formed from permanent Staff ofAuxiliary Forces ... ... | 135,004        |
| Staff of Brigade Depots to be formedfrom Staff of Auxiliary Forces ...                                                                | 3,964          |
| Total number of Men upon theBritish Establishment ...                                                                         | 138,968 |

I. REGULAR FORCES.

|                                                                       |             |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------|
| (1.) General Staff and RegimentalPay, Allowances, and Charges ... | £ 5,072,500 |
| After short debate, Vote agreed to                                    |             |
| [214] 1156                                                            |             |
| (2.) Divine Service ... ...                                           | 46,800      |
| (3.) Administration of Military Law                                   | 27,000      |
| (4.) Medical Establishments and Ser-vices ... ... ...             | 247,400     |

II. AUXILIARY AND RESERVE FORCES.

|                                                                                                                                                         |         |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------|
| (5.) Militia Pay and Allowances                                                                                                                         |         |
| Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding£815,400, be granted, &c."                                                                                         |         |
| Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding£785,400, &c." ( Colonel Wilson-Patten ); after short debate, Ques-tion put; A. 32, N. 137; M. 106 |         |
| Vote agreed to [214] 1155                                                                                                                               | 815,400 |
| (6.) Yeomanry Cavalry [214] 1157                                                                                                                        | 78,900  |
| After short debate, Vote agreed to                                                                                                                      |         |
| (7.) Volunteer Corps [214] 1158                                                                                                                         | 490,800 |
| After short debate, Vote agreed to                                                                                                                      |         |
| (8.) Army Reserve Force (includingEnrolled Pensioners) ...                                                                                          | 123,200 |
| Resolutions reported Mar 3                                                                                                                              |         |

[cont.]

SUP      SUP      { SESSION 1873 }      SUP      SUP
214—215—216—217.

Supply—cont.

COMMITTEE June 23—REPORT June 24

III.—CONTROL ESTABLISHMENTS AND SERVICES.

- (9.) Control Establishments, Wages, &c. ... [216] 1261 889,000
After debate, Vote agreed to
(10.) Provisions, Forage, Fuel, Transport, and other Services ... 1,980,700
After short debate, Vote agreed to [216] 1269
(11.) Clothing Establishments, Services, and Supplies [216] 1262 743,100
After short debate, Vote agreed to (12.) Supply, Manufacture, and Repair of Warlike and other Stores ... 1,070,000
Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £1,070,000, be granted, &c."
Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £970,000, do." (Mr. Gregory); after debate, Motion withdrawn; Vote agreed to [216] 1263

IV.—WORKS AND BUILDINGS.

- (13.) Superintending Establishment of, and Expenditure for, Works, Buildings, and Repairs, at Home and Abroad ... [216] 1278 778,000
After debate, Vote agreed to

V.—VARIOUS SERVICES.

- (14.) Establishments for Military Education ... [216] 1280 133,900
Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £133,900, be granted, &c."
Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £116,911, do." (Captain Archdale); after short debate, Question put, and negatived; Vote agreed to (15.) Miscellaneous Services ... 29,300
After short debate, Vote agreed to [216] 1286
(16.) Administration of the Army
Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £200,500, be granted, &c."
Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £199,600, do." (Mr. Anderson); after debate, Motion withdrawn Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £200,200, do." (Mr. Secretary Cardwell); after further debate, Vote agreed to [216] 1287 300,200

Total Effective Services £12,165,700

VI.—NON-EFFECTIVE SERVICES.

- (17.) Rewards for Distinguished Services, &c. ... 85,400
(18.) Pay of General Officers ... 80,000
(19.) Full Pay of Reduced and Retired Officers and Half-pay ... 527,900
(20.) Widows' Pensions, &c. ... 147,300
(21.) Pensions for Wounds ... 16,400
(22.) Chelsea and Kilmainham Hospitals (In-Pensions) ... 36,600
(23.) Out-Pensions ... 1,314,500
(24.) Superannuation Allowances ... 172,100
After short debate, Vote agreed to [216] 1297

Total of Vote. Supply—cont.

(25.) Militia, Yeomanry, Cavalry, and Volunteer Corps [216] 1298 20,200

After short debate, Vote agreed to
Losses Written off as Irrecoverable ... ... —

Total Non-Effective Services £2,250,400

Total Effective and Non-Effective Services ... ... £14,416,100

Total Amount of Estimate, 1873-4 14,416,100

Deduct Estimated Exchequer Extra Receipts ... ... 1,185,000

Net Charge for Army Services, 1873-74 ... ... £13,231,100

COMMITTEE Mar 7—REPORT Mar 10

ARMY PURCHASE COMMISSION.

For the establishment of, and expenditure to be incurred by, the Army Purchase Commissioners, and for the purchase of the remaining Commissions of gentlemen-at-arms ... £ 841,900

CIVIL SERVICE ESTIMATES, 1873-74.

* The Votes marked † are "to complete sums" for the several Services named.

CLASS I.—PUBLIC WORKS AND BUILDINGS.

COMMITTEE April 21—REPORT April 22 Total of Vote.

GREAT BRITAIN: £

(1.) † £25,615, Royal Palaces ... 30,615
(2.) † £83,727, Royal Parks ... 100,727

After short debate, Vote agreed to [215] 777

(3.) † £128,431, Public Buildings ... 153,431
After short debate, Vote agreed to [215] 778

(4.) † £12,000, Furniture of Public Offices ... [215] 779 14,500
After short debate, Vote agreed to

(5.) † £35,670, Houses of Parliament
Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £25,870, be granted, &c."

Moved, "That the Item of £724, rent of residence of Clerk of the Parliaments, be omitted" (Mr. Anderson); after debate, Motion withdrawn Moved, "That the Item be reduced by the sum of £224" (Mr. Muntz); after further debate, A. 56, N. 85; M. 29; after further short debate, Vote agreed to [215] 779

(6.) † £48,000, New Home and Colonial Offices ... [215] 785 30,870

After short debate, Vote agreed to

(7.) † £11,840, Sheriff Court Houses, Scotland ... ... 58,000

(8.) † £35,420, National Gallery Enlargement ... ... 14,340

(9.) † £16,500, Glasgow University ... ... 42,420

20,000

[cont.]

[cont.]

SUP SUP (GENERAL INDEX) SUP SUP

214—215—216—217.

Supply—cont.

|                                                                                                                       |         |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------|
| (10.) £7,700, Industrial Museum, Edinburgh ...                                                                        | 9,200   |
| (11.) £24,182, Burlington House ...                                                                                   | 29,182  |
| (12.) £120,607, Post Office and Inland Revenue Buildings [215] 786After short debate, Vote agreed to              | 156,607 |
| (13.) £4,547, British Museum Buildings ...                                                                            | 5,547   |
| (14.) £30,805, County Courts ...                                                                                      | 36,805  |
| (15.) £16,773, Science and Art Department ...                                                                         | 19,773  |
| (16.) £107,210, Surveys of the United Kingdom ...                                                                     | 129,210 |
| After short debate, Vote agreed to                                                                                    |         |
| (17.) £13,547, Harbours of RefugeAfter short debate, Vote agreed to                                               | 16,547  |
| [215] 787                                                                                                             | 200     |
| (18.) £150, Portland Harbour ...                                                                                      | 10,000  |
| (19.) £7,500, Metropolitan Fire Brigade ...                                                                           | 87,353  |
| (20.) £31,363, Rates on Government Property ...                                                                       | 4,651   |
| After short debate, Vote agreed to                                                                                    |         |
| (21.) £3,901, Wellington MonumentAfter debate, Vote agreed to                                                     | 11,010  |
| [215] 788                                                                                                             | 80,000  |
| (22.) £67,000, Natural History Museum ...                                                                             | 68,800  |
| After short debate, Vote agreed to                                                                                    |         |
| (23.) £9,010, Metropolitan Police Courts                                                                              | 9,000   |
| Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £9,010, be granted, &c.;" after short debate, A. 80, N. 65; M. 16; Vote agreed to   | 763     |
| (24.) £57,800, New Courts of Justice, &c....                                                                          | 23,560  |
| Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £57,800, be granted, &c."                                                           |         |
| Moved to report Progress ( Mr. Basset ); after short debate, Question put, and agreed to                       |         |
| Comm. July 28—Original Question again proposed, and, after short debate, agreed to; Vote agreed to—Report July 28 |         |
| COMMITTEE April 25—Report April 28                                                                                    |         |
| (25.) £7,500, Anstruther Harbour ...                                                                                  | 9,000   |
| After short debate, Vote agreed to                                                                                    |         |
| [215] 1008                                                                                                            | 900     |
| (26.) £763, Ramsgate Harbour ...                                                                                      | 61,863  |
| IRELAND:                                                                                                              |         |
| (27.) £130,308, Public Buildings ...                                                                                  | 156,308 |
| After short debate, Vote agreed to                                                                                    |         |
| [215] 1004                                                                                                            | 156,308 |
| ABROAD:                                                                                                               |         |
| (28.) £19,560, Lighthouses AbroadAfter short debate, Vote agreed to                                               | 23,560  |
| [215] 1005                                                                                                            | 23,560  |
| (29.) £700, Embassy Houses, Paris and Madrid ...                                                                      | 900     |
| (30.) £51,863, Embassy Houses and Consular Buildings, Constantinople, China, Japan, and Tehran                        | 61,863  |
| After short debate, Vote agreed to                                                                                    |         |
| [215] 1006                                                                                                            | 61,863  |
| Total ... $1,831,762                                                                                                 |         |

[cont.]

Supply—cont.

| SUPPLEMENTARY 1873-4.                                                                                                                                        |                   |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------|
| COMMITTEE July 28—REPORT July 30                                                                                                                             |                   |
| Metropolitan Police Courts ...                                                                                                                               | 15,000            |
| New Palace at Westminster—Acquisition of Land, and Embankment ...                                                                                            | 8,500             |
| Vienna and Washington Embassies ...                                                                                                                          | 28,740            |
| Dover Harbour ...                                                                                                                                            | 10,000            |
| After short debate, Vote agreed to                                                                                                                           |                   |
| Question, Mr. Rylands; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue July 31, [217] 1834                                                                                  |                   |
| Total Civil Services, Class I. ...                                                                                                                           | £1,394,002 |
| CLASS II.—SALARIES AND EXPENSES OF PUBLIC DEPARTMENTS.                                                                                                       |                   |
| ENGLAND:                                                                                                                                                     |                   |
| COMMITTEE April 25—REPORT April 28                                                                                                                           |                   |
| (1.) £37,675, House of Lords Offices                                                                                                                         | 45,175            |
| (2.) £40,482, House of Commons Offices ...                                                                                                                   | 48,482            |
| After short debate, Vote agreed to                                                                                                                           |                   |
| (3.) £46,713, Treasury and Subordinate Department ...                                                                                                        | 56,213            |
| (4.) £77,330, Home Office and Subordinate Departments [215] 1007                                                                                             | 92,830            |
| After short debate, Vote agreed to                                                                                                                           |                   |
| (5.) £61,885, Foreign Office ...                                                                                                                             | 62,985            |
| (6.) £26,282, Colonial Office ...                                                                                                                            | 31,582            |
| (7.) £26,075, Privy Council Office and Subordinate Departments ...                                                                                           | 31,675            |
| (8.) Board of Trade and Subordinate Departments                                                                                                              |                   |
| Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £84,778, be granted, &c."                                                                                                  |                   |
| Moved, to omit the item of £500, Salary of Inspector of Oyster Fisheries ( Mr. McLaren ); after short debate, A. 23, N. 87; M. 64; Vote agreed to ... |                   |
| [215] 1008                                                                                                                                                   | 101,778           |
| COMMITTEE May 12—REPORT May 13                                                                                                                               |                   |
| (9.) £2,279, Privy Seal Office                                                                                                                               |                   |
| Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £2,279, be granted, &c.;" after debate, A. 229, N. 59; M. 170; Vote agreed to                                              |                   |
| [215] 1791                                                                                                                                                   | 2,779             |
| COMMITTEE April 25—REPORT April 28                                                                                                                           |                   |
| (10.) £16,385, Charity Commission                                                                                                                            |                   |
| Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £16,385, be granted, &c."                                                                                                  |                   |
| Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £16,185, &c." ( Mr. Slater-Booth ); after short debate, A. 67, N. 76; M. 9; Vote agreed to                          |                   |
| [215] 1013                                                                                                                                                   | 19,385            |
| (11.) £17,421, Civil Service Commission ...                                                                                                                  |                   |
| [215] 1015                                                                                                                                                   | 20,921            |
| After short debate, Vote agreed to                                                                                                                           |                   |
| (12.) £15,354, Copyhold, Inclosure, and Tithe Commission ...                                                                                                 |                   |
| [215] 1015                                                                                                                                                   | 18,354            |
| (13.) £7,160, Inclosure and Drainage Acts Expenses ...                                                                                                       |                   |
| [215] 1006                                                                                                                                                   | 8,650             |
| (14.) £36,476, Exchequer and Audit Department ...                                                                                                            |                   |
| [215] 1006                                                                                                                                                   | 43,676            |
| [cont.]                                                                                                                                                      |                   |

SUP SUP SESSION 1873 SUP SUP

214—215—216—217.

Supply—cont.

|                                                                                                                        | Total of Votes. |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------|
| (15.) £1,995, Registrars of Friendly Societies                                                                         | £ 2,395         |
| (16.) £46,450, General Register Office                                                                                 | 55,750          |
| After short debate, Vote agreed to                                                                                     | [215] 1016      |
| (17.) £339,803, Local Government Board                                                                                 | 407,808         |
| After debate, Vote agreed to                                                                                           | [215] 1017      |
| (18.) £12,385, Lunacy Commission                                                                                       | 14,835          |
| (19.) £43,850, Mint                                                                                                    | 52,350          |
| (20.) £14,795, National Debt Office                                                                                    | 17,795          |
| (21.) £23,456, Patent Office                                                                                           | 26,456          |
| After short debate, Vote agreed to                                                                                     | [215] 1018      |
| (22.) £21,506, Paymaster General's Office                                                                              | 25,506          |
| (23.) £19,081, Public Record Office                                                                                    | 22,881          |
| (24.) £8,764, Public Works Loan Commission                                                                             | 4,564           |
| (25.) £365,703, Stationery Office and Printing                                                                         | 438,708         |
| Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £365,703, be granted, &c."                                                           |                 |
| Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £365,703, be granted, &c." (Mr. Collan); Question put, and negatived; Vote agreed to | [215] 1022      |
| (26.) £20,381, Woods, Forests, &c., Office of                                                                          | 24,381          |
| (27.) £35,072, Works and Public Buildings, Office of                                                                   | 42,072          |
| (28.) £20,000, Secret Service                                                                                          | 24,000          |
| Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £20,000, be granted, &c.; after short debate, A. 83, N. 22; M. 61; Vote agreed to    | [215] 1022      |

COMMITTEE May 2—REPORT May 5

SCOTLAND:

|                                                                                                                                               |            |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------|
| (29.) £5,247, Exchequer and other Offices                                                                                                     |            |
| Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £5,247, be granted, &c."                                                                                    |            |
| Moved, "That the Item of £217 13s. be reduced by the sum of £197 13s." (Mr. Bowring); after short debate, A. 52, N. 68; M. 11; Vote agreed to | [215] 1453 |
| (30.) £10,602, Fishery Board                                                                                                                  | 12,512     |
| (31.) £6,054, General Register Office                                                                                                         | 7,554      |
| (32.) £4,945, Lunacy Commission                                                                                                               | 5,945      |
| (33.) £15,192, Poor Law Commission                                                                                                            | 18,192     |
| After short debate, Vote agreed to                                                                                                            | [215] 1455 |

IRELAND:

|                                                                                                                                         |            |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------|
| (34.) £5,791, Lord Lieutenant's Household                                                                                               | 6,941      |
| Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £5,791, be granted, &c."                                                                              |            |
| Moved, "That the Item of £1,582 for Queen's Plates be omitted" (Mr. Trevelyan); after short debate, A. 43, N. 65; M. 22; Vote agreed to | [215] 1456 |
| (35.) £24,215, Chief Secretary's Office                                                                                                 | 29,215     |
| (36.) £250, Boundary Survey                                                                                                             | 300        |

Supply—cont.

|                                                        | Total of Vote. |
|--------------------------------------------------------|----------------|
| (37.) £1,985, Charitable Donations and Bequests Office | £ 2,385        |
| (38.) £23,096, General Register Office                 | 27,696         |
| (39.) £91,200, Poor Law Commission                     | 109,300        |
| (40.) £4,894, Public Record Office                     | 5,294          |
| (41.) £22,326, Public Works Office                     | 26,826         |

Total Civil Services Class II. ... £2,003,983

CLASS III.—LAW AND JUSTICE.

COMMITTEE May 9—REPORT May 12

ENGLAND:

|                                                                          |            |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------|
| (1.) £44,925, Law Charges                                                | £ 63,925   |
| After short debate, Vote agreed to                                       | [215] 1771 |
| (2.) £158,275, Criminal Prosecutions                                     | 190,275    |
| After short debate, Vote agreed to                                       | [215] 1772 |
| (3.) £148,778, Court of Chancery                                         | 172,278    |
| After short debate, Vote agreed to                                       | [215] 1773 |
| (4.) £51,887, Common Law Courts                                          | 61,887     |
| After short debate, Vote agreed to                                       | [215] 1775 |
| (5.) £31,478, Court of Bankruptcy                                        |            |
| Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £31,478, be granted, &c."              |            |
| Moved to report Progress (Mr. Whalley); Motion withdrawn; Vote agreed to | [215] 1776 |
| (6.) £364,984, County Courts                                             | 437,984    |
| (7.) £76,424, Probate Court                                              | 91,424     |
| After short debate, Vote agreed to                                       | [215] 1776 |
| (8.) £10,499, Admiralty Court Registry                                   | 12,499     |
| (9.) £4,450, Land Registry Office                                        | 5,350      |
| (10.) £11,663, Police Courts (London and Sheerness)                      | 18,993     |
| (11.) £191,482, Metropolitan Police                                      | 229,982    |
| (12.) £315,000, County and Borough Police, Great Britain                 | 335,000    |
| (13.) £324,593, Convict Establishments in England and the Colonies       | 449,593    |
| (14.) £90,820, County Prisons, Great Britain                             | 108,820    |
| (15.) £186,000, Reformatory and Industrial Schools, Great Britain        | 223,000    |
| (16.) £25,492, Broadmoor Criminal Lunatic Asylum                         | 30,492     |
| (17.) £14,850, Miscellaneous Legal Charges                               | 17,850     |

SCOTLAND:

|                                           |            |
|-------------------------------------------|------------|
| (18.) £56,290, Criminal Proceedings       | £ 67,290   |
| After short debate, Vote agreed to        | [215] 1777 |
| (19.) £47,754, Courts of Law and Justice  | £ 57,754   |
| (20.) £26,118, Register House Departments | 31,118     |
| (21.) £19,793, Prisons                    | 23,793     |

IRELAND:

|                                                      |          |
|------------------------------------------------------|----------|
| (22.) £65,231, Law Charges and Criminal Prosecutions | £ 78,231 |
| (23.) £37,550, Court of Chancery                     | 45,050   |
| (24.) £23,552, Common Law Courts                     | 28,552   |

[cont.]

[cont.]

SUP SUP { GENERAL INDEX } SUP SUP
214-215-216-217.

Supply—cont.

|                                                           |            |
|-----------------------------------------------------------|------------|
| (25.) + £6,761, Court of Bankruptcy and Insolvency ...    | 8,161      |
| (26.) + £10,931, Landed Estates Court ...                 | 12,931     |
| (27.) + £9,663, Probate Court ...                         | 11,663     |
| (28.) + £1,775, Admiralty Court Registry ...              | 2,075      |
| (29.) + £18,650, Registry of Deeds ...                    | 16,150     |
| (30.) + £2,620, Registry of Judgments ...                 | 3,120      |
| (31.) + £94,967, Dublin Metropolitan Police ...           | [215] 1777 |
| After short debate, Vote agreed to                        |            |
| (32.) + £819,729, Constabulary ...                        | 983,729    |
| After short debate, Vote agreed to                        |            |
|                                                           | [215] 1778 |
| (33.) + £88,685, Government Prisons and Reformatories ... | 40,185     |
| (34.) + £63,463, County Prisons ...                       | 76,463     |
| (35.) + £4,409, Dundrum Criminal Lunatic Asylum ...       | 5,809      |
| (36.) + £1,960, Four Courts, Marshalsea, Prison ...       | 2,360      |
| (37.) + £47,100, Miscellaneous Legal Charges ...          | 56,609     |
| Total ...                                                 | £4,186,885 |

SUPPLEMENTARY 1873-4.

|                                                                                         |            |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------|
| COMMITTEE July 28—REPORT July 30 Convict Establishments in England and the Colonies ... | 5,000      |
| Dublin Metropolitan Police ...                                                          | 26,000     |
| Constabulary of Ireland ...                                                             | 153,750    |
| Miscellaneous Legal Charges, Ireland ...                                                | 23,725     |
| Total Civil Services Class III. ...                                                     | £4,345,060 |

CLASS IV.—EDUCATION, SCIENCE, AND ART.

|                                                                   |            |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------|------------|
| COMMITTEE June 28—REPORT June 27 GREAT BRITAIN:                   | £          |
| (1.) + £1,083,803, Public Education ...                           | 1,299,603  |
| After long debate, Vote agreed to                                 |            |
|                                                                   | [216] 1451 |
| (2.) + £218,503, Science and Art Department ...                   | [216] 1464 |
| After short debate, Vote agreed to                                | 262,503    |
| COMMITTEE May 12—REPORT May 13 (3.) + £85,061, British Museum ... | 102,061    |
| After short debate, Vote agreed to                                |            |
|                                                                   | [215] 1794 |
| (4.) + £5,045, National Gallery ...                               | 6,045      |
| (5.) + £1,500, National Portrait Gallery ...                      | 2,000      |
| (6.) + £10,450, Learned Societies ...                             | 12,450     |
| After short debate, Vote agreed to                                |            |
|                                                                   | [215] 1795 |
| (7.) + £8,081, University of London ...                           | 9,681      |
| (8.) + £7,595, Endowed Schools Commission ...                     | [214] 1796 |
| After short debate, Vote agreed to                                | 9,095      |

COMMITTEE June 28—REPORT June 27

|                                        |            |
|----------------------------------------|------------|
| SCOTLAND:                              |            |
| (9.) + £129,412, Public Education ...  | 155,413    |
| After short debate, Vote agreed to     |            |
|                                        | [216] 1464 |
| (10.) + £4,610, Board of Education ... | 5,610      |

Supply—cont.

|                                                                |                |
|----------------------------------------------------------------|----------------|
| Total of Vote.                                                 | Total of Vote. |
| COMMITTEE May 12—REPORT May 13                                 | £              |
| (11.) + £16,428, Universities, &c., in Scotland ...            | 18,428         |
| (12.) + £1,750, National Gallery, Scotland ...                 | 2,190          |
| COMMITTEE June 27—REPORT June 30                               |                |
| IRELAND:                                                       |                |
| (13.) + £452,222, Public Education ...                         | 542,222        |
| After short debate, Vote agreed to                             |                |
|                                                                | [216] 1503     |
| (14.) + £555, Commissioners of Education (Endowed Schools) ... | 655            |
| COMMITTEE May 12—REPORT May 13                                 |                |
| (15.) + £1,980, National Gallery ...                           | 2,380          |
| (16.) + £1,734, Royal Irish Academy ...                        | 2,084          |
| (17.) + £3,286, Queen's University ...                         | 3,936          |
| (18.) + £3,476, Queen's Colleges ...                           | 4,176          |
| Total ...                                                      | £2,440,442     |

SUPPLEMENTARY 1873-4.

|                                                     |            |
|-----------------------------------------------------|------------|
| COMMITTEE July 28—REPORT July 30 British Museum ... | ... 27,000 |
| National Gallery ...                                | ... 1,500  |
| Total Civil Services, Class IV. ...                 | £2,468,942 |

CLASS V.—COLONIAL, CONSULAR, AND OTHER FOREIGN SERVICES.

|                                                                                                                          |            |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------|
| (1.) + £231,203, Diplomatic Services Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £231,203, be granted, &c."                        | £          |
| Moved, That a sum, not exceeding £226,908, &c." (Mr. Rylands); after debate, Question put, and negatived; Vote agreed to |            |
|                                                                                                                          | [215] 1797 |
| 277,203                                                                                                                  |            |
| COMMITTEE July 28—REPORT July 29 (2.) + £207,445, Consular Services ...                                                  | 248,945    |
| COMMITTEE May 12—REPORT May 13 (3.) + £40,030, Colonies, Grants-in-Aid ...                                               |            |
|                                                                                                                          | [215] 1806 |
| 48,030                                                                                                                   |            |
| After debate, Vote agreed to                                                                                             |            |
| (4.) + £3,016, Orange River Territory and St. Helena ...                                                                 | 3,816      |
| (5.) + £72, Slave Trade, Commissions for Suppression of ...                                                              | 122        |
| (6.) + £11,229, Tonnage Bounties, &c. After short debate, Vote agreed to                                                 | 13,429     |
|                                                                                                                          | [215] 1818 |
| (7.) + £4,429, Emigration [215] 1814 ...                                                                                 | 5,329      |
| After short debate, Vote agreed to                                                                                       |            |
| (8.) + £4,200, Treasury Chest ...                                                                                        | 5,000      |
| Total ...                                                                                                                | £601,074   |

SUPPLEMENTARY 1873-4.

|                                                          |            |
|----------------------------------------------------------|------------|
| COMMITTEE July 28—REPORT July 29 Diplomatic Services ... | ... 3,711  |
| Colonies, Grants in aid of ...                           | ... 61,706 |
| Tonnage Bounties, &c. ...                                | ... 16,000 |
| Total Civil Services Class V. ...                        | £672,091   |

[cont.]

[cont.]

SUP SUP (SESSION 1873) SUP SUP

214-215-216-217.

Supply—cont.

CLASS VI.—SUPERANNUATION AND RETIRED ALLOWANCES AND GRATUITIES FOR CHARITABLE AND OTHER SERVICES.

Total of Vote.

COMMITTEE May 19—REPORT May 13.

|                                                                          |                 |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------|
| (1.) £317,998, Superannuation and Retired Allowances ... [215] 1814      | 423,896         |
| After short debate, Vote agreed to                                       |                 |
| (2.) £33,588, Merchant Seamen's Fund Pensions, &c. ...                   | 49,288          |
| (3.) £27,500, Relief of Distressed British Seamen ...                    | 33,000          |
| (4.) £15,750, Hospitals and Infirmaries, Ireland ...                     | 18,850          |
| (5.) £4,618, Miscellaneous Charitable Allowances, &c., Great Britain ... | 5,616           |
| (6.) £4,924, Miscellaneous Charitable Allowances, &c. Ireland ...        | 5,924           |
| Total Civil Services Class VI. ...                                | £527,874 |

CLASS VII.—MISCELLANEOUS, SPECIAL, AND TEMPORARY OBJECTS.

COMMITTEE May 12—REPORT May 13.

|                                                                                                                                      |                |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------|
| (1.) £14,027, Temporary Commissions ... [215] 1816                                                                                   |                |
| Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £14,027, be granted, &c."                                                                          |                |
| Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £13,727, &c." (Mr. Rylands); after short debate, Motion withdrawn; Vote agreed to ...              | £ 17,027       |
| (2.) £2,545, Deep Sea Exploring Expedition ...                                                                                       | 8,045          |
| (3.) £5,165, Miscellaneous Expenses ...                                                                                              |                |
| Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £5,165, be granted, &c."                                                                           |                |
| Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £4,165, &c." (Mr. Monk); after short debate, Question put; A. 12, N. 54; M. 48; Vote agreed to ... | 6,165          |
| [215] 1818                                                                                                                           |                |
| Total ...                                                                                                                     | £26,237 |

SUPPLEMENTARY 1873-4.

COMMITTEE July 28—REPORT July 30

|                                            |                |
|--------------------------------------------|----------------|
| Temporary Commissions ...                  | 14,000         |
| Miscellaneous Expenses ...                 | 7,000          |
| Repayment of Kensington Station, &c.       |                |
| Railway Deposit ...                        | 5,760          |
| Total Civil Services Class VII. ... | £52,997 |

SUPPLEMENTARY, 1873-4 (Re-Capitulation)

COMMITTEE July 28—REPORT July 30

|                                                                    |        |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------|--------|
| CIVIL SERVICES, viz.,                                              | £      |
| CLASS I.                                                           |        |
| Metropolitan Police Courts ...                                     | 15,000 |
| New Palace at Westminster—Acquisition of Lands, and Embankment ... | 8,500  |
| After debate, Vote agreed to [217] 1122                            |        |
| Vienna and Washington Embassies ...                                | 28,740 |
| After short debate, Vote agreed to                                 |        |

[cont.]

Supply—cont.

CLASS III.

Convict Establishments in England and the Colonies [217] 1134
Moved, "That a Supplementary sum, not exceeding £5,000, be granted, &c."

After short debate, Question put; A. 129, N. 45; M. 84; Vote agreed to ... [217] 1136 5,000
Dublin Metropolitan Police, [217] 1136
Moved, "That a Supplementary sum, not exceeding £20,000, be granted, &c."

Moved, "That a Supplementary sum, not exceeding £1,000, &c." (Mr. McLaren); after debate, Motion withdrawn Moved, "That a Supplementary sum, not exceeding £14,000, &c." (Mr. McLaren); Question put; A. 71, N. 124; M. 53; Vote agreed to

[217] 1146 26,000
Constabulary of Ireland ... [217] 1145 153,750
After short debate, Vote agreed to Miscellaneous Legal Charges, Ireland ... [217] 1146 23,725
After short debate, Vote agreed to

CLASS IV.

British Museum ... [217] 1146 27,000
Vote agreed to

National Gallery ... ... 1,500

CLASS V.

Diplomatic Services [217] 1148
Moved, "That a Supplementary sum, not exceeding £3,711, be granted, &c."

After short debate, Question put; A. 138, N. 18; M. 122; Vote agreed to ... 3,711
Colonies, Grants in aid of ... ... 51,706

Tonnage, Bounties, &c. ... ... 15,000

CLASS VII.

Temporary Commissions ... [217] 1150 14,000

After short debate, Vote agreed to Miscellaneous Expenses ... [217] 1150 7,000

After short debate, Vote agreed to Repayment of Kensington Station, &c.

Railway Deposit ... ... 5,760

Total ... £386,392

[217] Resolutions reported July 29, 1822

Moved, "That the said Resolutions be now read a second time"

Custom House Clerks at the Outports, Observations, Viscount Sandon

After debate, Moved, "That the Debate be now adjourned" (Colonel Hogg); after further debate, Question put, and agreed to Debate resumed July 30, 1822; after short debate, Question put, and agreed to: First Five Resolutions agreed to

Sixth Resolution, £8,500, New Palace at Westminster, and Embankment of the River Thames: "That a sum, not exceeding £8,500, &c." 1822; Question proposed, "That this House doth agree, &c.;" after long debate, Question put, and agreed to

[cont.]

SUP SUP { GENERAL INDEX } SUP SUP
214-215-216-217.

Supply—cont.

217] Eighth Resolution, £5,000, Supplementary Sum for the superintendence of Convict Establishments, 1278 : on Question, "That this House doth agree, &c.;" after short debate, Question put, and agreed to . Twentieth Resolution, £10,000, Dover Harbour, 1279
Moved, "That this House doth agree, &c.;" after debate, Question put; A. 61, N. 60 ; M. 1
. The Vote for Dover Harbour, Question, Mr. Rylands; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue July 31, 1834

REVENUE DEPARTMENTS, 1872-73.

Total of Vote.

COMMITTEE May 18—REPORT May 18 £
Vote I. For the Salaries and Expenses of the Customs Department ... 983,015
After short debate, Vote agreed to [215] 1818
Vote II. For the Salaries and Expenses of the Inland Revenue Department 1,678,236

COMMITTEE July 28—REPORT July 29

Vote III. For Salaries and Expenses of the Post Office Services, the expenses of Post Office Savings Banks, and of Government Annuities and Insurances, and of the Collection of the Post Office Revenue [217] 1110 2,745,342
After long debate, Vote agreed to

COMMITTEE June 27—REPORT June 30

Vote IV. For the Post Office Packet Service ... [215] 1500 1,105,348
After debate, Vote agreed to

[cont.]

Supply—cont.

Total of
Vote.
COMMITTEE July 28—REPORT July 29 £
Vote V. £679,000, For the Salaries and Expenses of the Post Office Telegraph Service ... 815,000
Resolutions reported July 29
Moved, That the said Resolutions be now read 2<sup>o</sup>; after long debate, Debate adjourned [217] 1292 Debate resumed July 30; after further long debate, Question put, and agreed to; Resolutions agreed to SUPPLEMENTARY, COMMITTEE July 28
Report July 29
5. Telegraph Extension Works . 43,000

Total Revenue Departments ... £7,369,941

COMMITTEE July 28—REPORT July 29

GREENWICH HOSPITAL AND SCHOOL. £
Advances during the year ending 31st March 1874 for defraying the expenses of Greenwich Hospital and School ... 142,901

COMMITTEE May 28—REPORT May 28

ALABAMA CLAIMS. £
To pay off and discharge the amounts awarded to the Government of the United States of America under the Treaty of Washington, 1871, in satisfaction of the Alabama Claims 3,200,000

After debate, Vote agreed to [216] 410

Resolution reported; Moved, "That the said Resolution be now read 2<sup>o</sup>;" after debate, Question put, and agreed to; Resolution agreed to, 456

Supreme Court of Judicature Bill [H.L.]
(The Lord Chancellor)

214] 1. Presented; read 1<sup>o</sup>, after short debate Feb 13, 1831 (No. 14)
. Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2<sup>o</sup>" Mar 11, 1714
Amendt. to leave out ("now,") and insert ("this day six months") (Lord Denman); after debate, on Question, That ("now,") &c.; resolved in the affirmative; Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>
215] Committee; Report, after short debate Mar 24, 6 (No. 45)
. Order for Committee (on re-comm.) April 1, 1891; after short debate, Order discharged; Bill referred to a Select Committee
And, on April 3, the Lords' following were named of the Committee:—L. Abp. Canterbury, Ld. Chancellor, Ld. President, Ld. Privy Seal, D. Bedford, M. Salisbury, E. Derby, E. Grey, E. Morley, V. Eversley, L. Clinton, L. Redesdale, L. Chelmsford, L. Lyveden, L. Westbury, L. Romilly, L. Penrhyn, L. Colonsay, L. Cairns, L. Hatherley, and L. Blackford
Report of Select Comm. * [No. 72]
Bill as amended by Select Comm. (No. 73)

[cont.]

Supreme Court of Judicature Bill—cont.

215] Committee May 1, 1258

PART I.

Constitution and Judges of Supreme Court
Clauses 1 and 2 (Constitution and Judges of Supreme Court) agreed to Clause 3 (Union of existing Courts in Supreme Court) agreed to Clause 4 (Division of Supreme Courts into High Court and Court of Appeal) agreed to Clause 5 (Constitution of High Court of Justice)
Amendt. moved, page 2, line 12, after ("be") to insert ("the Lord Chancellor") (The Lord Cairns); on Question? Cont. 67, Not-Cont. 49; M. 18; Amendt. agreed to Division List, Cont. and Not-Cont., 1282
Clause 6 (Constitution of Court of Appeal), 1283
. Moved to resolve, 1st. That one tribunal of ultimate appeal for disputed suits from the courts of all the three kingdoms is more advantageous than separate tribunals for such appeals (The Lord Redesdale) May 2, 1896;

[cont.]

SUP SUP { SESSION / 1878 } SUP SUP
214-215-216-217.

Supreme Court of Judicature Bill—cont.
 after short debate, on Question ? Cont. 18,
 Not-Conf. 88 ; M. 25
 215] Division List, Cont. and Not-Conf., 1408
 As amended on Re-comm. (No. 89)
 . Resolutions (The Lord Redesdale), 1408
 Report * May 2
 . Moved, "That the Bill be now read 3<sup>o</sup>"
 May 5, 1468
 Amendt. to leave out ("now,") and insert
 ("this day six months") (Lord Denman) ; on Question ? That ("now,") &c. ; resolved in the affirmative ; Bill read 3<sup>o</sup> (No. 89)
 Amendt. moved, Clause 20, page 9, line 26, after ("Privy Council") to insert ("Except when the Court of Appeal shall be of opinion that any Appeal ought to be re-heard, in which case the Court shall order such Appeal to be referred to the House of Lords") (The Lord Redesdale) ; Amendt. negatived
 Amendt. moved, Clause 21, lines 86 and 87, leave out ("except appeals from any Ecclesiastical Court and petitions relating thereto")
 (The Marquess of Salisbury) ; after debate,
 Amendt. withdrawn ; Bill passed
 Protests thereon—See Appendix
 c. Read 1<sup>o</sup> (Mr. Attorney General) May 7
 216] Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2<sup>o</sup>"
 June 9, 640 [Bill 154]
 Amendt. to leave out from "That," and add
 "it is inexpedient to abolish the jurisdiction of the House of Lords as an English Court of Final Appeal" (Mr. Charley) v. ; Question proposed, "That the words, &c." ; after debate, Moved, "That the debate be now adjourned" (Mr. Gladstone) ; after further short debate, Debate adjourned
 . Debate resumed June 12, 844 ; after long debate, Question put, and agreed to ; Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>
 . Order for Committee read ; Moved, "That Mr.
 Speaker do now leave the Chair" (*Mr.
 Gladstone*) June 30, 1861 ; after debate,
 Moved, "That the debate be now adjourned"
 (Mr. Hunt), 1877 ; after further short debate, Question put ; A. 170, N. 102 ; M. 22
 . Question again proposed, "That Mr. Speaker, &c." ; after further short debate, Question put, and agreed to ; Committee, 1884
 Clause 1 (Short title) agreed to Clause 2 (Commencement of Act), 1884
 Clause 3 (Union of existing Courts into one Supreme Court) agreed to Clause 4 (Division of Supreme Court into a Court of original and a Court of Appellate jurisdiction) agreed to Clause 5 (Constitution of High Court of Justice), 1888 ; Committee—R.P.
 . Committee July 1, 1823
 Clause 5 (Constitution of High Court of Justice)
 . Clause 6 (Constitution of Court of Appeal),
 1887 ; Committee—R.P.
 . Committee July 3, 1712
 Clause 6 (Constitution of Court of Appeal)
 Clause 7 (Vacancies by resignations of Judges and effect of vacancies generally) agreed to . Clause 8 (Qualifications of Judges. Not required to be Serjeants-at-Law), 1747

VOL. CCXVII. [THIRD SERIES.] [cont.

Supreme Court of Judicature Bill—cont.
 Clause 9 (Tenure of office of Judges, and oaths of office. Judges not to sit in the House of Commons) agreed to Clause 10 (Precedence of Judges) agreed to Clause 11 (Saving of rights and obligations of existing Judges) agreed to 216] Clause 12 (Provisions for extraordinary duties of Judges of the former Courts) Red ink clauses — Clause A (Salaries of future Judges) — Clause B (Retiring pensions of future Judges of High Court of Justice, and ordinary Judges of Court of Appeal) — Clause C (Salaries and pensions how to be paid), 1748
 PART II
 Jurisdiction and Law Clause 13 (Jurisdiction of High Court of Justice), 1748
 Clause 14 (Jurisdiction not transferred to High Court) agreed to Clause 15 (Jurisdiction transferred to Court of Appeal) agreed to Clause 16 (Appeals from High Court) agreed to Clause 17 (No appeal from High Court or Court of Appeal to House of Lords, or Juridical Committee), 1751 ; Committee—R.P.
 . Committee July 4, 1787
 Clause 18 (Power to transfer jurisdiction of Judicial Committee by Order in Council) Clause 19 (Transfer of pending business)
 agreed to
 Clause 20 (Rules as to exercise of jurisdiction)
 agreed to
 . Clause 21 (Law and equity to be concurrently administered), 1797
 . Clause 22 (Rules of Law upon certain points), 1797
 Clause 23 (Abolition of terms) agreed to
 . Clause 24 (Vacations), 1801 ; Committee—R.P.
 . Committee July 7, 1865
 Clause 24 (Vacations)
 Clause 25 (Sittings in Vacation), 1871
 Clause 26 (Jurisdiction of Judges of High Court on circuit), 1871 Clause 27 (Sittings for trial by jury in London and Middlesex), 1873 Clause 28 (Divisions of the High Court of Justice), 1874
 . Clause 29 (Power to alter division by Order in Council), 1878 Clause 30 (Rules of Court to provide for distribution of business) amended, and agreed to . Clause 31 (Assignment of certain business to particular Divisions of High Court subject to rules) postponed, 1885 ; Committee—R.P.
 217] i. Privilege—The Appellate Jurisdiction of this House, Observations, Earl Granville ;
 . Reply, Lord Cairns July 8, 1 ; Observations,
 Lord Cairns ; short debate thereon July 8, 10
 . e. Committee July 8, 39

PART III
 Sittings and Distribution of Business Clause 31 (Assignment of certain business to particular Divisions of High Court subject to Rules) postponed

SUP SUP { GENERAL INDEX }, SUP SUP
214—215—216—217.

Supreme Court of Judicature Bill—cont.

- Clause 32 (Option for any Plaintiff (subject to Rulee) to choose in what Division he will sue) agreed to
- Clause 33 (Power of transfer) agreed to
- Clause 34 (Sittings in London and Middlesex and on Circuits) agreed to
- Clause 35 (Rota of Judges for election petitions) agreed to
- 217] Clause 36 (Powers of one or more Judges not constituting a Divisional Court), 39
- Clause 37 (Divisional Courts of the High Court of Justice) agreed to
- Clause 38 (Divisional Courts for business of Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer Divisions) agreed to
- Clause 39 (Distribution of business among the Judges of the Chancery and Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Divisions of the High Court), 40
- Clause 40 (Divisional Courts for business of the Chancery Division) agreed to
- Clause 41 (Divisional Courts for business belonging to the Division) agreed to
- . Clause 42 (Appeals from Inferior Courts to be determined by Divisional Courts), 40
- Clause 43 (Cases and points may be reserved for or directed to be argued before Divisional Courts) agreed to
- . Clause 44 (Provision for Crown Cases reserved), 40
- . Clause 45 (Motions for new trials to be heard by Divisional Courts), 44
- . Clause 46 (What orders shall not be subject to appeal), 44
- Clause 47 (As to discharging orders made in Chambers) agreed to
- . Clause 48 (Provision for absence or vacancy in the office of a Judge), 45
- Clause 49 (Power of a single Judge in Court of Appeal) agreed to
- . Clause 50 (Divisional Courts of Court of Appeal), 45
- Clause 51 (Judges not to sit on appeal from their own judgments) agreed to
- . Clause 52 (Arrangements for business of Court of Appeal, and for hearing Appeals transferred from the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council), 51

PART IV.

Trial and Procedure

- Clause 53 (References and Assessors), 52; Committee—n.r.
- . Committee July 10, 173
- . Clause 54 (Power to direct trials before referees), 173
- Clause 55 (Power of Referees and effect of their findings)
- Clause 56 (Powers of Court with respect to proceedings before Referees) agreed to
- . Clause 57 (Her Majesty may establish District Registrars in the country for the Supreme Court), 181
- Clause 58 (Seals of District Registrars) agreed to
- Clause 59 (Powers of District Registrars) agreed to—Red ink clause—Clause D (Fees to be taken by District Registrars)
- . Clause 60 (Proceedings to be taken in District Registrars), 182

[cont.]

Supreme Court of Judicature Bill—cont.

- Clause 61 (Power for Court to remove proceedings from District Registrars) agreed to
- Clause 62 (Accounts and inquiries may be referred to District Registrars) agreed to
- 217] Clause 63 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 142. ss. 5, 7, 8, 10, to extend to actions in High Court), 186
- Clause 64 (Rules of Court may be made by Order in Council before commencement of the Act) agreed to
- Clause 65 (Rules in Schedule to regulate procedure till changed by other rules after commencement of Act) agreed to
- Clause 66 (Rules of Probate, Divorce, Admiralty, and Bankruptcy Courts to be Rules of the High Court) agreed to
- Clause 67 (Criminal procedure, subject to future Rules, to remain unaltered) agreed to
- Clause 68 (Act not to affect rules of evidence or juries) agreed to
- Clause 69 (Saving of existing procedure of Courts when not inconsistent with this Act or Rules) agreed to
- Clause 70 (Power to make and alter Rules after commencement of Act) agreed to
- Clause 71 (Councils of Judges to consider procedure and administration of Justice) agreed to
- Clause 72 (Acts of Parliament relating to former Courts to be read as applying to Courts under this Act) agreed to

PART V
Officers and Offices

- . Clause 73 (Transfer of existing staff of officers to Supreme Court), 186
- . Clause 74 (Officers of Courts of Pleas at Lancaster and Durham), 188
- . Clause 75 (Personal officers of future Judges), 190; Committee—n.p.
- . Committee July 11, 214
- . Clause 75 (Personal officers of future Judges), 214—Red ink clause—Clause E (Provisions as to officers paid out of fees)
- Clause 76 (Doubts as to the status of officers to be determined by Rule) agreed to
- Clause 77 (Powers of Commissioners to administer oaths) agreed to
- . Clause 78 (Official Referees to be appointed), 219
- . Clause 79 (Duties, appointment, and removal of officers of Supreme Court), 223—Red ink clause—Clause F (Salaries and pensions of officers)
- . Clause 80 (Patronage not otherwise provided for), 225
- Clause 81 (Solicitors and Attorneys) agreed to

PART VI
Jurisdiction of Inferior Courts

- Clause 82 (Power by Order in Council to confer jurisdiction on inferior Courts) agreed to
- Clause 83 (Powers of inferior Courts having Equity and Admiralty jurisdiction) agreed to
- Clause 84 (Counter-claims in inferior Courts, and transfers therefrom) agreed to
- Clause 85 (Rules of law to apply to inferior Courts) agreed to

[cont.]

SUP      SUP      SESSION 1873      SUP      SUP
214—215—216—217.

Supreme Court of Judicature Bill—cont.

PART VII.

Miscellaneous Provisions

- Clause 86 (Transfer of books and papers to Supreme Court) agreed to
- Clause 87 (Saving as to circuits, &c.) agreed to
- Clause 88 (Saving as to Lord Chancellor) agreed to
- Clause 89 (Saving as to Chancellor of Lancaster) agreed to
- Clause 90 (Saving as to Chancellor of the Exchequer and sheriffs) agreed to
- Clause 91 (Saving as to Lord Treasurer and office of the Receipt of Exchequer) agreed to
- Clause 92 (Provisions as to Great Seal being in commission) agreed to
- Clause 93 (Provision as to Commissions in Counties Palatine) agreed to
- 217] Clause 94 (Interpretation of terms), 226
- Postponed Clause 31 (Assignment of certain business to particular Divisions of High Court subject to Rules), 226; Committee—R.P.

Committee July 14

- New Clause, after Clause 12 (Pensions of Lord Chancellor), 321
  - Division List, Ayes and Noes, 331
- New Clause (Salaries of future judges), 333
- New Clause in lieu of red ink Clause B (Retiring pensions of future Judges of High Court of Justice, and ordinary Judges of Court of Appeal)
- New Clause (Power to Court of Chancery to direct action to be brought)
- New Clause in lieu of red ink Clause D (Fees to be taken by District Registrars)
- New Clause in lieu of red ink Clause E (Provisions as to officers paid out of fees)
- New Clause in lieu of red ink Clause F (Salaries and pensions of officers), 341

SCHEDULE.

- Section 1 (Form of action in High Court), 342
- Section 2 (Action to be commenced by writ), 344
- Section 30 (Mode of trying actions)
- Section 31 (Notice of mode of trial to be given), 344
- Preamble agreed to; Bill reported (No. 237)
- Moved, "That the Bill, as amended, be taken into Consideration upon Thursday"

Privilege—The Appellate Jurisdiction of the House of Lords, Explanation, Mr. Gladstone July 10, 154
Scotch and Irish Appeals, Observations, Mr. Bouvier; debate thereon July 14, 345; Observations, Mr. Gladstone July 15, 399

- After debate, Question put, and agreed to
- Moved, "That the Bill be now taken into Consideration" July 21, 669
- Amendt. to leave out "now taken into Consideration," and add "re-committed in respect of Clause 14 (Salaries of future Judges)" (Mr. Gregory) v.; Question proposed, "That the words, &c.;" after short debate, Question put, and agreed to
- Main Question put, and agreed to; Bill considered [Bill 237]
- Moved, "That the Bill be now read 3<sup>d</sup>" July 22, 785

Supreme Court of Judicature Bill—cont.

- Amendt. to leave out from "That," and add "in the opinion of this House, it is desirable to extend the jurisdiction of the new Supreme Court of Appeal to the whole of the United Kingdom" (Sir David Wedderburn) v.; Question proposed, "That the words, &c.;" after short debate, Amendt. withdrawn
- Main Question put, and agreed to; Bill read 3<sup>d</sup>. Commons Amendts. (No. 234)
- 217] Moved, "That the said Amendts. be now considered" (The Lord Chancellor) July 24, 866
- Moved, To leave out from ("That,") and insert ("As it is now admitted by the promoters of the Bill that there should be only one Court of Ultimate Appeal for the United Kingdom, and as it is uncertain whether any such Court can be newly constituted in England which will give the same satisfaction to Scotland and Ireland which it is admitted that this House has afforded, it is inexpedient, without allowing time for further inquiry, to pass a Bill which establishes a separate Court of Ultimate Appeal for England, and must therefore render a repeal of the settlement under the Acts of Union necessary, if the appeals from those countries are to be transferred to that Court, the formation of which will justify Scotland and Ireland desiring to have separate Courts of Ultimate Appeal in their own capitals if no longer allowed to come to this House; and it is therefore expedient that the consideration of the Amendmts made by the House of Commons be deferred for three months") (The Chairman of Committees); after debate, on Question, "That the words, &c.;" Cont. 61, Not-Cont. 34; M. 27

Division List, Cont. and Not-Cont., 891

- Resolved in the affirmative
- Original Motion agreed to; Commons Amendts. considered accordingly
- Several Amendts. disagreed to; some agreed to; some agreed to, with Amendts.
- A Committee appointed to draw up Reasons to be offered to the Commons for disagreeing to several of their Amendts.

Protest, 897

- Returned from the Commons with the Amendts. to which the Lords have disagreed not insisted on; and with the Amendts. made by the Lords to the Amendts. made by the Commons agreed to, with an Amendt.; and with consequential Amendts. to an Amendt. made by the Commons: The said Amendt. and consequential Amendts. to be considered on Thursday next July 29

- Commons Amendts. &c. considered; Commons Amendt. to Lords Amendts. to Commons Amendts. and Commons consequential Amendts. considered, and, after short debate, agreed to July 31, 1807

Commons and Lords Amendts. (No. 267)

Royal Assent August 5 [36 & 37 Vict. c. 66]

Parl. Papers—

LORDS—

|                                               |          |
|-----------------------------------------------|----------|
| Bill as presented . . . . .                   | [No. 14] |
| As amended on Report . . . . .                | [45]     |
| Report of Select Committee . . . . .          | [72]     |
| Bill as amended by Select Committee . . . . . | [73]     |
| As amended on Re-comm. . . . .                | [89]     |
| Commons Amendts. . . . .                      | [284]    |

SUP TAL { GENERAL INDEX } TAY THA
214-215-216-217.

Supreme Court of Judicature Bill—cont.

Commons—

- Bill from Lords . . . . . Bill 154
- As amended in Committee . . . . . Bill 237
- Commons and Lords Amendments . . . . . Bill 267
- Lords Reasons . . . . . Bill 267

Sweden—Coronation of the King

Question, Mr. Bates; Answer, Viscount Enfield May 28, [216] 368

SYNAN, Mr. E. J., Limerick Co.

General Valuation (Ireland), Leate, [214] 581;
2R. [215] 1687
Ireland—Shannon, Overflowing of the, Res. [214] 1589
Peace Preservation (Ireland), Comm. cl. 2, [216] 66; Proviso, 72
Post Office and Telegraph Departments—
Financial Irregularities, [216] 429
Union Rating (Ireland), 2R. [214] 768.
University Tests (Dublin) (No. 9), [215] 306, 309
University Tests (Dublin) (No. 8), 2R. [215] 768; Comm. 1627

TALBOT, Hon. Captain R. A. J., Stafford Bo.

Army—21st R. N. B. Fusiliers, [215] 1718
Army—Cavalry Force, Res. [216] 662
Metropolis—Thames Embankment, [216] 582

TALBOUR, Mr. J. G., Kent, W.

Army—Cavalry and Artillery Reserve, [214] 643
Army—Length of Service (India), Res. [214] 844
Education Department—New Code, 1878, [215] 348
Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment, Re-comm. cl. 20, [217] 795; cl. 23, 797; Consid. cl. 23, Amendt. 961
Endowed Schools Act (1869) Amendment, Comm. add. cl. [217] 952
Endowed Schools Commissioners—Emanuelt Hospital Scheme, Motion for an Address, [215] 1918, 1925
Endowed Schools Commissioners—Grey Coat Hospital, Westminster, Motion for an Address, [214] 179
Household Franchise (Counties), 2R. [217] 852
Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister, Comm. cl. 1, Amendt. [214] 575
Parks Regulation Act—Meetings in the Parks, Motion for an Address, [215] 288
Permissive Prohibitory Liquor, 2R. [215] 1826
Post Office Savings Banks—Increase of Staff, [217] 1529
Public Health, Comm. [217] 93
Railway Passengers Communication, [217] 1173
Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 3, [216] 1020; cl. 4, 1183; Consid. [217] 615
Register for Parliamentary and Municipal Electors, Re-comm. cl. 4, Motion for reporting Progress, [215] 798
Supply—Court of Chancery, [215] 1774

TAYLOR, Right Hon. Lt.-Colonel T. E., Dublin Co.

Board of Education (Ireland)—O'Keeffe, Rev. Mr., [215] 1779
General Valuation (Ireland), Comm. [216] 1337
Parliament—Order of Business, [216] 1311

TAYLOR, Mr. P. A., Leicester Bo.

Criminal Law—Halstead Magistrates—Mays, Samuel, Case of, [216] 1163
International Cock Fight, [217] 302, 1324
Shropshire Magistrates—Whitefoot, George, Case of, [215] 1298, 1763, 1767
Crown Private Estates, 2R. [217] 701
Duke of Edinburgh—The Queen's Message, [217] 1186
Duke of Edinburgh's Annuity, 2R. Amendt. [217] 1837
Expiring Laws Continuance, Comm. Amendt. [217] 1252
Parliament, Meeting of the House—Ash Wednesday, [214] 901
Spain, [215] 219
Spanish Republic, Recognition of the, [216] 837
Sunday Trading Prosecutions, [216] 1856, 1858

Taigmouth and Devonish Turnpike Trust

Question, Sir S. Northcote; Answer, Lord G. Cavendish July 8, [216] 1710

Telegraphs Bill

(Mr. Bonham-Carter, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Baxter)

- a. Resolution [July 22] reported, and agreed to; Bill ordered * July 23
- Read 1st * July 24 . . . . . [Bill 262]
- Read 2nd * July 28
- Committee; Report July 29, [217] 1245
- Considered * July 30
- Read 3rd * July 31
- Read 1st * (M. of Lansdowne) Aug 1st (No. 266)
- Read 2nd * ; Committee negatived August 3
- Read 3rd * August 4
- Royal Assent August 5 [36 & 37 Vict. c. 83]

TEMPLESTOWN, Viscount

Army—Officers of the—Abolition of Purchase, Address for a Royal Commission, [217] 640

Thames Embankment (Land) Bill

(Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Baxter)

- c. Ordered; read 1st * Feb 17 [Bill 65]
- Read 2nd *, and committed to the Select Committee to which may be referred the Charing Cross and Victoria Embankment Approach Bill Mar 20
- As amended by Select Comm. [Bill 152]
- Re-comm *; Report May 26
- Read 3rd * May 27
- Read 1st * (Marquess of Lansdowne) June 9
- Read 2nd * June 19 (No. 137)
- Bill reported and committed * June 27 (No. 179)
- Committee * July 1
- Report * July 3
- Read 3rd * July 4
- Royal Assent July 21 [36 & 37 Vict. c. 48]

THE TOR SESSION 1873 TO TRA
214-215-216-217.

Theatre Regulation Act—The Happy Land

Question, Sir Lawrence Palk; Answer, Mr. Bruce Mar 10, [214] 1811

Threshing Machines Bill
Formerly

Steam Threshing Machines Bill [H.L.]
(The Earl of Morton)

- i. Presented; read 1<sup>o</sup> July 14 (No. 210)
Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>, after short debate, July 18, [217] 601
Committee*; Report July 24 (No. 239)
Read 3<sup>o</sup> July 26
c. Read 1<sup>o</sup> July 28 [Bill 270]
Bill withdrawn* August 1

THYNNE, Lord H. F., Wiltshire, S.
Army—Autumn Manoeuvres—Compensation, [216] 1162
Army Estimates—Control Establishments, Wages, &c. [216] 1269
Turnpike Acts Continuance, &c. Comm. Motion for Adjournment, [217] 193

TIPPING, Mr. W., Stockport

Park Regulation Act—Meetings in the Parks, Motion for an Address, [215] 287
Railway and Canal Traffic, Lords' Amendts. [216] 1304

The Commutation Act—Market Gardens
Question, Mr. Clara Read; Answer, Mr. Bruce Feb 20, [214] 722

Tithe Commutation Act Amendment Bill
(Mr. Arthur P. Vivian, Mr. Bouverie, Sir John Lubbock, Mr. Magna)

- c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> Feb 25 [Bill 81]
Read 2<sup>o</sup>, and referred to a Select Committee May 8
And, on May 9, Committee nominated as follows:—Mr. Bouverie (Chairman); Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, Mr. Cross, Mr. Cubitt, Sir George Grey, Mr. Gathorne Hardy, Mr. Beresford Hope, Sir Harcourt Johnstone, Mr. Magna, Mr. Mowbray, Mr. Stone, Mr. John Talbot, Mr. Arthur P. Vivian, Mr. Whitbread, and Mr. Winterbotham
Report of Select Comm. (No. 250)
Bill as amended [Bill 198]
Committee*; Report June 16
Read 3<sup>o</sup> June 20
l. Read 1<sup>o</sup> (Karl Fortescue) June 23 (No. 171)
Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>, after short debate July 1, [216] 1607
Committee*; Report July 10
Read 3<sup>o</sup> July 14
Royal Assent July 21 [36 & 37 Vict. c. 42]

TORR, Mr. J., Liverpool

Post Office—Registered Letters, [214] 1812
Supreme Court of Judicature, Comm. cl. 50, [217] 185
Ways and Means, Report, [215] 1327

TORRENS, Sir R. R., Cambridge Bo.
Colonies, The, Motion for a Committee, [214] 1122
Record of Title (Ireland) Act Amendment, Leave, [214] 968
Windward Islands—Ecclesiastical Policy, Res. [217] 446

TORRENS, Mr. W. T. M., Finsbury
Army—India, Service in—Limitation of Age, [217] 209
East India Revenue Accounts, Comm. [217] 1455
Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment, 2R. Previous Question moved, [217] 518, 542; Consid. cl. 28, 261
Endowed Schools Act (1869) Amendment, Comm. cl. 4, Amendt. [217] 934; cl. 16, Amendt. 947, 948
India—Banda and Kirkee Prize Money, [215] 1485
Metropolis Buildings Act Amendment, 2R. [215] 508
Post Office—Telegraph Department—Herring's Telegraph Printing Instrument, [217] 1883
Selby, Mr., Disappearance of, [214] 1615
Supply—New Palace at Westminster, [217] 1128
Ways and Means, Report, [215] 1068

TRAKE, Hon. C. R. D. HANBURY, Montgomery, &c.

Merchandise Marine—Danger Signals, [216] 723
Merchant Shipping Acts Amendment, Comm. cl. 14, Amendt. [217] 1024; cl. 17, Amendt. 1028
Navy—Navigation, System of, [215] 348
Retirement, [215] 1298
Navy (Promotion and Retirement), Motion for a Committee, [216] 771
Navy Estimates—Admiralty Office, [216] 106, 119

Trade Marks Registration Bill
Formerly

Registration of Trade Marks Bill
(Mr. Arthur Peel, Mr. Chichester Fortescue)
a. Considered in Committee; Bill ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> April 21 [Bill 188]
Bill withdrawn* July 7

Trades Unions—The Amalgamated Society of Engineers

Question, Mr. Headlam; Answer, The Attorney General Mar 27, [215] 220

Tramway Bills

Question, Mr. Elykin; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue Feb 28, [214] 1007

Tramways Provisional Orders Confirmation Bill [H.L.], (The Lord President)

- i. Presented; read 1<sup>o</sup> May 5 (No. 93)
Read 2<sup>o</sup> May 13
Committee* May 26
Report May 27
Read 3<sup>o</sup> June 9

[cont.]

TRA      TRE      { G E N E R A L   I N D E X }      TRE      TRE
 214—215—216—217.

- Tramways Provisional Orders Confirmation Bill*
 —cont.
 c. Read 1<sup>o</sup> June 12                          [Bill 192]
 Read 2<sup>o</sup> June 16
 Committee*; Report June 19
 Referred to a Select Committee June 23
 Bill as amended                          [Bill 218]
 Report* June 27
 Re-comm.*; Committee; Report July 3
 Considered* July 8
 Read 3<sup>o</sup> July 9
 l. Royal Assent July 28 [36 & 37 Vict. c. cxvii]

Treasury Chest Fund Bill

- (Mr. William Henry Gladstone, Mr. Baxter)
 c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> July 10                          [Bill 233]
 Read 2<sup>o</sup> July 14
 Committee*; Report July 15
 Read 3<sup>o</sup> July 16
 l. Read 1<sup>o</sup> (Earl Granville) July 17 (No. 217)
 Read 2<sup>o</sup> July 18
 Committee*; Report July 24
 Read 3<sup>o</sup> July 25
 Royal Assent July 28 [36 & 37 Vict. c. 56]

Treaties of Arbitration

Moved, "That an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty, praying that all Treaties or Conventions by which disputed questions between Great Britain and a foreign power are referred to Arbitration, may be laid upon the Table of both Houses of Parliament six weeks before they are definitively ratified" (Lord Campbell) Mar 3, [214] 1159; after debate, on Question 3 resolved in the negative
 [See title — International Law — Arbitration]

Treaties with Foreign Powers

Observations, Mr. Rylands; Reply, Mr. Gladstone; long debate thereon Feb 14, [214] 448
 Moved, "That, in the opinion of this House, all Treaties with Foreign Powers ought to be made conditionally on the approval of Parliament, as was done in the case of the Commercial Treaty with France in 1860" (Mr. Sinclair Aytoun) Mar 4, 1309; after debate, Question put, and negatived

Treaty of Washington—The Geneva Arbitration

Board of Assessors—Claim for Aves Island, Question, Viscount Sandon; Answer, Viscount Enfield July 28, [217] 1092
Letter of Mr. Fish, Question, Mr. Vernon Harcourt; Answer, Mr. Gladstone May 20, [216] 170
 The "Alabama"—Compensation for British Property, Questions, Sir Stafford Northcote, Sir James Elphinstone; Answers, Viscount Enfield May 23, [216] 356; Questions, Sir James Elphinstone, Mr. Anderson; Answers, Mr. Gladstone, Viscount Enfield May 26, 433

The Geneva Award—Judgments of the Arbitrators, Question, Mr. Staveley Hill; Answer, Mr. Gladstone Feb 7, [214] 152;—Amount of "Alabama Claims," Question, Mr. Goldsmid; Answer, Mr. Gladstone Mar 8, 1183

[cont.]

Treaty of Washington—The Geneva Arbitration
 —cont.

The San Juan Award—Rights of British Subjects, Question, Mr. Corrance; Answer, Mr. Gladstone Feb 18, [214] 597;—Boundary Line, Question, Observations, The Earl of Lauderdale; Reply, Earl Granville Feb 11, 276; Observations, Lord George Hamilton; Reply, Viscount Enfield; debate thereon May 2, [215] 1426
 [See title — United States]

Testimonial to the Arbitrators, Question, Mr. Cavendish Bentinck; Answer, Mr. Gladstone Mar 10, [214] 1613; Questions, Sir Thomas Bateson, Colonel Stuart Knox; Answers, Mr. Gladstone May 27, [216] 590; Question, Sir Thomas Bateson; Answer, Mr. Gladstone June 30, 1556; Question, Mr. Cavendish Bentinck; Answer, Mr. Gladstone July 24, [217] 907
 Parl. Papers—

Case of the "Alabama" . . . . No. 53
 Estimate of Sam . . . . No. 151
 Papers relating to the Geneva Arbitration . . . . [688] [689]
 Papers relating to the San Juan Award [690, 691, 692, 693, 694, 695, 696, 735]

TRELAWNY, Sir J. G. S., Cornwall, E.
Contagious Diseases Acts Repeal, 2R. [216] 227, 265
 Prison Ministers Committee, 1870, [215] 298
 Women's Disabilities, 2R. [215] 1256.

TRENCH, Hon. Major W. Le Poer, Galway

Army—Indian Officers—Siege of Lucknow, [216] 1417
 India—Scientific Corps, Officers of the, [216] 270, 271, 354
 Ireland—Questions, &c.
 Drainage of Land, [216] 1498, 1559
 Land Act, [217] 605
 Post Office—Dublin Letter Carriers, [217] 1528
 Shannon River, [215] 348; [217] 154, 1433, 1434, 1435, 1528, 1529
 Ireland—Civil Servants, Res. [216] 1827
 Ireland—Shannon, Overflowing of the, Res. [214] 1574
 University Education (Ireland), 2R. Amendt. [214] 1806

TREVELYAN, Mr. G. O., Hawick, &c.
 Army—Sandhurst, Insubordination at, [215] 901
 Army—Honorary Colonels, Res. [215] 1591, 1607
 Conveyancing (Scotland), Comm. ol. 41, Amendt. [216] 511
 Customs Department (Salaries), [215] 1788
 Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment, 2R. [217] 585
 Household Franchise (Counties), 2R. [217] 806, 811, 832, 833, 919
 India—Officering of the Indian Army, Motion for an Address, [217] 1037
 Parliamentary Elections (Expenses), 2R. [216] 1128
 Poor Law (Scotland), 2R. [214] 991, 996
 Supply—Household of the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, Amendt. [215] 1466

TRI TUR { SESSION 1873 } TUR UNI
214-215-216-217.

Trial of Election Petitions—Canvassing by Judges

Question, Mr. Callan; Answer, The Attorney General July 14, [217] 319

Tribunals of Commerce Bill (Mr. Whitewell, Mr. Norwood, Mr. Birley, Mr. Hick)

c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> Feb 13 [Bill 57]
Question, Mr. W. H. Smith; Answer, The Attorney General Feb 14, [214] 439
Bill withdrawn* July 29

Turkey

Alleged Outbreak of Moslem Fanaticism in Bosnia, Question, Mr. A. Johnston; Answer, Viscount Enfield July 4, [216] 1786

Brigandage, Question, Mr. Ion Hamilton; Answer, Viscount Enfield July 3, [216] 1710

Courts of Justice, Question, Sir Dominic Corrigan; Answer, Viscount Enfield July 24, [217] 900

Turks and Caicos Islands Bill [H.L.]
(The Earl of Kimberley)

i. Presented; read 1<sup>o</sup> Feb 7 (No. 2)
Read 2<sup>o</sup> Feb 13
Committee; Report, after short debate Feb 14, [214] 436
Read 3<sup>o</sup> Feb 17
c. Read 1<sup>o</sup>* (Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen) Mar 8
Read 2<sup>o</sup>* Mar 10 [Bill 87]
Committee*; Report Mar 27
Considered* Mar 28
Read 3<sup>o</sup>* Mar 31
l. Royal Assent April 4 [36 Vict. c. 6]

Turnpike Acts Continuance

Select Committee appointed, "to inquire into the Eleventh Schedule of 'The Annual Turnpike Acts Continuance Act, 1872'" (Mr. Hibbert) Feb 24

And, on Feb 27, Committee nominated as follows:—Lord George Cavendish (Chairman), Sir Robert Anstruther, Mr. Beach, Mr. Wentworth Beaumont, Mr. Wilbraham Egerton, Sir John St. Aubyn, and Mr. Welby Report—(Parl. P. No. 215)

Turnpike Acts Continuance, &c. Bill
(Mr. Hibbert, Mr. Stansfeld)

c. Ordered* June 18
Read 1<sup>o</sup>* June 19 [Bill 199]
216] Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2<sup>o</sup>" July 1, 1842; Moved, "That the Debate be now adjourned" (Mr. Robert Fowler); Question put; A. 142, N. 218; M. 76
Original Question put, and agreed to; Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>
Order for Committee read; Moved, "That it be an instruction to the Committee to make provision for rendering compulsory in England and Wales the Highway Acts 1862 and 1864" (Lord George Cavendish) July 3, 1756; after short debate, Moved, "That the Debate be now adjourned" (Colonel Barttelot); debate adjourned

Turnpike Acts Continuance, &c. Bill—cont.

217] Debate resumed July 10, 191

After short debate, Moved, "That the Debate be now adjourned" (Lord Henry Thynne); after further short debate, Question put; A. 58, N. 115; M. 57

Original Question again proposed; Moved, "That this House do now adjourn" (Mr. Clare Read); after short debate, Question put; A. 44, N. 116; M. 72

Original Question again proposed; Moved, "That the Debate be now adjourned" (Colonel Parker); Question put; A. 46, N. 104; M. 58

Original Question again proposed; Moved, "That this House do now adjourn" (Mr. Joshua Fielden); Question put; A. 44, N. 99; M. 55

Original Question again proposed; Moved, "That the Debate be now adjourned" (Colonel Barttelot); Question put; A. 40, N. 94; M. 54

Original Question again proposed; Moved, "That this House do now adjourn;" Question put; A. 41, N. 91; M. 50

Original Question again proposed; Moved, "That the Debate be now adjourned" (Mr. Frederick Walpole); Question put, and agreed to; Debate adjourned at half-past Three A.M.

• Question, Lord George Cavendish; Answer, Mr. Hibbert July 14, 320

• Debate resumed July 14, 382; Motion withdrawn; Committee; Report

Considered* July 15

Read 3<sup>o</sup>* July 16

l. Read 1<sup>o</sup>* (Earl of Morley) July 17 (No. 223)

Read 2<sup>o</sup>* July 24

Committee* July 25

Report* July 28 (No. 245)

Read 3<sup>o</sup>* July 29

Royal Assent August 5 [36 & 37 Vict. c. 90]

Ulster Tenant Right Bill

(Mr. Butt, Mr. Cullan, Mr. P. J. Smyth)

c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup>* July 7 [Bill 225]
2R. [Dropped]

Union of Benefices Bill

(Mr. Spencer Walpole, Viscount Sandon, Mr. William Henry Smith, Mr. Andrew Johnston)

c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> Feb 7 [Bill 28]
Question, Mr. Crawford; Answer, Mr. Spencer Walpole Feb 11, [214] 282

Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>, after short debate, and committed to a Select Committee Feb 14, 507

And, on Feb 25, Committee nominated as follows:—Mr. Attorney General, Mr. Cavendish Bentinck, Mr. Crawford, Mr. Cross, Mr. Cubitt, Mr. Beresford Hope, Sir James Lawrence, Mr. Mowbray, Mr. Powell, Mr. Reed, Mr. Smith, Mr. Stone, Mr. Spencer Walpole, Mr. Walter, and Mr. Whitbread Bill as amended [Bill 92]

Bill reported and re-committed* Mar 20
Order for Committee read; Moved, "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair"

April 7; debate adjourned

Bill withdrawn July 21, [217] 659

cont.

UNI UNI { GENERAL INDEX } UNI UNI
214—215—216—217.

Union Rating (Ireland) Bill

- (Mr. M'Mahon, Mr. Downing, Mr. Stacpoole)
 c. Ordered ; read 1<sup>o</sup> Feb 7 [Bill 23]
 Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2<sup>o</sup>"
 Feb 20, [214] 753
 Amendt. to leave out "now," and add "upon this day six months" (Sir George Colthurst) : after debate, Question put, "That 'now,' &c." A. 77, N. 61 ; M. 16
 Main Question put, and agreed to ; Bill read 2<sup>o</sup> Question, Mr. Bruen ; Answer, Mr. M'Mahon July 3, [216] 1711
 Bill withdrawn * July 17

United States

- Boundary of Alaska and British North America
 —San Juan Water Boundary, Question, Mr. Eastwick ; Answer, Viscount Enfield May 5, [215] 1487 ; Questions, Observations, The Earl of Lauderdale ; Reply, Earl Granville June 19, [216] 1167
British Vessels in American Waters, Question, Mr. C. Dalrymple ; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue Mar 10, [214] 1616
Consular Convention—Offences on the High Seas, Question, Mr. Gourley ; Answer, Viscount Enfield Feb 27, [214] 1032 ; Question, Lord Monson ; Answer, Earl Granville August 4, [217] 1512
Payment of the Geneva Award, Question, Mr. Vernon Harcourt ; Answer, Mr. Gladstone Mar 24, [215] 17
 [See title—Treaty of Washington]

Universities, The—College Statutes, Alteration of

- Question, The Marquess of Salisbury ; Answer, The Marquess of Ripon ; short debate thereon May 16, [216] 10

University Education (Ireland) Bill

QUESTIONS

- Charters of Dublin University and Trinity College, Question, Sir Frederick W. Heygate ; Answer, Mr. Gladstone Feb 17, [214] 545

- The University Council, Question, Mr. Ashton Cross ; Answer, Mr. Gladstone Feb 18, [214] 899 ; Questions, Lord Robert Montagu ; Answers, Mr. Gladstone Feb 24, 892
Petition from Magee College, Question, Lord Robert Montagu ; Answer, Mr. Gladstone Feb 25, [214] 898

- Memorial of the Catholic Union, Questions, Mr. Horsman ; Answers, Mr. Gladstone Feb 25, [214] 899

- Affiliated Institutions, Questions, Mr. Gordon, Lord Robert Montagu, Mr. C. E. Lewis ; Answers, Mr. Gladstone Feb 27, [214] 1038

- Notice of Motion for a Royal Commission, Mr. Mitchell Henry Mar 3, [214] 1181

- Notice, Lord George Hamilton Mar 6, [214] 1889

- Proposed Select Committee, Question, Mr. Mitchell Henry ; Answer, Mr. Dodson Mar 6, [214] 1396

- Parliamentary Arrangements, Question, Mr. P. J. Smyth ; Answer, Mr. Bourke ; debate thereon Mar 10, [214] 1615

- Clause 11 (Degrees), Question, Mr. Macfie ; Answer, Mr. Gladstone Mar 11, [214] 1789

University Education (Ireland) Bill

- (Mr. Gladstone, The Marquess of Hartington)
 c. Considered in Committee ; Bill ordered ; read 1<sup>o</sup> Feb 18, 878 [Bill 65]
 Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2<sup>o</sup>" Mar 3, 1186
 Amendt. to leave out from "That," and add "this House, while ready to assist Her Majesty's Government in passing a measure for the advancement of learning in Ireland," regrets that Her Majesty's Government, previously to inviting the House to read this Bill a second time, have not felt it to be their duty to state to the House the names of the twenty-eight persons who it is proposed shall at first constitute the ordinary members of the Council" (Mr. Bourke) v. ; Question proposed, "That the words, &c.," after long debate, Moved, "That the Debate be now adjourned" (Mr. Horsman) ; Debate adjourned . Debate resumed Mar 6, 1888 ; after long debate, Moved, "That the Debate be now adjourned" (Mr. Vernon Harcourt) ; Debate further adjourned
 . Debate resumed Mar 10, 1887 ; after long debate, Moved, "That the Debate be now adjourned" (Colonel Wilson Patten) ; after further short debate, Debate further adjourned
 . Debate resumed Mar 11, 1887 ; after long debate, Question, "That the words, &c.," put, and agreed to ; main Question put ; A. 284, N. 287 ; M. 3
 Division List, Ayes and Noes, 1884
 Moved, "That the House do now adjourn" (Mr. Gladstone) ; Motion agreed to [See Parliament—Resignation of Ministers]

University Fellowships (Compensation) Bill

- c. Motion for Leave (Mr. Auberion Herbert) Mar 21, [214] 2068 ; Motion made, and Question, "That the Debate be now adjourned" (Mr. Dillwyn), put, and negatived ; original Motion withdrawn

University Fellowships (Compensation) Bill

- c. Motion for Leave (Mr. Auberion Herbert) April 22, [215] 801 ; after short debate, Question put ; A. 81, N. 107 ; M. 26

University Tests (Dublin) Bill

- (Mr. Fawcett, Dr. Lyon Playfair, Mr. Plunket)
 c. Considered in Committee ; Bill ordered ; read 1<sup>o</sup>, after short debate Feb 7, [214] 177 [Bill 12]

- Question, Mr. Dixon ; Answer, Mr. Fawcett Mar 20, 1886

- Material Alterations in Bill—Rules of the House, Question, Observations, Mr. Callan ; Reply, Mr. Fawcett Mar 28, [215] 300

- Mr. Speaker declares the Rules of the House in respect of material alteration of a Bill after presentation, 303

- Question, "That the Order of the Day for the Second Reading of the Bill on Wednesday next be read and discharged," put, and agreed to ; Order read, and discharged ; Bill withdrawn

[cont.]

UNI VAC { SESSION 1873 } VAG VEN
 214—215—216—217.

University Tests (Dublin) Bill—cont.

Moved, "That leave be given to present another Bill instead thereof" (Mr. Fawcett) ; after short debate, Moved, "That the debate be now adjourned" (Mr. Downing) ; after further short debate, Motion put, and negatived ; original Question put, and agreed to

University Tests (Dublin) No 2) Bill

c. Read 1<sup>o</sup> Mar 28 [Bill 109]
 Bill withdrawn April 2

University Tests (Dublin) (No. 3) Bill

(Mr. Fawcett, Dr. Lyon Playfair, Mr. Plunket, Viscount Crichton)

215] c. Moved, "That this House will immediately resolve itself into a Committee to consider the abolition of Tests in Trinity College and the University of Dublin" (Mr. Fawcett) April 2, 505 ; Motion agreed to

Moved, "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair" (Mr. Fawcett) ; Debate adjourned

. Debate resumed April 3, 508 ; Question put, and agreed to ; Matter considered in Committee ; Resolution agreed to ; Bill ordered ; read 1<sup>o</sup> [Bill 124]

Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2<sup>o</sup>" April 21, 727

. Amendt. to leave out from "That," and add "this House fully recognises the importance of an early settlement of the question of University Education in Ireland, but is of opinion that such legislation could be more satisfactorily entered upon after the House has been put into possession of full information as to the opinions and wishes of the several Academic Bodies existing in Ireland, and of the Irish people generally, especially of the classes practically interested in the question, by means of a Royal Commission, with instructions to take evidence and report before the opening of the next Session of Parliament" (Mr. Mitchell Henry) v. 732 ; Question proposed, "That the words, &c.," after debate, Amendt. withdrawn ; main Question put, and agreed to ; Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>

. Order for Committee read May 5, 1820

Moved, "That it be an Instruction to the Committee, that they have power to provide for the establishment, as a College of the University of Dublin, of the institution known as the Catholic University" (Mr. P. J. Smyth) ; after debate, Question put ; A. 9, N. 85 ; M. 19 ; Committee ; Report

Considered May 7

Read 3<sup>o</sup> May 8

l. Read 1<sup>o</sup> (Lord Cairns) May 9 (No. 103)

. Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>, after long debate May 13, 1849

Committee ; Report May 15

Read 3<sup>o</sup> May 16

Royal Assent May 26 [36 Vict. c. 21]

Vagrants Law Amendment Bill

(Mr. Pease, Mr. Wharton)

c. Ordered ; read 1<sup>o</sup> April 2 [Bill 120]

Read 2<sup>o</sup> April 7

Committee ; Report April 30 [Bill 143]

Re-comm. ; Report May 5

Read 3<sup>o</sup> May 7

l. Read 1<sup>o</sup> (Earl of Faversham) May 8 (No. 98)

Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>, after short debate May 15, [215]

2011

Committee May 26, [216] 426

(No. 130)

Read 3<sup>o</sup> June 19

Royal Assent July 7 [36 & 37 Vict. c. 38]

Valuation Bill

(Mr. Stansfeld, Mr. Secretary Bruce, Mr. Goschen, Mr. Bibbert) [Bill 147]

c. Motion for Leave (Mr. Stansfeld) May 5, [215]

1509 ; Bill ordered, after debate ; read 1<sup>o</sup>

Bill read 2<sup>o</sup>, after short debate May 22, [216] 318

Question, Mr. Ashton Cross ; Answer, Mr.

Stansfeld July 18, [217] 607

Bill withdrawn July 18

Valuation Department (Ireland)

Moved, "That the present constitution of the Irish Valuation Department is unsatisfactory, and that it is desirable that an experienced and competent officer be placed at its head" (The O'Conor Don) April 1, [215] 422 : after debate, Question put, and negatived

VANCE, Mr. J., Armagh City

Appropriation of Seats (Cashel and Sligo),

Leave, [217] 963

Coroners (Ireland), [215] 1490

Counties (Ireland)—Lord Lieutenants and

Magistrates, Motion for a Return, [217] 1569

Election of Representative Peers (Scotland

and Ireland), [215] 313

India—Regulations for European Officers—

Prize, [217] 494

Irish Bills, [214] 1182

Juries (Ireland) Act, [215] 9

Land Act (Ireland)—Chairmen of Counties,

[217] 496

Parliament—Public Business, [216] 1250 ; [217]

400

Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. add. cl.

[216] 1432

Rating Liability (Ireland), 2R. [217] 962

Supply—Legal Charges (Ireland), [217] 1146

Metropolitan Police of Dublin, [217] 1138

Valuation Department (Ireland), Res. [215] 432

VANDELEUR, Colonel C. M., Clare Co.
 Ireland—Shaanon, Overflowing of the, Res.

[214] 1891

Venus, Transit of, in 1874

Question Sir John Lubbock ; Answer, Mr.

Goschen Mar 25, [215] 110 ; Question, Sir

David Wedderburn ; Answer, Mr. Goschen

June 19, [216] 1171

Vaccination Act (1871) — Bridgwater Board of Guardians

Question, Sir Michael Hicks-Beach ; Answer, Mr. Hibbert June 17, [216] 1063

VER WAL { GENERAL INDEX } WAL WAY
214—215—216—217.

- VERNEY, Sir H., *Buckingham Bo.
 Army—Military Centres, Oxford, Motion for a Committee, [216] 378, 390
 Army Estimates—Administration of the Army, [216] 1288
     Clothing Establishments, &c. [216] 1282
     Military Education, [216] 1284, 1285
     Miscellaneous Services, [216] 1287
     Works, Buildings, &c. [216] 1280
 Canada Loan Guarantee, 2R. [216] 1036, 1326
 Central Asia—Afghanistan, [216] 1311
- Vexatious Objections (Borough Registration) Bill
 (Mr. Railbone, Mr. Whitbread, Mr. Massey)
 c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> * Feb 10 [Bill 37]
 Read 2<sup>o</sup> Feb 18, [214] 605
 Bill withdrawn * July 28
- Victoria Embankment (Somerset House) Bill (Mr. Ayrton, Mr. Baxter)
 c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> * Feb 10 [Bill 41]
 Read 2<sup>o</sup> Feb 24
 Committee *; Report Feb 25
 Read 3<sup>o</sup> * Feb 26
 l. Read 1<sup>o</sup> * (The Duke of St. Albans) Feb 27
 Read 2<sup>o</sup> Mar 10 (No. 28)
 Committee on Mar 13
 Report * Mar 17
 Committee *; Report Mar 25
 Read 3<sup>o</sup> * Mar 27
 Royal Assent Mar 29 [36 Vict. c. 4]
- VILLIERS-STUART, Mr. H. W., *Waterford Co.
 Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment, 3R. [217] 1012
- VIVIAN, Lord
 Army—Candidates for Commissions, [216] 1217, 1219, 1222
     Education of Officers, [216] 1338
 Army Regulation Act—Abolition of Purchase, [214] 1599
 Navy—Pebble Powder—Review at Portsmouth, [217] 142, 964
 Pollution of Rivers, 2R. [216] 5
- VIVIAN, Mr. A. P., *Cornwall, W.
 Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 3, [216] 1069
- VIVIAN, Mr. H. Hussey, *Glamorganshire
 Coal, Scarcity of, Motion for a Committee, [214] 822
 Currency—Bank Act, Res. [215] 152
 Mercantile Marine—Cardiff Magistrates—Mr. Plimsoll, [215] 1682
 Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 3, [216] 1074, 1078, 1079; add. cl. Amendt. 1434
- WAIT, Mr. W. K., *Gloucester
 Metropolis—New Courts of Justice—Revised Designs, [217] 398, 399
- WALKER, Major G. G., *Dumfriesshire
 Army Estimates—Land Forces, [214] 1073
- WALPOLE, Right Hon. Spencer H., *Cambridge University
 Board of Education (Ireland)—O'Keeffe, Rev. Mr. [216] 102
 British Museum—Duplicate Books, [217] 1178
 Customs Outport Clerks, Res. Report, [217] 1244
 Endowed Schools Commissioners—Emanuel Hospital Scheme, Motion for an Address, [215] 1988
 Parliament—Privilege—Appellate Jurisdiction of the House of Lords, [217] 381
 Parliament—Business of the House—(Tuesday Sittings), Res. [214] 988
 Register for Parliamentary and Municipal Electors, Re-comm. cl. 13, [215] 1692
 Supply—British Museum, [215] 1794, 1795
 Post Office Packet Service, [216] 1502
 Supreme Court of Judicature, 2R. [216] 686; Comm. cl. 6, 1698, 1688; cl. 6, 1640, 1740; cl. 18, 1792
 Union of Benefices, [214] 282; 2R. 507; Withdrawal of Bill, [217] 659
- WALSH, Hon. A., *Radnorshire
 Salmon Fisheries, 2R. [214] 1375; Comm. cl. 19, Amendt. [217] 384
 Shah of Persia, Visit of—Windsor Park Review, [216] 997
- WALTER, Mr. J., *Berkshire
 Juries, Comm. cl. 59, [216] 1816
 Railway and Canal Traffic, 2R. [214] 1048
- WATNEY, Mr. J., *Surrey, E.
 Army—War Office—Chief Clerk, Military Department, [217] 1092
 Civil Service Pensions, [217] 1530, 1531;—Freeth, Mr., Case of, 1581, 1582
 Metropolis—Hatcham, Small Pox Hospital at, [217] 659
 Navy—Royal Marines, [217] 1322
 Post Office Savings Banks—Investment of Deposits, [215] 1718
 Railways—Communication between Passengers and Guards, [215] 1711
 Supply—Convict Establishments, [217] 1135
- WAVENY, Lord
 Army—Control Department, Motion for Papers, [216] 1223
- WAYS AND MEANS
MISCELLANEOUS QUESTIONS
 Customs—Tobacco—(Unpaid Duties), Question, Mr. Barnett; Answer, Mr. Baxter May 8, [215] 1677
Inland Revenue—Duty on Volunteer Prizes, Question, Mr. Gourley; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer June 19, [216] 1173
Inland Revenue—Income Tax Appeals, Question, Mr. Cadogan; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer Feb 17, [214] 540
Income Tax Appeals, Question, Mr. Cadogan; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer Feb 17, [214] 540
The Dog Licence, Question, Mr. Ridley; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer April 3, [215] 525

[cont.]

WAY      WAY      { SESSION 1873 }      WAY      WAY
 214—215—216—217.

WAYS AND MEANS—cont.

Post Office Revenues, Question, Mr. White ;
 Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer
 July 10, [217] 153

Estimates and Revenue, Question, Mr. White ;
 Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer
 August 4, [217] 1521

Sugar Duties—International Conference, 1864,
 Question, Mr. Grieve ; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer Mar 31, [215] 347 ;
 April 3, 527 ; Questions, Mr. Stephen Cave,
 Mr. J. B. Smith ; Answers, The Chancellor of the Exchequer May 9, 1717

*Committee of Ways and Means—The Sugar
 Duties Resolutions*, Questions, Mr. Hunt ;
 Answers, Mr. Baxter, Mr. Gladstone April 22,
 [215] 801 Memorials from Trade (P.P. 125)

Revenue and Expenditure—Weekly Returns,
 Question, Sir George Balfour ; Answer, Mr.
 Baxter July 14, [217] 312

WAYS AND MEANS

[215] Considered in Committee April 7, 654 —
 Financial Statement of the Chancellor of the Exchequer on moving the First Resolution,
 "That, towards raising the Supply granted to Her Majesty, there shall be charged, collected, and paid for one year, commencing on the sixth day of April, one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, for and in respect of all Property, Profits, and Gains mentioned or described as chargeable in the Act passed in the sixteenth and seventeenth years of Her Majesty's reign, chapter thirty-four, for granting to Her Majesty Duties on Profits arising from Property, Professions, Trades, and Offices, the following Rates and Duties (that is to say) :

For every Twenty Shillings of the annual value or amount of all such Property, Profits, and Gains (except those chargeable under Schedule (B) of the said Act), the Rate or Duty of Three Pence ;

And for and in respect of the occupation of Lands, Tenements, Hereditaments, and Heritages chargeable under Schedule (B)
 of the said Act,

For every Twenty Shillings of the annual value thereof;

In England, the Rate or Duty of One Penny Halfpenny ; and

In Scotland and Ireland respectively, the Rate or Duty of One Penny Farthing ;

Subject to the provisions contained in section twelve of the Act of thirty-fifth and thirty-sixth Victoria, chapter twenty, for the exemption of Persons whose whole Income from every source is under One Hundred Pounds a-year, and relief of those whose Income is under Three Hundred Pounds a-year"

After long debate, Resolution agreed to ; other Resolutions moved, and agreed to

Resolutions reported April 24, 905

Moved, "That the Resolutions be now read a second time"

Amendt. to leave out from "That," and add
 in the opinion of this House, the Brewers' Licence Duty is unfair and oppressive in its operation, and should have been considered by the Government in the remission of Taxation" (Sir Henry Selwin-Ibbetson) v. ; Ques-

[cont.]

WAYS AND MEANS—cont.

tion proposed, "That the words &c. ;" after debate, Amendt. withdrawn ; original Question put, and agreed to

First Resolution (Income and Property Tax)
 agreed to

Second, Third, and Fourth Resolutions (Sugar Duties) read a second time, and re-committed

Fifth Resolution (Tea Duty) and Sixth Resolution (£1,600,000 Exchequer Bonds) agreed to [215] Seventh Resolution (Payment of Exchequer Bonds), 939 ; after debate, agreed to Eighth Resolution (Interest of Exchequer Bonds), agreed to Moved, "That the House do now resolve itself into the Committee of Ways and Means," 921 ; after long debate, Motion agreed to

Ways and Means considered in Committee—
 Second, Third, and Fourth Resolutions (Sugar Duties) moved (on re-comm.), and,
 after debate, withdrawn

Then other Resolutions moved in lieu thereof,
 and agreed to

Resolutions reported April 28, 1030

Moved, "That the said Resolutions be now read a second time"

Amendt. to leave out from "That," and add
 "before deciding on the further reduction of indirect taxation, it is desirable that the House should be put in possession of the views of the Government with reference to the maintenance and the adjustment of direct taxation, both imperial and local" (Mr. W.
 H. Smith) v. ; Question proposed, "That the words, &c. ;" after long debate, Moved,
 "That the Debate be now adjourned" (Mr.
 Stephen Cave) ; Motion agreed to ; Debate adjourned

Debate resumed May 1, 1300 ; after long debate, Question put, and agreed to ; main Question put, and agreed to ; Resolutions read a second time, and agreed to Considered in Committee (£26,470 7s. 6d. Consolidated Fund) July 28, [217] 1158

Resolution reported July 29

SUMMARY.

WAYS AND MEANS.

GRANTS OUT OF THE CONSOLIDATED FUND.

| For the service of            | £          | s. | d. | £ | s. | d. |
|-------------------------------|------------|----|----|---|----|----|
| the years ending              |            |    |    |   |    |    |
| 31st March 1872               |            |    |    |   |    |    |
| and 1873 ;                    |            |    |    |   |    |    |
| Under Act 36 Vict.            |            |    |    |   |    |    |
| cap. 3 ... ... ... ...        | 453,346    | 19 | 9  |   |    |    |
| For the service of            |            |    |    |   |    |    |
| the year ending               |            |    |    |   |    |    |
| 31st March                    |            |    |    |   |    |    |
| 1874 ; viz.                   |            |    |    |   |    |    |
| Under Act 36 Vict.            |            |    |    |   |    |    |
| cap. 3 ... ... 8,864,000      | 0          | 0  | 0  |   |    |    |
| Under Act 36 Vict.            |            |    |    |   |    |    |
| cap. 26 ... 12,000,000        | 0          | 0  | 0  |   |    |    |
| Under this Act ... 26,470,716 | 0          | 0  | 0  |   |    |    |
|                               | 47,334,716 | 0  | 0  |   |    |    |
| Total ... £47,788,062         | 19         | 9  |    |   |    |    |

WED WEL { GENERAL INDEX } WEL WHA
 234—235—236—237.

WEDDERBURN, Sir D., Ayrshire, S.
 Army—India—Majors of Artillery, [215] 1404
 Army Estimates—Militia Pay and Allowances,
     Amendt. [214] 1158
 Canada Loan Guarantee, 2R. [216] 1326
 *East India (Financial Statement), Res. [215]
     408
 East India Revenue Accounts, Comm. [217]
     1493
 France—Passports, [215] 602
 Hypothec Abolition (Scotland), 2R. [216] 1340,
     1367, 1373
 Master and Servant—Wages—Truck System,
     [216] 840
 Master of the Rolls, Office of, [215] 647
 Parliament—Hour of Meeting of this House,
     [217] 1533
 Permissive Prohibitory Liquor, 2R. [215] 1653
 Post Office—Anglo-Italian Mails, [214] 1284
 Sheriffs Substitute (Scotland), [215] 523;—
     Salaries, [216] 1862
 Supply—Household of the Lord Lieutenant of
     Ireland, [215] 1457
 Supreme Court of Judicature, 3R. Amendt.
     [217] 785
 University Tests (Dublin) (No. 3), Comm.
     cl. 3, [215] 1533
 Venus, Transit of, in 1874, [216] 1171

WEGUELIN, Mr. T. M., Wolverhampton
 Currency—Bank Act, [215] 154

Weights and Measures Acts

Moved, "That it is inexpedient to continue the employment of Superintendents of Police and Police Constables as Inspectors of Weights and Measures" (Mr. Goldney) June 17, [216] 1065; after short debate, Motion withdrawn

Weights and Measures—The Metric System
 —Legislation

Question, Lord George Hamilton; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue Feb 13, [214] 375; Question, Mr. J. B. Smith; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue Feb 24, 833

Weights and Measures (Metric System)
 Bill

(Mr. John Benjamin Smith, Sir Charles Adderley, Sir Thomas Basley, Mr. Torr, Mr. Barnes, Mr. Pell, Mr. Muntz, Mr. Dalglish)
 o. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup>* Mar 5 [Bill 90]
 Bill withdrawn, after short debate July 16, [217] 461

WELBY, Mr. W. E., Lincolnshire, S.
 Agricultural Machine Accidents, [216] 481
 Army—Depot Centres—Lincoln—Grantham,
     [216] 1706
 Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment,
     Re-comm. cl. 3, Amendt. [217] 778
 Post Office—Halfpenny Post Cards, [214] 1101
 Turnpike Acts Continuance, &c., Comm. [217]
     191

WELLS, Mr. E., Wallingford
 Municipal Officers Superannuation, 2R. [214]
     1369

WEST, Mr. H. W., Ipswich
 Conveyancing (Scotland), Comm. cl. 41, [216]
     511
 County Court Judges—Minute of June, 1872,
     Res. [214] 1305, 1307, 1308, 1309
 Juries, Comm. cl. 6, Amendt. [216] 517; cl. 7,
     528; cl. 9, 580; cl. 52, 1514; cl. 57, 1518,
     1519
 Local Courts of Record, [214] 724
 Prevention of Crime, 2R. [214] 749
 Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 8,
     [216] 1024; Consid. [217] 420
 Supply—Court of Chancery, [215] 1773
     Law Officers, &c., [215] 1771
 Supreme Court of Judicature, 2R. [216] 858;
     Comm. cl. 18, 1749; cl. 22, 1804; cl. 31,
     Motion for reporting Progress, 1888

Westminster, Palace of—Acquisition of Land
 Question, Lord John Manners; Answer, Mr./
     Ayrton June 16, [216] 990; Observations,
     Mr. Bouvierie; debate thereon July 30,
     [217] 1269 [See Supply July 28, July 31]

WHALLEY, Mr. G. H., Peterborough

Canterbury Cathedral—Alleged "Pilgrimage,"
     [217] 603, 605
 Church Discipline—Letters of the Primate,
     [216] 1869
 Criminal Law Amendment, Motion for a Select Committee, [217] 460
 Criminal Law—Tichborne Case, [215] 1294,
     1485, 1486, 1881, 1882; [216] 408, 409,
     959, 960, 961, 1064, 1167; [217] 36, 264,
     266
 India—Scripture Readers—Sandwell, Mr., [217]
     210
 Labourers Cottages (Scotland), 2R. [217] 473
 Monastic and Conventual Institutions, 2R.
     [216] 1675, 1783
 Navy Estimates—Coast Guard Service, [216]
     125, 126
     Scientific Departments, [216] 127
 Ordnance Survey, The, [217] 36
 Parliament—Strangers ordered to withdraw,
     [217] 209
 Railway and Canal Traffic, 3R. [215] 1108
 Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 8,
     [216] 920
 Register for Parliamentary and Municipal Electors, Re-comm. cl. 13, [215] 1698
 Supply—Bankruptcy Court, London, [215]
     1775
     Courts of Probate and Divorce, &c. [215]
     1776
     Household of the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, [215] 1456
     Superior Courts of Common Law, Motion for reporting Progress, [215] 1775

cont.

WHA    WHE    { SESSION 1873 }    WHI    WHI
 214—215—216—217.

WHALLEY, Mr. G. H.—cont.

Supreme Court of Judicature, Comm. cl. 6, [216] 1786, 1740; cl. 18, 1796; cl. 22, 1799; cl. 26, 1873; cl. 28, 1875; cl. 29, 1882, 1884; cl. 46, Amendt. [217] 45; cl. 60, 186 Turnpike Acts Continuance, &c. Comm. [217] 193

Ways and Means—Financial Statement, Comm. [215] 696

WHARTON, Mr. J. L., Durham

Army—Depot Centres, Cost of, [216] 1163 Army Estimates—Provisions, Forage, &c. [216] 1261 Criminal Law—Shropshire Magistrates— Whitefoot, George, Case of, [215] 1770 Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 3, [216] 1013 Register for Parliamentary and Municipal Electors, Comm. [215] 292 Seduction Laws Amendment, Comm. add. cl. [216] 1892 Supply—Criminal Prosecutions at Assizes, &c. [215] 1772

WHEELHOUSE, Mr. W. St. James, Leeds

Army Estimates—Volunteer Corps, [214] 1158 Works, Buildings, &c. [216] 1278 Coals, Scarcity of, Motion for a Committee, [214] 824 Customs Outport Clerks, Res. Report, [217] 1238 Durham, County Palatine of—"Queen v. Cotton," [214] 1288, 1289 Education of Blind and Deaf-Mute Children, [214] 281; 2R. [216] 795 Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment, Re-comm. cl. 10, [217] 798 Endowed Schools Act (1869), Motion for a Committee, [214] 293 Endowed Schools Act (1869) Amendment, Comm. [217] 927 Juries, Comm. cl. 7, [216] 529 Married Women's Property Act (1870) Amendment, 2R. [214] 683 Metropolis—Bethnal Green Museum, [217] 607 Municipal Elections (Cumulative Vote), 2R. [217] 489 Municipal Officers Superannuation, 2R. [214] 1372 Parliament—Public Business, [217] 864 Permissive Prohibitory Liquor, 2R. Amendt. [215] 1622 Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 3, [216] 1073, 1081; 3R. [217] 688 Register for Parliamentary and Municipal Electors, 2R. [214] 1958; Re-comm. cl. 4, [216] 796 Sale of Liquors on Sunday (Ireland), 2R. [217] 119 Supply—Metropolitan Police Courts, [215] 791 Post Office Services, [217] 1116 Supreme Court of Judicature, Comm. cl. 78, [217] 221; Schedule, see. 1, 343 Treaties with Foreign Powers, Res. [214] 487 Ways and Means, Comm. [215] 946; Report, 1077 Wild Birds Protection Act—Penalties, [214] 789

WHITBREAD, Mr. S., Bedford

Parliament—Meeting of, Motion for an Address, [214] 917 Supreme Court of Judicature, Comm. add. cl. [217] 839, 840 Ways and Means, Report, [215] 915

WHITE, Mr. J., Brighton

Civil Service—New Appointments, [216] 1855 Consolidated Fund (Appropriation), 2R. [217] 1377 Departmental Expenditure—Purchase and Sale of Stores, Motion for a Committee, [214] 809 Navy—Admiralty Administration, Res. [214] 940 Parliament—Address in Answer to the Speech, [214] 98, 98 Post Office—Mail Contracts—Cape and Zanzibar, [216] 1212 Public Expenditure, Res. [214] 641 South Africa, [214] 799, 800 Supply—New Palace at Westminster, [217] 1126 Post Office, [214] 2056 Post Office Packet Service, [216] 1501 Ways and Means—Estimates and Revenues, [217] 1521 Post Office Revenues, [217] 153 Ways and Means—Financial Statement, Comm. [215] 670, 1327

WHITWELL, Mr. J., Kendal

Army—Clothing, &c. of the German Army, [216] 97 Army—Volunteer Force—New Regulations, Res. [217] 263 Army Estimates—Control Establishments, Wages, &c. [216] 1254 Military Education, [216] 1284 Provisions, Forage, &c. [216] 1280 Superannuation Allowances, [216] 1297 Works, Buildings, &c. [216] 1279 Customs Outport Clerks, Res. Report, [217] 1245 Departmental Expenditure—Purchase and Sale of Stores, Motion for a Committee, [214] 812 France—Treaty of Commerce, [217] 919 Juries, Comm. cl. 1, [215] 2072 Labourers Cottages (Scotland), 2R. [217] 466 Landlord and Tenant, 2R. [216] 1647 Navy Estimates—Coast Guard Service, [216] 125 Parliament—Order of Business, [217] 1439 Permissive Prohibitory Liquor, 2R. [215] 1856 Rating (Liability and Value), Comm. cl. 18, [216] 1192, 1235 Spain, [214] 1185 Superannuation Act Amendment, Comm. [215] 1702; cl. 1, 1706 Supply—Consular Establishments Abroad, &c. [217] 1106 Dover Harbour, [217] 1284 Education, England and Wales, [216] 1460 New Courts of Justice, &c. [215] 792 New Palace at Westminster, [217] 1124, 1277 Public Departments, [215] 779 Superannuation Allowances, [215] 1814 Tonnage Duties, &c. [215] 1813 Supreme Court of Judicature, Comm. cl. 18, [216] 1792; cl. 29, 1879; cl. 50, [217] 51 Union Rating (Ireland), 2R. [214] 770

WIL WIN { GENERAL INDEX } WIN WOM
214—215—216—217.

Wild Animals (Scotland) Bill
(Mr. James Barclay, Mr. Forsythe, Mr. Trevelyan)
c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> * July 16 [Bill 243]
2R. [Dropped]

Wild Birds Protection Act—Penalties

Question, Mr. Wheelhouse; Answer, Mr. Brace Feb 21, [214] 789; Question, Mr. Auberon Herbert; Answer, The Attorney General May 19, [216] 100

Moved, "That a Select Committee be appointed, with power to take evidence, to inquire into the advisability of extending the protection of a close season to certain Wild Birds not included in the Wild Birds Preservation Act of 1872" (Mr. Auberon Herbert) April 29, [215] 1187

After short debate, Amendt. to leave out "extending the protection of a close season to certain Wild Birds not included in," and insert "amending" (Mr. Stuart Parker) v.; Question, "That the words, &c.," put, and agreed to; main Question put; A. 162, N. 16; M. 146; Select Committee appointed

And, on May 15, Committee nominated as follows:—Mr. Auberon Herbert (Chairman), Colonel Beresford, Mr. Dillwyn, Captain Greville, Mr. Hambro, Mr. Heron, Mr. Andrew Johnston, Mr. Jones, Colonel Parker, Mr. Price, Mr. Sturt, Mr. Sykes, Sir David Wedderburn, and Mr. Rowland Wian; July 16 Mr. Wykeham Martin added, Mr. H. B. Samuelson died.

Report of Select Committee July 23 No. 338

WILLIAMS, Mr. Watkin, Denbigh, &c.
Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment, Consid. cl. 23, [217] 962
Juries, Comm. cl. 5, [216] 518, 526; cl. 55, Amendt. 1517
216] Supreme Court of Judicature, 2R. 685, 880; Comm. cl. 22, 1800; cl. 24, 1804; cl. 26, Amendt. 1871, 1872
217] cl. 46, 44

WILMOT, Colonel Sir H., Derbyshire, S.
Elementary Education, [216] 835

WINCHESTER, Bishop of
Church Association—Confession, Motion for a Select Committee, [217] 279; Explanation, 386
Colonial Church, 2R. [216] 493
Registration of Births and Deaths, Comm. Amendt. [215] 1666
Supreme Court of Judicature, 3R. [215] 1479
Zanzibar—Sir Bartle Frere's Mission, Motion for Correspondence, [215] 1781

Winchester, The late Bishop of, and the late Lord Westbury
Observations, The Duke of Richmond July 21, [217] 621; Observations, Earl Granville; short debate thereon July 23, 736

Windward Islands and Trinidad—Ecclesiastical Policy

Moved, "That this House disapproves of the Ecclesiastical Policy of Her Majesty's Government in the Windward Islands and in Trinidad" (Mr. Charley) July 15, [217] 424; after debate, Question put; A. 69, N. 83; M. 14

WINGFIELD, Sir C. J., Gravesend

Army—Claims of Indian Officers—Bonus Fund, [214] 543
Troop Horses (India), [215] 608
Central Asia—Boundary Line, Motion for an Address, [214] 772
Central Asia, Motion for an Address, [215] 848
Chinese Coolie Trade, [216] 875, 724
East India (Financial Statement), Res. Amendt. [215] 411
East India Revenue Accounts, Comm. [217] 1468
Fiji Islands, [214] 544;—British Protectorate, 597, 899
Fiji, Protectorate of, Res. [216] 941
India—Railway Gauge, [215] 837;—Punjab Lines, 1928
India—Euphrates Valley Railway, Res. [215] 617
India—Offering of the Indian Army, Motion for an Address, [217] 1057
India—Railway Gauge, Res. [214] 1553
Parliament—Address in Answer to the Speech, Report, [214] 170
Slave Trade—Zanzibar, [215] 603
South Africa, [214] 803

WINTERBOTHAM, Mr. H. S. P. (Under Secretary of State, Home Department), Stroud

Building Societies, [216] 18
Building Societies (No. 2), Leave, [215] 1190
Criminal Law (Ireland)—Montgomery, The Convict, [217] 1530
Ireland—Belfast Assizes—M' Aleese, Mr., Case of, [215] 680
Lunacy Commission—Lutwidge, Mr. Commissioner, Death of, [217] 1517
Merchant Shipping Act—“Maggie,” The, [215] 650
Metropolitan Police—Goodchild, Constable, [215] 643
Prevention of Crime, 2R. [214] 752
Salmon Fisheries Commissioners, Comm. [214] 1959; 3R. [215] 88, 89

Women's Disabilities Bill

(Mr. Jacob Bright, Dr. Lyon Playfair, Mr. Eastwick)

c. Ordered; read 1<sup>o</sup> * Feb 7 [Bill 17]
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2<sup>o</sup>" April 30, [215] 1194
Amendt. to leave out "now," and add "upon this day six months" (Mr. Bouvierie), 1214; after debate, Question put, "That 'now,' &c.;" A. 155, N. 222; M. 67; words added; main Question, as amended, put, and agreed to; Bill put off for six months

WOO WYN { SESSION 1873 } YOR ZAN
 214—215—216—217.

|                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Woods and Forests Bill —See title Crown Lands Bill                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            | YORK, Archbishop ofAdmission to Benefices and Churchwardenships , Comm. cl. 5, [216] 1409Church Association—Confession , Motion for a Select Committee, [217] 287Colonial Church , 2R. [216] 492Sites for Places of Religious Worship, Report , [216] 1082Supreme Court of Judicature , 3R. [215] 1479                                            |
| Woods, Mr. H., WiganRailway and Canal Companies—Joint Committee , [215] 1486Railway and Canal Traffic , Comm. cl. 10, [215] 377; cl. 11, 384; cl. 33, 595                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      | YORKE, Mr. J. R., Gloucestershire, E.Parliamentary Elections (Expenses) , 2R. [216] 1122Rating (Liability and Value) , Comm. cl. 3, [216] 920, 928Shah of Persia, Visit of — Naval Review at Spithead , [216] 909                                                                                                                                                |
| Workmen's Compensation for Injuries—LegislationQuestion , Mr. Hindle Palmer; Answer , Mr. Chichester Fortescue June 5, [216] 614                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   | YOUNG, Mr. A. W., HelstonJuries , Comm. cl. 1, Amendt. [215] 2072Rating (Liability and Value) , Comm. cl. 3, [216] 1069                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
| Workshops ActObservations, Resolution , Mr. G. Dalrymple; Reply , Mr. Bruce; debate thereon April 25 , [215] 991                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            | Zanzibar and Cape Mail Contracts —See title Post Office                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
| WYNDHAM, Hon. P. S., Cumberland, W.Canada, Dominion of—Fisheries , [215] 2018Consolidated Fund (Appropriation) , 2R. [217] 1381Parliament—Address in Answer to the Speech, Report , [214] 157Public Worship Facilities , 2R. [214] 970Rating (Liability and Value) , 2R. [216] 288; Comm. cl. 8, 1008, 1010; Amendt. 1011, 1075, 1077, 1082; cl. 15, 1427; Consid. [217] 416; Amendt. 423Treaty of Washington , [215] 1442, 1449University Education (Ireland) , 2R. Amendt. [214] 1435 | Zanzibar, Slave Trade atQuestion , Sir Charles Wingfield; Answer , Viscount Eofield April 4, [215] 603                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
|                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             | Zanzibar—Sir Bartle Frere's MissionMoved that an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty for Copies of the correspondence between the British and French Governments on the Mission of Sir Bartle Frere to Zanzibar; of the Instructions given to Sir Bartle Frere; and of his subsequent despatches (The Lord Stratheden) May 12, [215] 1779; after short debate, Motion withdrawn |

ERRATA.

- In Vol. [215] page 583, line 29 from bottom, for "155 tons," read "87 tons."
 In Vol. [215] page 584, line 24 from top, for "44," read "43."
 In Vol. [215] page 584, line 26 from top, for "56," read "55."
 In Vol. [215] page 584, line 29 from top, for "56," read "55."
 The passage from Livy, quoted by Sir John Trelawny, Vol. [215] p. 1257, should read—"Matronæ nullæ auctoritate, nec verecundia, nec imperio virorum continere limine poterant.
     Atque ego vix statuere apud animum meum possum utrum peior ipsa res est an pejore exemplo agatur."
 In Vol. [216] page 110, line 29 from top, for "decreased," read "increased."
 In Vol. [217] page 493, line 5 from bottom, for "several learned Societies," read "the Royal Society."
 In Vol. [217] page 494, lines 8 to 11 from top, for "entire possession until the learned Societies had transferred themselves to their new apartments. This, he believed, would happen in September next," read "entire possession until the Royal Society had transferred itself to its new apartments. This, he believed, would happen in November next."

END OF VOLUME CCXVII., AND FOURTH AND LAST
 VOLUME OF SESSION 1873.

